If it be conſider'd, that even to this Day there are ſome Writers who plead for the innocence of Mr. Marillac, the diſcuſſions I have now propos'd in this Remark, will not be found improper in a Critical Dictionary. For 'tis more uſeful than is commonly believ'd, not to [illegible] one's Readers to ſuffer themſelves to be drawn by the popular Opinions concerning the Conduct of Sovereigns. But 'tis eminently dangerous to be deceiv'd herein, when we underſtand that the common Opinions are fortify'd by the Apophthegms that come out under great Names. This is the preſent caſe; read therefore what an ingenious Man has lately publiſh'd. (l) "'Twas "under pretence of robbing the publick Trea"ſure, that Cardinal Richelieu cut off Marſhal Ma"rillac's Head. They alledged againſt that Lord, "that he had employ'd the King's Money in "ſumptuous Buildings on his fine Eſtate at Tour"nebu. This fine Eſtate worth about two Thou"ſand Livers per Ann. is in Normandy, on the Ri"ver Seine, between Vernon and Andely. Mr. de "Marillac, who inherited it from his Anceſtors, "began to build a Houſe there worth about ten "or twelve Thouſand Crowns, but left it un"finiſh'd. One day the Prince of Conde, Grand"father to the preſent Prince, paſſing by this "magnificent Building, when 'twas about half "done, and had neither Doors nor Windows, "ſtopt on a ſudden, and having view'd it well, "ſaid to the Gentlemen who were with him: "This Building is alledg'd as a reaſon why Marillac's "Head ſhould be cut off; but 'tis not worth while to "give a Page a Box on the Ear for it." See how this ſaying runs about: Some aſcribe it to Cardinal Richelieu, others to Mr. de Marillac himſelf, and others to the Prince of Conde. If that Prince ſpoke in this manner, he did not deſign to be very exact; for he ſuppo[illegible]at this Building was the Baſis of the Accuſa[illegible], which caus'd the Marſhal de Marillac to [illegible] his Life, and perhaps in the whole Tryal there was not one word of the Houſe of Tournebu. The Judges [illegible] have enough to do, if they were to inform [illegible]es

(f) Horace de arte Poëtica ſays, that old Men praiſe the times paſt, and blame the preſent. Laudator temporis acti Se puero, cenſor caſtigatorque minorum.

(g) Le Laboureur Preface to the Hiſt. of Charles VI. fol. e iij verſo. Compare what is ſaid in the Nouvel. de la Rep. des lettres, June 1686. art. 1. at the end.

(h) Relation of the Proceſs of Marſhal Marillac, p. 8.

(i) Ib. p. 18.

(k) Chaſtelet ubi ſupra, p. 821, 822.

(l) Id. ib. p. 804, 805.

(m) After all the evidence and ſtrong preſumptions that his Majeſty might have, that he was a Perſon guilty of the troubles and diſcoyons that were begun in France, for the only advantage of Strangers, will any body believe this Juſtifical Hiſtorian, or one of his Accomplice think it unjuſt that he was thus proſecuted, Id. ib. p. 823.

(n) Sueton. in Tiberio, c. 53.

(o) Paris Gazette, May 24. 1632. p. 24. Edit. of Rouen, in 8°.

(a) Chaſtelet ubi ſupra, p. 807, &c.

(l) Vigneul Marville, Mélange d'hiſtoire & de literature. tom. 2. p. 15. Dutch Edit. 1700.

in Proſe turned into Rhime, wherein the ſporting of Fancy might have too large a ſhare, but in a ſerious and grave writing, wherein he refutes the Apologiſts of his Enemy. He ſays * therefore, that the Father of Marſhal Marillac, "was advanced from the "Office of Maſter of the Accounts, to that of Controller General of the Treaſury, and "left a very little Eſtate to his Children. He was born with a handſom Body and a "ready Wit, and employ'd himſelf chiefly in learning his Exerciſes, which he attain'd to "perfection. Becauſe he was not rich enough to ſubſiſt of himſelf, he liv'd commonly "with the Marquis de Cœuvre, who being highly in favour with the Dutcheſs of Beau- "fort, had much a-do to ſave his Life, and obtain his Pardon, after the Murder of Ca- "boche, whom he had kill'd upon a ſmall Provocation, and when he was not in a "Condition to defend himſelf. Theſe great Obligations engag'd him more cloſely to "ſerve his Benefactor, who entruſted with him the ſecret of his Amours, and becauſe "he was not faithful in that Affair, he broke off all further Converſe with him. He "liv'd afterwards in the Court upon his good Mien, and under the Name of handſome "Marillac, ſeeking all Opportunities of ſhowing his Addreſs and fine Shape in pub- "lick, and of making himſelf agreeable to the deceaſed King, who nevertheleſs treated "him always as a mean Perſon, and one day at Zamet's Houſe turn'd him out "from the Table where he ſat, with many others. All theſe Miſadventures did "not hinder him from charming (B) one of the Queen's Maids of Honour." He Married her, and thought that after the Death of Henry IV. under † the Government of the Women, his outward ſhow, and the appearance of his Virtues, being joyn'd with his little Services, his Cajolling, Attendance and Complaiſance, would procure him all that he could not obtain before.—— The difference between the Profeſſion of his Brother, who was the Maſter of Requeſts, and his running at the Ring, rather than his handling the Sword, procured him the Name of Gendarme. He was always the buſieſt Man in the Liſts and Turnaments.——The Queen being concern'd by her Alliance to deliver him from his neceſſitous Condition, gave him an Office in the Company of the Duke of Orleans, encreas'd his Sallary, and deſir'd the Marquis d'Ancre to make uſe of him. The Marquis became Marſhal of France——and was ſecretly inſtructed by Marillac in the Method and Policy of War, and gave him hopes (C) of a good Reward. ‡ His Death, and the removing of the Queeen-Mother, left Marillac burden'd with a Wife, and with their common Poverty.——He had a mind to comply with thoſe that who ſat at the Helm, being very unwilling to depart from his Pretenſions at Court, which were his chief Inheritance. But he was given to underſtand, that his Preſence was not grateful to the King. Whereupon he return'd to his Miſtreſs, alledging a falſe Pretence of ſuffering Baniſhment upon her account; and after ſome refuſals, he was reſtor'd to her Favour, (D) and was

* Du Chaſtelet Obſervations on the Life and Condemnation of Marſhal de Marillac, p. 770. of the Collection of Several Pieces uſeful for Hiſtory. Edit. 1643. 4°.

† Id. ib. p. 771.

‡ Id. ib. p. 772.

ſelves of future Expences, and 'twould be a fine thing to Condemn a Man for a Houſe which is not yet built. But what need is there of diſpute? We need only read the Decree made by the Commiſſioners, and we ſhall find that the Accuſation was grounded upon ſomething very different from the deſign of a Building.

(B) From charming one of the Queens Maids of Honour.] The words which follow in Mr. du Chaſtelet are theſe: "(c) She was deſcended from a Branch "of the Houſe of Medicis, before the Crown of Florence came into it. She was poor and indifferently "handſome; and had already had ſeveral deſigns "to make a more advantageous Alliance, which did "not ſucceed. The proſpect ſhe had of meeting "with no better Fortune, and the fear ſhe was "in, that it would be more difficult for her "being a Stranger than for another, to live for "the future with the troubleſome Title of an "old Maid, made her reſolve to Marry him. 'Tis "true, the Match was eaſily made up, ſince ſhe "had nothing for an Eſtate, but a great Name, "and her Lover could afford nothing but his "fine Mien and Gallantry. But they con- "ceiv'd great hopes of Advancement, and joyn- "ed to the natural Addreſs of an Italian edu- "cated at Court, the Tricks and Intrigues of "one, who after he had been fifteen Years there, "had learn'd all the Arts of deceiving, and ap- "pearing to be what he was not" This Lady died during the Proceſs againſt her Husband; whereof we have a Proof in the Diſcourſe of the Marſhal to his Judges. He repreſented to them (d) What method the deceas'd Lady his Wife had taken to get acceſs to the King by the means and permiſſion of Cardinal Richelieu, and he added, That ſhe was inhumanely abus'd, baniſh'd, and worſe treated than if ſhe had been among Barbarians, being forc'd to retire into a Village, and to dwell in a borrow'd Houſe, where ſhe died of Diſcontent, and almoſt without any Relief. The Contract of this Marriage was made December 20. 1607. They had no Children (e).

(C) The Marquis d'Ancre became Marſhal of France——and gave him hopes of a good Reward.] Mr. du Chaſtelet paraphraſes this maliciouſly. The new Marſhal of France, ſays he, (f) took upon him the Command of the Armies without going thither: And to make People believe that he was Maſter of a Profeſſion, which he had never learn'd, he procur'd Mr Marillac to inſtruct him ſecretly in the Method and Policy of War. After a Month's Converſation, they were ſo well ſatisfy'd with their Courage and Skill, that they were quickly perſuaded they could undertake any thing ſafely. The Maſter of a Military School, who pretended nothing but to make himſelf rich, and underſtood the ways of making an advantage by the expences of War, deſir'd of his Scholar as the firſt favour, to be made Commiſſary General, together with a Power which made all the Commanders or Paymaſters of the Troops tributary to him, by taking from them all means of making a prey of the Soldiers without him. This brave Office, which would have brought in ſo good a Revenue, he was aſſur'd of, if the Death of the Marquis d'Ancre had not prevented this deſign, together with many others.

(D) He was reſtor'd to her Favour, and was made Marſhal de Camp at Pont de Se.] The Paraphraſe which follows is no leſs malicious than the former. "(g) The fate of Diſgrace, which "requir'd all ſorts of People to be employ'd, the "Tears of his Wife, the Advices and little Ser- "vices, which the Party receiv'd from the other "Marillac his Brother, being aſſiſted by the Mi- "niſtry of ſome Religious Correſpondence, "procur'd all things paſt to be forgotten: "He had the Tone and Look of a Command- "ing Officer, and could talk of Entrenchments, "Halfmoons and Redoubts, and had ſo many "young Men about him, who could better de- "fend than deſign them, that for want of ano- "ther, and of being better known, he was made "Marſhal de Camp at Pont de Se. Experience "quickly diſcover'd, by the Undertaking, Per- "formance and keeping of the Works, which "were all equally bad, that he was a much bet- "ter Soldier and Captain upon Paper than in the "Field——The ill Opinion which the Sol- "diers had of his Valour in his Youth, was not "made better after the fight at Pont de Se, which "they attributed to his being frighted, and want "of Experience. See the Margin (h).

(g) Id ib. p. 772

(h) Note, that Pont de Se, a place upon the Loire, was attack'd and taken by the King, Auguſt 8 1620 from the Troops of the Queen-Mother, who had declar'd for the Malecontents.

(c) Chaſtelet, ubi ſupra, p. 770, 771.

(d) A true Relation of what paſs'd at the tryal of Marſhal [illegible]illac, [illegible] & 9.

(e) Father Anſelm's Hiſt. of the Great Offices, p. 252.

(f) Chaſtelet, ubi ſupra, p. 771.

(L) With

was made Marſhal de Camp at Pont de Se. He did not well diſcharge this Office, and yet it was confirm'd to him by the King at the Prayer of the Queen-Mother. * He conceiv'd great Hopes in 1624, becauſe Michael de MARILLAC his Brother, was advanc'd to the Office of Superintendant of the Finances, and Cardinal Richelieu was made Miniſter of State. The firſt Command that he receiv'd was to go into Campagne under the Duke of Angouleſme with a (E) Commiſſion to be Purveyor General for the Army.——As this was his firſt Commiſſion, ſo it was alſo the firſt beginning of his Robberies (F). They became more enormous when he was employ'd in the Fortification and † Building of the Citadel of Verdun, of which the King made him Governor, and appointed him Lieutenant-General of the three Biſhopricks, with the Power of a Pay-Maſter-General. He was employ'd in the War of Rochelle ß in 1627. He was preſent at the defeat of the Engliſh (G) in the Iſle of Rhé, and ſerv'd γ "as Marſhal de Camp in the Quarters of the "Duke of Angouleſme, with ſo bad ſucceſs, that in all the Sallies that were made, and all "the Attacks for taking the Fort of Thadon, and blowing up with a Petard the Gates "on the ſide of the Moraſs, he was always forc'd to excuſe himſelf, and to juſtifie his "not being where he ſhould have been. He was conſtantly accus'd by the Soldiers "of ſome miſtake, and of being the cauſe why things ſucceeded ſo ill; ſo ſtrong "was their Opinion, that he was not ſo valiant as he was thought to be." It was during the Siege of Rochelle, that he begun to cabal againſt Cardinal Richelieu; which he did chiefly by endeavouring to render him odious to Mary de Medicis. δ Marillac continuing at Rochelle, contributed at a diſtance as much as lay in his power, towards carrying on the Monopoly; and as he confeſs'd at his Tryal he wrote often to the Queen Mother, and gave Inſtructions to thoſe of his Gang, that Mr. Bouthillier, then her Secretary, ſhould ſee none of his Diſpatches; that they ſhould be convey'd by the Ladies of the Bed-Chamber, and that this good Princeſs might know nothing of the diſtruſt that he had——Thoſe who form'd this Conſpiracy became skilfull Men in the Practice and Government of Women.——Marillac became the Hero of the Faction, and therefore a deſign was laid to make him Marſhal of France; and the Queen-Mother was ſo well perſuaded, that it was for her Honour and Service to puſh on this matter, that ſhe us'd the ſtrongeſt Recommendations which obliged the Cardinal ζ to ſnatch this Staff from the Hand of the King, and give it to this importunate Suitor at the Siege of Privas. This new Marſhal of France and his Brother, continu'd their endeavours to ruin the Cardinal, which they hop'd to compaſs in Italy, and for this end they did what they could to hinder the King from approaching Piedmont, and with the ſame proſpect, the Marſhal ξ ſlighted the Orders which the King ſent him (H) to bring the Army from Campagne into Italy. At laſt he went from thence, but he ϑ kept thoſe Troops near Lyons, to

* Id. ib. p. 773.
† Id. ib. p. 774.
ß Id. ib. p. 778.
γ Id. ib. p. 780.
δ Id. ib. p. 783.
ζ Id. ib. p. 785.
ξ Id. ib. p. 793.
ϑ Id. ib. p. 799.

(E) With a Commiſſion to be Purveyor.] "(a) He "executed this Commiſſion ſo ill, that the ſupport he had from the Queen-Mother, and the "intereſt of his Brother, who became daily more "powerful, did not hinder him from being accus'd to the King from this time of evil Practices and Robbery. In this firſt Attack he "had recourſe to the Cardinal by Letters, and afterwards at his Tryal, he ſhow'd the Cardinal's "Anſwer of the 7th of April 1625; which contain'd "an aſſurance, that he had remov'd out of the "King's Mind this bad Impreſſion, and adviſ'd him "ſo to behave himſelf for the future, that he "ſhould not ſtand in need of ſuch aſſiſtance.

(a) Id. ib. p. 773.

(F) This was alſo the beginning of his Robberies.] A beginning which was attended with continual Conſequences of the ſame Nature, if we believe our Author. And it will be found, ſays he (b), what ever declaration has been made of his Innocence, that after this, till the time of his Impriſonment, he did not manage, or treat of any Affair relating to Money for his Majeſty, but he practiſed all poſſible ways to make an advantage of it. The detail he gives about this is dreadful; for in it we ſee ſo exceſſive and ſordid Miſdemeanours, that Mr. du Chaſtelet was oblig'd to anſwer an Objection that was very obvious, ſince he had repreſented the Marſhal as a Perſon ambitious of Glory. It ſeems, ſays he, that one (c) "who minds ſuperficially "this Diſcourſe, would think it could not be "meant of the ſame Man: In him we ſee the "meaneſs of all ſorts of Villanies, and the high "thoughts of Honour and Offices. We find alſo, that Marillac applied himſelf to great things, "and at the ſame time took the poor Peaſants by "the Throat to rob them of their Goods. Yet "'tis eaſie to underſtand that theſe Fruits proceed from the ſame Root, and that he might "be capable of both theſe Extreams, if any one will remember, that he was malicious and proud, and that to bear the "weight of his ambitious Poverty, he wanted to "have recourſe to vile Courſes that diſhonour'd his Life. And becauſe his Hopes could "not keep pace with his Advancement, he was "tranſported by the impetuous Current of his "Faction, wherein Women and many People incapable of War had ſo much Authority, that "he who had a good Mien, could talk much "and make a noiſe, eaſily acquir'd the Opinion "of great valour with thoſe who had no experience in his Profeſſion.

(b) Id. ib. p. 793.

(c) Id. ib. p. 793.

(G) He was preſent at the defeat of the Engliſh in the Iſle of Rhé.] We ſhall now inform you who was the Author of an anonymous Relation, which appear'd at this time. "(d) 'Tis obſervable, that "the Keeper of the Seals (e) became the Hiſtorian of the Tranſactions in that Iſle at the defeat of the Engliſh, that he might give all the "Glory of them to his Brother. He would not "put his Name to it, that the Relation might be "the leſs ſuſpected, and that he might give it the "more credit againſt the publick Voice of all "thoſe who return'd after the Fight. He was "very indiſcreet to make the great and only Harangue of his Book about him: For beſide, "that he was accounted by the Soldiers a Man "great in words, but little in Deeds, he juſtified "the Name which the Soldiers gave him of Marillac the Bridge of Gold, becauſe he gave ſo many "Reaſons for not fighting. He makes him come "near the Enemies to have a view of them in "theſe Words. He approach'd them in ſpite of "the Volleys of the advanc'd Soldiers, which he "was forc'd to ſtand. Whereupon it was ſaid, "at the firſt reading of this Panegyrick, that he "found them of a bad taſte, and ſuch as he had "never taſted but this time.——In a word, he "makes him the only Author of all the feats of "Courage and Conduct, and allows Marſhal "Schomberg only to approve his Counſels, and "Thoiras to make raſh and revengeful Overtures for the Death of his two Brethren. Yet "all the World knows, that after this Action "which the Romance of his Brother attributes "wholly to him, he was more complain'd of than "before, &c. I ſuppreſs the reſt, becauſe it is "too Satyrical.

(d) Id. ib. p. 779.

(e) i.e. Michael de Marillac, Brother to him of whom I ſpeak in this Article.

(H) He ſlighted the Orders the King ſent him, to bring his Army from Champagne into Italy.] His Diſobedience laſted "(f) till the 9th or 10th "of September, when an expreſs Command came "from

(f) Id. ib. p. 793.

* Id. ib. † Id. ib. p. 823.

to put in execution the Reſolutions that were taken againſt the Perſon of the Cardinal. The King's recovery ma[illegible] his Plot miſcarry. The Marſhal went over the Alps, and obtain'd the ſame [illegible] * over the Armies that the Marſhals de la Force and Schomberg had; but [illegible]abal having fail'd in their main Deſign, I mean the Queen not being able to o[illegible]he favour ſhe deſir'd of her Son the King, to remove the Cardinal from his Co[illegible] the Marſhals were undone: The King † having taken away the Seals from the El[illegible] which were powerful and dangerous Inſtruments in ſo bad Hands, cauſed him to be carried to Lizieux, and commanded the Marſhals de la Force and Schomberg to ſeize the other, and ſend him Priſoner under a ſtrong guard to the Caſtle of Saint Menehouſt. Theſe are ſome [illegible]tracts out of the Book of Mr. du Cheſnelet, who mentions alſo the Obligations which the (I) eldeſt of theſe Gentlemen had entred into with the League. Moreri tells us, that the Marſhal always refus'd the offers his Friends made him to deliver him out of Priſon, and that his Sentence was revers'd by a Decree of Parliament after the Death of Cardinal Richelieu. This deſerves (K) a Reflection.

† Father Anſelm's Hiſt. of great Offices, p. 104 ſays, that he was carried to the Caſtle of [illegible], and from that to the Caſtle of Chateaudun, where he died in Priſon, Auguſt 7. 1632.

MARI-

" from the King to depart under a great Penalty. " He acquainted thoſe of Paris, that he was there " as a Shield to ſecure them againſt the Forces of " the Emperor, that waited only for his removal, " that they might enter into France. He fill'd " the Kingdom with Letters written to his Friends, " containing the cauſes of his delay, which he " excus'd to the King, ſometimes by falſe News, " and ſometimes becauſe he could not draw " Troops out of the Garriſons without paying the " Soldiers and Communities which had maintain'd " 'em. This delay was a great damage to the King's " deſigns; for all the Reſolutions of thoſe whom " he entruſted with his Affairs, and with the " Army beyond the Alps, remain'd in ſuſpence " upon the uncertainty of his coming, which he " promis'd in one diſpatch, and preſently delay'd " by another for reaſons frivolous and deceitful: " Which occaſion'd ſuch a loſs of Men and Time " that if he had come in the beginning of July to " Suza, as he might eaſily have done, and was " commanded to do, the Paſſage of Veillane had " been ſecur'd, and the relief of Cazal infallible " at the beginning of Auguſt. If he had obey'd, " as he might, the Men had not fallen into the " ſeaſon of the Peſtilence and a mortal Diſeaſe, " which deſtroy'd twenty Thouſand French in the " Autumn, in the Plains of Piedmont. The ſtate " of the Beſieg'd, and of our Troops had not " forc'd the Generals to agree in September to the " Spaniards entrance into the City and Caſtle, by " a Truce, which the event only excus'd; and " the bad Air of Lyons poyſon'd with ſo many " Impurities, had not put the King in danger of " his Life." Here you may ſee the confirmation of a Remark I made above, that it was for the good and ſervice of Lewis XIII. that his Troops ſhould be commanded by the Friends of Cardinal Richelieu; for there being nothing more proper to deſtroy this Cardinal than the bad ſucceſs of the War, it was to be fear'd, that Enemies would favour at leaſt indirectly the Enemies of France. See (b) how the Marillac's contriv'd the matter ſo, that the Expedition of Italy, of which he had the Direction, prov'd unfortunate. I believe they did not deſire the ſucceſs of the Spaniards as ſuch, but only as a means to procure the fall of the chief Miniſter. However, it is certain, that they prejudic'd the intereſt of the Crown, and that Lewis XIII. ſuffer'd for it.

(b) Chaſtelet ib. p. 789.

(I) The Obligation which the eldeſt of theſe Gentlemen had entred into with the League.] The Circumſtances of this are very remarkable. Mr. du Chaſtelet affirms, that among other things it was repreſented to Cardinal Richelieu (c), "That it would not " be difficult to make People believe the ingratitude " and diſguiſes of Marillac the Keeper of the Seals; " and that he, whom all the World believ'd poſſeſs'd with ſuch a furious Paſſion, as to ſign the " League with his own Blood; who had a mind " from a Frenchman to become a Spaniard; who from " Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris, became " an Aſſiſtant to an Attorney, to impriſon the " moſt illuſtrious Society of the World; who " departed from his Pretenſion of being Gentleman, to be a Deputy of the third State of the " League, tho' he was an Officer in the higheſt " Court; who from a Lay-Counſellor became alſo " a Clerk to the Bull thundred out againſt " the King; and who from a furious Leaguer be[illegible] a Domeſtick to the Dutcheſs of Bar, and her [illegible]dent ſo far as to go to a Proteſtant Sermon, " might on this occaſion, have aſſum'd all the Faces, " Changes and Reſolutions that were moſt agreeable " to his Paſſion." The Author whom M. du Chaſtelet refutes had ſaid, that Marſhal Marillac recommended to his Nephew, That he ſhould always ſerve the King faithfully next to God. Upon which words Mr. du Chaſtelet criticizes thus. " Upon what other Grounds, ſays he (d), was the " Rebellion of the League founded? Did Buſſy, " the Spartacus of our Age, being encourag'd " by the Preſence and Duty of Marſhal Marillac " who aſſiſted him, uſe any other Prologue for " his driving the Senate from their Seats, and " dragging them to Priſon?

(d) Id ib p. 839

(K) This deſerves a Reflection.] The Memoirs of Mr. Puyſegur cited in the Dictionary of Moreri, ſay, That the ſame Day the Marſhal was ſeiz'd, the Captain of his Guards (e) " propos'd to him " to procure his eſcape; and that the Marſhal anſwer'd him, That he would not make his eſcape, " if he could, that he fear'd nothing, for he had " always been a true Servant to the King, and " gave him orders to ſerve him faithfully, and to " tell all his Friends to do the ſame. Mr. Puyſegur publiſh'd this as having learn'd it afterwards from Mr. de Marillac, when he guarded him at Pontoiſe. Thoſe that will read what is related four Pages after this, will not think that Moreri has inform'd us faithfully, nor that Mr. Marillac had never any intention to make his eſcape. The King had a mind to know whether Mr. de Puyſegur would be anſwerable for this Marſhal, and conduct him to the great Hall of the Vicarſhip of Pontoiſe (f). " I ſaid, they " are the words of Mr Puyſegur, that I could not " anſwer for him, that Mr. de Marillac Keeper of " the Seals had there a Daughter who was a Nun, " that was very powerful and much belov'd, that " I would not run the hazard of carrying him " thither, and that there was another reaſon which " hinder'd me, which I would not tell him then; " but the King knew afterwards, that it was an " Intrigue of that Nun, and the Queen Mother, " whereby Mr. d'Argouges, who belong'd to her, " would have given me a hundred Crowns to ſet " Marillac at liberty.

(e) Puyſegur Memoir p 8; Dict. Crit.

(f) Id ib. p 87.

The other Obſervation of Moreri, viz. that the Parliament of Paris revers'd the Sentence againſt Marſhal Merillac, might have overthrown what I ſaid in the firſt Remark of this Article, if that Parliament had reviſ'd the Proceſs, and declar'd that the Judges who Condemn'd this Marſhal, did willingly oppreſs him, or were deceiv'd by falſe Witneſſes. But I cannot believe that the Decree of the Parliament of Paris contain'd any ſuch thing. I muſt confeſs that I do not know the Tenor of it, and I do not remember that I have ſeen any Book except Moreri's Dictionary, wherein it is mention'd. Father Anſelm ſays nothing of it, and yet he was a Man who was very careful to oblige the Families he wrote about. Common ſenſe tells us, that if the Parliament of Paris had declar'd Marſhal Marillac innocent of all the Crimes for which he was Condemn'd to Death, they had ſet a mark of Infamy upon thoſe who had Condemn'd him, and chiefly upon Mr. de Chateauneuf their Preſident. This had been a ſtain to Black, ſo ſhameful and abominable, that I cannot underſtand how Mr. de Chateauneuf could have appear'd in public, and yet it was after the Death of Cardinal Richelieu, which, according to Moreri, was the time when the Sentence againſt Marillac was reverſ'd, that he was deliver'd from his Diſgrace: Now it ought to be obſerv'd, that he was advanc'd a ſecond time to be

Keeper

MARINELLA or MARINELLI (LUCRETIA) a Venetian Lady of a great deal of Wit, who publiſh'd among other Books (A) one entituled * La Nobilta e l'eccellenza delle donne con diffetti e mancamenti de gli huomini. She carried the Pretenſions of her Sex, not only to an equality, as ſome (B) Authors have done, but alſo to a ſuperiority.

* It was Printed at Venice in 1601, in 4°.

Keeper of the Seals in (g) 1650. See the Margin *. I could therefore eaſily believe, that the Decree which Moreri mentions, does not concern the things whereof the Marſhal was accus'd, but only the method of proceeding: Which could not but be offenſive to the Parliament; for the erection of an extraordinary Court to judge the Officers of the Crown, was a thing irregular, and contrary to the Rights of Parliament. Beſides, Marſhal Marillac had often declar'd, that he did not own the Commiſſioners that try'd him to be his natural Judges. This might afford the Parliament of Paris a ſpecious Reaſon, that the Marſhal was not lawfully judg'd; but 'tis no proof at all, that they declar'd him innocent of the Crimes upon which the Condemnation was grounded. Here is a convincing inſtance of what I ſay. After the Battle of Rocroy, and the taking of Thionville, the Court having a mind to make ſome acknowledgement to the Duke of Enguien, (h) reſtor'd to the Prince of Conde the fine Houſe of Chantilli, and ſome other parts of the Inheritance of the Duke of Montmorency, to whom the Princeſs of Conde was Heireſs. The Decree of the Parliament of Paris intervening upon the Letters of the Grant, ſays expreſly, that the Duke of Montmorency was not rightly judg'd: And this is founded upon one of the moſt certain Maxims of the Kingdom; That the Dukes and Peers cannot be judg'd but by the King in Perſon, and in his Court of Parliament, pretty full of Eccleſiaſtical and Lay-Peers, According to theſe Maxims the Marſhal de Biron had not been rightly judg'd; for Henry IV. did not aſſiſt in Perſon at his Tryal. But ſetting aſide all Cavils, I ſhall only obſerve, that what was inſerted in favour of Mr. de Montmorency, in the Decree of the Parliament of Paris, does no ways hinder but that he was certainly guilty of Rebellion, and cannot impeach the probity of his Judges. They were incompetent if you pleaſe, but they gave ſentence according to Law, and againſt a Perſon who was really guilty. It often happens that inferior Judges are guilty of irregular Proceedings which are null'd by ſuperior Courts, and the accuſed gains nothing by it, but only a little time; for the Proceedings are renew'd with all the requiſite Formalities, and he is duly Convicted, and the firſt Sentence is confirm'd in the main.

Note, That I do not intend to deny, that honour of ſome Perſons who were puniſh'd with Death, has been reſtor'd in ſuch a manner as did import a judicial Declaration of their Innocence; but commonly this is the Conſequence of a Reviſion of the Proceſs, attended with new Writings in juſtification of the Party, and with convincing Proofs of the Corruption or Raſhneſs of the Judges. Without this, the reſtoring of the honour of thoſe that are puniſh'd with Death, is nothing but a favour granted for the good Services that have been receiv'd, or are expected from a conſiderable Family. This is a Comfort to a Family and a kind of Barrier againſt the inſulting Reproaches of its Enemies. I cannot tell exactly what kind of Reſtoration that was which follows: "(a) In 1549, a little after the Death of King "Francis I. James de Coucy, Lord of Vervin, the "King's Lieutenant at Bologne, and Odoart de Biez "Marſhal of France, his Father-in-Law, were "Condemn'd; the former to Death, becauſe he had "not well defended Montreuil againſt the Engliſh, "the other to loſe his Dignity of Marſhal, becauſe "he had betray'd and ſurrender'd Bologne to Hen"ry King of England. Theſe two Lords were "declar'd innocent in 1577, in the Reign of Hen"ry III. at the Suit of James de Coucy, Son to the "ſaid Lord of Vervin, and Grandſon to the ſaid "Lord Marſhal Biez: And the verification and "publication of their Innocence was made at "Bologne, June the 14th.

To ſpeak Truth, the Letters Patents, Edicts, and Decrees of Princes, contain often ſome honourable Things, which, properly ſpeaking, are nothing but Compliments, and muſt be underſtood after the manner of Compliments. Do you think that Henry III. ſpoke according to his own Judgment, when he declar'd (b), that the Duke of Alençon his Brother, the King of Navarre his Brother-in-Law, the Prince of Conde, and all the other Lords, Knights, Gentlemen, Officers and Inhabitants of his Kingdom, who had a Hand in the laſt Troubles, had been in this his good and loyal Subjects and Servants; and when he teſtified, that he was well and duly inform'd of the good intention of the ſaid Duke of Alençon, and that there was nothing done by him, nor by thoſe concern'd with him, whoſoever they were, the Living as well as the Dead, but what was for his Service? Do you think that Lewis XIII. ſpoke ſincerely (c), when he declar'd, that he believ'd that what was done by the Prince of Conde and his Followers, had been done with a good intention and for his Service? The like Clauſes are commonly (d) to be found in all the Edicts of Peace, ſince the firſt Civil War for Religion under Charles IX. and are now become a Form that will be us'd at all times when the exigencies of the State ſhall require it. The Heads of a Party in a troubleſome Civil War, do commonly capitulate ſo happily for themſelves and their own Intereſt, that they commonly obtain the State of a Marſhal, or the blew String, or the Government of a Place, beſides Letters. I do not ſay, of amneſty, but wherein the King declares that he is perſuaded, that what they did was for his Service. Neither the Prince who ſpeaks, nor the Secretary of State who draws up the Writing, nor the Chancellor who ſeals it, believe any thing of this to be true; yet the neceſſity of the times forces them to expreſs themſelves after this manner. But no body underſtands this literally; People continue to ſay or to think, that they bore Arms againſt the King, and were rank Rebels. The reſt muſt paſs for Compliments under the great Seal, and Chancery-Lyes.

What Kings do in their Edicts and Declarations, is alſo done ſometimes in a Parliament, either by their Order, or upon their Recommendation, and ſometimes tho' they are not concern'd in it. I mean, that the honour of Perſons is reſtor'd ſometimes upon one pretence, and ſometimes upon another, upon a proſpect, that this will ſerve the Relations for ſome purpoſe: But the Judges who have Condemn'd, are not accounted infamous, or look'd upon as puniſhable, unleſs the Decree of Reſtoration be grounded upon a reviſion of the Writings, and it be order'd, that the Judges or Witneſſes ſhall be immediately Proſecuted. I think that no body dare ſay, that the Parliament of Paris order'd any thing like this againſt Mr. de Chateauneuf, or againſt his Aſſeſſors, or againſt the multitude of Witneſſes whom they examin'd and re-examin'd. If Mr. Moreri had cited ſome Authors, he might have eas'd me, and perhaps inabled me to know, that what I have juſt now obſerv'd is needleſs. See the Margin (e). It muſt be confeſs'd, that in Hiſtorical Matters, thoſe who abound with exact Quotations, do extreamly abridge the way of Inſtruction.

(A) Among other Books.] She wrote a Book entituled, la colomba ſacra, the Life of the Virgin Mary, and of St. Francis. I find this in (f) le coſe notabili & maravigliose della Citta di Venetia.

(B) As ſome (g) Authors have done.] I ſhall name only two: One is Mademoiſelle de Gournay, who wrote a Book of the equality of Men and Women. Her Pretention was diſapprov'd by Mrs. Schurman: (h) Nobiliſſimæ Gornacenſis diſſertationculam — ut ab elegantia ac lepore improbare minime puſſim: ita eam per omnia comprobare nec auſim quidem nec velim; licet ad ſapientum teſtimonia quæ illa nobis exhibuit, brevitatis cauſa provocarim. The other Author is one who publiſh'd at Paris in 1673, a Book entitul'd, Of the equality of the two Sexes, a Diſcourſe Phyſical and Moral, wherein is to be ſeen the importance of clearing the Mind from Prejudices. He thought that ſome would write againſt him, and (i) he was threaten'd with it: But finding that none appear'd to refute him he himſelf wrote againſt his own Book; for he publiſh'd a Treatiſe in 1675, Of the excellency of Men, againſt the equality of

(a) Richeome Apologetical Complaint, n. 50, p. 184, 185.

(b) Auberi Hiſt. of Cardinal Mazarin B. 2 p. 208.

(g) Anſelm ubi ſupra, p. 105.

* The Prince of Conde remembring that Mr. de Chateauneuf preſided at the Tryal of Mr. de Montmorency, croſs'd him as much as he could, and at laſt cauſ'd the Seals to be taken from him. See Priolo, l. 5. c. 16, & 29. & alibi. Would not he have alledg'd, the Infamy wherewith the Parliament of Paris had mark'd him?

(b) The Edict of 1576. Art. 49, 53.

(c) Edict of the Month of May, 1616. Art. 17.

(d) See Mr. Daillé's Reply to Adam and Cottiby, 2. part. c. 18. p. m. 112, 113.

(e) Balzac in the 13 Letter of the firſt Book to Mr. Conrart, dated April 30. 1653, mentions a Letter he had written to a Gentleman of Languedoc, wherein, ſays he, I have ſpoke of the Reviſion of the Proceſs of Marſhal Marillac, altho' no body be named in it. I confeſs I know not what he mean by that Reviſion. I want a great many Books and Memoirs.

(f) At p. 311. of the Venice edit. 1655.

(g) See the Article Fonte.

(h) Anna Maria Schurman in opuſcul. p. 85.

(i) See the Journal des Savans, March 16. 1676.

Superiority above the Maſculine. Mrs. de Schurman * did not approve the Deſign of this Book; and therefore ſhe would have blam'd Mrs (C) Jacquette Guillaume.

MARIUS, ſirnam'd ÆQUICOLA, becauſe he was born in the Country (A) of the Æqui in Italy, flouriſh'd at the end of the XVth Century, and in the beginning of the XVIth. He ſtudied † at Paris Phyſicks and Mathematicks under Faber Stapulenſis. He was one of the Wits in the Court of Francis Gonzaga, Marquis of Mantua, and he wrote (B) in Italian a Hiſtory of Mantua, wherein he enlarges very much upon what concerns the illuſtrious Houſe of Gonzaga. He wrote (C) many other Books: What he wrote (D) about the Nature of Love, was re-printed many times,

* Tantum vero abeſt ut hoc, cum virginali modeſtia aut ſaltem innato mihi pudore congruere arbitrer, ut vel perlegere pigeat tractatum cætera inſignem Lucretiæ Marinellæ. Anna Maria à Schurman in opuſculis p. 85.

† He himſelf ſays ſo, as I learned by a Memorial, which a certain Perſon communicated to me, but would not be named.

Sexes. If you conſider well all that he ſays, you will diſcover, that he had no deſign to refute his firſt Book, but rather to confirm it indirectly. However it be, theſe two Books were re-printed at Paris in 1679. It was a long time before the Author of them was known: It was ſaid in the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres for the Month of Octobre (k) 1685, that his Name was Frelin; but ſome time after it was declar'd there (l), that he ſhould rather be call'd Poulain. And indeed this is his true Name, altho' he aſſum'd that of la Barre (m) at the beginning of the third Edition in 1691, and at the beginning of the third part of his Work publiſh'd in 1692. I muſt tell you by the bye, that he was an Eccleſiaſtick of Lorrain, who imbrac'd at Geneva the Proteſtant Communion.

(C) She would have blam'd Mrs. Jacquette Guillaume.] Who publiſh'd at Paris in 1665, a Book entituled, The Illuſtrious Ladies, wherein is prov'd by good and ſtrong Reaſons, that the Female Sex in all reſpects exceeds the Male. There was publiſh'd at Paris a Book in 8°. in 1643, with this Title, The generous Woman, who proves that her Sex is more Noble, more Politick, more Valiant, more Learned, more Virtuous, and more Frugal than that of Men, by L. S. D. L. L. I add, that Mr. Scheffer informs me (n), that there was Printed at Upſal in 1650, a Treatiſe entitul'd, La donna migliore dell huomo, Paradoſſo, written by Jacobus del Pozzo, (i. e. de Puteo.)

This Theſis had been a long time maintain'd by ſome Wits. Jerom Ruſcelli publiſh'd in 1552, an Italian Book, wherein he gave the Superiority of Perfection to the Women, (o) CHELA DONNA ſia di gran lunga piu nobile & piu degna dell' HUOMO. He obſerves that Plutarch, John Boccacio, Il Corteggiano l'Agrippa, il Portio, il (p) Lando, il Domenichi, and ſeveral others had handled this Queſtion, and notwithſtanding that, we do not find that their Reaſons have made the World believe, that the Women ſurpaſs the Men. He quotes (q) Maggio, and Bernardo Spina, who writ in defence of the ſame Opinion. I have a Book which was Printed at Paris in 1617, with this Title, Replique, à l'Antimalice, or a Defence of Women, of the Sieur Vigoureux, otherwiſe called Brye-Comte-Robert——by the Sieur de la Bruyere, a Gentleman of Bearn. This Gentleman declares (r) That his intention is to confute what the Author of the Defence had ſaid, that the Women are better than the Men, and more Virtuous in all things. Note, that this Defence was the refutation of a Piece of one (s) James Olivier, and that he who publiſh'd it, (t) to have a larger Field of Diſcourſe, undertook to appropriate to the Men——what was attributed to the Women, in the Book which he refuted. You will find other Writers in the 2d Tome of Vigneul Marville's Melanges, at the 27th and 28th Pages of the Dutch Edition.

(A) Becauſe he was born in the Country of the Æqui.] This is the Opinion of Leander Albertus in his Deſcription of Italy (u). Æquicolorum nomen ſuperiori memoria Marius Alvetius plurimum nobilitavit cognomento Æquicolæ. The Italian words of this Author are theſe, (a) ha illuſtrato gli Equicoli Mario di Alveto. We muſt not wonder that Nicodemo (b) did not make uſe of them to refute Nicolas Toppi, (c) who plac'd this Mario among the Neapolitan Authors; for there was great reaſon for placing him there. Marius Æquicola was of Alvito, and if on the one ſide many Geographers believe that this place was ſituate in the Country of the ancient Æqui, 'tis certain on the other ſide, that at preſent it belongs to the Kingdom of Naples.

(B) He wrote in Italian a Hiſtory of Mantua.] Let us cite the words of Leander Albertus: (d) Diu inter Franciſci Gonzagæ Mantuani Marchionis familiares fuit, & lingua vernacula preleganter Gonzagarum vitas ſcripſit. Do not believe what he ſays of the Elegance of this Book; for I know that the Style of it was ſo harſh, that Benedict Oſanna was oblig'd to correct and poliſh it, when a new Edition of that Hiſtory of Mantua was made in 1608. Maximam vitæ partem Mantuæ egit Marius inter familiares Iſabellæ Eſtenſis uxoris Francici II Marchionis in cujus gratiam ſcripſit de Mantuana hiſtoria breves commentarios a rerum Origine, ad ſua uſque tempora lingua Patina, eaq; rudi & rancida, ut ea ætas ferebat. Verum ſeculo ſequenti Bened. Oſanna Mantuanus cum Marii hiſtoria reuderetur, vetere obſoletas uſitatis commutavit, & ſtylum rubiginæ ſqualliddum lima ut ornavit atque (e). It is divided into five Books: The three firſt are dedicated to Francis II. Marquis of Mantua, who died in 1519. The fourth being wholly deſign'd for the Life of that Marquis, was dedicated to Frederick Gonzaga his Son, to whom Marius was Secretary, if we may believe Bonacciuoli. The fifth contains the Hiſtory of this Frederick, till the Year 1521. Of this I have been inform'd by a Memorial which Mr—— was pleaſed to ſend me.

(C) He wrote many other Books.] A Treatiſe De opportunitate, Printed at Naples in 1507, in 4°. Epiſtola ad Maximilianum Sforziam Mediolani ducem de liberata Italia, Printed in 1513, in 4°. A Latin Apology againſt the ſlanderers of the French Nation. It was tranſlated into French by Michael Roſe, and that Verſion was Printed at Paris in 1550 in 8°. D Iſabellæ Eſtenſi Mantuæ Principis iter in Galliam Narbonenſem deſcriptum. I ſhall ſpeak hereafter of the Deſcription of that Journey. We find in the Bibliotheque of Draudius one (f) ariæ Aquivolus Olivetanus, the Author of a (g) Book of Theology Printed at Munich in 1584, and one h) Marius Æquicolius, the Author of a Harangue de laud. hujus trium Philoſophiæ facultatum. Toppi (i) aſcribes the firſt of theſe two Treatiſes to our Marius Æquicola. He gives us the Title of it with a Clauſe which Draudius has forgotten, viz. that Anſelm Stockius firſt publiſh'd this Book after he had Corrected it. Leonard Nicodemo (k) mentions this Title, Introduzione di Mario Equicola al comporre ogni ſorte di rima della lingua volgare, con uno eruditiſſimo diſcorſo della Pittura, e con molte ſegrete allegorie, intorno alle Muſe, e alla poeſia, at Venice 1555, in 4°. Add to this what will be ſaid in the following Remarks.

Let us ſee what Mr.—has inform'd me of as to the relation of a Journey, which Iſabel la d'Eſte, Marchioneſs of Mantua, made into Provence to viſit the Sainte Baume, to which ſhe was oblig'd by a Vow. The Author declares that he knows not the reaſon (l) of that Journey, and would not tell it if he knew it. Here is his Dedication. Marius Æquicola Ferdinando Gonzagæ Franc. March. Mantuæ iiii. filio S. D. P. In hoc ſcribendo non minus equidem laboravi animo quam corpore fatigabar, cum ea adirem de quibus diximus loca. Sequitur enim laſſitudo animi, ut corporis. Jam vero animo Tui rarus non Heros ad poſſem fixamur, ſed in templo Veneris genitricis conſeremus. Illius ergo hoc ad te. Vale. He begins his Relation with enquiring into the Original of Vows among the Ancients. After this, he leads his Heroine through Italy over the Alpes into Provence, and gives a ſhort and good Deſcription of the Places through which ſhe paſs'd. The Impreſſion of the Book is faulty; for there is no Year to it, nor is the Year of the Pilgrimage mention'd; but it ſeems it was before 1512.

(D) What he wrote about the Nature of Love was reprinted.] Toppi mentions only the Edition of

(d) Leander Albertus ubi ſupra.

(e) The words are taken from a Manuſcript which Mr—— has been pleaſed to ſend me.

(f) At p. 283 of the Edition of Francfort, 1625.

(g) In quo tractatu unde anti quorum latria, & vera Catholica religio incrementum ſumpſerint: cum epiſtola Anſhelmi Stockii Equitis.

(h) At p. 1451.

(i) Nicolo Toppi, ubi ſupra.

(k) Nicodemo, ubi ſupra, p. 171.

(l) Cauſas nonnat ahi, non diſſimulo ne neſciere: quod etiamſi ſenem, diſſimulaſem

(a) Leander Albertus in deſcript. Ital. p. 225 (b) fol. m. 149. verſo. (b) Nicodemo Addiz. alla Biblioteca Napoletana, p. 172. (c) Nicolo Toppi Biblioteca Napoletana, p. 206.

(p) See his Article at the end of the Remark Z. (q) Id. ib verſo. & fol. 15. (r) In his Preface. (s) Intituled Alphabet de l'imperfection & Malice des Femmes. (t) Preface to the Replique à l'Antimalice. This Anti is not to be found in Mr. Baillet's Collection. (u) Leander Albertus in deſcript. Ital. p. 225 (a) fol. m. 149. verſo. (b) Nicodemo Addiz. alla Biblioteca Napoletana, p. 172. (c) Nicolo Toppi Biblioteca Napoletana, p. 206.

times, and yet is very difficult to be got. I have said something of him in another place *. Scaliger the Father (E) praiſes him very much. The Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque deſerves to be cenſur'd.

* In one of the Remarks of the firſt Vergerius.

MARNIX (PHILIP DE) Seigneur deu mont Sainte Aldegonde. See SAINTE ALDEGONDE.

MARNIX (JOHN DE) Baron de Potes, &c. is not known to me but by a Book entituled, Reſolutions Politiques, ou Maximes d'Eſtat, Printed at Bruſſels in 1612. in 4*o*. It contains ſome good things, and chiefly in the Margins. He dedicated it to the Arch-Duke Albert, Sovereign of the Low Countries, whoſe Subject he owns himſelf to be. He put out ſome Years after a ſecond † Edition of it very much enlarged, and Dedicated it to the Infanta Iſabella Clara Eugenia, this Arch-Duke's Widow. I have not ſeen his other Book entituled Repreſentations, which the Catalogue of Oxford mentions to have been publiſh'd at Bruſſels in 1622, in 4*o*.

† See Paſquier, Recherches de la France, l.7.c.6.p.m. 613

MAROT (CLEMENT) Valet de Chamber to Francis I. and the beſt Poet of his Time, was of Cahors. He infinitely exceeded John MAROT his (A) Father, who was pretty ‡ good at making Verſes. Some ſay, that He was Educated (B) in the Quality of a Page to Nicolas de Neufville, who was the firſt of his Family that was Secretary of State. They add, that about 1520 he was appointed to ſerve the Princeſs (C) Margaret

‡ It was alſo Printed at Rouen in 1624.

(m) Toppi, ubi ſupra.

Venice 1536, in 8°. which is not the firſt; for he ſays (m), Un libro di natura d'amore, riſtampato e corretto. Nicodemo (n) takes notice of the Edition of Venice 1554, in 12°. which is entitled, Libro di Natura d'amore di Mario Equicola di nuovo con ſomma diligenza riſtampato, e corretto da M. Lodovico Dolce. Con una tavola delle coſe piu notabili che nell' opera ſi contengono. He ſays, that Doni mentions this Book with praiſe in his firſt Libraria at p. 73. of the Venice Edition 1550. This Book of Æquicola was re-printed at Venice in 1563, and 1583. Gabriel Chapuys made a French Tranſlation of it (o), which was Printed at Paris. The following Paſſage of Auguſtin Niphus will not be ſuperfluous: (p) Temporibus noſtris Marius Æquicola Olivetanus amiciſſimus noſter meo Judicio fertiliſſime de amore ſcripſit, & licet vulgari atq; materno ſermone, tamen nihil intentatum præterit. Do not take Olivetanus for a fault of Impreſſion; for the Author calls himſelf (q) Æquicolam Olivetanum in his Book De opportunitate. It was not becauſe he was of the Order of the Monks of Mount Olivet, as Poſſevin affirms in his Apparatus; but becauſe he believ'd the place of his Birth might be call'd Olivetum (r) as well as Alvitum or Alvetium.

(n) Nicodemo, ubi ſupra.

(o) See du Verdier's Biblioth. Françoiſe p. 433.

(p) Auguſt. Niphus de amore, c. 1.*p.m.*285.

(q) Mr.— in the Memorial cited above.

(r) Ab Oleis ibid.

(E) Scaliger the Father praiſes him very much.]. He inſcrib'd a piece of Poetry to him, which begins thus:

Maxime (ſ) vir, geminas cui circum tempora laurus
Purpurea facilis nectit Apollo manu:
Æquicola Aonidum decus, acceptiſſime rerum
Numinibus veſtris, numinibuſq; meis:
Quid faciam miſer?

(ſ) Julius Cæſar Scaliger in Lacrymis, part. 1. Poematum, p. 535, edit. 1591.

This Poem was written in 1517, if we believe (t) Joſeph Scaliger, who adds, that his Father and Matthew Bandel contracted a very cloſe Friendſhip, while they were both inſinuating themſelves into the favour of Æquicola.

(t) Joſephus Scaliger contut. fabulæ Burdonum, p. 264. *See alſo p.*240, 241.

(F) The Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque deſerves to be cenſur'd.] Marius Æquicola is (v) there ſurnam'd Alvelanus, which is a fault; it ſhould be Alvetanus. 'Tis ſaid there, that his Italian Treatiſe De natura amoris, Corrected by Thomas Fazellus Porcacius was Printed at Venice in 1563. I know no Author who has thoſe three Names. There Marius Æquicola Alvetanus, the Author of that Book, is impertinently diſtinguiſh'd from Marius Æquicolus, vir nobilis, Italus, eques auratus, qui ſcripſit pro Baptiſta Mantuano defenſorium in ſycophantas librum 1. Item de opportunitate. Item de natura & de amore.

(v) Epit. Biblioth. Geſn. p. 773.

(A) John MAROT his Father who was pretty good at making Verſes.] He was born at Mathieu near to Caen, if we may believe Moreri. Others ſay only (w), that he was of Caen, and add, that he was Poet to Queen Anne of Bretagne, and then Valet de Chamber to Francis I. The Collection of his Works contains Le Doctrinal des Princeſſe & nobles Dames, deduit en 24. Rondeaux. The Journies to Genoa and Venice, victoriouſly finiſh'd by King Lewis XII. Other forty nine Rondeaux. An Epiſtle of the Ladies of Paris to King Francis I. being in Italy after he had defeated the Swiſſers. Another Epiſtle of the Ladies of Paris to the Courtiers of France, who were then in Italy. Another Epiſtle to Queen Claudia. The Church ſpeaking to France. A Royal Song about the Conception of Our Lady, and another Royal Song in honour of Jeſus Chriſt (a).

(w) La Croix du Maine, p. 242.

(a) Taken out of du Verdier Vau-Privas Biblioiotheque Françoiſe p. 718.

(B) That he was educated in the quality of a Page.] Mr. de Rocolles (b) aſſerts this matter of fact, againſt whom I offer two Reaſons. Nicolas de Neufville, who was the firſt of his Family that was preferr'd to the Poſt of Secretary of State, was born (c) in 1542; and therefore he could not have Clement Marot, who was then fifty five Years old. Nicolas de Neufville his Father died very ancient (d) in 1599; nevertheleſs we may very well ſay, that he was born a long time after our Poet. Now we never ſee Gentlemen much younger than their Pages. This is my firſt Reaſon. The ſecond is taken from a Poem, wherein Marot relates, that after he left his Country, he was always in the Retinue of Francis I.

(b) Rocolles, true Hiſtory of Calviniſm, l. 5. p. 153.

(c) According to F. Anſelm Hiſt. of the great Officers, p.273. He died in 1617, Aged 75 Years.

(d) Anſelm, ib.

A (e) bref parler, c'eſt Cahors en Quercy,
Que je laiſſay pour venir querre icy
Mille malheurs, auſquelz ma deſtinée
M'avoit ſubmis. Car une matinée
N'ayant dix ans en France fus mené:
La ou depuis me ſuis tant pourmené,
Que j'oubliay ma langue maternelle,
Et groſſiment apprins la paternelle,
Langue Françoiſe es grands Cours eſtimée:
Laquelle en fin quelque peu s'eſt limée.
Suyvant le Roy Frnçois premier du nom,
Dont le ſavoir excede le renom.
C'eſt le ſeul bien, que j'ay acquis en France
Depuis vingt ans en labeur, & ſouffrance.

(e) Marot in the Poem entituled Hell, *p.*42. Dutch edit. 1700.

However 'tis true, that he was a Page to one Nicolas de Neufville; and Mr. de Rocolles ſays with good reaſon, that Marot dedicated to this Lord of Neufville one of his Poems entituled, The Temple of Cupid; and that the Epiſtle wherein he dedicates this Poem, is dated at Lyons, May the 15*th* 1538.

(C) He was appointed to ſerve the Princeſs Margaret.] Mr. de Rocolles affirms (g), that ſhe took him into her Service as her Secretary. But Marot, who is more to be believ'd than any other, tells us, that he was not in that Employment.

(g) Rocolles ubi ſupra, p. 154.

Rien (h) n'ay acquis des valeurs de ce Monde,
Qu'une Maiſtreſſe, en qui git, & abonde
Plus de ſavoir, parlant, & eſcrivant,
Qu'en autre femme en ce Monde vivant.
C'eſt du ſvanc Lys l'iſſue Marguerite,
Grande ſur terre, envers le Ciel petite:
C'eſt la Princeſſe à l'eſprit inſpiré,
Au cueur eſlu, qui de Dieu eſt tiré
Mieux (& m'en crois) que le feſtu de l'Ambre:
Et d'elle ſuis l'humble Vallet de chambre.
C'eſt mon eſtat. O Juge Plutonique:
Le Roy des Francs, dont elle eſt ſœur unique,
M'ha fait ce bien: & aucune jour viendra,
Que la ſœur meſme au frere me rendra.

(h) Marot ibid. p.43.

Theſe Verſes inform us, that he was appointed by Francis I. to ſerve the Princeſs his Siſter; which appears alſo by the following Paſſage:

Ainſi (i) je ſuis pourſuy, & pourſuivant
D'eſtre le moindre, & plus petit ſervant
De voſtre hoſtel (magnifique Princeſſe)
Ayant eſpoir que [illegible] nobleſſe
Me recevra, non pour aucune choſe,
Qui ſoit en moy pour vous ſervir encloſe:

(i) Id. in the Depourveu à Madame la Ducheſſe d'Alençon, p. 104.

Margaret the King's Sister, and the Duke of Alençon's Wife. He followed that Duke to the Army * in 1521. He was Wounded and made Priſoner at the Battle of Pavia (D). This Adventure is leſs taken notice of than the Perſecution he ſuffer'd from the Bigots, who put him in Priſon (E) as one ſuſpected of Hereſie. When he was deliver'd out of their Hands by the Protection of Francis I. he was ſtill in great fear of theſe People, and ſo much the more, becauſe he had very naturally deſcribed the injuſtice of the Chatelet † in one of his Poems. And therefore when he knew that they begun again to ſeek after him, and that they had ſeiz'd his Books, he had not the courage to return (F) to

* See the Epiſtle of Marot from the Camp of Attigny, (p. 104. Dutch edit. 1700.) and the following.

† See the Remark F. Letter c.

Non pour prier, requeſte, ou rhetorique,
Mais pour l'amour de voſtre Frere unique,
Roy des François qui à l'heure preſente
Vers vous m'envoye, & à vous me preſente
De par Potion, gentilhomme honnorable.

(D) Wounded and made Priſoner at the Battle of Pavia.] The Author of the Life of Clement Marot inſerted in the Collection (k) of the moſt excellent Pieces of the French Poets, has not omitted this Adventure. He produces the following Verſes of Marot, without telling us from what Piece he had them (l).

(k) Printed at Paris by Claudius Barbin, 1692.

Là fut perce tout outre rudement
Le bras de cil, qui t'ayme loyaument :
Non pas le bras, dont il ha de couſtume
De manier ou la lance, ou la plume :
Amour encor le te garde, & reſerve,
Et par eſcrits veult que de loing te ſerve.
Finalement, avec le Roy mon maiſtre
Delà les monts priſonnier ſe vid eſtre
Mon triſte corps, navré en grand ſouffrance.
Quant eſt du cueur, long temps y ha, qu'en France
Ton priſonnier il eſt ſans meſpriſon.

(l) It is from the firſt Elegy, p. m. 47. It is not inſcribed to the King as is affirm'd in the Life of Clement Marot before his Works in the Dutch Edition, 1700.

(E) Who put him in Priſon as one ſuſpected of Hereſie.] This was done at the inſtance of Doctor Bouchard, when Francis I. was a Priſoner of Charles V. in Spain. The firſt of theſe two Things is prov'd by theſe words of Marot:

Donne (m) reſponſe à mon preſent affaire,
Docte Docteur. Qui t'ha induit à faire
Empriſonner depuis ſix jours en ca,
Un tien Amy, qui one ne t'offenſa ?
Et vouloir mettre en luy crainte, & terreur
D'aigre juſtice, en diſant, que l'erreur
Tient de Luther ? Point ne ſuis Lutheriſte,
Ne Zuinglien, & moins Anabaptiſte :
Je ſuis de Dieu par ſon filz Jeſu Chriſt.

(m) Marot's Epiſtle to Mr. Bouchart, Dr. of Divinity, p. 116.

In the remainder of this Letter, he continues to proteſt that he is Orthodox and a good Catholick. The Proof of the ſecond thing is contain'd in the Verſes I ſhall now tranſcribe. Note, that Marot relates at the ſame time what paſſed between his Judges and him during his Impriſonment.

Or (n) ſuis-je loing de ma Dame, & Princeſſe,
Et pres d'ennuy, d'infortune, & deſtreſſe,
Or ſuis-je loing de ſa treſclere face.
S'elle fuſt pres (ô cruel) ton audace
Pas ne ſe fuſt miſe en effort de prendre
Son ſerviteur, qu'on n'ha point veu meſprendre
Mais tu vois bien (dont je lamente, & pleure)
Qu'elle s'en va (helas) & je demeure
Avec Pluton, & Charon nautonnier.
Elle va veoir un plus grand priſonnier :
Sa noble mere vers elle accompagne
Pour retirer noſtre Roy hors d'Eſpagne.

(n) Marot in the Poem entituled Hell, p. 43.

I know not the Circumſtances of the Concluſion of this Proceſs; but I believe that the King and the Princeſs Margaret protected our Poet. Do not tell me, that it is manifeſt the Letter (o) he wrote to Francis I. on the 15th Day of his Impriſonment, was very well receiv'd, and that the Prince (p) was ſo charm'd with it, that he wrote himſelf to the Court of Aydes, to procure the liberty of Clement Marot; for this concerns another Impriſonment, not about Hereſie, which was after the King's return into France. 'Tis eaſie to prove all theſe particulars. Marot declares (q), that he had been in Priſon fifteen Days, and that he was accus'd of taking a Priſoner out of the Hands of the Serjeants. It appears by the Regiſter (r) of the Court of Aydes at Paris, that the Letter of Francis I. concerning the enlargement of Marot, is dated from Paris, November 1. 1527. This Prince declares, That he was duly inform'd of the cauſe of the ſaid Impriſonment, which was the reſcue of certain Priſoners, and enjoins, that all Excuſes being ſet aſide, Marot ſhould be deliver'd out of Priſon; which Orders the Court obey'd. Here then is a fault to be Corrected in the Collection of the moſt excellent Pieces of the (s) French Poets, and in the new Edition of the Works of Clement Marot. The Life of this Poet in both theſe Works, ſays, that the Letter of Francis I. to the Court of Aydes, which deliver'd Marot out of Priſon, was written when he was put in upon ſuſpicion of Hereſie. Did the Court of Aydes meddle with that? This ought to teach thoſe, who write the Life of private Perſons, that it concerns them to be very careful in enquiring after the ſmalleſt Circumſtances

(s) That at the Hague. 1700.

(F) He had not the Courage to return to Paris.] Let us hear what he himſelf ſays: He tells us, that as he was returning thither, he turn'd back the ſame way, when he underſtood that the King was prepoſſeſt againſt him. The Verſes which I cite, are in a Letter which he wrote to that Monarch.

Pour (a) revenir à mon propos,
Rhadamanthus avecques ſes ſuppoſts
Dedans Paris, combien que fuſſe à Blois,
Encontre moy fait ſes premiers exploits,
En ſaiſiſſant de ſes mains violentes
Toutes mes grands richeſſes excellentes,
Et beaux treſors, d'avarice delivres.
C'eſt à ſavoir mes papiers, & mes livres,
Et mes labeurs. O Juge ſacrilege,
Qui t'ha donne, ne loy, ne privilege
D'aller toucher, & faire tes maſſacres
Au cabinet des ſaintes Muſes ſacres ?
Bien eſt-il vray que livres de deffenſe
On y trouva : mais cela n'eſt offenſe
A un Poete, à qui on doibt laſcher
La bride longue, & rien nelui cacher.
. . . . . .
Le (b) Juge donc affecté ſe monſtra
En mon endroit, quand les premiers outra
Moy, qui eſtois abſent, & loing des villes,
Ou certains fols ſeirent choſes trop viles,
Et de ſcandale : helas, au grand ennuy,
Au detriment, & à la mort d'autruy.
Ce que ſçachant, pour me juſtifier,
En ta bonté je m'oſay tant fier,
Que lors de Blois party, pour à toy Sire,
Me preſenter : mais quelcun me vint dire,
Si tu y vas amy, tu n'es pas ſage :
Car tu pourrois avoir mauvais viſage
De ton Seigneur. Lors comme le Nocher,
Qui pour fuir le peril d'un Rocher
En pleine mer ſe deſtourne tout court,
Ainſi pour vray m'eſcartay de la Court,
Craignant trouver le peril de durté,
Ou je n'euz onc fors douceur, & ſeurté.

(a) Marot in his Epiſtle to the King during his exile at Ferrara, p. 149.

(b) Ib. p. 18.

Note, that he begins this Letter with repreſenting that his Flight is no Proof that he owns himſelf to be guilty, but only that he is convinc'd of the bad adminiſtration of Juſtice.

Je (c) penſe bien que ta magnificence,
Souverain Roy, croira que mon abſence
Vient par ſentir la coulpe, qui me point
D'aucun meſfait : mais ce n'eſt pas le point
Je ne me ſins du nombre des coulpables :
Mais je ſçay tant de Juges corrompables
Dedans Paris, que par pecune prinſe,
Ou par amis, ou par leur entreprinſe,
Ou en faveur, & charite piteuſe
De quelque belle humble ſolliciteuſe,
Ilz ſauveront la vie orde, & immunde
Du plus meſchant, & criminel du monde
Et au rebours, par faute de pecune,
Ou de ſupport, ou par quelque rancune
Aux innocens ilz ſont tant inhumains,
Qu'ilz content ſuis ne tomber en leurs mains.

(c) Ib. p. 176

to Paris: He left Blois where he had learn'd this News, and retir'd to the House of the Queen of Navarre * his ancient Mistress, and not thinking himself safe there, he went into Italy, and stay'd at the Court of the Princess Renata of France, Dutchess of Ferrara †, who was a good Friend to those of the Reformed Religion. He obtain'd of Francis I. (G) leave to return in 1536, but he was so well known to be a follower of what was call'd the new Opinions, that he made his escape some Years after to Geneva. 'Tis alledg'd that there (H) he debauch'd his Land-lady, and that the Penalty of Death

* The Dutchess of Alençon was become Queen of Navarre by her Marriage with John d'Albret.

† See the Epistle which Marot wrote to the King during his Exile.

Non pas que tous je les mette en un compte.
Mais la grand' part la meilleure surmonte.
Et tel merite y estre authorisé,
Dont le conseil n'est ouy, ne prisé.
Suyvant propos, trop me sont ennemys
Pour leur Enfer, que par escrit j'ay mis,
Où quelque peu de leurs tours je descœuvre,
Là me veult on grand mal pour petit œuvre:
Mais je leur suis encore plus odieux,
Dont je l'osay lire devant les yeux
Tant elervoyans de ta majesté haute,
Qui ha pouvoir de reformer leur faute.

He informs us afterwards of a thing his Historians take no notice of, viz. That he was seiz'd while he was under a great Sickness, and that the King gave orders he should be let alone.

(d) Ib. p. 177.

(d) Mesmes un jour ils vindrent
A moy malade, & prisonnier me tindrent,
Faisans arrest sus un homme arresté
Au lict de mort, & m'eussent pis traité,
Si ce ne fust ta grand' bonté, qui à ce
Donna bon ordre avant que t'en priasse,
Leur commandant de laisser choses telles:
Dont je te rends graces tresimmortelles.

Then he goes on, and censures the Sorbonne, and protests that the suspicions of Heresie they had endeavour'd to raise in the King's Mind against him, were altogether unjust. See what he says against the Sorbonne.

(e) Id. ib.

Autant (e) comme eux, sans cause qui soit bonne
Me veult de mal l'ignorante Sorbonne:
Bien ignorante elle est d'estre ennemie
De la trilingue, & noble Academie,
Qu'as erigée. Il est tout manifeste,
Que là dedans contre ton vueil celeste
Est deffendu qu'on ne voise allegant
Hebrieu, ny Grec, ny Latin elegant:
Disant, que c'est langage d'Heretiques.
O povres gens de sçavoir tous ethiques!
Bien faites vray ce proverbe courant,
Science n'ha hayneux que l'ignorant.
Certes, ô Roy, si le profond des cueurs
On veult sonder de ces Sorboniqueurs,
Trouvé sera que de toy ils se deulent.
Comment douloir? Mais que grand mal te veulent,
Dont tu as fait les lettres, & les arts
Plus reluisans, que du temps des Cesars:
Car leurs abus vond on en facon telle.
C'est toy, qui as allumé la chandelle,
Par qui maint œil void mainte verité,
Qui sous epesse, & noire obscurité
A fait tant d'ans icy bas demeurance.
Et qu'est-il rien plus obscur qu'ignorance?
Eux, & leur court en absence, & en face
Par plusieurs fois m'ont usé de menace:
Dont la plus douce estoit un criminel
M'executer.

I do not set down the Heroick Vow which he adds. He wish'd he might be sacrificed to their Rage, provided the Church were not subject to their Frauds. I doubt whether he would have carried on his Zeal so far as he said; but I do not doubt of what he says, that those Doctors had a mind to keep up Ignorance. This part of the XVIth Century will be an eternal blot to the Sorbonne, who manag'd things at that rate. Let us now go on to the Protestations this Poet made of his being Orthodox.

(f) Id. ib. p. 178.

Or (f) à ce coup il est bien évident,
Que dessus moy ont une vieille dent,
Quand ne pouvans crime sur moy prouver,
Ont tresbien quis, & tresbien sceu trouver
Pour me fascher, brisve expedition,
Inte donnant mauvaise impression
De moy ton Sire, pour après à leur aise
Mieux mettre a fin leur voulonté mauvaise:
Et pour ce, ilz n'ont certes eu honte
Faire courir de moy vers toy maint compte,
Avecques bruit plein de propos menteurs,
Desquelz ilz sont les premiers inventeurs.
De heriste ilz m'ont donné le nom:
Qui droit ce soit, je leur responds que non.
Lutheriste pour moy des cieux n'est descendu:
Luther en Croix n'ha point esté pendu
Pour mes pechez: & tout bien adviſé,
Au nom de luy ne suis point baptizé:
Baptizé suis au nom qui tant bien sonne,
Qu'au son de luy le Pere éternel donne
Ce que l'on quiert: le seul nom sous les cieux
En, & par qui ce monde vicieux
Peut estre sauf. Le nom tant fort puissant,
Qu'il ha rendu tout genouil flechissant,
Soit infernal, soit celeste, ou humain:
Le nom, par qui du Seigneur Dieu la main
M'ha preservé de ces grands loups rabis,
Qui m'espioient dessous peaux de Brebis.

(G) Leave to return in 1536.] This Date is verified by his Poem (g) entitul'd, A God bl ſs you to the Court, which he wrote a little after his arrival: In it he speaks of the Death of the Dauphin, and (h) of the Marriage of the Princess Magdalen, and observes, that she was upon her departure. Now the Dauphin was poyson'd in August 1536, and the Princess Magdalen Married the King of Scotland on the first Day of the Year 1537. Add to this, that Marot says he arriv'd at Lyons a little after Francis I. set out (i) from thence.

(g) p. m. 191.

(h) He calls her Queen Magdalen: But this does not prove that the Marriage was finished, it being sufficient that it was agreed upon.

(i) This Prince departed from it after the Emperor Charles V. retir'd from Provence in the Autumn of the Year 1536.

Si (k) qu'à Dieu rends graces un million,
Dont j'ay atteint le gracieux Lyon,
Où j'esperoys à l'arriver transmettre
Au Roy FranÇois humble salut en mettre
Conclud estoit. Mais puis qu'il en est hors,
A qui le puis je, & doy je addresser, fors
A toy qui tiens par prudence loyale,
Icy le lieu de sa hautcur Royale.

(k) Marot in his Poem to Cardinal de Tournon. p. 189.

Mr. Maimbourg (a) says, that the Dutchess of Ferrara obtain'd of the King, the return of our Poet, upon Assurance given, that he should be more wise for the future. Others say, that King Francis I. did not grant the Dutchess her Petition, but upon Condition that Marot should return to the Romish Religion, and should be more discreet for the future. I do not see in the Works of Marot that that Princess meddled with this; and I doubt whether her Zeal for the Protestant Religion, would permit her to treat of the recalling of any Man upon such Conditions. This is certain, that Marot having prayed the Dauphin to obtain him a Pass for Six Months, declar'd that he had learn'd in Italy to be very circumspect in his Discourses, and never to speak of God.

(a) Maimbourg ubi infra pag. 97.

(b) The Life of Marot in the Collection of the most excellent Pieces of the French Poets.

Il (c) le feroit s'il savoit bien comment
Depuis un peu je parle sobrement:
Car ces Lombards avec qui je chemine,
M'ont fort apris à faire bonne mine:
A un mot seul de Dieu ne deviser,
A parler peu, & à poltronniser.
Dessus un mot une heure je m'arreste:
S'on parle à moy, je respons de la teste.
Mais je vous pry mon sauf-conduit ayons,
Et de cela plus ne nous esmayons (d).

(c) i. e. The King would recall me.

(d) Marot Epist. to my Lord the Dauphin pag. 183.

(H) That he debauch'd his Land-lady, and that the Penalty of Death.] All those who affirm this, build upon the Testimony of Cayet, who must be taken for the First, and the only Person that deposed it. Florimond de Remond, who is also cited, is only his transcriber (e). " As if by reading and meditating on " the Psalms which he translated so ill, they are the " Words of Mr. Maimbourg, " he was not become a " better Man, (i) " afterwards according to " his former Custom leading a very licentious Life, " he had debauch'd his Land-lady, which " punish'd with Death at Geneva. Calvin by

(e) Maimbourg Hist. of Calvinism l. 2. p. m. 99.

(i) Hist. Eccles. des Eglises Ref. l. 1.

Death, which he fear'd, was chang'd into that of Whipping at the Requeſt of Calvin. He left Geneva and went to Piedmont, where he died (I) in 1544. aged about 60 Years. The Fault of Chronology, which it ſeems Mr Maimbourg (K) is guilty of, concerning the Firſt Flight of Clement Marot is very ſlight. As to the other Faults he has committed ſpeaking of this Perſon, you may ſee a Refutation of them in the Authors who wrote againſt his Hiſtory of Calviniſm. You may find in Sleidan † and Paſquier * a fine Elogy upon Clement Marot. It may be ſaid without Flattery, that French Poetry never appeared with ſuch natural Charms and Beauty as he adorn'd it, and that in all the Remainder of the XVI. Century, there appear'd nothing that came near his happy Genius, his Native Elegance, and the Smartneſs of his Poems. The Poets of the Pleiad are dull in compariſon of him: And if in the next Age a Voiture, a Sarrazin, a Benſerade, and ſome others exceeded him, 'tis only becauſe they found the Times improv'd to a better Judgment and a more refined Style. Mr. De La Bruyere, whoſe Words may be ſeen in the Article Ronſard, confirms this. The incomparable La Fountaine, who own'd himſelf to be his (b) Sleid. lib. 7. ann. 1543. fol. m. 366.

*Paſquier, Recherches l. 7. c. 5. p. m. 613, 614.

(a) Cayet in his Formul. Flor. de Rem. l. 8. c. 18.

(f) The Life of Clement Marot in the Collection of the moſt excellent Pieces.

" Authority chang'd (a) this rigorous Penalty into " another more mild, which was that of Whip- " ping, which he endur'd thro' all the Streets. Here follow the Words of another Writer. "(f) Having " committed at Geneva a Notorious Adultery, he " had certainly been hang'd, if the Authority of " Calvin had not converted the Puniſhment into that " of Whipping through all the Streets of Geneva, " as Cayet ſays. But Beza conſidering he was one " that followd the ſame Errors with himſelf, and " whoſe Pſalms he had finiſh'd, does not ſo clear- " ly declare this Fact." 'Tis true that Theodorus Beza does only obſerve in general, that Clement Marot could never reform the Habit of Immorality he had got at the Court of France. (g) Quamvis (ut qui in Aula, peſſima pictatis & honeſtatis magiſtra, vitam fere omnem conſumpſiſſet) mores parum Chriſtianos ne in extrema quidem ætate emendarit. This general Expreſſion ſignifies very much, and inſinuates that Marot did no wiſe edify the Genevois by his Chaſtity However, I do not think it probable what Cayet ſays; for if a Poet ſo famous as Marot, and ſo much hated in the Romiſh Communion, had been whipt through all the Streets of a great City, all Europe had quickly known of it; he had been inſulted upon the account of this Infamy in many Books; he durſt not have preſented himſelf before thoſe who commanded for the French King in Piedmont; we ſhould not have been reduc'd to the ſingle Teſtimony of Victor Cayet, ſo many Years later than this Adventure. Some may ſay that the Proteſtants themſelves would have publiſhed this Puniſhment, to ſhow the Severity of their Diſcipline at Geneva: but it muſt be granted that this Allegation is not well grounded; for without being perfect in the moſt refined Politicks, any one will judge that the Reputation of a Brother that is perſecuted muſt be managed to the beſt Advantage (b). To conclude, it is ridiculous to object to the Proteſtants the publick uſe of Marot's Verſion, ſuppoſing he had been puniſhed for his Adulteries: For the Immorality of a Poet, who tranſlates the Pſalms of David well, ought not to prevent the ſinging of his Tranſlation in Churches; no more than the Immorality of a Painter or Statuary, hinder thoſe who worſhip Images to conſecrate a Picture or Statue.

(b) Note that the publick Regiſters of Geneva make no mention of this Puniſhment of Marot. See Jurieu, Apol. for the Reform'd. c. 7. p. 124.

(i) Sammarthanus Elog. l. 1. p. m. 24.

(k) At p. 383.

(l) At p. 387.

(m) Edidit illos quinquaginta Pſalmos hoc anno Genevæ, quo ſeſe receperat cum in Galliis propter [illegible] animi ſuſpicionem parum eſſet tutus. Triginta quidem pſalmos ediderat ante biennium. Sleidanus l. 15. fol. m. 366. verſo ad ann. 1543

(n) At. p. 413.

†Beza ubi ſupra

* p. 65.

(I) Where he died in 1544. aged about 60 Years.] The firſt of theſe Two Facts is told us by Sainte Marthe, and the ſecond by Theodorus Beza. But we muſt not think that Sainte Marthe condeſcended to tell us, that Marot died in 1544. This had been too plain, and he wanted ſomething elſe to expreſs himſelf in pompous Phraſes: In order to it he tells us that this Poet died the Year in which the Battle of Cerizolles was fought. (i) Cum extorris & rerum egenus Taurini apud Inſubres procul à ſuorum aſpectu deceſſerit, eo ipſo anno quo ad Ceriſolam illius agri oppidum regius exercitus Anguiano duce inſignem de Cæſarianis victoriam reportavit. There is among the Poems of Marot, (k) a Stanza of Ten Verſes to the King, ſent from Savoy in 1543. and (l) a Salutation from the Camp of the Duke of Anguien at Cerizoles. This ſhows that he left Geneva the ſame Year (m) that he publiſhed his 50 Pſalms. There is an Eclogue (n) upon the Victory of that Duke of Anguien. As to the 60 Years of Marot's Life, I muſt have Recourſe to other Witneſſes; for Sainte Marthe does not ſtoop to take notice of it. I ſhall therefore quote Theodore Beza's Words, † Circiter annum Ætatis Sexageſimum mortuus. 'Tis probable that 'twas theſe Words of Beza, that the Croix du Maine * ſay that Marot died at the Age of 60 Years or thereabouts. I believe that they are miſtaken. The Verſes which are cited above ſeem to prove that in 1526 he was but 30 Years old.

(K) The Fault of Chronology, which it ſeems Mr. Maimbourg is guilty of.] He ſays that Clement Marot did not run away till 1535. (p) When " he ſaw that the King his Maſter declared aloud " in the Hall of the Biſhoprick, that he would " ſpare no body in this Caſe, he was afraid leſt he " ſhould be ſeiz'd, and therefore he fled quickly " into Bearn, and after that he went farther over " the Alpes to Ferrara, to the Dutcheſs Renata who " protected the Proteſtants. The King's Declaration in the Hall of the Biſhoprick (q) was in the Year 1535. Mr Maimbourg relates it under that Year (r) with many Circumſtances Now we have ſhown above, that Marot return'd from Ferrara into France in 1536 and we find in his Poems (s) a Letter from Lyon Jamet to Marot, of which the laſt Verſes are theſe:

(p) Maimbourg ubi ſupra p. 97.

(q) See Boucher's Annals of Aquitain fol. m 271.

(r) p. 30. & ſeq.

(s) At p. 174.

C'eſt à Ferrare au huictieme an
De la ſienne proſcription.
Mais à la tienne intention
Que ce ſoit le dernier. Amen.

This is a Proof will ſome ſay, that the Flight of Marot could not be at the lateſt till the Year 1528. But thoſe who will ſay ſo, are very much to blame; for Lyon Jamet marks the time of his own Proſcription, and not of Marot's. It will be ſaid, that this latter in a Letter which he wrote to Ferrara, upon the Departure of Madam de Soubiſe, ſays, (t) that this Lady left a Court wherein ſhe had continued Seven Years. 'Tis probable that ſhe followed Renata of France, who was married in 1527. to the Duke of Ferrara; from whence it might be concluded that ſhe returned into France in 1534. which would prove that Marot was beyond the Alpes in that Year. But I confeſs this Proof appears to me weak, when I conſider that Rabelais (v) wrote the Return of this Lady as a Piece of News. Since I ſee nothing in the Works of Marot, which can make us believe that he ſtay'd long at the Court of the Duke of Ferrara, I do not think that Mr. Maimbourg is much miſtaken; for Marot himſelf tells us that he ſtay'd but a little while at the Court of the King of Navarre.

(t) The Works of Marot p. m. 209.

(v) See the Article Ferrara.

Si (w) m'en allay, evitant ce danger,
Non en pas, non à Prince eſt'anger,
Non point uſant de fugitif deſtour,
Mais pour ſervir l'autre Roy à mon tour,
Mon ſecond Maiſtre, & ta ſœur ſon eſpouſe,
A qui je fis des ans a quatre & douze,
De ta Main noble heureuſement donne.
Puis toſt apres, Royal chef couronné,
Scachant pluſieurs de vie trop meilleure,
Que je ne ſuis, eſtre bruſlez à l'heure,
Si durement, que maint'e nation
En eſt tombee en admiration,
J'ai audonnay, ſans avoir commis crime,
L'ingrate France, ingrate, ingratiſſime
A ſon Poete.

(w) Marot's Epiſt. to the King in the time of his Exile at Ferrara p. 180. 181.

Comparing this Paſſage with that which I have cited above, we may eaſily diſcover the true Epoch of the Retreat of Clement Marot, and in what Manner the Circumſtances are to be ordered. The Enemies of this Poet accuſ'd him to the King in the time of the Placards, and doubtleſs they rendred him ſuſpected of being an Accomplice in the Inſolence his Scholar (L), has contributed very much to reſtore the Credit of this ancient Poet's Verſes. An infinite Number of curious Perſons ſought after his Works, and could hardly find them; which oblig'd a Bookſeller β at the Hague to Reprint them. This is a very fine Edition. You may ſee in the Judgments † that have been collected about Clement Marot, "that the French Poets are indebted to him for the Rondeau, and that they "do in a manner owe to him the modern Form, or the Reſtoration of the Sonnet, and "Madrigal, and of ſome other kinds of little Verſes. We may add, that he was the Inventer ‡ of the Mixture of Maſculine and Feminine Rhymes, a thing without which our Poetry would be very harſh and unpleaſant. There are but too many obſcene (M) Pieces among β Adrian Moetjens: his Edition is of the Year 1700. in 2 Vol. in 12°.

† Baillet Jugem. ſur les Poetes, tom. 3. p. 206.

‡ See the Obſervations of Mr. Menage upon the Poems of Malherbe p. 402. But Note, that Marot ſometimes diſpens'd with this Mixture.

Inſolence of thoſe who poſted them up. He had notice of this, and was reſolv'd to go and juſtify himſelf: But becauſe he was told that he could not compaſs his end, he retir'd to the Queen of Navarre, and being inform'd there that Francis I. caus'd ſome Lutherans to be burnt, he remov'd farther ſtill from Paris, and eſcaped into Italy. And thus Mr. Maimbourg is miſtaken only in a few Months: Whereas he thought that Marot did not retire to Bearn till after the Harangue of the King; he ſhould have ſaid, that he retir'd ſome Weeks before (y).

(y) The Affair of the Placards happen'd in the Month of November 1534. The Proceſſion and the Harangue of Francis I. belong to the Month of January 1535.

(L) La Fontaine own'd himſelf to be his Scholar] See what he wrote to Mr. de Saint evremont:

Vos (a) beaux Ouvrages ſont cauſe,
Que j'ay ſceu plaire aux neuf Sœurs.
Cauſe en partie, & non toute:
Car vous voulez bien ſans doute,
Que j'y joigne les Ecrits
D'aucuns de nos beaux Eſprits.
J'ay profité dans Voiture,
Et Marot par ſa lecture
M'a fort aide, j'en convicns.
Je ne ſçay qui fut ſon Maiſtre,
Que ce ſoit qui ce peut eſtre,
Vous eſtes tous trois les miens.

(a) La Fontaine poſthumous Works, p. 107. Dutch Edit.

"I had forgot Maſter Francis Rabelais), whoſe Diſ-"ciple I acknowledge my ſelf to be, as well as Mr. "Vincent's and Mr. Clement's. What he ſays, that he did not know whoſe Scholar Marot was, gives me occaſion to relate a Paſſage of Lewis Camerarius, which will inform us, that John le Maire de Belges was Marot's Maſter. (b) Audivi ego ex viris dignis fide, Eum illum Belgam, hominem doctum, & in linguæ latinæ antiquioribus ſcriptis multum verſatum, Primum fuiſſe, qui rationem & modum demonſtraret elegantioris ſermonis Gallici loquendo, ſcribendi autem quaſi artis viam indicaſſe, quam cum ipſe ſequeretur uſurpando, tum aliis præcipiendo traderet: Eumque Poetam quem Gallia habuit celeberrimum, & cujus ornatam copiam venuſtatemque imprimis admirata eſt, Clementem Marottum, eundem percoluiſſe, & componendi verſus ſcientiam edocuiſſe. Theſe Latin Words are very ill plac'd; the Author ſhould not have taken Advantage of the Liberty which the ancient Tongue of the Romans allow'd, by making uſe of Expreſſions that may be underſtood in different Senſes. We muſt conſult Chronology, to know whether he means that Clement Marot taught John le Maire, or wherher John le Maire taught Clement Marot to make Verſes. The latter is the true Senſe; but we cannot diſcover it without a cloſe Attention to the Author's Deſign, and the Help of Chronology. Wherefore ſhould he thus weary the Mind of his Readers without Neceſſity? I will remark upon this occaſion another thing againſt the ſame Writer, concerning the Book out of which I have taken the aforeſaid Paſſage. It is the Latin Tranſlation of the Treatiſe of Schiſms, written in French by John le Maire de Belges: It was printed at Lipſick in 1572, with Notes. Lewis Camerarius knew not that John Sharidius had already printed a Latin Tranſlation (c) of the ſame Book in 1566. Voſſius (d) knew nothing of the Latin Tranſlation of Lewis Camerarius, for he mentions only the other. Note that Marot in his Letter to Madam de Soubize, ſpeaks of John le Maire without taking notice that he had been taught by him.

(b) Ludovicus Joach. Camerarius in procem. verſionis latinæ tractatus de differentiis ſchiſmatum.

(c) At Baſil with the 4 Books of Theodoricus à Niem hiſtoriarum ſui temporis.

(d) Voſſius de hiſt. Lat p 650

Or (e) adieu donc, noble Dame, qui uſes
D'honneſteté toujours envers les Muſes.
Adieu par qui les Muſes deſolées
Souventes fois ont eſté conſolées.
Adieu qui voir ne les peult en ſouffrance.
Adieu la main qui de Flandres en France
Tira jadis Jean le Maire Belgeois,
Qui l'ame avoit d'Honneur le Gregeois.

(e) Marot Epiſtle to Madam De Soubize p. 209.

But ſee what I find in the Recherches of Stephen Paſquier: "Our Country-man Clement Marot in "the Second Impreſſion of his Works owns that "it was John le Maire de Belges who taught him, "&c. (f).

(f) Paſquier Recherches l. 7. c. 5. p. m. 612.

(M) There are but too many obſcene Pieces among his Works.] He follow'd in this the Humour of the Times, and of the beſt Poets in Antiquity, and which is worſe, his Inclinations and Courſe of Life; for he was not only a Poet of the Court, but alſo a Man that loved Women, and could not renounce his ſenſual Pleaſures. We have ſeen (g) in Latin the Teſtimony that Theodorus Beza gives of him. Let us now ſee what he ſays of him in French: (h) "Clement Marot "after his Return from Italy to the Court, was "very much hated by the Sorbonne, for tranſlating "very happily 30 Pſalms of David into the French "Tongue, which are dedicated to the King, who "thought them worthy to be printed. But he "was forc'd to make his Eſcape, and retreated to "Geneva, where he tranſlated 20 more of them. "He had always been bred up in a very bad "School, and could not live in Subjection to the "Reformation of the Goſpel; and therefore he "went and ſpent the reſt of his Days in Piedmont, "which was then in the Poſſeſſion of the King, "where he liv'd in ſome Security under the Fa-"vour of the Governours. Yet it muſt be confeſs'd that the Obſcenities of Clement Marot are leſs groſs, and more cleanly than thoſe of the Roman Poets, and of many French Poets Companions of Theophile. That which is ſtrange, is, that the Talents of his Wit, his Smartneſs, the agreeable, lively, eaſie, ingenious Turn of his Muſe are never perceiv'd more than when he writes upon a laſcivious Subject. Is it not ſtrange, that the greateſt part of Poets have an unhappy Gift of doing better on this than on other Subjects? Such a Poet whoſe Verſes would be inſipid, unleſs he gives a Looſe to his Pen, makes excellent (i) Pieces when he lays aſide all Modeſty. This cannot proceed from the Nature of Poetry it ſelf, but muſt come from the Corruption of Man's Heart. Whatever may be the Cauſe of it, the Effect appear'd certain to thoſe who have given it for a Maxim, that a Poet ought to be chaſte as to his Perſon, but not as to his Verſes, ſince they cannot be acceptable, and ſeaſoned with Salt, unleſs they be a little ſmutty.

(g) In the Remark H Letter g.

(h) Beza Hiſt. des Egliſes Reform. l. 1. p. 33.

(i) Poetically but not Morally ſpeaking

Nam (k) caſtum eſſe decet pium poetam
Ipſum. Verſiculos nihil neceſſe eſt:
Qui tum denique habent ſalem, ac leporem,
Si ſunt molliculi, ac parum pudici,
Et quod pruriat incitare poſſunt,
Non dico pueris, ſed his piloſis,
Qui duros nequeunt movere lumbos.

(k) Catullus Ep. 16.

Which is a falſe Maxim, or at leaſt very pernicious, and deſerves not to be look'd upon as a Rule, by Men that are ſincerely good. But 'tis with this, as 'tis with the itching Deſire of ſpeaking a Jeſt: No Conſideration can reſtrain it; and when a Poet thinks himſelf capable of doing Wonders in an Epigram, provided he admits ſome obſcene Thoughts in it, he quits in Favour of his Wit the Sentiments of his Mind. This is what Des Accords did. (m) "I wiſh, ſays he, I had not been "ſo looſe and wanton at that Age, but I can't "help it now. I will excuſe my ſelf by this "Diſtich, which I gave to a learned and ſevere "Senator of our Parliament of Dijon together "with the Book,

(m) Des Accords, in his Preface to his Bigarrures

Putidulum

among his Works, and this gives just Occasion to blame him. I shall relate some (A) curious

Putidulum scriptoris opus ne despice, namque
Si lasciva legis, ingeniosa Leges.

" And indeed, I never affected to appear " ingenious that I might be lascivious; but " I have been lascivious only that I might be in- " genious. Such Writers may find a good Lesson in this last Verse of an (n) Epigram of Martial, tanti non erat esse te disertum: A Lesson which he gave to others, and which himself stood in need of as much as any body, but he never practised it. We must return to Marot, and say, that in all Probability his Heart agreed with his Mind: However it be, he gave no ill turn to this kind of Verses. His Epigram of a wild Spouse, was thought worthy by Menage to be inserted almost entire among his Observations, (a) where he endeavours to prove that it was formerly said, j'ai Mors for j'ai Mordu.

(n) The 43. of the 12. Book.

(a) Menage, Observations sur la langue Francoise tom. 1. p. 90. edit. of Paris 1675.

(A) I shall relate some curious Things concerning ... the Psalms. | Florimond de Remond affirms that Marot after his Return from Ferrara into France, was exhorted by Vatablus to turn the Psalms of David into French Verse, and that he following his Advice, publish'd a Version of 30 Psalms, and dedicated it to Francis I. It was censur'd by the Faculty of Theology at Paris, who, moreover, made some Remonstrances and Complaints of it to that Monarch. " (c) The King, who lov'd Marot for " the Fineness of his Wit, made use of Delays, " and said that he had approv'd the first Draughts, " and desired to see the rest. Upon which " Account the Poet sent him this Epigram.

(b) Florimond de Remond Hist. of the Birth and Progress of Heresy l. 8. c. 16. p. m. 1042 & seq. See also Mr. Varillas his Transcriber Book 21. of the Revolutions p. 48. &c. Dutch Edit.

" Puis que voulez que je poursuive, ô Sire,
" L'œuvre Royal du Psautier commencé,
" Et que tout cœur aymant Dieu le desire,
" D'y besongner me tiens pour dispensé:
" S'en sente donc qui voudra offensé,
" Car ceux à qui un tel bien ne peut plaire,
" Doivent penser si à ne l'ont pensé,
" Qu'en vous plaisant, me plaist de leur desplaire.

" Nevertheless the Publication, after many Remon- " strances made to the King, was forbidden. But

(c) Id. Flor. de Rémond. ib. p. 1043.

" Des hommes plus la chose est desiré,
" Quand plus elle est aux hommes prohibé.

" They could not be printed so fast as they were sold " off. They were not then set to Musick, as they are " now, to be sung in Churches; but every one gave " them such a Tune as he thought fit, and " commonly that of a Ballad. Each of the Princes " and Courtiers took a Psalm for themselves. " King Henry II. lov'd this Psalm, Like as the " Hart doth breath and bray, and took it for his own, " which he sung at Hunting. Madam de Valentinois " whom he lov'd took this, Lord, to thee I make " my Moan, and made choice of it for her self. " The Queen chose the Psalm, Lord in thy Wrath " reprove me not, which she sung to a merry Tune. " Antony King of Navarre, took the Psalm, Judge " and Revenge my Cause, O Lord, which he sung " at a Dance of Poitou, and so did the rest. " In the mean time Marot fearing lest he should " be clapt up in Prison a second time, because he " could not hold his Tongue, fled to Geneva, " where he continued his Version as far as 50 " Psalms. " Beza (d) put the remaining hundred " Psalms into Verse, and the (e) Psalms, which " he rhym'd in Imitation of Marot's, were " generally receiv'd by all Men with as much Ap- " plause as ever any Book had. For not only all " the Lutherans, but also the Catholicks took Plea- " sure in singing them; because they were plea- " sant, easie to learn, and fit to be play'd upon " the Violin, and Musical Instruments. Calvin " took care to put them in the Hands of the best " Musicians in Christendom; and among the rest, " he pitched upon Godimel, and another call'd " Bourgeois, to set them to Musick..... (f) After " this, 10000 Copies of these Psalms in Metre " were printed, and dispers'd every where. Then " every one begun, even the Catholicks, to carry " them about, and sing them as Spiritual Songs, " thinking there was no hurt in doing it. For there " were not yet, nor till some Years after, a Form " of Religious Worship among the Calvinists; " but afterwards they were appointed to be sung " in their Assemblies, being divided into small " Sections, which was done in the Year 1553, to " serve as a resting Place, where they might take " breath, after so long a Devotion as theirs is. " For the singing of Psalms at Church for the most " part lasts half a quarter of an Hour. After they " were bound up with the Calvinian and Geneva " Catechisms, the use of them was wholly forbid- " den, and the former Prohibition renew'd, with a " severe Penalty; so that to sing a Psalm was to be " a Lutheran. The Substance of this Narrative of Florimond de Remond was turn'd into elegant Latin, by Famianus Strada (g), who particularly observes, (h) that Francis I. often sung this Translation of the Psalms.

(d) Id. ib. p. 1044.

(e) Id. ib. p. 1049.

(f) Id. ib. p. 1050.

(g) Strada de bello Belg. dec. 1. l. 3. p. m. 130 131.

(h) Rex Quamvis ejus (Marot) versiculos identidem cantitaret Id. ibid.

Since I intend here chiefly to insist on Matters of Fact, I have not taken notice of the Critical Observations of Florimond de Remond. He alledges, that Marot has falsified the Hebrew Text, though Vatablus gave him a very good Version of it. The Criticisms of this Historian have been confuted (i) not only by reasons, but also by Authorities Mr. Jurieu has produc'd (k) " the Approbation of the Doctors of the Sorbonne, upon which Charles IX. in " the greatest Heat of Persecution, granted a Licence " to Antony Vincent, a Printer at Lyons, for the " Printing of these Psalms. The Approbation runs " thus. We Doctors of Divinity whose Names are " here subscrib'd, do certify, that in a certain Trans- " lation of the Psalms presented to us, beginning " at the 48th Psalm with these Words, C'est en ta " très Sainte race, and ending with this Verse, Contente " jamais ton Empire. We have found nothing contrary " to our Catholick Faith, but agreeable to it, and " to the Truth of the Hebrew Text: In Testimony " whereof we have sign'd the present Certificate, " Octob. 16. sign'd J. de Salignac Viboult The Li- " cence granted to Plantin, for Printing these " Psalms, says also, that these Psalms before the Im- " pression had been examin'd, view'd and approv'd " by Mr. Josse Schelling Portionary of St. Nicolas " at Brussels, deputed for this end by the Council " of Brabant. And that after the Impression was " finish'd, they were view'd again, and found " to be no wise repugnat to the Catholick " Faith. „ That the Dates may appear, we must add to these Words, what the same Author says Three Pages after; which is, that the Edition for which Charles IX. granted a Licence to Antony Vincent, a Printer at Lyons, (l) " is to be " seen at this Day, bearing Date 1562. and that " the Privilege of the 16th of October, is of the " same Year. Three Years after Plantin Printed " them at Antwerp, Licensed by Philip King of " Spain. „ Mr. Bruguier Minister and Professor of Divinity at Nîmes, has related the very Words of the Licence of Charles IX. The most Authentick Approbation of this Work, says he, " (m) was that of King Charles IX. in 1561, who, " after he had caus'd these Psalms to be examin'd " by some Persons well vers'd in the Scripture, " and the Languages, found that they were faith- " fully translated according to the Truth of the " Hebrew Text, whereupon being in Council, he " readily gave his Approbation, and Licence for " printing and singing of these Psalms. The " Words of the Licence, which are still to be " seen in our old Psalms, are these. by a special " Favour full Power and Royal Authority we have given " and granted to Antony the Son of Antony Vin- " cent, Bookseller at Lyons, the Privilege, Leave, " License and Permission for the Space of Ten Years next " following, to print or cause to be printed, when and " wheresoever he shall please, All the Psalms of the " Prophet David, translated according to the Truth " of the Hebrew Text, turn'd into French Verse, " and set to good Musick, as it is well known, and has been " examin'd by Men learned in the Holy Scripture, and " in the said Languages, and also in the Art of Mu- " sick. „ There are some Difficulties in all this, for 'tis hardly conceivable that Charles IX should have granted to a Bookseller of Lyons a Licence dated October the 19th, 1562, for printing the Psalms of Clement Marot and Theodorus Beza. The first Civil War for Religion was then in its greatest Height. Lyons had been in the Power of the Huguenots for five Months, and Roan was actually be- sieged. 'Tis therefore more probable that this Li-

(i) See Mr. Jurieu Apolog. for the Reformers. tom. 1. p. 126 & seq. in 4°.

(k) Ibid. p. 127

(l) Ibid. p. 130

(m) Bruguier, Discourse about the singing of Psalms. p. 32, 33. This Discourse was printed in 1664.

curious Things concerning his Verſion of the 50 Pſalms. The moſt notable Particulars Licence was granted in 1561, as Mr. Brugnier ſays: But this Difference of Dates between him and the other Miniſters (n) is inconvenient. Beſides 'tis inconceiveable that in 1561 or 1562, the Tranſlation which was ſung at Geneva ſhould have been examin'd by the Sorbonniſts, without the firſt 47 Pſalms; for according to Florimond de Remond, the 50 Pſalms which Marot tranſlated, were bound up with the 100 other Pſalms, tranſlated by Theodorus Beza, and with the Calvinian Catechiſms in the Year 1553, and from that time (o) "the uſe of them was wholly forbidden, and the "firſt Prohibitions were renew'd with ſevere Penalties. Note, that the 48th Pſalm which was the Beginning of the Tranſlation preſented to the Doctors of the Sorbonne, was not tranſlated by Clement Marot, but by Theodorus Beza. I muſt not forget that the Sieur de Pours (p) in his vaſt Catalogue of the Pſalms that have been printed with Licence, ſays nothing of the Edition of Lyons approv'd by the Sorbonne, and authoriz'd by Charles IX; but he obſerves (q) that the Edition of Plantin approv'd by a Doctor deputed to that end by the Council, having a Royal Licence, dated June the 16th 1564, was compleatly printed in the Month of September next following, and that the Names of Clement Marot and Theodorus Beza, do not appear in it.

He obſerves (a) that the 50 Pſalms of Clement Marot were printed at Strasburg in 1545, with the Eccleſiaſtical Liturgy. "The Muſick of thoſe "Pſalms, ſays he, is not every where like that "which was afterwards made uſe of. The Poetry is "alſo in many Places different from that which is "in thoſe old Editions .... The firſt Pſalm in it "ends thus:

Car le chemin des bons eſt approuvé
Du Seigneur Dieu, qui touſiours l'a trouvé
Droit & uni: Car on ne s'y ſourvoye.

"The Pſalms are intire without Stops and "Marks of Diſtinction. The Apoſtle's Creed, "and ſome other Canticles are ſet alſo to Muſick, and beſides the common Decalogue there "is alſo another.

Oyons la voix que de ſa voix
Nous a donné le Createur,
De tous hommes legiſlateur,
Noſtre Dieu ſouverain. Kyrie-Eleiſon.

"Which is repeated at the end of every Verſe of "the Decalogue." What follows deſerves to be conſider'd. (b) "The firſt Preface prefix'd to the "Pſalms of Marot by the Church of Geneva, is "dated June the 10th 1543, written by Mr. John "Calvin ... All the Pſalms with their Muſick, "were printed the firſt time at Geneva, with a "Preface concerning an Agreement for the Relief "of the poor Refugees at Geneva, which then the "other Printers, who printed from the firſt Copies, "ſhould voluntarily and liberally furniſh. The "Deacons of Geneva in 1567, after the Preface to "the Sermons of Mr. Calvin upon Deuteronomy, "complain with Grief, of thoſe who print-"ed or caus'd to be printed every Day, and who had "heretofore printed the Pſalms turn'd into Metre by "Mr. Beza. For every one of them knows very well, "that they could not with a good Conſcience, and ought "not to print them, without paying to our Poor, what was "promis'd and agreed upon before ever they were printed "the firſt time." De Pours obſerves, that (c) Lewis Bourgeois ſet 83 Pſalms to Muſick in Four, Five and Six Parts, which were printed at Lyons in 1561, and (d) that Guidomel (e) ſet to Muſick the Pſalms of David printed at Paris by Adrian le Roy and Robert Ballard in 1565; and that (f) our Pſalms were ſet to Muſick in Four and Five Parts by Claudius Guidomel, and after that by Claudius le Jeune, who was of Valenciennes.

I wonder he doth not ſpeak of him who was the firſt Author of the Ordinary Muſick; for Muſick in ſeveral parts was never uſed in the Reformed Churches. Here is what a Profeſſor of Lauſanne did me the Honour to write to me. "(†) I have diſcover'd a thing that is curious "enough: 'Tis a Teſtimonial which Beza "gave under his Hand, and in the Name of the "other Miniſters, to William Franc, the 2d "of November 1552, where he declares that it is "he who firſt ſet the Pſalms to Muſick, as they "are ſung in our Churches: And I have ſtill "a Copy of the Pſalms printed at Geneva, where "William Franc's Name is; and beſide, a Li-"cenſe from the Magiſtrate, ſigned Gallatin, ſeal'd "with Red Wax, in 1564. where he is alſo ac-"knowledged to be Author of this Muſick. "Our Plantin in his Lauſauna Reſtituta gives him "the ſame Teſtimony.

Here follows the Anſwer of Mr. de Pours to Florimond de Remond, concerning the Conformity of the Tunes of ſome Pſalms with thoſe of vulgar Songs. "(g) Florimond ſays, the Tune of our 38th "Pſalm,

"Las en ta fureur aigue
"Ne m'argue,
"Dequoi fait Dieu tout puiſſant,

"agrees with this Ballad,

"Mon bel ami, vous ſouviene,
"De Piene,
"Quand vous ſerez par dela.

"And that the Tune of the 130th Pſalm, agrees "with this,

"Languirai-je plus gueres,
"Languirai-je touſiours!

"If it had pleaſed this Councellor, he might "have added a Song of the Adverſity of England, "chang'd into Proſperity, to the Tune of the "38th Pſalm.

"Tous les Huguenots de France,
"Mille cinq cens & cinquante,
"La Regente,
"Qu'on appelle Eliſabeth.

"Of whom it is ſaid,

"Comme auſſi en Angleterre,
"Lonne terre,
"Dieu ſa grace a fait couler,
"Leur donnant en ce Royaume
Une Dame
"Qui ne veut point vaciller.

"This ſeems to be more ancient, .... without "making any mention of the aforeſaid Pſalm.

"Sus Cardinaux, Archeveſques,
"Et Eveſques,
"Venez tous me ſecourir,
"Moines, preſtres & Hermites,
"Jeſuites,
"Venez pour me voir mourir.
"Papauté ſuis appellée,
"Qui meſſee
"Me ſuis de perdre la gent,
"Envoyant dedans la flamme,
"Corps & ame
"Du riche & de l'indigent.
"Je veux que de moi on chante,
"La meſchante,
"Qui juſqu'au ciel s'eſlevoit,
"Elle eſt cheute & abiſmee,
"La damnee,
"Qui tout le monde enchantoit.

"Now they muſt know that thoſe delicate Strains "are taken away from the wanton Poets, as being "unjuſt Poſſeſſors of them; and their Wanton-"neſs is turn'd into Holineſs. That which was "wont to belong unto them is taken from them, "and is as it were ſanctified: Anciently any thing "that was of common uſe, tho' it were even the "Spoil of an Enemy, being ſet apart and ſe-"queſtred with ſome Ceremonies, and ap-"plied to the Service of the Sanctuary, was re-"puted a holy Thing." After this he makes uſe (b) of Recrimination, and ſhows that the Tranſlation of the Pſalms into Flemiſh Verſe, printed at Antwerp (i) by Simon Cock in 1540, with the Imperial Licence granted at Bruſſels in 1539, contains a Muſick borrow'd from common Songs, and that it is ſaid ſo at the beginning of each Pſalm. "(k) You will find, ſays he, in the Pſalms "of Cock theſe following Inſcriptions ſet down "according to the Pſalms. The 72d Pſalm is "ſung to the Tune of, D'ou vient cela. The "81ſt to the Tune of, Sur le pont d'A-"vignon. The 95th to the Tune of, Que "maudit ſoit ce faux vieillard. The 103d Pſalm "to that of, Languir me faut. The 113th to that "of, de triſteſſe & deſplaiſir. Likewiſe, the 120th "Pſalm to that of, Madame la regente ce n'eſt pas la "façon. The 128th Pſalm to that of, Il me ſuffit "de tous mes maux. The 135th to that of, Le ber-"ger & la bergere ſont a l'ombre d'un buiſſon. "'Tis (n) Drelincourt in his Dialogues againſt the Miſſionaries about the Service of the Reformed Churches, p. 59. affirms that all the Pſalms were printed at Lyons and Paris with an Authentick Licence of King Charles IX. in 1562.

(o) Flor. de Remond ubi ſupra p. 1050.

(p) Jeremiah de Pours, Divine Melody of the Holy Pſalmiſt p. 570. & ſeq.

(q) Id. ib. p. 571.

(a) Id. ib. p. 570.

(b) Id. ib. p. 582

(c) Ibid. p. 575.

(d) Ibid. p. 581.

(e) He ſhould be call'd Goudimel.

(f) Ibid. p. 721.

(†) A M.S. Letter from Mr. Conſtant de Rebecque

(g) Ibid. p. 577, 578.

(b) This Recrimination was alſo made uſe of when Maimbourg's Hiſtory of Calviniſm was anſwered; for the Songs that are ſung at Chriſtmaſs, and the Spiritual Songs of Colleter, and thoſe which the Author of L'Eveque de Court did ſo much laugh at, were objected. See Jurieu ubi ſupra p. 128, 129. and Mr. Rou Remarks upon the Hiſtory of Calviniſm p. 39. &c.

(i) Id. de Pours Ib. p. 571.

(k) Id. ib. p. 578.

ticulars are to be found in a Letter little after the Death of Henry the IId. (O) written to Catherine de Medicis, a

We must not forget that the Church of Geneva,

" 'Tis a Flemish Pſalter, and thoſe Inſcriptions " which at firſt were all in French, are plac'd " there in Walloon, according to the Imperial " Style mention'd in our Preface, which puts the " Walloon Language for good French.

I have quoted in the Margin two Authors, who have objected to the Catholicks the prophane Tunes of their Chriſtmaſs Songs, &c. I add, that there has been lately re-printed at Geneva, a Piece which had been publiſh'd in 1645, and which affords Matter for a ſharp Recrimination: Out of which I ſhall tranſcribe what follows. (m) Nullo delictu ſacra profanaque juxta habet, (hæc gens) imo tam præpoſtero cultu divina curat, ut pios Eccleſiæ uſus nullis non ſemper inſanientis ſæculi ludis perverſat, ſordibuſque contaminet. Quæ quidem ſatis denno experti ſumus, his Natalis Chriſti nuper exactis temporibus, cum omnia templa putidis profanarum cantionum vocibus perſonarent: ubi quotannis ipſum Incarnationis Myſterium turpiſſimis ſecularium cantuum odis conſpurcatur; tantuſque amor eſt Eccleſiaſticos hymnos ad mundanas ejuſmodi cantilenas inflectere, ut nulla quantumvis obſcæna vulgetur, quin ſtatim in Eccleſiis ridicule detorta audiatur; unique in indignatione riſum teneo, quoties recordationem ſubit alicubi videri ſacrorum cantuum rituale, in quo hanc (ut alias omittam omnino turpes) rubricam legere eſt:

MAGNIFICAT to the Tune of

Que ne vous requinquez-vous vieille:
Que ne vous requinquez-vous donc?

Why don't you trick up and ſet out your ſelf, old Woman? Why don't you trick up your ſelf then?

The Piece I ſpeak of was written by an Advocate call'd Muret, who inſcribed it to the famous Gaſſendus, to repreſent to him the ridiculous Ceremonies of the Provençals.

(O) The moſt notable Particulars are to be found in a Letter.] It is dated Auguſt 26th 1559, and was ſent to Catherine de Medicis " by a Gentleman who had ſerv'd " the deceas'd Queen of Navarre, and ſubſcrib'd " himſelf Villamadon, with whom the foreſaid La- " dy (n) had formerly conferr'd privately about " her Affairs, and even about Points of Religion " (o)." I will make uſe of the very words of the Letter; for the Modern French does not retain the boldneſs and force of the Expreſſions, which were us'd at that time. " (p) I ſhall begin, Madam, " with telling you, that in the Reign of King " Francis and the late King, who was then Dauphin, " being return'd from Piemont, where he forgot " himſelf ſo far as to commit a vile and foul Adul- " tery, by the Counſel and Management of certain " Minions, Wicked and Unfaithful Servants, and " by whom moreover, the wretched Wife of the " great Seneſchal, Diana of Poitiers, who was the " publick and common Receptacle of ſo many de- " bauch'd and diſſolute Men, ſome of whom are " Dead, and others are ſtill Alive, was introduc'd " to him as a fine Ring, from whom he would " learn a great deal of Vertue. And after the News " was come that the Baſtard Child was born of the " foreſaid Adultery, you were talk'd of, Madam, " by the foreſaid Scoffers, and the ſaid old Whore, " who declar'd among themſelves, that you was " uncapable of ſo great an Honour, as to be the " Wife of a Dauphin of France, becauſe you would " never have any Children, ſince you had been ſo " long without getting any, and it was not the " fault of your Lord and Husband. I remember " that at the Caſtle of Rouſſillon upon the Rhône, " they had a great talk about it, notice whereof " was brought to the deceas'd Queen of Navarre, " who lov'd you very well, and told me . . . . . " (a) You was not ignorant, Madam, of this " Miſchief which was deſign'd againſt you; but " you had then a bloody Wound in your Heart, " and you ſought after the Lord with Tears " and Prayers, becauſe you wanted him: And at " that time you acknowledg'd him, honouring the " Holy Bible, which was kept in your Trunks, or " lay upon the Table, in which you look'd and " read ſometimes. And your Women and Ser- " vants had the happy opportunity to read in it; " and there was none but the Nurſe, who did " not love you much, no more than ſhe did God, " who was angry at it. . . . . God did not an- " ſwer you preſently, but left you for many Years " in a Languiſhing Condition, that you might " ſeek after him, pray and beſeech him, that he " would awake for your aſſiſtance. . . . . The Al- " mighty, your Protector . . . . . (b) prepar'd and " open'd a Way, from whence all the Bleſſings of " the King and your ſelf were to ſpring, and to " come to Perfection. For this Father being full " of Mercy, put it in the Heart of the deceas'd " King Francis, to take great pleaſure in the thirty " Pſalms of David, with the Lord's-Prayer, the " Angelical Salutation, and the Apoſtles Creed, " which the late Clement Marot had tranſlated, " and dedicated to his Majeſty; who com- " manded the ſaid Marot to preſent the whole " to the Emperor Charles V. who receiv'd the " ſaid Tranſlation graciouſly, highly valu'd it, " and preſented him with two hundred Spaniſh " Piſtoles, and alſo encourag'd him to finiſh the " ſaid Work, by Tranſlating the reſt of the ſaid " Pſalms, and deſir'd him to ſend him, as ſoon " as he could, the Pſalm Confitemini Domino, quoniam bonus, becauſe he particularly lov'd it. " And the Muſicians of thoſe two Princes, nay, " all the Muſicians of France, ſtrove one with an- " other, who ſhould beſt ſet the ſaid Pſalms to " Muſick, and every Body ſung them. But if " any Perſon lov'd them dearly, and commonly " ſung them, and caus'd them to be ſung, it was " the late King Henry, who lov'd them ſo well, " that good Men bleſs'd God for it; and his Mini- " ons and his Whore lov'd them, or feign'd ſo " great a love for them, that they were wont " to ſay, Sir, ſhall not this be mine? Give me " that if you pleaſe: Whereby this good Prince " had much a do to pleaſe every one's Fancy, ac- " cording to his deſire. Nevertheleſs he kept " for himſelf the following Pſalm, as you may " remember:

" Bienheureux eſt quiconque
" Sert à Dieu volontiers, &c. (*).

" He himſelf made a Tune to this Pſalm, which " was very good and pleaſant, and very ſuitable " to the words. He ſung it, and caus'd it to " be ſung ſo often, that he plainly ſhow'd he " had an earneſt deſire to be that bleſſed Man " whom David deſcribes in the ſaid Pſalm, and to " ſee you the truth of the Figure of the Vine " therein mention'd. This was when he was re- " covering of his Sickneſs at Angouleſme. The " Queen, my Miſtreſs, (who was then with King " Francis her Brother) intreated him to uſe " with Pity and Clemency the Citizens of Ro- " chelle, inſtead of maſſacring them, and ſent me " to you to be inform'd of his Sickneſs; which I " found ſo much abated, that he begun to ſing " the ſaid Pſalms, with Lutes, Violins, Spinets, " and Flutes, attended with Voices; and he took " great delight in them, and commanded me to " come near him, becauſe he knew that I lov'd " Muſick, and could play a little upon the Lute " and Guittar; and he order'd the Tune and the " Parts of it to be given me, which I carried " to the Queen my Miſtreſs, with the news of " the recovery of your health. I muſt not for- " get your Pſalm, which you often deſir'd to be " ſung, and which was this.

" Vers l'Eternel des oppreſſez le pere
" Je m'en iray, luy monſtrant l'impropere
" Que l'on me fait, luy ſera ma priere
" A haulte voix, qu'il ne jette en arriere
" Mes pitoyez cris, car en lui ſeul j'eſpere (c).

" When my ſaid Queen of Navarre ſaw theſe two " Pſalms, and heard how they were frequently " ſung, even by the Dauphin, ſhe admir'd it ve- " ry much, and told me, I know not how " the Dauphin's Lady came by this Pſalm, Vers " l'Eternel, &c. for it is none of thoſe that were " Tranſlated by Marot. But 'tis not poſſible to " find another, wherein her Affliction is better " deſcrib'd, and by which ſhe may more clearly " ſhow the Grief that ſhe feels, and deſire of " God to be eas'd of it, as indeed ſhe will be. " For ſince it has pleas'd God to put this Gift into " their Hearts, behold the Time, behold the " Days are at hand when the Eyes of the King

(m) Querela ad Gaſſendum de parum Chriſtianis Provincialium ſuorum ritibus, &c. p. 71. edit. Genev. 1700.

(n) That is to ſay, Catherine de Medicis.

(o) Beza Eccl. Hiſt. B. 3. p. 225.

(p) Recueil des choſes memorables faites & paſſees pour le faict de la Religion & eſtat de ce Royaume depuis la mort du Roy Henry II. tom. 1. p. 501. Edit. 1565. in 12°.

(a) Ib. p. 502.

(b) Ib. p. 503, &c.

* 'Tis the 128 Pſal.

(c) This is the beginning of Pſal. 141.

Geneva, which was the first that made use of this Version of the Psalms, was (P) the first that forsook it to make use of another Version more suitable to the present Style of the French Tongue. 'Tis not known whether other Churches will conform to this Change. I do not remember that I ever took notice, that Marot mentions his Wife in his Poems; but I have found in them a place which shows that he was a Father,

" shall be satisfied, the Desires of the Dauphin " shall be fulfill'd, the Hopes of the Enemies of the " Dauphin's Lady shall be disappointed, and my " Wishes also, and the Faith of my Prayers shall " come to an end. Within the space of a Year, the " merciful Visitation of the Lord will appear, " and I dare say that she shall have a Son for " the greater joy and satisfaction ——(d) A- (d) Ib. p. 505.
" bout thirteen and Fourteen Months after this, " you brought forth our King Francis, who is " now alive ——(e) But when this good God (e) Ib. p. 506.
" made you fruitful, then the late King began to " be negligent and forgetful of such a Benefit: " Whence it came to pass, that God being pro- " vok'd, permitted this poor Prince to be infatua- " ted with that old Whore Diana, who admitted " into his House a young (f) Serpent, which (f) He means the Cardinal of Lorrain.
" secretly lick'd her Bosom: He was her Oracle, " and she was the Organ of it; he began to blame " the said Psalms of David, which teach us to " forsake all Sins, which encourage Chastity, and " strengthen Vertue. Then he brought in the " lascivious Verses of Horace, which excite the " Flesh to all sorts of Wantonness and Lewdness, " and other foolish Songs which were made about " their infamous Amours, by those Poets of the " Devil; not only to indulge their impure and (p) In the Latin Style we should say, that these Propositions were antiquata, for the result was antiqua maneant. Note, That the Churches of France could not decide this matter, because since this Version was made, they have not had Leave to hold a National Synod.
" unchast Life, but also to plunge them into the " Abyss of all Iniquity and Excess, and even of all " Impiety. For seeing that the great Seneschal's " Lady had in imitation of you a Bible in French, " he set himself to despise and condemn it, and " making a great sign of the Cross, and striking " his Breast with his Hand, and fetching deep Sighs " like an Hypocrite, he represented to her, that " she must not read it, that such reading did " not belong to Women, and was attended " with great danger; but that instead of one " Mass she should hear two, and content her self " with her Bead and Primer, in which there " was so much good Devotion, and so many fine " Pictures. And by this means this old Sinner " persuaded the late King to believe all she said, " and you had such a force put upon you, Ma- " dam, that your Confessor Boutcillier was ta- " ken from you, who taught and administred " to you the pure Word of God, and instead of " the said Boutcillier, her Doctor Honuyer, a Sorbon- " nist, was obtruded upon you, to suborn your " Conscience; who was also given afterwards to " the late King, to govern his, and imprint upon " it what he pleas'd. In short, he robb'd you both " of that Holy Treasure which never perisheth, " and which procures Immortality to him that is " possess'd of it. He conceal'd it from you, " and made you both Slaves to vain Superstiti- " ons, by the Snares of an old Woman, whom " he had first blinded, the better to carry on his " Design.

(P) The Church of Geneva, which was the first that made use of this Version, was also the first that forsook it.] It is now a long time ago, since it was perceiv'd in France, that certain Passages of this Version were become barbarous; which gave the rise to Mr. Conrart's design of revising it. He began this Work, and Mr. de la Bastide finish'd it. But their new Version was never introduc'd into the publick service of the Reform'd. If any Proposals were made about it, they were only examined; but the decision (g) was always, that they would keep where they were. The French Churches settled in foreign Countries since the revocation of the Edict of Nantes, have continued to sing the Translation of Clement Marot and Theodorus Beza. At last it was resolv'd in good earnest in the Church of Geneva to use them no more, and to introduce in their room the Version of Mr. Conrart and Mr. de la Bastide, after they had been revis'd, and a few Alterations made in them. The Pastors and Professors of Geneva acquainted the Publick with their Intention (h), by an Advertisement which was prefix'd to the Edition they publish'd of this new Version in 1695, and some Years after they quite abolish'd the use of the old Translation, and requested the other Churches by their Circular Letters to do the like. (i) The Churches of St. Gall and Neufchatel have admitted this Innovation upon the same foot with the Church of Geneva. The rest yet known (k) what the Churches in England and Brandenburg will do; but 'tis well known, that the Walloon Synod assembled at Rotterdam, in the Month of August 1700, resolv'd to retain the ancient Custom, and to change only some Expressions and Words in the old Psalter. (i) Ib. p. 11.

We have seen a Letter of a Gentleman of Montpellier, dated June the 5th 1700, upon which I will make two Observations. This Gentleman says, " That after Mr. Godeau had Printed his " Paraphrase upon the Psalms, the Jesuit Chavassur " put forth a Question whether he was a Poet, " in a Latin Dissertation, which appear'd with this " Title, An Godellus sit Poëta. He is mistaken; the Dissertation of this Jesuit, Antonius Godellus, Episcopus Grassensis utrum Poëta, contains nothing that relates to the Psalms of Mr. Godeau. He says, " that we may apply to the Poems of Marot and " Beza, what Quintilian says of Ennius: Let us re- " verence the Verses of Ennius, as we reverence " the Groves that are venerable for their great " Age, and whose old and lopp'd Oaks, though " they have little Beauty, yet do strike us with " a Religious awe. Ennium sicut sacros vetustate lucos adoremus, in quibus grandia & antiqua robora jam non tantam habent speciem, quantam Religionem. Quintil. lib. 10. cap. 1. He might have found in Quintilian another Passage more proper to his purpose, where he observes, that the Salian Priests themselves did scarce understand the Song they sung; but that Religion did not allow of any change, and that 'tis fit to retain such Customs as have been Consecrated. (a) Saliorum carmina vix sacerdotibus suis sacris intellecta, sed illa mutari vetat religio & consecratis utendum est. When it is alledg'd, that it is sufficient to take from the old Translation sometimes one word, and sometimes another, according as they are become obsolete, obscene and unintelligible; it seems to be founded on very plausible Reasons: For indeed, to avoid great Confusion, all changes of this Nature must be made insensibly. If many Ages be spent in following this Method, it will be with the Version of Marot and Beza, as it was with the famous Ship of Theseus *. It was preserv'd as a precious Thing, and no Repairs were made in it but what were necessary, i. e. as any piece rotted, so much was made new. Which was at last an instance made use of by the Philosophers who disputed, whether the Bodies be the same or no, whereof the Matter has been changed. (a) Quintilian, l. 1. c. 6. p. m. 39.

I shall make but one Note on the Letter which Mr. Jurieu has Printed, wherein he condemns the Innovation. He says, that the Churches of France receiv'd from the Church of Geneva, a Liturgy and a Book of Psalms, which was made and sung at Paris, before it was at Geneva. This is not exactly true, since the Verses made at Paris contain'd only thirty Psalms, and those who sung them were indifferently either Friends or Enemies to the Reform'd Religion It was at the Court of Francis I. that they were chiefly sung; and 'tis very well known how much this Prince persecuted the Reform'd Religion. And if afterwards the French sung the other twenty Psalms of Marot, and those of his Successor, it was before the Reform'd distinguish- ed themselves by this way of singing, and made it a part of their Exercises of Devotion. Now this was not done, till the whole Psalter was set to Musick at Geneva, and bound up with the Catechism, and from that time the Catholicks left off the singing of these Psalms, as may be seen above in a Passage of Florimond de Remond. It cannot therefore be pretended that these Verses were sung at Geneva before they were at Paris. I say, this cannot be pretended in the sense I speak of: For the Question is about a singing peculiar to the Reform'd, and making part of their pious Exercises. In this sense its Birth was at Geneva; and it cannot be denied that the Church of Geneva begun first to sing these Psalms. * See Plutarch in Theseo, p. 10[illegible]

(g) See the Letter entitled, An Answer to a Printed Letter, which Mr. Jurieu wrote to a French Minister at London against the change of the Verses propos'd by the Church of Geneva. The Answer is dated July 24. 1700. (k) I write this in October, 1700.

Father, and beſides it appears that Michael MAROT (Q) his Son wrote Verſes, which were Printed.

MARTELLIUS, or rather MARTELLUS, (HUGOLIN) Biſhop of Glandeves, was of Florence, and one of thoſe Italians who made his Fortune on this ſide of the Alps, by the Intereſt of Catherine de Medicis. There are ſcarce any * Particulars left concerning his Life, and I have not be enable to conſult the Gallia Chriſtiana of Meſſieurs de Sainte Marthe. He publiſh'd ſome (A) Books of Litterature, and ſome (B) Treatiſes

* See the Remark B.

Pſalms. I know very well what may be alledg'd concerning the numerous Aſſemblies of the Reform'd at Paris about 1558: Of whom Beza ſpeaks in the following manner. "(c) Thus the Aſſembly daily multiplied at Paris, where it happen'd, "that ſome being in the place call'd le pre aux "Clercs, a publick place of the Univerſity, began "to ſing Pſalms; which being heard, a great many of thoſe who were walking, or playing at "divers Games, joyn'd to the Company that was "ſinging, ſome for the novelty of it, and others "to bear a part in the Muſick. This was continued for three Days in a very great Aſſembly, "where were preſent the King of Navarre himſelf, "with many Lords and Gentlemen both of France "and other Nations, who fell a ſinging. And "altho' in a great Multitude there is frequently "great Confuſion, yet there was ſuch an Harmony and Devotion, that every one preſent was "raviſh'd with it, even thoſe who could not ſing, "nay, the moſt ignorant got up upon the Walls, "and the places round about, to hear this ſinging, and declar'd that it was ill done to forbid "ſo good a thing." But who does not ſee that all this happen'd after thoſe of Geneva had added the Pſalter to the Catechiſm? Note, that before Beza tranſlated a hundred Pſalms, thoſe of Marot were ſung in the Eccleſiaſtical Aſſemblies of Geneva; for without doubt the following words ought to be underſtood of an Aſſembly at Geneva. "(d) "Beza writes thus in his Paraphraſe upon the Pſalms "in 1581. It is now thirty two Years (viz. from "the Year (e) 1549) that this 91ſt Pſalm was the "firſt that I heard ſung in the Aſſembly of Chriſtians, being the firſt time that I was preſent "there; and I may ſay, that I was ſo rejoyc'd to "hear it ſung, that ever ſince I have had it as it "were engrav'd in my Heart.

(c) Beza Eccl. Hiſt. B. 2. p. 141. See alſo Jeremy de Pours, ubi ſupra, p. 731, 732.

(d) De Pours, ib. p. 736.

(e) I do not think that de Pours reckon'd right, for Beza coming to Geneva, October 24. 1548, 'tis no wiſe probable that he did not begin to aſſiſt at the Aſſemblies of the Faithful till 1549.

(Q) *That he was a Father—*Michael MAROT, his Son, wrote Verſes.] You will find this in the deſcription of Clement Marot's flight.

J'abandonnai (f), ſans avoir commis crime,
L'ingrate France, ingrate, ingratiſſime
A ſon Poëte: & en la delaiſſant,
Fort grand regret ne vint mon cueur bleſſant
Tu ments Marot, grand regret tu ſenti.,
Quand tu penſas a tes Enfans petits.

(f) Marot in his Epiſtle to the King at the time of his Baniſhment at Ferrara, p. m. 181. Add, that in the Poem wherein he prays the Dauphin to procure him a Paſs, p. 182. He ſays, Not to go and viſit my Caſtles, but to ſee my little Marot's.

We may certainly conclude from hence that he was Married; for he was not ſo profligate as to tell Francis I. in a Letter, that he was ſorry for the loſs of his Baſtards. La Croix du Maine (g) relates, that Michael Marot, the Son of Clement Marot, wrote ſome French Poems, which were Printed with the Contredits à Noſtradamus, written by the Lord du Pavillon——Printed at Paris in 1560, by Charles l'Angelier.

(g) La Croix du Maine, p. 326.

(A) Some Books of Litterature] I find in Konig's Bibliotheque one Hugolinus Martellinus, who publiſh'd a Commentary upon the ſecond Ode of the fourth Book of Horace, and I am perſuaded that he ſhould be call'd Martellus, or Martellius, and not Martellinus. The Catalogue of Thomaſius's Library, at p. 324. of the ſecond part, has theſe words: Hugolini Martelli Epiſcopi Glandat. in Odas in quæ Calpurnii & Nemeſiani loci aliquot illuſtrantur. This Work was Printed at Florence by the Juntas, in 1590. Naudæus obſerves, that one Hugolinus Martellinus wrote a whole Treatiſe upon an Epigram of Auſonius, and ſo perplex'd it with his Explications, that it is impoſſible to underſtand any thing of it. If he had known that he ſpoke of a Biſhop of Glandeves, he would have made a more honourable mention of him, and not have cenſur'd him with ſuch palpable Contempt. Let us relate at ſome length his words, for they explain an obſcure Paſſage, and on the other ſide are ſomewhat liable to Cenſure. (h) Auſonii . . . . Muſa . . . . Demoſthenes ea de re indicium, perbrevi ſane hoc (i) Epigrammate, ſed multo tam in obſtructo & ſentatibus comprehenſum, ut . . . .

(h) Naudæus ſyntagm. de ſtudio liberali, p. m. 84.

(i) The 141. Epigram, of Auſonius

Diſcere ſi cupias, doctis quam multa licebit
Quæ noſti, meditando velis inoleſcere menti,
Quæ didiciſti, haud dum, diſcendo abſumere tendas

Sic enim illud exhibent Typographi recentiores, cum tamen ante ſeptuaginta annos Aldinus codex, & Gryphius poſtea liquido habuerint in primo verſiculo Doctus, quæ vox malè intellecta fucum procul-dubio fecit illuſtriſſimo Eliæ Vincto, cujus operâ atque induſtriâ, Auſonii monumenta emendatiora explicatioraque habemus. Hic enim (ut probum Virum, atque ingenium decet) ſincere fatetur, ſe mentem hujus epigrammatis aſſequi non valuiſſe; quam paullo poſt Hugolinus quidam Martellius, operæ pretium eſſe duxit integro volumine declarare: ſed ſatius illi profectò fuiſſet micare digitis, aut incurbitas pingere, cum huic potius tam ſpiſſæ (vulgo ſepis) aramentum infudit, ut illud vix clarè poſſe quidquid eſt aquarum in Hippocrene, & Pegaſi; adeò ſingula quæque verba male torquendo, quo ſex in illis gradus ad expedite diſcendum invenuret, omnem ferme Epigrammatis ſenſum corrupit, qui ſic (meo quidem judicio) reſtituendus eſt, ut nihil aliud ſibi velit Auſonius, niſi modum edocere, quo docti homines multa loqui, & dicere poſſint ex tempore, qui quidem modus in hoc tantum conſiſtere videtur, ut, quæ tacite optime norunt, velint ea inoleſcere menti, id eſt, formæ inſcribere, ac imaginationi & ingenio commendare; qui modum eodem ſenſu dixit Agellius, Natura induit nobis inolevitque; quæ vero nudum bene didicerint, frequenter dicendo & repetendo aſſumere, & altius memoriæ infigere conantur; ſicque totum Epigramma lego, & interpungo.

Diſcere ſi cupias doctus quam multa, licebit.
Quæ noſti, meditando velis inoleſcere menti:
Quæ didiciſti haud-dum, dicendo aſſumere tendas (a).

(a) According to the Correction of Mr. Grævius in the Edition of Tollius, there wants in the firſt Verſe cupis à doctis, and in the laſt diſcendo aſſumere.

The miſtake of Naudæus conſiſts in this: He ſays, that ſeventy Years before, the Edition of Aldus put Doctus in the firſt Verſe; but he wrote about the Year 1633. He pretended therefore that the Edition of Aldus was in the Year 1563, or thereabouts. Now this was a miſtake; for that Edition was in the Year 1517. If any one has a mind to put another ſenſe upon his Expreſſions, he may alledge that he means, that the modern Editions which have put Doctis, are later by 70 Years than that of Aldus; but beſides that this ſenſe would be ill expreſs'd, he muſt alſo be underſtood to mean certain Editions made in 1587. Now no body has obſerv'd any Edition of Auſonius in that Year, and 'tis certain, that thoſe of 1588, do not deſerve to be mention'd rather than the foregoing.

(B) Some Treatiſes concerning the Reformation of the Calendar] Mr. Thomaſſin Mazaugues Counſellor in the Parliament of Aix, was pleas'd to give himſelf the trouble to inform me of the following Particulars. "(b) Hugolinus Martellus was a Florentine. He "came into France with Catherine de Medicis, and "was made Biſhop of Glandeves, January 10th "1572. The Printed Books which I have of his "are theſe: De anni integra in integrum reſtitutione, "Dedicated to Cardinal Sirlet, and Printed in 4° "at Florence in 1578. It is divided into thirty four "ſmall Articles, and contains in the whole but "forty three Pages. He reprinted this Book at "Lyons in 1582, in 8°. with Additions, and joyn'd "to it the following Treatiſe, Sacrorum temporum "aſſertio, which he Dedicated to Lewis Martelli, "his Brother, a Canon of Florence. In 1583, he "Printed alſo at Lyons in 8 the following Book, "La chiave del Calendario Gregoriano, which he "Dedicated to Ottavio Bandini, Referendary "Abbot of Caſanuova, which is a Work of "362 Pages, and the moſt conſiderable. This, "Sir, is what I know of this Martellus. "There are no conſiderable Monuments of his "in his Church: He gave ſomething to pious "Uſes, and that is all. His Family had no ſucceſſion in this Province. We had a famous "Phyſician of his Name, who wrote ſomething, "and died fifteen Years ago. This Phyſician "was very learned, and always talking of tiſes concerning the Reformation of the Calendar. Naudæus, who knew ſo many Authors, was ignorant of his being a * Biſhop, and took him to be a very poor Writer.

(b) Taken from a Letter written at Aix in Provence, Aug. 2 1705

* See the Remark A.

† Taken out of the Libraria Breſciana nuovamente aperta da Leonardo Cozzando, parte prima, p. 307, &c.

MARTINENGHUS (TITUS PROSPER) a Benedictin Monk, Native of Breſcia, and of the Family of a Count, made himſelf famous by his skill in the learned Languages. The Reputation he got, made the College of Cardinals ſend for him to Rome under the Pontificate of Pius IV. to give him a Commiſſion to reviſe and correct the Works of St. Jerom, which were afterwards Printed by Paul Manutius. He Revis'd alſo the Works of St. Chryſoſtom, and thoſe of Theophilact, and the Greek Bible which was Printed at Rome. To recompenſe him for ſo many pains, Pius V. had a mind to promote him to ſome Dignities; but as ſoon as this Monk heard the News, he retir'd to a Convent in his own Country, where he ſpent the time in publiſhing (C) many Books. He died very old at Breſcia, in the Monaſtery of St. Euphemia, in 1594†.

MARTINI (RAYMUND) a Dominican Monk very skilful in the Oriental Tongues, flouriſh'd towards the end of the XIIIth Century. He was engag'd in the ſtudy of theſe Languages upon this occaſion. Raymund β de Pennafort his General, having on one ſide a great deſire to purge Spain from Judaiſm and Mahometiſm which had infected it, and knowing on the other ſide the truth of the Maxims, which the Primitive Fathers have ſcatter'd in their Works, about Conſtraint in matters of Religion, caus'd to be ordain'd in a Chapter held at Toledo in 1250, that the Monks of his Order ſhould apply themſelves to the ſtudy of Hebrew and Arabick. He impos'd this task upon ſome particular Perſons, among whom he named our Raymond Martini; and he obtain'd a Penſion from the Kings of Arragon and Caſtile for thoſe that ſhould ſtudy theſe Languages, that they might endeavour to convert the Infidels. From hence it came to paſs that Raymond Martini applied his Studies that way, in which he had very good ſucceſs. He γ was not of Barcelona, as δ ſome have publiſh'd; but there he took upon him the Habit of a Dominican, and he was born at Sobirats. Having attain'd the skill that was neceſſary for reading the Works of the Rabbins; he took out of them ſuch things as might ſerve him to beat the Jews at their own Weapons, as he has ſhown in his Pugio Fidei, which was (A) Printed at Paris in 1651 ξ. 'Tis believ'd, that Peter Galatin a Cordelier, took out of this Pugio Fidei all that he has ſaid to any good purpoſe in his Book De arcanis Catholicæ veritatis. But it is more probable (B) that he ſtole from a Carthuſian of Genoa, call'd Porchet ζ Salvago, who flouriſh'd about ε the Year 1315. 'Tis true, that this Carthuſian had taken from Raymund Martini what he thought good, as he acknowledges β He was the third General of the Jacobins.

γ Natione Catalanus, patria Subiratenſis Altamura Bibl. Ord. Prædicat. p. 451.

δ Antonius Senenſis in Chronico Ordinis Dominic. & Bibliotheca. Franc. Diagus in Hiſtor. Provinciæ Aragoniæ Fratr. Prædicat. Poſſevinus in Appar. apud Altamur ibid.

ξ Ex Altamura, ibid.

ζ Porchetus de Sylvaticis.

ε Rafael Soprani, Scrittori della Liguria, p. 244.

" the abuſes of Phyſick, and wrote upon that Sub-" ject.

(C) In Publiſhing many Books.] He publiſh'd Le bellezze dell' huomo conoſciter di ſe ſteſſo; they are Diſcourſes that the reading of Plato afforded him. He underſtood the Greek Tongue, and had a great inclination to Poetry. Hence it came to paſs that he publiſh'd many Poems, both in Latin and Greek, moſt of them upon matters of Devotion. That which he made in honour of the Holy Virgin, is divided into many Hymns, which are equal to the number of Years that ſhe liv'd. This Poem is entituled Theotocodia, ſive Parthenodia. He made a Panegyrick upon Sixtus V. in Latin and Greek (c).

(A) Which was Printed at Paris in 1651.] Many Perſons contributed to this Edition. Mr. Boſquet, who died Biſhop of Montpellier, light upon that Manuſcript, when he was ſearching with great diligence at Toulouſe all the Corners of the Library of the College de Foix, about the Year 1620. He read it and tranſcrib'd ſomething out of it, and after ſome Years when he had learn'd the Hebrew, by the care of a learn'd German call'd James Spiegbel de Reſcenbach; he ſhow'd it to his Maſter of the Hebrew Tongue, and gave it to him to tranſcribe. This James Spiegbel being very well vers'd in theſe matters, and having frequent Diſcourſes about them with Mr. de Mauſſac, put him upon publiſhing this Book, from a Copy very neat and well Punctuated, which he gave him of it: But although Mr. de Mauſſac was a very able Man, yet he wanted an Aſſiſtant who was the principal in overſeeing and preparing this Book. This Aſſociate was Mr de Voiſin, the Son of a Counſellor in the Parliament of Bourdeaux. Thomas Turc, General of the Dominicans, ſollicited powerfully the Promoters of the Edition, and did not only write to them Letters equally preſſing and obliging, but alſo gave order, that they ſhould have all the Manuſcripts of the Pugio fidei that could be recover'd. John Bapt. de Marinis, his Succeſſor, continu'd to take the ſame care. At laſt the Order concern'd themſelves in it ſo far as to be at (d) the Charges of the Impreſſion. The Work came out of the Preſs in 1651, with many Prefaces and Approbations, which ſhew all that I have ſaid. Mr. de Voiſin compar'd the Manuſcript of the College de Foix with three others, whereof the firſt belong'd to the Dominicans of Toulouſe, the ſecond had been ſent from Barcelona, and the third was come from Majorca. He noted in the Margin the various Readings, and wrote Notes upon all the difficult places. He detected all the Thefts of Galatinus, and made good Supplements by way of Commentary upon the Preface of Raymund Martini. 'Tis a ſurpriſing thing, that Gabriel Naudæus did not know, that Scaliger was miſtaken in ſpeaking of Galatinus and Sebondus. See hereafter the Remark C. and here follow the words of Naudæus: (a) Omnium ut majori conatu, ſic etiam feliciori eventu, Petrus Galatinus Monachus ex ordine ſancti Franciſci; aut potius Raimundus Sebondus profeſſione Medicus, cujus, præter libros de Theologia naturali, duo inſuper volumina ingentia in Collegio Fuxenſi Tholoſano etiamnum hodie ſub titulo Pugionis fidei conſervantur. Ex quibus, ſi Joſepho Scaligero fides eſt habenda, omnia ſua hauſit & tranſcripſit Galatinus, diſſimulato ipſius Sebondi nomine; non tam propter acerrimum, quod ſemper extitit inter Dominicanam familiam & Franciſcanam, odium, quemadmodum maligne cavillatur Scaliger; & fortaſſis etiam imperite; quam ut eruditum illud opus acceſſione quadam augeret & ſibi vendicaret locupletatum ita atque expolitum. There was a ſecond Edition of the Pugio fidei, at Leipſick, in 1687. with a learned Introduction (b) in Theologiam Judaicam.

(a) Naudæus in Bibliographia Politica, p. m. 35.

(b) Written by Jo. Benedictus Carpzovius Theologiæ Profeſſor Lipſiæ.

(B) It is more probable.] Which is prov'd by Father Morin, who affirms that he found the ſame things in Porchet and Galatinus in all places where he compar'd them together. He adds, that all the Artifice which Galatinus has made uſe of to conceal his Theft, conſiſts in ſome changes of Expreſſion, and of the diviſion of the Chapters, in writing by way of Dialogue, and in his frequent Citations of a Rabbi (e) unknown to Martini and Porchet, and alſo to the Jews. (d) Plagium ſane portentoſum cui vix ſimile unquam factum eſt, nam Galatini liber nihil aliud eſt quam Porcheti exſcriptio ipſiſſimis Porcheti verbis, atque etiam Hebræorum textuum tranſlationibus [illegible] hoc ſi excipias, quod elegantiæ cauſa quædam verba & verborum conſtructiones immutantur. Eſt enim Porcheti phraſis Galatini multo ſimplicior. Deinde alius eſt ordo Galatini nutius diſtinctus, idco ex uno Porcheti capite tria componit & varie digerit, in qua dialogi[illegible]mutatione acknowledges in his Preface. This Confeſſion acquits him from being a Plagiary; from which Galatinus cannot be purg'd, who never mentions Porchet nor Martini. The learned Joſeph Scaliger (C) has been guilty of ſome Faults, in accuſing juſtly Francis Galatin of being a Plagiary. Martini finiſh'd his Work in the Year * 1278. And hereby they are refuted, who pretend, that Raymund de Pennafort was the Author of it; for it is plainly prov'd, that he died † January the 6th, 1275. There are ſome who think β that Martini wrote another Book entituled Capiſtrum Judæorum, and a Refutation of the Alcoran; and that the Copy of the Pugio fidei, written with his own Hand in Latin and Hebrew, is at Naples in the Convent of St. Dominick. The great Knowledge he diſcover'd in the Books and Opinions of the Jews, made ſome believe γ that he had been of their Religion; but this is falſe.

(c) He is call'd Rabenu Hakados, and his Book Gal Razeia, according to Morin. Others call him Hakadoſch.

(d) [illegible] c. 1 c. 2 p. m. 16. Vide etiam p. 19.

(d) Prodiit pugio fidei Pariſiis apud Joannem Henault anno 1651. in folio, impenſis Ordinis. Altamura, p. 451

* He teſtifies it parte 2. Pugion. c. 10. apud Altamur. p. 453.

† Vide Altamurum, ibid.

β Poſſev. in Appar. Sacro.

γ Auguſtin Juſtiniani Præfat. ad Porcheti Victoriam.

MARTYR (PETER) a Proteſtant Divine in the XVIth Century. See VERMILII.

MARULUS (MARCUS) a Native of Spalato in Dalmatia, liv'd in the beginning of the XVIth Century, as is obſerv'd in Moreri's Dictionary; who has not given us the right Title of one of his Books. It is a Latin Book which was tranſlated into French, and into ſome other Languages ζ. The (D) French Tranſlator did a thing very ſingular, which deſerves to be related. Geſner δ confounds this Marulus with Marullus the Poet.

ζ Into Spaniſh and German.

δ Geſn. in Biblioth. fol. 495. Verſo.

MARULLUS, a Poet of Calabria, in the Vth Century, went to wait upon Attila at Padua, after this King of the Huns had open'd a way into Italy by taking of Aquileia, and had ruin'd and ſubdu'd all that came in his way. This Poet expected a great Reward for the Flatteries wherewith he had fill'd the Panegyrick of Attila. But when this Prince knew by his Interpreters, that the Poem which Marullus had repeated, deriv'd his Pedigree from the Gods, and call'd him God, he order'd that theſe Verſes, and the Author of them ſhould be burnt. He moderated this Puniſhment, when he reflected that this ſeverity might induce other Authors to write nothing in his praiſe η.

η Ex Callimacho Experiente, in vita Attilæ.

MARULLUS

nationè alium paulo colorem induxit..... Non id tantum ſemel deprehendimus, ſed toties quoties id periclitatiſumus, mirati ſane Galatinum Porcheto reconcinnatæ Judæorum Hiſtoriæ nihil ſuperaddere præter frequentia teſtimonia ex libello, &c. Galatinus dedicated his Book to the Emperor Maximilian I. and did not believe that Porchet's Book was to be Printed ſo ſoon. We may ſay alſo, that he hop'd this Manuſcript ſhould never be publiſh'd, for it was exceeding rare: But Auguſtin Juſtiniani, Biſhop of Nebbio, did nevertheleſs find it out by virtue of Money, and publiſh'd it at Paris in 1520, with this Title, Victoria Porchetti adverſus impios Hebræos.

(C) Joſeph Scaliger has been guilty of ſome faults.] He believ'd firſt, that the Author of the Pugio fidei was call'd Raymund Sebon. 2. That Raymund Sebon was a Dominican, and that he liv'd at Toulouſe about the Year 1376. 3. That Galatinus ſtole immediately from the Pugio fidei: Which may be ſeen in his Letters, wherein he mentions this twice (e) to Caſaubon, and once (f) to Thomſon. Scito illos libros (Galatini) eſſe compendium duorum ingentium voluminum quibus titulum Pugionem fidei fecit auctor Raimundus Sebon Monachus Dominicanus, eximius Philoſophus. This is what he ſays in Letter 84, which he thus confirms in Letter 93. De Galatino ſcito me vera dixiſſe, nam non ſolum illa omnia è Raimundo Sebone expiſcatus eſt, ſed & opus ejus nihil aliud eſt quam breviarium Pugionis fidei, ita enim opus ſuum doctiſſimus Dominicanus ille inſcripſerat qui Toloſæ ante CC. plus minus annos ſcribebat, ejuſque operis duo ingentes tomi in Collegio Fuxenſi ejuſdem civitatis ante annos XXI quum ego ibi eſſem, extabant. Cum judicio tamen illi libri legendi ſunt, qui utinam typis excuſi eſſent. Hoc unicum exemplum, præter aliud quod penes Matthæum Beroaldum fuit, Toloſæ extare ſuo. In Letter 241, written in 1606, two Years after the 93, he changed ſomething as to the Age of Raymund Sebon, qui ante CCXXX plus minus annos, ſays he, Toloſæ vivebat Father Morin (g) obſerves, againſt Scaliger, that Raymund Sebondus, who does not appear to have underſtood the Hebrew Tongue, was a hundred Years younger than Raymund Martini, the true Author of the Pugio fidei. He adds, that it is at leaſt three Centuries ſince this Martini wrote his Book, becauſe Nicolas de Lyra ſpeaks of him. He ſhows, that Galatinus did not ſteal immediately but from Porchet. Mr. de Mauſſac (h) has reckon'd up yet more exactly the faults of the great Scaliger. He does not only ſay, that Raymund Sebondus was neither a Monk, nor learn'd in the Oriental Tongues, and that, according to Trithemius and Simlerus (i), he died in 1432. but he ſays alſo, that the Manuſcript of Martini in the College de Foix, contains three Volumes; that beſides this and the Copy of Beroaldus, there is one at Naples, one with the Dominicans of Toulouſe, one at Barcelona, and one at Majorca. If any one would deal as rigidly with Manſſac, as he hath done with Scaliger, he might be told that he did unjuſtly attribute to Scaliger (k) the firſt diſcovery of the Theft of Galatinus. Matthew Beroaldus ſpoke of it, before the Manuſcript of Toulouſe was known to Scaliger; which may be thus demonſtrated. Scaliger wrote in the Year 1604, that 21 Years before he had ſeen at Toulouſe the Pugio fidei; ſo that he ſaw it in 1583. Now Beroaldus publiſh'd his Chronology in 1575, and had occaſion to obſerve, that Galatinus had publiſh'd as his own the Writings of Raymund Martini, having made ſome alterations in them. Let us ſet down all that he ſays. (l) Galatinus (ut hoc obiter moneam) Martini Raymundi ſcripta pro ſuis edidit, commutato rerum ordine & argumento nonnihil variato, ut plagii poſſit accuſari. Galatinus: quod planum me facturum ſpero ſi dederit Dominus, ut pugionem ipſius Raimundi ſcriptum ad imperitorum perfidiam jugulandam maxime autem Judæorum in lucem proferam. Is autem liber ſtudiis Hebraicis maxime utilis pervenit ad me ex Bibliotheca Franciſci Vatabli Mecenatis mei. This Paſſage informs us, that Beroaldus had a deſign to publiſh the Pugio fidei, and that his Copy came from Vatablus. Probably it was by the Book of Beroaldus, that Poſſevin knew that Vatablus had ſuch a Manuſcript, and when he mention'd this particular (m), he accuſed Galatinus of being a Plagiary. Note, That Scaliger's Letters were not made publick till after the Printing of Poſſevin's Apparatus; ſo that here we have a ſecond diſcoverer of this Theft before Joſeph Scaliger. I have obſerv'd, that Toppi in his Biblioteca Napoletana ſays the latter diſcover'd it firſt; and therefore he is miſtaken.

(e) Epiſt. 84, & 93.

(f) Epiſt. 241.

(g) Ubi ſupra, p. 19.

(h) Vide Prolegomena ad Pugionem fidei.

(i) Epit. Biblioth. Geſner. But he ſays, claruit, and not obiit anno 1430. He had better have cited Geſner himſelf.

(k) Primus Galatini furta ſubodoratus eſt Mr. Carpzovius ſays, the like. Idque (Scaligero) gratias agere quod primus Galatini plagium prodidiſſet ..... Ex quo Scaliger Galatini furta primus ſubodoratus eſt. Introduct. p. 97.

(l) Beroald. in Chronic. p. 3. a.

(m) Poſſev. Appar. tom. 2. fol. 411.

(a) Martinus Delrio, diſquirit. Magicar. tom. 3. lib. 5. ſect. 1. p. 710.

(b) Cited in Biblioth. Geſn. 495. verſo.

MARULLUS (MICHAEL (A) TARCHANIOTA) retir'd into Italy after the Turks took Conſtantinople, where he was born. He did not leave his Country out of Zeal for Chriſtianity; for his Opinions in Matters of Religion were very far from being Orthodox (B). But it was doubtleſs the fear of Slavery, or the deſire he had to avoid the cruel Vexation of ſeeing and hearing the Inſults of an Inſolent Conqueror, that made him remove from Greece. He liſted himſelf a Soldier in Italy (C), and ſerv'd in the Cavalry *, under Nicolas Ralla, who was of Lacedemon. He join'd Learning with his Arms, and would be no leſs a Poet than a Soldier: and becauſe he fear'd leſt his Skill in making Greek Verſes ſhould not be thought any thing extraordinary †, he apply'd himſelf with great diligence to the ſtudy of Latin Poetry, and by this means he acquir'd a great Reputation. His Latin Verſes conſiſt of Four Books of Epigrams, and Four Books of Hymns. He begun a Poem about the Education of Princes, which he never finiſh'd. What was found of it among his Papers, was printed with the Epigrams and Hymns, of all which there have been ſeveral Editions. Authors are divided in their Opinions about theſe Poems. For ſome Criticks, ſuch as the two Scaligers ‖, ſpeak very ill of them. But other Writers § have commended Marullus very much. He got many Enemies by cenſuring ¶ too freely the ancient Latin Poets. Floridus Sabinus undertook their Defence, and treated him harſhly. Politian  had a great Quarrel with him upon the ſame Occaſion. I †† ſpeak elſewhere of the Marriage of Marullus with the learned Alexandra Scala. But here I muſt take notice that he was of a reſtleſs Spirit (D), and could never find a fixed Place for his Body nor for his Studies. Other Learned Men became famous by tranſlating Books: but he deſpis'd (E) this Labour ‡‡, either as a thing below him, or too hazardous, and he was thinking of ſomething

* Jovius in Elogiis, c. 28. Militari ſtipendio ſeſe alere coactus. Pier. Valer. de Liter. infel. lib. 2.

† Jovius ibid.

‖ Jul. Cæſ. Scaliger, Poët. l. 6. c. 4. Joſ. Scalig. in Catull. Epigr. 67.

§ Crinitus de honeſta diſcipl. l. 23. cap. 7. Jo Secundus Epigr. Jovius ubi ſupra. Pontanus apud Jovium ib. Pier. Valerian. de Liter. infel.

¶ Aub. Miræus de ſcriptor. ſæculi XVI. p. 9.

(d) Naudæus in pentade quæſtion. Jatrophilol. p. 150. Edit. Genev. 1647.

(e) Guillet Life of Mahomet II. tom. 1. p. 258. ex Turco-Græc p. 91.

(f) Deſcripr. Ital. p. 44.

(g) Not. ad Sannaz. p. 189. edit. Amſtel. 1689. See alſo p. 221.

 Scaliger ubi ſupra.

†† Paulo ante Græcorum nomini favens, cum Politiano ejus gentis ingenio infeſto, maledicentiſſimis epiſtolis lites extenderat. Jovius, ibid.

‡‡ In the Article Scala.

§§ Jovius ubi ſupra.

De religioſe vivendi Inſtitutione lib. 6. per exempla ex veteri, novoque Teſtamento collecta ex authoribus quoque D. Hieronymo Presbytero, Gregorio Pont. Max. Euſebio Cæſarienſi, Jo. Caſſiano nonnulliſque aliis qui vitas conſcripſere ſanctorum, digeſta per capita ſive locos communes 70. Miræus has too much abridg'd this, for he only ſays: (c) Scripſit libros ſex exemplorum, hoc eſt dictorum factorumque memorabilium; and yet Moreri thought it too long, for he only ſets down lib. 6. Exemplorum. The Printers having tranſpos'd the figures, have given us an Edition of the Works of Marullus in 1610, which, according to Miræus, was in 1601. Gabriel Naudæus, who wrote a Diſſertation to prove that 'tis lawful for Phyſicians to tell a great many Lies to a ſick Perſon, does not forget to cite our Marullus who maintain'd, that a Man who lies in favour of the Commonwealth, or for the greater Glory of God, does an Act of ſingular Prudence and Piety. (d) Marullus Spalatenſis lib. 4. memor. c. 4. ob Reipublicæ bonum vel majorem Dei gloriam mentiri fore ſummæ pietatis ingentiſque prudentiæ contendit. O wicked Morality!

(A) Tarchaniota.] I believe it was the Name of his Mother's Family; for in the Firſt Book of his Epigrams, there is an Epitaph upon Michael Tarchaniota his Grandfather by the Mother's Side, and another upon Euphroſyne Tarchaniota his Mother; and in the Third Book there is one upon Paul Tarchaniota his Uncle by the Mother's Side. As to his Grandfather by the Father's Side, whoſe Epitaph is to be ſeen a few Pages after, he was call'd Philip Marullus. One of the Four Learned Greeks, who fled for Refuge into France, under the Reign of Charles VII, and were recommended by Philelphus to William des Urſins, Chancellor of France, was call'd Nicolas (e) Tarchaniotes.

(B) Very far from being Orthodox.] This is what we learn from Leander Albertus (f) who makes this Obſervation by the by, when he ſpeaks of the River wherein Marullus was drowned, Flumen Cecina Marulli Bizantini viri docti, ſed de Chriſtiana pietate haud ſanè ſentientis interitu illuſtratum. He who publiſh'd ſome curious Notes upon Sannazar, makes uſe of Two Proofs againſt thoſe who pretended that John Francis Picus aſſiſted Marullus in making his Hymns. The Firſt is, that Picus was ſo much addicted to the Study of Chriſtian Theology, that it is no wiſe probable he ſhould have troubled himſelf about any Politeneſs of Style: The Second is, that there is no Footſtep of Chriſtianity in the Hymns of Marullus. (g) In hymnis adeptum eſſe a Joann. Franciſco Pico erant qui aſſerarent Lilio Gyraldi ætate, quod tamen mihi neutiquam veriſimile fit, cum conſtet Picum tanto ſtudio incubuiſſe Chriſtianæ Theologiæ, ut omnem prorſus ſtyli atque eloquii cultum ornatumque neglexiſſe merito videri poſſit. Marullum vero ſi legas, nec volam, nec veſtigium hominis Chriſtiani invenias. This ſeems to me good Reaſoning. Pierius Valerianus relates, that this Poet utter'd horrible Blaſphemies when he died. Ferunt illum primo ſtatim caſu vehementer excandeſſe, atque erat iræ impatiens convitia & maledicta in ſuperos detorſiſſe (h). Eraſmus thought Marullus's Poems tolerable, if they had contain'd leſs Paganiſm: Marulli pauca legi, ſays he in his Ciceronianus, tolerabilia ſi minus haberent paganitatis. This Paganiſm was not the greateſt Fault of Marullus, his Impieties are much more to be condemn'd; which doubtleſs were the Cauſe why Lucretius pleas'd him ſo much, that he put out a new Edition of it, and endeavour'd to imitate it (i), and ſaid, (k) that we muſt only read other Poets, but get Virgil and Lucretius by heart. Joſeph Scaliger in his Notes upon Catullus thunders againſt this Edition. Here follows a Proof of the impudent Impiety wherewith Marullus blaſphem'd Heaven:

At (l) pia pro patria, pro diis, ariſque tuendis,
Indueras Latium dux caput arma tibi.
Ultorſque deos jurata in bella trahebas,
Si modo ſunt curæ juſque piumque deis.
Sed neque fas, neque jura deos mortalia tangunt,
Et rapit arbitrio ſors fera cuncta ſuo.
Nam quid priſca fides juvit, pietaſque Pelaſgos?
Nempe jacent nullo damna levante Deo.
Aſpice Byzanti quondam gratiſſima divis
Mœnia, Romanæ nobile gentis opus.
Hæc quoque jampridem hoſtili data præda furori eſt,
Solaque de tanta gloria gente manet.

(b) De Liter. infel. l. 2. p. m. 70.

(i) Gyral. Dialog. 1. de Poet. ſui temp.

(k) Crinitus l. 23. c. 7.

(l) Marullus Epigr. l. 1. p. m. 16, 17.

(C) He liſted himſelf a Soldier in Italy.] The Author of the Anecdotes de Florence (m) ſays, that Marullus went from Greece into Italy in a company of Cuiraſſiers. This may be; but Paulus Jovius whom this Author follows moſt, in what concerns the learned Men of that Time, ſays no ſuch thing. His Words are theſe. Inter alarios equites deſcriptus, Nicolao Ralla Spartano duce in Italia militavit. I do not believe that Alarius Eques ſhould be tranſlated a Cuiraſſier.

(m) P. 179. The Printers, who have miſerably miſprinted the Proper Names in this Book, have put Marcilius for Marullus. At p. 161. they have put Trachamore for Tarchaniote.

(D) Of a reſtleſs Spirit, and that he could never find a fixed Place.] I will cite for this Two Authors: (a) Inquieto ingenio nullibi ſedem ſtabilem nactus, in curſu ſtudiorum ac itinerum ſemper fuit. (b) Nullius unquam principis liberalitate ita adjutus, ut in literarum otium ſe conferre poſſet. I know not whether one may oppoſe to their Teſtimony that of Crinitus. Let every one do as he pleaſes: Here it is in Verſe:

Et (c) gradum
Pierius ad ultima ſi Ter.,
Quæ noſter Medices Pecridum parens
Marulle hoſpitium dulce tibi exhibet,
Ac te perpetuis muneribus fovens
Phœbum non patitur tela reſumere
Laurens Camœnarum duces.

Marullus therefore had a good Mæcenas in the Perſon of Laurence de Medicis. Crinitus praiſes Marullus very much, particularly in his Næniæ de obitu Poëtæ Marulli.

(a) Jov. in elog. c. 28.

(b) Pier. Valerian. de infel. litter. l. 2.

(c) Crinitus l. 2. Poëmat. p. m. 828.

(E) He deſpis'd this Labour.] Mr. Varillas tells us (d) that Laurence de Medicis deſir'd Marullus in his Letters which are ſtill extant, to tranſlate the Moral Works of Plutarch, and that Marullus "had "ſo great an Averſion for that ſort of Work, "wherein omething of much greater importance, when he drown'd himſelf (F) in a River of Tuſcany blaſpheming againſt Heaven. This was (G) in the Year 1500. I have read in a late Book, that this misfortune was foretold him a long while before; but the witneſs who is alledg'd for it, ſays (H) no ſuch thing.

(d) Anec. de Flor. p. 179.

MASCARDI (AUGUSTIN) was a learned Man, and one of the beſt Orators of the XVIIth Century *. He was born at Sarzana † in 1591, and died there in 1640. You will find in Moreri, that he was Chamberlain to Urban VIII. and that this Pope founded for him a Profeſſor's Chair of Rhetorick in the College della Sapienza in 1628. He granted him †† for Life a Penſion of five hundred Crowns. If Maſcardi was always in want, and oppreſs'd with Debts, it was not ſo much becauſe he neglected his Buſineſs, as becauſe he diverted himſelf too much; for it muſt be confeſs'd, that his manner of living was not ſo highly eſteem'd (A) as his Wit. He was * for ſome time Prince

(e) Dum viclam qui olim Cecina licebatur. Pier. Valer. ubi ſupra.

(f) Anecd. p. 179.

(g) Cecina amnis ſolito inflatior fallente equum cæco vado violenter abripuit. Jovius ubi ſupra.

(gg) Pier. Valer. ubi ſupra.

(h) A great Confidence in that ſort of People makes a Man ſometimes as bold as Madneſs or Drunkenneſs.

(i) Don Secondo Lancellotti da Perugia Abbate Olivetano; in the Book entituled Chi l'indovinà è Salvio, l. 1. diſapanno 3. p. 64. he cites Paul. Cort. l. 1.

(k) Jo. Jovianus Pontanus diſcipulum habuit Marulum Conſtantinopolitanum hoſpitem meum, quicodem die quo à me Volaterris diſceſſit in amne Cecina ſubmerſus fuit, vir [illegible] ingenii tum judicii. Volat. lib. 38. p. m. 1462.

(l) Id [illegible] XVII. Kal. Jul. an. CIↃIↃCXI. (m) Labbe, Chron. [illegible] (n) Jugement ſur les Poetes. n. 1.44

" wherein one muſt, ſaid he, make himſelf a Slave " to the Sentiments of another, that it was im- " poſſible for him to finiſh the firſt Page of that " Verſion.

(F) He drowned himſelf in a River of Tuſcany.] It is that which runs by Volterra, and which the Ancients call'd Cecina. It ſtill retains the ſame Name, as Cluverius and Baudrand affirm, ſo that I cannot underſtand why Pierius Valerianus ſays (e), that it is now nam'd Sicla, nor why Varillas calls it the River (f) of Volterra. Paulus Jovius ſays, that it was more ſwell'd (g) than ordinary, that Day on which Marullus drown'd himſelf in it: But Valerianus ſays the quite contrary; and ſince he is more particular in this matter, he is more worthy of Credit than the other, and it appears, that he had examin'd the Circumſtances. Marullus, ſays he, perceiving that his Horſe was ſo plung'd with his fore Feet in the Water, that he could not diſengage himſelf, grew angry and gave him the Spur; after which he fell down with his Horſe, and having his Leg entangled under the Belly of the Beaſt, there wanted but little Water to choak him. (gg) Fluvium vel exigua tunc aqua fluentem ingreſſus, ſive equum potaturus ſive alia de cauſa tantillum immoratus, ſenſit equum anterioribus pedibus ita in arenas alvei ſemper infidi vorag- inoſas abſorberi ut emergere inde non poſſet .... modica admodum ejus proſluentis aqua ſuffocatus interiit. The liberty that Varillas takes in paraphraſing upon what he borrows from another, was ill-tim'd upon this occaſion. To turn into French the words of Paulus Jovius, ſolito inflatior he ſays, that the Rains had extraordinarily ſwell'd the River, and yet according to him Marullus paſs'd over the Ford. He muſt therefore, as any would think, have been Drunk or Mad; the Adverb extraordinarily ſhews it upon this occaſion. Let us not go ſo faſt: I remember I have read in a Book of Lancelotti of Perugia, that the Inhabitants of the Country advertis'd our Marullus not to paſs the River, becauſe great Rains had fall'n that Night. To whom he anſwer'd, that he was afraid of Mars and not of Neptune; for he rely'd (h) upon the Aſtrologers who had caſt his Horoſcope, and told him, that he ſhould be afraid of Arms, and that he would do well not to go to the War (i). Volaterranus (k) obſerves, that Marullus who had lodg'd in his Houſe, parted from him the ſame Day he was drown'd; and he ſpeaks honourably of him. Voſſius in his Treatiſe of the Latin Poets, would have that Day to be the fifteenth of (l) June 1511. I believe that this Error proceeded originally from the too haſty reading of a Paſſage in Paulus Jovius, wherein the Day on which Marullus died is ſet down in this manner. Eo die quo Ludovicus Sfortia captus ut Ferrara in carcere miſer expiraret, in ulteriorem Galliam eſt perductus. Some body not minding the Words narrowly, confounded the Day on which Ludovic Sforza was ſeized with the Day of his Death; and becauſe his Death happen'd in 1511, they concluded that our Poet died alſo in the ſame Year. The [illegible] was on the eleventh (m) of April 1511. Mr. Baillet follows (n) the Chronology of Voſſius, abating one Day.

(G) This was in the Year 1500.] The manner in which Paulus Jovius characteriſes this Year, does not ſuffer us to doubt that it was the laſt of the XVth Century. See the preceding Remark at the end.

Peter de St. Romuald is wrong by half a Century; for thus he ſays under the Year 1545. " (o) Michael Marullus, a Native of Conſtantinople, " who wrote very elegantly in Latin Verſe, in " imitation of Catullus and Tibullus, and who had " ſerv'd the Emperor Maximilian in the quality of " a Captain, drown'd himſelf in Toſcan; which " an Italian Poet deploring in his Epitaph, ſays " at the end of it, that if he was to loſe his Life " in Water,

" Mergier Aonio flumine deberet

" Which way of ſpeaking did not pleaſe the late " Mr. de Balzac.

Sandius refutes Voſſius by this Reaſon, becauſe Pontanus who died in 1503, or 1505, made Verſes upon the Death of Marullus. He obſerves that there are ſome who place the Death of Marullus on the 16th of May 1466, and he convicts them of Falſhood by the Epigrams of that Poet againſt Pope Innocent VIII. and upon the Death of Theodorus Gaza, and John Picus Mirandula. This Pope ſate in the See of Rome from 1484, to 1492. Theodorus Gaza died in 1478, and John Picus Mirandula in 1494. therefore the Proofs of Sandius are very good; and he had reaſon to reject the Opinion of thoſe who ſaid, that Marullus flouriſh'd in the Year (p) 1520.

(H) Says no ſuch thing.] To determine this Queſtion of matter of fact, we need only compare the Paſſage of the modern Author with the words of Pierius Valerianus, who is his Witneſs. (q) Suffocatus eſt Marullus in Tuſcæ amne Cecina fallente equum veſtigio. Miſerabile id leti genus multis annis ante illi prædictum fuiſſe, indeque ſemper aquas timuiſſe auctor eſt Pierius Valerianus in Dialogis de Literatorum infelicitate, qui rei veritatem ignorare non potuit, ipſamque adeo carmine quodam ſuo, multo ante Marulli mortem poſteritati palam fecerat. According to this Narrative we have not here one of thoſe Predictions made after the Event, which are ſo frequent, but a Prediction publiſh'd a long time before the event; which would therefore be of great moment, if the matter of fact were certain. Now let us ſhow, that Pierius Valerianus ſays nothing of the Prediction, and that his Verſes were made after the misfortune of Marullus. I have cited above (r) a long Paſſage out of his Tract de Literatorum infelicitate, the concluſion whereof was, aqua ſuffocatus interiit: After which words immediately follow theſe: Verum igitur fuit quod modo Petrus jam tum puer de Marullo cecinit. CAT. Quidnam? illud muſica recita obſero quonam libenter ejus cantilenas arripuit. Then the Verſes of Petrus are related, which run upon this Thought, That Marullus muſt not be troubled for periſhing in Water. The fear which is attributed to him reſpects only the time, in which his Horſe fell under him in the Cecina. But ſome perhaps may ſay, Petrus was very young when he made thoſe Verſes, jam tum puer; he made them therefore before the Year 1500; for according to Thuanus he died in 1552, Aged eighty three Years. I anſwer, that Thuanus is miſtaken. Imperial. (s) places the Death of Petrus in 1558. and makes him live ſix more than eighty one Years of Age. And thus he would have been but twenty three Years old when Marullus died. Now it is not without Precedent in good Latin Authors, to call one of that Age puer; and however it be, the Verſes of Petrus did not precede the Death of Marullus.

(A) His manner of living was not ſo highly [illegible] ] To this purpoſe I ſhall cite a Paſſage, whereby we learn that M. Scard. lodg'd always in other People's Houſes, and that Provifionary, and ſpent his Money with-

* Michel Giuſtiniani, gli ſcrittori Liguri deſcritti, p. 24. Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. 1 p. 113.

† A Town in the State of Genoa.

† Giuſtiniani, ib. p. 25

†† Giuſtiniani, ib. p. 24.

* Id ib. p. 25.

(o) St Romuald, Abregé du theſor Chronologique, tom. 3. p. m. 3 [illegible] See Balzac, Socrate Chretien, p. m. 228.

(p) Taken out of Sandius, Not. in Voſſium de Hiſt. Lat. p. 227.

(q) Not. ad Sannazari eleg. p. 191 edit. Amſtel. 1689.

(r) In the Preface, Col. Letter f.

(s) See his Muſeum hiſtoricum, p. 49.

Prince of the Academy of the Humoriſts; and he had a Paper-War with (B) Paganinus Gaudentius, and other Authors. He Printed at his own expence his Treatiſe dell' arte hiſtorica, and had loſt a conſiderable Sum by it, if Cardinal Mazarin (C) had not procur'd many Copies to be ſold at Paris. The Authors who ſpeak of him, and to whom Moreri refers us c, are quoted by Michael Juſtiniani γ.

There is in the Works of Balzac a certain Diſcourſe, wherein he ſharply cenſures (D) our Maſcardi without naming him.

MATMAN (RODOLPHUS) born at Lucerne in Switzerland, became a Jeſuit at eighteen Years of Age. He taught Rhetorick for twenty Years, and died at Munich September 18. 1612, after he had been thirty Years in the Society. He prepar'd many Books for the Publick δ. He wrote againſt Scaliger a little Book (E), which many People have attributed to Scioppius.

MAUSOLUS, King of (A) Caria, is more known as the Husband of Artemiſa, than upon any other account; although during a Reign of twenty four Years he had many ζ Intrigues, and became very formidable. After the Example of his Predeceſſors, he was much more inclin'd to the Party of the Perſians than to that of the Greeks; and it appears ϑ, that in favour of the Perſians, (but chiefly out of a deſire to enrich himſelf) he committed many Piracies upon the Neighbouring Iſles. He was one who took Money with both Hands, and gave no Quarter to the Purſe of his beſt Friends, but made (B) uſe of ſly Tricks to enrich himſelf at their Expence. He

c Inſtead of Maracci, Bibliot. Mariam, read in Moreri Maracci, Bibliotheca Mariana.

γ Ubi ſupra.

δ Alegambe, in Bibl. Script. Societ. Jeſu, p. 417.

ζ Diod. Sicul. l. 16.

ϑ In argumento Orationis Demoſth. contra Timocrat.

(g) Balzac's Letters to Conrart, p. m. 96.

(h) It contains ſcarce more than 20 Pages in the Edition of 1611, in 12°.

(i) Scaliger, confut. fabulæ Burdonum, p. m. 324.

without any Diſcretion. Utinam ſecundiore prudentia ac SANCTITATIS fama fuiſſet, nec in hac parte vitæ, ut fama eſt, claudicaſſet; profectò ad egregias ejus virtutes hæc quoque præſtantiſſima omnium laus acceſſiſſet. Sed homo in re familiari negligens, profuſus, nulla pecuniæ acceſſione ſuppeditare ſuis ſumptibus poterat; in ſuis nummis nunquam, in ære alieno ſemper: &, quod mireris magis, nunquam certis ac conductis ædibus habitavit, ſed incertis atque precariis (a).

(a) Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. 1. p. 113.

(B) A Paper-War.] In his Hiſtory of the Conſpiracy of the Count de Fieſque, he very often attacks the Relation of Ubert Folietta. He did the like in his other Books againſt ſome Writers; which was the reaſon why he alſo was attack'd in his turn. (b) Venendo eſſo parimente tacciato da Paganino Gaudentio, mi ſi dara motivo di far qualche reſſeſſione nel lebro de gli Accademici Humoriſti, per vedir quale di loro ſoſtien meglio le ſue accuſe. The ſecond Edition of his Hiſtory of the Conſpiracy of the Count de Fieſque, is enlarg'd with the Objections that were made to him, and his Anſwers to them. I know not whether his Anſwer to Brunor Taverna concerning that Hiſtory has been publiſh'd: The Abbot Michael Juſtiniani (c) read it in Manuſcript.

(b) Michael Giuſtiniani, gli ſcrittori Liguri deſcritti, p. 25.

(C) If Cardinal Mazarin had not procur'd many Copies] Among an infinite number of ridiculous things which are objected to this Cardinal during the Troubles of Paris, it was ſaid that he traded in all manner of Merchandize, and that he even made an Auction of Books in the Palace d'Eſtrée (d). Naudé anſwer'd in his behalf thus: " (e) I believe I have ſufficiently prov'd the contrary. But now to juſtifie likewiſe this ſale of " Books, which was the beſt and moſt decent way " the Cardinal could uſe, to teſtifie the care he " always took of learned Men; we muſt know " that the Sieur Agoſtino Maſcardi, who was accounted the beſt Writer of Italy in his time, " thought fit to Print in 1636, a Book of his " own making, entituled, dell' arte Hiſtorica " trattati cinque (f), in Quarto, and ſo thick, " that it contain'd near a Hundred Sheets; " and becauſe la Tavola di Cebete, le Pompe " del Campideglio, la Congiura dei Fieſchi, le " Proſe, i diſcorſi Academici, Silvarum ſive variorum " Carminum libro, IV. and in a word, all his " Works had ſold very well, he caus'd many more " Copies of it than of thoſe to be Printed: Where- " in he was ſo unſucceſsful, that the greateſt " part of the Copies were left in his Hands, be- " cauſe few People delighted in ſuch kind of mat- " ters. As he was complaining of this one day to " my Lord Mazarin, he offer'd to ſend ſome Bales " of them to Paris, where he had a Man to manage " his Buſineſs, who ſhould take care to ſell them " for him, and pay him the Money he took: " Which the Sieur Maſcardus very willingly accep- " ted of; and by this means he prevented a great " loſs, which was otherwiſe almoſt unavoidable. " I have this Story from the Man himſelf, who " manag'd at that time his Affairs in that City.

(c) Ibid. p. 27.

(d) See Naudé in his Dialogue de Maſcurat, p. 70.

(e) Naudé, ib.

(f) Naudé had conceiv'd a good Opinion of this Work. See his Bibliographia politica, p. m. 67.

(D) Who can be ſharply cenſures our Maſcardi without his naming him.] This is in a Diſcourſe which was Printed with the Socrate Chretien. It conſiſts of ſome Remarks upon divers Pieces: Thoſe which concern the Philoſophical Orator, point at him who is the ſubject of this Article. Of this Balzac informs us, in theſe words of a Letter which he wrote to Mr. Conrart, January 4th 1651. " (g) It is Maſcardi whom I mean, for certain very " ill things which I obſerv'd in him, before he " refin'd his Style, and form'd his Judgment.

(E) A little Book which many People have attributed to Scioppius.] It was Printed at Ingolſtad in 1608, in 4°. with this Title; Cornelii Denit Brugenſis tres Capellæ, ſive admonitio ad Joſephum Juſtum Burdonem Julii Burdonis F. Benedicti Burdonis N. prius Scaligerum nunc Sacrilegum. Scioppius reprinted it in 1611, with his Oporini Grubinii Amphotides Scioppianæ. Scaliger ſpeaks with great contempt of this little Book (h): Hoc mittimus, ſays he (i), ad Apoſtolum Japponenſem, retrimentum inſcitiæ, imparum Auctorem libelli de tribus Capellis, cujus inſcitia certat cum improbitate: quanquam non deſunt qui Furem Veſpillonis filium auctorem aſſerant. Theſe laſt words ſignifie that ſome attributed this Book to Scioppius. Mr. Placcius obſerves that this is (k) the Opinion of ſome Perſons, and refutes thoſe who ſhould deny it upon this Ground, that it is not in the Catalogue of the Writings of Scioppius. The Author of the Decas Decadum (l) cites a Paſſage of Scioppius, to ſhow that the Jeſuits of Ingolſtad are the true Authors of the Book De Tribus Capellis; but he knows not the name of the Jeſuit who wrote this Satyr, and he alledges a Paſſage (m) of Scaliger, which does not at all prove, as he pretends, that it was Martin Delrio. Mr. Baillet (n) has already obſerv'd, that Denius Burgenſis, Cornelius, is a diſguiſe for Ralph Matman; and ſince Alegambe affirms it (o) we muſt believe it.

(h) Scaligerana, Thuana, Perroniana, Pithœana, Colomeſiana, Naudæana, Patiniana, Vindiciæ Vindiciarum, Epiſtolæ Scaligeri, Epiſtolæ Scioppii, Scioppius de Stylo, Scioppius de Arte Critica, Scioppius de Arte Rhetorica, Scioppius de Arte Grammatica, Scioppius de Arte Dialectica, Scioppius de Arte Poetica, Scioppius de Arte Hiſtorica, Scioppius de Arte Oratoria, Scioppius de Arte Typographica, Scioppius de Arte Politica, Scioppius de Arte Militari, Scioppius de Arte Magica, Scioppius de Arte Cabbalistica, Scioppius de Arte Alchymica, Scioppius de Arte Aſtrologica, Scioppius de Arte Geographica, Scioppius de Arte Chronologica, Scioppius de Arte Architectonica, Scioppius de Arte Muſica, Scioppius de Arte Pictoria, Scioppius de Arte Statuaria, Scioppius de Arte Fabrili, Scioppius de Arte Nautica, Scioppius de Arte Venatica, Scioppius de Arte Agricultoria, Scioppius de Arte Coquinaria, Scioppius de Arte Medica, Scioppius de Arte Chirurgica, Scioppius de Arte Pharmaceutica, Scioppius de Arte Anatomica, Scioppius de Arte Botanica, Scioppius de Arte Chymica, Scioppius de Arte Metallica, Scioppius de Arte Mineralica, Scioppius de Arte Lapidaria, Scioppius de Arte Gemmaria, Scioppius de Arte Numismatica, Scioppius de Arte Sigillaria, Scioppius de Arte Gnomica, Scioppius de Arte Emblematica, Scioppius de Arte Symbolica, Scioppius de Arte Hieroglyphica, Scioppius de Arte Allegorica, Scioppius de Arte Metaphorica, Scioppius de Arte Proverbialis, Scioppius de Arte Epigrammatica, Scioppius de Arte Epiſtolica, Scioppius de Arte Dialogica, Scioppius de Arte Satyrica, Scioppius de Arte Comica, Scioppius de Arte Tragica, Scioppius de Arte Lyrica, Scioppius de Arte Elegiaca, Scioppius de Arte Heroica, Scioppius de Arte Bucolica, Scioppius de Arte Didactica, Scioppius de Arte Parodica, Scioppius de Arte Paradoxica, Scioppius de Arte Encomiastica, Scioppius de Arte Panegyrica, Scioppius de Arte Declamatoria, Scioppius de Arte Sophistica, Scioppius de Arte Logica, Scioppius de Arte Metaphyſica, Scioppius de Arte Ethica, Scioppius de Arte Politica, Scioppius de Arte Oeconomica, Scioppius de Arte Rhetorica, Scioppius de Arte Grammatica, Scioppius de Arte Dialectica, Scioppius de Arte Poetica, Scioppius de Arte Hiſtorica, Scioppius de Arte Oratoria, Scioppius de Arte Typographica, Scioppius de Arte Politica, Scioppius de Arte Militari, Scioppius de Arte Magica, Scioppius de Arte Cabbalistica, Scioppius de Arte Alchymica, Scioppius de Arte Aſtrologica, Scioppius de Arte Geographica, Scioppius de Arte Chronologica, Scioppius de Arte Architectonica, Scioppius de Arte Muſica, Scioppius de Arte Pictoria, Scioppius de Arte Statuaria, Scioppius de Arte Fabrili, Scioppius de Arte Nautica, Scioppius de Arte Venatica, Scioppius de Arte Agricultoria, Scioppius de Arte Coquinaria, Scioppius de Arte Medica, Scioppius de Arte Chirurgica, Scioppius de Arte Pharmaceutica, Scioppius de Arte Anatomica, Scioppius de Arte Botanica, Scioppius de Arte Chymica, Scioppius de Arte Metallica, Scioppius de Arte Mineralica, Scioppius de Arte Lapidaria, Scioppius de Arte Gemmaria, Scioppius de Arte Numismatica, Scioppius de Arte Sigillaria, Scioppius de Arte Gnomica, Scioppius de Arte Emblematica, Scioppius de Arte Symbolica, Scioppius de Arte Hieroglyphica, Scioppius de Arte Allegorica, Scioppius de Arte Metaphorica, Scioppius de Arte Proverbialis, Scioppius de Arte Epigrammatica, Scioppius de Arte Epiſtolica, Scioppius de Arte Dialogica, Scioppius de Arte Satyrica, Scioppius de Arte Comica, Scioppius de Arte Tragica, Scioppius de Arte Lyrica, Scioppius de Arte Elegiaca, Scioppius de Arte Heroica, Scioppius de Arte Bucolica, Scioppius de Arte Didactica, Scioppius de Arte Parodica, Scioppius de Arte Paradoxica, Scioppius de Arte Encomiastica, Scioppius de Arte Panegyrica, Scioppius de Arte Declamatoria, Scioppius de Arte Sophistica, Scioppius de Arte Logica, Scioppius de Arte Metaphyſica, Scioppius de Arte Ethica, Scioppius de Arte Politica, Scioppius de Arte Oeconomica.

(i) Scaliger, confut. fabulæ Burdonum, p. m. 324.

(k) Tres Capellæ.. Scioppianæ videntur nonnullis. Placcius de anonymis, p. 65.

(l) Johannes Albertus Faber, dec. decadum, n. 28.

(m) Taken from the Confutatio fabulæ Burdonum, p. 330.

(n) Baillet, Auteurs deguiſez, p. 547.

(o) Alegambe, Biblioth. Script. Societ. p. 417.

(A) King of Caria.] Aulus Gellius has obſerv'd, that Cicero gives him this Title, but that ſome Greek Hiſtorians give him one that is leſs honourable. (p) Mauſolus fuit, ut M. Tullius ait, rex terræ Cariæ; ut quidam Græcarum Hiſtoriarum ſcriptores Provinciæ Græciæ præfectus, Satrapen Græci vocant. I know not who they are that have call'd him the Governor of a Province of Greece. The word Satrapa, which is Perſian, is ſufficient prove, either that Aulus Gellius is miſtaken, or that it is not he who ſaid, Provinciæ Græciæ. Charles Stephens, Loyd and Hofman have rais'd no ill ſuſpicions about this Paſſage, but cite the laſt part of it, without changing any thing in it. Iſocrates (q) has given to Hecatomnus the Father of Mauſolus, the Title of Κεφαλὴ ἐπισάβμου, i. e. according to the Paraphraſe of Harpocration, Cariæ Satrapes. Mauſolus is call'd by the ſame Harpocration, and by Suidas ἄρχων Καρῶν, imperans Caribus, by Libanius Καρίας ὑπαρχος (r) Cariæ præfectus; but by (ſ) Polyænus, and many others, βασιλεὺς Καρίας, Rex Cariæ.

(p) Aul. Gellius, l. 10. c. 18.

(q) In Panegyr.

(r) Argum. Orat. Demoſth. proRhod.

(B) Made uſe of ſly Tricks] Read upon this Subject Polyænus (a). and Ariſtotle (b), and there you may ſee, that if on one ſide the Court of Perſia tax'd Mauſolus with great Sums, he knew on the other how to indemnifie himſelf and exact the ſame Sum from others with Uſury. In this he was more unjuſt than thoſe great Partiſan, who after they have (ſ) Polyænus ſtratag. l. 7. c. 23.

(a) Polyænus Stratag. l. 7. c. 23.

(b) Ariſtot. Oecon. l. 2.

He engaged himſelf for Money (C) in all ſorts of wicked Actions. We muſt not therefore wonder, that his Conduct was ſometimes contrary to the Intereſt of the Court of Perſia, and that by this means he brought himſelf into great Trouble *. He was much concern'd in the War which was call'd Confederate (D), and which begun in the 105th Olympiad, between the Athenians on one ſide, and thoſe of Rhodes, Chios, Cos and Byzantium on the other. It was he who contriv'd this League † againſt the Athenians. Among other Exploits he changed during this War the Democracy of Rhodes into an Ariſtocracy; but neither his Conqueſts, nor his good Mien, nor his Bravery, nor any of his Actions procur'd him ſuch an immortal Name  as his Wife did by the ſtately Monument which ſhe built for him, and by the tender and friendly Reſpect ſhe preſerved for his Memory; of which we have diſcours'd in the Article of Artemiſia. Mauſolus died the laſt Year of the 106th Olympiad, as we have ſhown in the Remarks upon the ſame Article. He had ſome Predeceſſors (E) whoſe Names we know, and ſome Succeſſors, whoſe Names are alſo come down to us. The Phyſician who cur'd Mauſolus, demanded a great Reward (F), but like a generous Man.

The Houſe of Mauſolus in Halicarnaſſus, was built with Brick, and lined with Marble. Pliny knew no Building more ancient than that which was adorn'd with this kind of incruſtation, and this made him conjecture that the Art of Sawing Marble, was an Invention of the Carians; which yet he does not affirm. This Houſe continu'd to the time of Pliny. See the Proofs of all this in the (G) Remark.

MAUSOLEUM. Thus the Magnificent Monument was firſt call'd, which Artemiſia erected to Mauſolus her Husband, and which was reckon'd one of the ſeven Wonders of the World. See a Deſcription of it in Pliny II and (A) in the Supplement

* See the Harangue of Iſocrates ad Philippum, in the place where he ſpeaks of Idrieus and his Brother. This Brother was our Mauſolus.

† Libanius in Argument. Orat. Demoſth. pro libert. Rhodior.

 See Lucian Dial. Mort. Diog. & Mauſ.

†† Plin. l. 36. c. 5.

have been tax'd cauſe their ſubordinate Officers to be deliver'd up into their Hands. You may ſee moreover in Ariſtotle, that under the King of Caria, it was very well known how to make an Advantage of the Lycians Inclination to wear long Hair. They invented a kind of a Tax which was very gainful. See alſo what I cite out of Ariſtotle in the Remark E.

(C) He engag'd himſelf for Money.] The words of Harpocration tranſlated by Suidas, are theſe; Φησὶ δὲ αὐτὸν Θεόπομπος μηδενὸς ἀπέχεσθαι πρᾳγματος χρημάτων ἕνεκα. De quo Theopompus ſcribit cum à nullo facinore pecuniæ cauſa ſibi temperaſſe. Without doubt theſe Words are taken out of the Hiſtories of Theopompus; but he took care not to ſpeak thus in the Elogium he made upon this Prince, which won the Prize that Artemiſia propos'd to the Orators, who would make a Panegyrick upon her Husband. Then for certain Theopompus made our Mauſolus a moſt accompliſh'd Prince, and adorn'd him with all ſorts of Vertues; and yet you ſee what he ſays of him in another Book. This double Mind and Tongue is an ill thing: Every thing ought to be ſuſpected in ſuch kind of People who divide themſelves into two Perſons, and think it lawful when they conſider themſelves as Orators, to tell ſuch Lyes as they would not adopt, when they write a Hiſtory, by which no Prize is to be got. This diſtinction is a plain Sophiſm, and is no better than that wherewith ſome would ſave the Honour of Procopius. An Author of private Memoirs, and a Writer of Hiſtory, are entirely and jointly reſponſible for all that comes from their Pen, when they are one and the ſame Writer. To conclude, altho' Vitruvius ſpeaks rather to the advantage than diſadvantage of Mauſolus, yet he hints in his words (c) the Extortions of this Prince. He praiſes the Magnificence, and the good contrivance of his Buildings, and the great Conveniencies in them

(D) Which was called Confederate.] Morери and Hofman have falſly imagin'd, that there are two Mauſolus's, and that he who was concern'd in that War, was not the ſame with him who was the Husband of Artemiſia, buried in the Mauſoleum. If they had taken the pains to conſult the Originals, they would have made but one Article, which ſhould have been for this Husband, and had been full enough without taking notice of his Wife.

(E) He had ſome Predeceſſors.] We read in Suidas(d), that Lygdamis Contemporary with Herodotus, was the third Tyrant of Halicarnaſſus after Artemiſia. Now altho' Herodotus does not ſay, that Lygdamis the Father of Artemiſia had been King of Halicarnaſſus, yet 'tis very probable, that ſhe was the Daughter of a King, and the Widow of a King. We may therefore go back as far as her Father, who at leaſt, according to the Teſtimony of Herodotus (e) dwelt in Halicarnaſſus. She had a Son call'd Piſindelus, whoſe Son was another Lygdamis, who drove away Herodotus from Halicarnaſſus. But he return'd thither (f) and drove away the Tyrant 'Tis very probable that Lygdamis the ſecond of that Name, was immediately ſucceeded by Hecatommus, whoſe three Sons Mauſolus, Idrieus and Pexodarus, reign'd ſucceſſively in Caria, (See the Article of Ada) but 'tis not certain that Hecatommus was the Son of Lygdamis. Who knows if Lygdamis, being driven away by Herodotus, recover'd his Poſt? Who knows but Hecatommus eſtabliſh'd himſelf by Uſurpation without being related to Lygdamis? One thing is very well known, that he was of (g) Mylaſſa, and ſetled there the Seat of his Royalty; and there alſo Mauſolus was born Vitruvius, who informs us of this, tells us moreover (h), that Mauſolus caus'd his Houſe to be built in Halicarnaſſus, becauſe he found that City excellently well ſituated. Ariſtotle (i) informs us of another particular. Mauſolus having a mind to raiſe Money upon the City of Mylaſſa, repreſented to the Inhabitants, that ſuch a City as theirs, which was his native Place, and the Capital of his Kingdom, ſhould not be without Walls, eſpecially ſince the Perſians threatned it. Every one contributed according to his Ability: But when Mauſolus had got the Money into his Hands, he told them that it was not yet the Will of God that the City ſhould have Walls.

(F) The Phyſician who cur'd Mauſolus demanded.] This was Dexippus, a Native of the Iſle of Cos, and a Diſciple of Hippocrates. He was deſir'd by Hecatommus King of Caria, to cure Mauſolus and Pexodarus, who were extreamly ſick, and given over by the Phyſicians. He cur'd them, but upon this Condition, that the King, their Father ſhould deſiſt from the War againſt the Iſle of Cos. (k) Ἐπὶ τούτοις ἰάσατο τὸ παῦσαι πρὸς κῶας (for it muſt be read, and not κᾶρας) τὸν αὐτῶ ἐπιστάντα πόλεμον. Eos ea conditione ſanavit, ut bellum quod tum adverſus Coos gerebat deponeret. Was not this very generous? Could there be a better Subject? Was not his Heart fill'd with Love for his Country?

(G) The Proofs of all this in the Remark.] They are contain'd in this ſhort Paſſage of Pliny (l) Secundum marmor in cruſtas neſcio an Cariæ fuerit inventum Antiquiſſima, quod equidem invenio, Halicarnaſſi Mauſoli (m) domus protinus ſic marmore cauta ut lateres tus parietibus. Vitruvius explains this more exactly. Halicarnaſſi, ſays he (n), Potentiſſimi regis Mauſoli domus cum Proconneſio marmore, omnia circumeunte ornata, parietes habet latere ſtructos, qui ad hoc tempus egregiam præſtant firmitatem, ita ſcobes operibus expoliti ut vitri perluciditatem æmulentur Lapis.

(A) In the Supplement to Moreri.] The Author Tranſcribed from Mr Chevreau, without confronting him with Pliny. If he had compar'd him with his Original, he might have ſeen (o), That the Front of the Mauſoleum was not a little broad than its

(c) Halicarnaſſi Potentiſſimi regis Mauſoli domus... Parietes habet latere ſtructos qui ad hoc tempus egregiam præſtant firmitatem — neque is rex ab inopia hoc fecit, infinitis enim vectigalibus erat fartus, quod imperabat Cariæ toti. Vitruv. de Archit. l. 2. c. 8.

(d) Suidas in Ἡρόδοτος.

(e) Herod. l. 7. c. 99.

(f) Suidas, ibid.

(g) Strab. l. 14. p. 453.

(h) Vitru. de Architect. l. 2. c. 8.

(i) Ariſt. Oeconom. l. 2.

(k) Suidas in Ἀξιοπ.

(l) Plin. l. 36. c. 6. p. 287.

(m) Quæ etiam nunc durat, ſays he, B. 35. c. 14. p. 749

(n) Vitruvius, l. 2. c. 8. p. 29

(o) Chevr. Hiſt. of the World, tom. 4. p. 36. Dutch edit. 1687.

ment of Moveri. Afterwards the ſame Name was given to all coſtly Monuments *. Thus the ſtately Monument was call'd, which Auguſtus caus'd to be built † during his ſixth Conſulſhip, between the Via Flaminia and the Tiber, to be a Burial-place for him and his Family; which Strabo has deſcrib'd to us in his fifth Book. It is alſo the Name which Florus  gives to the Monument of the Kings of Egypt, wherein Cleopatra ſhut her ſelf up and put herſelf to Death. The Latin Dictionaries of Lloyd and Hofman afford us many Authorities, which ſhow, that the word Mauſoleum was given by the Romans to thoſe Sepulchres whoſe Structures were Magnificent; but there are two Verſes (B) of Martial, which are not to be joyn'd with thoſe Authorities. The French Language has adopted this word in the ſame ſenſe with the Romans. We call the Monuments of the Kings of France Mauſolées. This word is alſo extended to the Repreſentations of a Monument, which make part of a Funeral Pomp, and laſt no longer than the time of the Funeral. Mr. Furetiere is in the right to call them Mauſolées; but he adds a thing (C) very uncertain.

MECCA, a City of Arabia, is not only famous as being the place of Mahomet's Nativity, and becauſe the Followers of this falſe Prophet go a Pilgrimage to it with great ſuperſtition, but alſo becauſe it had a Temple, which in the times of old Paganiſm, was no leſs reverenc'd among the Arabians (A), than that of Delphos among the Grecians. Thoſe who had the Government of this Temple, were very conſiderable at Mecca ††, and this ſhows the Error of thoſe who ſay, that Mahomet was of mean Extraction; for he was of a Family which had for a long time enjoy'd (B) the Government

* Μίμβος δὲ ἐλέω δή πέτρ μίγας ἢ ἐς καλασκευὴν πολυτελῆ τοῦ θανάτου χάριν, ὅτε καὶ ῥωμαῖοι μεγάλως δή τι αὐτὸν θαυμάζουσι τὰ παρὰ σφίσιν ἐπαγωνὴ μνήματα Μαυσωλεῖα ὀνομάζουσιν. Ea fuit operis magnitudo & ornamentorum magnificentia ut Romani valde illud mirantes magnificentiſſima quæque apud ſe monimenta Mauſolea appellarint. Pauſanias, l. 8. p. 205.

† Sueton. in Aug. c. 101.

 Lib. 4. c. 11.

†† See the Remark B

(p) Pliny, l. 36. c. 5.

(q) Harduin. in Plin. ib.

(a) Mart. Spect. init.

(b) Prideaux, Life of Mahom p. 100.

(1) Shareſtani. Goli notæ ad Alfraganum, p. 8 & 9. Makrizi. Pocockii Spec. hiſt. Arab. p. 110 & 111.

(c) Prideaux, ib. p. 97, 98.

(2) Abul Feda. Abul Faraghius. p. 102. Johannes Andreas, c. 6. Pococ. Spec. Hiſt. Arab p. 175.

extent from South to North, but on the contrary a little leſs. Patet ab Auſtro, ſays Pliny (p), & Septentrione 63 pedes, brevius a frontibus. Father Hardouin (q) ſays, that Dalecampius and Leo Allatius did not underſtand this Chapter.

(B) Two Verſes of Martial.] 'Tis an evident Miſtake to think, that theſe words,

Aere (a) nec vacuo pendentia Mauſolea,
Laudibus immodicis Cæres in aſtra ferant, prove, that by Mauſoleum, the Latin Authors underſtand in general a Magnificent Monument; for Martial ſpeaks there only of the firſt Mauſoleum.

(C) He adds a thing very uncertain.] He ſays, that the Relicks of a Saint were alſo call'd Mauſoleum. I doubt of it; for altho' Mr. du Cange has inform'd us, that in the lateſt Latin Authors Mauſoleum ſignifies ferctrum Sancti alicujus and Mauſoleare a Burial, it does not follow, that Mauſoleum has been ſo us'd in French; however he ſhould have given ſome Proofs of it.

(A) A Temple, which in the times of old Paganiſm, was no leſs reverenc'd among the Arabians, than that of Delphos among the Grecians.] Dr. Prideaux furniſhes me with this Compariſon; his words are theſe: "(b) As to the Temple of Mecca, and what "it was before Mahomet, all that is true of it, is "this. It was an Heathen Temple in the ſame Vene"ration among the Arabs, that the Temple of Del"phos was among the Greeks, where all their "(1) Tribes for many Ages came once a Year to "perform their Idolatrous Ceremonies to their Gods, "till at length Mahomet having forc'd them to "change their Idolatry for another Religion alto"gether as bad, made this Temple alſo undergo "the ſame change, by appointing it thenceforth "to be the chief place for the performing of that "falſe Worſhip which he impos'd, in the ſame "manner as it was before of that which he abo"liſh'd; and ſo it hath continu'd ever ſince." (c) From the beginning of his Impoſture he order'd his Diſciples, "to pray (2) with their Faces to"wards Jeruſalem, which he had uſed to call the "Holy City, and the City of the Prophets, and in"tended to have order'd his Pilgrimages thither, "and to have made it the chief place where all his "Sect were to Worſhip. But now finding that his "Followers ſtill bore a ſuperſtitious Veneration "to the Temple of Mecca, which had for many A"ges before been the chief Place of the Idolatrous "Worſhip of the Arabians, and that it would be a "very prevalent Argument to reconcile his Fel"low-Citizens to him, if he ſtill preſerv'd their "Temple in its former Honour, he changed his "former Law to ſerve his preſent purpoſe, and "henceforth directed his Diſciples to pray with "their Faces towards (3) Mecca, and ordained the "Temple of that place, which from its ſquare Form "was call'd the Caaba, (that word ſignifying a "Square in the Arabic Tongue) to be the chief "place of Worſhip for all of his Religion, to which "they were ſtill to perform their Pilgrimages as "in former Times." The Author had been ſaying, "(d) It was uſual among the People of the "Eaſt, of all the Religions, to obſerve one parti"cular Point of the Heavens, towards which they "all turn'd their Faces when they Pray'd. The "Jews, in what part of the World ſoever they "were, pray'd with their Faces (4) towards Jeru"ſalem, becauſe there they had their Temple; the "Arabians (5) towards Mecca, becauſe there was "their Caaba, the chief Place of their Heathen Wor"ſhip." The Order which Mahomet gave his Followers to turn towards Mecca when they made their Prayers, was in the ſecond Year of the Hegira: And ſince that time, adds Dr. Prideaux, "have we (e) all thoſe Fabulous Stories invented, "which the Impoſtor tells us concerning that Temple. "As that it was (6) firſt built in Heaven to be the "place where the Angels were to Worſhip, and "that Adam Worſhipped at it while in Paradiſe; "but being caſt down from thence, (for they "place Paradiſe in Heaven) he pray'd God, that he "might have ſuch a Temple on Earth, towards "which he might Pray, and go round it in holy "Worſhip unto him in the ſame manner as the "Angels went round that which he had ſeen in "Heaven. That thereupon God ſent down the "ſemblance of this Temple in Curtains of Light, "and pitch'd it at Mecca, in the place where the "Caaba now ſtands, which is, ſay they, exactly "under the Original, which is in Heaven: That "there, after the Death of Adam, Seth built it "with Stones and Clay, and that all the People "of God there Worſhip'd till the Flood, by which "it being overthrown, God commanded Abraham "again to re-build it, having ſhown him the "Form of the Fabrick in a Viſion, and directed "him to the place by his viſible Shechinah reſid"ing on it: That accordingly (7) Abraham and "Iſmael re-built it in the place where it now "ſtands: And that Iſmael ever after, living at "Mecca, there Worſhip'd God with the true "Worſhip; but his Poſterity afterwards corrup"ted with Idolatry, and prophan'd this Holy Tem"ple with Idols, from which he was now to purge "it, and Conſecrate it a-new to the true Wor"ſhip of God, to which it was primitively in"tended. And he did not only thus retain the "Temple of Mecca, but alſo the Pilgrimages thi"ther, and all the abſurd Rites which were per"form'd at them in the Times of Idolatry. For "theſe being the things which long uſe had crea"ted a great Veneration for in the Minds of the "Arabians, by adopting them all into his new "Religion, he made it go down the eaſier with "them" Add to theſe laſt words what ſhall be ſaid in the Remark F

(B) Which had for a long time enjoy'd the Government of that City and Temple.] They go as high as one Coſa, as Dr. Prideaux informs us "(f) "Coſa (8) was very famous among the Koraſhites, "for gaining to his Family the keeping of the "Keys of the Caaba, and with them the Preſi"dency of that Temple, which is the ſame to "which (d) Prideaux, ib. p. 96.

(4) Dan. c. 6. v. 10. Buxtorfii Synagoga Judaica, c. 10 Maimonides in Halachoth Tephillah. c. 1 Sect. 3.

(5) Abul Faraghius, p. 102.

(e) Prideaux, ubi ſupra, p. 98, &c. See the Remark F. of the Article Abraham.

(6) Shareſtani. Pocockii Spec. hiſt. Arab. p. 115. Sionita Appendix ad Geographiam Nubienſem, c. 7.

(7) Alc. c 2, 3 & 22. Al Jannabi in vita Abrahami Shareſtani. Zamach Sharidum ad c. 2. Alcorani Sharifol Edriſi Liber Agar. Johannes Andreas, c. 1.

(f) Prideaux ubi ſupra, p. 2.

(8) Abul Feda. Pocock. Spec. hiſt. Arab. p. 42, 50, & 342. Ecchelenſis Hiſt Arab. p., 1. c. 3. Foralitium Fidei, l. 4. Conſid 1

(3) Alc. c 2. Johannes Andreas, c. 2. & 6.

ment of the City and Temple. People did not fail to tell Stories concerning the miraculous Protection which Heaven (C) afforded to that sacred Place. The Inhabitants of Mecca liv'd in very (D) gross Ignorance, and yet they rejected the Visions and Doctrines which Mahomet taught them as ridiculous*. He was an instance of the truth of this Maxim, No Prophet in his own Country. He could never make his own Country-men relish his pretended Revelations; and both because they thought them impertinent, and because they† suspected he had a mind to destroy the old Religion, and to aspire to Tyranny under the auspicious Title of a new Prophet, they oppos'd his Designs so vigorously, that he was forc'd to  betake himself to flight; and it was only by way of Military Conquest, that he establish'd in that place his new Law. There was a sharp War between him and those of Mecca for six Years after he fled away: After which there follow'd a Treaty of Truce ‡, which was to last ten Years, but it continued only two; for in the 8th Year of the Hegira †† this Impostor accompanied with ten Thousand Men, march'd against Mecca, under pretence

(4) Zamachshari. Bidawi. Jalalani, &c.

(5) Prid. ubi supra, p. 38, 39.

(6) Alex. & Johannes Andreas, c. 2. Pocockii Spec. hist. Arab. 156. Disputatio Christiani, c. 12. Richardi Confutatio, c. 3.

(7) Al Bochari. Pocock. ib.

(8) Shareftani. Pocock. Spec. hist. Arab. p. 156.

(9) Shareftani. & Pocock. ib. hottin. Hist. Orient. l. 1. c. 1.

(10) Pocockii Spec. hist. Arab. p. 157.

(11) Elmacin. l. 1. c. 1. Bartholomæus Edeffenus.

(12) Pocockii Spec. hist. Hist. Arab. p. 157.

(13) Ebnol Athir Pocock. ib.

(a) Prid. ibid. p. 81.

(1) Abul Feda Al Masudi. Eccheiensis hist. Arab. part. 1. c. 10. Pocockii Spec. hist. Arab. p. 62.

(b) Prid. ib. p. 82, &c.

(2) Al Jannabi Ahmed Ebn Yusef. Eccheiensis Hist. Arab part. 2. c. 1. Pocockii Spec hist. Arab. p. 63.

(3) Abul Feda Al Jannabi Ahmed Ebn Yusef. Zamachshari Bidawi, & Jalalani in Comentar. ad c. 106. Alcorani. Pocockii Spec. Hist. Arab. p. 64. Gola notæ ad Alfraganum, p. 54.

(g) Prid. ib. p. 3.

(b) Ib. p. 4.

"which the Mahometans now make their Pilgrimage at Mecca, and was then as much celebrated for the Heathen Worship among the Arabs, as it hath since been for the Mahometan; and therefore the Presidency of it was a matter of great moment, as being a Station, which render'd him that was in it honourable through all Arabia. It was before in the Possession of Abu-Gabshan", who was so simple (g) as to part with it for a Bottle of Wine, in an unhappy moment when he was in a humour to drink. He had afterwards a mind to get off from such a prejudicial Bargain, and was supported by the People of his own Tribe; but both he and they were driven out of Mecca by Cosa. "(b) And "from that time the whole possession of Mecca remain'd to the Koraishites; and Cosa and his Posterity in a right Line down to Mahomet, had the Presidency of the Temple, and the chief Government of the City ever after." Cosa was Great Grandfather of Mahomet's Grandfather.

(C) Stories concerning the miraculous Protection, which Heaven afforded to that sacred place.] "(a) About 50 Years before the time of Mahomet, there reign'd over the Homerites an ancient Nation of the Arabs, lying to the South of Mecca, a certain King call'd (1) Du Nawas, who having embrac'd the Jewish Religion, Persecuted the Christian, which had been planted there for at least three Hundred Years before, and did the utmost he was able to extirpate it out of his Dominions." .....(b) This Persecution drove several of the Homerite Christians to fly into Æthiopia for safety; where making their complaints to the King who was a Christian, of the cruel Persecution of Du Nawas against them, prevailed with him to send Aryat his Uncle, with an Army of seventy Thousand Men for their Relief; (2) who having overthrown Du Nawas in a Battle, pursu'd him so hard, that he forc'd him into the Sea, where he perish'd. Whereon the Kingdom of the Homerites fell into the Hands of the Æthiopians, and Aryat govern'd it twenty Years. After him succeeded Abraham Al Ashram, who having built a famous (3) Church at Sanaa, the chief City of the Homerites, abundance of Arabians resorted thither to the Christian Worship, so that the Temple of Mecca began to be neglected, and the Heathen Worship there hitherto perform'd with so great Concourse from all Parts of Arabia, to grow into decay: At which the Men of Mecca were exceedingly disturbed. For they had the chief of their support from the great resort of Pilgrims, who came thither every Year from all Parts of Arabia to Worship their Heathen Deities, and perform their annual solemn Ceremonies unto them. And therefore to express their Indignation against this Church, which so much threatned their main Interest with total ruin, some of them went to Sanaa, and getting privately into the Church, did in a most contumelious manner defile it all over with their Excrements. At which Abraham was so incensed, that to revenge the Affront, he swore the Destruction of the Temple of Mecca. And accordingly, to effect it, march'd thither with a great Army and Besieg'd the City. But not being able to compass his end, (I suppose for want of Provisions for his numerous Forces in so desart and barren a Country) he was forc'd to march back again with Loss and Disgrace; and because he had several Elephants in his Army, for that reason this was call'd, The War of the Elephant; and the Æra by which they reckoned from it, The Æra of the Elephant. And to this War is it, that the 105th Chapter of the Alcoran, call'd the Chapter of the Elephant, doth relate; where Mahomet tells us, How the Lord treated them that came mounted upon Elephants to ruin the Temple of Mecca, and that he defeated their treacherous Design, and sent against them great Armies of Birds, which threw down Stones upon their Heads, and made them like Corn in the Field, which is destroy'd and trodden down by the Beasts. Where (4) the Commentators of the Alcoran tell us, That to preserve the Temple of Mecca from the intended Destruction, God sent against the Æthiopians great Armies of Birds, each of which carried three Stones, the one in the Mouth, and the other two in the two Feet, which they threw down upon their Heads; and that these Stones, altho' not much bigger than Pease, were yet of that weight, that falling upon the Helmet, they pierced that and the Man thorough; and that on each of them was written the Name of him that was to be slain by it; and that the Army of the Æthiopians being thus destroy'd, the Temple of Mecca was sav'd.

(D) The Inhabitants of Mecca liv'd in very gross Ignorance.] (c) Mahomet was "an Illiterate Barbarian (5), that could neither Write nor Read "But this was not so much a defect in him, as "in the Tribe of which he was, with whom it was "the Custom as to all manner of Literature, to "continue (6) in the same ignorance with which "they came out of their Mothers Bellies, unto "their Lives end. And therefore at the time when "Mahomet first set up for a Prophet, there was "not any one Man of Mecca that could either "write or read, excepting only (7) Winakab, a "Kinsman of Cadigha's, who having first turned "Jew, and afterwards Christian, had learned to "write Arabick in Hebrew Letters. And for this "Reason, the Men of Mecca were call'd (8) the "Illiterate, in opposition to the People of Medina, "who being the one half Christians, and the other "half Jews, were able both to write and read; "and therefore were call'd (9) the People of the "Book. And from them several of Mahomet's Followers, after he came to Medina, learnt to read "and write also, which some of them had begun "to learn before of Bassar the Gendian (10), who "having sojourned at Anbar, a City of Irak, near "Euphrates, there learnt the Art; from whence "coming to Mecca, and marrying the Sister of Abusophian, he settled there, and from him the "Men of Mecca are first said to have received the "Art of Letters. Among the Followers of Mahomet, Othman was the greatest Proficient herein, which advanc'd him afterwards to (11) be "Secretary to the Impostor. But for want of Paper "at first, as in a place where there was never before any occasion for it, they were forc'd to "make use (12) of the Spare bones of Shoulders of "Mutton, and of Shoulders of Camels, to write "on; which was a device anciently made use of "by other Tribes of the Arabs, who had Letters, "but wanted Traffick to accommodate them with "more convenient Materials for this Purpose, "and therefore their Books, in which their Poems, "and other Matters they delighted in were written (13), were only so many of those Spare bones tied together upon a String.

tence that it had broken the Truce, and very eaſily ſubdued it (E). He baniſh'd out of it all Idolatry, and in a little while after applied himſelf to other Expeditions. He went * a Pilgrimage to Mecca in the 10th Year of the Hegira, he entred into it on the great Day of that Solemnity. The People ran in crouds from all places of Arabia to ſee their new Maſter: He inſtructed them in his Law, after which he return'd to Medina, and died there the next Year. He had the Policy, during the Truce he concluded with the Inhabitants of Mecca, to command his Followers to go a Pilgrimage to Mecca. This was a Solemnity which the Arabians (F) for many Ages had held in great Veneration: He believ'd therefore, that by preſerving it, he would diſpoſe them the ſooner to ſubmit to the new Yoak he had a mind to impoſe upon them. And doubtleſs this thing had a good effect to his purpoſe upon the Inhabitants of Mecca, ſince they reap'd a very great advantage from this Religious Cuſtom, and an advantage which they ſtood much in need of, for they have the moſt barren and fruitleſs Soil that is in the World. I have ſhown above † the lamentable State to which their City was reduc'd in the IVth Century of the Hegira. It had ſuffer'd in the firſt Century of the ſame Æra , all that the fury of War uſually produces. Some Authors ſay ††, that Solyman

* Id ib.

† In the Article Abudhaher.

 See the Bibliotheque Orientale of Mr. d'Herbelot. p. 569.

†† Gabr. Sionita & Joan. Heſronita de nonnullis Oriental. urbibus, p. 19.

(E) And very eaſily ſubdu'd it. He baniſh'd out of it all Idolatry.] He march'd ſo diligently to this City with his Army, (d) that he was at the Gates of it "before (14) they were aware of his Deſign; and "therefore being totally unprovided in that Sur- "prize to put themſelves into a Poſture of Defence "againſt him, they found themſelves neceſſitated "to yield unto him. Whereupon Abu Sophian "taking with him Al Abbas, one of the Uncles of "the Impoſtor (who although of his Religion, had "it ſeems tarried ſtill at Mecca) went out unto "him, and by turning Mahometan, ſaved his life; "and the City, without any oppoſition, was ren- "dred to him at diſcretion. On his entry into "it having put to Death ſuch as had been moſt "violent againſt him, all the reſt, without any "further oppoſition ſubmitted unto him, and em- "brac'd his Religion. And therefore having thus made "himſelf abſolute Maſter of the Place, he immedi- "ately ſet himſelf to purge the Cauba of its Idols, "and Conſecrate that Temple a-new to his Religion, as "having reſolv'd ſtill to continue it in its priſtine "Honour, by making it the chief place of Wor- "ſhip for all his Sect. There (15) were a multi- "tude of Idols within the Temple, and as many "without, ſtanding round its Area, all which "Mahomet caus'd to be pull'd down and deſtroy'd, "and the place to be totally clear'd of them. The "chief among thoſe Idols were thoſe of Abraham "and Iſmael within the Temple, and that of Hobal "without. The reſt were of Angels and Prophets, "and others of their principal Saints departed, "whom they Worſhipped only as Mediators, in "the ſame manner as the Romaniſts now do their "Saints, and the Images which they erect unto "them. For the Arabians always held, that there "was (1) but only one God, the Creator and Gover- "nor of all things, whom they called Allah Taal, i. e. "the Supreme God, and God of Gods, and Lord of "Lords, whom they durſt never repreſent by any "Image. But being (as they held) ſo great and "high as not to be approached to by Men while "here on Earth, but through the mediation of "Advocates or Interceſſors interpoſing for them "unto him in Heaven; that Angels and Holy Men "Beatified might perform this Office for them, "was the reaſon that they ſet up their Images, "and built them Temples, and directed their Wor- "ſhip and Devotions unto them. And in this "did conſiſt the whole of the Arabian Idolatry, "which Mahomet now by deſtroying theſe Idols, "put a total end unto.

(d) Prid. ib. 126, & ſeq.

(14) Abul Farag. p. 103. Elmacin. l. 1. c. 1.

(15) Pocockii Spec. hiſt. Arab. p. 95, 96, 97, 98.

(1) Pocockii Spec. Hiſt. Arab. p. 107, & 108.

(a) Prid. ubi ſupra, p. 117, &c.

(F) To go a Pilgrimage to Mecca. This was a Solemnity which the Arabians held in great Veneration.] "(a) This was an ancient Rite of the Heathen A- "rabs, it having been a conſtant Uſage among "them for many Ages foregoing to come once a "Year to the Temple of Mecca, there to Wor- "ſhip their Heathen Deities. The time of this their "Pilgrimage (2) was in the Month of Dulhagah; "and on the Tenth Day of that Month was their "great Feſtival, in which the chiefeſt Solemnities "of their Pilgrimage were perform'd, and there- "fore it was called Ayd al Cabir, i. e. the great "Feſt; and alſo, becauſe theſe Solemnities did "chiefly conſiſt in offering up Sacrifices and Ob- "lations, Ayd al Korban, that is, The Feaſt of Obla- "tion; and the whole Solemnity, Al Hagah, i. e. "The Solemn Feſtival, in the ſame ſenſe as the He- "brew Word Chag, from which it is derived, ſig- "nifieth any of the three Solemn Feſtivals, on which "the Jews were thrice every Year to appear be- "fore the Lord at the Temple of Jeruſalem. And "from hence the Month in which this Feſtival "falls, is called among them Dulhagha, which is "as much as to ſay, The Month of the Solemn Feſti- "val. And that all might have free liberty ſafely "to come to this Feſtival from all Parts of Arabia, "and again ſafely return, was the Reaſon that "not only this Month, but alſo the preceding "and following were held Sacred among them, "in which it was not lawful to uſe any Act of "Hoſtility againſt any Man, as I have afore "ſhewn. (b) And therefore this Solemn Pilgrimage "to Mecca having been a Religious Uſage, which all "the Tribes of the Arabs had long been devoted to, "and was had in great Veneration among them, "Mahomet thought not fit to ruffle them with any "Innovation in this Matter, but adopting it into "his Religion, retained it juſt in the ſame manner "as he found it practiſed among them with all "the ridiculous Rites appendant thereto, and ſo "it is obſerved even unto this Day by all of that "Religion, as one of the Fundamental Duties of it. "For the Crafty Impoſtor taught them concerning "it (as he did of all the other Heathen Rites of the "Arabs, which he found neceſſary to retain) that "it was a Command from God to Abraham and If- "mael, annually to obſerve this Pilgrimage to "Mecca; and that it was given unto them on their "rebuilding the Cauba; and that at firſt it was "only uſed to the Honour of God in the coming of "all the Arabs thither once every Year, there to "Worſhip together before him in one Holy Aſ- "ſembly, in the ſame manner as the Jews were "after commanded thrice every Year to Worſhip "before him in their three Solemn Feſtivals at "Jeruſalem: But that in proceſs of time it be- "came perverted to Idolatry, from which he was "now commanded again to reſtore it to its pri- "mitive Uſe. And in the making of this Eſta- "bliſhment, he had no ſmall reſpect to his Native "City, that he might preſerve to it the ſame be- "nefit of this Pilgrimage, which it had before ſo "long enjoy'd. And in thus providing for the "Intereſt of that People in the very Religion which "he was a framing, he thought he might the eaſier "prevail to draw them over unto it. And in this "he was not miſtaken. For had he totally abo- "liſh'd this Pilgrimage, it being the greateſt Ho- "nour and Benefit which that place enjoy'd, and "by which indeed it did moſtly ſubſiſt; their In- "tereſt would have engaged them to that vigo- "rous Oppoſition againſt him, that in all like- "lihood he would never have become Maſter of "that City, and for want thereof have miſcarried "in the whole Deſign.

(2) Shaheſtani. Makrizi. Gobii notæ ad Alfraganum p. 8. & 9. Pocockii Spec. hiſt. Arab. p. 177.

(b) See the laſt Paragraph of this Remark.

This Reflexion is very judicious; there is nothing that does more prejudice Men againſt Innovations in Matters of Religion, than when they ſee that the change of Worſhip would put a ſtop to their Trade, and be Lucrum ceſſans, & damnum emergens. I know very well, that Superſtition alone is ſufficient to make a City obſtinate in retaining the Worſhip of its Idols: The hope of their Protection is ſometimes the only Advantage that is reap'd from them. The Worſhip of Idols is not always attended with Profit; the Artificers and Merchants do not always get by it, and it does not always occaſion a great Concourſe of Strangers man erected there an University about the Year 949 of the Hegira, and that the College which he built there, and the Revenue wherewith he endow'd it, were worthy of his Magnificence. Authors do not agree as to the ſituation of Mecca. Morery's Dictionary places it a Days Journey from the Red-Sea. Mr. Baudrand makes it forty Arabick Miles diſtant from it; and Mr. d'Herbelot three Days Journey. Some * place it almoſt under the Line, and others † in 21 deg. and 40 min. of North Lat. The uſe of Arms  is forbidden within its Territory, which is 6 Miles to the Eaſt, 12 to the North, 18 to the Weſt, and 24 to the South: But the Robbers laugh at this Prohibition, and rob where they can, which obliges Travellers and Pilgrims frequently to carry Arms in thoſe Parts, to ſecure themſelves from the Inſults of thoſe Robbers. An Author whom I have already nam'd affirms ††, that Mecca is ſituated near the River Betius, which is now call'd Chaibar. Yet a few Lines after he ſays, that all the Water of that Town was in the Well (G) of Zemzem, and in the Ciſterus where the Rain was kept; but that in the laſt Century it was convey'd from ‡* Mount Arafat by means of an Aqueduct, which coſt a great deal of Money. See the Remark G. I ſhall ſay ſomething of the Prince to whom (H) Mecca belongs.

* Id. ib. p. 17.

† See Mr. d'Herbelot. ubi ſupra.

 Gabr. Sionita & Jo. Heſron. ib. p. 20.

†† Baudrand, p. 696.

‡* Id. ib. He cites Gollius (it ſhould be Golius) not. in Alfraganum.

MEY

Strangers and devout Travellers, who leave a great deal of Money behind them. Without this kind of aſſiſtance, the Zeal of a People for their ancient Gods may inſpire them ſtrongly to oppoſe the extirpation of Idolatry; but it is quite another thing, when the publick Worſhip is a Source of Gain to private Perſons. Whence came that popular Commotion, which made ſo many cry out (when St. Paul was Preaching) Great is the Diana of the Epheſians? Was it not from the Remonſtrance of one (c) Demetrius, a Silver-Smith who made Silver-Shrines for Diana, which brought no ſmall gain to the Crafts-men? He aſſembled them and told them, Sirs, ye know that by this Craft we have our Wealth; and gave them to underſtand, that it was not only for their Profit, but for the Advantage of the whole City of Epheſus, to ſuffer no longer one Paul, who perſuaded and turned away many People, ſaying, they be no Gods which are made with Hands. From hence we may conclude, that the Inhabitants of Epheſus would have been more tractable with reſpect to the Goſpel, if their great Diana could have been taken away, without doing any Prejudice to their Gain, or to the Veneration which all the World had for their Temple. They would in ſuch a caſe have been infinitely more teachable by the Lectures of St. Paul againſt Idols. We muſt confeſs therefore that Mahomet found out a notable Device to draw in the Inhabitants of Mecca. He preſerv'd the Concourſe of Pilgrims, which was ſo profitable and glorious to them; he left their Temple in its ancient Privileges; he took care to indemniſie them: This was an excellent Remedy againſt the Veneration which the ruin of their ancient Idolatry might occaſion.

(c) Acts of the Apoſtles, c. 19. v. 24.

Note, That Dr. Prideaux in the place where he obſerves, that the Arabians had no leave to do any act of Hoſtility, during the Month of their great Feſtival, nor in the Month preceding or next following, adds this (d) as I have afore ſhown. I think he means that he has ſpoken of this, when in the Pages 85, and 86, he mentions the War, "in "which Mahomet (3) firſt entred the School of "War under his Uncle Abu Taleb, being then "twenty Years old. It was called the Impious "War, becauſe it proceeded to that heat and fury, "that they carried it on even in thoſe Months, "when it was reckon'd impious among them to "wage War. For it was (4) an ancient Conſti"tution through all Arabia, to hold four Months "of the Year ſacred, in which all War was to "ceaſe: And theſe were the Months of Mokar"ram, Rajeb, Dulkaada, and Dulhagha; the firſt, "the Seventh, the Eleventh, and the Twelfth of "the Year, in which it was obſerved with the "greateſt Religion among all their Tribes, to uſe "no Act of Hoſtility againſt each other, but with "how great Fury ſoever one Tribe might be en"gaged againſt another (as was uſual among "them,) as ſoon as any of thoſe Sacred Months "began, they all immediately deſiſted, and tak"ing off the Heads from their Spears, and lay"ing aſide all other Weapons of War, had inter"courſe, and intermingled together, as if there "had been perfect Peace and Friendſhip between "them, without any fear of each other; ſo that "if a Man ſhould meet on thoſe Months him that "had ſlain his Father, or his Brother, he durſt "not meddle with him, how violent ſoever his "Hatred or Revenge might prompt him to it."

(d) See above Letter b.

(3) Al Kodai. Al Kamus, &c. Pocockii Spec. hiſt. Arab p. 174 in Margine.

(4) Al Jauhari. Al Shareſtani Al Kamus Cazwini. Golius in notis ad Alfraganum. p. 4, 5, & 9. Pocockii Spec. hiſt. Arab. p. 174, &c. 176.

This Paſſage and the other don't agree together, one mentions four Months which do not immediately ſucceed one another; the other mentions three Months that follow one another.

(G) The Well of Zemzem.] Others call it Zamzam, or Zauzani, as I have ſhown above. This Well is one of the moſt ſacred Curioſities of Mecca. It is ſaid to be a Spring of Water which was produc'd under the Feet of Iſhmael, when he was dying with Thirſt. The Pilgrims are oblig'd to make uſe of this Water to waſh their Body and Head three times: They muſt alſo drink of it; and, if they can, muſt carry ſome of it away with them. (c) Poſtquam ſacellum illud, atque lapidem prædictam inviſerunt, ſe ad aliud intra templum ſatis amplum ſacellum conferunt, ubi puteus eſt dictus Zam Zam; & eſt inquit Jacub Ben Sidi Aali, fons ſeu ſcatebra quæ fluxit ſub pedibus Iſmaël dum gemeret ſitibundus, quam Hagar primo videns filio ait lingua Coptitica Zam, Zam, hoc eſt, ſiſte, ſiſte gradum. Ex hoc puteo multi ſunt qui aquam exhauriunt, atque dant peregrinis quibus præceptum eſt corpus & caput eadem aqua terſe lavare, atque ex eadem bibere, ſecumque ſi poſſint deferre. " (d) Mahomet, to render the Town of Mecca, the " place where he was born, more conſiderable, " to raiſe the Devotion of the People, and invite " thither a greater multitude of Pilgrims, be" ſtowed great Encomiums upon the Waters of " this Well. For there is a Tradition of him re" ceiv'd by the Kaliſe Omar, which ſays, that the " Water of the Well of Zemzem ſerves for a Cure, " and gives Health to thoſe that drink of it; but " that thoſe who drink plentifully of it, and " quench their Thirſt with it, obtain the Par" don of all their Sins. And it is reported of " Abdallah, ſirnamed Al Hafidh, becauſe he knew " by heart a great many Traditions, that being " ask'd a Queſtion about his Memory, he anſwer" ed, that ever ſince he had drank great draughts of " the Water of Zemzem to ſtrengthen it, he had for" got nothing that he had learn'd." Mr. d'Herbelot from whom I have theſe words, has collected many other Particulars concerning this Well. Conſult his Bibliotheque Orientale at the word Zemzem. I ſhall take from it only this: " (e) The Town of " Mecca continued a long time without any other " Water than that of the Well of Zemzem, till the " great concourſe of Caravans oblig'd the Kalifs " to build an Aqueduct, which affords now a " ſufficient quantity of it." This ſuppoſes that the Aqueduct is more ancient than Mr (f) Baudrand affirms upon the Credit of Golius.

(c) Gabr. Sionita & Jo. Heſronita de Oriental. urbibus, p. 19.

(d) d'Herbelot Biblioth Orient. p. 928. col 2.

(e) Id ib

(f) See the Text of the Article towards the end.

(H) Something of the Prince to whom Mecca belongs.] He is deſcended from Haſcem, Great Grandfather of Mahomet, and ſtyles himſelf the Head of the Haſcemeans. He alſo gives himſelf the Title of Scherif or Emir. He formerly held of the Soudan, or Egypt, and afterwards of the Turkiſh Sultans, but he always preſerv'd his own Dominion and his Power (g) Et quanquam olim Ægyptii Sultanorum, ac modo Othmannorum (h) pareat imperio, nunquam tamen ſuo dominio auctoritateque fuit ſpoliatus. The Grand Signor is ſo far from pretending to be the Sovereign of Mecca and Medina, that he calls himſelf their humble Servant. The Emir or Scherif of Mecca is commonly poor; although he has large Incomes, and receives many Preſents from Princes and Pilgrims; but he has always ſome Quarrels with his Brothers who aſpire to Dominion, and with the Arabian Beduins. He receives from the Grand Signor

(g) Appendix Geogr. Nubienſis ubi infra.

(h) i. e. as appears by the whole ſequel of the Diſcourſe, that he is under the Protection of the great Turk MEY (JOHN DE) a Doctor of Phyſick, Profeſſor of Divinity, and Miniſter at Middleburg in the XVIIth Century, wrote many * Books in Dutch. He wrote alſo a Latin Book † entituled Sacra Phyſiologia, wherein he explains the Paſſages of Scripture which concern Phyſical Matters. There are ſome who have ſpoke of that Treatiſe (Z) with a great deal of Contempt. This Author died the 8th ot April 1678, being aged fifty nine Years, as Witten obſerves in the 116th Page of the ſecond Part of his Diarium Biographicam.

* They are all collected in one Volume in Folio, Printed at Middleburg in 1681.

† Printed at Middleburg in 1661, and not at Venice in 1602, as Konig ſays.

MEYNIER (HONORATUS DE) the Author of a Book entit'led, Les demandes curieuſes & les reſponſes libres, which he Publiſh'd at Paris in 1635. He had born Arms thirty ſix Years ‡. This Book runs upon Political and Military Subjects, and contains ſome Reaſons and Examples which are not exquiſite, but however they are judicious. I have cited it ſometimes.

‡ See his Advertiſement to the French Nobility.

MELAMPUS, a great Sooth-ſayer among the ancient Pagans, was the Son (A) of Amythaon and Aglaia. He had a Brother call'd Bias, for whom he expreſs'd a great Affection upon two occaſions; firſt in procuring him a Wife, in the ſecond place in procuring him a Crown. Neleus ℭ who reign'd at Pylus in Peloponneſus, requir'd of thoſe who would Marry his Daughter, that they ſhould bring to him the fine Oxen of Iphiclus, which were fed in Theſſaly. Melampus to put his Brother in a capacity of making this Preſent to Neleus, undertook to carry off the Oxen. In this deſign he did not ſucceed, for thoſe who kept them made him Priſoner; but becauſe he Propheſied in Priſon, about ſuch things as Iphiclus deſir'd an explication of, he obtain'd as a Reward the Oxen he had a mind to ℽ. Thus he was the cauſe (B) of the Marriage of his Brother, and procur'd to him a Kingdom in the following manner. Being deſir'd to cure the Women of Argos of a furious Diſeaſe, he would not do it unleſs they would promiſe to give him half ℭ Pauſanias, l. 4. ſub. fin.

ℽ Id. ib.

Signor a third part of the Revenues of Egypt, on condition that he ſhall protect the Pilgrims of Mecca, and ſecure them from the Inſults and Robberies of the Arabians. (i) This I have taken from the Appendix to the Geographia Nubienſis. Mr. d'Herbelot affirms (k), "That the moſt ancient Original "of the Emirs or Scerifs of Mecca, as they are "now call'd, is that which is related by Ben "Schoulnah, under the Reign of the Aioubites, or "Princes of the Poſterity of Saladin, who reign'd "in Jemen in Arabia. For he writes, that at that "time, there was a Prince at Mecca and another "at Medina, who had the Title of Emir, and that "in the Year 633 of the Hegira, one Cotadah, the "Son of Edru, of the Race of Ali, of the Branch "of Haſſan, was Emir of Mecca." I remember, that during the laſt War (l), the News-writers of the Allies, publiſh'd from time to time, that the Affairs of the Turks went very ill in Aſia, and that Mecca had been taken from them. The News-Writers of Paris were vex'd at it, and declar'd in the firſt place, that it was not true, and in the ſecond, that the Conſequence drawn from it was not good, ſince Mecca does not belong to the Turk, and the Port gets no Revenue from it, but rather ſends thither Preſents and Penſions.

(i) Gabr. Sionita & Jo. Heſronita ubi ſupra ſive in appendice geograph. Nubienſis, p. 21.

(k) d'Herbelot ubi ſupra, p. 569. col. 2.

(l) I write this in October 1700.

(Z) Who have ſpoke of that Treatiſe with a great deal of Contempt.] Valentin Henry Voglerus accuſes him of collecting without Judgment the Opinions of other Authors, and of being too fond of Novelty. Another accuſes him of being a Plagiary. Here follows the Proof: (n) Induſtriam ſuam non approbavit Valentino Henrico Voglero, qui in ſuo commentario poſthumo de eodem argumento cenſet Malum non tam ſuam ſcientiam declaraſſe, quam alienas ſententias excripſiſſe, idque nullo fere delectu novitate præcipue opinionum pellectum. Quod judicium inclementius aliquanto videri poterat, cum in ejuſmodi ſcriptoribus aliter fieri vix oportebat, quibus non tam induſtriæ gloria quam legentis utilitas ſpectatur, niſi id reprehenſione dignum eſt quod Malus ex eo bonorum genere eſſe videtur, qui ſupprimendis autorum nominibus unde ſua exſcripſerunt, neſcio quam ingenii laudem affectant.

(n) Godofredus Vockerodt, in præfat. diſputationis de fœtura artificioſa Jacobi. This Book was Printed at Jena in 1689, in 4°.

(A) The Son of Amythaon and Aglaia.] See in the Remark A of the Article Amphiaraus, the Genealogy of Amythaon, which 'tis needleſs here to repeat. I ſhall only ſay, that Melampus's Mother, call'd Aglaia by Diodorus (o) Siculus is call'd Eidomene (p) in Apollodorus, who adds, that ſhe was the Daughter of Phorcus (q) the Son of Cretheus.

(o) Diodor. Siculus, l. 4. c. 70. p. 258.

(p) Apollod. l. 1. p. 45.

(q) Id. ib. p. 51.

(B) Thus he was the cauſe of the Marriage of his Brother.] The Narrative of Pauſanias which I have follow'd, does not agree with that of Apollodorus which I ſhall now abridge. Bias deſir'd in Marriage Pero the Daughter of Neleus, who was at the ſame time Courted by many others. Neleus told them, that he would not Marry her to any Man but to him that ſhould bring him the Oxen of Phylacus, which were kept by a Dog who no Man or Beaſt durſt approach. Bias implor'd the aſſiſtance of Melampus, who promis'd to bring him thoſe Oxen, after he had continu'd a Year in Priſon. He was actually ſeiz'd when he endeavour'd to commit this Robbery; he was loaded with Chains and made a cloſe Priſoner. He had already been near a Year in this Captivity, when he heard the noiſe of Worms eating the Beam of the Roof of the Houſe. He ask'd them how much was eaten of it; they anſwer'd, there remain'd but a very little. Thereupon he deſir'd to be tranſported to another place, which was done, and in a little while after the Houſe fell. Phylachus admir'd this, and knowing that Melampus was a very good Diviner, he ſet him at liberty, and demanded of him after what manner his Son Iphiclus might have Children: The Prophet promiſed him every thing that depended on his knowledge, provided he would grant him the Oxen. He us'd ſome Ceremonies to call forth the Birds; a Vultur preſented it ſelf, which inform'd him, that when Phylachus gelded ſome Rams, he had left near Iphiclus the bloody Knife; and that Iphiclus being ſeiz'd with fear, fled away, and fix'd the Knife in a Tree; that he muſt take it away from thence, and ſcrape off the ruſt of it, and make Iphiclus drink it ten Days ſucceſſively in Wine. Melampus did as the Vultur ſignified to him; Iphiclus became the Father of Podarces, and the Diviner brought to Pylus the Oxen which were to be given to Neleus, after which he caus'd the Marriage to be celebrated between Bias and Pero, and ſtay'd at Meſſena (a).

(a) Taken from Apollodorus, l. 1. p. 47. See alſo Homer. Odyſſ. l. 15. p. m. 462.

Let us obſerve two things from Pauſanias; one is, that in thoſe Ages (b) the greateſt care of rich People, was to have abundance of Oxen and Horſes. That this was the chief deſire of that Time, he proves, 1. By the Conditions which Neleus ſtipulated when he would Marry his Daughter. 2. By the Order which Euryſtheus gave to Hercules to bring him the Oxen of Spain. 3. By the Conditions of the Combat between Eryx and Hercules. The firſt, if he was overcome was to loſe his Kingdom, and if he did overcome he was to gain the Oxen which Hercules had carried away from Erythia. 4. By the preſent of a Hundred Oxen, which Iphidamas the Son of Antenor made to his Father-in-Law when he Married. The ſecond Obſervation from Pauſanias is this, that thoſe who Married their Daughters, expected a Preſent from their Sons-in-Law (c). This brings to my Mind how Saul (d) oblig'd David to bring him a hundred Foreſkins of the Philiſtines. But I muſt add, that Pauſanias has omitted ſomething, which hinders us from judging exactly in this Affair. By his Narrative it would ſeem, that it was the deſire of having fine Oxen, which was a ſign of Pompous Riches at that time, that mov'd Neleus to require of the Lovers of Pero, that they ſhould bring him the Oxen of Iphiclus. But the half the Kingdom of Argos. This Condition at first was deny'd him; but when the Diſeaſe increas'd, they return'd to him and promis'd him what he demanded: But not being ſatisfied with this, he would have them alſo reſign up to his Brother the third part of the Kingdom, to which they conſented. This Adventure (C) is differently related. He was the firſt * who taught the Greeks the Ceremonies of the Worſhip of Bacchus. He was not the Inventer of them, if we believe Herodotus, but he acquir'd the know-the truth is, it was another Paſſion which inſpir'd him to act after this manner. Part of the Eſtate of Tyro his Mother had been uſurp'd (e) by Iphiclus; he had a mind to have the loſs repair'd, and to be reveng'd upon the Uſurper. And therefore he deſir'd, that he who ſhould marry his Daughter ſhould do this exploit. There is ſcarce any fault of omiſſion, but makes a History deceitful: And this Fault is very common in moſt of the Relations of the ancient Mythology. The only way to make them good, is to joyn together the ſeveral pieces which are diſpers'd in divers Authors: Which Muretus hath done as to the Expedition of Melampus, and by this means has given us a compleat relation of it. Let us fetch from him thoſe Circumſtances which Pauſanias and Apollodorus have omitted.

(b) Ἐσπουδάκεσαν δὲ ἄρα οἱ τότε πλούτου τινὰ συλλέξεσθαι τοιοῦτον ἵππων καὶ βοῶν ἀγέλας. Fuit hoc præcipuum illis temporibus divitiarum ſtudium Juculentâ habere equorum & boum pecuaria. Pauſan. l. 4. ſub. fin.

(c) Ἔστι καὶ ἐπὶ τῷ δυγατρὶ ὅτι τὸς μνωμένους. A filiæ proci ſponſalitium munus depoſcebat. Id. ibid.

(d) 1ª Sam. 18. 25.

* Herodot l. 2. c. 49.

(e) See Muretus in Propertium eleg. 3. l. 2.

Melampus was ſerv'd in Priſon by a very good Man Married to a bad Wife: From the former he receiv'd a thouſand Civilities, and from the latter many Indignities. The Worms which corroded the Beam, having diſcover'd that the Houſe would quickly fall, he pretended to be very ſick, and deſir'd to be tranſported elſewhere with his Bed. The Husband went before, the Wife follow'd after; and as ſoon as his Bed was got out of Doors, the whole Houſe fell down and cruſh'd the Wife. The Huſband having learn'd of Melampus the whole ſecret of this Affair, acquainted Phylachus with it, who inform'd Iphiclus. The latter knowing the Skill and Deſign of Melampus, was very kind to him: You ſhall have my Oxen, ſaid he to him, provided you will enable me to get Children. The Diviner gave him hopes; he ſacrific'd, he obſerv'd from what Quarter the Preſages came: All ſorts of Birds came thither except the Vultur; but none of them could tell him what he muſt do to enable Iphiclus to get his Wife with Child. At laſt a Vultur preſented himſelf, and did more than all the reſt: He ſhow'd the Cauſe of the Barrenneſs, and then the Remedy. Phylachus, ſays he, being one Day angry with his Son, purſu'd him with Sword in Hand, and not being able to overtake him, he fix'd his Sword in a Pear-Tree, and there it continues from that time wrapt up in the Bark. You will find it in ſuch a place, take it from thence, and make Iphiclus drink the ruſt of it ten Days together in Wine. The fear wherewith he was ſeiz'd that Day, is the cauſe of his impotency; you may cure it by the Receipt which I have preſcrib'd (f).

(f) Taken from Muretus ubi ſupra.

This Narrative may ſerve as a Commentary upon ſome Verſes of Propertius, which deſerve a little cenſure, for a fault which Muretus did not perceive. Propertius having ſaid, that Love is a Paſſion which conſtrains young Men to endure all things, proves it by the impriſonment of Melampus.

PROPERTIUS criticiz'd.

Ac (g) veluti primo taurus detractat aratra,
Mox venit aſſueto mollis ad arva jugo.
Sic primo juvenes trepidant in amore ferores,
Deinde domiti poſt hæc æqua, & iniqua ferunt:
Thepia perpeſſus vates eſt vincla Melampus
Cognitus Iphicli ſubripuiſſe boves:
Quem non lucra, magis Pero formoſa coegit,
Mox Amythaonia nupta futura domo.

(g) Propert. Eleg. 3. l. 2.

This Example is impertinently alledg'd; for it was not the Love of a Maid, but Brotherly Kindneſs which induc'd Melampus to expoſe himſelf to the Diſgrace of a Priſon. Theocritus ſerv'd as a Guide to lead Propertius aſtray. He has plac'd Melampus alſo among the Examples of the Power of Love.

Τὰν (ὁ ἀγέλαν χ' ὡ μάντις ἀπ' Ὄθρυος ἄγε Μελάμπους
Ἐς πύλον· ἁ δ' ἐμάνη Βίαντος ἐν ἀγκοίνοισιν ἐκλίνθη
Μάτηρ ἁ καλὰ Μελάμπος ἀγήνορα πατρὸς ἀπ' Ὀθρυος ὄρευς
Ἐς Πύλον. Ἐν ἀμφιέλιξι δὲ Βίαντος μαῦτο
Πολυκάρυμα Πηρὼ μάτηρ σαφρονίοντος Ἀλφεσιβοίας.

(h) Theocrit. eidyll. 3. ſub fin. p. m. 25.

Inde (h) boves actos Melampus egregium ab Othry monte
In Pylum. In amplexu vero Bianiris jacuit
Pulcherrima Pero mater ſapientis Alpheſiboæ.

The deſire of ſhewing one's Learning hath extorted many impertinent things from the ancient Poets. Ronſard and many others in the XVIth Century have ſplit upon this Rock.

(C) This Adventure is differently related. I have follow'd the Relation of Herodotus, but here follows another. Prætus having diſputed the Kingdom of Argos with Acriſius his Brother, was driven out of the Country, and could not ſettle again but at Tirynthus. He had three Daughters who grew Mad, as a Puniſhment for an Act of (a) Indevotion. The Fury that ſeiz'd them was ſo violent, that they ran through the Fields with all (b) ſorts of Indecency. Melampus who underſtood not only the Art of Divining, but alſo Phyſick, promis'd to cure them, provided their Father would give him the third part of his Kingdom. Prætus finding that the cure of his Daughters would coſt him too much, would not purchaſe it at this price. They grew worſe and worſe, and the Diſtemper became contagious: The other Women of Argos were ſo tormented with it, that they kill'd their Children, and went into the Deſarts. The Evil encreas'd every Day, ſo that Prætus was willing to pay Melampus for the Medicine according to his own demand: But the price of it was enhanc'd, and he demanded another third of the Kingdom for his Brother. This was granted him; for it was fear'd leſt a refuſal ſhould engage him to demand a greater Recompence afterwards. He made choice of the moſt vigorous young Men to run with loud out-cries after thoſe poor ſick Women, who were purſu'd as far as Sicyon. The Eldeſt of the Daughters of Prætus died by the way, the two others were purged; Melampus Married one and Bias the other. Some time after there was born to Prætus a Son, who was call'd Megapenthes (a). We may obſerve, that 'tis ſaid, that Melampus, beſides part of the Kingdom (b), demanded in Marriage one of the three Daughters that he ſhould cure.

(a) Taken from Apollodorus, l. 2. p. 85, & ſeq.

(b) Servius in Virgil. Eclog 6. v. 48.

Another Relation of it is this. Under the Reign of Anaxagoras, the Son of Argeus, the Son of Megapenthes, the Women were ſeiz'd with ſuch a malignant Fury, that they ran up and down the Streets, and over the Fields. Melampus having cur'd them, found Anaxagoras ſo thankful, that he receiv'd from him two thirds of his Kingdom; that is, this Prince divided it equally with him and Bias. Since that time the Kingdom of Argos was poſſeſſed by three Kings, till the Poſterity of Melampus and Bias fail'd, of the former in the ſixth Generation, and of the latter in the fourth. The Poſterity of Anaxagoras at laſt reunited all the three parts of the Kingdom, and continu'd till Cylarabes, who died without Children. After which Oreſtes the Son of Agamemnon, invaded Argos (c). Thus you ſee there is a great difference in Chronology between Pauſanias and Apollodorus.

(c) Taken from Pauſanias, l. 2. p. 60.

Some think that the Diſeaſe of theſe Women, was nothing elſe but the Uterine Fury; which is the Opinion of Mr. Menjot (d). Their Fancy was ſo diſordered, that they thought they were Cows.

(d) Antonius Menjotius diſſert. patholog. parte 1. p. 122.

Prætidis (e) implerunt falſis mugitibus agros
At non tam turpes pendum tamen ulla ſecuta eſt
Concubitus: quamvis collo timuiſſe securim,
Et ſæpe in levi quæſiſſet cornua fronte.

(e) Virgil Eclog 6. v. 48.

However it be, the Ancients relate, that Religious Remedies were uſed to cure the Malady. Pauſanias ſays, that the Daughters of Prætus hid themſelves in a Cave, and that Melampus drew them out by virtue of ſome myſterious Ceremonies, and Expiations, and brought them to a Village call'd Luſi, where he cur'd them in the Temple of Diana (f). Ἃς ὁ Μελάμπους τελεταῖς τε ἀποῤῥήτοις καὶ καθαρμοῖς καὶ ἀγυιὰς χωρὶς ἀνέκαθεν Λυσοῦς —— καὶ ἱερὸν τῆς Ἀρτέμιδος ἱερὸν. Quas Melampus arcanis quibuſdam ſacris & expiationibus eductas in viam quæ Luſos nuncupant —— & ab inſania liberavit in Dianæ templo. We ſhall ſee hereafter (g) that he made 'em alſo take ſome Remedies.

(f) Pauſanias, l. 8. p. 252, 253.

(g) See the Remark G.

D) The

knowledge of them by the Converſation (D) he had with the Phœnicians. 'Tis pretended that he underſtood (E) the Language of Birds, and learned of them what was to come to paſs. Some ſay alſo, that the Worms which eat Wood, made anſwer to his Queſtions. And yet, thoſe who built him a Temple * after his Death, and who offer'd him Sacrifices, and celebrated his Feſtival every Year, did not attribute to him any kind of Divination †. I could eaſily refute the Argument that was made (F) uſe of to prove, that he certainly foretold future things. If the Poets had not made large Excurſions upon what concerns him, they would only have told us, that he was (G) an able Phyſician, and if Statius ſpoke Hiſtorically, we ought to

* He was in a City call'd Ægiſthena in the Country of Megara. Pauſan. l. 1 ſub fin.

† Καὶ θύουσι τῷ Μελάμποδι καὶ ἀγῶνα πᾶν ἔτος ἐπιτελοῦσιν· οὐ μὴν μαντεύεσθαί γε ὅτι δὴ ὀνειδίζουσιν αὐτὸν ἄλλοι τε ἄλλα λέγουσι. Melampodi ſacrum faciunt & feſtum diem quotannis celebrant: futura vero prædicendi neque è ſomniis neque ex ulla alia ratione ei ſcientiam tribuunt. Id. ibid

(h) Herodot, l 2. c. 49.

(i) Barthius in Statium tom. 2. p. 834.

(k) Plut de malign. Herodoti, p. 857.

(l) Pauſan. l. 7 p. 230.

(m) Barthius ubi ſupra.

(n) Diodorus Siculus, l 1. c. 96. p. m. 83.

(o) In the Remark C. of the Article Caſſandra, and the Remark B. of the Article Tireſias.

(p) Apollodor, l. 1. p 47.

(q) The Hierozoicon of Mr. Bochart B. 1.

(r) Cicero l. 2. de legibus, fol. 334. D.

(D) The Converſation he had with the Phœnicians.] I mean with Cadmus (b), and thoſe who accompanied him into Bœotia. I ſhall obſerve two faults in Barthius: (i) He ſays, that Plutarch affirms, that Melampus taught the Grecians many things that were borrow'd from the Egyptians. Plutarch does not ſay ſo, but on the contrary (k) blames Herodotus for ſaying ſo, and taxes him with a wicked Prevarication, for endeavouring to rob Greece of part of its Glory. You muſt know, that the Grecians did not confeſs, that they were the Diſciples of the Phœnicians in Matters of Religion. Pauſanias (l) had a long Conteſt with one of that Country about it. The ſecond fault of Barthius is, that he ſays Herodotus affirms, that Melampus brought from Egypt the Feſtivals and Worſhip of Bacchus. (m) De Bacchi ſacris ex Ægypto in Græciam allatis ab Melampode, non tamen perfectis ſcribit etiam libro ſecundo Herodotus. Herodotus does not ſay that Melampus made a Journey into Egypt, but on the contrary, ſuppoſes that Cadmus and his Companions who came into Bœotia, were thoſe who inſtructed Melampus. 'Tis not improper to ſet forth this kind of Faults, to ſhow, that 'tis not ſufficient to have the Authors that we cite before our Eyes; for if we do not examine them narrowly, even to the leaſt word, we ſhall make 'em ſay a thouſand things which they never thought of. Take notice, that I do not abſolutely deny, that our Diviner made a Journey into Egypt: I know that the Egyptians (n) affirm'd it.

(E) That he underſtood the Language of Birds.] I have already ſpoken of this (o) in other places, but I ſhall here ſet down the very words of Apollodorus. (p) Μελάμπους ἐπὶ τῶν χοιρίων διαλελῶν, ὅσης πρὸς τὴν οἰκήσιν ἀπῆν ὁρυιᾶς, ἐν ᾗ φωλεὸς ὄφεων ὑπῆρχεν, ἀποκτεινάντων τῶν θεραπόντων τὰς ὄφεις, τὰ μὲν ἑρπετὰ, ξύλα συμφορήσας, ἔκαυσε· τὰς δὲ τῶν ὄφεων νεοττὰς ἔθρεψεν. οἱ δὲ, γενόμενοι τέλειοι, περιπαίζοντες αὐτῷ κοινωμένῳ τῶν οἴκων ἐξ ἑκάστου, τὰς ἀκοὰς ταῖς γλώσσαις ἐξεκάθαιρον· ὁ δὲ, ἀγασθείς, καὶ γενόμενος παιδὸς, τῶν ὑπερπολιόντων ὀρνίων τὰς φωνὰς συνίει καὶ παρ' ἐκείνων μανθάνων, πρέλεγε τοῖς ἀνθρώποις τὰ μέλλοντα. προσέλαβε δὲ καὶ τὴν ἐπὶ τῶν ἱερείων μαντικήν· περὶ δὲ τὸν Ἀλφειὸν συνέτυχεν Ἀπόλλωνι, τὸ λοιπὸν ἄδοντι ἦν μαθών. Melampus cum rura ageret, ac pro ipſius ædibus quercus eſſet, in eaque ſerpentium latebra eſſet, occiſis a miniſtris ſerpentibus, cætera quidem reptilia congeſtis lignis concremavit, at ſerpentium pullos educavit: qui cum ad juſtum corporis modum ſuccreviſſent, ipſum jam dormientem circumſtabant, & ex utroque humero illius aures linguis extergebant. Tandem expergefactus, excitatuſque, ac perterrefactus, ſupervolitantium avium voces intelligebat, & quæ ab iis futura edocebatur, mortalibus prædicebat. per haruſpicinam præterea vaticinari ab iis didicit. Ad hæc Apollini prope Alpheum obviam factus, cæca cætera vaticinandi peritiſſimus evaſit. You will find many Remarks concerning this Faculty of Serpents in the Book (q) which I direct you to.

(F) I could eaſily refute the Argument that was made uſe of to prove.] The force of that Proof lies in this. The Reputation of this Diviner would not have laſted for many Ages, if he had not convinc'd the World by inconteſtable Experience, that he had the Gift of Propheſie. Permultorum exemplorum & noſtra plena eſt reſpublica & omnia regna omneſque populi, cunctæque gentes, augurum prædictis multa incredibiliter vera cecidiſſe: neque enim Polidæ, neque Melampodis, neque Mopſi, neque Amphiarai, neque Calchantis, neque Heleni tantum nomen fuiſſet, neque tot nationes id ad hoc tempus retinuiſſent Arabum, Phrygum, Lycaonum, Cilicum, maximeque Piſidarum, niſi vetuſtas ea certa eſſe docuiſſet. Nec vero Romulus noſter auſpicato urbem condidiſſet, neque Attii Navii nomen memoria floreret tam diu, niſi hi omnes multa ad veritatem, & mirabilia dixiſſent (r). This reaſoning is like the Objection which Cicero raiſes againſt himſelf in favour of the Oracle of Delphos. You may read it in (ſ) Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes, with ſome Reflexions which refute it. Thither therefore I muſt refer you for an Anſwer to the Paſſage in the ſecond Book de Legibus. There is in Cicero a Maxim, which might be brought to aſſiſt this Paſſage; he ſays, that Time deſtroys Fictions, but confirms the Judgments that are founded upon Nature. (t) Opinionum commenta delet dies, naturæ judicia confirmat. From whence it may be inferr'd, that the Oracles having continu'd many Ages, were not a Fiction. But let us refute Cicero by Cicero himſelf. He acknowledges in his ſecond Book de Legibus, (v) that the Art of the Augurs did not then continue: It had therefore the fate of the Opinions which human Wit brings forth, ſince time, inſtead of confirming it, deſtroy'd it.

(G) That he was an able Phyſician.] Apollodorus makes him the Inventer of Purgatives, and ſays, he uſed them in curing the Daughters of Prætus. (w) Μελάμπους——μάντις ὢν καὶ τὴν διὰ φαρμάκων καθαρσιὸν θεραπείαν πρῶτος εὑρηκώς—— (x) Ταῖς δὲ λοιπαῖς πυχάσαις καθαρσιῷ σωφρονῆσαι συνέβη. Melampus——vaticinandi cognitionc inſignis & qui potionandi expurgandique rationem primus invenit——reliquæ vero repurgatæ reſipuerunt. Servius (y) obſerves, that he was ſirnam'd Καθαρσίης, i. e. The Purger: But let us not build upon this, ſince the ſame Grammarian intimates, that the Purifications invented by Melampus, and uſed for the Daughters of Prætus belong'd to Religion. (z) Prætidas ipſe purgavit Inſtrationibus quas invenerat. hoc dicit, convaleſcente morbo, nec medicinam prodeſſe nec religionem. That is, by theſe words we muſt underſtand, that Diſeaſes in a certain ſtate are above the Power of Phyſick and Religion. Chiron is therefore repreſented there as a Phyſician, while Melampus is repreſented as a diſtributer of ſupernatural Remedies. But I will rather keep to Servius upon the Eclogues of Virgil, where we find Melampus repreſented as a mixt Perſon, partly as a Phyſician, and partly as a Prophet. He firſt appeas'd Juno, and then made the Sick take a certain Medicine. (c) Quas (Prætidas) Melampus—placata Junone, infecto fonte ubi ſolita erant bibere, purgavit & in priſtinum ſenſum reduxit. Note, that καθαρμὸς ſignifies not only a Purgative Medicine, but alſo that which we call an Exorciſm, or rather a form of Magical Words.

(b) Ceſſere magiſtri

Phillyrides Chiron, Amythaoniuſque Melampus,

There is a kind of Hellebore (d), which upon his account was call'd Melampodium. Which is a ſign that he made uſe of it, and one may very well believe that he did not omit it in the grand Cure, which was to purchaſe him a Kingdom. Yet Pliny intimates nothing of this, but makes Melampus appear only as a Prophet; for he does not attribute to him the Cure of the Daughters of Prætus, but ſays, it was aſcribed to a Shepherd (e) Melampodis fama divinationes artibus nota eſt. Ab hoc appellatur unum ellebori genus Melampodion. Aliqui paſtorem eodem nomine inveniſſe tradunt, capras purgari paſſo illo animadvertentem, datoque lacte earum ſanaſſe Prætidas furentes. If Voſſius (f) built upon this Paſſage, when he ſays, that our Melampus cur'd the fury of the Daughters of Prætus, by mixing black Hellebore with Goat's Milk, he has not faithfully related it, and he ſhould produce ſome Authorities for what he ſays. He is in the right to cenſure Peter Caſtellan and John Neander, for making Melampus poſterior to Empedocles. In this they were guilty of a miſtake; for Melampus liv'd before the Trojan War. As to the Writings we have under his Name, they are ſuppoſititious. We have Melampi ex palpitationibus divinatio, Printed in Greek at Rome in 1545. Ex nævis corporis divinatio, Printed at Rome in Greek the ſame Year, and in Latin at Venice in 1552. (Nicolas Petreius is the Author of that Verſion) and in Latin and Greek,

(r) Cicero de natura Deorum.

(ſ) Penſées diverſes ſur les Cometes, n. 45.

(t) Cicero de natura Deorum.

(v) Dubium non eſt, quin hæc diſciplina & auſ augurum evanuerit jam & vetuſtate, & negligentia. Itaque neque illi aſſentior, qui hanc ſcientiam negat unquam in noſtro collegio fuiſſe, neque illi qui eſſe etiam nunc putat. Id. lib. 2. de legibus ubi ſupra.

(w) Apol. l. 2. p. 85.

(x) Id. ib. p. 87.

(y) Servius in Virgil. Georg. l. 3 v. 560.

(z) Id. ib.

(b) Virgil. Georg. l. 3. v. 549.

(c) Servius in Virgil. Eclog 6. v. 48.

(d) Plin. l. 25. c 5. p. m. 389.

(e) Id ib.

(f) Voſſius de Philoſophia, c. 11. n. 19. p. m 84.

to believe that Melampus arriv'd to (H) a great Age. He left ſome Children * behind him. Heſiod † commended him in a Book that is loſt.

MELANCHTHON (PHILIP) Born at Bretten in the Palatinate of the Rhine, Feb. 16. 1497. was one of the wiſeſt and ableſt Men of his Age. He gave ſo early marks of his Capacity, that they begun very early to inſtruct him; which was done by the care of his (A) Grandfather by the Mother's ſide, more than by his Father's. He ſtudied firſt in the place of his Nativity, at firſt in a publick School, and then under a Tutor, when it was known that the Maſter ß of that School had the Pox. He was ſometime after ſent to Pforſheim, where there was a famous College, and he lodg'd with a Relation who was Siſter to Reuchlin. Upon this occaſion it was that he was quickly known to this learned Perſon γ, who lov'd him with great tenderneſs. Having liv'd there about two Years, he was ſent δ to Heidelberg ζ in the Year 1509, and there he made ſuch a conſiderable improvement, that the Sons of a certain Count η were entruſted with him to teach them, though he was under fourteen Years of Age. He has been juſtly reckon'd (B) among Illuſtrious Children. Being troubled that he was refus'd his Degree of Maſter in Philoſophy, and finding that the Air of Heidelberg did not agree with his Conſtitution, he left that Univerſity in 1512, and went ß Joach. Camerarius in vita Melanchthonis, p. m. 5.

* See the Remark H.

† Pauſan. l. 9. p. 576.

γ Id. ib. p. 7, &c.

δ Id. ib. p. 10.

ζ Melch. Adam. in vitis Theol. German. p. 328.

δ Id. ib p. 329.

η It was the Count of Leonſtein.

Greek with the Metopoſcopia of Cardan at Paris in 1658. See Lindenius renovatus, at p. 804. The Abridgment of Geſner's Bibliotheque informs me, that Melampus hierogrammateus ſcripſit de auguriis ex ſaltibus corporis, quæ Auguſtinus Niphus in librum primum de auguriis tranſtulit.

(H) Melampus arriv'd to a great Age.] Statius ſuppoſes, that Amphiaraus was aſſociated with Melampus for conſulting the Auguries concerning the War of Thebes:

(g) Solers tibi cura futuri
Amphiaraë, datur, juxtaque Amythaone cretus
Jam ſenior ſed mente virens Phœboque Melampus
Aſſociat paſſus: dubium cui dexter Apollo
Oraque Cyrrhæa ſatiarit largius unda.

(g) Statius Thebaid. l. 3 v. 451.

Melampus was the Great Grandfather of Amphiaraus: The latter had then many Children, and one among the reſt, who was Generaliſſimo of the Argivi ten Years after; from whence we may conclude, that Melampus had been very old. But the Poets make no ſcruple of Anachroniſms. Statius ſuppoſes in another place, that Thiodamas, the Son of Melampus, was choſen to ſucceed Amphiaraus in overſeeing the Augories. He repreſents him as the ſecond in that Art, but yet of ſo great modeſty, as oblig'd him to own himſelf unworthy of the Succeſſion, juſt as the Son of a great King is afraid in his Infancy, that he cannot diſcharge the Office of his deceas'd Father.

Concilium (h) rex triſte vocat: quæruntque gementes,
Quis tripodas ſucceſſor agat? quo prodita laurus
Tranſeat? atque eorum vittæ decus. Laudat maror, cunctis
Inſignem fama, ſanctoque Melampode cretum
Thiodamanta volunt, qui cum ipſa arcana deorum
Partiri, & viſas uni ſociare ſolebat
Amphiaraus aves, tantæque haud invidus artis
Gaudebat duci ſimilem, juxtaque ſecundum.
Illum ingens confundit honos, inopinaque turbat
Gloria, & oblatæ frondes ſubmiſſe aquarat,
Sequeque oneri negat eſſe parem, cogique moretur.
Sicut Achæmenius ſolium, gentiſque paternas
Excepit ſi forte puer, cui vivere patrem
Tutius, &c.

(h) Id. ib. l. 8. v. 275.

Would he have made ſuch Compariſons if he had known that Thiodamas was Brother to the Grandfather of Amphiaraus? Add to this, that Statius is the only Perſon, if I be not miſtaken, who gives ſuch a Son to Melampus. The Two which Homer (i) gave him, were call'd Antiphates and Mantius. To mention this by the by, the Father of Amphiaraus was the Son of the latter, it we may believe (k) Pauſanias. But the common Opinion is, that Antiphates was the Father of Oicles.

(i) Homerus Odyſſ. l. 15. p. m. 462.

(k) Pauſan. l. 6. p. 195.

(A) By the care of his Grandfather by the Mother's ſide more than by his Father's.] Since I do not pretend to favour one of 'em to the prejudice of the other; I ſhall now ſhew, why George (l) Schwartzerdt, the Father of our Philip, did not take care of the Education of his Son. He was taken up in the Affairs of the Elector Palatin his Maſter, whom he ſerv'd as Ingineer, or Commiſſary of the Artillery (m) Huic (avo materno) patre occupato negotiis principum, præcipua educatio & inſtitutio Philippi curæ fuit. Camerarius inables me to make uſe of the words I have quoted, for thus he ſays: (n) Orto pernicioſo bello inter Palatinos & Bavaros cognatos Principes cum Georgius patriæ ſuæ Principi Philippo operam officiumque quod debebat, fideliter præſtaret, impri[illegible]arum tormentorumque ratione adminiſtranda. I think that this Ingineer was at firſt a meer Gunſmith, who growing very skilful in his Art, came to be known and belov'd by Princes. He invented the moſt uſeful Arms, as well Offenſive as Defenſive, both for Turnaments and Battles. 'Tis pretended that Maximilian the Emperor made good uſe of thoſe Inventions in a Duel. This ſingular matter of fact I ſhall here relate, to excite my Readers to ſearch curiouſly into the Circumſtances of it. Read therefore carefully this Character of the Father of Melanchthon: (o) Ipſe Georgius & probitate, integritate, taciturnitateque & fide, etiam prudentiâ atque ſolertiâ, & quod admirabili artificio opera armorum elaborare ſciret, quibus & defenderentur contra vim adverſariorum in conflictu, & inſtruerentur ad hos percellendam ſternendumque qui manum ſive in acie cum hoſtibus, ſeu in ludis equeſtribus, cum ſuis (quæ exercitationes tum in aulis Principum ſtudioſiſſime frequentabantur) conſerere vellent: Harum igitur artium ille peritus, & iis virtutibus quas commemoravimus ornatus, in notitiam pervenit maximorum & potentiſſimorum Principum, iiſque carus fuit, in quibus nominaſſe ſatis ſit & Regem optimum & bellatorem Invictiſſimum Divum Maximilianum Imperatoris Friderici filium. Quem Georgius aliquando cum glorioſo provocatore Italo, cui nomen Claudio Batavo, certamine ſingulari congreſſurum ita inſtruxit, & ſi arma ipſius machinando paravit, ut fortiſſimo Viro Maximiliano voluntaria certa facile etiam & celeriter contingeret Claudius enim non diu repugnans, cum, quanto omnibus rebus eſſet inferior ſentiens, ad pedes Maximiliani ſe adjeciſſet, ita in poteſtatem ejus ſe tradidit. He was born at Heidelberg, (p) but he ſettled at Bretten by Marrying the Daughter of John Reuterus, who had been Mayor of that Town ſome Years. He died eleven Days after his Father-in-Law, the 29th of September 1508. His Widow did not Marry (q) till after ſhe knew that Melanchthon her Son was Married. She was in ſome trouble for it, and this diſcontent oblig'd her to Marry a Citizen of Bretten, about the Year 1520. She died the ſixth of June (r) 1529. Her Son George younger (f) about four Years than Melanchthon, ſurviv'd his Brother (t), and diſcharg'd the higheſt Offices (v) of his Country.

(o) Id ib. p. 2. & 3

(p) Id ib.

(q) Mater vidua manſit annis totis 12. poſtea cum Philippum duxiſſe uxorem audiiſſet, non ſine quadam offenſiuncula nupſit iterum viro honeſtiſſimo civi Brettano Id. ib. p. 5.

(r) Melch. Adam in vitis Theol p. 528.

(f) Camerarius ubi ſupra, p 4.

(t) Melch Adam in vit. Philoſ p 184.

(v) Camer ib. p 8.

That this Remark may not only become Hiſtorical, but Critical, I will add, that the Jeſuit Hambourg was to blame for ſaying (w), that Melanchthon was of a little Village in the Lower Palatinate, and of a mean Extraction. Which is refuted by what I have already ſaid. See alſo Mr. Sekendorf in the ſecond Book of the Hiſtory of Lutheraniſm, Page 158.

(w) Maim. Hiſt of Lutheran. B. 2. p. 181. Dutch Edition

(B) He has been juſtly reckon'd among illuſtrious Children.] The Chapter which Mr Baillet has beſtow'd upon him in his Hiſtorical Treatiſe of Children that became famous by their Birth or Writings, was due to him, and is very curious. There we ſee, that at the Age of thirteen Years he dedicated to Reuchlin a Comedy which he wrote all alone. This fact was unknown to me: I only knew what follows. This young Scholar being at Pforſheim, taught his School-fellows the ſeveral parts of a kind of a Comedy, which Reuchlin had lately publiſh'd. His Deſign was to Act that Piece in the Preſence of the Author, which was perform'd very handſomely: (a) Tunc & æqualibus ſuis ſcripſit quoddam ludicrum Reuchlini inſtar Comœdiæ ad finem ejus ſibi ſatis deſtruxit, & ſuaſuque went to see that of Tubingen *, where he stay'd six Years †. There he heard the Lectures of all sorts of Professors, and publickly explain'd Virgil, Terence, Cicero and Levy; and being very laborious, he found time also to serve Reuchlin in his Quarrels with the Monks, and to oversee a (C) a Printing-House β. He was moreover very much addicted (D) to the reading of the Word of God. He accepted in 1518, the Chair of Professor in the Greek Tongue, in the University of Wittemberg, which Frederick the Elector of Saxony offer'd him upon the recommendation of Reuchlin γ. He made so fine an Inaugural Oration δ, that he not only remov'd the Contempt to which his Stature and Mien expos'd him, but also rais'd great admiration of him. The Lectures he read upon Homer, and upon the Greek Text of the Epistle of St. Paul to Titus, drew a great crowd of Auditors, and rais'd in them an earnest desire of understanding the Greek Tongue ζ. One of the greatest Services he did to the Sciences, was to reduce them ϑ into a System, which was then difficult, considering the confusion wherewith they had been taught for a long time. There was quickly an intimate Friendship contracted between him and Luther ι, who taught Divinity in the same University. They went together to Leipsick in 1519, to dispute with Eccius. The following Years were to Melanchthon a complication of hard Labour; he wrote many Books, he travell'd to found Colleges, and visit λ Churches: But nothing cost him more pains than the task that was given him in 1530, of drawing up a Confession of Faith; which is call'd the Augsburg Confession, because it was presented to the Emperor at the Diet in that City. All Europe was convinc'd, that he was not so averse as Luther was, to an Accommodation, and that he would have sacrific'd many (E) things to the love of β Id. ib. & in vit. Theol. p. 330.

(a) Camerar. p. 9.

* Id. ib.

† Id. in vitis Philosoph. p. 186.

γ Camerar. ibid. p. 24.

δ Melch. Adam. in vit. Theolog p. 330.

ζ Id. ib.

ϑ Id. ib. p. 331.

ι Camerar p. 30, 31.

λ In 1527

(b) Melch. Adam. in vit. Philosoph. p. 185.

(c) Id. ib. p 186.

(d) Teissier, addit. to Hel. log. tom. 1 p 188.

(e) Scaligerana.

(c) Melch. Adam. in vit. Theolog. p. 331.

(f) Id. ib.

(g) Id. ib. p. 332.

(h) Privatim ac publice cum magna laude & admiratione docuit (Tubinga) & scripta quædam ceu primos fœtus ex quibus satis apparuit qui proventus in posterum expectandi forent, in lucem edidit. Id. in vitis Philosoph. p. 186.

(i) Erasmus, Præfat. in Theocr. apud Jo. Jac. Grynæum Epist. Select. p. 52

cuique partes assignavit, ut coram Reuchlino ad se revorso fabula ea ageretur. Quod etiam factum est cum summa ipsius voluptate atque lætitiâ. He might then be in his thirteenth Year, or he might be younger, for he stay'd two Years at Pforsheim, and went from thence to Heidelberg (b), where he was matriculated, October 13, 1509. Mr. Baillet adds, That he was entrusted to make the greatest part of the Harangues and Discourses of Eloquence, that were spoken in publick in the University of Heidelberg. This agrees with the words of Melchior Adam: (c) Scripsit jam adolescentulus professoribus in eâ schola orationes, quæ publice recitatæ sunt. Here follows a Passage which is not exactly true. " (d) at the Age of thirteen " he wrote a Comedy to the honour of Reuchlin. " He was but nineteen Years old when he pub- " lish'd his Rhetorick: The next Year he put " out his Logick, and in his twenty fourth " his Grammar. Immediately after he wrote " many Pieces of Theology, and at twenty six " Years of Age he publish'd his Common-Places, " which were equally esteem'd by (i) Protestants " and Catholicks: For being publish'd under the " Name of Mister Philippo di terra nera, and car- " ried to Rome, all the Copies were sold there." You have already seen what I have said about this Comedy to the Honour of Reuchlin; which I will not repeat. I only say, that Mr. Tiessier did not well observe these Latin words. (e) Anno decimonono evulgavit Rhetoricam; sequenti Dialecticam: vicesimo quarto Grammaticam, aliis deinde annis alia. These words signifie the Years of the Century, and not of Melanchthon; and therefore M. Teissier should have said that he was 22 Years old when he publish'd his Rhetorick, &c. 'Tis certain that he wrote many Pieces of Theology before he publish'd his Grammar; for he put out several Treatises of that nature (f) in 1521, three Years before his Grammar was Printed. In fine, 'tis false that he publish'd his Common-Places at the Age of twenty six, for he publish'd them (g) in 1521, when he was but twenty four Years old.

Note, that all the Pieces which Melchior Adam names, are posterior to his being Professor of Wittemberg. But we must remember what he says elsewhere, that Melanchthon (h) publish'd some Books whilst he was Professor at Tubingen. There is reason therefore to believe, that he was an Author in Print before the Age of twenty or twenty one, and so he deserv'd very well to be plac'd in the Catalogue of Mr. Baillet. I have read in the Parallel which Jacobus Grynæus made between the Prophet Daniel and Melanchthon, a fine Encomium upon the Latter. (i) Ardum immortalem, quam non ipse de se præbet, admodum etiam adolescens & pene puer, Philippus ille Melanchthon, utraque literatura per exactus? Quod inventionis acumen? quæ sermonis puritas? quanta reconditarum rerum memoria? quam varia lectio? quam verecunda regiaque pectoris indoles? festivitas? This is what Erasmus said in 1515.

(k) " And to oversee a Printing-House.] This Remark is, properly speaking, an Appendix to the preceding, for it relates to Melanchthon, as he wrote Books in his Youth: For to put in good order a confus'd heap of Collections, is in effect to make a Book. So Mr. Baillet thought; for having observ'd that Melanchthon k) " made it his recre- " ation to Correct the Printing-Press of the place, " he adds, that to such a Pastime we owe, among " other Books, the Edition of Naucleru at Tubin- " gen. It was a heap of Chronicles and Fables " bundled together among Histories in a strange " confusion. Melanchthon took the pains to purge " it, and to select out of it what was passable, " and put it in order; so that one may say, this " Book is the Work of Melanchthon." Camerarius observes, 1. That the labour of Melanchthon upon Naucleru, consisted, not only in putting things in order, and new moulding them, but also in inlarging them. 2. That the Corrector of this Book took upon him to Revise all the Works which Thomas Anshelmus should Print. (l) Librum hunc (Naucleri) exprimendum suscepcrat Thomas Anshelmus, qui Typographicam officinam habebat Tubingæ. A quo perfectum fuit, ut & illius scripti & aliorum, quæ a se ederentur, curam respectumque Philippus susciperet, quo prodirent correctiora. Is tunc & in hoc opere Naucleri partim disponendo, partim augendo, partim etiam retexendo id præstitit, ut lectio libri istius à plurimis expeteretur & fructu voluptateque non careret, Note, that this Edition of Naucleru was the first of all.

(b) Baillet's Enfans celebres, p. 132.

(l) Camerar. ubi supra, p. 16. See also Melch. Adam. in vitis Philosoph. p. 186, 187.

(D) Very much addicted to the reading of the Word of God.] He had a Copy of the Bible, which John Frobenius had lately Printed at Basil in a small Volume, which he carried always about him, and chiefly when he went to Church. Those who saw that during the celebration of the Divine Offices, he held always in his Hands a Book much larger than a Primer, believ'd that he was reading quite another thing than what the Time and Place requir'd of him His envious Enemies took occasion from hence to defame him. This is what we learn from Camerarius (m). Another Author (n) observes, that Reuchlin made him a present of that Bible.

(m) Camer. ubi supra, p. 15.

(n) Melch. Adam. in vitis Philosoph. p. 185.

(E) Would have sacrificed many things to the love of Peace.] This appears chiefly by the Book he wrote concerning things indifferent, which was so ill receiv'd by the Faction of Illyricus. (a) Suaserat Philippus de Adiaphoris ne scrupulose contenderent, modo nihil idololatria illatum ac ceremoniæ haberent adjunctum, & festivitatem aliquam, quæ sine impietate fit, sustinendam. Illyricus on the contrary cry'd out, that People should rather desert all the Churches, and threaten to make an Insurrection, than to bear a Surplice. (b) Contra Flacius vociferabatur potius cessitatum faciendam in templis, & principes motu seditionum terrendo, quam saltem linea vestis admittatur. Some Romish Catholicks have been inspir'd with the same Spirit, if we may believe the anonymous Author of a Letter publish'd by Mr. Jurieu. " I inquir'd, says he, as much as possibly " I could, whether a Protestant would be receiv'd " into the Romish Communion, upon the Bishop of " Meaux his Explication of the Romish Doctrine, as " it is made use of to instruct those who seek to

(a) Id. ib. p. 195.

(b) Id. ib. p. 196

(c) Suite du Preservatif contre le changement de Religion. p. 173. of the Hague edit. 1683.

of Peace. Wherefore Francis I. judged him a proper Perſon to appeaſe the Diſſentions about Religion in his Kingdom, and deſir'd him to (F) come thither. The King of England * wiſh'd alſo to ſee him, but neither of theſe two Monarchs did ever ſee him. Since I have a mind to mention but ſome of his chief Actions, I ſhall only ſay, that in 1541, he aſſiſted at the Conferences of Ratisbon, where the Controverſies between the Catholicks and Proteſtants were warmly diſputed, and that in 1543, he waited upon the Archbiſhop of Cologne, to aſſiſt him in introducing a Reformation into his Dioceſs, which turn'd to no account. The Affair of the Interim took up much of his time. He was preſent at † ſeven Conferences upon this Subject in 1548, and wrote all the Pieces that were preſented there, and the Cenſure of that Interim. He was one of the Deputies whom Maurice, Elector of Saxony, was to ſend to the Council of Trent in 1552. He waited ſome time at Nuremberg for a ſafe Conduct, but becauſe of the War which then begun to break forth, he return'd from thence to Wittemberg ß. His laſt Conference with the Doctors of the Romiſh Communion was at Worms, in 1557; and of all the Diſſentions which broke his Heart, there was none more violent than that which was rais'd by Flacius Illyricus. He died at Wittemberg April 19th, 1560. which was the 63d Day γ of his 64th Year. He was buried near Luther in the Church of the Caſtle, two Days after. His Funeral Oration was ſpoken by Winſhemius, a Doctor of Phyſick, and Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue. The Teſtimonies of Piety with which he ended his Days, were admirable ∫; and 'tis obſervable, that one thing which made him look upon Death as a Happineſs, was, that it deliver'd

* Melch. Adam in vit Theo. p. 336.
† Id. ib. p. 343.
ß Id. ib p. 343, 346.
γ Ætatis ſuæ climacterico cum diebus lxiii. egreſſus. Thuan. lib. 26. ſub fin. p. m. 538.
∫ See Melchior Adam in vit. Philoſ p 202.

" comply with the Times. Every one told me no, " and ſome Body added that no Abjuration was to " be ſign'd, but that in which all the Romiſh Superſtitions were included. Theſe are the very " words he made uſe of. This calls to my Mind " what a Jeſuit ſaid, that he would not put out a " Torch tho' it were to convert all the Huguenots.

What Melanchthon ſaid to his Mother, plainly ſhews, that he hated Diſputes in Religion, and that nothing could engage him in them, but the neceſſity of acting the Part he was to act in the World. Being gone to the Conferences at Spire in 1529, he made a little Journey to Bretten, to ſee his Mother. This good Woman ask'd him what ſhe muſt believe among ſo many Diſputations, and repeated to him the Prayers ſhe was wont to make, and which contain'd nothing that was ſuperſtitious. Continue, ſaid he, to believe and pray as you have done hitherto, and never trouble your ſelf about Controverſies. (d) Ab ea cum interrogatus eſſet: quid ſibi in ejuſmodi controverſiis credendum? reſpondit, auditis illius precibus, quæ nihil ſuperſtitionis habebant, ut pergeret hoc credere & orare quod credidiſſet & oraſſet hactenus: nec pateretur ſe turbari conflictibus diſputationum. This refutes invincibly a ſilly Story which Florimond de Remond publiſh'd. 'Tis written, ſays he (e), that Melanchthon being at the point of Death in 1560, his Mother being loaded with Years diſcourſed to him after this manner: " (1) My Son you ſeem to me to be " at the point of Death, and to be leaving this World, " to go and give an account to the great Judge of what " you have done. You know I was a Catholick, and " you induc'd me to change my Religion, and to aſſume " one that is different from that of my fore Fathers. " Now I adjure you by the Living God, to tell me pre- " ſently, which of them is the beſt, and do not con- " ceal this from me. Ha! ſaid Melanchthon, the " new Doctrine is more plauſible, but the old is more " ſafe and certain: And turning himſelf about he ſaid " aloud, Hæc plauſibilior, illa ſecurior." 'Tis falſe, that Melanchthon induc'd his Mother to change her Religion, and 'tis certain that the death of this Woman preceded her Son's more than thirty Years.

(d) Melch. Adam. in vit. Theo. p. 333.

(e) Florimond de Remond Hiſt. of the Birth and Progreſs of Hereſie, B. 2. c. 9. p. m 186, 187.

(1) See Morus, l. 2. de Miſſ. & Francis Montagnes, in his Book entituled, la verité defendue.

(F) Francis I. thought him a proper Perſon ——— and deſir'd him to come into France ] Let us relate the Paraphraſe which Maimbourg has made upon the Narrative of Florimond de Remond. " (f) The " Queen of Navarre, who knew that her Brother " the King paſſionately deſir'd the Peace of the " Church, hop'd ſhe might lay hold of him by " that means: For that end ſhe often talk'd to " him of one very good Man, as ſhe ſaid, who " was call'd Philip Melanchthon, whom ſhe was " continually praiſing to him as the moſt learned " Man of his time, who does not indeed approve, " added ſhe very dextrouſly, certain Abuſes which " are manifeſtly to be ſeen in the Doctrine, Manners and Diſcipline of the Chriſtians of theſe " laſt Ages; but then he deteſts the Schiſm " which has been made upon this occaſion in " Germany, and which he has always endeavour'd " to extinguiſh by all ſorts of means. She aſſur'd " him that he was a peaceable Man, of a mild " Spirit, who had nothing of that fierce and vio- " lent Spirit of Luther and Zuinglius, one who had " always endeavour'd to reconcile them among " themſelves, and with the Catholicks, that he " might re-unite all Mens Minds in one and the " ſame Belief, and reſtore to the Church Peace " and Union, for which he ſigh'd continually; " that ſhe did not doubt but if ſo holy and able a " Man could confer with the Doctors of the Sor- " bonne, who deſir'd alſo nothing but Peace, they " would quickly find the means of procuring it " to the Church, and of deſtroying a Schiſm, " which might eaſily extend it ſelf from Germany " into France, and produce there the ſame Trou- " bles and Diſorders, which were to be ſeen in the " Empire. In fine, ſhe told him ſo many things " to Melanchthon's Advantage, and gave him ſo " great Hopes of being able to put an end by this " means to the Differences which begun to ariſe " in France as well as in Germany, about many Ar- " ticles of Religion, that he was perſuaded to it. " Whereupon this Prince, who otherwiſe had a " great deſire to bring into France the ableſt Men " of his Time, wrote to (2) Melanchthon, and invited " him to come to Paris, to join his Endeavours " with our Divines to reſtore the ancient Policy " of the Church." He relates afterwards how the Cardinal of Tournon warded off the Blow, and perſuaded the King (g) to revoke ſuddenly the leave he had granted to Philip Melanchthon. In fine, he affirms, that this Change at firſt aſtoniſh'd the Hereticks; but that as ſoon as they had recover'd themſelves from this Aſtoniſhment ——— they had the confidence to poſt up Placards full of Blaſphemies at the Gates of the Louvre, and even at the King's Chamber Door. You ſee how this Jeſuit relates theſe things. 1. The Queen of Navarre perſuaded the King to ſend for Melanchthon. 2. The King wrote to this Doctor. 3. The Cardinal of Tournon chang'd this Deſign of the King. 4. The Innovators ſet up Placards. 5. Theſe four things happen'd in the Year 1534. Florimond de Remond places them in the ſame Order. Now I will ſhew that they are miſtaken, and I am much ſurpriz'd that Beza ſhould lie under the ſame Miſtake; he ſays alſo (h), that the buſineſs of the Placards was poſterior to the Reſolution which Francis I. had taken to ſend for Melanchthon. Note, that he obſerves that thoſe Placards were fix'd up in the Month of November 1534.

(f) Maim. Hiſt. of Calviniſm, b. 1. p. 25. at the Year 1534.

(2) Epiſt. Franciſc. Reg ad Phil Melanc apud Flor Rem. l 7. c. 4.

(g) Id ib p 29

(h) Beza Hiſt Eccleſiaſt b. 1 p 15, 16.

Here follows a better Chronology of all theſe Matters of Fact. The Placards were affix'd at the time obſerv'd by Theodorus Beza. Francis I. aſſiſted at a famous Proceſſion January 21, 1535. and cauſed ſome Hereticks to be burnt. Melanchthon was exhorted (i) to endeavour to mitigate the King's Anger: He wrote a Letter to John Sturmius, who was then in France, and another to John du Bellai Biſhop of Paris. A Gentleman (k) whom Francis I. had ſent into Germany, ſpoke to Philip Melanchthon (l) of a Journey to France, and aſſur'd him, that the King would write to him about it himſelf, and would furniſh him with all liver'd him from (G) Theological Perſecutions. He Married * to a Daughter of a Burgomaſter of Wittemburg, in 1520, who died in 1557. He had two Sons (H) and two Daughters by her. Since, the Deſcription of his good moral Qualities may be found in a Book † more eaſie to be conſulted than this Dictionary, I ſhall ſay nothing of them. But I will add to what has been ſaid, that he was credulous, as to Prodigies,

(i) Camerar ubi ſupra, p 144

(k) Call'd Barnabas Vore Sieur de la Foſſe.

(l) Id ib p 146

* Id. ib. p. 190.

† In the Additions of Mr. Teſſier to the Eloges taken out of Thuanus, tom. 1. p. 187. edit. 1696

ſorts of ſafe Conducts. When he return'd into France (m), he aſſured the King, that Melanchthon would make this Journey, if the King would do him the honour to write to him about this Matter. This Prince diſpatch'd immediately this Gentleman to carry to Melanchthon the Letter he wrote to him. It is (n) dated at Guiſe the 28th of June 1535, and declares the pleaſure the King had when he underſtood by the Relation of the Gentleman, and by the Letter which William du Bellai had receiv'd from Melanchthon, that this Doctor was diſpos'd to come into France to endeavour to paciſie Controverſies. Melanchthon wrote (o) to the King the twenty eighth of September the ſame Year. He aſſured him of his good Intentions, and that he was ſorry he could not as yet ſurmount the obſtacles to his Journey. The Gentleman who carried this Letter to the King, found him (p) very buſie about his Preparations for the War in Italy; and Melanchthon could never obtain leave (q) from the Duke of Saxony to go to the Court of Francus I. altho' Luther (r) had earneſtly exhorted that Elector to conſent to this Journey, by repreſenting to him, that the hopes of ſeeing Melanchthon had put a ſtop to the Perſecution of the Proteſtants in France, and that there was reaſon to fear, leſt they ſhould renew the ſame Cruelty when they ſhould know that he would not come. The Elector had very good reaſons not to ſuffer this Journey (ſ), for he was afraid to expoſe himſelf to the Anger of Charles V. and he ſaw no appearance that Melanchthon would do any thing for the good of Religion. He wrote to Francis I. an Excuſe that he could not ſuffer Melanchthon to go into France (a). His Letter is dated the 28th of Auguſt 1535. Note, that in the Month of December of the ſame Year, Langei ſollicited in Germany, that Melanchthon ſhould be ſent, or ſome other Divines to the King his Maſter (b). How will this agree with the Narrative of Maimbourg? Or with the account of Mezerai, who affirms (c), that in 1533, the King wrote to Melanchthon by (d) William du Bellai Langei, but that the Cardinal de Tournon, and the Divines of Paris, mov'd him to ſend word, that he would excuſe him from this Trouble? I do not meddle with the confuſions of Mr. Varillas, which I will expoſe afterwards (e). Note alſo, that Melanchthon ſent into France a ſmall Piece, which contain'd his Advices about the reconciling of the Controverſies. He did not publiſh it, but it is to be found in the Collection of Pezelius (f).

I have read in a Letter (g) written to Eraſmus by Sir Thomas Moor, that Tyndal had ſent word that Melanchthon was at the Court of France, that he ſpoke to him, and that he had ſeen him enter into Paris accompanied with 150 Horſe. Tyndalus hæreticus noſtras, qui & nuſquam & ubique exulat, ſcripſit huc nuper Melanchthonem eſſe apud Regem Gallæ: ſemet collocutum cum eo, qui illum vidiſſet exceptum Pariſiis, comitatu C. L. equorum: addebat ſe timere Tyndalus, ne ſi Gallia per illum reciperet verbum Dei, confirmaretur in fide Euchariſtiæ contra Vicleficam ſectam. Is it poſſible that deſerving Perſons ſhould acquaint their Friends with ſuch Lies?

(G) That Death deliver'd him from Theological Perſecutions.] Some Days before he died, he wrote upon a piece of Paper in two Columns the Reaſons why he ought not to be ſorry for leaving this World. One of thoſe Columns contain'd the Advantages which Death procur'd him; the other contain'd the Evils from which Death deliver'd him (h). He put only two Articles (i) into the latter; 1. That he would ſin no more. 2. That he ſhould be no longer expos'd to the Vexations and Rage of the Divines. The other Column contain'd ſix Heads: 1. That he ſhould come to the Light. 2. That he ſhould ſee God. 3. That he ſhould Contemplate the Son of God. 4. That he ſhould underſtand thoſe admirable Myſteries which he could not comprehend in this Life. 5. Why we are Created ſuch as we are. 6. What is the Union of the two Natures in Jeſus Chriſt (k). Note, that the State of Man appear'd to this great Divine one of the moſt incomprehenſible Myſteries of Religion; and yet there is none who believes without examining, that imagines there is any difficulty in it. From hence it came to paſs, that ſome were ſo ſurpriz'd to underſtand by my Dictionary, that the Followers of Manicheiſm could make entangling Objections. But let us keep to our Text, and add, that Nature which gave Melanchthon a Peaceable Temper, made him a Preſent ill ſuited with the juncture of Time in which he was to live. His Moderation ſerv'd only to vex him. He was like a Sheep in the midſt of Wolves; no Perſon liked his Mildneſs, which expos'd him to all ſorts of Reproaches, and depriv'd him of the Means of anſwering a Fool according to his Folly. The only Advantage it procur'd him was to look upon Death without fear, by conſidering that it would ſecure him from the Odium Theologicum, and from the inſidos agitans diſcordia fratres (l). I ſhall ſpeak hereafter (m) of the Slavery wherein he liv'd. He ſaid in one of his Works, that he had held his Profeſſor's Place forty Years, without ever having any aſſurance that he ſhould not be driven from it before the end of the Week. (n) Publice non dubitavit affirmare (1), ego jam ſum hoc, Dei beneficio, quadraginta annos: & nunquam potui dicere aut certus eſſe me per unam ſeptimanam manſurum eſſe.

(H) He had two Sons and two Daughters.] I find nothing concerning his two Sons; but I know that Anne his eldeſt Daughter, was the Wife of George Sabinus, one of the good Poets of his time. He Married (o) her at Wittemberg, November 16, 1536, when ſhe was but fourteen Years old. Her Husband carried her into Pruſſia (p) to the great grief of Melanchthon, in 1543. There had been ſeveral Quarrels between the Father-in-Law and the Son-in-Law, becauſe the latter being very ambitious, had a mind to be preferr'd to civil Employments, and did not like the Humility of Melanchthon, who confin'd himſelf to the learn'd Profeſſion, and would not fatigue himſelf to advance his Children (q). Anne (r) underſtood Latin very well, and was very handſome: Her Father lov'd her (ſ) tenderly: Judge then of the Grief he had (t) when ſhe remov'd ſo far from him in 1543, and afterwards when ſhe died at Koningsberg in 1547 (v). And infer from all this, that he was neither happy at Home nor Abroad. (w) Narrationem talium ideo nequaquam omittendam duco ——— ut hujuſmodi quaſi vulneribus inſpectis quam miſera interdum vita ſit magnorum virorum intelligatur, cum ad onera Reipublicæ pondus etiam domeſtici doloris adjicitur. His other Daughter was Married (x) in 1550 to Gaſpar Peucer, who was an able Phyſician, and very much Perſecuted. If you ſhould doubt whether Melanchthon was a good Father. I would deſire you to conſider, that a Frenchman found him one Day holding a Book in one Hand, and rocking a Child with the other. Melanchthon ſeeing him ſurpriz'd with this, made ſuch a pious Diſcourſe to him about the Duty of a Father, and the ſtate of Grace in which Children are with God, that this Stranger went away much more learn'd than he was when he came in (y).

I muſt not forget this Reflexion. It is a great Happineſs to ſtudious Men to be free from Ambition and Avarice. This ſaves them much Time, preſerves them from mean Submiſſions, and great Diſorders. But that a Man may enjoy the benefit of this good Diſpoſition, 'tis not ſufficient that he himſelf poſſeſſes it; his Kindred alſo muſt be provided with it; for a Wife, a Son-in-Law, a Son, a near Kinſman, who will get Riches, or advance themſelves to Honours, will not ſuffer the Man of Learning to be at reſt; they will have him to Sollicite, to Canvaſs, to make his Court,

(m) Id. ib. p. 151.

(n) It is the 29th of the firſt Book among the Letters of Melanchthon.

(o) This Letter is the 30th of the firſt Book of thoſe of Melanchthon.

(p) Camerar. ibid. p. 153.

(q) Id. ib. p. 151.

(r) Luther tom. 6. fol. 491. apud Seckendorf Hiſt Lutheran. l. 3. p. 107.

(ſ) See Seckend. ibid. p. 109.

(a) Seckendorf ubi ſupra, p. 110.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Mezerai, Abreg. Chronol. tom. 6. p. m. 407, 408.

(d) It was not he who carried the King's Letter.

(e) In the Remark N.

(f) Seckendorf ibid p. 108.

(g) It is the 10th in the 27th Book of the Letters of Eraſmus, p. 1510. (h) Melch. Adam. in vit. Philoſ. p. 202. (i) Diſcedes à peccatis, liberaberis ab ærumnis & à rabie Theologorum. Id. ib.

(k) Id. ib.

(l) Virgil. Georg. lib. 2. v. 496.

(m) In the Remark L.

(n) Melch. Adam. in vit. Theol. p. 257.

(1) To. 1. enarrat. Evangel. p. 358.

(o) Melch. Adam. in vit. Philoſ. p. 227.

(p) Camerar ubi ſupra, p. 206.

(q) Id. ib. p. 207.

(r) Melch. Adam. ib.

(ſ) Camerar. ib. p. 208.

(t) See what he wrote to Camerar. apud Melchior Adam. in vit. Theo. p. 358.

(v) Id ib.

(w) Camerar. ib. p. 207.

(x) Melchoir Adam. in vit. Medic. p. 377.

(y) Melch. Adam. in vit. Philoſ. p. 198.

Prodigies, Aſtrology † and Dreams *, and I will make ſome Reflections upon the Inclination to Pyrrhoniſm for which he is blam'd (l). Some have falſly accus'd him of hating

† See the proofs of it in the Hiſt. of the Variations by the Bishop of Meaux l. 5. n. 34.

* See Melch. Adam in ejus vita paſſim.

and if he does it not they grumble and complain. Melanchthon and his Son-in-Law are a Proof of this. (z) Inter ſocerum ac generum non quidem odium aut ſimultas, ſed alienatio tamen quædam & prope diſſidium ortum fuit—Fons autem erat omnium, quod Sabinus ſocero nimia cupiditate Illuſtris fortunæ videatur ardere. Ille autem non tantum adjuvari & quaſi promoveri ſe ab ipſo quantum optabat & poſſe arbitrabatur, ægre ferebat. From whence I conclude, that it is difficult to live happily in this miſerable World, ſince a happy Life requires not only that a Man ſhould govern his own Paſſions, but alſo that thoſe of his Kindred ſhould be well governed.

(z) Camerar. ibid.

(l) The Inclination to Pyrrhoniſm for which he is blam'd]. " (a) He ſeem'd to have been brought " up in the School of Pyrrho, for a Thouſand " doubts beſet his Soul, for fear, ſaid he, of er- " ring. His Writings were perpetually full " of Scepticiſm " The Author who ſays this, cites ſome Teſtimonies, and tells us no more than what an infinite Number of Writers have obſerv'd. See in the laſt place the Biſhop of Meaux in his Hiſtoire des Variations. I believe that he exaggerates the Matter, but I think alſo that Melanchthon was not free from doubts, and that there were many Subjects about which he could not poſitively ſay, This is thus, and it cannot be otherwiſe. He was of a mild and peaceable Diſpoſition, he had a great deal of Wit, much Reading, and a vaſt Knowledge. He had ſuch Qualities of Temper, as being joyn'd with his acquir'd Accompliſhments, are commonly a Source of Irreſolution. A great Genius ſupported with a vaſt Knowledge, will ſcarce find Error to be altogether on one ſide. He diſcovers a ſtrong and a weak ſide in each Party, he underſtands what is moſt ſpecious in the Objections of his Adverſaries, and what is not ſolid in his Proofs; he does, I ſay, all this, provided he be not of a cholerick Temper; for if he be, he is ſo prepoſſeſs'd in Favour of his own Party, that his Knowledge ſerves him in no ſtead. He does not only perſuade himſelf that he has Reaſon on his ſide, but he has ſuch a tender Regard to his own Sentiments, as moves him to hate bitterly the Doctrine he oppoſes. From the Hatred of Opinions he quickly proceeds to hate the Perſons; he aſpires to Triumph, and being heated with Diſpute, he is fretted till he obtains the Victory: He is angry with thoſe who repreſent to him, that it is for the Intereſt of heavenly Truth, that we ſhould not have Recourſe to Expedients of human Policy. He is no leſs troubled if he hears anyBody ſay, that his Doctrines are not certain and evident, and that the contrary Party can alledge good Reaſons. Being of ſuch a Temper, he examines things only for this end, that he may be more and more convinc'd, that the Doctrines he has embrac'd are true, and he does not fail to find much Solidity in his own Arguments; for there is no Mirror ſo flattering as Prepoſſeſſion. It is a Paint that embelliſhes the ugliеſt Faces; it does the ſame Offices to a Doctrine that the Venus of the Roman Poet did to her Son.

(a) Flor. de Remond ubi ſupra b. 2. c. 9. p. 181.

(b) Virgil Æneid. lib. 1. v. 588.

Reſtitit (b) Æneas, claraque in luce refulſit;
Os humeroſque Deo ſimilis: namque ipſa decoram
Cæſariem nato genitrix, lumenque juventæ
Purpureum, & lætos oculis afflarat honores
Quale manus addunt ebori decus, aut ubi flavo
Argentum, Pariuſve lap. circumdatur auro.

Melanchthon not having this Temper, could not be ſo ſteady in his Opinions. He was of ſo cool a Temper, that he examin'd Matters freely pro and con; and becauſe he lov'd Peace, and deſir'd the Confuſions which the Schiſm gave Birth to, he was more diſpoſed to judge favourably of many Doctrines, which hot Men made the Foundation of a Rupture, and which he would have tolerated to facilitate a Re-union. His Modeſty and Experience render'd him a little diſtruſtful. He was perſuaded that his Knowledge might encreaſe every day, for he remember'd that he had corrected many things in his own Writings, which he believed to be good when he firſt publiſhed them; but Time taught him to withdraw his Approbation, and to apply to himſelf a fine Paſſage of Terence. (c) Could he be poſitive that time would not teach him better ſtill? This is what hindred him from being peremptory in his Opinions. He liv'd among a ſort of People who appear'd to him paſſionate, and too forward to mix human Ways and the Supports of the ſecular Power with the Affairs of the Church. His Conſcience being tender (d) made him afraid that there was a Character of Reprobation in it. Wherefore then did he continue in that Party, will you ſay, if he had no poſitive aſſurance that it was the Cauſe of God? Whither would you have him go? Would not he have found in the Romiſh Communion more things that deſerved to be condemned, and more Heat and Oppreſſion of Conſcience? Don't you think that he had well-weigh'd all theſe Inconveniencies when he caſt his Eyes upon Paleſtine, thinking to retire thither in caſe his Enemies ſhould drive him away. (e) Non frangor animo, propter crudeliſſimam vo...m meorum hoſtium, qui dixerunt ſe mihi non relicturos eſſe veſtigium pedis in Germania. Commendo autem me ſuo Dei. Si ſolus expellar: Decrevi Paleſtinam adire, & in illis Hieronymi latebris, in invocatione Filii Dei, & teſtimonia perſpicua de doctrina ſcribere, & in morte Deo animam commendare. Compare with this the Deſign that Abelard (f) had to retire among the Infidels.

(c) Melanchth. apud Melch. Adam in vitis Theol. p. 157

(f) See the Article Alcuinus (John Paul) at the Remark (g).

Let us here admire the peculiar Character of the Fate of Man. His Virtues are liable to bad Conſequences, and have their Inconveniencies; his bad Qualities on the contrary produce ſome good effects upon many Occaſions. Modeſty, Moderation, Love of Peace, form in the Minds of the moſt learned a certain Principle of Equity, which makes them in ſome Meaſure luke-warm and unreſolv'd. Pride and Anger make a great Doctor ſo dogmatical and ſelf-conceited, that he is not ſenſible of the leaſt doubt, and will undertake and endure any thing for the Advancement and Propagation of his own Opinions. If by good luck he lights upon the Truth, what Service will he not do to it? They will doubtleſs be greater, than they would be if he were of a more moderate Temper. The Bonds of prejudice, or if you pleaſe, the Biaſs of the Paſſions, do more ſtrongly faſten the Soul to the Truth, than the Charms of it. Note, that I ſet aſide the good Effects of Grace, both upon the Tempers that are too phlegmatick, and too cholerick. I conſider the matter only Philoſophically, and under this Notion we may truly ſay, that as to what concerns the Intereſt of a Sect, a Man that is conceited and violent, is preferable to a wiſe Man. And if any Founder of a Sect deſires that his Diſciples ſhould labour with Succeſs, in propagating his Doctrine, he ſhould wiſh that they were of ſuch a Humour, as never to depart from any thing, and to eſpouſe for all their Life the firſt Party they embrace. If they pitch upon it before they are capable of weighing well the Reaſons on both ſides, it is ſo much the better; they will be the farther from doubting for the future, and the leſs they doubt, the more dogmatical they will be: Whereas thoſe who expect to receive more Light every day, do not think themſelves obliged to ſhow a very great Zeal, for they imagine, that what appears true to them to day, will appear to them at another time leſs probable than what they do not at all believe. Cicero, expreſſes very well theſe different Characters, ſpeaking of the Scepticks and Dogmaticks. Neque noſtræ diſputationes, ſays he, (g) quicquam aliud agunt, niſi ut in utramque partem dicendo, & audiendo eliciant & tanquam exprimant aliquid, quod aut verum ſit, aut ad quam proxime accedat. Neque inter nos & eos qui ſe ſcire arbitrantur quicquam intereſt, niſi quod illi non dubitant, quæ ea ſint quæ defendunt: Nos probabilia multa habemus, quæ ſequi facile, affirmare vix poſſumus. Hæc aut mihi aut ſimilibus & ſolutiores ſumus, quod intelligamus eſſe judicandi pertinaces, neque ut omnia quæ præcepta & quaſi imperata ſint, defendamus, neceſſitate ulla cogamur. Nam ſæpe primum ante tenentur aſtricti, quam quid eſſet optimum, judicare potuerint. Deinde infirmiſſimo tempore ætatis aut elapſi amico cuidam, aut una alicujus quem primum audierunt, oratione capti, de rebus incognitis judicant, & ad quamcunque ſunt diſciplinam quaſi tempeſtate delati, ad eam tanquam ad ſaxum hærent. Quæ

(g) Cicero Acad. quæſt. l. 2. n. 2.

(d) Conſult the Paſſages cited by the Biſhop of Meaux Hiſt. des Variations l. 2. n. 44. l. 4. n. 2. l. 5. n. 34.

(e) Melanchth. apud Melch. Adam in vitis Theol. p. 157

(f) See the Article Alcuinus (John Paul) at the Remark (g).

(g) Cicero Acad. quæſt. l. 2. n. 2.

(a) Flor. de Remond ubi ſupra b. 2. c. 9. p. 181.

(b) Virgil Æneid. lib. 1. v. 588.

(z) Camerar. ibid.

(c) Num quam ita quiſquam bene ſubducta ratione ad vitam fuit, Quin res, ætas, uſus, ſemper aliquid apportet novi, Aliquid moneat ut illa, quæ te ſcire credas, nescias, Ea ſæpe tibi putaris prima, in experiendo ut repudies Quod in hujus evenit nunc. Terent. Adelph. act. 5. ſc. 4. init.

(d) Conſult the Paſſages cited by the Biſhop of Meaux Hiſt. des Variations l. 2. n. 44. l. 4. n. 2. l. 5. n. 34.

Nam

hating (K) the Peripatetick Phyloſophy. There is infinitely more Reaſon to pretend that he did not believe the real Preſence (L), nor that * Grace was irreſiſtable. Father de St. Romuald

* See the Article Synergiſts.

Nam quod dicunt, omnino ſe credere ei, quem judicent ſumm. ſapientem, probarem, ſi id ipſum rudes & indoctî judicare potuiſſent. Statuere enim quid ſit ſapiens, vel maxime videtur eſſe ſapientis. Sed ut potuerunt omnibus rebus auditis, cognitis etiam reliquorum ſententiis judicaverunt, aut reſum. audita ad unius ſe autoritatem contulerunt. Sed neſcio quomodo plerique errare malunt, eamque ſententiam quam adamaverunt, pugnaciſſime defendere, quàm ſine pertinacia quid conſtantiſſime dicant exquirere.

(K) Of hating the Peripatetick Philoſophy ] I have cited (b) elſewhere Father Rapin, who places Melanchthon in the Catalogue of the modern Hereticks, who declaim'd againſt Ariſtotle and his Philoſophy. This Accuſation is not well grounded, as I ſhall ſhew hereafter (i), and it will be ſufficiently refuted by ſetting down here what Melanchthon wrote to the Chancellor of Bavaria in 1535. (k) Vere judicas plurimum intereſſe Reipublicæ ut Ariſtoteles conſervetur, & extet in ſcholis ac verſetur in manibus diſcentium. Nam profectò ſine hoc autore, non ſolum non retineri pura philoſophia, ſed ne quidem juſta docendi aut diſcendi ratio ulla poterit. The Logick of the Schools of all the parts of Philoſophy was that which was leaſt grateful to the Reformers; for they look'd upon it as the cauſe of vain Subtilties, which made young People loſe a great deal of Time, and corrupted Theology; yet Melanchthon declar'd for Logick. His Teſtimony was cited by Caramuel in the Catalogue he has given us of ſome Proteſtant Doctors, who recommend the ſtudy of that part of Philoſophy. Philippus Melanchthon, ſays he (a), Lutheri diſcipulus fuit, & tametſi Magiſter parvi Logicam penderet, ipſe maximi eam fecit, & inter alia in præfatione Erotem. Dialect. hæc ſcripſit. Hos & adhortor, & propter gloriam Dei, ac propter Eccleſiæ ſalutem obteſtor ne dialecticen negligant, nec applaudant inſulſis ſermonibus eorum qui vituperant eam & Eccleſiæ inutilem eſſe &c. imo Dialectica opus eſt non ſolum ut doctrina lucem habeat, ſed etiam ut ſit concordiæ vinculum. The Jeſuit James Gretſer, oppoſing the hatred which Luther expreſs'd againſt the Philoſophy of Ariſtotle, cites a long Paſſage out of Melanchthon the Diſciple of Luther: A quo, ſays he (b), hanc Apologiam mutuabimur, niſi ab illo, cui Lutherus plurimum tribuere ſolebat; quique ea, quæ olim in Ariſtotelem conjecerat, maledicta laudibus poſtea diſpunxit? Is eſt Melanchthon, qui in oratione de Ariſtotele (1) à Flocco quodam Norimbergenſi recitata his verbis Logicam Ariſtotelicam adverſus Lutheri criminationes nobis dat defenſam. Nunc quædam de genere Philoſophiæ addam, cur Ariſtotelicum maxime nobis in Eccleſia uſui eſſe arbitremur. Conſtare arbitror inter omnes, maxime nobis in Eccleſia opus eſſe Dialectica, quæ methodos recte informat, quæ dextre definit, juſte partitur, apte connectit, judicat, & divellit monſtroſas connexiones. Hanc artem qui non norunt lacerant materias explicandas, ut catuli panniculos. Libet enim uti Platonis ſimilitudine. Vere eam Plato laudibus effert, inquiens igniculum eſſe, quem Prometheus è cælo attulerit, ut in mentibus hominum lumen accenderet ad recte judicandum. Sed artis præcepta nuſquam tradit. Carere igitur Ariſtotelis monumentis non poſſumus. Stoica non extant, & apparet intricatos Labyrinthos, & corruptelas artis fuiſſe, non ſimplicem diſſerendi viam, utilem explicationi magnarum rerum. Hæc Philippus pro Ariſtotelis Logica contra Lutheri amentiam. The ſequel of this Paſſage of Melanchthon related by Greſſer, contains great praiſes upon the Phyſicks and Morals of Ariſtotle.

It is not therefore neceſſary to juſtifie Melanchthon upon this Head, his own Works ſufficiently juſtifie him; but I muſt not forget a Miſtake of Father Rapin. He cites a Theſis (c) maintain'd by Luther at Heidelberg in 1518, wherein Ariſtotle was ill us'd. "Luther, continues he, lets no Occaſion ſlip in his Books of inveighing againſt "this Philoſopher, wherein he is followed by "Zuinglius, Peter Martyr, Zanchius, Melanchthon, and "by all thoſe who have oppos'd the Doctrine of "the Roman Church: Which made Melchior Canus "ſay, &c." All this, and what he had ſaid of the Anabaptiſts, is taken out of a Book of George Hornius, which he cites. Now the words of that Author are theſe: (d) Ibique (Lutherus) pluribus Ariſtotelem exagitat. Zwinglius etiam, P. Martyr, Zanchius & alii excellentiſſime florebant Philoſophiæ laudibus. Omnes tamen exſuperavit divinum Philippi Melanchthonis ingenium, qui ſcriptis ſuis totam Philoſophiam ita illuſtravit, ut vere author ejus & fatalis in Germania inſtaurator dici poſſit. Illuſtravit Dialecticam, Ethicam, Phyſicam, & Mathematicas diſciplinas: expurgavit ſpinas Philoſophorum: id denique effecit, ut Philoſophia mox florentiſſima efficeretur. The Particle etiam being put a little after the words which ſignifie that Luther inveig'd againſt Ariſtotle, made Rapin think, that Zuinglius, and the other Reformers nam'd by Hornius, inveigh'd alſo againſt Ariſtotle; but he might eaſily have known that this was far from the Thoughts of Hornius. The Elogium he beſtowed upon Melanchthon might be further enlarg'd; for this great Man did not only illuſtrate all the parts of Philoſophy; but there is ſcarce any Art or Science about which he did not write, and endeavour to facilitate the ſtudy of them by eaſie and plain Methods. What ſhall we ſay then of thoſe (e) who were ſo impudent as to publiſh, that Melanchthon and Carloſtad cried down all the Sciences, that they turn'd Artificers, and rendered all the Schools like a Deſart, ſo that there was nothing to be ſeen in them but Spiders Webs? It would be difficult to find any Profeſſors who read as many Lectures, and to ſo (f) many People as he did. It often happen'd that he read three or four Lectures in a Day (g); and there is reaſon to believe, that when he Married he did not interrupt his Academick Exerciſes, except on his Wedding Day, which may be inferr'd from this diſtich:

A ſtudiis hodie facit ocia grata Philippus,
Nec vobis Pauli dogmata ſacra leget.

This was the Advertiſement (h) which was given on that Day to his Auditors. He was the principal Support of the Univerſity of Wittemberg (i) Sua induſtria atque eruditione Wittembergicam Academiam præcipue ſuſtinuit: nec paſſus eſt vel bellis civilibus, vel inteſtinis odiis ſeſe ab ea abſtrahi: binas, ternas, quaternas quotidie ſcholas habuit eaſque frequentiſſimas: nullam autem horam vacuam à legendo, ſcribendo, diſſerendo, conſulendo.

To ſpeak the Truth without diſſimulation, I muſt here declare, that Melanchthon at the beginning follow'd the Dance that Luther led him, and ſpoke ill of Ariſtotle: But he quickly chang'd his Dialect, and continu'd to commend the Philoſophy of this Founder of the Lyceum. Wherefore Father Rapin had no ground for the Accuſation mention'd in the beginning of this Remark; for we muſt not judge of a Man by thoſe Opinions which he quickly forſakes; but by thoſe wherein he continues all the reſt of his Life. Father Greſſer might have taught Father Rapin how to ſpeak about this matter. See what I have already cited from that German Jeſuit, and what I am going to cite from the ſame Author. (k) Quid ad nos, quid Ariſtoteles impurus homo dicat? vociferatur Philippus (2). Et in Locis Anno Chriſti, M. D. XXIII. Argentorati editis: (3) Ariſtotelis doctrina eſt in univerſum quædam libido rixandi, ut eum inter paræneticæ philoſophiæ ſcriptores ne poſtremo quidem loco dignemur. Quid ad me quid ſenſerit ille rixator? inquit in iiſdem locis (4) Philippus. Quanquam poſtea Vertumnus iſte ſtylum vertit, & maledicta in benedicta convertit. See the Margin (†).

(L) To pretend that he did not believe the real Preſence. ] Pucer was heard to ſay (l), 1. That Melanchthon his Father-in-Law having read the Dialogue of the Oecolompadius de Cœna Domini, forſook the Opinion of the Oral Manducation, and that afterwards he triumph'd in the Argument from the Authority of the Fathers. Patribus doctrina Synuſiaſtarum fuit ignota: Auguſtinus craſſiſſimus fuit Swinglianus, ergo, &c. 2. That he did not believe a Man could die with a greater Glory than for the Doctrine of the Euchariſt, and that he was angry with himſelf that he did not ſhow a greater Courage in making an open Profeſſion of his Opinion. Ah utinam poſſem eſſe fortior in confeſſione iſtius cauſæ, & alibi eſſem. Sed his moribus, his temporibus inter hos homines fieri id non poſſe, & habeo

(a) Jo. Caramuel Theolog. rational. tom. 2. p. 42. edit. Francof. 1654. in fol.

(b) Jacob. Gretſer inaugur. Doctor. p. 60, 61.

(1) Melanchth. tom. 3. Declamat.

(c) Rapin, Reflexions ſur la Philoſophie, p. m. 451.

(d) Georg. Hornius Hiſt. Philoſ. lib. 6. c. 9. p. 315.

(e) The Jeſuit Creſollius is one of them. See Morhoff. Polyhiſt. p. 7, & 8.

(f) See in the Remark P. what Sabinus anſwer'd to Cardinal Bembus.

(g) Konig. Biblioth. p. 527.

(h) Melch. Adam. in vit. Philoſ. p. 190.

(i) Id in vit. Theo. p. 355.

(k) Jacob. Gretſer. ubi ſupra, p. 45.

(2) Phil. in Apolog pro Luth. & in Ludo contra Pariſienſ.

(3) Tit. de peccato.

(4) Tit. de lege.

(†) This may be confirm'd by the words of Eraſmus Epiſt. ad fratres Germaniæ inferioris, p. m 2127. Nonne Melanchthon aliquando damnavit ſcholas publicas? Nunc hic dicit, maneant ſcholæ quæ bonæ ſunt, vitia corrigantur.

(l) Abrah. Scultetus narrat. apologet. p. 20, & ſeq.

St. Romuald affirms that his Body was burnt at Munich (M). This appears to me to be a very groſs Fiction. Mr. Varillas has publiſh'd ſo (N) ſtrange Falſhoods, that it may

(m) A Jeanne Triderico Electore rer illi decretum fuiſſe carcerem Id. ib.

(n) See the Hiſtoria Carceri and the Preface to the Treatiſe De præcipuis divinationum generibus.

(o) See his 2d Volume Hiſtoriæ Sacramentariæ, p. 231. & paſſim alibi. Conſult alſo the Biſhop of Meaux Hiſt. des Variat. l. 8. n. 39.

(a) See particularly p. 428. & ſeq. Hiſt. Sacrament. tom. 2.

(b) Hoſpin. ib. p. 430.

(c) The Biſhop of Meaux Hiſt. des Variations, b. 5. n. 16.

(1) Peuc. Epiſt. ad vit. Theod. Hoſp. p. 2. fol 193, & ſeq.

(2) Mel. l. 4. Epiſt. 315.

(3) Lib. 4. 255.

(4) Peter de St. Romuald Abregé Chronol. tom. 3 p. 398 ad ann. 1560.

(a) He ſhould have ſaid Bretten.

(b) In the Year 1597

graves rationes mei conſilii. Interim dico ſententiam meam ubi video opus eſſe. 3. That in 1544, he explain'd himſelf freely to an Hungarian, who ask'd his Thoughts about the Euchariſt, and that the thing being reported to Luther and Pomeranus, the latter one Day made this Apoſtrophe to the People in a Sermon. Moſt dear Brethren, the Church runs a great hazard, pray to God almighty for ſome great Perſons that are fall'n into Error. 4 That Melanchthon underſtanding that this was meant of him, could not bridle his Anger, but went out of the Church in the ſight of all the Congregation; that he related this Affair to Cruciger, and that they concluded to withdraw from Wittemberg; which they would have put in execution, if Luther had not paſs'd his Word, that the Court of Saxony ſhould do them no hurt upon this occaſion. 5. That Melanchthon liv'd under hard Bondage at Wittemberg, and (m) run the riſque three times of being clapt up in Priſon. 6. That he diſapprov'd the Concordate made in the Year 1536. and the fearfulneſs of Bucer, which made him yield too much to Luther. Nec tacebat de concordia Wittembergica inter Lutherum & Bucerum anno 1536. icta. Melanchthonem audebat Bucerum ſæpe hortatum fuiſſe ne tantum Lutheri largiretur, ſed Bucerum fuiſſe timidum, circumſpectum ab inimicis. Reliquos etiam ſuperioris Germaniæ Theologos nimis facto & demiſſo animo fuiſſe. Theſe are the Diſcourſes which Peucer had with Sculterus, who went to ſee him at Deſſau in the Year 1589.

But if one would be aſſur'd of the ſincerity of this Relator, he needs only read the Works (n) of Peucer, and particularly that which was Printed in 1596, by the care of Quirinus Reuterus, which is entituled, Tractatus hiſtoricus de clariſſimi viri Philippi Melanchthonis ſententia de controverſia cænæ Domini, à D Caſparo Peucero ante plures annos ſcriptus, ſed jam primum ſeparatim bon. publica ergo excuſus: Cum appendice ſelectorum epiſtolarum & judiciorum aliquot Philippi, aliorumque præſtantium virorum de eadem materia. Hoſpinian (o) will prove to you at large, that Melanchthon was undeceiv'd and turn'd from Lutheraniſm as to the point of the Real Preſence, altho' the fear of Oppreſſion did not ſuffer him to declare his Judgment publickly. He hath carefully Collected together (a) many Proofs of this Fear. The famous Melanchthon being threatned with Baniſhment (b), teſtified at laſt that he wiſh'd for it as a kind of deliverance. He "(c) knew of no other Reme- "dy for all thoſe Evils, but flight, and his "Son-in-Law Peucer (1) informs us, that he was "reſolv'd upon it. He himſelf writes (2), that "Luther was ſo violently tranſported againſt "him, about a Letter receiv'd from Bucer, that "he thought of nothing but withdrawing from "his Preſence. He liv'd under ſuch continual "fear from Luther and the Heads of the Party, "and was ſo oppreſs'd with Labour and Vexation, "that he wrote to his Friend Camerarius 1 am, "ſays he, (3), in Bondage, as if I were in the Cave of "the Cyclops; for I cannot diſguiſe my ſentiment to "you, and I have often thought of making my eſcape. "Luther was not the only Perſon that offer'd "him violence. Every one has the command "at certain times among thoſe who forſake the "lawful Authority, and the moſt moderate are "always the moſt enſlav'd". Note, that this Paſſage of the Biſhop of Meaux does not concern the conſtraint that Luther was in with reſpect to the Doctrine of the Lord's Supper.

(M) That his Body was burnt at Munich. "(d) "Philip Melanchthon, a Native of Bretten (a) in Ger- "many, died at Wittemberg, being a little above "ſixty three Years of Age. He was the conſtant "Companion of Martin Luther. He was buried "like him very honourably by ſome of his "own Faction; but ſometime after, (4) the Ca- "tholicks dug up his Body and burnt it with "great Zeal at Munich: And becauſe in the mean "time the Caſtle took Fire, and the Lyons eſ- "cap'd, not without great danger to the Inha- "bitants of the City, Du Tillet-Vernay took oc- "caſion from thence to cry out, Juſta Domini judi- "cia. This is in a Letter he wrote, to the Sieur Lancelot de Carle Burgundus." This good Monk quotes no Body, and he ſets down the Year 1597, which is a good proof of his Ignorance; for Langius died in 1581.

(N) Mr. Varillas has publiſh'd ſo ſtrange Falſhoods.] "They give no leſs different (f) accounts of Me- "lanchthon's Death, which happen'd almoſt at the "ſame time: he was then 63 Years and (g) three "Days old—His Mother having conjur'd him at "his Death to declare which of the two Reli- "gions was the beſt; he anſwer'd her, that the "new was more plauſible, but the Catholick was "more ſafe. Yet that which was moſt ſurpriſing "in him was, that his inconſtancy in Matters of "Religion, did not hinder him from ſhowing a "great firmneſs of Soul under Adverſity. He "ſpent all his Life in Study, and ſeem'd not to "be capable of any other Labour. He ſubſiſted "with his Wife, and the many Daughters he had "(h), upon the Salary he receiv'd from John Fre- "drick Elector of Saxony, as Profeſſor of Divinity "in the Univerſity of Wittemberg. This Sa- "lary was juſt ſufficient to maintain Melanch- "thon's Family, who receiving it Quarterly "without fail, never troubled himſelf much "about the time to come, becauſe he ſuppos'd this "would be an inexhauſtible Spring to ſupply "him. But it happen'd, as we have ſhown in the "16th Book of this Hiſtory, that the Elector of "Saxony loſt his Dominions and his Liberty, and "that Melanchthon's Salary was no longer paid. "His Moveables were of ſo little value, that they "were not ſufficient to maintain him for any long "time; and within a few Months he was re- "duced to the neceſſity of begging of importu- "ning his Friends, every one of whom had "ſuffer'd conſiderable Loſſes in the general Re- "volution of Saxony. Both theſe Extremities "were equally unpleaſant to him; and there- "fore he choſe rather to get his Livelyhood "with the Sweat of his Brows, by ſerving in a "Calling very different from his. He hired him- "ſelf to a Brewer of Beer, and ſerv'd three "whole Years in the Brew-houſe, till Duke "Maurice being put in poſſeſſion of the Electorate "of Saxony, re-eſtabliſh'd the Univerſity of Pit- "temberg, and the Salary of Melanchthon." Note, that the Mother of Melanchthon died in 1529, how then could ſhe aſk any Queſtion in 1560? See above what I have ſaid in the Remark E. (i) againſt Florimond de Remond. I will not trouble my ſelf with proving, that he never hir'd himſelf to a Brewer: This is a Story whoſe falſity may be diſcover'd by a bare inſpection of the Courſe of the Life of this learned Perſon. I ſhall only add by the by, that thoſe who ſay that Luther took (k) Melanchthon out of a Baker's Shop, to whom he had bound himſelf Apprentice to get a Livelyhood (l) with the Sweat of his Brows, are groſly miſtaken.

To go on with the Faults of Varillas, I ſhall here inſert the Narrative he has given us of the Deſign of Francis I. with reſpect to Melanchthon. He ſuppoſes (m) that the Siſter n), and the Miſtreſs of this Prince (o) were extreamly engag'd in Intrigues to introduce the new Religion into the Kingdom, and that not ſucceeding in their Attempt (p) built upon a Sermon of the Curate of St Euſtache, they made uſe of another Device, which was to perſuade the King to gain the Proteſtants of Germany, which would be very advantageous to him for oppoſing the too great Power of Charles V and they repreſented to him, that nothing would be more effectual to gain them, than to make a ſhow of a great deſire of a Conference with Melanchthon. The firſt ſtep which this Prince made in this Affair, "was the Order which "Langey receiv'd, who had known this Divine "(q) in Saxony, to ſound him if he were inclin- "able to change his Chair of Theology in Wit- "temberg, whoſe Revenue was only 2 Crowns "a Year, for a Royal Profeſſor's Chair in the U- "niverſity of Paris, whoſe Revenue was twelve "Hundred Crowns a Year." The ſecond ſtep that he made was "to entruſt Langey with doing "ſome private Offices at the Court of Saxony, to "clear [illegible] Melanchthon deſir'd, and with "a Letter for the Elector Dane ſign'd with the "King's own Hand——" The Elector of Saxony

(f) Varillas Hiſt de l'Hereſie, tom 5 l. 24 p. 227. of the Dutch Edit.

(g) He lived juſt 63 Days.

(h) He had but two

(i) Letter

(k) Florimond de Remond Hiſt de l'Hereſie, l. 1 c. 51 p. 95

(l) Id ib. l. 2 c. 2. p. 126

(m) Varillas Hiſt del'Hereſie, tom 2. l. 10. p 312

(n Margaret Queen of Navarre.

(o) The Dutcheſs of Etampes

(p) Id ib. p. 317, 319.

(q) Id ib p. 321

(r) Id ib p. 322

may be justly thought a needless Labour to confute them. The violence wherewith * Melanchthon was calumniated during his Life, * Persecuted him even after his Death. It is astonishing, that amidst so many other Occupations he could write so many Books. The number of them is prodigious; a Chronological Catalogue of them was publish'd in † 1582. Because he saw that his Works, tho' he did not finish them, were nevertheless profitable to the Youth, he ‖ rather chose to Print many of them, than to perfect a small Number: And so he preferr'd the Profit of his Neighbour to his own Glory. We may believe also that the happy Genius he had receiv'd from Nature, gave him some assurance that his Works would be esteemed ¶, tho' they were not finished. His Latin Verses pleas'd the Hypercritical ♣ Julius Cæsar Scaliger. He sometimes

* See Melchior Adam. in vit. Theolog. p. 357, 358. & Buchholcer. ad. Chron. ad ann. 1560. p. m. 600.

† Mar. Mylius is the Author of that Catalog. See Melch. Adam. in vit. Theolog. p. 347.

‖ See Melch. Adam. ib. p. 361.

¶ See Erasmus in Ciceroniano.

♣ Jul. Cæsar Scalig. Poët. l. 6. p. m. 736.

"did no sooner hear that the most Christian "King desir'd Melanchthon to come, but he ima- "gin'd that this would make all France turn Lu- "theran—He did not deliberate an instant upon the "demand that was made, and did not only grant "a Man whom he believ'd to be still very necessa- "ry to him, but also exhorted him presently to "set forward in his Journey. Yet Luther de- "tain'd him a long time, because he had no "mind to part with him, upon pretence that he "was to Concert, or, to speak more properly, to "Polish with him, his last Book against the Anabap- "tists." Melanchthon wrote a civil Answer to Fran- cis I. and concludes (f) "with an excuse for not "coming away at the Minute that the Elector his "Lord had given him leave. The Cardinal de Tournon (t) had the Courage to oppose this Intrigue of the Queen of Navarre and the Dutchess of Etampes. He made a Discourse which Francis I. reliss'd well; "(v) "but the Virtue which this Prince affected most "was to keep his Word, and he suppos'd that it "would be thought the more strange, if he should "break it with respect to Melanchthon, because that "Divine had not attempted of his own Head to "come to Paris, neither had he consented to do "it, till he was invited in an honourable Way. "There was nothing therefore resolv'd upon, "and his Majesty's indifference had probably "continu'd longer, if the same Lutherans who "had so dextrously inspir'd him with the desire of "seeing Melanchthon, had not also dispossess'd him "of it by an insolent Action, which put him "quite out of conceit with them." They had already posted up some Placards at his Closet-Door, which had made him very angry; but he (w) was much more offended "at the Printed "Bills, which they slipt into his Dining-Room "by means of Ferret a Servant to his Apo- "thecary. It was suspected that they were com- "pos'd by Farel—The reading of these Bills fini- "shed the Design which Cardinal de Tournon had "begun, and Melanchthon was countermanded. "The spreaders of these Bills were searched for, "and a very severe Edict was publish'd, which "the Cardinal Chancellor Duprat drew up against "the Lutherans. On the 29th of January 1535, "there was a solemn Procession, at which the "King assisted on Foot bare Headed, and with a "Wax-Taper in his Hand.

(f) Id. ib. p. 323.

(t) Id. Ib. p. 324.

(v) Id. ib. p. 325.

(w) Id. ib. p. 326.

(x) Note, that Florimond de Remond, b. 7 c. 3. lays the same thing, but his authority is not better than that of Varillas.

There are many Falshoods in this Narrative. In the first place I desire a security, before I believe upon the Authority of Varillas (x), that the Dutchess of Etampes concern'd her self out of Love to the Protestants, among other Intrigues, in that of Melanchthon's Journey, and that he was offer'd the Chair of Regius Professor. 2. It appears by the King's Letter to Melanchthon, that he who carried it was call'd la Fosse: And therefore it was not given to Mr. de Lange. 3. The Elector of Saxony was so far from believing that Melanchthon's Journey would make all France Lutheran, that one of the Reasons why he would not consent to it, was, that he thought it would rather hinder than further the Progress of the Reformation. This appears by (y) the Original Letters which he wrote upon this Occasion. 4. He was so far from granting Melanchthon the Liberty that was necessary without any deliberation, and moreover from exhorting him to set forward in his Journey presently, that on the contrary he could not be prevail'd upon (z), neither by the intreaties of that Professor, nor of Luther, nor by the good Offices of the Ambassador of France. He wrote his Excuses (b) to Francis I. the 28th of April 1535. The Ambassador continu'd still to sollicite, and all to no purpose, (c) in the Month of December of the same Year. 5. Luther did not detain Melanchthon a long time, but reiterated his Application to the Court of Saxony for his Journey (d). Extant Lutheri ad Electorem literæ d. 17. Aug. datæ tom. VI. fol. 491. in quibus repetitis & enixissimis precibus contendit ut Philippus ad tres menses dimittatur. 6. 'Tis a horrible Impudence to say, that Melanchthon in a Letter to the King, concluded with an excuse that he had not come away that very minute that his Lord gave him leave. There is no such thing in his Letter, and he could not without telling a Lye, mention the Permission of his Master. 7. The time of the Placards ought not to be distinguish'd from that wherein the Bills were slipt into the Palace of Francis I. and if Varillas had a mind to have made a distinction, the Bills should have preceded the Placards. Indeed Florimond de Remond, whom Varillas here does only Paraphrase upon, supposes that the Hereticks did not post up any Placards, before they had dispers'd many Books (e) here and there——and caus'd their Articles of Faith to be thrown into the King's Closet by his Apothecary's Servant call'd Ferret, and even little Bills (f) into his Dining-Room. 8. The sharpest things that were said against the Mass and the Priests, were not in those Bills, but (g) in the Placards. 9. Varillas cannot prove that Francis I. countermanded Melanchthon; he still demanded him in the Month of December 1535, after the Letter he receiv'd from the Elector of Saxony, full of Excuses for not granting to this Doctor leave to go into France. It is therefore very probable that Francis I. was never under a necessity to countermand him. 10. 'Tis very certain that the Placards did not induce him to do it, for they were posted up in the Month of November 1534. The King punish'd this Insolence, and expiated that Outrage, in the Month of January following; and he wrote to Melanchthon five Months after. Can any one sufficiently admire the negligence of Mr. Varillas? He gives the Substance of the Letter which Francis I. wrote to Melanchthon, and he might have seen that it is dated June twenty eighth 1535. He says (h), that the expiatory Procession was made the 29th (i) of January 1535; and yet he affirms, that the occasion of the Procession was the cause why the German Divine receiv'd a Counter-Order.

(y) See Seckend. ubi supra, b. 3. p. 109, 110.

(z) Seck. ubi supra, p. 107.

(a) Id. ib. p. 107.

(b) Ib. p. 110.

(c) Ibid.

(d) Id. ib. p. 107.

(e) Florimond de Remond ubi supra, b. 7. c. 5. p. 859.

(f) Varillas attributes this to the Servant, and so does not keep to his Original.

(g) Florimond de Remond, ibid.

(h) Varillas ubi supra, p. 326.

(i) Beginning the Year with the Month of January.

If he complains that his History of Heresie has been taken for a Romance, he has scarce any better reason for it, than la Calprenede had, who took it very heinously, that his Cassandra and Cleopatra were not look'd upon as Histories. "Nay I will say for the honour of these "Works, says he (k), that Justice is not done "them by the Name that is given them, tho' "perhaps they have been very well receiv'd in "the World, and that instead of calling them "Romances, as the Amadis, and other such like, "wherein there is neither Truth, nor Probability, "nor Geography, nor Chronology, they may be "look'd upon as Histories embellish'd with some "Invention, which by these Ornaments per- "haps lose nothing of their Beauty. In effect I "can truly say, that in Cassandra and Cleopatra, "there is not only nothing contrary to the Truth, "although there be some things beyond it; but "that there is not any place wherein I can be "convicted of a Lye, and that I am able to main- "tain all the Circumstances of the History to be "true when I please. And indeed there are some "intelligent Persons, who have given the same "Judgment of 'em, and who look'd upon me as "a Man better skill'd in the Affairs of the Courts "of Augustus and Alexander, than those who "have writ their Histories." This is a notable Rhodomontade, and there are few things more Romantick than this in the [illegible] this sometimes assum'd a false Name in the Title Page of his Books (O). Cardinal Bembus desir'd three things (P) which deserve to be related.

(k) La Calprenede Pref. to Pharamond.

MEMNON, General of Darius's Army, the last King of Persia, was of the Isle of Rhodes. He understood the Art of War very perfectly, and gave his Lord the best Advices that could be given in the juncture of Alexander's Expedition. Had he liv'd but a few Years longer, the Successes of this Conqueror had not been so swift, and perhaps the whole face of Affairs might have been chang'd. His design was to carry the War into (A) Macedonia, whilst the Macedonians were making War against the King of Persia in Asia. He had already done brave Exploits in the Isle of Lesbos, which had very much terrified the other Isles; and he sow'd Discord among the Grecians, to make a Party there against Alexander: But this great Design was ruin'd by his

(l) Maximil. Sandæus in pædia Academici Christiani, commentat. 7. p. 250. Edit. Colon. 1638. in 8°. apud Crenium ubi infra.

(m) Crenius, animadv. philolog. & histor. parte 2. p. 24, & seq.

(n) Seckendorf, ubi supra, l. 1. p. 108. & seq.

(o) Placcius de Pseudonymis, p. 185, 186.

(p) Hoornbeeck summa controvers. l. 2. p. 979. Edit. 2.

(q) Teissier addit. aux elog. tom. 1. p. 192.

(r) Crenius, animadv. philol. & histor. parte 2. p. 23.

(s) Great Grandson of Polycarp Lyserus, of whom I have made an Article.

(t) He was Rector of the College of Hall in Saxony, and then Physician, and at last Burgo-master of the same City. He died in 1589.

(v) It is at the end of the third part of the Animadversions of Mr. Crenius.

Author. Nevertheless I dare repeat it, that Mr. Varillas could not make the like Complaints with much more reason. Besides 'tis matter of Astonishment, that so many French Writers should be guilty of the Sophism a non causa pro causa, speaking of this Affair of Melanchthon. They pretend that the fixing up of Placards by the Protestants hindred his Journey; and yet 'tis certain that by accident they were the cause why he was sent for. How blameable soever they be, yet they are less to be blam'd than the Jesuit Sandæus (l), who durst call in question what Thuanus relates, that Francis I. wrote to Melanchthon, &c. Consult Mr. Crenius (m), who solidly refutes the impudence of this Writer, and his unjust Contempt of Melanchthon.

(O) He sometimes assum'd a false Name in the Title Page of his Books.] He call'd himself Didymus Faventinus in the Answer he wrote in 1520, to a Harangue which Thomas Rhadinus, a Dominican and Professor of Divinity at Rome, publish'd against Luther. You will find an Abridgment of that Answer (n) in Mr. Seckendorf: But let no Man think, because the Author declaims very briskly against the Errors of the School-Men, that I was to blame to maintain, that he did not disapprove Aristotle's Philosophy. To know exactly the Sentiments of an Author, we must not insist upon what he says in one Invective written against another; but we must learn his Judgment from his didactical Writings or his Letters, or in general from such Works as do not savour of Declamation. Every one knows how a Man is heated and transported beside the Business in Harangues. After all, because a Man censures very sharply the dangerous Niceties wherewith the School-Men's Philosophy is stuffed, it does not follow that he condemns Aristotle's Philosophy. Mr. Placcius (o) having observ'd that Hoornbeeck (p) attributed to Melanchthon the Greek Version of the Augsburg Confession, which appear'd under the Name of Paul Dolscius, believ'd that the Translation of Ecclesiasticus and the Psalms into Greek Verse, are the Work of Melanchthon. This Opinion of Placcius, which was adopted by Mr. Teissier (q) and Mr. Crenius (r), is found to be false. Mr. Lyserus (s) Ecclesiastick Counsellor to H. E. H. the Duke of Hanover has prov'd that the Translations of the Psalter, Ecclesiastes and Ecclesiasticus into Greek Verse, and of the Augsburg Confession into Greek Prose, do really belong to Paul (t) Dolscius, whose Name they bear. See the Letter (v) which he wrote to Mr. Crenius. Here let us note a negligence of Melchior Adam. He (w) affirms, that in 1559 Melanchthon wrote in Greek to the Patriarch of Constantinople, and sent him a Copy of the Greek Version of the Confession of Augsburg, which Version, adds he, was made by Melanchthon, altho' it was publish'd under the Name of Dolscius: And presently after he cites these words. (x) Mitto tibi interpretationem Græcam confessionis sine meo consilio editam. Probo tamen phrasin, ac misi Constantinopolim. These Words are Melanchthon's, and show that he did not make this Version. Wherefore we may say, that Melchior Adam produces a Witness against himself, when he thought to prove what he had affirm'd.

It is pretended (y), that Melanchthon did sometimes call himself Hippophilus Melangæus; But I have seen nothing of his under this disguise.

(P) Cardinal Bembus desir'd three things.] Melanchthon (z) wrote to him a Letter, to recommend to him George Sabinus, who was going to see Italy. The Cardinal was mightily pleas'd with this Recommendation, he show'd great Civility to Sabinus, and desir'd him to dine with him. He ask'd him many Questions during the time of Dinner, and particularly these three: What is the Salary of Melanchthon? What is the Number of his Auditors? And what is his Judgment concerning another Life and Resurrection? To the first Sabinus answer'd, that Melanchthon's Salary was three Hundred Florins a Year. O ungrateful Germany, said the Cardinal, which purchases at so cheap a rate so many Works of so great a Man! The Answer to the second Question was, that Melanchthon had commonly fifteen Hundred Auditors. I cannot tell how to believe it, reply'd the Cardinal, for I know not in all Europe any University besides that of Paris, where the Auditory of a Professor is so numerous. Yet Melanchthon had often two Thousand five Hundred Persons at his Lectures. To the third Question it was answer'd, that the Writings of Melanchthon testifie sufficiently his full assurance of Faith as to these two Articles. (a) I should have a better Opinion of him, reply'd the Cardinal, if he did not believe this I have given you this little Story as I find it in Melchior Adam.

(A) To carry the War into Macedonia.] This was the way the Romans us'd to force the terrible Annibal to abandon Italy; they sent a good Army into Africa under the Conduct of Scipio, which so alarm'd Carthage, that they recall'd Annibal. This has been practis'd a hundred times to good purpose. Memnon, who had a mind to make use of it, fansied it to be the surest Expedient that he could take for supporting the Affairs of Persia. He consider'd that no decisive Battel could be fought against the Macedonian Forces, as long as they were only oppos'd in Asia, he expected only interchanged Blows, and Sieges rais'd or caus'd to be raised. At the beginning of the War he had attack'd Cyzicus (b), and could not make himself Master of it; but a little while after he forc'd Parmenio to raise the Siege of Pitane (c) These little Successes serve only to perpetuate the War. And therefore when it was debated what Course should be taken against the King of Macedonia, who had already pass'd the Hellespont, and was advancing as far as he could toward the Provinces of the King of Persia, his Advice was, that they should destroy all the Frontiers, and Embark all the Troops to transport them into Macedonia. By this means Europe would be made the Seat of War; Asia would be at Peace; the Enemy not finding any means of Subsistence in a Country that had been wasted, would be forc'd to march back and return into Europe to secure his own Kingdom. And certainly it was the safest way that the Persians could choose; but the other Generals did not like this Advice; they thought it not becoming the Grandeur of their Monarch, and therefore they concluded that they must give the Enemy Battel. (d) Persarum duces——quam belli contra Alexandrum gerendi inirent rationem, congressi deliberabant. Memnon ibi Rhodius, imperatoris artibus perquam celebris, ne collatis signis dimicarent, sed agris longe latèque pervastatis, necessariorum omnium ulteriùs progrediendi facultatem Macedonibus interciderent, navalibusque simul & terrestribus copiis in Macedoniam deportatis, totam belli molem in Europam transferre censebat. Etiamsi vero consilium hujus optimum erat (ut eventus postea docuit) reliquorum tamen ducum assensionem impetrare nequivit, ac si conscisset ea quæ magnitudini animorum in Persis neutiquam convenirent. Quare cum sententia de consilio in eum hostibus ineundo pervasisset, &c. The Satrap

(a) Haberem virum prudentiorem si hoc non crederet. Id. ibid.

(b) Diodor. Siculus, l. 17. c. 7.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Id ib. c 18 p m. 826, 827.

(w) Melch. Adam. in vit. Theol. p. 351. (x) Melanchth. Epist. ... Bergensium apud Melch. Adamum, ibid. (y) See Moreri at the word Melanchthon, and Mr. Baillet in the Catalogue of Authors ... Melch. Adam. in vit Theol. p. 360.

his Death. He had the advantage to know by the Conduct of Alexander (B) with reſpect to him, that he was highly eſteem'd, and alſo much fear'd by this great Monarch. He perform'd his Duty very well at the Battel * of Granicus, where the Perſians were ſo unfortunate as not to hinder the Enemy from paſſing over the River, and getting the Victory. He ſignaliz'd himſelf afterwards † in the Defence of Halicarnaſſus. He acted like a Perſon of Honour and a brave Soul in chaſtiſing a Soldier who (C) rail'd at Alexander. His Widow was the firſt Woman (D) whom Alexander knew. Mr. Moreri has not (E) clearly expreſs'd himſelf, when he mentions the Advice which this General gave, to deſtroy all the Country through which the Enemies Troops were to march.

* He commanded the left Wing in the Battel. Diodor. Sicul. l. 17. c. 19.

† Id. ib. c. 24, & ſeq.

of Phrygia declar'd (e), that he would never ſuffer the leaſt Village under his Government to be ſet on Fire. Arſanes was more wiſe ſome time after, for he practis'd in Cilicia (f), what Memnon had advis'd. O how ſtrange a thing is War! when the moſt charitable thing that can be done, is very often to ſet fire to great Cities, and to burn all in many Provinces, becauſe without this the whole Kingdom would be loſt; and the pity which one ſhould ſhow to one of the Members, would be a Cruelty to the whole Body (g). It is then Pity to the whole, which inſpires Men with a Cruelty to a part. Unhappy Neceſſity! This is a deadly Maxim when applied to Matters of Religion, as was done by Catherine de Medicis. " (h) " The King being ſomewhat doubtful, the Queen " to encourage him, among other Things ſpoke " theſe words; Will it not be better, ſaid ſhe, " to tear in pieces thoſe rotten Members, than the Heart of the Church, which is the Spouſe of Chriſt our Lord? " She concluded with a Sentence taken from one " of the Sermons of the Biſhop of Bitonto, in theſe " words: Che pieta lor ſer crudele? Che crudelta lor ſer pietoſo?" Let us return to Memnon. After the Battel of Granicus, he retir'd to (i) Miletus; he defended like a brave and skillful General the City of Halicarnaſſus; and not being able to force the General to raiſe the Siege, he left a good Garriſon in the Citadel, and tranſported the Inhabitants, with their Effects, to the Iſle of Cos (k). He thought always of the Deſign he had propos'd in the great Council of War, and that he might move Darius to put an entire Confidence in him, he ſent (l) to the Court of Perſia his Wife and Children, as a Pledge of his Fidelity. Having receiv'd great ſums of Money, and being made Generaliſſimo, (m) he made great Preparations by Sea and Land; he ſubdu'd the Iſles of Chios and Lesbos; he threatned alſo Eubœa; he held Correſpondence with the Grecians, and corrupted many of them with his Preſents. In a word, he was ready to cut out great deal of Work for his King's Enemies in their own Country, when a Sickneſs ſuddenly ſeiz'd him, and in a few Days remov'd him out of this World. (n) Chium itaque ſibi adjungit, & Lesbum cum claſſe petens, Antiſſam, Methymnum, Pyrrhum & Ereſſum, non magno negocio, capit. Sed Mitylenen & Lesbum, quia major erat, magnoque apparatu & propugnatorum multitudine probe inſtructa, per multos dies oppugnatam, poſt magnam ſuorum jacturam difficulter tandem expugnat. Cujus ſtrenuitatis fama, cum ſubito percrebuiſſet, Cycladum Inſularum plerœque de pactionibus ineundis legationes miſerunt. Rumor tunc allapſus erat Græciæ, Memnonem totâ cum claſſe Eubœam invaſurum: unde factum, ut magno Inſulæ civitates metu perculſæ eſſent, & Græcorum nonnulli Perſarum ſocietatem amplexi, animos rerum novarum ſpe erectos haberent. Huc acceſſit, quod Memnon Græcorum non pautis largitione corruptis, ut ſuas ad Perſarum ſpes aggregatos vellent, perſuaſerat. Atqui viri hujus virtutem ad ampliora progredi fortuna non permiſit, cum enim in valetudinem adverſam incidiſſet, periculoſo quodam morbo correptus, è vita deceſſit, ejuſque morte res Darii labefactatæ ſunt. Rex enim totam belli molem ex Aſiâ in Europam tranſlatum iri ſperaverat.

(a) Arſites Phrygiæ Satrapa ne unum quidem tugurium eorum qui ſibi ſubeſſent incendi ſe paſſurum adfirmaverat, inque ejus ſententiam à ceteris itum erat. Freinſhem. ſuplem. ad Curtium, lib. 2. c. 5. n. 10. He cites Arrian. l. 4. 20.

(b) D'Aubigné, to. 2. b. 1. c. 4. p. m. 542.

(f) Q. Curtius, l. 3. c. 4.

(g) See in the Supplements of Freinſhemius to Q. Curt. l. 2. c. 4. the Reaſons upon which Memnon built his Opinion.

(i) Diod. Sicul. l. 17. c. 22.

(k) Id. ib. c. 24, & ſeq.

(l) Ibid. c. 23.

(m) Ibid. c. 29.

(n) Ibid. p. m. 834, 835.

(o) Freinſhemius, ubi ſupra, l. 2. c. 5. init.

(1) Polyæn. 4. 3, 15.

(2) Curtius, 3. 1, 31.

(B) By the Conduct of Alexander with reſpect to him.] This young Prince marching with his Army near the Territories of Memnon, ſtrictly forbad his Soldiers to commit the leaſt diſorder in them. His deſign was either to render him ſuſpected to the Perſians, or to entice him to his own Party. (o) Alexander quum inter progrediendum agrum à Rege Perſarum Memnoni dono datum adtigiſſet, maleficio (1) abſtineri jubet, coloniſque & fructibus parci: callido commento ſuſpectum facturus hominem induſtrium, & quem (2) ex omnibus hoſtium ducibus unum non contemneret; ſi in ſuas partes tranſducere nequiviſſet. Quumque levitatem regis admirati quidam, acerrimum (3) callidiſſimumque Macedonum hoſtem, quam primum in poteſtatem redactus eſſet, interficiendum, atque interim quibus poſſet cladibus vexandum eſſe dicerent: quin, inquit, potius beneficiis ſupplantamus hominem, & amicum ex inimico facimus, eadem virtute & ſolertia pro nobis ſaturum. I have put in the Margin (p) the words of Quintus Curtius, which Freinſhemius refers to.

(3) Them orat. 9.

(p) Nondum Memnonem vita exceſſiſſe cognoverat (Alexander) in quem omnes intenderat curas, ſatis gnarus cuncta in expedito fore ſi nihil ab eo moveretur.

(C) He chaſtis'd a Soldier who rail'd at Alexander.] I have not taken you to be my Soldier, ſaid he to him, ſtriking him with his Javelin, to rail at this Prince, but to fight againſt him. (a) Μισθοφόρον τινὰ πολλὰ βλάσφημα ἐκ ἀσελγῆ περὶ Ἀλεξάνδρου λόγουσα τῇ λόγχῃ παίσας, Ἐγὼ σε, ἔφη, τέρφω μαχέμενον, ἀλλ' ὑ λοιδορέμενον Ἀλεξάνδρῳ. Militem quendam mercenarium ſuum, qui multis & impuris conviciis Alexandrum proſcindebat, lancea feriens, Ego, inquit, te alo, non ut maledicas Alexandro, ſed ut contra eum pugnes. This is a good Maxim, but it was ſcarce practiſed in the time of Francis I. and Charles V. and I know not whether it be better practis'd at preſent. Freinſhemius obſerves, that Memnon vigorouſly oppos'd ſome fugitive Grecians, who were ſo full of hatred againſt the Macedonians, that they would not ſuffer Alexander to bury his Dead, tho' notwithſtanding that Permiſſion they might boaſt of the Victory. Memnon would not liſten to the Paſſion of theſe Fugitives, and granted a Ceſſation of Arms, and the dead Bodies which Alexander demanded. This was done at the Siege of Halicarnaſſus. Read what follows: (b) Alexander quamquam ea res opinione Græcorum (1) de victoria concedentis videretur; corpora ſuorum, qui ſub ipſis mœnibus oppetierant, inducias poſtulatis ab hoſte repetere, quam inhumata dimittere maluit. At (2) qui cum Perſis erant, Ephialtes & Thraſybulus Athenienſes, quum plus apud ipſos odium adverſus Macedonas, quam humanitatis ratio valeret, negabant indulgendum hoc eſſe infeſtiſſimis hoſtibus. Non tamen permoverunt Memnonem, quin Græcorum moribus indignum eſſe diceret, ſepulturam invidere cæſis hoſtibus. ARMIS ET viribus in adverſos & obſiſtentes utendum: neque contumeliis pugnandum in eos, quos bonis maliſque noſtris ſua dies exemiſſet.

(a) Plut. in Apoph. p. 174.

(b) Freinſhem. ubi ſupra, c. 9.

(1) Juſtin. 6. 6, 9.

(2) Diodor. 17. 25.

(D) His Widow was the firſt Woman whom Alexander knew.] Plutarch aſſures us of this: (c) Οὗτος τύτων ἐθίγησε, ὅτι ἄλλην ἔγνω γυναῖκα πρὸ γάμε, πλὴν Βαρσίνης. Nec has attigit, nec mulierem ante nuptias cognovit ullam, excepta Barſene. She was call'd Barſene, and was the Daughter of Artabazus, whoſe Mother was a Daughter of a King of Perſia. She was Mild and Civil, and underſtood Greek and the Manners of the Grecians, and was very Beautiful: So that Parmenio, conſidering that beſides all this, ſhe was of great Parentage, exhorted the King his Maſter to divert himſelf with this Priſoner (d). She was taken at the ſame time with the Mother, the Wife and Daughters of Darius (e). The Counſel of Parmenio was follow'd, whereupon ſhe prov'd fruitful and bore a Son (f) to Alexander. She had two Siſters (g) whom this Prince Married very advantageouſly.

(c) Plut. in Alexand. p. 676.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Curtius, l. 3. ſub fin. Plutarch ib. ſays that ſhe was taken at Damas.

(f) Call'd Hercules, Plut. ubi infra.

(g) One was the Wife of Eumenes, and the other of Ptolomy. Plut. in Eumene init. p. m. 583.

(E) Mr. Moreri has not clearly expreſs'd himſelf.] Theſe are his words in the Article of Alexander: Darius would not make a Devaſtation in Aſia, according to the Advice of Memnon. This is equivocal; for if I ſhould write to a Man, I have not anſwer'd that Letter according to your Advice, thoſe who ſhould read theſe Words, would rather think that he advis'd me not to anſwer, than to do it. At leaſt they would think the firſt Senſe as good as the other; and therefore I may affirm, that if one did not know what Memnon did adviſe, he could not certainly underſtand what Moreri meant. So neceſſary it is to place our Words right, if we would be underſtood, even when we uſe the Reader's Mother-Tongue.

(h) In march. I ought not to forget, that Mentor, the Brother of Memnon, did very great Services to King Artaxerxes Ochus, and was well rewarded for it *. He reſtor'd his Brother and Brother-in-Law † to the Favour of this Monarch; for he caus'd them to be recall'd from the Court of Macedonia, whither they had fled, after their bad Succeſs in a Civil War ζ.

Mr. Chevreau γ affirms, that MEMNON, General of an Army, who is mentioned at the end of the twelfth Book of the Expedition of Cyrus, by Xenophon, was Deceitful, Covetous, Ambitious, a Slanderer and an Impoſtor. Thus he gives the Character of this wicked Wretch; but he ſhould have obſerv'd that Xenophon calls him Menon, and not Memnon.

MENAGE (GILES) in Latin Ægidius Menagius, was one of the moſt learn'd Men of his Time, and the Varro of the XVIIth Century. It would be needleſs here to give his Elogium and an Abridgment of his Life; which is to be found in Books that are every where diſpers'd δ, and which may be more eaſily tranſported into remote Countries, than this great Dictionary. His illuſtrious Friends erected a very glorious Monument to him, in the Collection entituled (A) Menagiana, which is already in every one's Hands. Had it not been for this, I ſhould have taken pleaſure, and thought it my ſpecial Duty to put here a long Article of Mr. Menage. I ſhould have inſiſted upon the Diſputes he had with Perſons of great Merit; but I would have paſs'd lightly over the Quarrel he had (AΔ) with the Count de Buſſi Rabutin.

Some Perſons whom I infinitely eſteem, did not approve of making the Article of Mr. Menage ſo ſhort in this Dictionary, and oppos'd the Reaſons I have given for my

* See Diodorus Siculus, l. 16.

† He was call'd Artabazus; and Married the Siſter of Memnon, and had by her 11 Sons and 10 Daughters. Id. ib. c. 57.

ζ Id. ib.

γ Chevræana, 2. part. p. 55. Dutch Edit.

δ In the Journal des Savans, Aug. 11. 1692. In the Mercure Gallant of the ſame Year. In the continuation of the Menagiana at the beginning.

(A) In the Collection entituled MENAGIANA.] Thoſe who can judge of Things aright, will confeſs, that this Collection is very proper to diſcover the extent of Wit and Learning, which is the true Character of Mr. Menage. And I may be bold to ſay, that the learned Works which he publiſh'd will not diſtinguiſh him from other learn'd Men ſo advantageouſly as this. To publiſh Books of great Learning, to make excellent Greek and Latin Verſes is not a common Talent, I own it; but it is not extremely rare. It is incomparably more difficult to find Men, who can furniſh Diſcourſe about an infinite number of Things, and who know how to vary them a hundred ways. How many Authors are there, who are admir'd for their Works upon the account of the vaſt Learning that is contain'd in them, who are not able to bear themſelves up in a Diſcourſe viva voce? Some have a Memory full of holes like a Sieve, or like the Cask of the Danaides, which receiv'd every thing, but retain'd nothing; every thing they take in would be quite loſt, if they had not ſome Conſervatories well prepar'd. Such are their Collections, which are Treaſures that fail not in time of need, when one writes a Book, but are very needleſs in learned Diſcourſes. Thoſe who know M Menage only by his Books, might think that he reſembled thoſe learned Men: But if you ſhow the MENAGIANA, you diſtinguiſh him from them, and make him known by a Talent that is given to very few learned Men. There it appears, that he was a Man who ſpoke off hand a thouſand good Things. His Memory was ſo extenſive as to comprehend Ancient and Modern Learning, what belong'd to the Court and the City, the Dead and Living Languages, things Serious, and things Jocoſe, in a word, a thouſand ſorts of Subjects. That which appear'd a triſle to ſome Readers of the Menagiana, who did not conſider nicely the Circumſtances, caus'd admiration in other Readers, who minded the difference that is to be made between a Man that ſpeaks without preparing himſelf, and one that prepares ſomething in order to print it. This Menagiana contains ſome things of ſuch a Nature, that one may ſay of them what one of the Ancients ſaid of Inſects (i). And therefore we cannot ſufficiently commend the care which his illuſtrious Friends took to erect to him a Monument ſo capable of giving him immortal Glory. They were not oblig'd to rectifie what they heard him ſay; for in ſo doing they had not been faithful Hiſtorians of his Converſations. The moſt happy Memories are liable to be deceiv'd, and beſides Mr. Menage ſays ſometimes concerning certain Perſons, what other People being ill inform'd had told him. We muſt not therefore wonder, that there are ſome miſtakes in the Menagiana, and ſome things falſly aſcrib'd to ſome Perſons. He is miſtaken in what he ſays of me.

(b) Turrigeros elephantorum miramur humeros, taurorumque colla, & truces in ſublime jactus, tigrium rapinas, leonum jubas, cum rerum natura nuſquam magis, quam in minimis, tota ſit. Plin. l. 11. c. 2. Ariſtotle alſo ſaid, Μᾶλλον ἐπὶ τῶν ἐλαττόνων ἢ μειζόνων ἴδοι τις ἂν τὴν τῆς διανοίας ἀκείσωσιν. Magis in minore genere (brutorum) quam in majore videris intelligentiæ rationem. Hiſt. Animal. l. 9 c. 7.

(AΔ) The Quarrel he had with the Count de Buſſi Rabutin.] This may paſs for a Quarrel of Authors, although this Count was a Man of War, and had a high Poſt in the French Army. This Affair was determin'd by a Paper-War. He firſt attacked Mr. Menage in a Piece he wrote, and offended him cruelly; but the Verſes which Mr. Menage Printed againſt him, were the moſt outragious and bloody that could be made. Let us firſt ſee the Attack, and after that we will ſee the Retaliation. "(a) Menage being in Love with "Madam de Sevigny; his Birth, his Age, and "his Look, oblig'd him to conceal his Love "as much as he could: And being one Day "with her, when ſhe had a mind to go out "to buy ſome Things, her Waiting-Gentlewoman not being in a condition to follow her, "ſhe bid Menage come into the Coach to her. He "ſeeming to be in jeſt, but in effect being troubled, told her, that it was ſtrange to him, that "ſhe was not ſatisfied with the hardſhips ſhe had "put upon him for a long time, but ſtill deſpis'd "him, by thinking that none could ſpeak ill of "Him and Her. Come, ſaid ſhe, come into the "Coach, if you trouble me, I will go and viſit "you." Thus you ſee that the Provocation was very great; but the Latin Epigram of the Perſon provok'd far exceeded it.

FRANCORUM (b) proceres, media (quis credat?) in aula
Buſſiades ſcripto læſerat horribili.
Pœna levis: LODOIX nebulonem carcere claudens,
Detrahit indigno munus equeſtre Duci.
Sic nebulo, gladiis quos formidabat Iberis;
Quos meruit, Francis fuſtibus eripitur.

If the Author of theſe Latin Verſes had had a Benefice with cure of Souls; if he had been not only a Curate, but a true Curate; he would have taken the meer Accuſation of making Love to Madam de Sevigny, as a horrid Reproach; but as his Ingagement in the Clerkſhip, went no farther than his being qualified to enjoy ſome Penſions out of Benefices, without acting againſt the Modern Diſcipline, that which troubled him in the Diſcourſe of Count Rabutin, was not contain'd in the firſt four or five words. He made no ſcruple to confeſs, that he had been amorous, which I do not prove by his Poems, for that Proof would be doubtful, becauſe that Language is deceitful; but he affirms it in a very ſerious Epiſtle Dedicatory. "I pray "you to remember, ſays he (c), ſpeaking to the Chevalier de Meré, that when we made our Court "together to a Lady of great Quality and Merit, "whatever Paſſion I had for that illuſtrious Perſon, I willingly ſuffer'd that ſhe ſhould love you "more than me, becauſe I lov'd you more than my "ſelf." He promis'd a Work which he never publiſh'd, wherein he was to give an account of his Amours: And the reaſon why I believe it, is taken from theſe words: "Why did he not men"tion Madam de la Fayette and Madam de Sevigny, "who are his Acquaintance?" 'Tis Father Bouhours who ask'd this Queſtion. Mr Menage anſwer'd him:

"Parce (d) Paburſe, ſto. Sibylla Pariſius,
"Deſideramus hic tuam prudentiam.

(a) Hiſtoire amoureuſe des Gaules, p. m. 189, 190.

(b) Menage Epigram. 138. p. 147, 148. Edit. Amſtel. 1687.

(c) Menage Epiſt. Dedicat. to the Obſervations upon the French Tongue, fol. a iij. See alſo what he confeſſes in a Dialogue of Sarraſin, p. m. 146. and which is related in the new Letters againſt Maimbourg. p. 777.

(d) Id. Obſervat. upon the French Tongue, tom. 2 p. 211, 212.

my Brevity. It ſeems to them, that the three Books to which I refer the Reader, will not be in the Hands of all thoſe who will ſeek here for the Hiſtory of this learned Man. I do not agree to their Opinion, and if I enlarge this Article in this ſecond Edition, 'tis only to ſet down a Circumſtance which the * three Authors refer'd to, do not relate; which concerns the good Fortune of Mr. Menage as to his Memory. This was a Gift which he eminently poſſeſs'd (B), and which he preſerv'd to old Age, and what is

* Add to thoſe three, two others that have appear'd ſince the firſt Edition of my Work, viz. Moreri of the Paris Edition, 1699, and the Elogiums of Mr. Perrault.

" The Reverend F Bouhours accuſes me in this " place of having lov'd Madam de Sevigny and Ma- " dam de la Fayette. I will anſwer this Accuſation in " the defence of my Courſe of Life; and I will " make ſuch an Anſwer, that the Scoffers, whoſe " Suffrages F. Bouhours courts, ſhall not be of his " ſide." After all, the Correſpondence Mr. Menage had with ſome Ladies of great Wit, have done him much Honour in the World, and will be glorious to him hereafter: For it is ſo rare, that ſo much Greek and Grammar as he had, ſhould not quite ſtifle the Talents which are neceſſary for a polite and genteel Converſation with Ladies of Quality, that it is a kind of Prodigy. To conclude, the ſharpneſs of the Reſentment which he expreſs'd in his Latin Verſes, did not hinder him from acknowledging the Merit of the Author who had offended him. " Mr. de Buſſy Rabutin is a fine Wit, " ſaid he (e), and I cannot but do him this Ju- " ſtice, altho' he has endeavour'd to give a baſe " Character of me in his Hiſtorie des Gaules. " No Man can write with more Spirit and Fire " than he has done in that Hiſtory." This looks like a Man that is very ready to be reconcil'd. Such a Reconciliation would not have been thought ſtrange, ſince Madam de Sevigny, who had been ſo ill treated in the ſame Work, forgot the Affront, and liv'd with the Author as a very good Kinſwoman. This appears by the Letters ſhe wrote to him, and which were Printed with thoſe of Mr. de Rabutin.

(e) Continuation of the Menagiana, p. 336. Dutch edit.

(B) Memory was a Gift which he eminently poſſeſs'd, and which he preſerv'd—— he recover'd it.] To remember things very happily in one's Youth is no rare thing: But it was a peculiar favour of his Stars, that when he began to grow old he did not perceive his Memory to decay much, which is the too common Misfortune of learned Men. We will here cite a thing which was Publiſh'd in 1685. Many Hiſtorians (f) are guilty of a very abſurd Fault, which is this: " That they relate " the ſame thing ſometimes one way, and ſome- " times another. It would be more for the Ho- " nour of their Memory, that they ſhould be al- " ways miſtaken; but on the other ſide it may be " ſaid, that ſince the Memory is the firſt thing " that dies in a learned Man, and the faculty " which is moſt impoſſible to be retain'd, we muſt " not examine too rigorouſly the Faults which " Forgetfulneſs may occaſion. It ſeems we ought " to allow the ſame Excuſe for theſe Faults, as " Divines do for thoſe which they call quotidianæ " incurſionis, ſince 'tis certain that Forgetfulneſs is " an imperfection into which we relapſe every " moment. From whence it appears, that the Sci- " ences are not proper to make a Man happy in " this Life; for ſince that which is moſt pleaſant in " Learning is to remember many things, and it is a " Talent that is weakned and deſtroy'd very quick- " ly, a learn'd Man ſees himſelf every Day expos'd " to the mortification of finding that what is moſt " pleaſant to him, forſakes him. Happy is the Man, " who like the illuſtrious Mr. Menage, makes no " fine Verſes to complain of the decay of his Me- " mory, till after he has enjoy'd it a long time." What has been juſt now ſaid, that Memory is the firſt thing that dies in a learned Man, was obſerv'd by Thuanus, (g) memoria in longævis ex omnibus animi facultatibus prima debilitatur & vacillat. Seneca the Father made the ſame Obſervation, after he had experienc d in his own Perſon this bad effect of old Age. Cum multa jam mihi, ſays he (h), ex me deſideranda ſenectus fecerit, oculorum aciem retuderit, aurium ſenſum hebet averit, nervorum firmitatem fatigaverit, inter ea quæ retuli memoria eſt, res ex omnibus partibus animi, maxime delicata & fragilis: in quam primum ſenectus incurrit. The Paſſage which I have cited from the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, informs us, that Mr. Menage made ſome Verſes to complain of the decay of his Memory: They are to be ſeen in the firſt Book of his Poems at p. 13, of the Amſterdam Edition 1687. My Reader, if I miſtake not, will be glad to ſee ſome of them here; and they will not be ſuperfluous, ſince they contain a deſcription of this fine Talent, whereof Mr. Menage, as I have ſaid, was poſſeſs'd. Here follows therefore the beginning of the Hymn which he addreſs'd to the Goddeſs of Memory.

(f) Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres June 1695. art. 1. p. 602. of the 2*d Edition.*

(g) Thuanus, lib. 134, p. m. 1082. col. 1.

(h) Seneca Pater præfat. l. 1. controverſ. p. m 70.

Muſarum (i) veneranda parens, quam Juppiter ipſe,
Ille pater Divûm, magno dilexit amore,
MNEMOSYNE, fidum tu me patrona clientem
Deſeris? Ah memini, juvenis cum mille Sophorum,
Mille recenſerem Sectarum nomina: mille
Stemmata narrarem, totaſque ex ordine gentes.
Nunc oblita mihi tot numina. Vix mihi numen
Hæret mente meum. Memini, cum plurima Homeri,
Plurima Peligni recitarem carmina Vatis: Omnia Virgilii memori cum mente tenerem.
Nunc oblita mihi tot carmina. Non ego poſſim,
Condita quæ nuper mihi ſunt, meminiſſe meorum.
Gallia quem ſtupuit, ſtupuit me maximus ille
BIGNONIDES, legum capita omnia commemorantem.
Fabellas lepidas & acute dicta Sophorum
Narrabam juvenis, juvenum mirante caterva.
Ingenii pars illa mei, placuiſſe puellis
Quod potui, periit: nunc illis fabula fio.
Pendebant olim, memini, narrantis ab ore.
Fabellas eaſdem, verſus eoſdem repetentem
(Has narraſſe ſemel, ſemel hos recitaſſe putabam?
Id me hodie monuit fiduſque vetuſque ſodalis)
Nunc me faſtoſæ medio in ſermone relinquunt.

(i) Menag. Poem. l. 1. p m. 13.

You ſee that among other things he owns that he was told, that he repeated the ſame Stories, thinking it was the firſt time he had told them. Afterwards he ſupplicates the Goddeſs, either that ſhe would not abandon him, or that ſhe would ſo utterly forſake him, that he ſhould not ſo much as remember that he had ever known any thing.

Si (a) tales tu, Diva, preces audire recuſas,
Diva, precor, memorem omnem nobis eripe mentem.
Orbilius fiam, cunctarum oblivio rerum:
Nec meminiſſe queam, tot rerum non meminiſſe.

(a) Id. ib. p. 14.

His Prayer was heard in the moſt favourable ſenſe, his Memory return'd to him; and he did ſolemnly and publickly thank the Deity which was ſo propitious to him. Here follows the beginning of the Thankſgiving, which he publiſh'd November 27, 1690, Aged 77 Years, 3 Months and 7 Days.

MUSARUM veneranda parens; quam Juppiter ipſe,
Ipſe pater Divum, tenero dilexit amore;
Audiſti mea vota. Seni memorem mihi mentem
Diva redonaſti. Magnorum nomine mille,
Et proceres omnes ab orig.ne Sablolienſes,
Leges Romanas, Sectas memorare Sophorum,
Tulli mille locos, & Homeri carmina centum,
Et centum poſſum verſus recitare Maronis.
Ingenii pars illa mei, juvenis placuiſſe
Quod potui, ecce redux. Tua ſunt hæc munera, Diva.
Ingenii per te nobis renovata juventa eſt.

Let us alſo ſet down the Concluſion of this little Poem, wherein the Author ſupplicates the Deity, which had reſtor'd to him the remembrance of ſo many things, to take from him the remembrance of the Injuries he had receiv'd.

Muſarum veneranda parens, quam Juppiter ipſe,
Ipſe pater Divûm, tenero dilexit amore;
O diva, ô noſtræ merito pars maxima famæ,
Eſt aliud ſupplex quod ego tua numina poſco.
Si te non pigeat, ſi non indebita poſco,
Quæ mihi tot rerum, rerum mihi jucundarum,
Quas oblitus eram, rurſum meminiſſe dediſti,
Da, Dea; da nobis, atrocia tot nebulonum,
Immeritum qui me pergunt vexare libellis,
Dicta oblivi ſci, memori mihi condita mente.

But notwithſtanding this happy Reſtoration, there is proof that Menage did not ſpeak exactly of the thing. Conſider a little theſe Words of the Menagiana. " (b) I ſaid ſome Years ago, that I had loſt " one half of my Memory, becauſe I remembred " very well what I had learn'd, and did not at all re- " member what I had been told. This was related " in Holland, and thoſe who knew me, bewail'd " my Condition, thinking that I had entirely loſt " it. Yet I have ſtill a pretty good Memory, " and I have given ſufficient proofs of it by the " Books which I have publiſh'd ſince that [illegible]".

(b) Menagiana, 3[illegible] the Dutch dition.

is more rare, he recover'd it after ſome interruption. There are many People who could wiſh, that he had publiſh'd ſome (C) of his Pleas.

MESTREZAT (JOHN) a Miniſter of the Church of Paris, and deſcended from (A) a very good Family, was born at Geneva in 1592. He was ſent very young to the Academy of Saumur; and there he gave ſingular Proofs of his excellent Genius in a publick Diſputation (B) He was but eighteen Years old when he was offer'd the Chair of a Profeſſor in Philoſophy; and he was appointed to be Miniſter to the (C) Church of Paris, as ſoon as he was admitted into the Miniſtry; a thing altogether extraordinary. They had no cauſe to repent of having call'd him ſo early; for his Conferences with the Roman (D) Catholicks, his (E) Deputations, his Sermons (F) and his Books made him appear to be one of the ableſt Men the Reform'd had in France. There is a very particular Circumſtance related of a Tryal (G) he had in the Parliament of Paris. He

How could he think, that the report of a Diſcourſe in Converſation ſhould perſuade any in Holland, that he had entirely loſt his Memory? Had they not ſeen his Hymn to Mnemoſyne, wherein he declared to all the World that he remembred nothing. To know the Strength and Capacity of his Memory, one needs only conſider what he ſays of it, and what the Abbot du Bos adds at the 309, 310, 311, Pages of the firſt Edition of the Menagiana in Holland.

(C) That he had publiſh'd ſome of his Pleas.] His firſt Profeſſion was that of an Advocate, as we learn from himſelf in this Paſſage of his Origines. (c) In 1632, I was admitted Advocate at Angers, which is the place of my Birth, and there I pleaded my firſt Cauſe againſt Mr. Ayrault, my Couſin-German, who was ſince Counſellor in the Parliament of Bretagne, and Comiſſary in the Chamber of Juſtice. I came to Paris in the ſame Year, where I was alſo admitted Advocate, and where I pleaded for many Years. In 1634, the Parliament of Paris held their extraordinary Seſſions at Poitiers, where I pleaded alſo. And this made Mr. Coſtar ſay, that as there were Serjants ſerving Warrants through all the Kingdom, ſo I was an Advocate pleading through all the Kingdom: And upon the ſame account Father Jacob a Carmelite told me, in one of his Catalogues of New-Books, he did me the Honour to inſcribe to me, Atque erit in triplici par tibi nemo foro. The Memoirs for the Life of Mr. Menage, Printed at the beginning of the continuation of the Menagiana, inform us, that he pleaded many Cauſes in the Parliament of Paris, one among the reſt for M. Sengebere his Maſter-in-Law, who had a mind to Divorce his Wife for Adultery. I am ſure this Plea would be very acceptable to many People, if it were Printed.

(A) Deſcended from a very good Family.] Ami MESTREZAT, his Father, was Firſt Syndick of Geneva, and had another Son who was Firſt Syndick of the ſame City; which is one of the principal Offices of that State. Philip MESTREZAT Nephew to the Miniſter of Charenton, was a famous (d) Profeſſor of Divinity at Geneva. His Eldeſt Son who died a few Years ago (e), had exercis'd the Office of Syndick of the Republick with great Honour. N. MESTREZAT, the other Son of Philip, is at this Day an able Phyſician at Geneva (f).

(B) In a publick Diſputation] He obſerv'd, that the Profeſſor of Philoſophy, who preſided at the Diſputation, anſwer'd to an Argument, tranſeat major, nego minorem, and he roſe up to argue, after he who oppos'd had made an end. His Subject was, that the Minor could not be deny'd, if the Major was right, and he maintain'd this with ſo much ſtrength of Reaſon, that he oblig'd the Profeſſor to own it was a fault. Mr. du Pleſſis Mornay was preſent at this Act (g).

(D) He was appointed Miniſter of the Church of Paris as ſoon as he was admitted into the Miniſtry.] He preſented himſelf to the Synod of Charenton to be admitted to the Miniſtry. Mr. du Moulin, who was entruſted to find a Paſtor for the Church of Orleans, had caſt his Eyes upon him for this Office; but young Meſtrezat being examin'd in the Conſiſtory of Charenton, diſcover'd ſo much Learning, that this Church thought fit to keep him for their own Service (h).

(D) His Conferences with the Roman Catholicks.] I have been told that his Conference with F. Veron was Printed, and that he gloriouſly triumph'd over this famous Diſputant. That which he had with the Jeſuit Regourd in the preſence of Queen Anne of Auſtria, was never publiſh'd, and it is a common Tradition among the Reform'd in France, that this Princeſs being aſtoniſh'd to find that this Jeſuit who had boaſted he could eaſily confound all the Miniſters, was reduc'd to the greateſt Confuſion by Meſtrezat, requir'd that the acts of this Diſpute ſhould not be Printed, which thoſe of the Reform'd Religion punctually obey'd.

(E) His Deputations.] 'Tis ſaid, that being deputed by a National Synod to Lewis XIII. he anſwer'd admirably to three Queſtions, which Cardinal Richelieu ſuggeſted to that Monarch to be put to him. 1. Why do you make uſe of the Liturgy of Geneva? 2. Why do you join in your Prayers the Papiſts with the Turks and Pagans? 3. Why do you ſuffer Miniſters that are not French? He anſwer'd, 1. That ſince they made Profeſſion of the ſame Religion with thoſe of Geneva, it was not ſurpriſing that they ſhould make uſe of the ſame Liturgy. 2. That it was no wonder, that at a time when thoſe of the Romiſh Communion treated the Proteſtants as Turks and Pagans would have done, they ſhould joyn the Papiſts with thoſe Infidels; but that they had taken the word Papiſts out of the latter Editions, even under the Reign of Henry IV. and that if it remain'd ſtill in ſome, they had not been Printed in France. 3. That it were to be wiſh'd, that ſo many Italian Monks that are now in France, had as great a Zeal for his Majeſty, as theſe foreign Miniſters had, who acknowledg'd no other Sovereign in the Kingdom but the King. Whereupon Cardinal Richelieu, putting his Hand on his Shoulder, ſaid, Behold the boldeſt Miniſter in France (i).

(F) His Sermons and his Books.] His Language did not come near the Polite and clean Style of Mr. Daillé; but he Preach'd with greater depth of Judgment, Strength and Reaſon, and more Learning than he did. There are no Sermons that contain a more ſublime Theology than thoſe he Preach'd upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews, which were Printed in many Volumes. 'Tis ſaid (k), that having met in the Street an Eccleſiaſtick of his Acquaintance, who had Preach'd a whole Lent with Applauſe, and having congratulated him for it, I took, anſwer'd the other, out of your Sermons, the beſt things that I ſaid in mine. He handled the Controverſie about the Authority of the Scripture (l), and of the Church (m), with a peculiar ſtrength of Reaſon, and he refuted upon thoſe important Subjects all the Subtilties of Father Regourd and Cardinal du Perron. He ſhow'd by theſe Works that he was very well vers'd in the Fathers, and underſtood Philoſophy and the Scripture. His Treatiſe concerning (n) Communion with Jeſus Chriſt in the Sacrament of the Euchariſt, is highly eſteemed. His Heirs (o) have ſtill by them many Manuſcripts, which were found in his Study; his Sermons (p) upon the Catechiſm; the Explication of the Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Galatians, and of ſome Chapters of the Epiſtle to the Epheſians; ſelect Sermons upon divers Texts, and many Tracts. Note, that he publiſh'd at Sedan a Volume of Sermons in 1625, 8°. Thoſe which he wrote upon the 1ſt Epiſtle of St. John are in two Volumes.

(G) Of a Tryal he had in the Parliament of Paris.] He who preſided at the Audience where the Cauſe was pleaded, having obſerv'd by his Look that he was not well ſatisfied with his Advocate, interrupted him, and addreſſing himſelf to the Miniſter, It ſeems, ſaid he to him, that what is alledg'd for your Cauſe does not pleaſe you; the Court gives you leave to plead for your ſelf. 'Tis ſaid, that Mr. Meſtrezat did argue ſo well in his own Cauſe, that he carried it without any difficulty (q).

(c) Menage, Origines de la Langue Françoiſe, at the word rachat, p. 611, edit. 1694. See the Memoirs of Mr. Marolles, p. 96.

(d) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of a Volume of his Uncle's Sermons upon the Epiſtle to the Hebrews.

(e) I write this in 1697.

(f) Taken from a Memorial ſent by Mr. Pictet. Note, that after this Memorial was communicated to me, I heard that Mr. Meſtrezat the Phyſician was promoted to the Office of Counſellor to the Republick.

(g) A Memorial communicated by Mr. Pictet.

(h) Ibid.

(i) A Memorial of Mr. Pictet.

(k) Ibid.

(l) In the Book entituled, A Treatiſe of the Holy Scripture, wherein is ſhown the certainty and fulneſs of the Faith, and its independence upon the Authority of the Church. At Geneva 1632, in 8°.

(m) In his Treatiſe of the Church Printed at Geneva in 1649, in 4°.

(n) Printed at Sedan 1625, in 8°.

(o) The Memorial of Mr. Pictet.

(p) Some of them are Printing at Geneva, with others of Mr. Daillé. See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, November 1702 p. 586.

(q) Ibid.

(*) That

He died the 2d of May 1657, in the forty third Year of his Miniſtry. He left but one * Daughter †.

METELLA. There were ſeveral Ladies of this Name in ancient Rome, who were of very bad Reputation. Cæcilia METELLA, the Siſter of Quintus Cæcilius Metellus Numidicus, Married Lucius Lucullus From their Marriage proceeded the famous Lucullus, who made War againſt Mithridates β. We learn from Plutarch, that this Metella was much defam'd for her bad Life γ. I cannot believe that it was ſhe whom Horace and Valerius Maximus (A) have mention'd. Cæcilia METELLA, the Daughter of Quintius Cæcilius Metellus Pius, the Son of Numidicus, Married firſt Marcus Æmilius Scaurus, and in a ſecond Marriage the famous Sylla. She had by her firſt Marriage a Son and a Daughter. The Son Marcus Æmilius Scaurus, diſtinguiſh'd himſelf upon many accounts, and chiefly by the magnificent Theatre which he built. The Daughter call'd Æmilia, was firſt Married to Marcus Acilius Glabrio, and afterwards to Pompey the Great, and died in Child-Bed δ. Theſe two Children found Sylla, the ſecond Husband of their Mother, to be a good Patron; for tho' Metella did not govern her ſelf well, nevertheleſs ſhe was ζ much reſpected by Sylla. This was, as 'tis ſaid, becauſe he knew nothing of the Debauchery of his Wife, which he firſt heard the News of at the Siege of Athens. He treated this City very harſhly becauſe of the Defamations they utter'd againſt Metella upon the Ramparts ϑ. Having got two Twins by this Wife, the one a Son and the other a Daughter, he gave the Name of Fauſtus to the Son, and that of Fauſta to the Daughter κ. The latter did not at all degenerate (B), but improv'd beyond

(A) That it was ſhe whom Horace and Valerius Maximus have mention'd.] Horace tells us, that Æſop's Son diſſolv'd in Vinegar a Pearl of great price, and drunk it off; and he obſerves that this Pearl had ſerved as a Pendant at the Ear of Metella (d). An old Scholiaſt upon Horace ſays, that this Metella was the Wife of Æſop's Son. I ſhould rather believe that there was only an unlawful familiarity between them; and this is the Opinion of Mr. Dacier. He doubts (e), whether this Metella was not the Siſter of Q. Cæcilius Metellus Numidicus, who was married to L. Lucullus. I cannot believe that it was ſhe, for the Wife of this Lucullus was probably old, when the Son of Æſop begun to be able to make Love. She had a Niece who Married Sylla in the Year 665 of Rome, and who had by another Husband two Children fit for Marriage. We have ſeen (f) that the Daughter of Sylla's Wife was Married to Pompey: But ſhe had been Married to another Husband; and we know that Sylla who caus'd her to Marry Pompey, died in 672. If this Niece was a Grandmother at that time, we may reaſonably think, that the Great Aunt was ſcarce a fit Object to be Courted. Add to this, that Lucullus the Son of Metella, the Great Aunt, commanded the Roman Army againſt Mithridates as Conſul in the Year of Rome 679, and that Cicero ſome Years after the Battel (g) of Pharſalia makes mention of Æſop's Son (h), as of one that created him much trouble. It is not eaſie therefore to adjuſt the times of the Love of theſe two Perſons.

As for what concerns Valerius Maximus, I find in the Onomaſticon of Glandorp a Period that is liable to Cenſure; which is this: (i) Eamdem eſſe volunt de qua Valerius libro primo capite quinto, auctor de viris illuſtribus capite ſexageſimo ſecundo, ut viris duobus nuptam fuiſſe intelligamus. He means, that Metella the Siſter of Metellus Numidicus, and Mother to Lucius † Lucullus, was the ſame with her, whom Valerius Maximus and Aurelius Victor have ſpoken of. This is not amiſs as to the laſt Author, ſince 'tis certain that he ſpoke expreſly of Metella, the Siſter of Metellus Numidicus; but the other Writer ſpoke in ſuch an indefinite way, that he may be conjectur'd to be as well for as againſt it; and ſo Glandorp ſhould not have ſtuffed his Paper with Conjectures about the things he mentions. But I may relate the matter of Fact, which is curious.

Cæcilia, the Wife of Metellus, had a Niece fit for Marriage, who carried her one Night into a Chappel to ſeek for Nuptial Preſages. This was the Cuſtom when any one deſign'd to marry a Maid. The Aunt ſate down and the Niece ſtood by her: They were a long time liſtening before they could hear any thing. The Maid finding her ſelf weary with ſtanding, deſir'd her Aunt to let her ſit down a few Minutes: With all my Heart, reply'd the Aunt, I will give you my Place. Theſe words were the Omen that were ſought for: Cæcilia died quickly after, and her Husband married the young Niece. This is what Valerius Maximus (k) relates. Cicero (l) relates it alſo: He had it from Lucius Flaccus (m) a Prieſt of Mars. There is a Note of Pighius in Valerius Maximus Variorum, which ſays, that this Lucius Flaccus was Conſul in 622. But this was a long time before Cicero was in a Condition to hold a familiar Diſcourſe with great Men. Pighius adds (n), that this Cæcilia was the Siſter of Metellus Numidicus, and he proves it by Aurelius Victor, who ſays, that this Metellus would not make a Funeral Oration for Metellus his Brother-in-Law. But Aurelius Victor has not nam'd this Brother-in-Law, and ſo Pighius builds upon a falſe Suppoſition. Metellæ ſororis ſuæ virum laudare noluit, quod is ſolus judicium contra leges detrectaret. Theſe are the words of Aurelius Victor in the good Editions. What ſeems to me moſt memorable in this Fact, is the ſtrange Superſtition of ancient Rome. Not only Servant Maids ſought after Omens for Marriage, but the Ladies of Quality, and thoſe who were of a Rank equal to that of our Dutcheſſes, amus'd themſelves with thoſe Fooleries, and went out, expecting the firſt word that Fortune ſhould make them hear. Even to this Day the Quality of a Dutcheſs does not free one from theſe augural Superſtitions, wherewith the Citizens Wives are infatuated.

(B) Fauſta did not at all degenerate.] She was one of the unchaſteſt Women in her time; and it was at leaſt true with reſpect to her and Metella her Mother, that the World grows worſe and worſe. Metella was lewd; but mox datura (o) progeniem vitioſiorem. Fauſta had for a third Husband the famous Milo, whom the Murder of Clodius, and the Oration of Cicero have made ſo well known. It was not ſafe to jeſt with him, and yet his Wife ſcarce ever fear'd him; for ſhe admitted her Gallants with ſo little precaution, that one of them was one day catch'd by Milo. He would have been run through if he had not had much Money; but he redeem'd his Life by paying the ſum to which Milo condemn'd him, after he had given him a hundred laſhes with a Whip. (p) M. Varro in litteris atque vita ſide homo multæ & gravis, in libro, quem ſcripſit Pius aut de pace, C. Salluſtium ſcriptorem ſeriæ illius & ſeveræ orationis, in cujus hiſtoria notiones cenſorias fieri atque exerceri vid. mus, in adulterio deprenſum ab Annio Milone loris bene cæſum dicit, & quum dediſſet pecuniam, dimiſſum. 'Tis a ſad thing that this ſhameful Diſgrace ſhould happen to a great Author; for it was Salluſt the Hiſtorian who was ſo ill treated at Fauſta's Houſe. But the Gallants were never the better for this Example; for one Villius is ſaid to have receiv'd a hundred blows with the Fiſt in the ſame place, and narrowly eſcap'd being ſtabb'd (a). Some ſay, that this Milo treated him after this manner (b). It was well for him that he was robuſt, for if he had not, his Arms would not have been able to ſtrike as often as was neceſſary thoſe who came to kiſs his Wife. But others think with more probability, that he who treated thus the unfortunate Villius, was another Gallant of Fauſta, who being with her when Villius came in, drove him away diſgracefully. This Villius courted Fauſta.

* He married her to James Maubert Sieur de Boiſgibaut.

† Taken from a Memorial ſent to me from Geneva by Mr Pictet Profeſſor of Divinity.

β Plut. ubi infra.

γ Ἡ Μέτελλα ὡς κ βασιλικῶς σωφρονοῦσα.

δ Plut. in Sylla, p. 473.

ζ Ibid. p. 455.

ϑ Ibid. p. 473.

κ Ibid. p. 473.

(d) Filius Æſopi detractam ex aure Metellæ (Scilicet ut decies ſolidum exſorberet) aceto Diluit inſignem baccam. Horat. Sat. 3. l. 2. v. 239.

(e) Remarks upon this place of Horace, to. 7. p.m. 301, 302.

(f) In the Text of this Article.

(g) It was fought in 705.

(h) Quin etiam Æſopi filius me excruciat. Cicero ad Atticum, epiſt. 15. l. 11.

(i) Gland. p. 170.

(†) He who overcame Mithridates.

(k) Lib. 1. c. 5. n. 4.

(l) De Divinat. l. 1. fol. m. 511. C.

(m) L. Flaccum flaminem Martialem ego audivi quum diceret. Ibid.

(n) Ipſam vero Cæciliam Q. Numidici ſororem fuiſſe ex auctore de viris illuſtribus eſt colligere, qui cap. 62. ſcribit Numidicum ſororis ſuæ virum Metellum laudare noluiſſe, quod is olim ſuum judicium & leges derrectarat. Pighius in Val. Maximum ubi ſupra.

(o) See Horace Ode 6. l. 3.

(p) Aul. Gellius, l. 17. c. 18.

(a) Villius in Fauſta Syllæ gener (hoc miſer uno Nomine deceptus) pœnas dedit uſque ſuperque Quam ſatis eſt pugnis cæſus, ferroque peritus, Excluſus fore quum Longarenus foret intus. Horat. Sat. 2. l. 1. v. 64.

(b) Vetus interpres Horatii.

beyond her Mother. Since Metella was of an Age to have Children, I do not understand (C) the Reflexion of Plutarch. Metella became dangerously sick, at a time when her Husband was making great Entertainments for the People upon occasion of a great Vow. He had Consecrated to Hercules the tenth part of his Estate, and treated the People magnificently for many Days. The Priests declar'd to him, that it was not lawful for him to go and see his Wife, nor to suffer his House to de defil'd by the Death of any one whatsoever. Whereupon he sent a Letter of Divorce to Metella, and order'd that she should be carried out of his House before she died. Superstition * mov'd him to do all these things against his Inclination; for he was much afflicted to lose his Wife, and made her a very magnificent Funeral to ease his Grief. Upon the same account he made great Feasts for his Friends, without any regard to the Sumptuary Laws, which he himself had enacted †. These he violated boldly, tho' he durst not violate the ridiculous and barbarous Ceremonies which the Priests had appointed him. If the Son of Æsop was belov'd by one Metella (D), as there is some probability, I am strongly inclin'd to think, that the two gallant Ladies I have spoken of, are not the only Persons of that Name who behav'd themselves ill. Some Authors ‡ have given the Name of METELLA to one of Pompey's Wives, whom he divorc'd for Unchastity; but she should rather be call'd Mucia: And of her I treat under that word.

* Καὶ τοῦτο μὲν ἀκεκλῶς τὸ νόμιμον ὑπὸ δεισιδαιμονίας ἐτήρησε, τὸν δὲ τῆς ταφῆς δεῖζον τὴν δαπάνην νόμου αὐτὸς παρανομήσας πρός ἐνὸς μηδενὸς ἀναλώματος φείσατο. Atque hac in re leges curiose ex superstitione servavit: at legem funerariam, quam tulerat ipse, convulsit nullo habito sumptus modo. Ibid. p. 474. B.

† Id. ib.

‡ See Bisselius, ruinar. illustr. decade 4. parte 4. p. 2984.

METELLUS

chiefly because she was of the first Quality. Horace laughs at this foolish Conceit, and shows that it does not proceed from Nature (c), which teaches better things (d). This censure prov'd useless, and Persius was oblig'd to renew it.

(c) Huic si Mutonis verbis mala tanta videntis Diceret hæc animus: quid vis tibi? nunquid ego à te Magno prognatum deposco consule cunnum Velatumque stola, mea cum conferbuit ira? Quid responderet? magno patre nata puella est, At quanto meliora monet pugnantiaque istis Dives opis natura suæ. Horat. Sat. 2. l. 1. v. 68.

(d) Nec magis huic inter niveos virideſque lapillos (Sit licet hoc Cerinthe tuum) tenerum est femur aut crus Rectius, atque etiam melius persæpe togatæ. Ibid. v. 80. (e) Persius sat. 6. sub fin. (f) Mr. Dacier it Horat. tom. 7. p. 145. (g) Macrob. Saturn. l. 2. c. 2. p. 324. (h) Plut. in Sylla, p. 453.

(e) Nunc nunc impensius unge,
Unge puer caules. Mihi festa luce coquatur
Urtica, & fissa fumosum finciput aure;
Ut tuus iste nepos olim satur anserus extis,
Cum morosa vago singultiet inguine vena,
PATRICIÆ immejet vulvæ.

"And there are still many People like Villius, who "like nothing in their Mistress but their Name and "their Quality." These are the Words of an able Commentator (f). I have not yet nam'd all the Gallants of our Fausta, whose Memory is transmitted to us in Books. She had two at the same time, whose Names gave occasion to a witty saying of her Brother. Faustus Sullæ filius cum soror ejus eodem tempore duos maechos haberet, Fulvium fulloni filium & Pompeium Maculam, miror, inquit, sororem meam habere Maculam cum fullonem habeat (g). I wonder, said he, that my Sister should have a Spot, since she has a fuller. But the Latin is infinitely more graceful.

(C) I do not understand the Reflexion of Plutarch.] He says, that Sylla before he Married Metella, had three Wives, whereof the last call'd Cælia, was fairly divorc'd upon pretence of Barrenness; but, adds Plutarch, the Marriage which Sylla contracted a few days after with Metella, shows that he had unjustly alledg'd against Cælia this reason of Divorce. (h) Ὀλίγαις δὲ ὕστερον ἡμέραις ἀγαγόμενος τὴν Μετέλλαν ἔδοξε διὰ τοῦτο τὴν Κοιλίαν ὡς κακῶς αἰτιάσασθαι. Verum quod paucis diebus post Metellam duxit, apparuit eum immerito illam causam in Cæliam prætendisse. To make this reasoning of Plutarch good, we must suppose, that according to the Course of Nature and a judicious Conduct, a Man who has divorc'd his Wife for Barrenness, should not make haste to take another: But common Sense tells us, that this cannot be suppos'd without falling into an Error; for every one that divorces his Wife, and does it only upon the account of Barrenness, testifies by that, that he wishes to have Children. And therefore Reason requires that he should Marry again quickly to another Woman, who is like to be Fruitful: And if he should not Marry again, or delay for a long time to do it, he would thereby plainly declare, that he had given a false Reason for his Divorce. What did it concern him, might one say, whether his Wife was Barren or no, since after her Divorce he continues unmarried? And therefore it is not true, that Sylla Marrying quickly to Metella, was a Confutation of the reason for which he said that he divorc'd Cælia; on the contrary that Marriage did confirm it, and justifie his Conduct. The Reason of Plutarch were good, if Metella had been past the Age of Child-bearing; but he informs us himself that she was brought to bed of two Twins. That which deceiv'd him seems to be this: He reason'd thus with himself; Sylla would not have concluded his Marriage with Metella a little while after her divorce, if he had not been in Love with her some time before, and prepar'd things for his new Marriage before the dissolution of the former. It was therefore his desire to Marry Metella, that push'd him on to a Divorce; and so the Barrenness of Cælia was only a vain pretence. Plutarch might have Reason at the bottom; perhaps the only Motive of Sylla was the desire he had to Marry Metella. However since Plutarch builds his Proposition upon a very ambiguous Proof, and which, according to the order of Nature and good Sense, must needs be false, he is guilty of a Paralogism. I have said elsewhere, that such a Criticism as this, which may be call'd a Logical Criticism, may do young Readers more service than a Grammatical Criticism.

(D) If the Son of Æsop was belov'd by one Metella.] That which makes me express my self after this manner is this, That the Words of Horace do not necessarily signifie, that the Lady whose Pearl was swallow'd by Æsop's Son, was in Love with him. Horace might have mention'd Metella, in case she had been a Lady stately adorn'd with precious Stones; for since he designed to set forth the extravagant Prodigality of Æsop's Son, he was to describe the Pearl by such lively strokes as might strongly affect the Reader. If therefore there had been a Lady call'd Metella, famous for the magnificence of her precious Stones, he would have given a great Idea of the price of a Pearl, by saying, that it serv'd as a Pendant to the Ear of such a Lady; and so the Expression of Horace, detractam ex aure Metellæ, would not be useless, even tho' it should be suppos'd that the Son of Æsop did not become Master of that Pearl but by purchase. Yet I think it very probable, that this Metella behav'd her self very ill with the Son of this Comedian: And perhaps it may very well be, that she was the same with that Metella who is mention'd in Cicero's Letters. There are some Commentators who think, that when Cicero complains (i) of being tormented by the Son of Æsop, he means that this Man was a Companion of Dolabella (k) in the Debaucheries which so much vex'd Tullia, and which were one of the causes of breaking off her Marriage with Dolabella. 2 That these Debaucheries were the intrigues of Dolabella with some merry Ladies, and particularly with Metella. This Conjecture is grounded upon a Passage in another Letter of Cicero, wherein Metella is reckon'd among the causes of the Divorce of Tullia. (l) Melius quidem in pessimis nihil fuit discidio aliquid fecissemus ut vivi, vel tabularum novarum nomine, vel nocturnarum expugnationum, vel Metellæ; vel omnium malorum. Some think that this Metella (m) was she whom Lentulus Spinther divorc'd, and that the Metella of Æsop's Son (n) was she that was divorc'd by this Lentulus. What is certain is, that there was about that time a very merry Lady call'd Metella, whose Amours afforded as much Matter to the Poets, as Madam d'Olonne has done to the Writers of the XVIIth Century. Here

(i) Quin etiam Æsopi filius me excruciat. Cicero ad Attic. epist. 15. l 11.

(k) Quia socius Dolabellæ in adulteriis Pellicum Tulliæ, ut Metellæ de qua epist. 23. Poema in editione epist. Cicer. ad Atticum Graviana, tom. 2. p. 248.

(l) Cicero ad Attic. l. 11 epist. 23.

(m) Corradus in Cicer ad Attic epist 7 l 13.

(n) Et Lentulum cum Metella certe feciſſe divortium. Cicero ib epiſt. 7 l. 13 See alſo epiſt. 5. l 12

METELLUS CELER (QUINTUS) Conſul in the Year of Rome 693, diſcharg'd the Office of Prætor in the Year of Cicero's Conſulſhip ζ, and did good Service to the γ Commonwealth in oppoſing the Troops of Catiline, which were marching into Gallia Ciſalpina; of which Province he obtain'd the Government after his Prætorſhip. He was a Perſon of Merit, but very unhappy in chooſing a Wife; for he Married (A) a Siſter of Clodius, who firſt diſgrac'd him by her lewdneſs, and then Poyſon'd him. She was his Couſin ♪ German. 'Tis ſhe that under the Name of Lesbia is ſo much defam'd by Catullus. Cicero (B) loſt a very good Friend by the Death of this Metellus in 694. I ſhall obſerve a miſtake (C) of Turnebus. Our Metellus was of the College of the Augurs ζ.

ζ In 690
γ Salluſt. in bell. Catilin. p m. 81. 176.
♪ Cicero pro Cœlio, p. 518. edit. Abrami.
ζ Cicero in Vatinium, p. 306. ejuſdem edit.

METELLUS (LUCIUS) a Tribune of the People when Cæſar made himſelf Maſter of Rome, at the beginning of the Civil Wars, had more Courage than all the other Magiſtrates.

Here follow two Verſes of Ovid taken out of the ſecond Elogy of the ſecond Book de Triſtibus:

Et quorum libris modo diſſimulata Perillæ
Nomine nunc legitur dicta, Metelle, tuo.

We learn from Apuleius how the Author was called who diſguis'd the Name of Metella by that of Perilla. Eadem opera accuſent, ſays he, p. 279 of his Apology, C. Catullum quod Lesbiam pro Clodia nominavit, & Ticidam ſimiliter quod quæ Metella erat, Perillam ſcripſerit.

(a) Plutarch. in Ciceron. vita, p. 875.

(A) He married a Siſter of Clodius.] This is the Clodia whom Cicero has ſo well deſcrib'd in his Pleading for Cœlius, a Provincial, and a fine Youth, who was accus'd of many Crimes, and among the reſt of having a deſign to poyſon Clodia, to excuſe himſelf from paying the ſumms of Money which he had borrow'd of her. Cicero was his Advocate, and pleaded for him with ſo much ſtrength of Reaſon, that he was acquitted. Clodia undertook this Affair, only to be reveng'd upon him for a ſenſible Affront he had put upon her, which was this, That Cœlius after he had diverted himſelf with her ſo much, and for ſo long a time, as he had a mind to, forſook her, and made his Courtſhip to another. Plutarch relates (a), that ſhe was call'd Quadrantaria, becauſe one day one of thoſe who had lain with her, did not pay her but in very bad Money. He put into his Purſe, not pieces of Silver, but ſmall pieces of Copper (b), much like Farthings. Apuleius informs us (c), that ſhe was the Miſtreſs about whom Catullus has made ſo many Verſes under the Name of Lesbia: And ſo ſhe deſerv'd for many Reaſons the Title which Plutarch has given her; for the Lesbia of Catullus was at laſt a common Whore, and one who waited for her Prey at the Corner of the Streets. She was for the firſt ſhe met, and without doubt took what was offer'd her. She proſtitued her ſelf for a ſmall matter, Scortum diobolare, aut triobolare. Did ſhe not therefore deſerve the Name of Quadrantaria? See in the Margin the Verſes of Catullus, which were probably addreſs'd to Cicero's Client (d). She purchas'd a Garden on the Banks of the Tiber, that ſhe might have an opportunity of ſeeing the Swimmers in that River, and the better to chooſe thoſe whom ſhe had a mind to draw into her Net. Habes hortos ad Tiberim: ac diligenter eo loco paraſti quo omnis juventus natandi cauſſa venit, hinc licet conditiones quotidie legas (e). Of all the Siſters of Clodius this was the moſt ſuſpected (f) of Inceſt with him. Being yet very young, he pretended to be fearful, that he might have leave to ſleep with this Siſter. Propter neſcio quam, credo, timiditatem, & nocturnos quoſdam inanes metus, tecum ſemper puſio eum majore ſorore cubitavit (g). There is an Epigram (h) in Catullus which ſhews, that he lov'd Clodia, and that he fell out with her before the Death of her Husband.

(b) Which they call'd at Rome Quadrantes.

(c) Apuleius in Apol. p. m 279. I have cited his own words in the Remark D. of the preceding Article.

(d) Cœli, Lesbia noſtra, Lesbia illa, Illa Lesbia quam Catullus unam Pluſquam ſe atque ſuos amavit omnes; Nunc in quadriviis & angiportis Glubit magnanimos Remi Nepotes. Catull. ep. gr. 59.

(e) Cicero pro Cœlio, p. 445. edit. Abrami.

(f) Plut. ubi ſupra.

(g) Cicero ibid.

Lesbia mi, præſente viro, mala plurima dicit,
Hæc illi fatuo maxima lætitia eſt.
Mule (i), nihil ſentis. Si noſtri oblita taceret,
Sana eſſet, quod nunc gannit & obloquitur
Non ſolum meminit, ſed quæ multo acrior eſt res
Irata eſt: hoc eſt uritur & loquitur.

(h) It is the 84.

(i) It is not a proper Name as many have believed. See Muret upon this Epigram.

(B) Cicero loſt a very good Friend.] I will ſet down his own Words, that we may know the Merit of this Metellus, and his Friendſhip for Cicero; and alſo the difference there is often between a Man and a Husband. Metellus, with reſpect to Cicero, is an illuſtrious Roman; for Cicero conſiders him only as he is a Man. But the ſame Metellus, with reſpect to Catullus, is a Sot, a Fool, a Mule (k), becauſe Catullus conſiders him only as a Husband. Catullus was convinc'd that the Wife of Metellus was very naughty. He knew ſo well all the effects of Love, that he was perſuaded, that ſince ſhe ſpoke ſo ill of him, it was a ſign that ſhe ſtill felt the remains of her Paſſion. What eſteem then could he have for Metellus, who was catcht in ſuch a wretched Net, and ſuffered himſelf to be Cuckolded, and then cheated by his Wife? Let us ſee the words of Cicero: (l) Pro Dii immortales cur interdum in hominum ſceleribus maximis aut connivetis, aut præſentis fraudis pœnas in diem reſervatis? Vidi enim, vidi, & illum hauſi dolorem vel acerbiſſimum in vita, quum Q. Metellus abſtraheretur è ſinu, gremioque patriæ: quumque ille vir, qui ſe natum huic imperio putavit, tertio die poſtquam in Curia, in roſtris, in Republica floruiſſet, integerrima ætate, optimo habitu, maximis viribus eriperetur indigniſſime bonis omnibus, atque univerſæ civitati. Quo quidem tempore ille moriens, quum jam cæteris ex partibus oppreſſa mens eſſet, extremum ſenſum ad memoriam Reipublicæ reſervabat: quam me intuens flentem ſignificabat interruptis, atque morientibus vocibus: quanta impenderet procella urbi, quanta tempeſtas civitati: quum parietem ſæpe feriens eum, qui cum Q. Catulo fuerat ei communis, crebro Catulum, ſæpe me, ſæpiſſime Rempublicam nominabat: ut non ſe tam emori, quam ſpoliari ſuo præſidio quum patriam, tum etiam me doleret. Quem quidem virum ſi nulla vis repentini ſceleris ſuſtuliſſet, quonam modo ille furenti fratri ſuo patruelis Conſulari reſtitiſſet, qui conſulem incipientem furere atque conantem, ſua ſe manu interfecturum, audiente Senatu dixerit? Ex hac igitur domo progreſſa iſta mulier de vencui celeritate dicere audebit? nonne ipſam domum metuet, ne quam vocem eliciat? non parietes conſcios, non noctem illam funeſtam ac luctuoſam perhorreſcet? Cicero obſerves in another place (m), that Clodia liv'd ill with her Husband.

(k) See Epigram 84. in the preceding Remark.

(l) Cicero ubi ſupra, p. 514.

(m) Ea eſt ſeditioſa: ea cum viro bellum gerit, neque ſolum cum Metello, ſed etiam cum Fabio. Id. epiſt. 1. ad Attic. l. 1. p. m. 175.

(C) I ſhall obſerve a miſtake of Turnebus.] He believ'd that Catullus ſpoke of our Metellus Celer in Epigram 68. Ita Cæcilia placeam, cui credita nunc ſum. The Poet brings in the Door of a debauch'd Woman ſpeaking thus; but this Woman was not Clodia or Lesbia, for the Woman meant in this Epigram had Married an impotent Man, whoſe Father was ſo officious, that he conſummated the Marriage which his Son had contracted. 'Tis not known whether he did it becauſe he lov'd her, or becauſe he was perſuaded that his Son had not a ſufficient power to do it. Conſult theſe Verſes of Catullus:

Primum (n) igitur virgo quod fertur tradita nobis.
Falſum eſt: nunque illam vir prior attigerat,
Languidior tenera cui pendens ſicula beta,
Nunquam ſe mediam ſuſtulit ad tunicam;
Sed pater ipſius nati violaſſe cubile
Dicitur, & miſeram conſceleraſſe domum:
Sive quod impia mens cæco flagrabat amore,
Seu quod iners ſterili ſemine natus erat:
Et quærendum aliunde foret nervoſius illud,
Quod poſſit zonam ſolvere virgineam.
Egregium narras mira pietate parentem,
Qui ipſe ſui gnati minuerit in gremium.

Scaliger (o) refutes Turnebus by two Reaſons: The firſt is, that the Scene of this Adventure was Verona, and not Rome. The ſecond is, that no body ever ſaid that Clodia committed Inceſt with her Father. Cicero had certainly objected it to her, if ſhe had been of bad Reputation upon that account. Theſe two Reaſons of Scaliger are very good; but he did not obſerve [illegible] was with her Huſband's Father, and not with her own, that the Maid mention'd by Catullus loſt her Maidenhead.

(n) Catul. Epigram 68.

(o) Alienum à vero prorſus ſcribit Adr. Turnebus, Gallorum doctiſſimus, hunc eſſe Cæcilium, cui Clodia nupſerit: Hoc enim non Romæ, ſed Veronæ manifeſto actum ſcribit Catullus. Deinde nihil tale de Clodia narratur, ut conſuetudinem ſtupri nefandam cum patre ſuo habuerit. Hoc enim non tam [illegible] cuiſſet capitalis hoſtis ejus fratris Clodii [illegible]

Magiſtrates. The City of Rome appear'd ſo ſubmiſſive (A) to the Will of Cæſar the very firſt Days, that it was ſaid, ſhe had been a long time accuſtom'd to the Yoke of Bondage. Metellus was the only Perſon that durſt oppoſe Cæſar, who had a mind to ſeize the Treaſure that was kept in the Temple of Saturn. Cæſar laugh'd at the Oppoſition, and the Laws (B) which were objected to him, and went ſtreight to the place where the Treaſure was depoſited. He found it ſhut, and becauſe the Keys were refus'd him, he gave orders that the Doors ſhould be broke open, whereupon Metellus renew'd his Oppoſition and Cæſar threaten'd to kill him: Young Man, ſaid he, you are not ignorant that it would be more eaſie for me to do it than to ſay it. The Tribune reſiſted no longer (C), but went away very quietly; and Cæſar took in this Treaſury whatever he had a mind to *. He took great care not to relate how the thing happen'd; for he diſguis'd it (D) ſo in his Hiſtory † of the Civil War, that you can perceive nothing of Injuſtice or Violence in it. Thus they uſe to do who write their own Lives; they conceal thoſe Circumſtances which do not make for the Glory of their Name.

* Plutarc. in Cæſare, p. 725.

† Lib. 1.

‡ One was called Maloeta, and the other Mylaon.

METHYDRIUM, in Greek Μεθύδριον a City of Peloponneſus in Arcadia, was ſo call'd upon the account of its ſituation between two Rivers ‡. Orchomenes, who was the Founder of it, built it upon a riſing Ground. There was near Methydrium a Temple

(A) Appear'd ſo ſubmiſſive to the Will of Cæſar.] We muſt not wonder at this, for he was conſider'd as a Man who with an armed Force had invaded Rome, and it was fear'd leſt he ſhould have pillag'd it.

(p) Lucan. Pharſ. l. 3. v. 99.

(p) Namque ignibus atris
Creditur, ut captæ rapturus mœnia Romæ
Sparſuruſque Deos: fuit hæc menſura timoris.
Velle putant quodcunque poteſt.

The good Fortune of Rome ſet Bounds to his Power, when the Senate and People had ſet none to their ſubmiſſion. This will not be the laſt time, that even in ſuch a juncture of Affairs, wherein effeminate ſoftneſs is more inexcuſable than at that time, ſome will be leſs aſham'd to ſuffer things to be taken, than others to take them, and that they'll be beholden for their Preſervation to the Diſcretion of others.

(q) Id. ib. v. 108.

Omnia (q) Cæſar erat, privatæ Curia vocis
Teſtis adeſt. Sedere patres cenſere paveti
Si regnum, ſi templa ſibi, jugulumque Senatus
Exiliumque petat. Melius quod plura jubere
Erubuit, quam Roma pati.

(a) Lib. 2. Bell. civil. p. m. 241.

(B) And the Laws which were objected to him.] Appian (a) tells us, that after the fatal Wars which the Romans had with the Gauls, certain ſums of Money were laid by, which every Body was forbidden to touch, under pain of a publick Execration, except it were in caſe of a War againſt the Gauls. It was objected to Cæſar, that their Anceſtors had given the Curſe of the Country to any one that ſhould touch this Money, except in caſe of neceſſity. He laugh'd at this Curſe, and ſaid, that having ſubdu'd the Gauls, he had deliver'd Rome from the Obligation, under which ſhe might lye when ſhe founded this Treaſury. Lucan has made an ingenious Reflection indeed, but I think it is a little ſtrain'd. He ſays (b), that the Laws, Privileges and Liberty are leſs laid to Heart than Money, and that it was only for the love of this Treaſure that they attempted to reſiſt Cæſar. He mentions the oppoſition of Metellus.

(b) Uſque adeo ſolus ferrum, mortemq; timere Ærì neſcit amor, pereunt diſcrimine nullo Amiſſæ leges: ſed pars viliſſima rerum Certamen moviſtis opes. Lucan. ib. v. 118.

(C) The Tribune reſiſted no longer.] Lucan ſuppoſes, that Metellus was ambitious of the Glory of being ſacrific'd by the violence of a Tyrant, but that Cæſar did not think him worthy of that Honour, and told him:

(c) Vanam ſpem mortis bonæſtæ
Concipis: haud (inquit) jugulo ſe polluet iſto
Noſtra, Metelle, manus. Dignum te Cæſaris ira
Nullus honor facit, te vindice tuta relicta eſt
Libertas? non uſque adeo permiſcuit imis
Longus ſumma dies, ut non, ſi vole Metelli
Serventur leges, malint à Cæſare tolli.

(c) Idid. v. 134.

This Poet ſuppoſes another thing, viz. that Metellus did not retire till after the ſolid Remonſtrances of Cotta. Liberty, ſaid Cotta, ruins Liberty, when the Monarchical Power curbs it; and if you would not quite deſtroy it, if you deſire at leaſt to retain the ſhadow of it, appear willing to do what is commanded you. This thought is very fine, and Lucan expreſſes it nobly.

(d) Tum Cottæ Metellum
Compulit audaci nimium [illegible] cepto.
Libertas, inquit, populi, [illegible] regna coercent,
Libertate perit; cujus ſervaveris umbram,
[illegible] quicquid jubeare, velis.

(d) Ibid. v. 342.

[illegible] it.] It is rather a total ſuppreſſing of it; for he is ſo far from granting, that he us'd threats againſt Metellus, and that he carried off in ſpite of his Teeth the Money that was in the Treaſury, that he declares he went out of Rome, that he might not be a long time entangled in the diſpute that was raiſed againſt him by means of Metellus. Is not this an inſinuation that he was ſo gracious and complaiſant, that he choſe rather to quit the Place than to ſtruggle with this Tribune of the People? (e) Subjicitur etiam L. Metellus Tribunus plebis ab inimicis Cæſaris, qui hanc rem diſtrahat, reliquaſque res quaſcunque agere inſtituerit, impediat. Cujus cognito conſilio, Cæſar fruſtra diebus aliquot conſumptis, ne reliquum tempus omittat, inſeſtis iis quæ agere deſtinaverat, ab Urbe proficiſcitur. If he mentions the publick Treaſury, he does not tell us that he fear'd upon it; but he only ſays, that the falſe Report of his arrival ſo frighted his Enemies, that the Conſul Lentulus, who went to the Treaſury to take thence the Money he could find in it, that he might ſend it away to Pompey, departed ſuddenly without putting his deſign in execution. According to all the Editions of Cæſar, (f) the fear of this Conſul was ſo great, that it did not give him leave to ſhut up the publick Treaſury; but a Critick (g) of a good Judgment is of Opinion, that this Paſſage ſhould be corrected by inſerting the Particle non, and then the meaning of Cæſar will be, that the Conſul fled away before he had open'd the Treaſury. According to the Editions, Cæſar tells a thing very different from what all the other Hiſtorians aſſum. They obſerve, that he caus'd the Doors of the publick Treaſury to be broke open, or that he threaten'd to do it when the Keys were deny'd him (h). The common reading ſuppreſſes this violence, becauſe it ſuppoſes that the Doors were left open If we follow the Conjecture of Rubens, we ſhall leſſen the inſincerity of Cæſar's Pen: But yet he will always be guilty of a notable concealment of the Truth; for he ſays nothing of his taking Advantage of this juncture, and of his entring into the Treaſury which Lentulus had not ſhut. Voſſius, I think (i), has given no good reaſon againſt this Correction of Rubens. Sed profecto, ſays he, ſequentia refellunt, nam quia mirum poterat videri, quod relinqueret apertum ærarium profugiens, eo ſubjungit. Cæſar enim adventare, &c. This reaſon is taken from the words which Cæſar uſes to ſhow the cauſe why Lentulus was frighted: But it is not very ſtrong; for it is very ſtrange, that when a great War is coming on, a Conſul who is ready to take out the Money of the Treaſury, and ſend it away to the General, ſhould fly away before he ſecures that Money. So that if Cæſar had made uſe of a Negative Particle, as Rubens ſuppoſes, he would have been oblig'd to give a reaſon for the fear of Lentulus; a fear which would not have allow'd him the time neceſſary to provide himſelf with Money. Voſſius therefore, without any ground, ſuppoſes that a needleſs Reaſon would be alledg'd, if the fact which Cæſar relates was agreeable to the Criticiſm of Rubens. I think alſo, that the common Reading carries the Matter to a hyperbolical height. For what probability is there, that a Roman Conſul ſhould have been ſo ſeiz'd with Conſternation, that he could not ſee that the time which was neceſſary to ſhut up a Door would not laſt long enough to hinder him from making his eſcape?

(e) Cæſar, de bello civ. lib. 1. p. m. 250.

(f) Quibus rebus Romam nunciatis tantus repente terror invaſit, ut cum Lentulus conſul ad aperiendum ærarium veniſſet ad pecuniam Pompejo ex Senatuſconſulto proferendam, protinus aperto ſanctiore ærario ex urbe profugeret, Cæſar enim adventare jam jamque, & adeſſe ejus equites falſo nunciabantur. Il. p. 239.

(g) Philip Rubens Lector, l. 1. c. 24. apud Voſſium de hiſtor. Lat. p. 63. would have it read protinus non aperto.

(h) See Lucan, Plutarch and Appian ubi ſupra, Dion l. 41. p. 181. Cicero, ad Attic. Lib. epiſt. 4. Florus l. 4. c. 2. n. 21.

(i) Ibid.

(A) Temple of Neptunus Equeſtris, and a Mountain which was call'd Thaumaſius, that is, Miraculous, whither it is pretended that Cybele fled being with Child by Jupiter, and that Hoplodamus and (B) the Giants in his Retinue prepar'd to relieve her, in caſe Saturn her Husband ſhould offer her any violence. It was not denied that ſhe was brought to Bed upon Mount Lyceus, but ſome maintain'd (C) that ſhe cheated her Spouſe upon Mount Thaumaſius, by giving him a Stone inſtead of a Child. On the top of this Mountain the Cave of Cybele was ſhown, in which no Perſon was ſuffer'd to ſet a Foot, except the Women conſecrated to the Goddeſs *. Methydrium was nothing but a Village in the time of Pauſanias, and belong'd to the Megalopolitans †. This Article will diſpleaſe many People, becauſe it ſhews that there were in the times of Paganiſm certain places of Devotion, whoſe pretended Sanctity was grounded only upon ridiculous Tales: For there are many Conformities which are not lik'd at all. Pauſanias is a troubleſome Author, and deſerv'd to be reviſ'd by the Commiſſioners Librorum expurgandorum.

* Taken out of Pauſanias, l. 8. p. 266.
† Id. ibid. p. 246.

METRODORUS of Chios, a Diſciple of Democritus, had among other Diſciples the Philoſopher Anaxarchus and Hippocrates the Phyſician β. Others affirm that he was the Scholar of Neſſas, who had been the Diſciple of Democritus, and that he was Maſter to Diogenes, the Maſter of Anaxarchus γ. He taught the Eternity of the World; for if the World, ſaid he, had a Beginning, it would have been produc'd out of nothing. He made it alſo Infinite for a Reaſon drawn from its Eternity; and Unmoveable, for a Reaſon drawn from its Infinity. He ſaid that the Clouds, and afterwards the Rain, were form'd of condens'd Air, and that the Rain which fell upon the Sun extinguiſh'd its Light, but that the Rarefaction which ſucceeded this extinction lighted it again; that at length it grew thick by dryneſs, and that the glittering Water ſerv'd it for Matter to produce Stars. Thus he gave an account of the alternative ſucceſſion of Day and Night, and in general of Eclipſes δ. He is thought to be one of thoſe who deny'd certainty; and a Paſſage (A) of Cicero is cited to that purpoſe. There is no certain proof that Pliny cited our Metrodorus, for he never gives the Sirname Chius to the Perſon whom he cites. That Sirname is given him by ζ Athenæus, together with a Work entituled Τρῳϊκὰ, i. e. An account of the Affairs of Troy.

β Suidas in Δημόκριτος.
γ Euſeb. præpar. Evangel. l. 14. c. 16. p. 785.
δ Taken out of Plutarch in Stromatis, apud Euſebium ubi ſupra, l. 1. c. 8. p. 24, 25.
ζ Athen. l. 4. c. ult. p. 184.

METRO-

(A) There was near Methydrium a Temple—— and a Mountain.] I make this Remark only to correct a Word in the Text of Pauſanias. This Author ſays, that the Town of Methydrium was ſituated (k) between the River Malæta, and the River Mylaon, and that there was a Temple upon the latter, and a Mountain upon the River Molottus. 'Tis plain, that here is a River too much, and that this Paſſage of Pauſanias has been ſpoil'd by the Tranſcribers. I will ſet down the Greek. Ἔστι δὲ ἐν Μεθυδρίῳ, Ποσειδῶνός τε Ἱππίου ναὸς, ὑπὲρ μὲν ἐπὶ τῷ Μυλάονι ἐστὶ, τὸ δὲ ὄρος τὸ Θαυμάσιον καλούμενον, κεῖται μὲν ὑπὲρ τὸν ποταμὸν τὸν Μολοσσόν. Eſt Methydrii Neptuni equeſtris ædes ad Mylaontem fluvium: mons vero thaumaſius dictus ſupra Molottum amnem eſt. I believe that inſtead of Μολοσσόν, we ſhould read Μαλοΐδα, which is the Name of the other River, whereof Pauſanias had ſpoken a little before. Note, that upon reading this a long time after it had been written, I thought that I ſhould conſult Pauſanias Printed at Leipſick in 1696, which did not come to my Hands till a few Months ago: And there I found a Note which informs me, that Stephanus Niger believes, that Malæta and Molottus, or Moloſſus in Pauſanias were two different Rivers, but that others think that μαλοΐδα is a fault of the Tranſcribers. 2. That Kuhnius is not poſitive in the caſe, and knows not what to make of certain Names which occur but once.

(k) Μαλοΐδα τε ποταμὸν καὶ μυλάονος μέσον. Medio loco inter Malœtan & Mylaontem flumina. Pauſan. l. 8. p. m. 266.

(B) Hoplodamus and the Giants in his Retinue prepar'd to relieve her.] Natalis Comes underſtood not the Paſſage of Pauſanias, for he ſuppoſes that the Giants call'd in to the aſſiſtance of the Goddeſs the Mountain Thaumaſius. (a) Qui mons fuit ab Hoplodamo, aliiſque illius ſocio Gigantibus in auxilium accitus, ſi forte Saturnus illi vim inferre paraviſſet.

(a) Natalis Comes Mythol. l. 9. c. 5. p. m. 950.

(C) That ſhe was brought to Bed on the Mount Lyceus, but ſome maintain'd that ſhe deceiv'd her Spouſe on Mount Thaumaſius.] This is the true ſenſe of the words of Pauſanias, and tho' it be not very clear by the Grammatical Conſtruction, yet it follows plainly from the reaſoning and intention of the Author. Nevertheleſs you may here ſee what it is for any one to expreſs himſelf ambiguouſly by the wrong placing of his words, which leads aſtray the moſt learned Men. I have juſt now read a Commentary which is full of profound Learning, and there I find (b) it attributed to Pauſanias, that he ſaid, the Cave (c) of Rhea was to be ſeen upon the back of Mount Lyceus, and that no Perſon was permitted to enter into it but only the Women who ſacrific'd to this Goddeſs. Pauſanias ſays ſo only of Mount Thaumaſius, for he affirms two things of the ſame Mountain; one is, that Saturn was deceiv'd there, taking a Stone for the Child his Wife had brought forth; the other is, that the Cave of that Goddeſs was to be ſeen there. Now it was upon Mount Thaumaſius that Saturn was thus deceiv'd; Stephanus Byzantinus ſays ſo (d); therefore, &c. I know very well, that Pauſanias relates many wonders of Mount Lyceus, that Jupiter was Educated in it; that there was to be ſeen there a Fountain which cauſed Rain, when a great Drought obliged People to have recourſe to this Remedy, by uſing the requiſite Ceremonies; that there was alſo to be ſeen a Place Conſecrated to Jupiter, which all Perſons were forbidden to enter into, and that if any one was ſo bold as to enter into it in contempt of Religion, he died infallibly the ſame Year; and that the Beaſts as well as Men, who enter'd into it (e), caſt no ſhadow (f). But all this does no prejudice to the Wonders of the other Mountain.

(b) Ezekiel Spanhemius Obſervat. in Callimachum, p. 5. Friſchlin is in a like Error Not. in hymn. Callim. in Jovem, p. 372. edit. Græv.

(c) She is the ſame with Cybele.

(d) Stephan. Byzantinus in Θαυμάσιον.

(e) Οὐ πάσῃ βέβηκέναι ζώων. Nullas è coporibus ſuis umbras reddere. Pauſanias l. 8. p. 269.

(f) Taken from Pauſanias, ib. p. 268, 269.

(A) And a Paſſage of Cicero is cited to that purpoſe.] Mr. Menage Commenting upon theſe words of Diogenes Laertius: (g) Ὅς (Μητρόδωρος) ἔλεγε μηδὲ αὐτὸ τοῦτο οἶδέναι ὅτι οἶδεν οὐδέ: Hic (Metrodorus) ſe ne id quidem ſcire dicebat quod nihil ſciret, has theſe words: Chius Metrodorus initio libriqui eſt de natura: nego, inquit, ſcire nos, ſciamuſne aliquid, an nihil ſcimus, ne id ipſum quidem neſcire aut ſcire, ſcire nos, nec omnino ſit ne aliquid, an nihil ſit. His Citation is out of the fourth Book (h) of the Academical Queſtions of Cicero. I have read again and again this Paſſage, and it always ſeem'd to me that it was Democritus, and not Metrodorus of whom Cicero ſays this. 'Tis true indeed, that Metrodorus was a Sceptick; for Sextus Empiricus (i) reckons him among thoſe who admitted no Criterium, whereby the Truth may be diſcern'd. I do not apprehend how either Democritus or Metrodorus, or any other, could be ſo extravagant as to maintain, that they knew not whether there was any thing; for they could not doubt but they doubted, nor imagine, that what doubts is nothing, and does not exiſt. It muſt therefore be own'd, that they pretended to except their own Exiſtence.

(g) Diog. Laert. in Anaxarcho, l. 9. n. 58.

(h) It is in my Edition the 2*d Book fol.* 207. D

(i) Sextus Empiricus adverſ. Mathemat. p. 146, 153.

Note, that Ariſtocles may confirm the ſenſe which Mr. Menage gives to the words of Cicero; for after he had obſerv'd (k) that Metrodorus of Chios admitted, as Democritus his Maſter did, a Plenum and a Vacuum for two Principles, one as a Being, and the other as nothing; he adds that his Book of Nature began thus: Οὐδεὶς ἡμῶν οὐδὲν οἶδεν, οὐδ' αὐτὸ τοῦτο πότερον οἴδαμεν, ἢ οὐκ οἴδαμεν. Nemo noſtrum quidquam novit, ne hoc ipſum quidem utrum aliquid noverimus necne. It cannot be pretended that Metrodorus contradicted himſelf, affirming this on one ſide, and maintaining on the other (l), that we muſt only believe our Senſations and Imaginations; for theſe two Doctrines agree very (k) Ariſtocles apud Euſebium præpar. Evang. l. 14. c. 19. p. 765.

(l) Idem apud eumdem, ibid. c. 20. p. 766.

METRODORUS, a good Painter, and a good Philoſopher; was made choice of by the Athenians to be ſent to Paulus Æmilius, who, after he had taken Perſeus King of Macedonia, demanded of them two Men, one to inſtruct his Children, and another to paint his Triumphs. He declar'd that he wiſh'd the Tutor might be an excellent Philoſopher. The Athenians ſent to him Metrodorus who excell'd both in Philoſophy and Painting, Paulus Æmilius was very well ſatisfied with their choice, as Pliny tells us (B). We ſhall ſee in the Remarks, if it be true that Cicero (C) ſpeaks of this Metrodorus, as Father Hardouin pretends. I ſhould rather believe that he ſpeaks of METRODORUS of Stratonice (D) who forſook the Epicurean School and follow'd Carneades.

*Pelliſſon Hiſtory of the French Academy, p. m. 256.

MEZIRIAC (CLAUDIUS GASPAR BACHET Seigneur de) was one of the ableſt Men of the XVIIth Century. He was of * Breſſe, of a noble (A) and ancient Family, as Mr. Pelliſſon well together. He ſaid that all things are in a perpetual Flux, and that upon this account Homer deriv'd their Original from the Ocean. Protagoras (m) inferr'd from this Principle, that Man is the meaſure of all things, that each of 'em is juſt what it appears to be, and that we can make no Judgment of others. This is perfect Pyrrhoniſm; for there you find on one ſide, that our Senſes are the only rule of our Opinions, and on the other, that nothing is certain, that there is nothing in the nature of things that is ſtable, nothing that does not undergo an infinite number of changes.

(m) Ibid.

(B) As Pliny tells us.] The Reader will be pleas'd to ſee his own words: (n) Ubi (Athenis) eodem tempore erat Metrodorus pictor, idemque Philoſophus, magnæ in utraque ſcientia auctoritatis. Itaque cum L. Paulus devicto Perſeo petiſſet ab Athenienſibus ut ſibi quam probatiſſimum Philoſophum mitterent ad erudiendos liberos, itemque pictorem ad triumphum excolendum, Athenienſes Metrodorum elegerunt profeſſi eundem in utroque deſiderio præſtantiſſimum: quod ita Paulus quoque judicavit. Voſſius (o) is miſtaken when he affirms that this Metrodorus was a Phyſician.

(n) Plin. l. 35. c 11. p. m. 230.

(o) Voſſius de Hiſtor. Græcis, p. 389.

(C) That Cicero ſpeaks of this Metrodorus.] Father Hardouin imagines (p), that this Paſſage of Pliny concerns a Man, who was a Hearer of Carneades, and who wrote a Book de Architectonice, and another de Poetis. He aſſerts three things of him; the firſt is founded upon the Authority of Cicero in Book 1. de Oratore; the ſecond upon the Authority of Pliny, in the Index of the 35th Book; and the third upon the Teſtimony of Plutarch, in the Book againſt the Epicureans. I ſhall examine theſe three things, beginning with the laſt. 'Tis plain, that Metrodorus cited by Plutarch (a) as having writ about the Poets, is he who was a Friend to Epicurus. He did not live therefore in the time of Perſeus; for Epicurus who ſurviv'd him ſeven Years (b), died (c) in the ſecond Year of the 127th Olympiad; but Perſeus was not taken by the Romans till about the 152d. The Index of the 35th Book of Pliny contains nothing that obliges us to aſſign the Metrodorus of Perſeus to be the Author of the Book about Architecture: And as to the Paſſage of Cicero, which here follows, it ſcarce appears to agree to this Metrodorus: (d) Audivi ſummos homines quum quæſtor ex Macedonia veniſſem Athenas florente Academia, ut temporibus illis ferebatur, quod eam Carneades, & Clitomachus, & Æſchines obtinebant. Erat etiam Metrodorus qui cum illis una ipſum illum Carneadem diligentius audierat. It is the Orator Craſſus that ſpeaks. The Time which he denotes is in all appearance the Year 650 of Rome. How then can one imagine that Perſeus's Metrodorus was ſtill alive, ſince he was ſent to Paulus Æmilius about the Year 585, as one of the moſt excellent Philoſophers that could be choſen in Athens? 'Tis more eaſie to refute Volaterran (e), who did not only think that the Metrodorus, who was ſent to Paulus Æmilius, was the Scholar of Carneades mention'd by Cicero, but alſo that his Artificial Memory was commended by Cicero. The Metrodorus who was commended upon this account, was a Native of Scepſis, and different from the Scholar of Carneades; of which I will here give you a demonſtrative Proof. Craſſus heard the latter (f) in Athens, and the other in Aſia. (g) Paulum, fatiens, ſays he, iſtarum artium de quibus loquor, guſtavi quæſtor in Aſia, quum eſſem æqualem fere meum ex Academia rhetorem nactus Metrodorum illum de cujus memoria commemoravit Antonius. 'Tis plain that he ſpeaks of Metrodorus of Scepſis; for Antonius the Orator had ſaid: (h) Vidi ego ſummos homines & divina prope memoria, Athenis Carneadem, in Aſia quem vivere hodie ajunt Scepſium Metrodorum, quorum uterque tanquam liberis in cera ſic ſe ajebat imaginibus in iis locis quas haberet, quæ meminiſſe vellet, perſcribere. A little after Craſſus ſpeaks after this manner: (i) Audivi —— & Athenis cum eſſem doctiſſimos viros, & in Aſia iſtum ipſum Scepſium Metrodorum quum de his ipſis rebus diſputaret.

(a) Plutarch. non poſſe ſuaviter vivi, p. 1094. E.

(b) Diog. Laert. lib. 10. n. 23.

(c) Id. ib. n 15.

(d) Cicero de Orat. lib. 1. fol 60. D.

(e) Volaterr. l 17. p m. 426.

(f) See the Citation d.

(g) Cicero ibid. l. 3. fol. 92. B.

(h) Id. ib. lib. 2. fol. 88. A.

(i) Id. ib B.

(D) That he ſpeaks of METRODORUS of Stratonice.] We have already ſeen (k) that his Metrodorus follow'd Carneades with great application. He ſays in another Book (l), that Metrodorus of Stratonice might very well know Carneades. It might therefore be imagin'd, that theſe two Places concern the ſame Perſon. Beſides we ſee in Diogenes Laertius a Metrodorus of Stratonice, who forſook Epicurus to follow the School of Carneades. The Hiſtorian is miſtaken as to the Time, for the Death of Epicurus preceded the Birth of Carneades, but yet his Error may make one believe, that Metrodorus mention'd by Craſſus the Orator, was Metrodorus of Stratonice. As to the miſtake of Diogenes Laertius, ſee Mr. (m) Menage, and the Pieces inſerted in the Journal des Sçavans, which I have cited (n) in another place.

(k) In the preceding Remark, Letter d.

(l) Bene autem noſſe Carneadem Stratonicæus Metrodorus putabatur Cicero, Academic. quæſt. lib 2 fol. 293 B. Note, that theſe words have ſcarce any relation with the preceding, ſo that one would think that there is a hiatus

(A) Of a Noble and Ancient Family.] It owes its Nobility to Learning. "(o) Peter Bachet Seigneur "de Meyſeria, de Vauluyſant, and de Lyonnieres, whom "the Family of the Bachets owns for their Stock, "was a Counſellor, and Lieutenant General in "the Bayliwick of Breſſe, under King Henry II. "and then Chief Judge, after Reſtitution was "made to Duke Emanuel Philibert of his Domin- "ons. He did Homage to this Prince in the Year "1563, for the Lordſhips of Meyſeria, Vauluyſant, "and Lyonnieres; his Teſtament is dated Septem- "ber 5. 1565. He was one of the great Men "of his time, admir'd for his Probity and for his "Learning; a notable Lawyer whom the People "came to conſult from all the Neighbouring "Countries; and a great Latin Poet. There are "ſtill to be ſeen two Manuſcript Tomes of his "Conſultations, a Collection of his Latin Poems, "and a Book of Epiſtles which he wrote to the "moſt Learned Men of his Age, and their Anſwers "to him, the Publication whereof would confirm "the Teſtimony I give to his Memory" He Married the 10th of Decem. 1540. Frances de Soria the Daughter of Antony de Soria a Portugueſe Gentleman, and chief Phyſician to Beatrice of Portugal, Dutcheſs of Savoy. By this Marriage came John Bachet, who was Counſellor to the Duke of Savoy, and Judge of the Appeals of Breſſe, which was the chief Magiſtracy in that Country during the Government of Savoy; he was a Perſon of as much Learning and Integrity as his Father; his laſt Will is dated July the 5*th* 1586. He left beſides other Children, our Mr de Meziriac, and (p) William Bachet, Seigneur de Vauluyſant, Counſellor to the King, and Preſident in the Election of Breſſe, who made his Will April 22. 1631, and died without Children. Among other good Qualities which recommended him, he was a very good French and Latin Poet, of which he has left us many Proof, particularly in that excellent and natural Tranſlation of ſome of Ovid's Epiſtles, which are Printed with thoſe of Claudius-Gaſpard Bachet, Seigneur de Meyſeria his Brother †. You may obſerve, that Guichenon the Hiſtoriographer of that Country calls always Meyſeria the Lordſhip, which the Author, of whom I here give an Article, always names Meziriac in the Title Page of his Books. Doubtleſs he took the liberty to change the Name to make it more ſmooth, and leſs grating to the Ears of the French, and more capable of coming into Verſe.

(m) Menag. in Diog Laert l 1 . n. 9.

(n) In the Remark N. of the Article Carneades.

(o) Guichenon Hiſt of Breſſe, part 3 p. 9.

(p) He was the Eldeſt.

† Id. ib.

Pelliſſon informs us, with many other Particulars very curious, which I have no mind to copy, becauſe they are in a Book * which is in the Hands of every body. I ſhall only take out of it two things; the firſt is, that Mr. de Meziriac in his Youth ſpent a great part of his Time at Paris and at Rome, and that in this laſt place he made many Italian Verſes, in emulation of Mr. Vaugelas, who was there alſo. The ſecond is, That when he was at Paris, it was ſaid, that he would be made Preceptor to Lewis XIII. and that this was the reaſon why he left the Court in haſte, and he ſaid afterwards, that he never was in ſo much pain, for he thought he had already upon his Shoulders the heavy Burden of the whole Kingdom. Moreri's Dictionary affirms †, that afterwards he return'd to Paris, and was a Member of the French Academy. The latter of theſe Facts is true, and the former falſe β. This learned Man was made choice of to fill up one of the places in the Academy at its Birth, although he was abſent; and when his turn came to make a Diſcourſe there, he ſent one γ which was read in the Aſſembly by Mr. de Vaugelas. In a Book of Colomies we meet with a Particular, which is not mention'd by Mr. Pelliſſon, which is this, That δ Mr. de Meziriac was a Jeſuit at twenty Years of Age, and went thro' his firſt Claſs at Milan, where falling ſick he turn'd again a Secular ζ. He died at Bourg en Breſſe, February 26. 1638 ϑ. and η left many Children by his Marriage with Philiberta de Chabeu. It will appear by the Remark (B) concerning his Writings, that he was a Man of ſuch a large Capacity, that he could find convenient room for the Sciences which had no relation to one another. He was a good Poet in French, Italian and Latin, an excellent Grammarian, a great Grecian and a great Critick. He knew the ſmalleſt matters relating to Fables: He was ignorant of nothing in Mythology. He was θ a Philoſopher, and a Divine well vers'd in Controverſies, and he did admirably get out of the moſt abſtracted Queſtions of Algebra and Mathematicks. Guichenon ſays φ that "without doing any injury to his Memory, one may give him the Elogium which "Quintilian gave to a great Perſon of his Time, that he might have left better Works "if he had pleas'd, Felix ingenium, quod voluit potuit! ô utinam meliora voluiſſet." I (C) ſhall

* The Hiſt. of the French Academy.

† At the word Bachet.

β I don't deny that Meziriac made Journies to Paris, but only that he came to ſettle there according to Moreri's meaning.

γ Pelliſſ. ubi ſupra, p. 104.

δ Colomiés, Recueil de particularitez, p. m. 109, 110. He obſerves that he had it from Mr. Patin.

ζ Guichenon Hiſt. de Breſſe, 3 part. p. 10.

ϑ Pelliſſ. ubi ſupra, p. 262.

η Guichenon ubi ſupra.

θ Id. ib.

φ Id. ib.

(B) By the Remark concerning his Writings.] The firſt Book which he Publiſh'd was Printed in 1613, with the Title of Problemes plaiſans & delectables qui ſe font par les nombres. He publiſh'd it (q) as well to give an Eſſay of his Ability, as to try what Judgment would be made of his Works, and that it might ſerve as a fore-runner to his Diophantus. Eleven Years after he put out a ſecond Edition (r) of it, corrected, with the Addition of many Propoſitions and Problems. And becauſe he fear'd leſt, his Diophantus being already Publiſh'd, any one ſhould admire, that he who wrote a Work ſo ſerious and full of profound Speculations as his Diophantus was, ſhould trifle away his Time in reviſing his Problems, he reſolv'd to give this Anſwer among others in his Preface: "(ſ) That Books are the "Children of our Minds, and that beſides the "natural Inclination which all Fathers have to-"wards their Children in general, they have a "particular Affection to their firſt born; where-"fore this Book being the firſt that came from my "Hand, and as it were the firſt born Child of "my Mind, I have reaſon to cheriſh it tenderly; "for as I have brought it into the World, ſo I "would take care of its Preſervation and Growth." Mr. Pelliſſon obſerves (a), 1. That the Book of Arithmetical Recreations, is a Work wherein Mr. de Meziriac taught all manner of Subtilties, in playing with Numbers, and from whence is taken (b) part of the Recreations Mathematiques. 2. That his Diophantus tranſlated out of Greek into Latin with a Commentary, is a Work which Mr. de Fermat, and all thoſe who underſtand Algebra, do highly eſteem, and that Mr. de Meziriac ſaid himſelf, that he wondred how he could compaſs this Work, and that he had not finiſh'd it had it not been for a melancholy proceeding from a quartan Ague, of which he was then ſick. Voſſius (c) is miſtaken as to the Year of this Edition of Diophantus, which he ſays was in 1623, for it was in 1621. The Hiſtoriographer of Breſſe was not guilty of this Fault; for he multiplies too much the Editions of this Book. The Works which Meziriac Printed, ſays he, are (d), "Diophanti Alexandrini Arithmeticorum libri ſex, & de numeris multangulis liber unus, a Book very rare, which "he reſtor'd in a great meaſure, and enrich'd "with very learned Commentaries: It was Print-"ted firſt at Paris in 1621, and dedicated to the "great Oracle Antony Faure chief Preſident of "Savoy; afterwards it was Reprinted many "times in Germany. Problems of Arithmetick and "Mathematicks. A Tranſlation of ſome Epiſtles of "Ovid into French Verſe, with very curious Commen-"taries. A Treatiſe of Tribulation tranſlated out of "the Italian of Cacciaguerra. Epiſtolæ, & Poe-"mata Varia. The Life of Alexander Luſagus. The "Life of Æſop, wherein, according to the Judg-"ment of Learned Men, there are very excellent "and fine Remarks." Mr. Pelliſſon clears what is here ſaid confuſedly of the Poems of our Author. (e) There is of his a little Book of Italian Poems, wherein are imitations of the beſt compariſons, which are in the eight firſt Books of the Æneids. And another of Latin Poems; and many Poems in French; ſome of which have been inſerted in the Collection printed in 1621, with this Title, Delices de la Poeſie Françoiſe, and in that of the Year 1627. Note, that Diophantus had never appear'd but in Latin. Xylander publiſh'd it in this Language in 1575. Theſe words of Mr. Konig (f) Caſp. quoque Bachetus An. 1613. profundiſſimis ſpeculationibus eum (Diophantum) illuſtravit, would be right, if inſtead of 1613, he had put 1621. I believe the Printers inſtead of 1623, have put 1613, for doubtleſs Voſſius was the Original of Mr. Konig; and of this I am the more eaſily perſuaded, becauſe I find theſe words in Voſſius: (g) Anno CIↃ IↃ CXXIII. Caſper Bachetus Diophantum illuſtravit. Imo profundis in eum ſpeculationibus immortalem ſibi gloriam comparavit ut judicium eſt Jacobi de Billy Compendienſis, præfatione in Algebram. As to the Remark of Mr. Konig, that Mr. Boullauld publiſh'd an Edition of Diophantus, I believe it to be falſe. I will here give you a blunt Anſwer of Malherbe. "(h) Mr. "de Meziriac, attended with two or three of "his Friends, brought him a Book of Arith-"metick, written by a Greek Author, call'd Dio-"phantus, whom he had Commented upon. His "Friends prais'd the Book exceedingly, as being "very uſeful to the Publick; whereupon Mal-"herbe ask'd them, whether it would bring down "the price of Bread." We ſhall ſee in the next Remark what eſteem Mr. Deſcartes had for that Work of Mr. de Meziriac.

(C) I ſhall ſpeak apart of the Writings which he deſign'd for the Preſs.] "(i) He had undertaken a new "Tranſlation of all the Works of Plutarch, toge-"ther with Notes, wherein he intended to ſhow "the Faults which Amyot had committed in his "Verſion of this Author, to explain many Paſ-"ſages which had never been underſtood, and "to lay open to us the Treaſures of Antiqui-"ty. There wanted but a ſmall matter to finiſh "this great and laborious Work when he died, "which was an unexpreſſible loſs to the Publick; "all learned Men expected it with impatience, "which was increas'd by the fine Letter which he "wrote to the Academy of Paris, to thank them "for the Honour they had done him, to admit "him into their Society, wherein he gave an ac-"count of his Deſign. He has alſo left us many "Pieces finiſh'd but not Printed, which [illegible]

(f) Konig Biblioth. p. 252.

(g) Voſſius ubi ſupra, p. 341.

(h) The Life of Malherbe p. 10.

(i) Guichenon ubi ſupra.

(a) Pelliſſon Hiſt. of the French Academy, p. m. 263.

(b) It is the Title of a Book which was Printed many times. I have an Edition of it Printed at Paris, 163[illegible], in 8° with the Remarks of Claudius Mydorgius

(c) Voſſius de ſcient. Mathem. p. 341, & 464. (d) Guichenon ubi ſupra, p. 10.

(q) Meziriac Preface to the 2d Edition of his Problems.

(r) At Lyons by Peter Rigaud, 1624, in 8°.

(ſ) Meziriac ubi ſupra.

shall speak apart of his Writings which he design'd for the Press. It is a mistake to affirm

" to be wish'd the Publick should no longer be " depriv'd of, viz. Elementorum Arithmeticorum, lib. " 13. Tractatus de Geometricis quæstionibus per Alge- " bram. These are the two Works which he pro- " mis'd at the end of his Preface upon Diophantus. " The rest of Ozanam's Epistles without Commentaries. " Apollodori Athenæensis Grammatici Bibliotheces, " sive de Deorum Origine libri tres, of his own " Translation, with very learned Observations. " Agathemeres, a Greek Geographer not yet Prin- " ted." This Passage of Mr. Guichenon is not ex- act; for he gives us as a Letter of Thanks, written to the Gentlemen of the French Aca- demy, a Discourse which Mr. de Meziriac Compos'd in conformity to the Rules of the Academy. " (k) They made by Lot with Billets a Cata- " logue of the Members of the Academy; 'twas " order'd that every one should be oblig'd to " make in his turn a Discourse upon such a Mat- " ter, and of such a length as he pleas'd.—(l) " There were twenty of these Discourses spoken " successively in the Academy——(m) The seven- " teenth was sent by Mr. de Meziriac, and read in the " Assembly (1) by Mr. de Vaugelas: It was entituled " De la Traduction. In this Discourse the Author, " who was accounted most learn'd in Polite Learn- " ing, and chiefly in the Greek Tongue, after he " has prais'd the Wit, the Pains and the Style of " Amiot in his Version of Plutarch, and as it seems " with Ingenuity enough, pretended to show that " in divers Passages which he has observ'd, to the " number of two Thousand, this great Translator " has committed many great Faults of divers sorts, " of which he gives many Examples." I know that the Abbot Nicaise, whose Zeal for the advance- ment of Learning is very well known, has been very busie in finding out the Apollodorus of Meziriac, and it is none of his fault that the Booksellers have not put it into the Press.

(k) Pelisson ubi supra, p. 99.

(l) Id. ib. p. 100.

(m) Id. ib. p. 104.

(1) The 10*th of* Decemb. 1635.

Here follow some matters of fact, which con- cern another Work of this Writer. Mr. Baillet (n) relates that Mr. de Descartes " highly esteem'd the " Wit and Capacity of Mr. Meziriac, chiefly for " Arithmetick and Algebra, which he was Master " of to so great a degree, as equall'd him to Vieta— " His pains upon Diophantus of Alexandria, is more " than sufficient to justifie the Esteem which Des- " cartes had for him: But 'tis credible that the " Publick would have improv'd this Esteem, if " they had seen the Treatise of Algebra of Mr. " de Meziriac, and some other Manuscripts of the " same Author, the chief of which is that of the " (2) 13 Books, of the Elements of Arithmetick sub- " servient to Algebra, written in Latin, and pur- " chas'd of the Heirs of Mr. de Meziriac about fif- " teen or sixteen Years ago, by one of the Reform'd " Religion, who did not fail to carry it out of the " Kingdom, at the time of that Revolution of " the State, in which the Reform'd were before " the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes." There is in this Narrative a Circumstance which should be rectified, about which I have receiv'd the fol- lowing Memoial (o). " Besides the three Books " which Mr. Bachet de Meziriac wrote about " Numbers, and which he prefixed to his Com- " mentaries upon Diophantus, he wrote the Ele- " ments of Arithmetick, divided into thirteen " Books, which were never Printed. After his " Death, Mr. de Meziriac his Son was sollicited to " give them to be Printed; but he set so great a " Price upon the Manuscript, that no body would " buy it. At last he sold it to Mr. d'Alibert, Trea- " surer of France at Montauban, for 1500 Livres. " Mr. d'Alibert intended to Print it at his own " Expence, but being surpriz'd by Death before " he could execute his Design, at his Death he " gave to one of his Friends this Manuscript, " which is all written with the Hand of Mr. de Mezi- " riac the Father. This Friend gave it afterwards " to Mr. Case, who gave it to Mr Picard one of " the Royal Academy of Sciences. In the Year " 1679, Mr. Picard gave it to the Abbot Gallois, " who to accomplish the good Intention of Mr. " d'Alibert, offer'd it to many Booksellers to Print " it. But because these Elements are of an " abstracted Science, and in Latin, there has " not been found any Bookseller, who " would undertake the Impression. There is " also something to be Corrected in the 291 " Page of the first Part of the Life of Descartes; " for he who purchas'd this Manuscript was not " one of the Reform'd Religion; and he to whom " it was given, did not carry it out of the King- " dom; and the Manuscript is still at Paris." It appears by a Letter of Sarravius (a), that Mr. Morus had undertaken to collect the Manuscript Books of Mr. de Meziriac, and that it was with'd he would perform his Promise. Doubtless Sarravi- us had inspir'd him with this good Design, when he desir'd him (l) to buy for him all the Works of that Learned Man, for he spoke of them with pe- culiar Praises. This was in a Letter which he wrote March the 14th 1644. He thought that Me- ziriac had been Dead ten Years; he was ignorant of the true time.

(n) Baillet's Life of Des- cartes, tom. 1. p. 291.

(2) A Ca- talogue of the Manu- scripts of Meziriac, sent to me from Bourg en Bresse.

(o) Drawn up by the Abbot Gallois, and sent by Mr. Simon Valhe- lert.

(a) It is the 185*, or* 195 of the Ed.- tion of Utrecht.

(l) See his 70 Letter at p. 68, he calls him always Mezeria- cus instead of Mezi- riacus.

'Tis not to be wondred, that no Printer could be found for the Commentary of Meziriac upon Apollodorus. The relish of this kind of Learn- ing is wholly lost, and 'tis very probable, that if Meziriac was now alive, they would not do him the Honour to send for him in Bresse, to give him a place in the French Academy. That which for- merly procur'd him this Advantage, would now be a reason for neglecting him. The politeness of his Stile, the beauty of his French Verses, were not the cause why he was thought worthy to be one of the Academy; for it must be ingenuously con- fess'd, that neither his Prose nor his Verses in that Language had any thing that was exquisite, and that in this respect he was inferior to almost all his fellow Members: It was only the Reputation of his Knowledge, and the Proofs he gave of his vast Learning that made him be chosen. The Times are chang'd; and an Author is now of no ac- count who perfectly understands Mythology, the Greek Poets, their Scholasts, and can make use of them to clear, or correct some difficult Pas- sages, a Point of Chronology, a Question of Geo- graphy, or of Grammar, different Narratives, &c. Men do not only prefer to the Works of such an Author, those that have no such thing in them; but also call * such kind of Learning a Pedantry. Which is the true way to beat off all young People of good Parts from following the Study of Philology. There is no Reproach more offensive than to be call'd a Pedant, and there- fore Men will not take the pains to acquire much Learning; because they are afraid of being exposed to this scandalous Treatment, if they should make it appear, that they have read the ancient Authors. And are there any Men who do not love to procure themselves Honour from what they know, and who are not encourag'd by the hope of Glory? Take away this Hope, and you cool the most earnest Students, you increase the laziness of those who fear a painful Applica- tion. Without doubt, one of the principal Reasons why the study of polite Learning is so much disus'd, is this, that many who either pretend to be, or really are great Wits, have in- troduc'd a Custom of condemning as a Science fit only for the Schools, and a gross piece of Pedan- try, all Citations of Greek Passages, and learned Remarks. They have been so unjust as to extend their Railleries to Writers who were Polite, and knew the World; as Cæsar for instance. Who would after this have aspired to the Glory of a fine Wit, by setting off his read- ing and critical Remarks? If they had only condemn'd those who cite impertinently Plato and Aristotle, Hippocrates and Varro †, to prove a thought common to all Ages and Nations, they had not discouraged so many People; but in a disdainful manner they have excluded those our of the Number of fine Gentlemen, and confin'd them to the Colleges, who durst declare that they had made Collections: They laugh'd at Cæsar, and even at the Letters of Pasquier, which were intermix'd with Latin. The effects of this Censure were so much the greater, because it was cloak'd with a very fair Pretence, which was this, That we should labour to polish our Wit, and form our Judgment, and not heap up in our Me- mory the sayings of others. The truer this Maxim is, the more it did flatter superficial and lazy Wits, and push them on to ridicule all Discourse of Learning. Their principal Motive perhaps was, that by vilifying the Merit of others they might affirm that he (D) was not much above 45 Years old when he died, but I cannot ſet down preciſely the number of his Years. 'Tis ſaid *, that "Mr. D. S. who is — of the Family "of this famous Academiſt, ſeems to have inherited his knowledge of the Fables: He "is writing a Mithological Hiſtory, of which there is no Circumſtance, but what will "be grounded upon, or adorn'd with ſome Paſſages of a Greek or Latin Poet.

* See La Bruyere in the 1*st part of* Judg- ments, p. 408 & seq.

THE decay of Polite Learning.

† Herillus will al- ways cite w[illegible] Spar- tan, Lacedæ- monian or Mycen. He makes the Prince of Philoso- phers say, that Wine inebriates, and the Roman Orator, that Ha- tred tempers it. If he talks of moral[illegible], it is not he, but the Divine Plato, who affirms, that Love is amiable, and Love onius, and that both the one and the other do turn to a Hair. It is a common and trivial thing, which [illegible] ashamed to think of, are asked by the Latin and Greek Authors. La Bruyere ibid p. 5.

MICYLLUS (JAMES) Born at Strasburg, April 6. 1503, held an honourable Rank among the learned Men of his Age. He ſtudied in the moſt famous Univerſities of Germany, and ſpent near five Years at that of Erfort, where he contracted a very cloſe Friendſhip with Joachim Camerarius, which laſted as long as his Life. The Name of his Family was Moltzer †. The Name of Micyllus was given him, becauſe he admirably acted the Part of (A) Micyllus in a Piece upon the Stage, wherein a Dialogue of Lucian ‡ was repeated before a great number of Auditors. He was early known to be a Man well qualified to make a College flouriſh; for in the Year 1527, he taught the Latin and Greek Tongues in the College of Francfort: And he acquitted himſelf ſo well, that at Heidelberg he was choſen Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue in 1532. Thither he went; but he ſtay'd not long there, for the Magiſtrates of Francfort having recall'd him, he re-aſſumed his former Poſt in their City. He (B) return'd to Heidelberg when the Reformation was receiv'd there β, and taught there publickly the Greek Tongue, and at his Houſe the Latin Tongue with good ſucceſs, till he died, which happen'd the 28th of January (C) 1558. He had not long before a Conference with Melanchthon who was come to Heidelberg at the deſire of Otho Henry, to concert the new Statutes of the Univerſity. Micyllus was one of the beſt Poets (D) of his Time in Germany. He had a great many Children; but he left only two Sons, whereof one ſtudied the Law, and was Chancellor to the Elector Palatin; the other was a Taylor by Trade in Heidelberg γ. I will ſay ſomething of his Works (E).

MIL-

* Diverſitez Curieuſes, to. 7. p. 121, 122. Dutch Edition.

† Moreri calls him Moltzel; Mr. Teiſſier in his Additions to Thuanus, Melcher; Konig in his Biblioth. Motzlerus.

‡ That whoſe Title is Somnium, ſeu gallus.

β i. e. in 1546. ex Sleidano, lib. 16.

γ Taken out of Melchior Adam in vitis Philoſoph.

might raiſe their own; for if one ſhould tell them, You condemn this Author who cites Greek and Latin: Could you do as much? Lay your Hand upon your Heart, would you blame him if you were able to imitate him? 'Tis very probable, that they would be hard put to it to prove their Sincerity. But let us abridge this Digreſſion, and conclude with ſaying, that things are come to that paſs, that the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres for the laſt Month (c) inform us, that the Bookſeller of Paris, who would print the Verſion of Homer, made by Madam d'Acier, will not print the Original with it. He is afraid, no doubt, that the ſight of the Greek Character will frighten the Readers, and hinder the Sale of the Book. Conſider, I beſeech you, what was written from Paris to Mr. Bernard, and what he has inſerted in his Nouvelles for the Month of October laſt (d). The Telemachomania is a Book full of Wit and Fire: It is divided into two Parts: (e) The Author ſhows in the firſt Part, that the Church had always an Averſion for Romances. (f) The ſecond Part is much longer than the firſt, but it is alſo more tedious, becauſe the Author makes it his only buſineſs to ſhow the Anachroniſms and Faults in Hiſtory and Mithology which are in Telemachus. By this you may judge what is the prevailing Humor, and conclude, that the Commentary upon Apollodorus would be laugh'd at in Paris; and this the Bookſellers know well enough, and therefore they will not Print it. It is a Work wherein there is too much Learning.

(c) Bernard, Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, Nov. 1700. p. 586, 587.

(d) Idem Nouvel. for the Month of October, 1700. p. 385.

(e) i. e the Abbot Faydit.

(f) Id. ib. p. 389, 390.

(g) Baillet Jugem. des Poetes, tom. 4. n. 1432. p. 98.

(D) That he was not much above 45 Years old.] This Age is aſſign'd him in the Hiſtory of the French Academy. Others ſay (g), that he liv'd forty ſeven Years. But 'tis certain that he died not ſo young; for his Father who had him by the firſt Marriage, Married again in 1586. The Contract of this ſecond Marriage is dated September 27, as Mr. Guichenon informs us. I wiſh he had been as careful to ſet down the Day of the Peoples Birth, as the Day of their Marriage and Wills. The one had not been more difficult to him than the other as to the Family of Mr. de Meziriac. He knew the Son of this learned Man, and by him probably he recover'd the Memoirs which taught him what he relates of this Family. Why then did he not ask him the Days of their Births? If he had done it, we might have known certainly how long this Member of the French Academy liv'd.

(A) The Part of Micyllus.] Hagius in the Life of Peter Lotichius, gives an exact account of this Adventure; but inſtead of ſaying that he learn'd it from a Man who was a Spectator of it at Francfort (this was John Lonicerus Greek Profeſſor at Marpurg) he ſhould have cited (h) Micyllus himſelf, as Melchior Adam hath done.

Fortuito quondam Micylli nomina caſu
Repperi, & in mores tranſiit ille meos.

(h) Lib. 1. Sylvarum.

There is in Moreri, fortitudo inſtead of fortuito, which was Corrected in the Dutch Edition by Ludendo. I have every where put Micyllus, although I know that d'Ablancourt who calls him Micylus in his Tranſlation of Lucian, was approv'd by Mr. Menage (i). If I had been condemn'd for this by that learned Man, yet I ſhould not have been cenſur'd for Orthography; for I do not ſay, Mycillus, as the greateſt part of the German Writers call him when they ſpeak of Jacobus Micyllus, wherein, ſays he, they are ſo much the more to blame, becauſe this Name was given him, for acting well the Perſon of Micylus in Lucian, when he was a Scholar. Menage is not the only Perſon (k) who ſays, that Micyllus was then a Scholar, which is very likely: But it is not very eaſie to reconcile this with what is related above, that this Piece was Acted at Frankfort; for it does not appear, that Micyllus ſtudied there. Melchior Adam makes him go from Straſburg to the moſt famous Univerſities of Germany.

(i) Obſervat. upon the French Tongue. vol. 1. p. 346.

(k) Voſſius de ſcient. Mathem. p. 78. Teiſſier Addit. t. 1. p. 139. Konig Bibliothec. p. 540.

(B) He return'd to Heidelberg.] Melchior Adam deſcribes the time of this Return only by the Characters of the War of Smalcald, and the reception of the Goſpel in Heidelberg. Donec ſub bellum Smalcaldicum cum variis Germaniæ concuteretur motibus, atque Heidelbergæ Evangelii doctrina reciperetur, eodem ad Græcanicæ linguæ profeſſionem accerſitus rediit. This denotes the Year 1546, or 1547, and agrees with the Marginal Note, wherein this Author ſays, that Micyllus was twenty Years in the Service of Francfort, and more than ten, tho' with ſome interruption, in the Service of the Electors Palatin.

(C) The 28*th of* January 1558.] This ſhows that John Hagius, who ſays (a), that Micyllus, Melanchthon and Lotichius Secundus died the ſame Year, was miſtaken: He ſhould have ſaid it only of the two laſt, for they indeed died in 1560. Moreri is miſtaken only in the Day, who ſays, that Micyllus died the twenty third of January: Probably the duodetrigeſimo of Melchior Adam caſt a Miſt before his Eyes.

(a) In vita Lotichii Secundi, p. 69.

(D) One of the beſt Poets.] Nevertheleſs the Criticks have obſerv'd a great many faults in his Verſes, and even ſuch faults, as are falſe quantity. See the Cenſure or the Promulſis Critica of John Peter Lotichius, in Chap. 14. wherein there is a fault of the Impreſſion concerning the Year of the Birth of Micyllus, which is ſaid to be 1553, inſtead of 1503. We learn from that Book, that Micyllus, after the example of the Poets of Antiquity, had a very ſmall ſhare in the favour of Fortune: Variam ac movercantem, dum viveret, expertus fortunam —quæ ſors illi cum majorum gentium veteribus poëtis fuit communis.

(b) Apud Melchior Adam. p. 181. Philoſoph. German.

(E) Something of his Works.] His Treatiſe De re metrica, is a Maſter-piece, as Melanchthon ſays. See what he ſays of it. (l) De re metrica [illegible] eruditiſſimi & conſummatiſſimi libri tres Jacobi Micylli [illegible]

* Samuel Maresius in Anti-christo revelato, lib. 2. cap. ult. p. 562, & seq.

† Cum obmutuisset in frequenti senatu. Id. ibid.

‡ Taceo aliud culinæ suæ subsidium ex publica sollicitatione in Curia negotiorum famosæ cujusdam meretriculæ tanquam affinis suæ, est enim soceri sui spuria. Id. ib. p. 565.

* MILLETIERE (THEOPHILUS BRACHET SIEUR DE LA) had a Reputation much greater than good for meddling in Matters of Religion, and endeavouring to reconcile the Catholicks and Proteſtants in France. One of his Antagoniſts deſcrib'd him after the following manner; * That after he had ſtudied the Law ſuperficially at Heidelberg, he was admitted Advocate; that he was ſo much in love with an Attorney's Daughter, that he fell dangerouſly ſick, and that he neither would nor could be cured but by Marrying her; that he hop'd to find Cauſes by means of his Father-in-Law, and upon this account follow'd the Bar; but being at a ſtand in one Pleading † he was ſo diſguſted with the Practice of the Law, that he ſet up for a Divine; that he was heard to diſpute about Matters of Religion in the Palace, whither he went ſtill as an Advocate that came to hear, and ſpoke Hebrew; that he affected a great Zeal againſt Arminianiſm; that he manag'd the Conference of Camero with Tilenus; and that by all theſe motions he obtain'd the Office of an Elder in the Conſiſtory of the Church of Paris, and afterwards was made Deputy of the Province to the Aſſembly of Rochelle; that he had the chief hand in the tumultuous Reſolutions of that Aſſembly, which overturn'd the ſtate of the Churches; that his Conduct in this Deputation is very well known, and with what heat he wrote againſt Tilenus (A) his particular Enemy, and how little the ſucceſs of his Journey to the States General anſwer'd the Hopes he had rais'd in the Aſſembly at Rochelle; that being return'd Home, he ſollicited the Affairs of the Duke of Rohan at Court, and that he was ſuſpected of being concern'd in Enterprizes pernicious to his Country, and of holding Correſpondence with Strangers; that he was apprehended and ſent to Toulouſe (B), where, after he had endur'd the torture and a long Impriſonment, he fram'd the firſt draught of Syncretiſm; that having recover'd his Liberty by the Clemency of the Prince, and the Interceſſion of his Friends, he engag'd to reſtore all the Reform'd to the Romiſh Communion, and that by this means he thought to make his Acknowledgement for the annual Penſion of a Thouſand Crowns that were given him; that he Printed many Books (C) about the Re-union of the Religions, and becauſe he did not pay a deference to the Remonſtrances of the Conſiſtory of Charenton, he was at laſt excommunicated, which did not hinder him from going to Church conſtantly; that he ‡ bore the Expences of his Family another way, which was

(c) The Epitome of the Bibliotheque of Geſner, excepts the Metamorphoſis; but we ſee in the Catalogue of Oxford the Notes of Micyllus upon the fifteen Books of the Metamorphoſis.

(d) See the Titles of his other Works in the Epitome of the Biblioth. of Geſner.

(e) French Mercury, tom. 7. ad annum 1621 p. 223.

(f) It is inſerted in the French Mercury. ibid.

(g) At Page 165, &c. See alſo the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nantes, B. 8. p. 423.

nemo Latine ſcripſit proſodiam eruditius aut diligentius. His other Works are Notes upon Ovid (c) and Lucan, the Tranſlation of ſome Pieces of Lucian with Scholia; ſome Notes upon the Genealogy of the Gods Compos'd by Boccacio; many Greek and Latin Verſes; a Tranſlation of Tacitus into the German Tongue; Arithmeticæ logiſticæ libri duo (d), &c.

(A) With what heat he wrote againſt Tilenus.] In the beginning (e) of the Month of March, 1621, there came forth under the Name of Abraham Elintus, an Advertiſement (f) to the Aſſembly of Rochelle, wherein the Reform'd were earneſtly exhorted to ſubmit to their Prince, and not to undertake to preſerve by a War the Poſſeſſion of the Edicts. Elintus was the Anagram of Tilenus, who was the Author of this Advertiſement. La Milletiere Secretary to the Aſſembly of Rochelle, wrote an Anſwer to this Piece, and entituled it, A Diſcourſe of the true Reaſons why thoſe of the Reform'd Religion can, and ought, to reſiſt with force of Arms the open Perſecution of the Enemies to their Religion and the State. Tilenus reply'd in a Book which was entitul'd, An Examination of a Book entitul'd, A Diſcourſe of the Reaſons why thoſe of the Reform'd, &c. See in the 8th Volume (9) of the French Mercury the Contents of theſe two Works. Note, that the Chamber of the Edict ſitting at Beziers, caus'd the Anſwer of La Milletiere to the Advertiſement of Tilenus, to be burnt by the Hand of the Hangman, and that they order'd inquiry ſhould be made into the Name of the Author; which Decree was made October 6. 1626. See the twelfth Volume (h) of the French Mercury. Father Ange de Raconis, a Capuchin Preacher, did maliciouſly make uſe of many Extracts out of thoſe Writings of Tilenus and La Milletiere; and he informs us (i), that Du Moulin among all the reſt choſe La Milletiere, to oppoſe him againſt (k) Raconis, when the Baroneſs de Courville was inſtructed. Note, that Grotius (l) did not approve of La Milletiere's publiſhing a Work ſcapable of rendring the Cauſe of the Reform'd odious to the ſuperior Powers.

(B) That he was ſent to Toulouſe, where after he had endur'd the torture.] He himſelf informs us of a very peculiar Circumſtance in his Proceſs. I had in my Hands, ſays he (m), the Sentence of my Death, drawn up by the Hand of the firſt Preſident Maſuyer, under the Authority of the Parliament of Toulouſe, in which I found my ſelf condemn'd as one convicted of the Crimes charg'd upon me, and this Sentence was put into the Hands of the Recorder, before the Conſultation about it in Parliament, which, by an Interlocution, was the occaſion of the delay, whereby I obtained my Life from the Sovereign Authority.

(C) That he Printed many Books about the Re-union of the Religions.] He begun with a Letter which he publiſh'd in French in 1634, and it was followed two Years after by a Latin Work divided into two Parts. In the firſt he examined the Diſputes about the Primacy of St. Peter, about Juſtification, Prayers for the Dead, the Invocation of Saints, and the Euchariſt. In the ſecond he treated of Nature and Grace, and of Predeſtination. This Book he ſent to the ableſt Miniſters; and many Anſwers were made to it: Among the reſt that of Mr. du Moulin was very ſharp, to which he wrote a Reply (a) in French, which Grotius did not deſpiſe. I think none anſwer'd the ſecond Book of La Milletiere better than Mr. Daille, whoſe Anſwer is entituled, An Examination of the Advices of Mr. de la Milletiere, about the Accommodation of Differences in Religion; which he publiſh'd in Latin and French 1636. This Examination was refuted by Mr de la Milletiere, and that Refutation oblig'd Mr. Daille to write an Apology; (b) but he did not publiſh it. His Adverſary publiſh'd a new Book (c) after the holding of the National Synod of Alençon in 1637. with this Title, The means of Chriſtian Peace by the Re-union of the Catholicks and Proteſtants as to the differences of Religion. After this he publiſh'd many other Books, whoſe Titles need not be ſet down. I will only add, that he became ſo captious, that he wrote an Apology for the method of Peter Baron. He thought he had juſtified it by Reaſons which no Miniſter could anſwer: Of which he boaſts in the 9th Page of his Catholique Reformé, Printed at Paris in 1642.

Let us ſee the Judgment that is given of him by the Hiſtorian of the Edict of Nantes, "(d) "La Milletiere was a raſh conceited Man, who "thought that none came near his great Merits "and Capacity. Moreover, either the fear that "the Court, remembring what was paſs'd, ſhould "give him Trouble, or the hope of his purchaſ-"ing much Glory, or of making a great For-"tune by the ſucceſs of that Enterprize, or the "praiſes which the Jeſuits gave him, to draw "him to their Party, ſo depraved his Mind,

(a) Molinæus dum expectato miſſum ad ſe librum excepit duo reſponſa, ut & priorem fecerant tum ipſe tum Rivetus Reſcripſit Molinæus Molinæo ſalutatis, quippe Gallico ſermone quo plus valet, & quædam dixit ad Molinæum pertinentia non vane. Grotius ep. ult. 541 inter epiſt. ad Voſſ. & Thuan. p. 79, edit. in fol.

(b) The Life of Mr. Daillé, p. 41.

(c) Hiſt. of the Edict of Nantes, tom. 2. lib. 10. p. 515.

(d) Id. ib. p. 514, 515.

(h) At p. 607, & ſeq. (i) Ange de Raconis, Glaive de Jezabel, c. 3. p. 313. (k) Nephew to the Capuchin. (l) Grotius epiſt. 174. part. 1. p. 65. See alſo the Letter 175. (m) La Milletiere in cb. 12. of the Catholique Reformé, p. 197, 198.

was by ſolliciting as a Brother-in-Law, the Proceſs of a famous Curtezan, to whom he was indeed related in this degree of Affinity, for ſhe was a Baſtard of the Attorney whoſe Daughter he had Married; that no body denied, that he was grafted into honourable (D) Families, yet it was well known * what Profeſſion his Grandfather practiſed in Orleans. This I have taken out of a Book Printed in 1642. It may be ſeen elſewhere †, that La Milletiere continu'd ſtill in the external Profeſſion of the Reform'd Religion in 1645, at the time of the National Synod of Charenton. The Proceedings of that Aſſembly againſt him ‡ oblig'd him to declare himſelf openly, that is, he imbraced the Romiſh Communion. He abjur'd towards the end of March 1645. He continu'd ſtill to write Controverſies, and to ſay (E) that the Re-union of the two Religions was an eaſie thing. The firſt Work that he publiſh'd after his Abjuration ‖ was that which contain'd the motives of his Change. He begun many other Books afterwards, but did not finiſh them, either becauſe his firſt Thoughts ceas'd to charm him, or becauſe of the want of the Approbation of the Doctors vex'd his Spirit; for they did not agree to all his Opinions, and he oppos'd their Remonſtrances. He was ſo offended at a Sermon Preach'd by a Biſhop, who in a Parallel drawn between the Virgin Mary and JESUS CHRIST ſet her in all things above, or at leaſt equal'd her to the Son of God, that he declar'd freely, that he would return to the Pale of the Proteſtant Church in caſe he were oblig'd to hear many ſuch Sermons §. See the Memoirs of the Abbot de Marolles, who had a great Eſteem for him. He never was a Miniſter, although Father Jacob ¶ made him a Miniſter of Charenton: Neither was he a Phyſician, as Mr. de Vigneul Marville at p. 229 of his Miſcellanies has imagin'd. He would not confeſs that one of his Books had been (F) cenſur'd by the Sorbonne, and yet Mr.

* Id. ib. p. 561.

† In the Article Aimyraut in the Text

‡ See Letter 110, and 114, of Sarravius Edit. of Utrecht, 1697.

‖ Sarravius, Epiſt. 118. p. 121.

§ Ex eodem Sraravio Epiſt. 170. p. 173, 174.

¶ Ludovicus Jacob a Sancto Carolo Carmelita, Biblioth. Pontific, p. 471.

(c) Samuel Mareſius, Aurich. revelat. l. 2 p. 561.

(f) Abbot de Marolles Memoires, p. 322, 323.

(g) Hiſt. of the Edict of Nantes, ubi ſupra, p. 515, 516. Add to this theſe words of B. 11. p. 578. his Writings were condemn'd at the National Synod of Alençon in 1637, and they wrote to this Reconciler, that if he did not give within 6 Months an authentical declaration of his Repentance to the Conſiſtory of Paris, he ſhould be no longer accounted a Member of the Reformed Church.

(h) Abbot de Marol. ubi ſupra, p. 241, 242. See alſo p. 129, 193.

" that he was altogether for the Project of the " Cardinal, and drew up a Plan of an Accommodation exactly in the Terms which that Prelate deſir'd. He juſtified the Romiſh Church " in moſt things; and in thoſe which he did not " approve, he made uſe of the ſofteſt Expreſſions, " under pretence of explaining them, giving them " out as Queſtions, which ought not to hinder " the Reform'd from being reconcil'd.

(D) That he was grafted into honourable Families.] Let us relate the very Words of him who affirms this. (e) Homo male feriatus putavit non aliter quam alios contemptim deprimendo, imaginariam ſuam Nobilitatem poſſe commendari. Quaſi neſciretur quam ortum avus ipſius Aureliæ exercuerit; ipſum vero à ſuis collactaneis ſemper cum riſu exceptum, quoties nobilitatis ſuæ ſermonem pro inſita ſibi vanitate auſus eſt injicere; quamvis non negem eum honeſtis eſſe inſitum familiis, quas dehoneſtat quantum in ſe eſt. The Abbot Marolles informs us, that La Milletiere (f) was the Son of Ignatius Brachet, Sigeur de la Milletiere, and of Antoinette Faye, the Daughter of Bartholomew Faye, Seigneur d'Eſpaiſſes, Counſellor in the Parliament, and Preſident of the Inqueſts in 1541. By theſe Relations our Reconciler of Religions belong'd to many illuſtrious Families, as this Abbot ſhows at large.

(E) He continued ſtill to write Controverſies, and to ſay, that the Re-union of the two Religions was an eaſie thing. " (g) After divers Admonitions which " did no good upon him, the Synods declar'd, " that he was no longer a Member of the Reform'd Churches; and there was not one of them " that would receive him into their Communion. " He became therefore a Catholick out of neceſſity, that he might be of ſome Religion; and " after this he conſtantly acted the part of a Miſſionary, and look'd out for Conferences, at which " he was always ſo ill-treated as to daſh his boldneſs, if he had not been ſo ſelf-conceited, that " nothing could daunt him. Charles Drelincourt one " of the Collegues of John Daillé, and the true " Scourge of ſuch as were of Milletiere's Temper, " did perfectly defeat him in a Conference, the " Acts whereof was publiſh'd." Among other Books he publiſh'd at Paris, Le Triomphe, &c. The Triumph of Truth for the Peace of the Church, to invite the King of Great Britain to embrace the Catholick Faith. Of this I ſhall ſpeak hereafter in the laſt Remark.

Here follows a Paſſage ſomewhat curious: " (h) The firſt Conference intended by M. de la Milletiere, to re-unite the Churches that were " divided. This vertuous Man thought it eaſie " to compaſs the Return of the Proteſtants to " the Catholick Church. And when I ask'd him " many times the grounds of his Perſuaſion, " ſince the great Differences of Opinions, which " occur in certain Points, were difficult to be " reconcil'd; he anſwer'd me with a Spirit of Charity, which gives him as much Zeal as Know- " ledge, that this Reconciliation depended only " upon a good Reformation on our part, and on " knowing the Motives of the ſeparation of thoſe " who have left us; which he has ſhown in many " Books written to that end. One needs only " read his Flambeau de l'Egliſe, and his Flambeau de la vraye Foy, to which no Anſwer has been " given, neither can a good one be made to them, " becauſe they are ſo many invincible Demonſtrations; and if the Adverſaries do not " confeſſes it, one needs only enquire what they " ſtick at, and try to bring them to a regular " Conference. In the mean time Mr. de la Milletiere is perſuaded that he has demonſtrated, " or that it is not impoſſible for him to demonſtrate the infallibility of the Catholick Church, " whoſe primitive and abſolute Authority reſides " in the Holy See, and in the Perſon of the Pope, " without the Concurrence of a general Council. " ——I ſay he is perſuaded, that in his Book " of the Euchariſt and Tranſubſtantiation he hath " clearly demonſtrated the true Doctrine which " we have always profeſs'd, according to the deciſions of the holy Councils, and the pure " Word of God, which is very expreſs in this " Point, together with Tradition: And therefore they muſt no longer require of us the Teſtimony of the Senſes and of Reaſon, to prove " that there is no other Tranſubſtantiation than " that of paſſing from the knowledge of a ſenſible Subſtance to the knowledge of an intelligible Subſtance." Thus the Abbot de Marolles ſpoke of him in the Year 1656.

(F) That one of his Books had been cenſur'd by the Sorbonne, and yet Mr. Rivet.] This Miniſter anſwering a little Book of Grotius (a), put in an Appendix twelve Theſes (b) which he extracted from a Treatiſe of La Milletiere about the Power of the Pope, and the cure of Schiſms, to which he added a Decree of the Sorbonne againſt the Means of Chriſtian Peace, &c. This Decree bearing Date the 15th of December 1637, ſhould have (c) been publiſh'd at Paris, but was not. Nevertheleſs Andrew Rivet having got a Manuſcript Copy of it, Printed it in Holland, in 1642, in the Appendix I have mention'd. La Milletiere was much troubled at it, and affirm'd that this Piece was ſuppoſititious, and that (d) it was only the particular cenſure (e) of Mr. Chappellas a Native of Bourdeaux, and formerly a Jeſuit, who was created Syndick of the Faculty of Theology, in the Month of December 1637. At the ſame inſtant wherein he was confirm'd, being willing to do ſome famous act for his own Reputation, and worthy of the humour of his Climate, and his fiery Temper, he propos'd the Examination of my Book to the Society. La Milletiere adds, that his Book was never examin'd, and that (f) Chappellas, who had alledg'd an Order from the Sovereign Authority, found himſelf very much out in his reckoning. " The Reaſons of theſe different Mo- " tions being afterwards repreſented in the " place from which the Syndick pretended to " ſupport his deſign with a ſuperior Authority, " his

(a) Notes upon the Conſultation of Caſſander.

(b) See the 3*d Vol. of the Works of* Andrew Rivet, p. 976, 977.

(c) Ne hujus operis condemnati quemquam lateat, cenſuram hanc typis vulgandam eſſe decrevit. Ib. p. 978.

(d) La Millet. Cathol. Reform. p. 194.

(e) Id. ib. p. 188.

(f) Ibid. p. 193.

* In Germany in 8643. See Sarravius Epiſt. 53. p. 51.

Mr. Rivet publiſh'd an Act which bears the Name of the Faculty. I have heard ſay, that Mr. de la Milletiere had a Son who was kill'd * in the Wars, and that one of his Daughters was Married to Mr. Catelan Secretary to the Council, and that from this Marriage came a Daughter, who was Married to the Count of Jonſac. I muſt not forget (G) the Work which he dedicated to the King of England.

MILTON

(g) See p. 1037 of the 3*d Tome of his Works.*

" his Proceeding was found ſo impertinent, that " he and Mr. de Val the Subdean, receiv'd an ex- " preſs command to deſiſt from it. Nevertheleſs " he us'd the Authority that his Office of Syn- " dic gave him, to have his private Cenſure in- " ſerted in the Regiſter of the Faculty, which " was dated December 15, ſign'd by him and Mr. " du Val, by whoſe means he obtain'd the Place " of Syndic. It is therefore the Cenſure of Mr. " Chappellas, which Mr. Rivet has Printed, and not the " Cenſure of the Faculty of the Sorbonne." He ſhows by many Signs, that this Piece did not proceed from the Faculty. Mr. Rivet (g) was not able to ſhow that this Declaration was falſe. But as to other things he refuted his Adverſary ſolidly, and promis'd to give a fuller Anſwer; for he entituled his Book (h) Prodromus ad pleniorem refutationem calumniarum, &c. La Milletiere reply'd in Latin in a Diſſertation entituled crurifragium prodromi. Rivet changing his deſign, did only publiſh a Letter (i) of Cuthbert Haglandius, that is to ſay (*) Sorbiere, which contain'd an Advice, not to enter the Liſts any more with ſuch an Adverſary, and a long Catalogue of the faults of the Latin which were in the Crurifragium. Yet I learn from Grotius (k) the Title of a French Book which Rivet Printed at Rouen in 1642. An Anſwer to three Letters, with a Defence of Mr. Rivet againſt the Calumnies and Forgeries of Mr. de la Milletiere.

(h) It is at p. 1035, of the 3*d Vol. of his Works.*

(i) At p. 1114 of the ſame Vol.

(*) See the Preface of the Serbenona.

(k) Grotius Epiſt. 640. part. 2. p. 949. col. 1.

Note, that in 1644, the Cenſure of one of la Milletiere's Books by the Sorbonne appear'd at Paris. It had been ſoftned twice or thrice in favour of the Approvers. The Letters of Sarravius will tell you more of it (l). Grotius (m) acquainted his Brother, that the three Doctors of the Sorbonne, who had approv'd the Book of this Reconciler, were ſuſpended for a Year; and that Mr. Arnaud wrote a Book againſt la Milletiere upon a politick Account. (n) D. Arnaldus ſcripſit contra Miletierium ut ejus odio ſuum elueret. La Milletiere was alſo of the ſame Opinion as to the Motive of this Doctor of the Sorbonne. Read the Words of Sarravius: (o) Arnaldius etiam, quem ſibi clam adſtipulari Bachetus (p) arbitrabatur, epiſtolam edidit ad Præſules ſui libri Approbatores ſcriptam, in qua damnatum poſtea librum erroris, falſitatis, & hæreſeos accuſare prævertit. Hæc tamen omnia κατ' ειρωνειαν fieri, jactat Henotes. Credat Judæus Apella. Sed quid huic homini faciat? Eum ego, qui tam inſanum ſapit, Deorum ſuo relinquo.

(l) Sarravius Epiſt. 85, 86.

(m) Grotius Epiſt. 712. part. 2. p. 969. It is dated July 2. 1644.

(n) Idem Epiſt. 714. p. 969. It is dated July 16. 1644.

(o) Sarravius Epiſt. 85. p. 85, 86.

(p) It is a fault of the Printer for Brachetus. There are many other ſuch like faults in the Letters of Sarravius.

Since the Impreſſion of what you have read, I have run over the Piece which is mention'd above, viz. that which was Printed at Rouen in 1642. Its Title is Reſponſes, &c. An Anſwer to three Letters of the Sieur de la Milletiere on his means of a Re-union in Religion; by Andrew Rivet —— with a Defence of the ſaid Sieur Rivet againſt the Calumnies and Suppoſitions of the ſaid Sieur de la Milletiere, in his pretended Catholick Reformed, with a Letter of a learned Perſon of this Time concerning the ſame Treatiſe. There is one Chapter in it about the Hiſtory which Mr. de la Milletiere had given, of the pretended falſe Cenſure attributed to the Faculty of the Sorbonne. Mr. Rivet proteſts (q), that neither Mr. Chappellas, nor any one in his Name had put that Cenſure into his Hands, or procured it to be Printed —— (r) He that gave him a Copy of it in Holland, told him that it was ſent by Grotius. He leaves to Mr. Chappellas the Trouble and Care of defending himſelf againſt what was objected againſt him; but he refutes two Objections which la Milletiere had made to prove the Nullity of the Cenſure of the Sorbonne. " (ſ) The firſt is, That they are not uſed to talk at " Random, and without a due Application and Specifi- " cation of the Errors contain'd in the Writings they " cenſure The ſecond, That 'tis not their Cuſtom " to ſound an Alarm againſt Books which they cenſure, " and to end with Apoſtrophes to the Prelates of the " Church. —— (*) I ſhall give him two Examples " ſufficiently known of the contrary to what he " ſays, e[illegible]ly when they condemn the Book " [illegible] who is out of their Communion. " In [illegible] MDCXI. the 22d of Auguſt they " publiſh'd a Cenſure againſt a Book of the late " Mr. Du Peſſis of happy Memory, which was " intitl'ed The Myſtery of Iniquity, &c. There they " ſpecifie nothing, but ſay in general, That being " adviſed that the Book bearing that abominable Title, " ought to be condemn'd, deteſted, and the reading of it " wholly forbidden to Chriſtian People, as being hereti- " cal, very extravagant and ſeditious, contrary to the " Divine and Natural Laws, to the Writings of the an- " cient Fathers, &c. And a little after, they add a " caution in theſe Words, that They adviſe good " People who are zealous for the defence of the Holy " Church, &c. of the danger which may accrue by " the reading of that Book; Praying and Conjuring " (pray mark this) in a moſt humble manner, the Pre- " lates of the Catholick Church, and the Civil Magi- " ſtrates, &c. That they would endeavour with all " their Power, generouſly and effectually to hinder the " Courſe of ſuch a dangerous and fearful Peſtilence. " This is a Cenſure conform in thoſe two Points to " what the Perſon cenſured by the diligence of " the Sieur Chappellas, formally denies to be the " Style of the Sorbonne. Will he ſay, That this Cen- " ſure, injurious to the Perſon of the Author, and which " doth not ſet down any Sentence or Maxim of the Book " which it affects, to qualifie them by a Name, which " denotes, the reaſon of the Cenſure, did not proceed from " the Judgment of that Society? Here is another " without any Specification, and without making " any Application, of the Year CIↃ IↃ CXXIX, " againſt the ſmall (t) Pieces of Peter Poiret, who " died in the Communion of the Romiſh Church, " in a little Priory of the Abby of Eſſom, where- " in without any Specification, on the firſt of " September, they Condemn (u) Pichetel's Book as " wicked and abominable, infected with the ſtinking " Leproſie of Calviniſm, and ſtinking like the Pit of " Hell. And will have this Cenſure to be publiſh'd, " for fear the Domeſticks of the Faith ſhould be " wrack the Conſciences as it were in a Storm, and " circumvented by the reading of that fraudulent Book. " 'Tis alſo injurious to the Perſon of the Author, for " it calls him Deſertor & Perduellis, and theſe two " Cenſures are publiſh'd, being ſign'd by the Secre- " tary to the Recorder of the Sorbonne

(q) Rivet Reſponſes au trois Lettres, p. 163.

(r) Id. ib. p. 164.

(ſ) Id. ib. p. 167.

(*) Ib. ib. p. 168.

(t) Id ib. p. 168.

(u) See Mr. Colomies his Biblio-theque Choiſe about this Book of Pichetel p. 21, 22. of the 3*d Edition*

Mr. Rivet declares at the end of this Chapter, that he had received the Cenſure Printed at Paris with the Extract of the Regiſters of the Faculty, in the manner of proceeding, with theſe words at the end, Excerpta ex monumentis præfatæ facultatis ſign'd Philip Bouvot, firſt Beadle and Tranſcript of the Faculty, the firſt of July 1642. He make afterwards (w) ſome Reflexions on La Milletiere's new Sally in his " Remonſtrance to the Gentlemen of the Fa- " culty of Divinity aſſembled in the Sorbonne, the " firſt of Auguſt 1642, on the Nullity of the Cen- " ſure of the Sieur Chapellas, &c." He ſays, that (x) the act of this Cenſure " put Mr. de la " Milletiere to his laſt ſhifts, and made him leave " no Stone unturn'd to beat down the Sieur Cha- " pellas if he could; that he accuſes him of hav- " ing forged it himſelf, and cauſed it to be Prin- " ted contrary to the intention of the College, " by a meer ſurprize, not having declar'd to " them for what reaſon he demanded that Act, " and to what purpoſe he would make uſe of it." This informs us of two things; 1 That Mr. Chapellas being deſirous to refute the Reveries of Mr. de la Milletiere, let the Publick ſee the Proceedings of the Faculty. 2 That the latter continued to clamour and wrangle. Now as this may ſerve to ſhow us his bold, vain, ſtubborn and ſhuffling Humour, 'twas not improper to let you ſee it; and I am perſuaded in general, that theſe Abſtracts which I have given of Andrew Rivet's Letters, will appear very curious and inſtructive

(w) Id ib. p. 167.

(x) Id ib.

(G) The Work which he dedicated to the King of England] The Title of it is mention'd above; and tho' I have not read it, I imagine, that the Character of the Author, the eager deſire of making himſelf neceſſary upon ſignal occaſions, and the love of Vain-glory, appear in it as much or more than in any Book he has publiſh'd. My Conjectures are grounded upon ſome places of the Anſwer which was made to his Epiſtle Dedicatory. This Anſwer is the Work of an Engliſh Biſhop who was with K. Charles II. during his Exile. It was Printed at Geneva in 1655, in 8°. The Preface to the Reader contains this among other things; Mr. de la Milletiere having once paſs'd this Rubicon, " became one of our moſt cruel Adverſaries, " and there was no Miniſter whom he did not " vex, and by an infinite number of little Vo- " lumes, he imagin'd that he had drain'd the whole " Ocean of Controverſies, of which ſo many " great Wits of both Religions have been weary. " The greateſt part of his Works were neglect- " ed, and finding but few Antagoniſts that would " run ſuch a carrere with him, it was thought " that being fully ſatisfied with the Titles of " Honour, which his great ſufficiency had ob- " tain'd for him from the liberality of the Prince, " he was reſolv'd to keep a perpetual ſilence; " till Mr. Aubertin having writ a learned Trea- " tiſe of the Euchariſt, according to the Senti- " ments of the Fathers, this Book which gave an " alarm into the very Heart of the great City, did, as " it were, on a ſudden awake Mr. de la Milletiere, and " made him put Pen to Paper to refute it after " his manner. But it was more ſurprizing to all " the wiſe Men of both Religions, to ſee him ſo far " forget himſelf, as to Dedicate his Book to the " King of Great Britain, a Prince whom he very " well knew to be of a Belief quite contrary to " that which he eſtabliſh'd in his Book, and to " whom he could not addreſs things of that Na- " ture, without drawing upon himſelf his juſt In- " dignation, and fomenting unjuſt ſuſpicions in " his rebellious Subjects. His Epiſtle Dedicato- " ry is nothing but a torrent of Reproaches a- " gainſt the Church which he hath forſaken, af- " ter having torn her Bowels, of horrible Pre- " judices againſt the Memory of the late King " of England, of flattering Inſinuations to his " Succeſſor, and imaginary Victories over thoſe, " whom neither he, nor the Heads of his Party " durſt have look'd in the Face: And all this fine " Stuff, together with the pretended Refutation " of Mr. Aubertin, bears the ſpecious and pom- " pous Title of, The Triumph of Truth for the Peace of the Church. Although the King of England " at firſt took this Dedication very ill, yet he " was like to be perſuaded to deſpiſe it, without " ſhowing any diſtaſte of it in publick: But " conſidering afterwards that this attempt gave " occaſion to the Inſults of his Enemies, he com- " manded a learned Biſhop, who was then near " his Perſon, to write an Anſwer to it, without " touching, except by the by, upon that lofty " Book to which it was prefix'd." This is ſufficient to ſhow that la Milletiere wrote with- out Judgment. All the World knew, that the Enemies of Charles I. accus'd him of being a Favourer of Popery, and that nothing was more fit to foment the Averſion of the Engliſh Republicans to the Royal Family, than this Opinion, that the King was not a Proteſtant; and yet here is a Writ- ter who had the boldneſs to dedicate to Charles II. a Book wherein he ſuppoſes (y), that Charles I. died an inviſible Member of the Romiſh Church. The Author that wrote an Anſwer to him, made a very moderate Remonſtance upon it. Many, and the wiſeſt Men think, ſays he to him (z), that it was very indiſcreetly done to publiſh a Treatiſe of ſuch a nature as yours is, under the Protection of his Majeſty, without his Leave, and againſt his Conſcience. Is it poſſible that you ſhould be ignorant, that ſuch like inſinuations as yours, and the Reports rais'd without any ground, about the deſign the late King his Father had to unite himſelf to the Romiſh Church, made him loſe the Affection of many of his Subjects? And if you knew this, how durſt you tread in the ſame Steps, on purpoſe to take from the Son all hopes of ever recovering it? The Anſwer which he gives him elſewhere, is ſomewhat more lively. " (*) You have the Im- " pudence to affirm, that this Prince died a true " inviſible Member of your Church, as it is di- " ſtinguiſh'd from the reſt of the Chriſtian World. " This is an old pious Fraud, and one of your " Machiavelliſtical Tricks, to gain Credit to your " Religion by any means whatſoever, lawful or un- " lawful: But it is quite contrary to the Confeſ- " ſion which he made at his Death, contrary to " what thoſe do certainly know who aſſiſted at " the Murder of this pious Monarch; and all " this, as I imagine, upon this vain Preſumption, " That there is no other Church but yours that is " capable of begetting ſuch a Child." Note, that the Author oppoſes to this Maxim a Doctrine very re- markable, which the Biſhop of Chalcedon main- tain'd " (b) in two Treatiſes that he publiſh'd, " viz. That if thoſe who live in the Communion of the " Proteſtant Church, endeavour to learn the Truth, and " cannot attain to it by reaſon of their inſufficiency, but " implicitely embrace it by preparing their Hearts to " receive it, which they are always ready to do, when- " ſoever it ſhall pleaſe God to reveal it unto them, " [which is the Duty of every good Chriſtian,] " they cannot fail of the true Church, of Faith and Sal- " vation." This is a Maxim (c) which might af- ford many Reflexions for a Supplement to the Phi- loſophical Commentary upon theſe words, Compel them to come in.

MILTON (John) a famous Apologiſt for the Murder of Charles I. King of England,

If la Milletiere had not been engag'd in the ſtu- dy of Controverſies above 25 or 30 Years, what we read in this Paſſage of his Antagoniſt, ſhould be look- ed upon as a greater piece of boldneſs than the firſt. " You take upon you (d) to enquire, or rather to " decide, why the Hand of God and of the Parliament " was ſo heavy upon the Head of the late King and of his " Son; and particularly that of God, becauſe, ſay " you, he had aſſum'd the Title of Head of the Church; " God intending by this Puniſhment to teach Princes " who live in Schiſm, with what ſeverity he can vin- " dicate his Glory againſt the injury done to the Unity " and the Authority of the Church: And as to the " Hand of the Parliament, becauſe this Prince would " not give his conſent to the abolition of Epiſcopacy, and " the ſuppreſſion of the Liturgy and Ceremonies of the " Church of England." Nevertheleſs I think that this Raſhneſs is more excuſable than the other, in a Man that had been ſo long verſed in diſ- putes of Religion; for it is hardly poſſible, that ſuch a Man ſhould not contract a habit of at- tributing the Proſperities of the Orthodox to their Zeal for the Faith, and the Misfortunes of the Hereticks to their falſe Religion. It is not neceſ- ſary here to obſerve how mean and popular thoſe Thoughts are, and yet they do eaſily admit of the falſe Ornaments of Rhetorick, which give them Emphaſis and Pomp. Let us rather take notice of the modeſty of the Engliſh Prelate who an- ſwer'd la Milletiere. " (e) By applying theſe parti- " cular Afflictions according to your ill-grounded " Fancy, what exceſſive boldneſs and liberty have " you given to other Men? Who if they would " arrogate to themſelves the Liberty that you " have taken, of judging of the Misfortunes of " other Princes, might as well ſay, that God " afflicts them becauſe they will not turn Pro- " teſtants, as you ſay of the late King, that " God has puniſhed him becauſe he would not " turn Papiſt." Thus you ſee what was the concluſion of the Anſwer of this Prelate, to this part of the indiſcreet and raſh Reflexions of our Theophilus Bracher. This Anſwer contains many other judicious Conſiderations which I do not mention. 'Twas ſufficient for me to take notice of that which is moſt proper to undeceive all rea- ſonable Men; for to diſcover the Falſhood of this common place (f), we need only obſerve that all Sects make uſe of it, and, if I may ſay ſo, it is a Saddle that fits all Horſes. To all this we may add ſtill this Imperfection, that it may be retorted againſt thoſe who alledge it with the greateſt Confidence. La Milletiere found it ſo by Experience. " Till you " make appear the truth of what you ſay, replied " the Engliſh Prelate (g), give me leave to obſerve, " that neither the conſtancy which plainly ap- " pear'd in Queen Mary (h) for the Roman Catho- " lick Religion, nor the change of Henry IV. who " imbrac'd the ſame Religion, could exempt them " from a cruel and bloody Death. What reaſon " then have you to impute the miſchiefs, which " the King ſuffer'd, to his Errors in Religion? Be " you your own Judge.

But nothing ſhows more clearly the vanity of la Milletiere, and his boundleſs deſire of being admir'd, than the means he propoſes to the King of England to

(b) Anſwer to la Milletiere, p. 165.

(c) Compare what Caramuel ſays in Nicolle's Treatiſe of the Unity of the Church, p. 71.

(d) Ibid. p. 42.

(e) Ibid. p. 45, 46.

(f) See what was ſaid in the Critique generale de l'Hiſtoire du Calviniſme, Letter 19. n. 3. p. 351. of the 3*d Edition, as to what* Maimbourg ſaid of the Prince of Condé kill'd at Jarnac.

(g) An Anſwer to la Milletiere, p. 166. 167.

(h) He means the Queen of Scotland, Mother to K. James I. and Grandmother to Charles I. King of England.

(y) An Anſwer to the Epiſtle Dedicatory of la Milletiere, p. 34.

(z) Ib. p. 35.

(*) Ibid. p. 163.

land was born at London (A) in 1608. He himſelf informs us *, that after he had ſtudied the Languages, and a little Philoſophy in the place of his Birth, he was ſent to Cambridge where he continued 7 Years (B), at the end of which he return'd to his Father's Houſe, who liv'd then in the Country. That having ſpent five Years there in reading Greek and Latin Authors, he went a Journey into France and Italy, in which he ſpent more than three Years. That finding England at his return involv'd in the Confuſions of a Civil War, he thought fit to ſhut up himſelf in his Chamber, and to leave the event of it to the care of Providence. That the Authority of the Biſhops being weaken'd, and every Body ſpeaking againſt them, he hop'd that this great beginning of Liberty might deliver Mankind from the Yoke of Bondage. That he thought himſelf bound to endeavour this to the utmoſt of his power. That to this purpoſe he wrote two Books about to recover his Dominions. His Tongue, if you will believe him, was ſufficient to produce this great Revolution. He affirms on the one hand, that this Monarch ſhall be reſtor'd (i) to his Kingdoms, provided he would turn Roman Catholick; and on the other hand he ſays, that if this Prince would be preſent at a Diſpute between ſome Catholick Doctors and the Miniſters of Charenton, he would quickly be converted. By this means he gives us to underſtand, that if there was ſuch a Diſpute, he would be one of the chief Diſputants for the Romaniſts, and conſequently the principal Cauſe of a Triumph whoſe Conſequences would be admirable. Conſider a little his Chimera's, according to all the degrees, to which the Engliſh Author has reduc'd them. "(k) But let us now come to the moſt ſpecious place of all your Epiſtle; which is this "ridiculous Propoſal you make of a Conference by the Authority of your Monarch, and at the requeſt of our King, before the Archbiſhop of Paris and his Coadjutor, between ſome Roman Catholick Doctors, and the Miniſters of the Church of that great City, to whom you juſtly give an ample Teſtimony of their Zeal and Sufficiency. You go on further; for you ſuppoſe, That thoſe Miniſters will accept of a Diſpute, or elſe by their refuſing it, they will betray the weakneſs of their Cauſe: And you conclude with an unmeaſurable Confidence, That theſe ſame Miniſters ſhall be convinc'd of the Falſhood of their Religion, and that their Converſion or Conviction will give an ample occaſion to the King of Great Britain to embrace the Romiſh Communion, and that his Converſion will bring back all the Proteſtants who have yet any Conſcience left, into the Pale of the Church, and the Obedience of the Holy See. Give me leave to make an Abridgment of theſe fine Conſequences: If the King of Great Britain deſires a ſolemn Conference, the King of France will order it: If he orders it, the Miniſters will accept of it: If they accept of it, they will certainly be overcome: If they are overcome, the King of England will change his Religion: If he changes his Religion, all the Proteſtants will do the ſame." One may eaſily gueſs, that the Anſwer out of which I take this Paſſage, contains a ſtrong Confutation of theſe Illuſions, and that it did not coſt the Engliſh Prelate much pains

* Defenſ. 2. pro populo Anglic. p. 60. &c. Edit. Hag. Comitis, 1654.

(i) See the Anſwer to la Milletiere, p. 150.

(k) Ib. p. 132, 133.

OBSERVATIONS about the Stature and Mien of Milton.

(A) In 1608.] This we learn from an Inſcription which is at the bottom of his Picture in (l) one of his Books; for it ſays, that in 1671 he was 63 Years old. He denoted his Age after a manner ſomewhat general, in his ſecond Apology written in 1653, or in 1654, where he only ſays, that he was above (m) forty Years old. It will not be improper here to obſerve, why he informs the Publick of this Circumſtance, ſince it will give occaſion to take notice of ſome falſities. It had been objected to him, that he was but a little Man who had nothing but Skin and Bones, and it was a corrective added to the (n) Application that had been made to him of theſe words of Virgil, Monſtrum horrendum, informe, ingens cui lumen ademptum. To which he anſwer'd (o), that he did not believe that ever his Perſon was eſteem'd Ugly; that his Stature was rather of a middle ſize than little; that he felt ſtill the Courage and Strength which he had formerly, when he wore a Sword, and thought himſelf able to look ſuch Men in the Face as were much ſtronger than he; that his Face was ſo far from being Pale, Thin and Wrinkled, that it did him a great deal of Honour, ſince at the Age of forty Years he ſeem'd to be younger by almoſt ten Years; that to witneſs all this he appeal'd to an infinite number of People, who knew him by ſight, and might juſtly ridicule him if he did not ſpeak the Truth. He confeſſed the plain Truth, as to his being Blind, but did not forget to ſay, that his Eyes did not appear to have the leaſt defect. No body after this can doubt, but Mr Morus and Salmaſius were impos'd upon, as to the Stature and Shape of Milton; I ſay Salmaſius, for he has alſo told us in his Reply, that he heard ſay, his Adverſary was as little as a Dwarf, &c. (p) Relatum quippe eſt mihi ab illis qui viderunt, eſſe ſtatura pumilionem. (q) Ab ea laboriosa & anxia longaque meditatione languorem etiam videtur contraxiſſe delicatum illud & infirmum corpuſculum tuum. Mr. Morus did not conteſt about this, only he proteſted (r), that he never pretended to reproach Milton for being Blind, ſince he did not know it but by his Anſwer, and that if he had ſaid any thing that related to Blindneſs, he meant the blindneſs of his Mind. By this he owns himſelf the Author of the Epiſtle Dedicatory to Clamor Regii Sanguinis. Now ſince he had ſaid there, that there could be nothing more Ugly and Lean than Milton, I believe he would have found it very difficult to reconcile his Epiſtle Dedicatory with that place of his Anſwer where he ſays, that he believ'd Milton was a handſome Man, eſpecially ſince he ſaw his Picture ſo curiouſly done before his Poems. An deformitatem tibi vitio verterem, qui bellum etiam credidi maxime, poſtquam tuis præfixam poematibus (a) comptulam iconem illam vidi? Salmaſius ſeems to boaſt of having been the cauſe that Milton loſt his good Health, and his Eyes, by anſwering the Apology for Charles I. and is ſo far from objecting to him any natural Deformity, that he pities him maliciouſly for having no longer that Beauty, which render'd him ſo lovely during his Travels in Italy. Inde etiam fortaſſe cerebrum tibi nimis inquies in oculis diſtillaverat eoſq; affluxerat. Malo iſto magnam partem tuæ pulchritudinis deperiſſe, pro eo ac debeo dolco. Nam in oculis maxime viget ac valet formæ deus. Quid Itali nunc dicerent ſi te viderent cum iſta fœda lippitudine. Non haberent amplius quod in te laudarent. Non ergo miror ſi Salmaſium iſtum odiſti, propter quem tantum tibi laboris & oneris impoſitum eſt, unde ægritudo tibi corporis & mentis hæc accidit, & præterea detrimentum tantum priſtini decoris paſſus es (b). Iſte jam lippitus vel caculus potius, olim bellulus puſio (c). He expreſſes himſelf more plainly in another place (d). I do not know what Milton anſwer'd to this laſt Slander, when he had occaſion to ſpeak to his Friends concerning the Poſthumous Reply of Salmaſius: But I have heard ſay, that when he was inform'd that his Enemy boaſted that he had made him loſe his Sight, and I, anſwer'd he, have made him loſe his Life. This Story is very probable, ſince we find the ground of it in theſe two Writers Books; as you may ſee. Sunt, ſays, Milton (e) qui nos etiam meis ejus (Salmaſii) reos faciunt, iiſdemque noſtros nimis acriter ſtrictos oculos, quos dum repugnando altius ſibi infixit, dum quod pro manibus habebat opus vidit ſpiſſius procedere, tempus reſponſionis abiiſſe, operis gratiam periiſſe recondatione amiſſæ famæ, exſtinctam, Principum denique favorem, ob rem regiam male defenſam ipſa ſe immunuiſſe, triennali tandem mœſtitia & animi magis ægritudine quam morbo confectum obiiſſe.

(B) At the end of which he return'd to his Father's Houſe.] The Author of Clamor Regii Sanguinis, affirms upon a hear-ſay (f), that Milton being driven out of the Univerſity of Cambridge for his Miſdemeanors, forſook the Country and retir'd into Italy. Milton denies all this, and gives another Account which is extreamly to his Advantage. Now ſince neither Morus, in anſwering the Book

(l) It is his Logick.

(m) Quadragenario Major. Milton, Defenſ. 2. p. 31.

(n) Quamquam nec ingens quo nihil eſt exilius, exſanguius, contractius. Epiſt. dedicat. Clamor. Regii Sang.

(o) Milton ib p. 30.

(p) Salmaſ. Reſponſ. ad Milt. p. 3.

(q) Id. ib. p. 15, 16.

(r) Def. public. p. 31.

(a) By the Anſwer which Milton wrote to theſe words, p. 84. it appears that theſe Poems were publiſh'd in 1645, and that he was not ſatisfied with his Engraver.

(b) Salmaſ. ubi ſupra.

(c) Id ib. p. 19.

(d) Tu quem olim Itali pro fœmina habuerunt, cui quam audeas, quod parum viſit, objicere? Ib. p. 23.

(e) Milt Defenſ 2. p 11.

(f) Ajunt hominem Cantabrigienſi Academia ob flagitia pulſum, dedecus & patriam fugiſſe, & in Italiam commigraſſe? &

about the means of reforming the Church of England; and after that two others against two Biſhops who had written in favour of Epiſcopacy. That having ſeen the end of this Diſpute, he conſider'd, that beſides Eccleſiaſtical Liberty, for which he and ſo many others had labour'd ſucceſsfully, there were two others, viz. the Domeſtick and Civil, which were of no leſs Importance. That he made uſe of his Pen for the Domeſtick Liberty, while the Magiſtrates were labouring very earneſtly for Civil Liberty. That having conſider'd that Domeſtick Liberty related to three things, to Marriage, the Education of Children, and the right of Philoſophizing without reſtraint, he wrote upon (C) Divorce, and ſhow'd that the Goſpel had not chang'd the Laws under which the Jews liv'd as to this matter; and that it would be in vain to cry Liberty, Liberty, in the publick Aſſemblies, if a Man was a Slave at Home to that Sex which is inferiour to ours. That afterwards he wrote about the Education of Children, and laſtly about the Liberty of the Preſs, that a ſmall number of unjudicious Men, and who moſt times are reſolv'd to ſuppreſs every thing that is not conſiſtent with popular Opinions, may not determine by a final Judgment, what ought, and what ought not to be Printed. That after the Sentence of Death was paſs'd upon King Charles I. he wrote (D) upon the general Theſis of the Right of the People againſt Tyrants, and made a Collection of the Opinions of many grave Divines upon this Subject, to put thoſe to ſilence who ſaid, that the Doctrine of the Proteſtant Churches was contrary to the late Tranſactions at London. That after this, while he was writing a Hiſtory (E) of England, the Council of State which was then eſtabliſh'd by Authority of Parliament, having a mind to make uſe of his Pen, order'd him to confute the Icon Baſilice, which went under the Name of the deceas'd King. That he entituled his Confutation * Iconoclaſtes. That being made choice of to refute a Book which Salmaſius had publiſh'd againſt the Parliament of England, he engag'd in that Work †, although he had almoſt loſt one Eye, and the Phyſicians foretold it as a thing certain, that he would loſe the other if he engag'd in it. This is what he tells us of himſelf: And we may add, that he became in effect Blind about this time, and that his Anſwer to Salmaſius's Book made him talk'd of (F) over all the World ‖. He anſwer'd ſome time after a Book entituled Regii Sanguinis Clamor ad cœlum, which he aſcribed to Mr. Morus, although it was Peter du Moulin

* I have the French Verſion of it made from the ſecond Edition in England, and Printed at London in 1652.

† Ib. p. 35.

‡ See the Remark A.

‖ Ib. p. 95.

which contains this account, nor Salmaſius in his Reply, wherein are many defamatory Tales againſt Milton, have ſaid nothing of this diſgraceful leaving of Cambridge, which was objected to him, we have reaſon to believe that it is a Fable; for certainly there muſt be, for ſuch kind of Accuſations, ſome Principles that cannot be deny'd, and upon which a good Proof may be grounded: And what Principles are more worthy of this Rank, than to ſee a Man publickly accus'd of things which 'tis eaſie to prove, deny thoſe things publickly, while none of the adverſe Party dares maintain the Accuſation againſt him? Whatever Evaſion Men may find in Metaphyſical Subtleties to defend themſelves againſt this proof of Falſhood, it muſt be granted, that morally ſpeaking, it is a convincing one: Seeing therefore Milton did produce ſuch a Proof for himſelf, we may reckon as one of the Lyes that were ſpread abroad againſt him, that which concerns his pretended leaving of Cambridge.

(g) Printed at London in 1644.

(h) Printed at London in 1645.

(i) Printed in 1645.

(k) In a Preface of George Crantzius, Dr. of Divinity prefix'd to the ſecond Apology of Milton, of the Dutch Edition 1654. See alſo Clam. Reg. Sang. p. 8.

(l) Defenſio pro ſe, p. 40. edit. Lond. 1655, in 12°.

(C) He wrote upon Divorce.] It appears by his ſixtenth Letter written in 1654, that Aitzema had a mind to get that Book of Milton tranſlated into Dutch, and that the Author deſir'd rather to have it tranſlated into Latin, having experienc'd that the People were prejudic'd againſt all Opinions that were not common. He there informs us, that he had written three Treatiſes upon this Subject; whereof the firſt was entituled (g), Of the Doctrine and Diſcipline of Divorce; the ſecond was entituled, Tetrachordon (h), wherein the four principal Paſſages of Scripture were explain'd which concern this matter; the third was entituled, Colaſterion (i), wherein he refutes a certain Scribler It was objected to Milton (k), that he had call'd the Doctrine of JESUS CHRIST concerning Divorce, Diabolical, as it is explain'd by the Fathers, by Ancient and Modern Divines, and by all the Univerſities and Churches of England, Holland and France; and that for his own part he pretended, that Divorce ought to be allow'd, even when a contrariety of Humors is the only ground of it. To this (l) he anſwers theſe two things: Firſt, That the ſenſe given by the generality of Interpreters to the words of Scripture, whereby they are made to ſignifie, that after a Divorce made in a caſe of Neceſſity, it is not lawful to proceed to a ſecond Marriage, might very well be call'd a Diabolical Doctrine. 2. That it is not true, that all the Fathers, the Ancient and Modern Divines, and all the Univerſities are agreed about this matter, and that he has ſhown in his Tetrachordon, that his Doctrine was the ſame with that of ſome of the Fathers, of Bucer, Fagius, Peter Martyr and Eraſmus. See his ſecond Apology, p. 58. 'Tis to be obſerv'd that Milton, who tells us ſo many Particulars of his Life, ſays nothing of his Marriage. Nevertheleſs Salmaſius had heard ſome ſay (m) that he was Married, and not only ſo, but that he had divorc'd his Wife at a Year's end, becauſe ſhe was ill Humored (n). In another place he ſuggeſts, that Jealouſie, or even Horns were concern'd in the matter. Milton therefore was not ſo unintereſted in his pleading for Divorce and Polygamy as Lyſias (o); his perſonal Intereſt mov'd him to ſay what he did.

(m) Uxorem ſuam poſt annum à nuptiis dicitur reſtuas ſibi habere juſſiſſe ob graves tantum mores. Salmaſ. reſp. ad Milton. p. 253. See alſo p. 3.

(n) Si Eunuchi omnes fuiſſent qui domum ſuam frequentabant, uxorem fortaſſe non repudiaſſes. Ibid. p. 23.

(o) See the Nouv. de la Repub. des Lettres, April 1685. p. 101.

(D) He wrote upon the general Theſis about the Right of the People.] This is probably the Book which he mentions in his ſecond Apology (p), when he ſays thus. Id fuſius docui in eo libro qui noſtro idiomate Tenor ſive tenura Regum & Magiſtratuum inſcriptus eſt ——Illic ex Luthero, Zuinglio, Calvino, Bucero, Martyre, Paræo, citantur ipſa verbatim loca, ex illo denique Knoxo quem unum me Scotum ais innuere, quemque hac in re reformatos omnes præſertim Gallos illa ætate condemnaſſe. Atqui ille contra, quod ibi narratur, ſe illam doctrinam nominatim à Calvino, ſummiſque aliis ea tempeſtate Theologis, quibuſcum familiariter conſueverat, hauſiſſe affirmat. As to what the Author of Clamor Regii Sanguinis accuſes Milton (a) of having writ to the Parliamentarians to determine a thing about which they remain'd in ſuſpence, I mean the Death of the King, Milton denies it, and pretends that he never wrote upon thoſe Queſtions till after the Death of that Monarch.

(p) p. 9.

(E) While he was writing an Hiſtory of England] He was, according to Salmaſius (b), a School-Maſter in London; Ludi triviales magiſter Londinenſis; ludimagiſter in ſchola trivali Londinenſi, de pedanco magiſtro Secretarius Parlamenti rebellis factus. But ſince in the Clamor Regii Sanguinis, which gives a ſhort Relation of his Adventures, it is not ſaid that he was a School-Maſter, and beſides 'tis probable, that he durſt not have related very particularly the ſeveral Conditions and Employments of his Life, without ſaying any thing of his being a School-Maſter, if he had been really ſo, it ſeems that Salmaſius was but ill ſerv'd by his Spies. Nevertheleſs we muſt not altogether truſt to theſe Probabilities: We ſhall ſee (c), that there was ſome ground for what he ſaid.

(b) Reſp. p. 13, 14.

(c) In the Remark K.

(F) Made him talk'd of over all the World.] I believe

* They were reprinted at Leipsick in 1690.

Moulin that wrote it. Because this Answer defam'd Mr. Morus horribly, he would not let it pass without a Reply: But Milton wrote a second Answer no less bloody than the former. He liv'd very quietly under the Usurpation of Cromwel, and by a good fortune, which was very extraordinary, he was not disturb'd nor prosecuted after the Restauration of Charles II. but he liv'd quietly at his House, although no Writer did ever more insult a Crown'd Head, than he did King Charles I. and his banish'd Family. His Impunity did not proceed from the good Nature of Charles II. but from his not being excepted out of the General Amnesty. Some of his Latin Letters were Printed in 1674 at London, and some Orations which he spoke in Latin when he was a School-Boy. The Latin Letters which were Printed in 1676 *, and had been written by the Usurpers to several Princes, are of his own making. He (G) lov'd Poetry, and many of his Poems both in Latin and English have been publish'd either in his Life-time, or after his Death. Patin has vented many (H) Lyes.

Since

believe that all the Books in Prose which Milton publish'd before the Confutation of Salmasius, were in English; yet it appears by this Confutation, that he was very ready at the Latin Tongue. It cannot be deny'd that his Stile is smooth, lively and florid, and that he dextrously and ingeniously defended the Cause of the Anti-Royalists; but without offering here to give my Opinion about the matter, I think it may be said, that the manner in which he manag'd this great Subject, appears to be very bad, because he did not observe any decent Gravity. He is every Minute, I do not say throwing out sharp Railleries against Salmasius, for this would not spoil his Work, and might serve to make People laugh on his side; but he every where acts the part of a Banterer and Buffoon. This fault does more plainly appear in his two Answers to Mr. Morus, which are stuffed with Quibbles and biting Jests: And hereby the Character of the Author does plainly appear, that he was one of those Satyrical Wits, who please themselves very much in heaping up all the Reports which are spread abroad to the disadvantage of any Person, and in making his Enimies write all the Calumnies they know of him; but much more do they please themselves in inserting these Calumnies in the first Book they publish against him. His Answer to Salmasius was burnt at Paris and at Toulouse by the Hand of the Hangman (d); which serv'd only to procure him more Readers. It was not the Parliament of Paris, as is affirm'd in the Clamor Regis Sanguinis, which condemn'd his Book to the Fire, but the Lieutenant Civil. Milton (e) does not pass over this mistake of his Adversary in silence. He boasted that Queen Christina (f), who, as he pretends, so highly esteem'd this Book of his, that she did even despise Salmasius, who was then at her Court. 'Tis certain, that this Book was read very greedily, as Mr. Ziegler, who speaks of it with an extreme Contempt, assures us in the Preface to his Exercitationes ad Regicidium Anglorum. The anonymous Author, who publish'd an Apology, (g) Pro rege & populo Anglicano contra Johannis Polypragmatici (alias Miltoni Angli) defensionem destructivam regis & populi Anglicani, complains very heavily of the unequal Fate of Salmasius and Milton. It has not been possible, says he, without a Thousand Difficulties, to procure an Edition of Salmasius's Book; but that of Milton has been Printed many times. (h) Quod ornatissimus Salmasius ad tuendum jus & honorem Caroli Britanniæ Monarchæ, Sceleratorum manibus interfecti, prudenter scripserat, unâ tantum impressione, idque, magnâ cum difficultate in lucem erupit: tanto odio hisce ultimis temporibus, veritatem mundus persequitur. Sed quod scelestissimus Miltonus, ad lacerandam famam Regis defuncti, & subvertendum in Subditos dominium hæreditarium, invidiose elaboravit, illius tot sunt exemplaria, ut nisi cui lectorem remitterem, se mendaciorum & convitiorum amore flagrant homines; volumine in decimo sexto perditissimi preti., usus sum.

(d) Defens. 2. p. 93.

(e) Ibid.

(f) Ib. p. 8. 52, 96.

(g) I make use of the Edition of Antwerp 1651, in 12°.

(h) In monito ad lectorem

(G) He lov'd Poetry.] Salmasius having said (i), that some who knew Milton thoroughly, did very seriously maintain, that he understood not Latin, that he was not capable of writing in Latin, adds, that for his own part he is of quite another Opinion, and that Milton being a Poet, might also be an Orator. Whereupon he scoffs at his Poems, wherein he says the Laws of quantity are violated; and this he proves by Examples; and thence he concludes, that altho' the Author had not set down at what Age he wrote them, one would have perceived, that they are the Work of a School-Boy. But Milton, says he, is answerable for the Faults of his Youth, since he has Printed them a few Years ago at London. By the second Letter of Milton it appears, that he caus'd some Latin Verses to be publish'd in 1628, and by the 10th, which is dated April 21. 1647, that he publish'd some time since a Collection of English and Latin Poems; which Collection came out in 1645: This would not savour very much of a Man, who gave no credit to false Reports concerning Milton, if Salmasius were rigorously dealt with. He says, that in the Opinion of many People (k) Milton never wrote the Apology for the People of England, and that he only lent his Name to the Book of a Master of a French School, who taught Children at London. All this is a Fable which I am glad to relate, that Authors may henceforth learn to give no Credit to Calumnies, wherewith their Heads are fill'd against their Antagonists. Some think to make their Court by this means to a Man, and occasion his publishing a hundred Fooleries. I do not place in this Rank the four Thousand Livres per Ann. which Milton got by writing for the Parliament, if we may believe Salmasius (l); for it is very probable, that Cromwel rewarded him bountifully. Milton has written two Poems in blank Verse; one about the Temptation of Eve; the other about the Temptation of Jesus Christ. The first is entituled Paradise lost; the second, Paradise regained. The former passes for one of the best pieces of Poetry that ever was seen in English. The famous Poet Dryden made a Play out of it, which was extreamly applauded. The other is not near so good, which made some jesting Men say, that Milton is easily found in Paradise lost, but not in Paradise regain'd. These Poems were translated into Latin Verse, and publish'd in 1690, by William Hog, a Scotch-Man.

(i) Resp. p. 4. & 5.

(k) Eam & multi negant illum autorem debere agnoscere nisi solo titulo, conscriptam enim esse à ludimagistro quodam Gallo de ruvio qui Londini pueros nihil sapere docet, p. 4.

(l) Usi supra, p. 16.

The same Dryden admiring Paradise lost, declar'd, that Greece, Italy and England have produc'd three Poets in different Ages, Homer, Virgil and Milton; that the first excell'd in sublimity of Thought, and the second in Majesty; and that Nature not being able to advance further, fram'd the third by a Concurrence of the Perfections of the other two. This is the subject of an Epigram of Mr. Dryden, inserted by Mr Toland, at p. 1. of the Life of Milton.

Three Poets in three distant Ages born,
Greece, Italy and England did adorn:
The First in loftiness of Thought surpass'd,
The Next in Majesty; in both the last.
The Force of Nature could no further go,
To make a Third, she joyn'd the former Two.

(H) Patin has vented many Lyes] "Mr de "la Mothe Vayer (b), who came just now to see me, "has brought me one of his Books lately writ- "ten, and tells me, that Milton's Book against "the late King of England was burnt by the Hand "of the Hangman; that Milton is a Prisoner, "and like to be Hang'd; that Milton writ "this Book only in English; and that one "call'd Peter du Moulin, the Son of Peter who "was Minister of Sedan, who had put it into "good Latin, was in danger of his Life." Mind the Person who vented this News to Guy Patin. It was not a sorry News-monger of the Font neuf, or of the third Pillar of the Great Hall; it was the Preceptor to the King's Brother; it was the French Cato, a Man very learned: He honestly believ'd, that Du Moulin run the hazard

(b Patin Letter 187, tom. 2. p 155. It is dated July 13, 1660.

Since the firſt Edition of this Dictionary, there was publiſh'd * at London the Life of John Milton, written in Engliſh by Mr. Toland, which will afford me a pretty long Supplement to this Article. Milton was born (I) a Gentleman, and had an Education ſuitable to that Rank. He had an inſatiable Paſſion for Learning, inſomuch, that from the Age of twelve Years, he was wont to ſit up till Midnight, and neither the weakneſs of his Sight, nor the frequent pains in his Head, were capable of abating his ſtudious Inclination. He was ſent to Cambridge at fifteen Years of Age, and in the ſame Year he Paraphras'd ſome Pſalms in Engliſh Verſe. He wrote at ſeventeen Years of Age many Pieces of Poetry, ſome in his Mother-Tongue, and others in Latin, and all of them of ſuch a Character and Beauty as was much above his Age. He took his Degree of Maſter of Arts at Cambridge, and return'd to his Father's Houſe. Thoſe who have ſaid, that he return'd thither, being driven away by the Univerſity of Cambridge for ſome Fault, or at leaſt that he was full of Reſentment, becauſe he could not get any Preferment there, have maliciouſly wreſted ſome Verſes contain'd in a Latin Elegy which he addreſs'd to his good Friend Charles Diodati. Upon the ſame ground it was given out, that he ſpent his Time with Ladies of Pleaſure at London, and was every Day at a Play. His Journey into Italy procur'd him the Friendſhip of the fineſt Wits, and the moſt famous learned Men that were in that Country †. He learn'd the Italian Tongue ſo well, that he was about to write a Grammar of it, and he made very good Italian Verſes. He had a deſign to have gone into Sicily and Greece, but being inform'd of the beginning of the Troubles in England, he did not think fit to ſpend his time in diverting Journeys, while his Countrymen were bearing Arms for the maintenance of their Liberty. He return'd therefore into his own Country, and as he paſs'd thro' Geneva, he contracted an Acquaintance with ſome conſiderable People there, who informed him afterwards of the Adventures of Alexander Morus, againſt whom he had occaſion to write. He arriv'd in England at the time of King Charles I. his ſecond Expedition into Scotland, and becauſe he was entruſted to be a Guardian to his Nephews ‡, he reſolv'd to ſet up for their Maſter (K), and he taught alſo ſome other Scholars. He Married in 1643, Mary Powel, the Daughter of a Juſtice of Peace in Oxfordſhire. It was not long before this young Woman was diſguſted at him (L), whereupon ſhe left him at a Month's end, and plainly declar'd, that ſhe would not return to him at all. Where-hazard of his Life for having tranſlated Milton's Book into Latin. And yet this du Moulin was one of the Confeſſors of the Royal Party; he wrote againſt the Rebels, and his Fidelity was quickly rewarded by Charles II.

* In 1699, prefix'd to the Works of John Milton in folio, and by it ſelf in 8.

† Such as Carlo Dati, Gaddi, Freſcobaldi, Francini, Bonmattei, Coltellini, Chimentelli, John Baptiſt Manſo.

‡ His Siſter's Sons.

(I) He was born a Gentleman.] John Milton his Father being deſcended from the Family of the Miltons, which was conſiderable in Oxfordſhire, was the Son of a Roman Catholick, and was diſinherited becauſe he turn'd Proteſtant. Chriſtopher Milton, his other Son, ſtudied the Law, and was not very ingenious. He was a ſuperſtitious Man, and much addicted to the Royal Party, who nevertheleſs liv'd obſcurely after the Royal Family was reſtor'd. But King James II. having a mind that ſome Judges ſhould declare him to be above the Conſtitutions of the Kingdom, created him a Serjeant at Law, and Baron of the Exchequer, and after that Judge of the Common-Pleas. Theſe Offices came quickly after to an end by the Death of him who was poſſeſſed of them (c).

(c) Taken from the Life of Milton, written by Mr. Toland.

(K) He became their Maſter, and——ſome other Scholars.] This is the ground of what was ſaid above. I thought that Salmaſius had been ill ſerv'd by his Spies, but now I know that he is not to be blam'd, but only for giving an odious turn to what he had ſaid, that Milton was an inconſiderable School-Maſter. Mr Toland confeſſes, that Milton being entreated to do the ſame Service to ſome of his Friends Children, as he did to his Nephews, i. e. to teach them the Languages, Hiſtory, Geography, &c. granted them this favour. 'Tis true therefore, that he kept a School in his Houſe, tho', properly ſpeaking, he could not be call'd a School-Maſter, as the Expreſſions of his Enemy inſinuate. But this was no juſt occaſion of inſulting him, even tho' his Poverty had reduc'd him to that painful Task, provided he acquitted himſelf of it faithfully, and like an able Maſter. About this conſult his Hiſtorian.

(L) It was not long before this young Woman was diſguſted at him.] Many Conjectures are alledg'd as to the cauſe of her quick return to her Father's Houſe. She had been Educated in Pomp and Pleaſure, and that was probably the cauſe why ſhe could not brook Milton's Philoſophical way of Liveing: Perhaps alſo the Perſon of his Spouſe was diſagreeable to him; or ſhe being of a Royaliſt Family, could not endure the Republican Principles of Milton: And 'tis not impoſſible but her Father might expect ſome Preferment from the King by diſſolving the Knot of this Marriage. However it be, his Daughter return'd to his Houſe a Month after the Celebration of the Marriage, upon pretence of ſpending the reſt of the Summer in the Country. Her Husband conſented to it upon condition that ſhe ſhould return at Michaelmaſs, and becauſe ſhe did not return at that time, he wrote her many Letters, to which ſhe did not vouchſafe to give any Anſwer; but at laſt ſhe declar'd Categorically, that ſhe would not return at all, and ſent back the Meſſenger from Milton with Contempt. At this he was ſo angry, that he reſolv'd never to own her more for his Spouſe; and to ſhow the Publick the Juſtice of this Deſign, he publiſh'd a Book about Divorce in 1644. The Reaſons which he there propoſes to prove, that Marriages ought not to be indiſſoluble, ſeem to be ſuſpicious, as coming from one intereſted in the Cauſe; but his Hiſtorian obſerves, that this cannot weaken them, for otherwiſe this muſt be a Prejudice againſt the Apologies of the Primitive Chriſtians, ſince they were written by Perſons who groan'd under the rigor of Perſecution. He adds, that to judge right of the Advantages of a temperate Country, a Man ſhould ſpend part of his Life in Climates that are either too Hot or too Cold; and that in like manner no Man can ſo exactly give the Reaſons which favour a good Cauſe, as he that has experienc'd the inconveniencies of the ill one. Thoſe who treat of a matter in which they are not perſonally concern'd, produce nothing but the conceits of their Fancy, and do nothing but amuſe themſelves at their leiſure Hours, or, which is worſe, they declaim without that Strength and Vigor which experience inſpires From whence we muſt conclude, that thoſe who never try'd the inconveniences of Marriage, are infinitely leſs fit than Milton to lay down and maintain the Arguments againſt the Tyranny of the indiſſolubility of the Marriage-Bond. It might have been thought, that the Treatiſes he publiſh'd about Divorce, were either an effect of his Anger, or of a Deſire to ſhew his Wit in maintaining ſuch a Paradox, rather than the effect of hearty Perſuaſion. But to prevent any ſuch Judgment of him, and to ſhow that he was in good earneſt, he put in practice his own Hypotheſis *. To this

* viz. That a Husband may not only part with his Wife, but alſo marry another.

Whereupon he took his Meaſures accordingly, and after he had publiſh'd a Book about Divorce, he prepar'd for a ſecond Marriage; but ſhe bethought herſelf, and deſir'd him ſo earneſtly to take her back again, that he was melted into Compaſſion. After this Reconciliation, within a Year, he had a Daughter by her, and after that many other (M) Children. This Wife dying in Child-bed, he Married another *, who died after the ſame manner at a Year's end. He continued a Widower for ſome Years, and Married not again till after the Reſtauration of Charles II. and the Amneſty which he obtain'd from that Monarch. He had offended him, as by other Books, ſo by that which is entituled Iconoclaſtes, which is the Refutation of a Book attributed to Charles I. He maintain'd, that this Monarch was not the Author of (N) it. Time hath ſhown that he this end he deſir'd in Marriage a young Woman of great Wit, and very Handſome. But being one Day at a Friend's Houſe, whom he went often to ſee, all on a ſudden his Wife came in and threw herſelf at his Knees, and with Tears in her Eyes, acknowledg'd her Fault, and begg'd his Pardon. He was at firſt inflexible, and one would have thought, that he would be inexorable; but this hard heartedneſs was quickly ſoftned. His natural Generoſity, and the interceſſion of his Friends, quickly mov'd him to a Reconciliation, and to forget all that was paſt. He received into his Houſe the Father, Mother, Brethren and Siſters of his Wife, when the Royal Party was falling in Pieces, and protected and maintain'd all this Kindred till they ſaw better Times (a). Is there not therefore ſufficient Reaſon to reckon him among good Husbands, and to make him a Proof of the Remark which ſo many People have made, that there is no Man more debonair than a Husband to his Spouſe who hath offended and diſgrac'd him? He had upon his Hands not only the Reſentment of a Husband, but alſo the Intereſt of an Author: He had, as I may ſay, bound up his own Hands by his Writings: His Theſis of Divorce ſupported by his Replies, oblig'd him to keep to his Reſolution. Add to all this, that he felt new Flames for a Maid of a charming Beauty and Wit; and yet two or three Tears of his Spouſe overcame him, and he conſented to every thing ſhe had a mind to. His former Reſolution, that he would ſee her no more, his Obligation as an Author, his new Amours, every thing ſubmitted to the victorious force of a Peccavi, ſpoken by a weeping Wife. See the Margin (b).

* Captain Woodcock's Daughter.

(a) Taken from Milton's Life.

(b) Thoſe who have a mind to ſee part of Milton's Reaſons for Divorce, need only read the Abſtract of his Life in the Journal of Mr. de Beauval, for Feb. 1699. p. 81, &c.

(M) And after that many other Children.] A Son who died in 1652, and three Daughters who ſerv'd him as Readers. He taught them to pronounce exactly Latin, Greek, Hebrew, Italian, French and Spaniſh; and as he had occaſion for a Book, one of them read it to him. And becauſe they did not underſtand the meaning of what they read, this Exerciſe was very unpleaſant to them, as he perceiv'd by their murmuring; and foreſeeing that for the future this Task would become more and more tedious to them, he diſpens'd them with it, and taught them ſuch things as were more ſuitable to their Condition and Sex (c).

(c) Taken from Milton's Life.

(N) He maintain'd that Charles I. was not the Author of that Book. And Time has ſhown, that he maintain'd that upon good grounds.] Perhaps there never happen'd any thing more ſingular than this, in what concerns the Hiſtory of Books. The Diſpute that was rais'd about this Matter of Fact, has been very fruitful in Books. The Parties thinking that this Matter would be attended with many notable Conſequences, grew hot, and us'd all manner of Induſtry in their Diſcuſſions. This warrants me to give a particular account of this Affair. I begin with the Book itſelf, whoſe Title is Εἰκὼν Βασιλικὴ. It was Tranſlated out of Engliſh into divers Languages. The Sieur Porrée Tranſlated it into French, and added to it a very long Preface, and dedicated his Tranſlation to the King of England, Charles II. I make uſe of the Paris Edition by Lewis Vendoſme, 1649, in 12°, whoſe Title Page runs thus: EIKΩN BAΣIΛIKH LE POURTRAICT DU ROY LA GRAND BRETAGNE. Fait de ſa propre main, durant ſa ſolitude & ſes ſouffrances. Rom. 8. Plus que vainqueur &c Bona agere, & mala pati, Regium eſt. Reveuë, corrigée & augmentée de nouveau. Milton who refuted this Book, ſuppos'd that ſome Friends of Charles I were the true Authors of it, and that they publiſh'd it on purpoſe to render the Conduct of the Parliamentarians more odious. I have a French Verſion of his Anſwer in 12°; and the whole Title Page runs thus: "ΕΙΚΟΝΟΚΛΑΣΤΗΣ, or, an Anſwer to a Book entituled, 'ΕΙΚΩΝ ΒΑΣΙΛΙΚΗ'; or, the Portraicture of his Sacred Majeſty during his Solitude and Sufferings. By Mr. JOHN MILTON. Tranſlated from the ſecond and larger Edition, and reviſed by the Author. To which are added divers Pieces mention'd in the foreſaid Anſwer, for the greater convenience of the Reader. At London, by William Du-Gard, Printer to the Council of State, in 1652. And are to be ſold by Nicolas Bourne at the South-Gate of the Old Exchange." I will here ſet down a Paſſage of the Anſwer of Milton to Clamor Regis Sanguinis, which concerns the Order that the King gave upon the Scaffold to the Biſhop of London, which was to acquaint his Son, that he would never have him puniſh the Authors of his Death. This Biſhop being preſs'd by the Judges to declare what the King had recommended to him, confeſs'd at laſt it was this. Whereupon Milton made this Remark. (d) O magis, regemne admiremur pietatis, an Epiſcopum rimarum plenum, quorum tam ſecreto in pectore ſuæ fidei commiſſum ut ſtaret, tam facile expugnari potuit. At ô taciturnè jampridem Carolus hoc id in inter alia præcepta filio mandaverat, in illa Icone Baſilica, quam libenter edo ſerpentum ſatis apparet, ut omnes cum diligentiâ notis ſuis involutas ſecretum illud, qua oſtentatione ſimulatum erat, eruditi paulo poſt evulgaretur. Sed vobis plane deceſſe vos Carolum quendam abſolut ſſimum, Cum Stuartum hun., at ſaltem hyperboreum alioquem & ſtupidiſſimum, ſuccatis quibuſdam coloribus depictum, imperitis rerum obtrudere: ita fabulam hanc velut a.roama quoddam, adverbii. & ſententiolis pulchrè diſtinctam, naſo quem etthologum imitatus, ad inſciandas vulg, auris putide concinnaſti. The Opinion of this Writer made no impreſſion in ſtrange Countries: Every body there was perſuaded that King Charles I wrote the Book which bears his Name. Which did ſo much Honour to his Memory, and appear'd ſo fit to make him be look'd upon as a true Martyr; that it was thought that Milton endeavouring to rob him of it, did only uſe the Trick of Advocates, who deny every thing that is too favourable to the contrary Party. Thoſe of the Cromwellians who remain'd in England, agreed to Milton's Judgment: But their Opinion was ſuſpected for the Reaſon I have juſt now given. All the Partizans of the Cauſe of Charles I. oppos'd this Opinion very earneſtly; and becauſe their believing that this Prince was the true Author of Εἰκὼν Βασιλικὴ, was a thing that favoured the Intereſt of their Cauſe, they might have been ſuſpected as well as the others of uſing the Artifice of Advocates. Nevertheleſs their Opinion prevail'd in England, and could not be beaten down by certain Matters of Fact, till at laſt ſome things happen'd which have deſtroy'd it. Here follows the beginning and progreſs of that Affair, according to the Narrative of Mr. Toland.

(d) Milt. Defenſ. p. m 86.

In the Year 1686, Mr Millington happening to ſell the late Lord Anglſey's Library by Auction, put up an Icon Baſilice; and a few bidding very low for it, he had leiſure to turn over the Leaves, when to his great Surprize he perceiv'd written with the ſame noble Lord's own Hand the following Memorandum. "King Charles II and the Duke of York, "did both (in the laſt Seſſions of Parliament, "1675. when I ſhew'd them in the Lords Houſe "the written Copy of this Book, wherein are "ſome Corrections and Alterations written with "the late King Charles the Firſt's own Hand) aſſure "me, that this was none of the ſaid King's com-"piling, but made by Dr Gauden Biſhop of Exeter: "Which I here inſert for the undeceiving of o-"thers in this Point, by atteſting ſo much under "my own Hand.

"ANGLESEY."

Since

he maintain'd this upon good grounds. He lay conceal'd when Charles II. was call'd home again, and did not ſhow himſelf till after the Amneſty was proclaim'd. He obtain'd Letters of Pardon, and was only puniſh'd by being excluded from all publick Offices. Some have thought that this Moderation proceeded rather from the King's Forgetfulneſs

Since this Particular came to be known, there was much Diſcourſe about it, and ſome ask'd Dr. Walker about this Matter, becauſe they knew he had been well acquainted with that Biſhop of Exeter. He declar'd to them what he knew of it, and being provok'd and much offended by Dr Hollingworth, he publiſh'd for his own juſtification an account of this Book. He declar'd that Dr. Gauden communicated to him the whole Project of that Affair, and ſome Chapters of the Icon Baſilice, and the Plan of ſome others: He related the Evaſion which this Doctor made uſe of, when he told him he did not approve of this way of deceiving the Publick. He told many other Particulars, and among others theſe three, which he ſaid he had from Dr. Gauden. 1. That the Biſhop of Salisbury took upon him to write two Chapters of that Book. 2. That Dr. Gauden ſent to the King in the Iſle of Wight a Copy of the Icon Baſilice by the Marquis of Hertford. 3. That the Duke of York knew very well, that Dr. Gauden was the Author of it. He added, that the Son of this Doctor, his Wife and Mr. Gifford, who tranſcrib'd this Book, did firmly believe it had been compos'd in the place where they dwelt. He affirm'd, that it was the common Opinion of the Family that Dr. Gauden wrote it; and that they always ſpoke of him as the Author of it, whether he were preſent or abſent, and that he never deny'd it. I paſs over in ſilence many other Proofs and Confirmations which are in the Account of Dr. Walker.

His Narrative was ſome time after confirm'd in ſuch a manner as paſt for a full proof of the Impoſture: Which happen'd thus. A Merchant of London call'd Arthur North, a Man of very good Credit, and a Member of the Curch of England, having Married a Siſter of the Wife of Charles Gauden, Son to the Doctor, after the Death of his Brother-in-Law, had the management of the Widow's Affairs. He found among the Papers of the Deceas'd a Bundle, which only concern'd the Affair of the Icon Baſilice. The Widow of Dr. Gauden had left this Packet with her Son John Gauden, whom of all her Children ſhe lov'd moſt tenderly, and he left it to his Brother Charles. In this Bundle there was found, 1. A Letter of Secretary Nicholas, written to Dr. Gauden. 2. The Copy of a Letter which this Doctor wrote to Chancellor Hyde, wherein, among other Services he had done, he mentions one that was truly Royal, and worthy of a Royal Reward, ſince he deſign'd by it to ſtrengthen and encourage the King's Friends, and to expoſe and convert his Enemies. 3. The Copy of a Letter which he wrote to the Duke of York, earneſtly repreſenting the good Services he had done. 4. A Letter written with Chancellor Hyde's own Hand, dated March 13. 1661, wherein the Chancellor declares, that he is ſorry for his Importunity, and excuſes himſelf that he cannot do him Service. The Concluſion of this Letter is remarkable, which is in theſe words: "The Particular you mention has indeed been imparted to me as a Secret; I am ſorry I ever knew it: And when it ceaſes to be a Secret, it will pleaſe none but Mr. Milton." The ſame Bundle contains, among other Papers, a long Narrative written by Dr. Gauden's Wife. This Relation proves irrefragably, that her Husband was the Author of Icon Baſilice: It contains a full Confirmation of Dr. Walker's Account, and moſt of the Facts hitherto related, with many other Circumſtances very curious and extraordinary. This Narrative being Tranſcribed from the Original, in the Preſence of ſome Perſons of Learning and Integrity, was Printed in a Book entituled, Truth brought to Light. Theſe are the Means by which this Impoſture was fully diſcover'd. This great Secret which had been contriv'd with much Artifice, and which the Perſons concern'd to conceal it, had manag'd ſo dextrouſly, happen'd to be diſcover'd by very nice and unforeſeen Accidents. If Dr. Gauden had not been diſappointed of the Biſhoprick of Wincheſter, he had not inſiſted ſo much upon the Service he had done by writing this Book. His Widow would not have written a Narrative if ſhe had been gratified with one half Years Rent after her Husband's Death. The two Princes, the Sons of Charles I. laid open the Secret by a caſual Surprize, when my Lord Angleſey ſhow'd them ſome Writing of the King their Father. And if another than Millington had ſold that Lord's Books, the Declaration which was then made by thoſe two Princes had never been known. And if Dr. Hollingworth had not by his indiſcreet Zeal provok'd Dr. Walker, he had never publiſh'd his Account; and if he had never publiſh'd it, the Papers of Mr. North, which compleat the irrefragable Proofs of this Matter of Fact, had never been made uſe of for the Diſcovery (a).

Note, that in all this, I neither ought nor can be conſider'd but as a meer Tranſcriber of Milton's Life publiſh'd in Engliſh. Note alſo, that this Paſſage of the Life of Milton has been oppos'd; for Mr. Wagſtaff publiſh'd ſome Obſervations to weaken the Teſtimony of my Lord Angleſey, the Narrative of Dr. Walker, and the Papers of Mr. North: But Mr. Toland has refuted them all in his Amyntor, wherein he has further diſcuſs'd all the Teſtimonies that are alledg'd to aſſert the Property of Icon Baſilice to King Charles I. I have been told, that as to both theſe (b) parts of his Apology, he has omitted nothing that was neceſſary to maintain the full evidence of his Proofs, and all the ſtrength they appear'd to have, before any one wrote againſt them. This is all that I can ſay, having never read any thing that was written againſt him, nor what was reply'd by him.

I will conclude this Remark with a thing that Mr. Milton made a great noiſe about, and which was renew'd in the laſt Diſpute about the Icon Baſilice: Which is this, that the Prayer (c) King Charles I. deliver'd to Dr. Juxton, immediately before his Death, entituled, A Prayer in the time of Captivity, which is Printed at the end of the beſt Editions of his Book, is perfectly like a Prayer which is found in a Romance, I mean in Sir Philip Sidney's Arcadia. This will appear by the Parallel which Milton placed at the end of his Anſwer (d) after the following manner.

| | |
|---|---|
| "The Prayer of K. Charles, "ſtil'd, A Prayer in "time of Captivity. | "The Prayer of Pamela "being under Impri- "ſonment, to a Heathen "Diety. Arcadia, p. 248. "Edit. 1674. |
| "O Powerful, O E- "ternal God, to whom "nothing is ſo great that it "may reſiſt, or ſo ſmall, "that it is contemned; look "upon my Miſery with thine "Eye of Mercy, and let thine "infinite Power vouchſafe "to limit out ſome propor- "tion of Deliverance unto "me, as to thee ſhall ſeem "moſt convenient: Let not "Injury, O Lord, triumph "over me, and let my Fault "ly thy Hand be corrected; "and make not my unjuſt "Enemies the Miniſters of "thy Juſtice. But yet, my "God, if in thy Wiſdom "this be the apteſt Chaſti- "ment for my unexcuſable "Tranſgreſſions; if this "ungrateful Bondage be fit- "teſt for my over-high De- "ſires; if the Pride of my "(not enough humble) Heart "be thus to be broken, O "Lord, I yield unto thy Will, "and chearfully embrace "what Sorrow thou wilt "have me ſuffer: Only | "O All-ſeeing Light and "eternal Life of all things, "to whom nothing is ſo "great ſo great that it "may reſiſt, or ſo ſmall, "that it is contemned; "look upon my Miſery "with thine Eye of Mer- "cy, and let thine infinite "Power vouchſafe to li- "mit out ſome propor- "tion of Deliverance un- "to me, as to thee ſhall "ſeem moſt convenient. "Let not Injury, O "Lord, triumph over "me, and let my Faults "by thy Hand be cor- "rected; and make not "mine unjuſt Enemy the "Miniſter of thy Juſtice. "But yet, my God, if "in thy Wiſdom this be "the apteſt Chaſtiſement "for my unexcuſable Fol- "ly; if this low Bon- "dage be fitteſt for my "over high Deſires; if "the Pride of my not "enough humble Heart "be thus to be broken, |

"O

(a) Taken from Milton's Life.

(b) That is to ſay, the Anſwer to the Objections of Mr. Wagſtaff, and the Anſwer to the direct Proofs alledg'd by the Partizans of King Charles.

(c) Milton in his Iconoclaſtes.

(d) That is to ſay of his Iconoclaſtes.

ſelneſs than his Clemency. But others ſay, that Milton had Friends in the Houſe of Commons and the Privy Council, who interceeded for him. He did not finiſh his great Poem, Paradiſe loſt, without many Interruptions; for his Vein did not happily flow at all times, but only in the Spring and Autumn. He publiſh'd his Hiſtory of England in 1670. It comes down to William the Conqueror, but we have it not altogether according to the Author's Original; for the Licencers of Books expung'd ſeveral Paſſages out of it, wherein he expos'd the Superſtition, Pride and Cunning of the Ancient Clergy, which they imagin'd might be applied to the Modern Clergy. The laſt Book which he publiſh'd, is a Treatiſe of true Religion, Hereſie, Schiſm, Toleration, and the beſt Means that may be uſed to prevent the Growth of Popery. I ſhall ſet down (O) a Paſſage out of it. Thoſe who ſay that Poverty forced him to ſell his Library, are groſly miſtaken; for he did not ſell it upon that account, but becauſe he believ'd he could make more Money of it than his Heirs could do; and 'tis certain that he left a conſiderable Sum behind him †. The Gout was the Diſeaſe that troubled him moſt, and he died of it without great pain in 1674, being ſixty ſix Years Old. He was a Man of an agreeable Converſation, of a mild and equal Temper, extraordinarily Sober, and who delighted infinitely in Muſick. The Sect which pleas'd him moſt in his Youth was that of the Puritans; but in his middle Age he was beſt pleas'd with the Independants and Anabaptiſts, becauſe they allow'd more Liberty to every private Perſon, and in his Opinion ſeem'd to come neareſt to the Primitive Practice: But in the latter part of his Life, he ſeparated himſelf from all Communions, and did not frequent any Chriſtian Aſſembly, nor made uſe of their peculiar Rites in his Family. He expreſs'd the profoundeſt Reverence to God as well in Deeds as Words ‡. There was an Edition of all his C Works at London in 1699, in three Volumes in Folio. The two firſt contain what he wrote in Engliſh, and the third his Latin Treatiſes. You'll ſee in the Remark N, the Parallel which Milton made between a Prayer that is in King Charles I.'s Book, and a Prayer that is found in the famous Romance entituled, The Counteſs of Pembroke's Arcadia.

† 1500 l. beſides other things.

‡ Taken from Milton's Life by Mr. Toland.

C Except his Poems.

MYR-

" thus much let me crave " of thee (let my craving, " O Lord, be accepted of, " ſince it even proceeds " from thee) that by thy " Goodneſs, which is thy " ſelf, thou wilt ſuffer " ſome Beam of thy Ma- " jeſty ſo to ſhine in my " Mind, that I who in my " greateſt Afflictions ac- " knowledge it my nobleſt " Title to be thy Creature, " may ſtill depend confi- " dently on thee. Let Ca- " lamity be the Exerciſe, " but not the overthrow " of my Vertue. O let " not their prevailing Pow- " er be to my Deſtruction; " and if it be thy Will, " that they more and more " vex me with Puniſhment, " yet, O Lord, never let " their Wickedneſs have " ſuch a hand, but that " I may ſtill carry a pure " Mind, and ſtedfaſt Re- " ſolution ever to ſerve " thee without Fear and " Preſumption, yet with " that humble Confidence " which may beſt pleaſe " thee; ſo that at the laſt " I may come to thy eter- " nal Kingdom, thro' the " Merits of thy Son, our " alone Saviour, Jeſus " Chriſt, Amen.

" O Lord I yield unto " thy Will, and joyful- " ly embrace what Sor- " row thou wilt have " me ſuffer. Only " thus much let me " crave of thee, (let my " craving, O Lord, be " accepted of thee, ſince " even that proceeds " from thee) let me " crave even by the no- " bleſt Title, which in " my greateſt Afflicti- " on I may give my " ſelf, that I am thy " Creature, and by thy " Goodneſs, which is " thy ſelf, that thou " wilt ſuffer ſome Beam " of thy Majeſty to ſhine " into my Mind, that it " may ſtill depend con- " fidently on thee. Let " Calamity be the Ex- " erciſe, but not the o- " verthrow of my Ver- " tue. Let their Pow- " er prevail, but not " prevail to Deſtru- " ction. Let my Great- " neſs be their Prey: " Let my Pain be the " ſweetneſs of their Re- " venge: Let them, if " ſo it ſeem good unto " thee, vex me with " more and more Pu- " niſhment; but, O " Lord, let never their " Wickedneſs have ſuch " a hand, but that I " may carry a pure Mind " in a pure Body.

(O) I ſhall ſet down a Paſſage out of it.] To the end that the Principles of this Writer may be known, which is as neceſſary as any thing in the Articles of an Hiſtorical Dictionary concerning Authors.

(a) Milton in his Treat of true Religion, Hereſy, &c.

" (a) It is a human Frailty to err, ſay I be, and no " Man is infallible here on Earth. But ſo long " as all theſe, Lutherans, Calviniſts, Anabaptiſts, So- " cinians and Arminians, profeſs to ſet the Word " of God only before them as the Rule of Faith " and Obedience; and uſe all Diligence and Sin- " cerity of Heart by Reading, by Learning, by " Study, by Prayer for Illumination of the Holy " Spirit, to underſtand this Rule and obey it, " they have done what Man can do: God will " aſſuredly pardon them, as he did the Friends of " Job, good and pious Men, tho' much miſtaken " (as there it appears) in ſome Points of Doctrine. " But ſome will ſay, with Chriſtians it is other- " wiſe, whom God has promis'd by his Spirit to " teach all things. True, all things abſolutely " neceſſary to Salvation: But the hotteſt Diſputes " among Proteſtants, calmly and charitably inqui- " red into, will be found leſs than ſuch. The Lu- " theran holds Conſubſtantiation; an Error indeed, " but not mortal. The Calviniſt is tax'd with Pre- " deſtination, and to make God the Author of " Sin; not with any diſhonourable Thoughts of " God, but, it may be, over-zealouſly aſſerting his " abſolute Power, not without Plea from Scri- " pture. The Anabaptiſt is accus'd of denying " Infants their right to Baptiſm; again they ſay, " that they deny nothing but what the Scripture " denies them. The Arian and Socinian are charg'd " to diſpute againſt the Trinity; yet they affirm " to believe the Father, Son, and Holy Ghoſt, " according to Scripture and the Apoſtolick " Creed. As for the terms of Trinity, Trinunity, " Coeſſentiality, Tripersonality, and the like, " they reject them as Scholaſtick Notions not to " be found in Scripture, which, by a general Prote- " ſtant Maxim, is plain and perſpicuous abun- " dantly to explain its own meaning in the pro- " pereſt words belonging to ſo high a Matter, " and ſo neceſſary to be known; a Myſtery indeed " in their Sophiſtick Subtilties, but in Scripture " a plain Doctrine.—The Arminian laſtly is con- " demn'd for ſetting up Free Will againſt Free " Grace; but that imputation he diſclaims in all " his Writings, and grounds himſelf largely up- " on Scripture only. It cannot be deny'd that the " Authors or late Revivers of all theſe Sects or O- " pinions, were Learned, Worthy, Zealous, and " Religious Men, as appears by their Lives writ- " ten, and the Fame of their many Eminent and " Learned Followers, perfect and powerful in the " Scriptures, holy and unblamable in their Lives: " And it cannot be imagin'd that God would de- " ſert ſuch painful and zealous Labourers in his " Church, and oft times great Sufferers for their " Conſcience, to damnable Errors and a reprobate " Senſe, who had ſo often implor'd the aſſiſtance " of his Spirit; but rather, having made no Man " infallible, that he has pardon'd their Errors, " and accepts their pious Endeavours, ſincerely " ſearching all things according to the Rule of " Scri-

MYRRHA, the Mother of Adonis, and Daughter of (A) Cinyras King of Cyprus, or Assyria, fell in love with her Father, and never rested till she had lain with him. Her Nurse, whom she had made her Confident, contriv'd the means of satisfying her Passion; she took her opportunity during the Feast of Ceres, while the Queen was (B) for nine Days to abstain from her Husband's Bed, and made this Prince believe that a beautiful young Maid long'd to grant him the last Favour, without being seen. The Proposal was accepted; the young Myrrha was introduc'd by Night to her Father's Chamber. When the sport * was pretty well over, he had a desire to see the Maid he had enjoy'd; he call'd for a Light, and found he had lain with his own Daughter. Cinyras being enrag'd, took his Sword to kill her. Myrrha ran away, and escap'd into the Country of the Sabeans, where she was transform'd into a Tree which yields Myrrh. The Child she had conceiv'd grew nevertheless, and came out of the (C) Trunk

* Cum tandem Cinyras avidus cognoscere amantem, Post tot concubitus illato lumine vidit Et scelus & natam. Ovid. Metam. l. 10.

" pture, with such Guidance and Direction as they " can obtain of God by Prayer. What Protestant " then, who himself maintains the same Princi- " ples, and disavows all implicit Faith, would " persecute, and not rather charitably tolerate " such Men as these, unless he means to abjure " the Principles of his own Religion? If it be " ask'd how far they should be tolerated? I an- " swer, doubtless equally, as being all Protestants; " that is, on all occasions to be permitted to give " an account of their Faith, either by Arguing, " Preaching in their several Assemblies, pub- " lick Writing, and the freedom of Printing." After this Milton shows, that Popery ought to be wholly deprived of the benefit of a Toleration, not as it is a Religion, but as it is a Tyrannical Faction which oppresses all others. He shows also, that the most effectual means of hindering its encrease in England, is to tolerate all sorts of Protestants, and in general all other Sects whose Principles neither countenance Vice nor Sedition.

By this Specimen of Milton's Doctrine, it plain appears, that no Man was more zealous for a Toleration than he; for those who do not exclude Popery from it, and consequently limit it much less than he does, are not, as one might think, his most Faithful Followers. The latter by an excessive fondness of Toleration, are not for tolerating in the least the persecuting Sects: And since Popery has been Time out of Mind the Party which Persecutes most, and incessantly torments both the Body and Soul of Christians wheresoever they can do it, the most zealous Advocates for Toleration do chiefly design its exclusion. They pretend to reason consequentially, and they do not understand, how the Edict of the Emperor of China can agree with that high Wisdom for which he is commended. I mean the Edict for a Toleration which he has granted to the Christians, of which a Jesuit (a) has given us a fine History. They think that a wise Prince should not have allow'd the Pope's Missionaries, and their new Converts, Liberty of Conscience, before he knew their Principles and how their Predecessors have made use of them. If he had inquir'd into them, as a good Politician would have done, he would never have allowed the Missionaries what he granted them; for he would have known that they pretend to be the People whom Jesus Christ has appointed to compel us to come in, i. e. to Banish, Imprison, Torture, Kill and Dragoon all those who refuse to be Converts to the Gospel, and to dethrone the Princes who oppose its Progress. It does not appear how the Emperor of China could clear himself from an inexcusable Folly, if having known this, he had nevertheless granted such an Edict (b). We must therefore believe for his honour, that he knew nothing of it, and he is to blame for that very thing, that he did not sufficiently inform himself of what he ought to have known. In all probability he will not live long enough to have ground to repent of his neglect: But we cannot answer, that his Posterity won't curse his Memory; for they may possibly find themselves oblig'd sooner than we think, to struggle with dangerous Seditions, excited by the followers of a new Religion, and to cut their Throats to save their own. Possibly they may be forc'd at last to play the same sly Game that those of Japan play'd before. Don't think the Missionaries will fall out among themselves, when they are to put in practice the Doctrine of Forcing, Insurrections and Dragooning. The Thomists, the Scotists, and the Molinists will then forget all their Differences, and jointly concur to execute the Command, Compel them to come in. All Europe at this (c) time rings with their Disputes; they accuse one another at Rome; the Congregations of Cardinals, the Sorbonne. Princes and Authors, are in a ferment upon that account. And it is very strange, that the Divisions of the Missionaries, their Disputes, their devouring one another, which cannot be unknown to the new Christians of the Levant, should suffer them to make the great progresses (d) they boast of. There would be no Misunderstanding, if the only Question among them were how to vex and Torment the Idolaters of China. But let's break off this Subject, which disturbs the Tranquillity of a Writer, and that of many a Reader. They are sufficiently vext, that they can't read over a Gazette without finding Accounts in it of multitudes Persecuted and Tormented in France, in the Palatinate, &c.

But to return to Milton, I must say, that it would be a hard matter for me to point out the Reasons why he separated from all Christian Communions: His own Historian leaves the Question undecided, whether it was on account of an infinite number of Disputes among 'em, void of all Charity; or by reason of a Spirit of Tyranny, and an inclination to Persecution, which he look'd on as a piece of Popery inseparably annex'd to all Sects; or whether from an Opinion, that one may be a good Man without subscribing to the Confessions of any Sect, and that all Sects had in some measure corrupted the Laws of Jesus Christ (e).

(a) Father Charles le Gobien: His Book was Printed at Paris in 1698, in 12°.

WHETHER the Emperor of China acted a wise part in granting the Roman Catholicks an Edict of Toleration.

(b) See the Philosophical Commentary on the words Compel 'em to come in, part 1 p. 81, &c.

(c) I write this in November 1710

(d) See the Supplement to the Philosophical Commentary on the same words. p. 117. & seq.

(e) Taken from Milton's Life.

(A) The Daughter of Cinyras.] Antoninus (f) Liberalis calls her Smyrna, and says she was born of Theias and the Nymph Orithya upon Mount Libanus: But according to others, she was the Daughter of Cinyras and Cenchreis. Ovid was of this Opinion, and I wonder Mezeriac (g) shou'd deny it as to Cenchreis. This Poet observes, 1. that the Mother of Myrrha was the Wife of Cinyras, when Myrrha was in love with her Father:

Conataque sæpe fateri,
Sæpe tenet vocem, pudibundaque vestibus ora
Texit, & O, dixit si licuit CONJUGE MATREM!

2. That the Nurse of Myrrha took her opportunity when Cinyras lay alone, his Wife Cenchreis being busied with other Women in the Mysteries of Ceres:

Turba Cenchreis in illa
Regis abest conjux, arcanaque sacra frequentat.
Ergo legitima vacuus dum conjuge lectus.

Is not this to say, that Cenchreis was the Mother of Myrrha?

(f) Cap. 34.

(g) Comment. on Ovid's Epistles, p. 397.

(B) The Queen was for nine Days to abstain from her Husband's Bed.] What prodigious difference between those Times and ours! For since the Nurse took this critical Opportunity, 'tis an Argument, that the King lay with his Wife all other Nights in the Year, as regularly as the meanest Citizen. In our Days any Month in the Year would be as proper a time for this Nurse, had she such an Affair upon her Hands.

(C) And came out of the Trunk of the Tree.] Some say (h), that the Daughter of Cinyras was chang'd into a Tree while her Father pursu'd her with Sword in Hand. They add, that the cut he gave that Tree made it bring forth Adonis. Others say (i), that Myrrha was deliver'd of the Fruit of her Womb, after her Incest had been detected; and that Jupiter afterwards chang'd her into a Tree, on her earnest Prayer, that she might not have a Being among the Living or the Dead.

(h) Hygin. c. 164. Fulgent. Mythol. l. 3. c. 8.

(i) Anton. Liberal. c. 34

(D) The

Trunk of this Tree when the Reckoning was out. The Naiades took care of it; 'twas the beautifuleſt Boy in the World: In a word, 'twas Adonis, of whom I have ſpoken in his proper place *. Some Authors maintain, that Myrrha did not conceive this Paſſion of herſelf; but that the misfortune proceeded from a higher Cauſe, to wit, the Wrath of ſome offended Divinity (D). Thus you ſee how the Pagans repreſented their Gods, under the Idea of a Being which puniſhes one Crime, by leading the Offender into the Commiſſion of another. Ovid has not follow'd theſe Authors in this particular of Myrrha; on the contrary he declares that Cupid † waſh'd his Hands of it, and lays all the blame on the Infernal Furies. They who think that Myrrha was the Wife of Cham (E), the Son of Noah, take the Story a little too high.

MODREVIUS (ANDREAS FRICIUS) Secretary to Sigiſmund Auguſtus, King of Poland, gain'd a great deal of Eſteem by his Learning and his Writings. He reliſh'd pretty betimes thoſe Opinions which were call'd β the new; and tho' he carried himſelf diſcreetly, yet he was ſuſpected by the Catholicks, and at laſt detected ſo far, as to be reputed (A) an Apoſtate; by a γ Letter he had wrote to John Laski in 1536, he was diſcover'd to be no Enemy to the Lutherans. His Treatiſe de Eccleſia, deſign'd to be the fourth Book of his Work de Republica Emendanda, which he ſent to the Preſs at Cracow in 1551, met with Cenſors who put a ſtop to the Impreſſion δ for two or three Years. He publiſh'd it afterwards with an Apology explaining thoſe Points at which ſome took offence. He was to go to Trent ξ with the Ambaſſadors of Poland, but this Deſign was chang'd. The Antitrinitarians of Poland have plac'd him in the Catalogue of their Authors. We ſhall ſee below the Titles (B) of his principal Works, with ſome Particulars concerning them. ο Grotius reckons him among the Reconcilers of Religions.

MOLIE-

* See alſo Plutarch in his Parallels, p. m. 310. citing the Metamorphoſes of Theodorus Servius in Elcog. 10. Virg.

† See the Remark D.

β Staniſlas Lubieniecius, Hiſtor. reformat. Polon. lib. 1. c. 5. p. 18.

γ It's the 9. of the firſt Century in the Collection of Letters publiſh'd by Simon Abbes Gabbema.

δ See the Epiſtle Dedicatory, and the Preface to the 4*th Book* de Republica Emendanda.

ξ Modrevius præfat. lib. 4. de repub. emendanda, p. 193. edit Baſil. 1554. in fol.

ο Grotius in conſultat. Caſſandri.

(D) The Wrath of ſome offended Divinity.] Some ſay, that a Reſentment of the Sun (i) was the cauſe of this inceſtuous Paſſion. Others (a) have recourſe to Venus, incenſed, that Cenchreis the Mother of Myrrha ſhou'd prefer the Beauty of her Daughter to that of this Goddeſs; or (b) at Myrrha's ſaying as ſhe comb'd her Head, that her Hair was more beautiful than that of Venus. There's Impiety in all theſe Suppoſitions; 'twas ſporting with the Divine Nature, and taking a greater freedom than an honeſt Hiſtorian dare take with the Reputations of the worſt Men, unleſs he had convincing Proofs. See the Margin (c), and take notice that Ovid has clear'd Cupid, and lays all the blame on the Furies:

Ipſe (d) negat nociſſe tibi ſua tela Cupido
Myrrha, facieſque ſuas à crimine vindicat iſto.
Stipite te ſtygio tumidiſque adflavit Echidnis
E tribus una ſoror.

(E) That Myrrha was the Wife of Cham ] They ſuppoſe (e), that the Wife of Cham accompanied by Adonis the youngeſt of her Family, was the firſt who ſaw the Nakedneſs of Noah, and that ſhe diſcover'd it to Cham, who ſpoke of it to his Brethren. Now ſince in the Stile (f) of the Hebrews to ſee or diſcover the Nakedneſs of any one, ſignifies two Things, either the ſimple Sight or the Enjoyment, it happen'd that Myrrha, who only ſaw her Father's Nakedneſs, came under the ſcandal of having proceeded to act. This Explication is confirm'd (g) by a Paſſage, wherein we read, that the Nurſe of Myrrha found Cinyras Drunk:

Nacta (h) gravem vino Cyniram male ſedula nutrix.

But ſince ſome Authors ſay Myrrha made her Father Drunk, that ſhe might lie with him, 'twould ſeem more proper to take her for one of the Daughters of Lot, than for one of the Daughters-in-Law of Noah, if the fact could in other reſpects be reconcil'd with this Conjecture.

(A) That they look'd on him as an Apoſtate ] See after what manner Simon Starovolſcius ſpeaks of him: (i) Regius Secretarius, ſeu mavis lutulenti illius ſubulci Lutheri, cujus nefariis dogmatibus imbutus, infeſtabat Eccleſiæ portas, docendo quæ non oportuit, ſcribendo quæ non licuit, & agendo quæ non decuit. It appears from a Preface of Modrevius, that Pius V. order'd him to be puniſh'd; for thus he complains to this Pope: (k) Non alis re mihi faciet viſus ſum, ſi ipſe ad te has controverſias deferem, tibique hunc librum dicarem, qui occaſionem præberet tibi eas dijudicandi: ſimulque ſtudia mea exilia tibi commendaret. De quibus tu videris ſiniſtram opinionem concipere: ac propterea ut, penes quos eſt poteſtas, edixeris, ut me de poſſeſſiunculis meis dejicerent. fortunis everterent. ac extorrem facerent domo, foro, penatibus, congreſſu hominum. Hoccine eſt præmium hujus meorum & Hoccine humanum factum ſanctiſſime Pater? Pope Paul IV hauds he, had diſpatch'd the like Orders to the Biſhop of Vladiſlavie, but recall'd 'em when he heard my Reaſons. (l) Non ſum oblitus, à multo Papa ejus nominis quarto ſimile edictum in me ſcriptum fuiſſe ad Joannem Drohoviium Epiſcopum Vladiſlavienſ. Cui quidem Papæ reſcripſi ego libro illi dicato de Ordinibus Eccleſiæ. In quo rationem illi reddidi vitæ, & actionum mearum: ſimulque cauſas oſtendi quamobrem in me non debuerit eſſe immitis & adeo ferox. Aſſenſus eſt ille orationi noſtræ non obſcuræ, nec ullam deinceps pernicem nobis machinatus eſt. Drohoviius quoque nihil in me cogitavit, quam quod virum bonum & optimum Principem deceret. I am perſuaded, that neither this Treatiſe of Modrevius, nor the Treatiſe which follows it, had mov'd Pius V. to recall his Order, and that the Condition of the Author was no better after he wrote this Book, than while he was Compoſing it. He informs us that he wrote it in the midſt of a thouſand Troubles, often forc'd to change his Lodgings, and diſtracted with the Apprehenſions of loſing all he had. (m) Partim labores domeſtici, partim cura liberorum, partim negotia civilia, magnæ autem frequens curſitatio domicilii quærendi cauſa me ſibi vendicarunt. (n) Hæc ſcripſi ſolicitus de bonis meis patriis avitiſque, de quibus perditor authoritatis tuæ prætextu quæ abs te tanquam fulmen quoddam vulnificum vibrata eſt.

(B) The Titles of his principal Works ] His five Books de Republica Emendanda, whereof the firſt treats de Moribus, the 2d, de Legibus, the 3d, de Bello, the 4th, de Eccleſia, and the 5th, de Schola, were Printed at Cracow in 1551, if we believe the (o) abridger of Geſner, but we muſt not (p) rely on him. They were Reprinted at Baſil by Oporin in 8°, and in fol. in 1554, with two Dialogues of the ſame Author, de utraque ſpecie Euchariſtiæ à Laicis ſumendâ, and an Explication of the Words of St. Paul (q). It is good for a Man not to touch a Woman. There was publiſh'd at Baſil in 1562 in 4 another Collection of his Pieces, which contain three Books, De peccato originis, de libero arbitrio, de providentia & prædeſtinatione; three Books, De Media [illegible], quibus acceſſit narratio ſimplex rei novæ & ſalutaris paſſim exemplis: ſimul & querela de injuriis, & expoſtulatoria Stanislao Orichovio Roxolano (r). He wrote another Book by order of the King his Maſter, to ſettle the Differences which reigned in Poland about the Trinity. It is divided into four Parts. The firſt is dated in December 1565, and treats de tribus perſonis & una eſſentia Dei. The ſecond is of the ſame date, and treats de [illegible] ad ſalutem ſufficiat. The third is dated in June 1568, and treats de Chriſto Deo, & homine, eodemque Deo & homine. The fourth, is dated in [illegible] and treats de Ecclesia & de [illegible]. Theſe four Parts were together with an Appendix upon the Queſtion [illegible]

(a) Hygin c. 58.

(b) Scholiaſt Theocriti in Eidyll. 1

(c) Compare the Article Alcinoe, and the Article Egialea at the Remark C.

(d) Ovid Metam lib 10. (e) See the Bibliotheque Univerſ. tom. 3. p. 8. (f) Ibid. p. 21. (g) Ibid p. 20 (h) Ovid Metam. l. 10. (i) Simon Starovolicius in centum Polonorum elogiis, p. 81. (k) Modrævius in præfat Silvæ tertiæ, p. 152, 153.

(l) Id ib. p. 154, 155

(m) Id in 2 præfat. Silvæ 3. p. 157.

(n) Id in fine Silvæ 3. p. 210.

(o) I pitome Bibliothecæ Geſneri, p. m. 453.

(p) There is a necessity to read the Preface of the 4*th Book Printed at that time.*

(q) I Cor. Corinth chap 7.

(r) Epit. Geſn. ib.

MOLIERE, a famous Comedian. See Poquelin.

MOLIONIDES, thus they call two Brothers who have a good ſhare in the fabulous Hiſtory. They were the Sons of (A) Actor and Molione; the Name of one was Eurytus, and that of the other Creatus. Some pretend *, that Actor was only the ſuppoſed, and Neptune their real Father. Others † will have it quite contrary. We may ſee under the word Actor, that he I here ſpeak of, Reign'd in Elis in Conjunction with Augias. The Molionides were the braveſt Men of their Time; 'twas to them Augias gave the Command of his Troops, when he underſtood that Hercules was coming to attack him. A Diſtemper having ſeiz'd Hercules in the beginning of the Expedition, he was glad to make Peace with the Molionides; but they being afterwards inform'd, of his Indiſpoſition, made uſe of the Opportunity; ſurpriz'd his Army, and kill'd a great many of his Men. Some time after Hercules play'd them a Trick; he laid an Ambuſh for

* Scholiaſt Homeri in Il. l. 11. v. 749. & 750.

† Apollod. Bibl. l. 2.

modo unio divinæ & humanæ naturæ Chriſti facta ſit in perſona non in natura, cum tamen eadem prorſus res ſint natura & perſona in Domino noſtro, were Printed at Racovie in 1590 (f). The Abridger of Geſner (t) mentions this laſt Work in 1583, as a Book not Printed, and which contain'd only three Sylva's, whereof the laſt treated of Infant Baptiſm. The firſt of theſe three Facts is true, the two others are falſe. Note, that Modrevius (v) had ſent his Sylva's to be Printed by Oporin at Baſil, who was to ſend Copies of 'em to learned Men, and to the Catholick, Lutheran and Calviniſt Univerſities. But Trecius (w) having a mind to hinder the Publication of this Book, pray'd Oporin to ſhow him the Manuſcript, and having once got it into his Hands would never reſtore it. The Author complain'd of this to the Palatine of Cracow, and earneſtly ſollicited that the Plagiary ſhould be oblig'd to make Reſtitution. This he could not compaſs, and ſo was oblig'd to Compoſe the Work over again. (x) Tandem potentiæ Palatini Trecio patrocinantis cedere: poſtremo ſerinia ſua excutere & rejecta omnia nova, opus illud ex adverſariis & chartis fere rejectaneis denuo moliri, & abſolvere, antequam mors eum occuparet. Atque ita tandem præſtantiſſimum illud, licet mole perexiguum Sylvarum opus, ab interitu vindicatum habemus. The Author of this Latin ſuppoſes, that Trecius play'd him this Trick, becauſe Modrevius gave more force to the Arguments of the Anti-Trinitarians, than to thoſe of the Trinitarians. Ille prædam petitam in caſſes ſuos nactus & inibi argumenta veritatis reſponſionibus, exceptionibus & objectionibus Trinitariorum longe fortiora animadvertens, Baſilea protinus exceſſit, evaſit, erupit, & librum Fricianum bona fide ſibi commodatum abſtulit & ſic editionem libri ſufflaminavit (a). Zanchius had ſeen the firſt of theſe four Silvæ in Manuſcript, and finding it dangerous, anſwer'd it in his Book de tribus Elohim. He does not point out the Author, but by the Name of Mediator, and he makes a ſcruple of it, as appears by his Epiſtle Dedicatory to Edmund Grindal (b). The Sceptical manner of Modrevius's examining the Myſteries, diſpleas'd both Catholicks and Proteſtants. 'Tis true tho', that he was oblig'd to uſe this Method in obedience to the Command he had receiv'd from the King of Poland. He had been charged with the drawing up a State of the Caſe (c) as Mediator of the Agreement: It behov'd him then faithfully to repreſent the Arguments of both ſides, and diveſt himſelf of all Prejudice. He had heard Dudithius ſay one thing, which to him appeard very ſolid, that a Man who had eſpous'd either ſide, either for or againſt the Trinity, was not fit to be an Arbiter or Judge between thoſe who deny, and thoſe who believe it. (d) Is negabat eum qui alterutri ſui de Trinitate ſeu de quavis re alia ſententiæ adhæreſcat, medium ſe inter partes ipſas inſerere, controverſiamque dirimere atque ſedare poſſe. Neutri parti addictum eſſe oportere qui vel partes ipſas in concordiam reducere vellet æqualitate decernendi, vel ſecundum partem alteram decernere quod juſtum & legibus conſonum eſſe judicaret. Qui ad eum modum neuter non eſſet, eum partes judicem capere non ſolere, & ab alio dictum ejurare conſueviſſe: vimirum quem ex opinione imbibita prædictem verſimile eſſet vel tacita reprehenſione contrarium ſentientes condemnaſſe. Nam ut pius eſſet & eruditus ani & diſcerneret & judicaret, fieri tamen poſſe ut ob unius prudentia cata mium falſum judicaret. This Notion of Dudithius is very conſonant to Cuſtom, for where's the Man who would chuſe for Arbiters or Judges of his Differences, thoſe whom he knew to be prepoſſeſt againſt him? It's even true, that ſuch Men are ſcarce capable of pronouncing an equitable Sentence. It's a misfortune, that ſuch a Rule as this can't take place in the Diſputes of Religion; but the ſtate of things is ſuch, that theſe Diſputes muſt neceſſarily be determin'd in the very Church where they grow, which inevitably makes the ſame Perſons Judges and Parties. It would be to no purpoſe to murmur at this, for Neceſſity has no Law. Note by the way, one of the Reaſons which fruſtrates the Endeavours of all Mediators in Religion, and makes them odious. If they are believ'd to be perfectly Neuters, they are deteſted as Atheiſts; if they are thought to have a Bias to one ſide, they are ſuſpected and hated by one of the Parties, and don't fully ſatisfie the other: They'll have all or none.

On the whole, his Books de Republica Emendanda are much eſteem'd: They have given the Author a rank amongſt the moſt judicious Writers upon Politicks. (e) Gravioribus politicis haud dubie annumerandus eſt, egregie enim diſputat, magnaque libertate in vulgares errores politicos invehitur. I add to this a Paſſage of the Speech Cunæus made to ſhew that the Univerſity of Leiden had reaſon to puniſh a Scholar with Death, who had kill'd a Townſman. The Prince Janutius Radziwil, who ſtudied then at Leiden, had declaim'd ſharply againſt the Judges: Novit illuſtriſſimus Princeps Razevilius, it's (f) Cunæus ſpeaks, noverunt omnes qui ejus ſtudiis præſunt quam ſint pulcra & luculenta ea quæ de cæde cujuſcunque hominis in regno Poloniæ ultimo ſupplicio puniendâ ſcripſit vir ampliſſimus & rerum civilium ac Reipublicæ regundæ gnariſſimus Andreas Fricius Modrevius ad Sigiſmundum ſecundum Poloniæ regem. Modrevius in the Epiſtle Dedicatory to his Book de Republica emendanda, makes mention of a Book, in which he largly explains the neceſſity of puniſhing Murtherers with Death. This Tract is intituled Laſcius, and conſiſts of four Orations, which have been added to the Volume de Republica Emendanda, in the Baſil Edition 1559.

Let me be permitted not to blot out a thing I had written before I could conſult the Book de Republica Emendanda. It's this; "'Twas doubtleſs "for this Book, that Modrevius receiv'd the Praiſes "contain'd in the Bibliotheque (g) of the Antitrinitarians. This doubtleſs was that Book of his "which was Tranſlated into French, High Dutch, "and Spaniſh. I could ſpeak more poſitively, if I "had the Preface in my Hands, a piece of which "is recited in this Bibliotheque. Sandius, who cites "it, is inexcuſable for leaving us in ſuſpence. He "ought to have uſed a Parentheſis, to fix the in-"determinate meaning of theſe Words of Modre-"vius, eſt qui laudando librum meum dicat, &c. I "am perſuaded they are clear enough in the Ori-"ginal: What goes before 'em, does, no doubt, "explain which is the Book in Queſtion. But "when they are cut off from the main Work, they "become obſcure. It was Sandius's Duty to have "remedied it, and this is a good Caution to thoſe "who cite Authors, and an Anſwer to ſuch as "pretend, I make too long Citations. I only do "it, that what I cite may be clearly underſtood" 'They who know how to judge of things, will own, that I might have left this in the ſtate I found it, after I had ſeen, by reading Modrevius, that the Book in Queſtion is that de Republica Emendanda.

(A) Sons of Actor and Moliones.] 'Tis commonly believ'd with Pauſanias, that they were called Molionides from their Mother (b). Homer's Scholiaſt is of another Opinion, that they were call'd Μολίονε in the 749th Verſe of the Eleventh Book of the Iliad, ἀπὸ τῆς κατὰ τὴν μάχην μολύνσεως. He goes upon a Principle which Euſtathius enforces on another occaſion; to wit, that Homer deſcribes no body by Names borrowed from the Mothers.

(f) Bibliot Antitrinit. p. 36.

(t) Epitome Geſn. ubi ſupra

(v) Modrev præf Silvæ 4

(w) Stanisl. Lubieniecius, hiſtor. reform. Poloniæ l. 2. c. 9. p. 221.

(x) Id. ib. p. 222. See alſo Biblioth. Antitrin. p. 38.

(a) Id. ib. p. 221.

(b) See the Preface by him who set the four Sylva's Printed.

(c) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his firſt Book.

(d) Modrevius præf. Sylvæ 1.

(e) Joh. Andreas Boſius, diſſertat. iſagogica de comparanda prudentia civili, p. m 361.

(f) Cunæus orat. 17. p. 341. edit. Lipſ. 1693. This Speech was deliver'd the 11th of Febr. 1632.

(g) At the 37th pag. ex præfatione Silvæ tertiæ Modrevii

(b) Καὶ ἐκλήθησαν Μολίονες ἀπὸ τῆς μητρὸς. Pauſan. in Arcad. p.

for 'em at Cleone, when they were deputed by the Eleans to aſſiſt at the general Sacrifices of Greece, during the Celebration of the Iſthmian Games, and ſlew 'em This we learn from Apollodorus *. Pauſanias aſcribes this Heroe's ill Succeſs neither to his Diſtemper, nor to the Treachery of the Molionides, but to their Valour alone †, and the Neceſſity which forc'd him to deliver himſelf from ſuch Enemies by ſo baſe a way. He cauſed them, as I ſaid, to be kill'd at Cleone, when they were going to aſſiſt at the Iſthmian Games. Molione their Mother laboured ſo induſtriouſly to diſcover the Authors of the Murther, that ſhe found 'em out; but the Argians would not deliver up Hercules ‖ to the Eleans. The latter deſired the Corinthians to exclude the Argians for the future from the Iſthmian Games, as infractors of the ſacred Laws obſerv'd in 'em: But they cou'd not obtain it. Whereupon Molione laid her Curſe on all the Eleans, who ſhould be preſent at this ſight; which made ſuch an impreſſion on em, that even in Pauſanias's Time the Champions of this Nation appeared not at the Iſthmian Games. The Molionides had Married β the two Daughters of Dexamenus King of Olen. Each left a Son; that of Eurytus was call'd Thalpius, and that of Creatus, Amphimachus. They Reign'd after Augias's Death conjointly with his Son Agaſthenes. By the way, the Fables ſay, that the Molionides were a couple Coachmen, who had two Heads, four Hands and four Feet, and only one Body betwixt them; one held the Bridle, and the other the Whip; they kept a perfectly good underſtanding, ſo that Hercules could never conquer 'em but by Artifice. This Emblem was probably deſign'd to repreſent γ the Power of Concord. Some have ſaid (B), that theſe two Brothers came into the World in a Silver Egg. I don't know whether Suidas's (C) two Molons were taken from the Molionides.

MOLSA (FRANCIS MARIA) one of the good Poets of the XVIth Century, was of Modena. His Latin and Italian Verſes brought him into ſuch Reputation, that if it had been ſeconded by a prudent Conduct, he might have riſen to a great Fortune; but he carried himſelf ſo ill, that the Patrons of Wit could never advance him, how well ſoever diſpos'd in his Favour δ. He was ſo debauch'd, that he ſlighted (A) the moſt indiſpenſable Precautions for thoſe who would avoid the laſt Contempt. He added Vileneſs and Impudence to his Debaucheries, ſo as we need not wonder that he died of the Pox ζ. He had one favourable Opportunity of ſhewing he was a good Orator, and that his Proſe was equal to his Poetry. Seeing the Roman People full of Indignation againſt Lorenzo de Medicis, who had cut off the Heads of ſeveral ancient Statues; he impeach'd him on this Article, and ſpoke with ſuch a force as fill'd his Adverſary with Confuſion (B) and Deſpair. He did not die in the Year 1548, (BΔ) as Thuanus affirms,

* Ibid. See alſo Pind. Olymp. od. 10.

† Ἀπὸ γὰρ ᾗ τόλμη καὶ τοῖς ἡλικίαις τὸ Ἡρακλέους τῶν μὲν δυναμαζόντων, ἐτρέσαν δ' ὑπ' αὐτῶν ἀεὶ τὸ συμμαχικὸν τῷ Ἡρακλεῖ. Herculis enim auxilia ab Actoris filiis audacia & ætate vigentibus facile rejiciebantur. Pauſan. lib. 5. p. m. 148.

‖ He liv'd then at Tirynthus β Idem. p. 149.

γ See Plutarch at the beginning of his Treatiſe of Brotherly Love, & Adr. Junius Adag. 31. cent. 5.

δ See the Remark A.

ζ Ab illa (Venere) meritum pudendo contactu miſerabili morbi quæ perierat venenum hauſit. Paul. Jovius, elog. l. 4 p. m. 244.

(a) Athen. l. 2. c. 16.

(b) In ranis act. 1 ſc. 2.

(c) Adag. 1ma Chil. 3. cent. 5.

(d) Adag. 31 cent 5.

(e) In the 4th Vol. p. 2947.

(f) Paulus Jovius in elogiis, cap. 104. p. m. 243.

(B Some have ſaid, that theſe two Brothers] See the Verſes of Ibycus cited by Athenæus (a), but take notice that Dalechamp's Tranſlation is neither free from Faults of Omiſſion, nor Commiſſion. It does not expreſs the τέκνα Μολίονος of the Original, and it tranſlates κλανόντα by interfecerunt, inſtead of interfectorem.

(C) Suidas's two Molons.] This Author having ſaid, that Molon is a proper Name, cites a Paſſage of Ariſtophanes (b), which ſhews there was an old ſaying by way of Proverb, As little as Molon. This might be ſaid by the Rule of Contraries, or by an Irony, as when our Country Fellows ſay, As nimble as a Cow: But Suidas takes the thing litterally; he ſays theſe words were applied to Men of a low Stature, and that there were two Molons who were Jugglers and Robbers. Eraſmus (c) has followed Suidas's Explication; but he makes him ſay, that one of theſe two Molons was a Juggler, and the other a Robber. Suidas does not ſay ſo; he makes no diſjunction of theſe two Trades; and far from favouring Eraſmus's Conjecture, which is, that theſe two Molons were of a dwarfiſh Stature, known to every Body, he oppugns it in ſome ſort by the word λωποδύται, which ſignifies thoſe who rob upon the High-Way; thoſe who rifle and uncaſe Folks, which little Fellows dare hardly venture on; 'tis rather the Buſineſs of a huge Monſter, a brawny Dog. Adrian Junius (d) who underſtood Greek very well, has taken Ariſtophanes's Proverb in an ironical Senſe; ſo that Molon, with him, is a Man of a Gigantick Stature. I believe he has more reaſon of his ſide than Suidas. Mr. Hofman ſays (e), that according to Didymus, there were two Molons, one a Juggler of an exceſſive Stature, the other a Pilferer of Cloths furo ſtlarius, and a very little Fellow.

(A) So debauched that he neglected the moſt neceſſary Precautions.] The prodigious Corruption reigning in the World does not hinder People even of little Vertue from conceiving a Contempt and Averſion for ſuch as obſerve no decency in the uſe of unlawful Pleaſures. Hence Molſa loſt his Reputation, and ſtopped the Current of his Fortune; which would not have happen'd, if his Debaucheries had been manag'd with more diſcretion. Let's hear Paul Jovius. (f) Latinis Etgis, & Etruſcis rythmis pari gratia ludendis Muſas accepit; tanta quidem omnium commendatione, ut per triginta annos, qui Romæ Mecœnatis nomen tulere, inſigni liberalitate, ſtudioque adjutum adeptus ſecundis honoribus eſſe recentibus invidere: prægravante ſuper ejus Genio, quem videlicet otiis amoribus occupatus, parum ingenio ſtudiisque juſtraheret, neque habitu, vel meſſu, ullove nobilitatis noſtræ carminum famam tueretur; facile prodigus, honeſtique neſcius pudoris, negligendarum rerum omnium ad immodicæ libertatis nomen revocabat uſque adeo ſupine, ut ſummæ laudis, & clarioris fortunæ certiſſimam ſpem facile corruperit.

(B) Fill'd him with Confuſion and Deſpair.] 'Twas believ'd that Lorenzo de Medicis, was ſo ſtruck at the Infamy with which that Oration branded him, that to efface it, he reſolved to reſtore the City of Florence to its Liberty, by the Aſſaſſination (g) of Alexander de Medicis his near Relation. (h) Sempiternam ingenii laudem retulit (Molſa) non a jucundo tantum carmine, quo laſciviſſe videtur, ſed pedeſtri etiam gravique facundia, qua Laurentium Medicem, ſtatuas libidine antiquas ſtatuis noſtræ civitatis capita detrahentem, apud Romanos ob ea in primis diros peregrinos accuſavit. Ea enim perſcripta oratione, tanta verecundiæ ſimul & pudoris, & metus populi Romani proditis conſcientiam ferunt, ut atrocitate animi, quæ in tam generoſæ notam novitate facinoris obſtupuerit, ſui ſceleris Principes, amicique ſingulatim immane compilare & horrere cœperit; ſollicitæ Dis invitis patriæ libertatis parentes.

(BΔ) He did not die in the Year 1548, as Thuanus affirms, but in February 1544.] I had never perhaps have paſs'd over the Error of Thuanus, if I had not by chance light upon the Volume of Luke Contile's Letters. In which I met with one to Bernardo Spina, dated from Naples the 14th of February 154[4]. He there tells him he had ſeen Molſa that Morning, and had found him ſeiz'd with an incurable Diſtemper. 'Twas a Dropſie, which had not only ſwell'd his Legs, as uſual, but his very Head. A. Joſeph kept always by his Bed ſide, and diverted the Patient the beſt he could. Era ſempre al capezzal del letto di buon Criſtoſo, & burlava, & gramola coll' Molza, & ogni ne pigliava ſpaſſo, & perche in mona la tagiava per vecchio, ogni volta mi ſi fea, per ſcherzo, con mia vergogna. Ha fatto voto, &c. dol. mi ſono ſtato a morte. Theſe Italian Words ſerve us to underſtand, that Contile had a mind to ſee (g) Id. comment. de reb. ſuis in 15[37].

(h) Jovius ibid. p. 244.

(i) Luca Contile lettere I. 1. p. 82. edit. de Pavia 1564. 8°.

firms*, but in February 1544, and left a Son who was Father of a famous Daughter, I ſhall

* Thuan l. 5. circa finem.

the laſt of him, which every body judg'd to be near at hand. Nor were they miſtaken; for we learn from a Letter he wrote from Milan the 21ſt of February 1543, to Claudio Tolomei, that he had aſſiſted at Molſa's Funeral: (k) Havrete ſaputa la morte dell'unico Molza. io gionſi à tempo di vederlo vivo & mi fu lecito d'accompagnarlo al ſepolcro morto. I did not doubt on reading theſe Particulars, that Thuanus had been miſtaken, nevertheleſs I was willing to have the beſt Certificates, and therefore addreſſed my ſelf to Mr. de la Monnoie, who was pleas'd to write me ſeveral Particulars concerning Molſa; 'twill perhaps be a ſatisfaction to my Reader to ſee 'em in this place, "(l) Molza did not die in 1548, "but in 1544. This is prov'd by three Letters of "Annibal Caro his intimate Friend; the firſt writ"ten from Rome to Molza ſick at Modena, is of the "2d of January 1544, the ſecond of the 11th of "February the ſame Year, being an Anſwer to that "which it appears Molza had written to him, and "the third of the ſixth of March following, in "which he ſends an account to Varchi of the death "of Molza as a thing that had lately happen'd: Con le lagrime à gli occhi, theſe are the words he begins "with, vi dico che'l noſtro da ben Molza è morto, e per lo graviſſimo dolore ch'io ne ſento, non ne poſſo dir altro——This Molſa was a Man of happy Parts, "which he perfected by Study. He added Learn"ing to Politeneſs, the Knowledge of Greek, and "as Lilius Gyraldus ſays, of Hebrew too, to that of "Latin, and his own Tongue. He ſucceeded in "Proſe, in Verſe, in the grave and comical Stile: "So that going far beyond the Judgment his "Countryman Sadolet had made of him, that he "might excel in any kind of Compoſition, which "he would apply himſelf to, he excell'd in all "without confining himſelf to any. Father Rapin "reckons him as a Model of Latin Elegy among the "Moderns. His Character was that of Tibullus, "upon which you may ſee Bartholomew Riccius de imitatione. His Pieces would perhaps have been "more correct if Death had not prevented him. "——'Tis hard to excuſe him on his licentious "Life, without admitting that corrupt Morality, "upon the Principles whereof he perſuaded him"ſelf, that provided he abſtain'd from great "Crimes, ſuch as Atheiſm, Robbery, Murther, "and all kinds of Violence, he might with an in"nocent Liberty, taſte the Pleaſures of Senſe. "Taking the matter thus, he was purer than Er"mine, and no Life was more irreproachable than "his. He flatters himſelf, that ſome hereafter, "taking a thorough view of it, would propoſe it "for an Example, and that this will be the Subject "of his Panegyrick:

"Tum faciles memoret mores, & puriter acta
"Percurrat vitæ tempora quæque meæ,

"ſays he, in that fine Elegy he made a few Days "before his Death His Prediction met with a "ſpeedy Accompliſhment. Paul Panſa, a good "Latin Poet, Preceptor to the famous John Lewis de Fieſque, gave him ſuch Praiſes as he deſir'd.

"Hoc-ne meret probitas? hoc-ne meret pietas?

"ſays he, and four Verſes after,

"Quid prodeſt vixiſſe pium, aut odiſſe profanum
"Vulgus, & à ſævis abſtinuiſſe malis?

"what's more, Sckradcrus and Sweertius mention "a glorious Inſcription conſecrated to his Memo"ry in the Cathedral of Modena in theſe words: "Si animarum auctio fieret, Franciſcum Molzam licitarentur Virtutes, Patria, & Catharina ejus uxor, quæ illi & ſibi vivens hoc poſuit——Gudicione, after"terwards Biſhop of Foſſombrona, has ſpoken no leſs "honourably of Molſa's Virtue. Datemi novelle del Molza, ſays he in a Letter to Tolomei, ch'io lo deſidero fuor di miſura, cioè ſe egli vuol fare povero il mondo, e ricchi i cieli con la ſua anima, perche intendo che egli è infermo d'una acuta febre. Paulus Jovius, who at bottom blam'd him only for "not ſaving the appearance, ſhould not have "been ignorant, that he, whoſe Conduct he cenſur'd, had been parallel'd even for his Morals "with himſelf, and a great many worthy Gentle"men his Co-temporaries by Longueil in his ſecond "Defence. Quid hic Paulum Jovium commemorem? Angelum Colotium, Antonium Maroſticum? Quid Marium Molſam, Hieronymum Nigrum, M. Antonium Flaminium, Georgium Sauromanum, viros tum "ac omni elegantiore doctrina inſtructiſſimos, tum ingenua animorum probitate optimos, atque totius vitæ "innocentia integerrimos? Yet Molſa was then in "the height of his Debauchery. He had a Miſtreſs named Furnia, whom he paſſionately lov'd, "even to the calling himſelf Furnius, and perhaps "it was from her he took the Diſeaſe he died of. "We have a Letter of the ſame Longueil to Furnius Marius Molza, wherein are theſe curious "words: Cujus quidem rei me primum ſuis literis certiorem fecit Flavius Chryſolinus, deinde Q. Lælius Maximus, quem Quinti prænomen ſecutum eſſe arbitror, quod Quintiæ alicujus, ut tu Furniæ, conſuetudine iſtic teneatur. She quickly after turn'd common "Miſs. Which is another Particular we learn "from Longueil. Nam de agreſti illâ, ſays he Book "Book 4. writing to Flaminius, in quam ſe abſtruſurum eſſe Furnius Molſa affirmaret, ſpelunca, factus ſum à Briſſone noſtro certior. Ac de Furnio quidem non valde ſum miratus, vult enim Furniam ſuam imitari, quam ſeſe in recentem iſtum luparum furnum jam abdidiſſe intelligo. At the end of this Letter, "as he was ready to fold it, he mentions in a Poſt"ſcript the ſurprize he was under at the News of "a Wound which Molſa had receiv'd. His ſcriptis, nec dum datis, accepi à Mariano literas ex quibus cognovi quid Molſæ noſtro iſtic accidiſſet. O caſum acerbum. Ait ille quidem à medicis hominem nondum eſſe deploratum, quanquam ad ſeptum tranſverſum vulnus pertingat. Verum me ſolicitum habet continens iſta febris, quæ niſi cito diſſolvitur——Sed non quo plura præ dolore ſcribere. We may ſee alſo a Letter which follows this, and an Italian one of Sanga, in a Collection of Atanagi, writ"ten from Tortoſa the 27th of June 1522, to John "Baptiſt Mentebuona, where this Wound is men"tion'd, and Molſa is ſaid to be diſguſted with his "Furnia. It's eaſie to gueſs at the Reaſon, from "the Paſſage I have cited out of Longueil's Letter "to Flaminius. Che non credaro io horamai, ſays Sanga, "poiche il Molza ha ſoſtenuto di mutare amore, e laſciare quella, quella, tanto unica S. Furnia, e laſciarſi cadere in amore, dove havra men bella materia di ſcrivere? In un tempo medeſimo ho inteſo che fu ferito, e che era ſenza pericolo; poiche così è, manco me ne duole. Pregovi vedendolo che mi raccomandiate a lui, & alreſto della compagnia beſtiale, e benche ſia il fior d'eſſa, pur ſeparatamente mi raccomandarete al divino, diviniſſimo M. Gabriello, &c. Hence "it appears, that there was then at Rome an Aca"demy of Wits under the Name of Compagnia beſtiale, perhaps becauſe of the Indolence and Su"pineneſs in which they profeſt to live. I have not "as yet been able preciſely to determine at what "Age Molſa died, I only conclude he was not far "advanc'd in Years, from theſe Verſes of the fine "Elegy I have cited:

"Hic jacet ante annos crudeli tabe peremptus
"Molſa: ter injecto pulvere paſtor abi.

"And upon himſelf towards the end:

"Ante diem Elyſios cogor cognoſcere campos.

"This is alſo the Senſe of that fine place of Paul "Panſa in his Elegy on the Death of this famous "Man,

"Cur Atropos auſa es
"Pendula adhuc tereti rumpere penſa colo?"

I thought I ſhould have found a great many Particulars concerning our Molſa in the Iſtoria della volgar poeſia, lately publiſh'd by the Abbot Giovanni Mario de Creſcimbeni; but I have only learnt (a), that this Poet liv'd o' this ſide the Year 1540, and died pretty old at the Court of Cardinal Farneſe. This is indefinite, and not conſonant to Contile, an Eye-witneſs, who ſays he died at Modena, in February 1544. I know indeed that this Letter is dated in 1543, but this muſt be ſuppoſed according to their Calculation, who begin the Year at March, or Eaſter; for otherwiſe there would be a miſtake in the Date. See Mr. de la Monnoie's Proofs, and add to 'em this Paſſage of a Letter, which was written from Rome the 15th of January 1544, to Triſon Benzio. (c) Raccomandatemi, vi prego, caldamente al Molſa e datemi avviſo de la ſanità ſua, perch'a giorni paſſati n'havevo udite diſpiacevoli nuove. They are Claudio Tolomei's Words. He had written the eleventh of December 1543 a Letter to Triphon, deſiring him (d) to give his Service to Molſa, and to make a Sonnet or Epigram on the Death (k) Id ib. fol. 86.

(l) La Monnoie, lettre M. S.

(a) At p. 106.

(c) Lettere di M. Claudio Tolomei libro terzo fol. 114. edit. de Venitie 1553.

(d) Ibid. fol. 93.

I shall speak of her by and by. Boccalini has highly diverted himself (C) at Molsa's Cost.

I have seen Letters of his *, in which he complains sadly of his Poverty, and the avarice of Pope Paul III. His Latin Pieces came out under the Name of Franciscus Marius Molza; for he thought † that the Feminine Maria, made Masculine by the Tuscans, would hardly suit with the Latin Tongue. His Capitolo in lode de' Fichi, went under the Name del P. Siceo, and was honour'd with a Commentary by Ser Agresto; that is to say, by Annibal Caro. This Commentary (D) was Printed in 4to. in 1539 ‖ Molsa took the Sirname Furnius, from a Mistress of his named Furnia. She afterwards turn'd common Courtesan. See the Remark B△, where you'll find some further Encomiums bestow'd upon this Author, with several other Particulars. 'Twas said of him, among other things

* They were written in 1583, and are Printed with those of Cardinal Sadolet, lib. 16. p. 643, and the following of the Lions Edition of 1554.

† Giovanni Mario de Cresciembeni, istoria della volgar poësia, p. 106.

‖ Ex eodem, ibid. p. 328. We shall see below, that the Printer of the Edition of 1584, says, that the first was of the Year 1538.

Death of (e) a certain illustrious Lady. I observe this by the way to let my Readers know that Triphon was a Poet.

(C) Boccalini has highly diverted himself at Molsa's Cost.] He introduces Christopher Columbus, Fernand Cortez, Magellanus, Vasco de Gama, Americus Vespusius, &c. petitioning Apollo, that in consideration of their discovery of a new World, the great Advantages of which they set forth with a deal of skill, their Memory might be consecrated to Immortality, by Monuments proportion'd to the Service. The Chancellor of Parnassus was just upon minuting the Decree, when Molsa stood up to oppose their Request. The Hair of his Head was all peel'd off; not a stump was standing on his Chin; the Bridge of his Nose was fallen, and his Face cover'd all over with Blotches and Plaisters. See here, cry'd he, shewing his Wounds, here are the Rubies and fine Presents which these Gentlemen have brought us from their new World; they have brought us a cursed Disease unknown (f) to our Ancestors, Contagious (g), Scandalous, fatal to Procreation; the damn'd Neapolitan Disease, the Effects of which you see upon my Face, and with which my whole Body is over run. Upon this he turns to Christopher Columbus, and begins to unbutton his Breeches; but the Muses who fear'd, that an Object so foul should defile the purity of their Eyes, got an Order of Court, forbidding him to produce any farther Proofs. He stopt his Hand, but went on with his Speech, declaring with that vehemence against the Mischiefs the discovery of the new World had brought along with it, that Apollo told the Petitioners, they'd do well to withdraw immediately with their Silver, and Gold, and Pox: (h) Comparue Mario Molza, Poeta di molto grido, ma per non haver nel capo, e nella barba pelo alcuno fatto molto diforme, oltre che piu mostruoso lo rendeva l'esser senza il naso, pieno di Gomme, e di Croste, e di doglie, il quale col dito mostrando le sue piaghe, con alta voce, qu ste d'sse (ò Sire) che qui vedete nella mia faccia sono i nuovi Mondi, i nuovi riti, & i nuovi costumi de gl' Indiani — Con queste gioie, delle quali tutta mi vidate bollata la faccia, & impiagata la persona questi temerarii, hanno abbellito, & arrichito il Mondo; con queste croste, e con queste eterne, e crudelissime doglie, ch'ho per tutta la vita; questi implacabili nemici del genere humano, hanno corrotta la stessa humana generatione. Poi voltatosi il Molza verso il Colombo con modesto sdegno le brache, quando le Serenissime Muse, per non contaminare con la vista di qualche cosa oscena, i purissimi occhi loro, a i Lettori commandarono, ch'egli fosse impedito

There are a great many who comparing this Chapter of Boccalin, with a Scene of Moliere's Precieuses, would make no scruple to affirm, that our Comedian had pirated the Italian Author; but I am far from any such Thought. Moliere's own Genius might easily furnish him with such an incident; a thousand meaner Wits than he might have hit upon it. The Scene's this; Jodelet and Mascarille reckon up their pretended notable Exploits, before the two Precieuses. The first speaks thus. "(a) In good Faith I have reason to remember it: "I was wounded there in the Thigh with a hand "Granado; feel a little, pray Madam, feel what "a bang it was CATHOS. A great gash indeed. MASCARILLE Lend your Hand here, "Madam, and feel a little here, Madam, just in the "Pole of my Neck. Do you feel? MAGDELON. Yes, I feel something. MASCAR. "It's a Musket-ball I receiv'd the last Campagne "I made. JODELET. Here was a shot which "let the Sun shine through me at the Attack of "Gravelin. MASCAR. (Laying his Hand on the Button of his Breeches) I'll shew you a terrible "Wound. MAGDEL. You may spare your "self the trouble, we'll believe without seeing. "MASCAR. These are honourable Badges, "which shew what a Man is. CATH. We "don't doubt what you are.

Boccalin had some Mystery in saying, that Molza (b) died of eating too many Figs; for we must know this Poet had wrote a Copy of Verses ont his Fruit, with allusion to the nameless Parts. These Verses are at least as obscene, as those of John de la Casa, which have rais'd the Protestant Out-cries; but as Molza was never made a Judge of the Inquisition, nor enjoy'd any Ecclesiastical Preferments, his Impunities have not been objected to the Roman Communion. "'Tis certain if the Employs, "which Monseigneur de la Casa's Merit procur'd "him, had not oblig'd him, in Quality of Nuncio, "to prosecure some Persons of his time, who "prevaricated in Religion, his Capitolo would no "more have been taken notice of, than those of "Bernia, of Mauro, and Molza, which are no less "licentious; and which the sole good Fortune of "having been written by Authors of no Conse- "quence, has saved from the Protestants Cen- "sures." This is what Mr de la Monnoie (c) wrote to the Abbot Nicaise, and which was communicated to Mr. Menage. Note, that the Book in which Poetus met with the Capitolo del forno, that is John de la Casa's Verses, which have made him reckon'd as a Panegyrist of Sodomy, is a Collection of obscene Pieces, compos'd by several Poets, and particularly by our Molza. This appears by the Title (d), Il primo libro dell' opere burlesche di M. Francesco Berni, di M. Gio della Casa, del Varchi, del Mauro, di M. Bino, del Molza, del Dolce, e del Firenzuola. This Book was Printed at Florence by Bernard Junta, in 1548. Mr. Vost lodged his Copy in the Library of Utrecht (e), as in a place of safety; but his Precautions were useless: This Book disappear'd, and 'tis not doubted, but the French made it away (f), whilst they were Masters of Utrecht in 1672, and 1673; this by the by. I have occasion still for a Passage of Mr Menage. The Capitoli in terza rima, says he (g), upon innocent Subjects, but which had relation to things dishonest, were very much in vogue at that time; as appears by Mauro's Capitolo della Fava, and by Molza's delle Fiche, famous for the Commentary of Ser Agresto, that is, Annibal Caro. Let us see Boccalin's Judgment upon the Capitolo della Fava, and delle Fiche. He introduces the famous Laura Terracina, who being taken into the sacred College of the Poets, and desiring to chuse either Molza or Mauro for her Husband, examin'd the Figs of the former, and the Bean of the latter, and determin'd for the Bean; finding it much more luscious and juicy than the Figs. (i) Volle prima, che amendue le mostrassero le Poesie loro, le quali dapoi, che con istatissima diligenza più volte ella hebbe rivolte, e ben considerate, trattandole le Fiche di Molza, come cotate con stile osservato, e molto languido, si attaccò alla Fava del Mauro, nella quale le parve di trovar maggior fuoco di concetti, e che quell' argomento fosse di stile con più gravità descritto. I don't believe Boccalin design'd by this to give us a favourable Idea of Laura's Chastity.

(D) The Commentary was Printed in 4° in 1539] It was reprinted in 8°. in 1584, to serve as a Convoy to Aretin's Ragionamenti; and by this you may judge of the quality of the Book. The intire Title of it is: Comento di Ser Agresto da Bargagnano, sopra la prima Ficata del Padre Siceo. Con la dotta e bella Noia. The Printer taking the Title of Barbarossa's Heir, promises himself, that this new Edition should be no less agreeable than the first of 1538, and declares he gives it to acquit himself of a Promise he had made when he publish'd Aretin's Ragionamenti.

(e) All' hora che Mario Molza per lo soverchio uso de fichi passò all' altra vita Ragionam. 3. entr. 1 f. m. 90.

(c) See the Anti-Bailler, tom. 2 p. 151.

(d) See the Bibliographical Dissertation on Gilbert Voetius, tom. 1 p. 25.

(e) Exemplar illud inveni in Bibliothecam publicam, ut sub publica custodia perpetuum Sanctitatis Romanæ monumentum extaret, & perfrictæ negantibus ostendi posset Voet. ad.

(f) See Lomeyer de Bibliothecis, c. 1. p. 3.

(g) Anti-Bailler, tom. 2 p. 119

(h) Boccalin, Ragguagli, &c. centur. 2.

things, that he made ſo perfectly a Chriſtian End, that it could not be doubted but his Soul (E) went directly to Heaven.

MOLSA (TARQUINIA) Grand-Daughter to the preceding, was one of the moſt eminent Ladies of her Age. Her Wit and Learning joyn'd to the graceſulneſs of her Perſon (A) were ſupported by an uncommon Virtue. Having loſt her Husband, without having had any Children *, ſhe never would Marry a ſecond, tho' ſhe was very young. The Sorrow ſhe expreſt for him might juſtly found a Parallel between her (B) and Artemiſia. Her Father finding that ſhe was born with a Talent for the Sciences, had her inſtructed (C) by the beſt Maſters of his Time. She was in great Eſteem at the Court

* Hilarion de Coſte, eloges des Dames illuſtres, tom. 2. p. 800. He only tranſlates the Elogy of this Lady Compos'd by Peter Paul de Ribera.

Raggionamenti. Ecco (Amorevole Leggitore) che io non mi domentico punto della promeſſa che ti feci a meſi paſſati, quando per mezza della ſtampa mia ti preſentai i Ragionamenti di Pietro Aretino, concioſia coſa che da quella moſſo, hoggi io mi ſia riſoluto di preſentarti anchora il piacevole, & ſottil Commento del valente Ser Agreſto da Ficarvolo, ſopra la prima ficata del Padre Siceo, il quale mi giova di credere, che non ti debba eſſer punto hoggi men caro di quello che egli ti foſſe l'anno 1538. quando, dalla felice memoria del mio babbo, ti fu preſentato la prima fiata, ne (credo) che ti debba eſſer men caro, che ti ſieno ſtati i prenomati Ragionamenti. The Printer of the firſt Edition was call'd Barbagrigia, and addreſs'd his Preface conjointly to the Author Molſa, and the Commentator Annibal Caro, telling 'em, that in compariſon of many Greek, Latin and Italian Pieces, their Work might be reckon'd very modeſt, ſince their Obſcenities were not bare-fac'd, but vail'd from Head to Foot, and that after all, they had done prudently, to deliver themſelves of them upon Paper; for if they had kept them in, they might have flown up into their Heads, or at leaſt have corrupted their Chaſtity, it being almoſt impoſſible in theſe Caſes, but a Man muſt either act or ſpeak. Quanto alla laſcivia——Meſſer Lodovico Fabbro da Fano, che m'e——conſiglier dell'opere, che io ſtampo: mi dice, che gli hanno pur tanto di gentilezza, & di modeſtia: che deve quelli de gli altri in queſto genere, tanto de' Greci, quanto de' Latini, & de' Volgari, vanno la piu parte ignudi, & ſenza brache: eſſi vanno tutti veſtiti, & con le mutande. Et quello, che piu importa, è, che eglino non vi ſtanno piu in corpo. che coſi. oltre al pericolo detto di ſopra di farvi impazzare: potrebbono al meno far divenir laſcivi, & ſcorretti voi quali eſſi ſono. Sendo quaſi forza, che quello, che non ſi dice, ſi faccia. The Commentator has begun with a Prologue worthy of the Piece. He repreſents in it firſt, that the Author of the Ficheide or the Ficheido having taken Figs for his Subject, aſcribes to 'em both Sexes, and promiſcuouſly imploys the litteral, and the Allegorical Senſe. (i) Baſtivi per hora di ſapere, che'l Poeta, non ſenza miſterio li battezza hermafroditi: & che per tutta l'opera troverete, che hanno confuſamente due ſeſſi, & du ſenſi, & di queſti uno è ſecondo la lettera, l'altro ſecondo il miſterio, come di ſotto vedrete. 2. That he is a very competent Judge in this Matter, that he has ſpent more time in examining it, than Endymion in contemplating the Motions of the Moon, and that if he has not been able to go to the bottom of it, he has gone farther than all before him. (k) Ma per moſtrare quanto ſia competente giudice in queſta cauſa (come dicono i Legiſti) mi par ſolamente da dirvi: che egli, oltre all'eſſer gran Poeta: e grandiſſimo Filoſofo naturale: & ha ſpeſo piu tempo a inveſtigare i ſegreti della Natura Ficale, che Endimione a ſpeculare i moti della Luna. Et ſe quelle ne fu tenuto dalla Luna per innamorato: queſto n'e ſtato chiamato dal mondo per padre: come ſe ognuno li foſſe figliuolo. Et come Alberto fu detto Magno per havere ſcoperti i ſegreti delle donne: eſſo cognominato Divino, & Perfetto, per haver rivelati i ſegreti de' Fichi. Et con tutto, che di ſotti conſigli di non havernne tocco anchor fundo, ſi vede pure, che s'e diſteſe piu a dentro, che neſſun altro. I mention theſe Particulars only to ſhew what judgment was made of Molſa. We may further infer from 'em, that there reign'd a great Licentiouſneſs among the Latin Poets of that Age. They vy'd with one another in exerciſing their Wits on Subjects which bore a double meaning; Mr. Menage might have added the famous Bembo to the Examples he has cited, who choſe an Herb for his Subject, the very Name of which diſcover'd the Drift and Deſign of his Poem. I'll explain my ſelf in the words of another Writer. "(a) There was one Petrus Matthæus "a Doctor of both Laws, who in 1587, made a "Collection of ſeveral Latin Poems of the Italian "Poets——Amongſt theſe the ſineſt Pieces were "the obſceneſt; Bembo's Priapus, where he exerciſes all his Wit, ſpeaking of the Herb which "we call le Mante, upon the affinity between this "word and the Latin Mentula; the Siphilis of Fracaſtor, in which he deſcribes the Origine and "Progreſs of the Pox, &c.

(i) Proemio del Commentatore, p. 10.

(k) Ibid.

(a) Paſquier Catechiſme of the Jeſuites, l. 3. c. 9. p. m. 378.

(E) His Soul went directly to Heaven.] Contile imploys this among other Reaſons, to comfort thoſe who were afflicted at the Death of this Wit. He had firſt alleg'd the Reaſons, why they ought to lament him, and afterwards turns the Tables thus: (b) Debbano adunque i ſuoi parenti e amici piangerlo con dolore intenſo. Non debbano poi dolerſene, perche hanno conoſciuto, che quella era la ſua hora, nella quale moſtro tanto zelo chriſtiano, che dicono à viva voce eſſer lui ſalito in cielo. era la ſua hora parimenti inquanto alla età, la quale ſtanca di queſta vita, hà moſtro il ſuo determinato fine, fuggendo il pericolo delle morti ſubbitane, le quali ſuccedono quaſi ſempre à quella età. So che voi in prima fronte vi dorrete di quello honorato amico, dipoi non vi dorrete, ma reſtarete contento di quel fine, che certifica la ſalute di quell' anima, che in queſta vita valſe tanto. To conſider this Man's Morals, one would think he needed ſome Years ſtay in Purgatory, notwithſtanding the good Diſpoſitions he ſhew'd at his Death.

(b) Luca Contile ubi ſupra, fol. 16. verſo.

(A) The graceſulneſs of her Perſon were ſupported by an uncommon Virtue.] Franciſcus Patricius, one of the learned'ſt Perſons of that Time, is my Authority; here's what he ſays in one of his Letters to her after having particulariz'd on the things ſhe underſtood. (c) His tot tantiſque ingenii ornamentis comites ſeſe addiderunt nobilitas generis, pulchritudo eximia, mores animi inſignes, pudicitia ſingularis. A Canon of Lateran has drawn out this Elogy to a greater length. "She was "naturally agreeable, ſays he (d), and exceeding "Beautiful, ſo that when ſhe was ſomewhat advanced in Years, her Face, her genteel Manner, and "graceful Behaviour, confirm'd the ſaying of Euripides, that not only the Spring, but alſo the "Autumn of true Beauties is agreeable: And yet "the Perfections of her Mind did very much ſurpaſs thoſe of her Body, having equall'd the moſt "eminent Perſons in Virtue and Learning. Nor "has ſhe come behind any of her Sex in Chaſtity "and Modeſty, Vertues ſhe always made Profeſſion of, with ſo much the more Glory and Advantage, as ſhe was honour'd with the Viſits of "the moſt accompliſh'd (e) Perſons of ſeveral "Countries, who hearing of her rare Vertues and "Endowments, had a mind to ſatisfie their Curioſity, and came far and near to ſee and diſcourſe "her, as the wonder of her Age. This kind of Vanity, which ſo eaſily intoxicates the Minds of "the Female Sex, had never been able to touch "hers; on the contrary, ſhe ſhun'd with great "Prudence and Modeſty all Occaſions which "might betray her into a reliſh of it, preferring "a retir'd Life to the Condition her extraordinary "Qualities might have rais'd her to; the Temper "ſhe had happily found, favour'd neither of Con"fidence of her ſelf, nor Contempt of others." Theſe are originally the Latin words of Hilarion de Coſte a Minime, but here Tranſlated from the Italian of a Canon of Latran. Add to them a Citation which I am juſt going to give from the ſame Minime.

(c) Franciſcus Patricius in epiſt. dedicator. tertii tomi diſcuſſionum Peripateticarum.

(d) Pierre Paul de Ribera ubi infra, according to the Verſion of Hilarion de Coſte, éloges des Dames illuſtres, to. 2. p. 800.

(e) Let's confirm all this by the words of Francis Patritius. ubi ſupra. Legantes ac docti viri quique non cives tantum tui, ſed quotquot Italia, quotquot Europa protulit, Mutinam viſunt, ut te Mutinæ viſant, ut miretur, ut colant, cerebrum Jovis penè ſupremi alteram Minervam.

(B) Found a Parallel between her and Artemiſia.] This I ſay of her upon the Authority of a great Philoſopher: Proh dolor! ſays he (f), poſtquam maritus tuus Paulus Porrinus, virorum optimus ad ſuperos migravit, Muſas omnes ac Gratias, luctu ac tenebris obduxiſti. Artemiſiam alteram te fatlam dolemus. Fuit quidem ille tibi maritus incomparabilis. Sed & tu uxor illi incomparabilis & admiranda. Da locum prudentiæ, ac ſortunæ tuæ, da finem lachrymis. The Epiſtle Dedicatory from whence I have taken theſe words has no date; but the Book, in which 'tis found, was Printed at Baſil, in 1581.

(f) Franciſc. Patricius, ib.

(C) Had her inſtructed by the beſt Maſters.] "(g) Camillus

(g) Hilarion de Coſte ubi ſupra, p. 799, 800. & ſuiv.

Court of the Duke of Ferrara: In a word, her Merit was so illustrious, that the City of Rome honour'd it with a Privilege, of which there never had been a Precedent in the Person of a Woman, to wit, that of the (D) Citizenship of Rome. You'll find all these Particulars in the Remarks.

MONANTHEUIL (HENRY DE) in Latin (A) Monantholius, a Native of Reims in Champagne, was Royal Professor of Mathematicks at Paris, in the (B) Year * 1577. He was also † Dean of the Faculty of Physick at Paris. He had been brought up at the Feet of Ramus in the College of Prele, and was a very zealous Stickler for the Philosophy of this new Founder of a Sect. Thuanus, who informs us of this † Particular, makes

(b) Confirm this by these words of Patricius ubi supra, Quanti te sereniſſimus Alphonſus Ateſtinus II. Princeps noſter? Quanti te principes mulieres Lucretia atque Leonora, ſorores ejus faciunt?

(i) Call'd Pierre Paul de Ribera of Valence. He has written the Elogy of our Tarquinia in the 14th Book of a Work entit'led, Le glorie immortali de'Trionfi, & Heroiche impreſe d'ottocento quaranta cinque Donne illuſtri antiche, e moderne, dotate di conditioni e ſcienze ſegnalate: Cioe in ſacra Scritura, Theologia, Profetia, Filoſofia, Retorica, Grammatica, Medicina, Aſtrologia, Leggi Civili, Pittura, Muſica, Armi, & in altre virtu principali.

(a) Patricius ubi ſupra.

"Camillo Molza, Knight of the Order of St. James "of Spain, and Son to the great Francis Maria Molza "of Modena, an Orator, and excellent Latin and "Italian Poet——obſerving from her Youth the "Felicity and Excellency of her Genius, ſent her "with her Brothers to learn the Rudiments of "Grammar. John Politiano, a Native of Modena, ad-"mirably skill'd in all the Sciences, a Man of great "Virtue and Piety, was her Maſter. She learn'd the "human Arts beſides, as alſo to write a fair Hand, and "Compoſe correctly under the care of Lazaro Labi-"dini, a famous Grammarian of thoſe Times, "which ſhe has elegantly reduc'd to practice in "her Compoſitions in Proſe and Latin Verſe. "She went through Ariſtotle's Rhetorick, under "Camillo Corcapani. The Mathematician Antony "Guarini, taught her the Doctrine of the Sphere. "She learnt the Art of Poetry under Francis Pa-"tricio a famous Philoſopher; Logick, and a "Courſe of Philoſophy under P. Lateni, as alſo "the intire and perfect Knowledge of the Greek "Tongue Rabi Abraham taught her the Prin-"ciples of the Hebrew Tongue: This Rabbin's "Grandfather had been Hebrew Maſter to her "Grandfather, the great Molza, by all which helps, "by her own Induſtry, and the inclination for "Study, which theſe great Men obſerv'd in her, "ſhe made ſo extraordinary a Progreſs, that the "ſubtleſt Queſtions in Divinity were no difficul-"ty at all to her. John Maria Barbier, a Man of "great Learning and Judgment, perfected her "in the Purity of the Tuſcan Tongue; ſhe Com-"poſ'd many eaſie and elegant Poems in it, ſeve-"ral Letters, and other Works eſteem'd by the "Politeſt and Learned'ſt Men of Italy. She has "mix'd abundance of Tranſlations from the Greek "and Latin with her own Productions, and has "ſo happily and ſo properly expreſs'd the Thoughts "of her Authors, that her Readers have doubted "whether ſhe had not a more perfect knowledge of "thoſe Tongues than of her own. She began to "learn Muſick, only to entertain and unbend her "Mind from her more ſerious Studies; but ſhe "excell'd all the Ladies, who had ſung with the "greateſt Applauſe, and raviſh'd all their Hearers. "The way of managing her Voice which ſhe had "acquir'd by Rules founded on Reaſon, and by "the Leſſons of the beſt Maſters, many of which "had the laudable Ambition to ſhow her ſomething "curious in that Art was admirable. Amongſt "others of theſe Maſters were Giaches d'Uuerc, Lu-"ſaſco Luſachi and Horatio called of the Violin, on "which Inſtrument, as well as on the Lute, Tar-"quinia us'd to play a part, joining another Hand "with her own Voice, and that with ſo much "Art and Skill, that nothing ſeem'd to be want-"ing, ſo that Alphonſo II. (b) Duke of Ferrara, a "moſt judicious Prince, and who had an extreme "Paſſion for all fine Accompliſhments, was ra-"viſh'd with admiration, finding many more Per-"fections in this Lady, than had been reported of "her. A little after, ſhe inſtituted that famous "Conſort of Ladies, which has done her ſo much "Honour, and who after her Huſband's Death, "always invited her to their Company, that by "her Preſence ſhe might perfect the Choir of "Muſick which ſhe had ſo happily begun." Theſe Words are Tranſlated from the Italian of a (i) Regular Canon of St. John of Lateran. He does not clearly enough ſignifie what Patricius taught this Lady: And therefore I help'd out his Narration with the Words of Patricius himſelf, who tells us he taught her the Greek Tongue, and read Plato to her. All he has ſaid in Praiſe of Tarquinia, with reſpect to her Learning, is worth relating, and may ſerve for a Supplement to Ribera's Narration. Non tu, ſays he (a), ut alia ſolent, femineis labris libros attigiſti. Tu non modo Hetruſcam politiſſimam linguam, ſed Latinam, ſed Græcam, optime calles. Tu hanc non modo Hiſtoricos atque oratores, ſed & philoſophos. Sed & Platonem ipſum, Jovis eloquium æmulantem, ſed & poetas quoſlibet, ſed & Pindarum, ſine hac Græcorum ulla, & legis & intelligis. Hanc tu, quod omnium hominum admirationem vincat, in Platone, tribus menſibus me prælegente edidiciſti. Tu in Latina omnium generum carmina pangis, in Hetruſca poemata condis, quam ſalita, Jupiter, atque arguta! Tu logicas omnes ſpinas demetiſti. Tu moralem Philoſophiam, Platonicam, Ariſtoteliam, Platonicamque evibiſti. Tu magno profectus in Phyſiologia feciſti. Tu Theologiam catholicam, toto pectore hauſiſti. Quid Muſicen omnis generis referam? In qua te omnis, non modo Muſarum, ſed & Muſarum chorus & admiratur, & ſtupet. Te ne citharœdorum quidem ullus in muſica præſtantiſſimorum, non modo non ſuperat, ſed nec adæquat. Cum ad lyram chordam canis, cum acutam gravemque eodem utramque tempore, alteram ad lyram pulſas, alteram cantas, Gratiæ te omnes ornant, circumſtant, ſtupefaciunt. Quas utinam poſſim ita exprimere, ut qui hæc legeret, te audire putaret. Sed Dii boni, quæ eloquentia? quæ argutiæ, qui ſales? quæ jucunditas in converſatione, quæ humanitas, quæ urbanitas? Longe merito patricios ſimus Benedictus Manzolius civis tuus & Epiſcopus Regienſis te, non ſolum patri tuo Camillo viro eloquentiſſimo, ſed etiam ævo tuo, viro uſquequaque ingenio Franciſco Mario Molzæ audæ præferre.

(D) That of the Citizenſhip of Rome] "(b) All "the World has given an univerſal Applauſe to "her Merit, but particularly the Senate and Peo-"ple of Rome, by an authentick Teſtimonial and "Acknowledgement, having in a Decree of the "Senate (wherein mention is made of all her "Qualites and Perfections) honour'd her with "the Title of Only Perſon, giving her the Privi-"lege of a Roman Citizen, and for her ſake to all "the Family of Molza, as you will ſee by the "words of the Grant or Patent——Quod Fabius "Mathæi Franciſcus ſoricius Equ. Dominicus Co-"nſ. de Tarquinia Molſa Mutinenſi Camilli filia "Civitate Romana donanda ad Senatum referre S. P. "Q. R. decreverit ita fieri cenſuit. Eſt novum atque "inuſitatum eſt in civium numerum a Senatu famina "cooptari, quarum virtus, ac fama domeſticarum pa-"rietum finibus contineri cum debeat, raro publicos in ne-"gotiis uſus Reipublicæ eſſe ſolet; tamen ſi aliqua inter "eas unquam extiterit, quæ non ſolum ceteras ſui ordi-"nis, ſed viros etiam virtutibus pene omnibus ſuperare "dicatur, æquum eſt, ut novo exemplo, novaque inſtitu-"tiſque meritis, novi quoque honores inuſitatique perſol-"vantur. Cum itaque Tarquinia Molza Mutinæ anti-"quiſſima ac florentiſſima Populi Romani Colonia, Ca-"millo Patre in equitum ordinem D. Jacobi ab Hiſpaniæ "Regibus inſtitutum, ob (c) merita ac nobilitatem ad-"jecto, genita, celebres illas Romanas Heroinas æmulet-"tur, virtutibuſque exprimat, ut ei nihil præterpatriam "Romanam deeſſe videatur, ne hoc unum ad abſolutam "ejus gloriam deſiderari poſſit, Senatus Populuſque Ro-"manus Civitate donandam cenſuit, &c. Ribera has "only put theſe Latin words in Tarquinia Molza's "Elogy, and all this Patent in Italian, wherein "are related all the Qualities and Studies of this "Heroine, the Nobility of her Family, and the "Deeds of her Anceſtors, which I have ſpoken of "above. The Decree was made in the Capitol "the 8th of December M. DC. Curtio Martolo being "for the time Chancellor of the Senate, and of "the Roman People, Angelo Foſco being Chancellor "of the Senate and People.

(A) In Latin Monantholius] This is doubtleſs his true Latin Name; but becauſe Voſſius, I know not why, calls him Monatholius, Mr. Moreri has not only omitted his French Name, which he ought to have given, but has alſo put him under a Latin Name, ſomewhat diſguiſ'd, I mean that of Monatholius. He has added nothing to a little Article, which he found of him in Voſſius.

(B) In the Year 1577] I could eaſily believe he entered upon this Profeſſion in 1574, being at that time a Profeſſor of Phyſick; I could eaſily believe this, I ſay, from the Title of the Oration related by Du Breul in the Supplement to the

(i) Hilarion de Coſte, ib. p. 82 &c.

(c) Hilarion de has tranſlated this word by.

Du Breul, Antiq. de Paris, p. 567.

†Menage. Rem. ſur Ayr. p. 264.

† Thuan. de vita ſua, lib. 1.

makes an honourable mention of Monantheuil, who had taught him Arithmetick and Geometry. He had been Preceptor to the learned Peter C Lamoignon, whoſe Epitaph Beza has written in Latin Verſe. He publiſh'd at Paris γ in 1599, his Latin Tranſlation of Ariſtotle's (C) Mechanicks, and added to it a very learned Commentary. Death prevented his finiſhing a large Work of Mathematicks, upon which he had labour'd a long time, and which was to be entit'led Heptatechnon Mathematicum. We ſhall take notice of his other Works in the Remarks. He was one of du Vair the Keeper's particular Friends, and is the Muſæus mention'd by du Vair in his Book of Conſtancy. He had a Son call'd Thierri de MONANTHEUIL, who was Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, and who Compos'd a Book entit'led (D) de Puncto, which he Dedicated to his Father. This Thierri died at Paris in 1621, in the 50th Year of his Age. His Siſter Catharine was Married to Jerome Goulu. See Mr. Menage δ.

MONARDES (NICHOLAS) a Phyſician of Sevil, flouriſh'd in the XVIth Century, and came into great Reputation by his Practice ζ, and by the Books (E) he publiſh'd. Some think he died in the Year 1588. But 'tis more probable he died in 1578 ϑ. We ſhall ſhew in the Remark, that the Editions of his Books have not been faithfully reckon'd by Don Nicholas Antonio.

MONIMA, Wife to Mithridates, ſmote the Heart of this Prince from the firſt moment he ſaw her. 'Twas in the Town of Stratonicea, ſoon after the great Advantages obtain'd by him over the Roman Generals Oppius, Manius, &c. He liked the Maid ſo well, that he ſecur'd her Perſon, and order'd her to be ſent to his Seraglio ι. Others ſay, ſhe was of Miletus, and that Mithridates never could obtain the laſt Favour, but by taking the fair way, that is, by Marrying her. He try'd her with fine Promiſes; he made her a Preſent at one time of fifteen Thouſand Crowns, but all in vain, he was forc'd to buckle to the formality of a Marriage Contract θ; nor would ſhe ever bed with him, till he had fairly ſign'd it, and adorn'd her with the royal Diadem and Title of Queen. This Conduct made her famous throughout all Greece φ. Her Condition after all was nothing but meer Parade; the ſolid part of (A) Happineſs was wanting. The poor Monima often regretted her native Country and made a ſad End; for Mithridates overcome γ Voſſius de ſcient. Mathem. p. 306.

C Uncle to the firſt Preſident de Lamoignon. Menage, ib.

δ Ubi ſupra.

ζ See the Remark.

ϑ Nicol. Antonius in Biblioth. Script. Hiſpan. tom. 2. p. 122.

ι Appian. in Mithridaticis, p. m. 123.

θ Plutarc. in Lucul. p. 503. A.

φ Ταύτης ὁ πλοῦτος ἦν λόγος ἐν τοῖς Ἕλλησιν ὅτι τῷ Βασιλεῖ πειθώνιος αὐτὴν, καὶ μυείης πολλαχοῦ λίθους χρυσοῦς περιπεμψάντος, αἰθόμενος, μίχεις ἢ γάμου ἐγένετο συνθῆκας, καὶ διάδημα πέμψας αὐτῇ, βασίλισσα ἀνηγόρευσεν. Erat hujus celebre inter Græcos nomen, quod quum eam rex attentaret, & quindecim millia aureorum miſiſſet, eatenus fuerit reniſa, dum ſponſaliis factis miſſoque diademate appellavit reginam. Id. ibid.

the Epitome of Geſner's Bibliotheque. Henrici Monantholii Rhemi Scholarum Medicinæ Profeſſoris, oratio pro Mathematicis artibus, Pariſiis habita, ibidemque excuſa in 4. apud Dionyſium à Prato 1574. If this other Title of an Oration at the 367th Page of the ſecond Part of Thuanus's Catalogue did not keep me in ſuſpence, Henrici Monantholii Oratio pro ſuo in regiam Cathedram ritu 8. Pariſ. 1585.

(C) His Latin Tranſlation of Ariſtotle's Mechanicks.] When I find on one Hand, that the Sieur Konig (d) upon Cardan's Teſtimony, tells us of one Francus Monotholius Author of a Book entit'led Ludus iatromathematicus, and on the other, that Henry de Monantheuil wrote a Book call'd (e) Ludus iatromathematicus, Muſis factus ad averruncandum tres Academiæ perniciosiſſimos hoſtes, πόλεμον, λιμὸν, λοιμὸν, I am ſomewhat diſpoſed to believe, that here are two Authors made of one, and that the Petrus Monantholius, mention'd immediately after, as an Author who publiſh'd Commentaries at Paris upon Ariſtotle's Rhetorick in 1599, is a Multiplication of the ſame Writer, and miſtaking his Rhetorick for a Treatiſe of Mechanicks. However, I venture not to determine the Point, having not a Library ſufficiently furniſh'd at my command.

(d) Biblio. p. 548.

(e) See Lindenius renovat. p. 397.

(D) A Book intit'led de Puncto.] Monantheuil the Father had wrote upon the ſame Subject: See in Thuanus's Catalogue this Title, Henr. Monantholii de Puncto primo Geometriæ principio 4. Lugd. Bat. Commel. 1600. The Oxford Catalogue wants this Treatiſe, but we find in it a Panegyrick Henrico IV. Galliarum Regi dictus, Printed at Paris in 1594. and an Admonitio ad Jac. Peletarium de angulo contactus, Printed at Paris in 1581.

(E) The Books he Publiſh'd] The Book intit'led de Juvanda vena in pleuritide inter Græcos & Arabes Concordia, was Printed at Sevil in 1539, in 4°. His Tract de roſa & partibus ejus; de ſucci roſarum temperatura; de roſis perſicis ſeu Alexandrinis; de malis, citris, aurantiis, & limoniis, was Printed at Antwerp in 1565, in 8 a). The Spaniſh Book wherein he explain'd the Vertues of American Drugs, a. las drogas de las Indias, was extreamly uſeful to Mankind, for it contain'd the Remedies for ſeveral Diſeaſes. It alſo got Monardes a deal of Glory. Let's hear what he ſays upon it. b) Quæ (prima pars) ſuperioribus annis tam felicibus auſpiciis in publicum prodiit, ut inde hominum vita tot morborum periculis objecta, multiplicia eademque præſentanea remedia ſibi paraverit, atque ego bonorum judicio non mediocrem eruditionis & diligentiæ laudem reportaverim. Thus he ſpeaks concerning the firſt part of this Work in an (c) Epiſtle Dedicatory to Pope Gregory XIII. He adds, that the deſire of promoting the publick good, weighed much more with him, than the Applauſes he receiv'd in Compoſing a ſecond Part, and he obſerves that 'twas exceedingly uſeful. (d) Poſtea non tam aurea popularis (quamquam ea ſecundiſſime afflabat) ſuavitate illectus, quam communis utilitatis amore commotus alterum ejuſdem argumenti Syntagma concinnavi: in quo innumera medicamenta quæ hactenus intra naturæ arcana delituerant, magno humanæ ſalutis emolumento in lucem produxi. Before he publiſh'd any thing on this Subject, he was acquainted by a long Experience with the Soveraign Vertues of the American Medicines. (e) Quum rerum medicinalium ab occidentali uſque India, ad nos convectarum utilitates adeo mirabiles ut ægrotos quamplurimos pene jam deploratos ſanaverint, aſſidua med.ndi peritiatione atque longinqui temporis uſu percepiſſem; eas res —— via ac ratione tractare conſtitui. Don Nicolas Antonio ought to have told us, that the two firſt Parts of this Work were Printed one after another. This he did not know; for he would have us believe they were publiſh'd both together, and that the firſt Edition was in 1569 in 8°. de las drogas de las Indias, ſays he (f), duobus tomis, qui primum editi ſunt ab authore anno 1569. What he adds is not more exact, Poſtea adjuncto tertio, unum ex tribus majoris formæ volumen publicavit anno 1580. 4. 'Tis certain that the third part was Printed, with the two others in 4°. in 1574, at Sevil, by Alonzo Eſcrivano. I have this Edition: It's dedicated to Pope Gregory XIII. And 'twas to oblige this Pope, that the Author publiſh'd it in this manner. (g) Quæ meorum ſtudiorum monumenta quum ejuſcemodi Genium habuerint, ut ſanctitati tuæ ſumme placuerint, eaque Romam ex ultima Hiſpania deferenda curaverim, operæ pretium me tibi factturum exiſtimavi, ſi utramque hujus operis partem conjungerem, ac nunc primum tua potiſſimum cauſſa tertiam adjicerem. He added to it three Dialogues; the 1ſt. de la piedra Bezaar, y de la yerva Eſcuer onera: The 2d. de la nieve y del bever frio: The 3d. de las grandezas del Hierro, y de ſus virtudes medicinales. The two (h) firſt had been publiſh'd before, but not the third. Nicolas Antonio did not know of any other Edition of the third than that of the Year 1580. All theſe Spaniſh Works of our Monardes have been tranſlated into Latin by Cluſius, and into Italian by Annibal Brigantus. The ſame Cluſius hath alſo tranſlated into Latin Monardes's three Books de varios ſecretos y experiencias de medicina. Thoſe of American Drugs were tranſlated into Engliſh by I know not whom, and into French by Anthony Colin, ſworn Apothecary to the Town of Lyons. The Lindenius renovatus does not mark the Year of any Spaniſh Edition.

(b) Nicol. Anton. Biblioth. Script. Hiſpan. tom. 2. p. 122.

(c) Nicol. Monardus epiſt. dedicat.

(d) Id. ib.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) Nicol. Anton. ubi ſupra.

(g) Nicol. Monardus ubi ſupra.

(h) That de la piedra Bezaar, &c. at Seville, 1569, in 8°. That de la nieve, &c. at Seville, 1571, in 8°. Nicol. Anton. ubi ſupra.

(A) The ſolid part of Happineſs was wanting —— ſhe

(c) It's before the Edition of Seville, 1574.

come by Lucullus, and fearing leſt his Wives ſhould fall into the Hands of the Enemy, order'd 'em all to be put to Death. He * had given the Government of Epheſus to Philopœmen Monima's Father. It can't be doubted that his Paſſion for this beautiful Perſon was conſtant; ſeeing after his Death there were found amongſt his Papers ſome wanton Letters which had paſs'd between 'em †.

MONIN (JOHN EDWARD DU) a Native of Gny, in the County of Burgundy, publiſh'd a great many (B) Poems in the Reign of Henry III. He has been plac'd in the Catalogue of extraorninary (C) Wits. He was kill'd at twenty ſix Years of Age ‡. 'Tis ſaid, that du Perron was accus'd of being an Accomplice (D) in his Murther, and that he was forc'd to ſue out his Pardon. I think d'Aubigné has been guilty of (E) an Anachroniſme in ſpeaking of du Monin.

MONSERRAT MONTANNES (MICHAEL) liv'd in the XVIIth Century. He was a Spaniard, who forſook the Church of Rome to go over to the Proteſtant Communion, and publiſh'd ſome ſmall Pieces of Controverſy. I have ſeen one of 'em γ intit'led aviſo ſobre los abuſos de la Igleſia Romana. He ſhews in it that he had read the Scripture much, for he cites it at every turn. He concludes his Book by exhorting his

* Appian, ubi ſupra, p. 134.

† Plut. in Pompeio, p. 639.

‡ Du Verdier Vau-Privas. Biblioth. Franc. p. 729.

α See the Remark C.

γ Printed at the Hague in 1633, 'twas approv'd by Henry Arnold Miniſter of Delft.

ſhe regretted her native Country and made a ſad End] All this Plutarch tells us in the place, where he relates how Mithridates flying from Lucullus, ſent Bacchides, one of his Eunuchs to his Siſters and Wives, with Orders to put 'em to Death. "The "poor Lady, ſays he (i), ſpeaking of our Monima, "ever ſince this barbarous King had Married her, "lived in great diſcontent, continually deploring "her unfortunate Beauty, which inſtead of a "Husband, had given her a Maſter, and inſtead "of that conjugal Society, which was befitting a "Lady of Honour, had given her a Guard and "Garriſon of Barbarians, who kept her as a Pri"ſoner, far from the ſweet Country of Greece, in "a place where ſhe had only the Dream and Sha"dow of the Happineſs ſhe hoped for, and on the "contrary had really loſt the Subſtance, which be"fore ſhe enjoy'd in her native Country: And "when this Bacchilides came to them, and had laid "before 'em the King's Command, that they might "chuſe that way of dying, which each thought the "eaſieſt, and leaſt painful, ſhe ſnatch'd her Royal "Diadem from off her Head, and tying it about "her Neck, hang'd her ſelf; but the Wreath not "being ſtrong enough, immediately broke, where"upon ſhe cry'd out, O! curſt and unfortunate "String of Gold, wilt thou not do me this one "ſad piece of Service? At which words, ſhe twir"led it to the Ground, and ſpit upon it, and "then ſtretch'd out her fine Neck that Bacchilides "might cut her Throat.

(i) Plut. on Lucullo, p. 503.

(B) Publiſh'd a great many Poems.] Here's the Catalogue of 'em, as we find it in du Verdier's Bibliotheque: "(k) A Philoſophical Compariſon "of the Sun and Moon with our Soul and Intel"lect, according to Mere. Triſmegiſtus, and ſome "Platonicks. Together with ſome Poetical Diſ"courſes and Sonnets; the whole Printed at the "end of the Latin Verſion he has made of the "Week of William de Saluſte, Sieur du Bartas, "which he entit'led Ber ſithias ſive mundi creatio, "publiſh'd at Paris in 8°, by Hilary le Bouc, 1579. "The new Works of John Edward du Monyn, Phi"loſophical Poet, containing Diſcourſes, Hymns, "Odes, Amours, Counter-Amours, Eclogues, "Elegies, Anagrams and Epigrams, Printed at "Paris in 12. by John Parent in 1582. Uranologie, "or the Heavens, containing, beſides the ordi"nary Doctrine of the Sphere, many fine Diſ"courſes, Printed at Paris in 12°. by William Ju"lian, 1583. Miſcellanеorum Poeticorum libri. [Pa"riſiis 8°." Claude du Verdier (l), Son to him who has furniſh'd me with this Paſſage, has cenſur'd our du Monin in many things, and Father Leſcalopier obſerves on the Subject of du Bartas's Latin Tranſlation, (m) Mominus——nimis incultus Poëta viſus eſt, interpreſque parum fidus.

(k) Du Verdier, p. 729.

(l) See his in auctores pene omnes, antiquos potiſſimum cenſio.

(m) Leſcalop. in Cicer. de natur. Deorum, p. 234.

(C) In the Catalogue of extraordinary Wits] Gabriel Naudé deſigning to prove that (n) Picus Count of Mirandola, was not the only Perſon who had acquired a prodigious ſtock of Learning in his Youth, ſays, that Paul de la Scale (o) maintain'd in 1553 at Bologne, one Thouſand, five Hundred forty Three Concluſions upon all ſorts of Subjects, and that before he had attained to the Age of two and twenty. He produces afterwards the Examples of Poſtel, Geſner, Erasmus, Agrippa and Maldonat; "and laſt of all, that of this "Edward du Monin, who, we may ſay, was com"pounded only of Fire and Spirit, ſince he had ac"quired before the twenty ſixth Year of his Age, in "which he was kill'd, the knowledge of the Italian, "Spaniſh, Latin, Greek and Hebrew Tongues, "and of Philoſophy, Phyſick, Mathematicks and "Divinity, with ſuch facility in the Poetry of all "theſe Languages, that he Tranſlated du Bartas's "Work of the Creation, in leſs than fifty Days, "and ſaw Printed before his Death five or ſix con"ſiderable Volumes of his Poems, which were "highly commended by the fineſt Wits of the laſt "Age, Fumeus, du Perron, Goulu, Dourat, Morel, "Baif and du Bartas.

(n) Naudé apolog. des grans hommes, p. 499. See him alſo in his Syntagma de ſtudio liberali, p. m. 87. and in his Dialogue of Maſcurat, p. 468.

(o) Id. ib. p. 503.

(D) Du Perron was accuſed of being an Accomplice in his Murther] This I find in a Book of Gisbert Voetius, in the place where he relates the Progreſs of Cardinal du Perron's Fortune. Perronus, ſays he (a), ſi cum illo (Pleſſæo Mornæo) comparetur, quis qualiſve fuerit, judicent illi qui virum propius norunt; Miniſtri reformati filium fuiſſe conſtat, cui nomen Perroni fuit inditum à vico ejuſdem nominis in quo Genevæ habitaverat pater, priuſquam in Normandiam veniret. A patre initio fuiſſe educatum in ſpem Miniſterii, ſed à D. de Matignon, cui carmina quædam obtulerat induſtum fuiſſe ut Lutetiam ſe conferret, ubi fortunæ lautioris poëtæ ſoes eſſet ſub Henrico III. ibi innotuiſſet, & cum aliis nonnullis poſtulatum fuiſſe cædis Edwardi du Monin, etiam poëtæ, qui verſibus ſuis eum perſtrinxerat, adeo ut literas gratiæ, quas vocant, a Rege obtinuerit; cui à lectionibus fuit, donec oratione apud eum habita, qua probabat Deum eſſe, † obtulit ſe die ſequenti contrarium probaturum, ſi Regi adlubeſceret. Quam ob cauſſam juſſus aula excedere, paulatim tamen ſe nonnullis inſinuavit, maxime Cardinali Vindocinenſi. Et tandem ſe immiſcuit iis qui Regem Henricum IV. ad religionis mutationem pertraxerunt, unde et ad Epiſcopatum primo, deinde ad Cardinalatum patuit via. Note, that he cites no body, and yet he was very much addicted to Citations.

(a) Gisb. Voetius deſper. cauſa Papatus, p. 677, 678.

(E) d'Aubigné has been guilty of an Anachroniſme] He ſays (b), that du Monin, whom the King nam'd the Poet of the Light Horſe, play'd a Lady a malicious Trick, who had deſir'd him to write an Elegy upon the Diſturbance the Coaches caus'd in the Streets. He excus'd himſelf, and telling her (c), "He was "going to Lions, that he might conceal his flight to "the Duke of Savoy, ſhe deſir'd him to get her a ſuit "of Tapeſtry wove in Emblems. He diſcharg'd his "Commiſſion, and got her a Set repreſenting four "(d) Triumphs, each of which conſiſted of three "Pieces; the firſt was the Triumph of Impiety; "the ſecond of Ignorance; the third of Cowar"diſe; the fourth of Beggery. The Embroidery "of the Groteſque Work is a writing in Cypher, "which no body underſtood: But du Monin, who "having nothing more to fear, ſince he had paſs'd "the Mount du Chat, ſent the Explication and Ac"count of it all at length to the (e) little Knight." The Lady, whom d'Aubigné deſign'd to ridicule, is doubtleſs the Sieur de la Varenne's Wife, he ſuppoſes ſhe had told du Monin, that the King had taken from Madam a ſuit of Tapeſtry, worth a Hundred and fifty Thouſand Crowns, to give it the Dutcheſs, and that it would be more becoming his Maj eſty, now ſhe was dead, to make a Preſent of it to Monſieur, than to make himſelf the Heir of the Deceas'd. The Dutcheſs here mention'd is Gabriela d'Eſtre, Miſtreſs to Henry IV. who died in 1599. D'Aubigné muſt therefore imagine, that du Monin was alive that Year. But how can this Hypotheſis be reconcil'd with what we have ſeen (f) above, that he was kill'd in the Reign of Henry III. at

(b) D'Aubigné in the 4th Book of the Baron de Faineſte, ch. 16. p. m. 285.

(c) Ibid. p. 286.

(d) Ibid. p. 288.

(e) We are by this word to underſtand the Husband of the Lady who ſpoke to Du Monin.

(f) In the Remark D.

his Nation to convert themſelves, and by a deſcription of the Diſorders (F) which the Vows of Celibacy caus'd in Spain. He obſerves, among other things, that the Confeſſors ♪ allow the Nuns a Remedy of the moſt criminal Incontinence, when they declare they burn. All this is follow'd by a great number of Scripture Paſſages in praiſe of Marriage. He Printed ζ another Tract in 1631.

MONSTRELET (ENGUERRAND DE) Author of a Chronicle of France, which has often been (G) Printed, and which reaches from the Year 1400 to 1467, liv'd in the XVth Century. He ϑ deſcended from a Noble and Ancient Family, and was Governor of the Town of Cambrai. As that Town ſtood Neuter betwixt the French, the Engliſh, and Burgundians, he enjoy'd all the Repoſe that an Hiſtorian could deſire, and the convenience of hearing the Relations of all ſides. Some ſay, that he wrote η with the more Fidelity, as he was in a place, where nothing obliged him to ſeek the Friendſhip of one Party, or fear the Hatred of another; but 'tis more certain, that he ſhew'd himſelf (H) a little too partial to the Houſe of Burgundy. He * kept a Correſpondence with the Heralds, with the Agents, and with other Perſons, that were conſiderable for their Station, and help'd out his Intelligence by the publick Reports. He has enrich'd his Hiſtory with Edicts, Kings and Princes Letters, remarkable Sayings, Articles of Peace, Treaties, Capitulations of Towns, Challenges, Summonſes, &c †. I don't know the Year of his Birth, nor that of his Death.

MONTAIGU (JOHN DE) High Steward of France, under Charles VI. had the misfortune to diſpleaſe the Duke of Burgundy, who abus'd the Authority he had obtain'd in the Kingdom to ſuch a degree of Violence, that he caus'd him to be Beheaded the 17th of October ‡ 1409. Some ſay, that the Memory of this (A) High Steward was juſtified three Years after, when the Credit of his Oppreſſor was at an end, and that his Bones were honourably interr'd by a publick Order. Francis I. made a Reflexion on this, which gave occaſion (B) to a very notable Anſwer. We ſhall ſee it below. Conſult the Continuation of the Menagiana β.

MONTAUBAN, a Town of Guienne in Querci, upon the River Tarn, is famous on ſeveral accounts. A Gentleman of Worth γ has already communicated to me ſome very good Memoirs concerning this Town; but as he has given me a Promiſe of others much larger, and more exact, I ſhall defer this Article, in hopes of putting it one time or other into the beſt Condition. I only touch upon one thing, which is ſomewhat extraordinary

♪ Y a las en cerradas Monias, ſus Confeſſores les conſeden que tengan ſu viril de barro para ſus concupicentias por que dizen que ſe queman, y aſſi las remedian con eſte grand pecado. p. 126.

ζ At the Hague, with the Approbation of the ſame Arnold. It's written in Spaniſh with this Title, that the Pope is Anti-Chriſt.

ϑ Bullart Academ. desScien. tom. 1. p 129.

η Id. ib.

* Id. ib.

† Id. ib.

‡ And not the 7th of October 1408, as Moreri affirms. According to him this Man had been Arreſted, Try'd, put to the Queſtion, ſentenced to loſe his Head, and actually Beheaded all in one Day.

β Pag. 87, 88, ed. of Holl.

γ Monſieur YSARN her before Magiſtr. of Montauban now of Amſterdam. His merit is well known, even by good Books publiſh'd by him.

twenty ſix (g) Years of Age, and that his chief Works were Printed (h) in 1584? He was ſtill living in that Year, as la Croix du Main aſſures us (i). Either d'Aubigné perplexes and confounds the Times, or elſe he ſpeaks of another du Monin

(F) The Diſorders which the Vows of Celibacy caus'd in Spain.] He affirms that the Secular and Regular Clergy walk abroad well arm'd, and fight ſo deſperately when they are attack'd, that the Officers of Juſtice are afraid of 'em. (k) Quanto al voto, bien ſabeys lo que los religiozos y clerigos hazen, que ſalen de ſus caſas con eſpada y broquel, que la miſma juſticia y corxetes temen de encontranſe con ellos, por que dan golpes dezatinados por cauſa del gran ardor libidinoſo, y tambien por no ſer preſos y conocidos. Y muchos Canonigos, por mas modeſta, ſe van a los partidos, deſpues de los maytines a purgarſe con las rameras, para poder dormir. Los demas de la Cleresia tienen ſus deſguaceros y concubinas y muchos hijos dellas.

(G) Which has often been Printed.] I know no older Edition than that (l) of 1512 at Paris. There was another in the ſame City in 1572. The latter was Review'd and Corrected (m) by the Copy in the King's Library. Du Cheſne ſpeaks of an Eddition (n) of Paris 1603. Add to theſe the Edition of the Louvre.

(H) He ſhew'd himſelf a little too partial to the Houſe of Burgundy.] Mr. de Sponde calls him (o) Burgundi fautorem, tho' in another place (p) he owns he is a ſincere Writer, and very exact in ſetting down the Times. La Popeliniere makes him ſuſpected, for thus he ſpeaks: (q) Enguerrand de Monſtrelet collecting the moſt notable Tranſactions in France after Froiſſard, has hardly ſhewn himſelf a better or more judicious Writer, tho' ſomewhat truer perhaps, and leſs paſſionate. As he had been accuſing Froiſſard of extreme partiality for the Engliſh againſt the French, it could not be his deſign to acquit Monſtrelet of impartiality. An Hiſtorian who is ſomewhat leſs prepoſſeſt than another who is ſo to exceſs, is none of the faithfulleſt. He adds, that Monſtrelet continued his Hiſtory to Lewis XII. and places him in the Year 1500. I believe he is miſtaken as to this laſt date; and I am ſure, that Monſtrelet's Chronicle is not carry'd further down than the five or ſix firſt Years of the Reign of Lewis XI. for it ends at the Funeral of Philip the Good, Duke of Burgundy. La Popeliniere made uſe of an Edition, to which the Booksellers had added Supplements, as far as Lewis XII. This was the occaſion of his Error.

(A) The Memory ——— was juſtified.] Mr. Menage denies it: Theſe are his Words which are full of curious Matter: "(a) James du Breuil in "his Paris Antiquities, at the Chapter concerning "the Foundation of the Celeſtins of Marcoucy, has "written that John de Montaigu's Corps was carried "to Monfaucon, in a Sack fill'd with Spices; and "that all the time it was at Monfaucon, the Cele"ſtines of Marcoucy daily gave a certain Sum to "the Executioner of Paris to look after it, and that "four Years after his Execution, his Memory ha"ving been vindicated at the ſollicitation of Vi"dame de Laonnois his Son, Son-in-Law to the Con"ſtable d'Albret, his Eſtate was reſtor'd to his Heirs. "'Tis true, the Body of John de Montaigu was taken "down from the Gallows the 27th of Septemb. 1412. "after it had hung ſome Years at Monfaucon. But "what du Breuil ſays of the Sack fill'd with Spices, "and the Executioner's having a charge of his Bo"dy, is a Fable. Nor is it true, that his Memory "had been vindicated. As for his Eſtate, tho' "he had been condemned without the knowledge "of Charles VI. yet this Prince granted the forfei"ture to Lewis Duke of Guienne, the Dauphin. "But 'tis certain, (as I have learn'd from Mr. Per"rone (b), who has been particularly curious a"bout the Life of John de Montaigu) that his E"ſtate was at laſt reſtor'd to his Heirs.

(B) To a very notable Anſwer.] I'll give it in Stephen Paſquier's Words. "The ſame King, ſays he, "(c) ſpeaking of Francis I. paſſing by the Celeſtins of "Marcoucy, and asking ſome of the Monks, Who "founded that Monaſtery, was anſwered, that it was "John de Montaigu, High Steward of France, in the "Reign of Charles VI. This Lord had bin hang'd "on a Gibet at Paris, to gratifie the Duke of "Burgundy, who then domineer'd all France. King "Francis, as 'twas his uſual way, always to hold "ſome material Diſcourſe, ſaid to the Company, "that he greatly wonder'd, how he who had ſo "long govern'd the King his Maſter, ſhould be "con-

(a) Menage, Hiſtoire de Sable, l. 10. ch. 5. p. 271.

(b) He has publiſh'd a Book entitled, l'Anaſtaſe de Marcouſſy, ou recherches curieuſes de ſon origine, progrès, & agrandiſſement. Journal des Sçavans of the 13th June 1695. ſpeaks of it.

(c) Paſquier, Recherches de la France, l. 6. c. 8. p. m. 471.

(g) In the Remark C. (h) In the Remark B. (i) Pag. 221. of his Bibliotheque. (k) Monſerrate Montannes, p. 126. I copy him word for word to the very Errors in the Impreſſion if there be any. (l) La Croix du Maine, p. 75. (m) Du Verdier Biblioth. Franc. p. 777. (n) Du Cheſne, Biblioth. des hiſtor. de France, p. m. 50. (o) Spondan. ad ann. 1415. n. 52. p. m. 753. (p) Id. ad ann. 1467. n. 2. (q) La Popeliniere, hiſtoire des hiſtoires, liv. 8. p. 435.

traordinary, it relates to a ſmall Book, which the Abbot (C) de la Roque has inſerted in his Memoirs of the Church.

MONTECATINUS (ANTONY) a Native of Ferrara, flouriſhed in the XVIth Century. He read Publick Lectures upon ſeveral Subjects for ſome time, and afterwards was made firſt Profeſſor of Phyloſophy there. He was very particularly favour'd by Alphonſus II. Duke of Ferrara, who deputed him to the Courts of Rome and France, and honour'd him with many other (D) Employs. He died at Ferrara in 1599. in the 63d. Year of his Age. * We have ſeveral Volumes (E) of his Compoſing.

MONTGAILLARD (BERNARD DE) known by the Name (A) of the little Feuillant

* Taken from Agoſtino Superbi da Ferrara, pag. 83. & 84. dell' apparato de gli huomini illuſtri della citta di Ferrara.

"condemned to Death; conſidering, that after "ſome Years, his Bones were honourably Interr'd "in this Place, by a Decree of Juſtice: From "whence it was eaſie to conclude, that the Judges "had paſs'd an unrighteous Sentence. Upon which "a Monk anſwer'd the King ſomewhat bluntly, "that his Majeſty was in ſome meaſure miſtaken, "for the Sieur de Montaigu's Trial was not "by Judges, but by Delegates; meaning that "Commiſſioners pack'd to the Humour of a Lord "whoſe Power was then Exorbitant, ſeldom pre-"ſerv'd in their Judgments the Conſcience of "good Judges. Whether this was ſpoken by the "Monk from meer Simplicity, or a well meant "Affectation, it gave occaſion of Laughter, and "ought to have turned to Edification: For to "ſay Truth, Commiſſioners, tho' they are not "pack'd, yet are ever ſuſpected by all grave Per-"ſons, and moſt People think that ſuch Judges "are choſen extraordinarily, only to obtain ſome "advantageous Decree, or to execute ſome pro-"jected Revenge under the Mask of Juſtice; "which the Parliament having taken into conſi-"deration, to prevent Scandal, and give ſome "check to the numbers of People, who are ready "to offer their Service on all ſuch Occaſions. Up-"on a Preſident's Speech in our own time, it was "by a ſolemn Oath decreed, that no Counſellor of "that Court ſhould ever accept or act in any ſuch "Commiſſion, unleſs all the Commiſſioners were "taken from the ſame Body, and not pick'd here "and there out of ſeveral Courts. Which how-"ever is not giving the Diſeaſe an intire Cure, but "only ſome Abatement (d). Theſe good Orders "are but ill obſerv'd.

(d) See the Article Grandier, remarque F.

(C) A ſmall Book, which the Abbot de la Roque.] The Title of it is, Montauban juſtified, or an Anſwer to the Faithful of the P. R. R. who ask, 1 Whether Salvation may be had in the Roman Church. 2. Whether it be lawful for any Temporal Advantages, and particularly in times of Affliction to change Religion, by J. D. B. and J. L. J. Miniſters of the Holy Goſpel. To ſhew upon what occaſion this Work was Publiſhed, we muſt know that there happened a popular Tumult at Montauban about the Year 1661. Soldiers were ſent thither ſome Months after, and quarter'd for the moſt part in the Proteſtants Houſes; and as they were ſuffer'd to commit Diſorders and live at Diſcretion, and a great many had Billets upon the ſame Houſe, their Landlords began to apprehend that they ſhould ſoon be reduc'd to Beggery. On the other Hand, all the Inhabitants who turned Catholicks, were eaſed of Quartering; This obliged a great many Burghers of Montauban to embrace (e) this Religion; Which gave occaſion to the Book we ſpeak of, wherein the Author undertook the Apology of the Inhabitants, who rather choſe to go to Maſs, than to ſee their Families ruined. 'Twas eaſie to diſcover in this Writing, the trace of a Miſſionary's Pen; and yet the Abbot de la Roque many Years after, inſerted it intire (f) into his Memoires of the Church, as the Work of a good Proteſtant. He advances with a moſt egregious Confidence, that this Book was Publiſhed by two Miniſters of upper Guienne, in the Face of all their Congregations, and all their Brethren; whilſt no Body of the Party was at the Pains of diſabuſing the Publick, as to the Point which theſe two Divines had advanc'd, that the Huguenots might without Scruple of Conſcience turn Catholicks, &c. With the ſame Aſſurance, he affirms that this Work pacify'd the Troubles and Diſturbances in Conſciences and Families, when many Inhabitants of Montauban abjured the Proteſtant Religion, to be freed from quartering Soldiers: For which Reaſon, adds he, I inſert it intire in my Memoires, as well becauſe it is a curious Piece, as becauſe it is very ſcarce, there being hardly a Copy of it to be found. This Conduct is the effect either of groſs Ignorance, or inexcuſable Fraud. No Proteſtant ever took the Book of Montauban juſtified for that of a Miniſter. Father Meynier, a great Perſecutor in the way of Law-Suit, was ſuſpected to be the Author of it; as alſo of (g) an Oration, which had been ſpread ſome time before, and which Mr. Euſtache Miniſter of Montpellier anſwered by a little Book Intit'led the Orator Tertullus convicted The Suſpicion was well grounded; for Aligami's Continuator aſcribes the Book we ſpeak of to the Jeſuit Meynier. Could the Abbot de la Roque be ignorant of this Fact? And were not there ſufficient Marks of Impoſture in all this Work? By the way, it is ſo full of Paſſages of Proteſtant Authors, wherein the true Church is acknowledged to be diſperſed in ſeveral Communions without excepting the Roman, that 'tis ſtrange Mr Naude ſhould look upon Mr. Jurieu's Syſteme as a new thing.

(e) Moſt of them return'd to the Proteſtant Religion as ſoon as the Storm was over.

(f) Publiſh'd at Paris 1690.

(g) It is of the Title of Harangue des Sages de la R. P. R. à la Reine.

(D) With many other Employs.] This is what was put in Montecatinus's Epitaph, as it is related by Agoſtino Superbi (h). Alfonſo II Duci ſerenissimo aures, conſilia, operam fideliter præſtitit. Legatimus pro illo ad Regem Gall. Ad Summos Pont. perfugit. Urbem Regii rexit; non ſemel univerſam ditionem Conſiltarius pro Dux adm.niſtravit. Ferrariæ tribunatum geſſit.

(h) In his apparatus to the Hiſtory of the Illuſtrious Perſons of Ferrara, pag. 84.

(E) We have ſeveral Volumes of his Compoſing.] He Publiſhed at Ferrara in 1587. a Commentary upon Ariſtotle's Politicks. It is in Folio, dedicated to Cardinal Ruſticucci, and Printed by Victorio Baldino Printer to the Duke. At the beginning, there are 22 Tables, containing an Analyſis of Ariſtotle's entire Work of Politicks. He made ſuch another Commentary on the ſecond Book of the ſame Work of Ariſtotle, which was Printed at Ferrara by Benedict Mamarellus in 1594. in Folio with this Title, Ariſtotelis Politicorum, hoc eſt, civilium librorum liber ſecundus, ab Antonio Montecatino in Latinam linguam converſus, & partitionibus, reſolutionibus, ſcholiis illuſtratus He Dedicated it to Cardinal Peter Aldobrandin, Nephew to Thomas Aldobrandin, who tranſlated Diogenes Laertius; he ſays that a Diſcourſe he had had at Rome with this Tranſlator 28 Years before, was what determined him to Dedicate his Book to this young Cardinal. The Year does not appear in the Date of the Epiſtle Dedicatory, but doubtleſs we are to underſtand the Year 1594. He adds three other Tracts to this Volume, namely, Platonis libri decem de Republica, & Antonii Montecatini in eos partitiones, & quaſi paraphraſis quædam: Platonis libri duodecim de legibus, vel de legumlatione & Epinomis, & leges quæ in libris illis ſparſim ſunt diffuſæ, ab Antonio Montecatino in epitomen & ordinem quemdam redactæ: quinque veterum rerumpublicarum Hypodamiæ, Laconicæ, Creticæ, Carthaginenſis, Athenienſis contra quas Ariſtoteles in poſteriori parte ſecundi politici diſputavit, antiqua fragmenta. His Commentary upon the third Book of Ariſtotle's Politicks, was Printed at Ferrara in 1597. in Folio, by Victorio Baldino. He had in 1591. Printed (a) his Commentary in octavum librum phyſicæ Ariſtotelis. I don't know the Year of the Impreſſion of his Commentary in primam partem libri tertii Ariſtotelis de anima. Let us ſee whether Naude ſpeaks advantageouſly of this Author. Ad Platonem quod attinet, ſays he (b), tres, quos noverim, commentatores ſibi nimirum nactus eſt, Antonium nempe Montecatinum qui libros de republica Platonis & Ariſtotelis duodecim notis, tabulis, diſtinctionibus explicare conatus, ninguam neque ſibi, neque lectori ſuo ſatisfecit.

(a) In folio.

(b) Naudæus bibliogr. polit. pag. m. 27.

(A) By the Name of the little Feuillant] This would induce us to believe, that he was a very little Man, and yet he was of a middling Stature. But the Name was given him, when he firſt began to be known at Paris. He was then very little, and tho' he was 20 Years old, he had not done growing

Feuillant in the times of the League, Son of Bertrand de Percin (B) Lord of Montgaillard[b] was born in 1563. He became a Feuillant in the Year 1579. and immediately fell to Preaching, tho' he had not ſtudied Divinity. He Preached at Rieux, at Rhodes, and Toulouſe with ſuch Succeſs, that theſe Words of Scripture were applied to him, Bleſſed is the Womb that bare thee. The Court of France was no leſs charm'd with his Sermons, than the Province of Languedoc. He went to Paris, when King Henry III. invited the Order of the Feuillants thither; and had not Preached twice, before this Prince and the Queen-Mother apponited him to Preach the Sermon at the Inſtallment of the Knights of the Holy Ghoſt, which was to be perform'd at the Auguſtines. He ſucceeded admirably in this Sermon, and came off with no leſs Reputation in Preaching at the Louvre, and elſewhere; which made the King deſire that he ſhould Preach all the Lent, in the Royal Pariſh of St. Germaine de Lauxerrois. Theſe Sermons and thoſe he Preach'd at St. Severine, got him the Reputation of the famouſeſt Preacher, that had been known at Paris in the Memory of Man, ſo many Talents he had for the Pulpit, and eſpecially for moving and maſtering the Paſſions, and ſubduing Souls. Some devout Women, and amongſt others Dame Acarie, choſe him (C) for their Director. He exerciſed ſo many Acts of Mortification amongſt the Feuillants, that the Pope commanded him to quit that Order, to prevent the ſhortning his Life. Having eſpouſed the Intereſts of the League (D) with too much heat, he retired into the Netherlands, where he was in great Eſteem. He ſpoke ſome †Funeral Orations by order of the Archduke Albert*, and afterwards that of this Prince in the Year 1622. He was then Abbot of Orval. He died of a Dropſy in that Abbey the Eighth of June 1628. He had always deſired to be buried under a Gutter, and 'twas only to avoid the charge of Affectation, that he at laſt conſented, that his Body ſhould be laid at the Foot of the Stairs which go from the great Dormitory to the Church. His Life has been Publiſhed, and all the great Miracles are recounted in it, which God had wrought (E) for him growing (c). This Name ſtuck by him, even when a maturer Age had put him out of the number of little Men. This Account comes to me from the ſame Hand which ſent the Body of the Article, I am indebted for both to the Curious and Learned Author of the Notes upon Sancy's Confeſſion, and the Catholicon of Spain.

† That of the Archduke Erneſt Brother of the Archduke Albert, and that of the Empreſs their Mother.

* The Archduke died the 13th of July 1621. His Funeral was ſolemnized the 12th of March following; the Abbot d'Orval. Preach'd the Sermon.

(b) Son of Bertrand de Percin Lord of Montgaillard.] And of Antoinette du Vaillet, both of noble and ancient Families in the City of Toulouſe. The Family of Montgaillard is ſtill in Luſtre. The Biſhop of St. Pons ſo well known by his Writings, and ſo much eſteemed by the Proteſtants, for his openly diſapproving the Violence that was done the Reformed, by forcing 'em to Communicate, is of this Family.

(C) Dame Acarie choſe him for their Director.] She was Wife to the Sieur Acarie Maſter of Accompts. He was called "by Irony, the Lacquey of the "League (a) becauſe, tho' lame of a Leg, he was "one of thoſe who went and came, and beſtirr'd "himſelf with the greateſt Zeal for the Intereſts "of the Party; he was the Husband of the Bleſ-"ſed Mary of the Incarnation, by whoſe good "Examples he profited ill. The Author of the New Notes upon the Catholicon, has communicated to me a Reflection he has made. Whilſt this furious Leaguer's Wife, ſays he, was under the Direction of the little Feuillant, ſhe was far from diſapproving the League: It was not therefore on this Account, that her Husband profited ill by her Example. The better to know this Woman, we muſt read what follows: "(f) Mary "Alais, this Man's Wife, was a Devote, (1) known "at preſent by the Name of the Bleſſed Mary of "the Incarnation: In her Widowhood ſhe re-"tired to the Houſe of the Beguines, called the "Chapel of St. Avoye; which is a Houſe for "Widows, where ſhe was made Superiour (2). Her Life is printed at Paris by Thierry.

(D) Having eſpouſed the Intereſts of the League with too much Heat.] The Author of the Notes upon the Confeſſion of Sancy informs me, that that part of the Life of the little Feuillant in the Book, is very ſlightly touched, the Extracts of which he has communicated to me. Wretched Law of Panegyrick, which permits the ſuppreſſing the Infamy of thoſe who are to be praiſed! But in vain are they ſuppreſſed in this Book; they are to be be found elſewhere. Here's a Paſſage from the Catholicon, where a Proceſſion of the League's deſcrib'd. (g) "Amongſt others there were ſix "Capuchins, having each a Helmet on his Head, "with a Plume of Feathers on it, they were "dreſt out in Coats of Maile, with Swords by "their ſides, girt on over their Habits; one car-"rying a Launce, another a Croſs, a third a Jave-"lin, a fourth an Arquebuſe, a fifth a Croſs-bow, "all cover'd with ruſt out of a Catholick Humi-"lity: The reſt had Pikes, which they often "ſhook, for want of better Paſtime, except one "lame Feuillant (3), who being armed Cap-a-pe "made himſelf way with Broad-Sword and a "Battle-Ax, (his Breviary ſlung behind him) and "drew the Eyes of all the Spectators, whilſt "ſtanding on one Foot, he flouriſh'd his Sword "before the Ladies." I have put in the Margin the Note of the Edition of 1677. The Author of the new Notes has obſerved at the 308th Page, that this Action of Brother Bernard de Montgaillard is moſt true, but not in a Proceſſion for the ſucceſs of the League in 1593. as the Author of the Catholicon ſuppoſes, but at the Muſter of the Eccleſiaſticks and Monks at the Siege of Paris in 1590. He refers us to Thuanus, whoſe Words I am going to cite: (h) Omnium oculos in ſe convertebat Bernardus è Foliceano ordine adhuc juvenis nuperâ Henrico III. Rege concionibus notus apud populum, qui altero pede claudus nuſquam certo loco conſiſtens, ſed huc illuc curſitans, modo in fronte, modo in agminis tergo latum enſem ambabus manibus vocabat, & claudicationis vitium gladiatoria mobilitate emendabat. Mr. Maimbourg will tell us, what ſhare this Monk had in the horrible Crimes of the Leaguers. "(i) The "Preachers, the moſt famous whereof were the "Curates Pelletier, Boucher, Guincheſtre, Pigenat, and "Aubry, Father Bernard de Montgaillard, ſirnamed "the little Feuillant, and the famous Cordelier Feu-"ardent, preaching in the Pariſhes of Paris, during "the Feſtival of Chriſtmaſs, changed their Sermons "into Invectives, againſt the ſacred Perſon of "the King, &c. . . . (k) The Dutcheſs was re-"ceived at Paris with all imaginable Honour, "and an incredible Joy of the People, who re-"verenc'd her as the Mother of two Holy Mar-"tyrs; and the little Feuillant preaching (1) One "Day before her, forgat himſelf ſo far, as to ſay, "turning about to her, but addreſſing his Words "to the late Duke of Guiſe, O Holy and Glorious "Martyr of God, bleſſed is the Womb that bare thee, "and the Paps that thou haſt ſucked;" Nor was he content to be a Trumpeter of Sedition in the Pulpit, but ſuborned an Aſſaſſin to Murther Henry IV. See the Remark G.

(E) The great Miracles are recounted in it, which God had wrought for him and by him.] He was heal'd twice by a Miracle, at the interceſſion of the Holy Virgin his Protectreſs. The firſt of theſe Miracles, "(b) was wrought at Paris about the "Year 1589. by Roze Biſhop of Senlis, who at the "Sollicitation of the Provincial of the Jeſuits, "conſented at laſt to touch this Man's Tongue, "whoſe Speech had been taken away by a mortal "Catarrhe; ſo that upon pronouncing the Word "Eſtata, by the Holy Roze, followed with the "Hymn Ave maris ſtella, ſung by Monſieur de "Mayenne and Nemours, with the Monks of the "Convent, when they came to the Words ut vi-

"dentes

(a) Marets Samuel des) remark A.

(c) He uſes the Notes on the Catholicon; that is, the Notes of the Edition of 1677. but theſe Notes ſay only that he was called Lacquey by an Irony, becauſe he was lame. This is a bad Reaſon, what Maimburg ſupplies is more probable; but he ſhould not have forgot the circumſtance of Lameneſs as one part of the Reaſon why he was call'd Lacquey.

(f) Notes on the Catholicon pag. 478. edit. of Holland 1696.

(1) Maimbourg, Hiſt. de la Ligue l. 1. en 1584.

(2) Bonfons Ant. of Paris, fol. 165. Edition of 1665.

(g) Catholicon p. 15.

(3) This was Brother Bernard, called the little Feuillant, who afterwards quitted Flanders, where he lived a long time and enjoy'd an Abbey.

(h) Thuan lib. 98. circa fin. pag. m. 359. ad ann. 1590.

(i) Maimbourg hiſt. de la Ligue, liv. 3. pag. 205.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 305.

(1) Journal de Henri III.

(b) From the Memoir communicated by the Author of the Notes on the Confeſſion of Sancy.

him and by him. No Body will offer to deny but he had gone thro' a great deal of (F) evil Report: But 'tis alleg'd that 'twas all Calumny, and that he (G) never attempted the Life of Henry the Great. * We muſt ſay a Word or two of a (H) Print of him. Nor ought we to forget † that Juſtus Lipſius has much extolled this Monk's Piety and Eloquence.

† See the 79th Letter of the Century of Lipſius. ad Germanos & Gallos.

* Taken from a Memoir which has been communicated to me by the Author of the Notes on the Catholick Confeſſion of Sancy, and on the Catholicon of Spain. He took it from a Book, the Title of which he finds me in theſe Words: Les ſaintes montagnes & collines d'Orval & de Clairevaux, vive repreſentation de la vie exemplaire & religieux trepas du reverend Pere en Dieu Dom Bernard Montgaillard, Abbé de l'Abbaye d'Orval, de l'Ordre de Ciſteaux, au pais de Luxembourg, Predicateur ordinaire de leurs Alteſſes Sereniſſimes, ſur le modele de l'incomparable Sainct Bernard Abbé de Clairevaux, & du grand Legiſlateur Moiſe. Au jour & celebrité de ſes exequies faites ſolennellement trois jours durant, en l'Egliſe d'Orval les 10 11 & 12. jours d'Octobre l'an 1628. Par reverend Pere en Dieu Meſſire I. André Valladier, Docteur en Theologie, Conſeiller, Aumoſnier, & Predicateur ordinaire du Roy Treſ-Chreſtien, Abbé de l'Abbaye Royale de Sainct Arnould de Metz, de l'Ordre de Sainct Benoiſt. Imprimé à Luxembourg chez Hubert Reuland 1629 (a) From the Memoir communicated by the Author of the Notes on the Confeſſion of Sancy. (F) Taken from the ſame Memoir. (G) The only Paſſage that appears under his Name, is the Funeral Oration of Archduke Albert.

" dentes Jeſum, the dying Perſon (for whom the " Prayer Egredere anima Chriſtiana had already " been ſaid,) repeated Jeſum, ſpoke afterwards and " preached the Sunday following, the ſecond Day " after the Miracle. The other Adventure is of " the Year 1619. at which time Father Bernard " being almoſt given over, having had a Stoppage " of Urine for 14 Days, the Virgin of Montaigu, to " whom nine Days Devotion had been made in his " behalf, deliver'd him of 22 Pounds of Water, " and a Stone which he voided at the ſame time." This Monk's Panegyrick is beſides ſtuffed with " (c) Revelations, Contemplations, and Extaſies, " which were ſo frequent with the Deceas'd, that " they deſtroyed his Appetite for Eating and " Drinking, and he'd have died of 'em, if he had " not himſelf prevail'd with God, that he might " be deliver'd from any violenter Degrees in this " kind.... Scarce was he expired, when a Dropſy, " of which he died, gave Occaſion to a Miracle. " As he was extraordinarily ſwollen, his Body " could not at firſt be got into the Leaden Coffin " deſign'd for him. And while they were waiting " till it was made wider, a Monk ſeized that Oppor- " tunity to kiſs once more his poor Abbot: At that " Moment he perceiv'd to ſtream from the Face " of the Dead, ſo Divine and Miraculous an " Odour, that he ſeem'd to him to be perfectly " renovated in Body and Soul. . . . A Religious " of great Merit and Quality, having always " had the profoundeſt Veneration for the Holy " Abbot, ſpake to him in his Sleep: Sure you " are happy; to which he anſwer'd, Yes, I am " happy. His Panegyriſt was beſides ſo perſuaded, " that he had not paſs'd through the Fire of Pur- " gatory, that during the three Maſſes, which he " celebrated to his Memory, during the Three " Days of his Obſequies, it never came once " into his Thoughts to pray to God for his Soul." By theſe Samples, the Reader may eaſily Judge, that our Panegyriſt has not falſified his Character. I wonder the Catholicks dare reproach the Proteſtants, that England has ſwarm'd with Fanaticks ſince the Reformation.

(c) Ibid.

(F) He had gone thro' a great deal of evil Report.] " (d) Tho' he ever affected to be thought very " Chaſte and Diſcreet, yet he was accuſed more " than once, of giving Women of a lewd Life fre- " quent acceſs to his Houſe (a Scandal which his Pa- " negyriſt complains he had himſelf ſhar'd in com- " mon with him). 'Tis ſaid alſo that the little Feuil- " lans, had put one of his Monks to a cruel Death: " As ſoon as it was heard that this Monk, who " as 'twas ſaid, had the overſeeing of one of the " Forges of the Abbey of Orval, was fall'n into " the Forge, and burn'd to Aſhes, it was preſently " given out that he had thrown himſelf into it: " But upon further Inquiry, it was not at all " doubted in France, that his Abbot had cauſed " him to be caſt into it upon ſome Affront re- " ceiv'd from him. Another time he was accuſed " by a Gentleman at two different times of de- " ſigning to Aſſaſſinate him: 'Tis true, this Gen- " tleman is ſaid to have been baffled in his Accu- " ſations, but whether for want of Proof, or thro' " the exceſs of the Archduke's Favour to this Ab- " bot, does not appear

(d) Taken from the foreſaid Memoir.

(G) He never attempted the Life of Henry the Great.] To conſider theſe Words of Peter Victor Cayet, one can hardly acquit him of this horrible Deſign. " The next Day after the Prior of " the Jacobins was taken, the Sieur de Rougemont " was alſo ſeiz'd, who underſtanding that King " Henry IV. was in the Suburbs of Paris, came " thither: But upon ſome advice the King had " received of his Deſign, he was ſecur'd and car- " ry'd away, together with the ſaid Prior, to the " Goal of Tours. Being examined, he Confeſs'd " that being of the Pretended Reformed Reli- " gion, he had retired in the Year 85 to Sedan, from " whence the Neceſſity of his Family obliged him " to return to his Houſe, by becoming a Catholick. " But in July laſt, meeting with the little Feuil- " lant at Paris, after much Diſcourſe about his " Converſion, falling from one Subject to ano- " ther, on the Neceſſities and Indigence of the " ſaid Rougemont, the ſaid Feuillant told him it was " in his Power to do a great deal of Service to " God and the Church: he anſwer'd him, that he " ſhould think himſelf very happy if he knew " how; the ſaid Feuillant told him, it was by kil- " ling the King of Navarre, by executing which, " he could aſſure him, he ſhould never want a " comfortable Livelihood, that having had much " Diſcourſe at ſeveral times with the ſaid Feuil- " lant, upon this Propoſition and the Means of " accompliſhing it; at laſt it was agreed, that " he ſhould go into the King's Army, and pre- " tending once more to turn Heretick, ſhould " take his Opportunity to Piſtol the King of Na- " varre. But he telling him, that he had not " Money to put himſelf in an Equipage to go into " the Army, the ſaid Feuillant gave him 4 or " Crowns, upon the Receipt of which, he re- " tired to his Houſe near Corneil, promiſing to " execute the Conſpiracy: But inſtead of that, " gave notice of it to Monſieur de la Noue, deſiring " him to acquaint the King with it. That when " the ſaid little Feuillant had ſome time after writ- " ten to him, ſolliciting him to execute the De- " ſign: He kept his Letters, and ſent him Ex- " cuſes for his Money, and was now come to the " Suburbs of Paris, only to do the King Service. " All theſe Excuſes had been impertinent, if he " had not prov'd his giving intimation of the whole " to Monſieur de la Noue. After a long Impriſon- " ment, he was forbidden by a Decree to come " within ten Leagues of the King's Perſon; theſe " are horrible Deſigns for Churchmen to be " guilty of." This Paſſage is found in the 228th Leaf of the 1ſt Tome of Peter Victor Cayet's Novenal Chronology under the Year 1589. and was ſhewn me by the Author of the New Notes upon the Catholicon. The little Feuillant's Panegyriſt inſiſts but ſlightly on the Years of the League: He ſpeaks of 'em in a rambling manner, and ſhews every thing on the faireſt ſide; he declares in general, that this Monk (c) " had the Glory of " being the moſt Powerful, the moſt Thundering, " and Zealous, as well as the moſt Sincere and " Diſintereſted Inſtrument in bringing Henry IV. " into the Pale of the Church. 'Tis true he inſi- " nuates, that he was accuſed of being an Ac- " complice in ſome Conſpiracies againſt this " Prince's Life, but adds, that this Prince clear'd " him by his Ambaſſadors to Clement VIII. to " whom they were alſo order'd to ſignifie Henry IV's " Eſteem for Father Bernard." This needed a Citation of ſome printed Book of undoubted Authority.

(H) A Word or two of a Print of him.] " (f) Our " Abbot's Panegyriſt tells us, that he always lay " upon a Plank, and that a Joint-Stool ſerved him " for a Pillow. But to make himſelf amends, " it appears he took his Eaſe in the Day-time; " for his Print repreſents him ſeated in an eaſie " Chair, filled with a noble Cuſhion, which ſeems " to be ſtuffed with the fineſt down. Before his " Eyes is placed a Picture of a N D to whom " the Holy Abbot ſheds theſe Words from his " Pen: O Domina mea, quid hæc facio? educe de ca- " cere animam meam, ad confitendum nomini tuo. At " a Diſtance is ſeen a heap (a) of Volumes a " Fire, and by the ſequel of the Book, we find " they are the Volumes Compoſed by the little " Feuillant, which this Abbot himſelf ſet Fire to " out

MONTMAUR* (Peter De) Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue in the College Royal of Paris, in the Reign of Lewis XIII. was reckoned (A) the greateſt Paraſite of his time, and made himſelf ſo odious to (B) the Wits; that they employ'd againſt him all the Art and Artillery of the moſt ſcurrilous Satyr. He ſtudied a Humanity under the Jeſuits of Bordeaux, and as he had an extraordinary Memory, he gave ſuch Hopes of his Progreſs, that they prevailed with him to take the Jeſuits Habit. He was ſent γ to Rome, where he taught Grammar for three Years with great Reputation. He was afterwards diſmiſs'd, on account of his weakly Conſtitution. He ſet up ξ for a Druggiſt at Avignon, and got a great deal of Money that way; then he came to Paris, and μ not finding his Account at the Bar, he betook himſelf to Poetry φ, hoping to ſhare in the Favours by which Cardinal Richelieu diſtinguiſh'd the good Poets; he cultivated the childiſh Part of that Art, I mean Anagrams, (C) and ſuch like playing with Words. He ſucceeded Δ Goulu in the Royal Profeſſors Chair of the Greek Tongue. Theſe are the true Facts I thought I might borrow from his Life, compos'd by Mr. Menage, and intermixt

* I have found this Name ſpell'd ſeveral different ways in printed Books, Monmor, Mommor, Monmaur, Mommaur, Montmor. I have follow'd that which he himſelf uſed

" out of Humility, upon recovering from a fit of " Sickneſs; ſeeing one of his Monks, whom he " had commanded to do it, expreſs a Reluctance. " Of one Side of him ſtands a Lamb, which the " Book ſays had appear'd to him, when at the " ſame time he heard a Voice, juſt before the rai- " ſing of ſome Calumnies againſt him in Flanders, " cry out thrice in one Night, have a Care. At " his Feet are four Mitres, that of the Biſhoprick " of Angers, which a little after his arrival at " Paris, Henry III. offer'd him by Mr. de Mon- " thelon and Miron, Counſellors in the Court, and " which he refuſed; thoſe of the Biſhoprick of " Pamiez, and of the famous Abbey of Marimond, " which he alſo refus'd, and employ'd his Intereſt " to get them beſtow'd on others; and that of the " Abbey of Nizelle, which the Arch-duke gave him, " that he might always be near him, but which " he kept no longer, than the firſt Vacancy of the " great and opulent Abbey of Orval.

a Menagius in vita Gargilii Mamurræ p. m. 10.

γ Id. ib. pag. 11.

ξ Id. ib.

μ Id. ib. pag. 12.

φ Id ib. pag. 15.

Δ Id ib pag. 17.

(A) Was reckoned the greateſt Paraſite of his time.] I'll only cite four Verſes of Mr. Boileau.

Tandis (b) que Pelletier crotté juſqu' à l'echine,
S'en va chercher ſon pain de cuiſine en cuiſine,
S avant in ce metier, ſi chér aux beaux Eſprits,
Dont Monmaur autrefois fit leçon dans Paris.

(b) Boileau ſatire 1. p. m. 19.

(B) He made himſelf ſo odious to the Wits, that they employld againſt him.] The Commentary of this Text ſhall be taken from the Valeſiana. " (c) " The Profeſſor Montmaur loved to make good " Chear at anothers Expence. He gave himſelf " admittance into the Houſes of Great Men, who " kept the beſt Tables, by the help of ſome " Greek and Latin Sentences, the Coin in which " he always paid for his Ordinary. After he " had Eat and Drank plentifully, to divert " his Entertainers, he fell to ſlandering all the " Learned both living and dead, and not one " of 'em could eſcape his Laſh. Moſt of the " Learned thought themſelves obliged to cele- " brate him as he deſerved, and to do him Juſtice. " Mr. Menage was the firſt who ſounded, as I may " ſay, the Alarm againſt him. He Compoſed his " Life in Latin, and at the end of this Piece in a " ſmall Epigram of five Verſes, he exhorted all " the Learned to take Arms againſt this common " Enemy. I (d) was not willing to be one of the " laſt, that ſhould engage in ſo pleaſant a War; " I Printed two Latin Pieces of this Profeſſor, " one in Proſe, and the other in Verſe, with " Notes: And tho' theſe two Pieces together con- " tain but eight Pages, I divided 'em into two " Tomes. I added afterwards his Life written " by Mr. Menage, and all the Latin and French " Verſes I could collect from ſeveral Hands, to " which I joyned ſome Latin Epigrams, which " I had made upon him. As every one took Mar- " tial Names, I did the like, taking that of Quin- " tius Januarius Fronto. Theſe three Names fitted " me perfectly well, Quintus, becauſe I was the Fifth " Brother, Januarius, becauſe I was born in January, " and Fronto, becauſe I have a large and high Fore- " head. This Book was Printed at Paris in 1643. " in 4*to*. with this Title, Petri Montmauri Græcarum " Literarum Profeſſoris Regii Opera in duos Tomos di- " viſa, iterum edita & notis nunc primùm illuſtrata à " Quinto Januario Frontone. It's very ſcarce."

(c) Valeſiana pag. 36. and the following Edition of Holl.

* You'll find it below at the Remark. I.

(d) That's to ſay Hadrian Valois.

As ſcarce as it is, I have ſeen one Copy of it. Mr. Simon de Valhebert (e) did me the Favour to ſend it me. Poor Montmaur was made ſo ridiculous, that the moſt ſtupid began to hoot at him; for the firſt Tome of his Works, they Publiſh'd a Writing Intit'led Nemeſis in maledicos calumniatoris Busbe- quii Manes, ob convicia ab eo temere, malignè, falſò, & contra jus gentium Epiſtolæ XLII. inſerta adverſus Auguſta Galliæ Parlamenta, which only contains two Pages. In this there is nothing but Proſe; but the Second Volume contains a mixture of Proſe and Verſe. The Proſe conſiſts in a Letter of three Pages, amiciſſimo, doctiſſimo & ſupra ſæculi fidem & morem candido D. D. MAIGNE DUCIS FRONTIACI quondam præceptori. The reſt is of the ſame length, and conſiſts of an Elegy, the Title whereof is almoſt as long as the Piece it ſelf; which is this: Epicedion Generoſiſſ. & Illuſtriſſ. Principis ELEONORI AURELIANENSIS DUCIS FRONSIACI, quem XXXV. vulneribus confoſſum in obſidione Montiſp ſſulani fortiter & ſtrenuè dimicantem acerbæ & immaturæ mors oppreſſit annos natum. XVII. paucis ante diebus quam pax firmaretur. Et matris mæſtiſſimæ Illuſtriſſ. Princip. ANNÆ NOMPARIS CALMONTIÆ proſopopœia. This was Printed in the Year 1622. ten Years before the ſhort Invective againſt Busbequius. I have ſeen alſo by the Favour of Mr. Simon de Valhebert, a Book in 12*mo*. Printed in (f) Germany in 1665. It is Intit'led opulum paraſiticum, quod eruditi conditores, inſtructoreſque Car. Feramuſius, Ægid. Menagius, Jo. Franciſcus Saracenus, Nic. Rigaltius, & Jo. Lud. Balſacius hilarem epulantibus in modum Macrino Paraſitogrammatico, Gargilio Mamurræ Paraſito Pædagogo, Gargilio Macroni paraſitoſophiſtæ, G. Orbilio Muſcæ, L. Biberio Curculioni atque Barboni jucunde apparurunt & comiter. All this is preceded by a very Learned Preface, and very well ſuited to the Subject. This Collection contains the five ſharpeſt Satyrs that have appear'd againſt Montmaur. Thus you ſee, that Men of profound Learning were concern'd in it: You ſee Mr. Rigault in the Title of this Collection: 'Tis he that made the Funus Paraſiticum, ſive L. Liberii Curculionis Paraſiti Mortualia ad ritum priſci funeris. This is one of the five Pieces It has been join'd to Kirchmannus's Treatiſe de Funeribus Romanorum, in the Amſterdam Edition 1672. The Ingenious Sarraſin, who engaged in this War, was one of the braveſt Combatants. We ſee great Politeneſs, and a Literature happily choſen, and finely applied in his Attici ſecundi G. Orbilius Muſca, ſive bellum Paraſiticum, ſatira. This alſo is one of the five Pieces. It has not been omitted in the Collection of Sarraſin's Works.

(e) Abbe Bignon's Library Keeper.

(f) At Nuremberg.

I ſhall mention ſome other Pieces, that were made againſt Montmaur, beſides thoſe I ſhall ſpeak of below. (g) Mr. de Vion d'Alibrai made 73 Epigrams againſt this Paraſite: The Collection is Intit'led Anti-Gomor, and is one of the Anti's, which Mr. Baillet has forgotten. You'll find two of theſe 73 Epigrams in the Second Edition (h) of the Menagiana, with ſome Verſes of Malleville upon the ſame Subject. Hadrian Valois was not the only Perſon, who undertook to Publiſh this Paraſite's Writings with Notes; for I find theſe Words in the Life of Mamurra written by Mr. Menage: (i) Præter eos autem (libros Mamurræ) qui in vulgus ſunt editi, in quos doctiſſimæ juxta atque elegantiſſimæ extant M. DENTONIS Notæ, ſcripſit & alios.

(g) Menagiana pag. 314: de la 2. edit. de Hollande.

(h) Ibid. pag. 314-315.

(i) Menag. in vita Gargilii Mamurræ pag. 31.

(C) Anagrams and ſuch like playing with Words.] Here's a Paſſage out of Mr. Menage's Origine of the French Tongue: " (k) MONTMORISME. So we have call'd of late all Quibbles, conſiſting in a mere gingle of Words, " which mixt with many Ingenious and Satyrical Fictions. I have not been able to discover in it his Native Country, but if we take some Words of another Satyr litterally, we must suppose him born (D) in Quercy; and yet it's a mistake, for Limosin was the Place of his Birth. I have read in the Memoirs of the Abbot de Villeloin, that in 1617 he was Tutour (E) to the Mareschal de Praslin. I shall touch upon one curious Passage, which will at once shew his own venial Romancing, (F) and the falsity of a Story Published against him. It may in my Opinion be said without Favour or Affection, that this Man was not near so contemptible as he is represented. He loved good Eating; he went to Dine with great Men oftner than he ought to have done; he talk'd to 'em I don't doubt, with great

(k) Menage, Origines de la langue Françoiſe pag. 511. edit. 1694.

" which the Latins call annominationes. And this " Name we give 'em from Peter Montmaur, " King's Professor of Greek, who affected this " way of Punning. The Greeks in like manner " term'd it γοργιάζειν, from the Rhetorician Gorgias the Leontine, who affected these (a) An- " nominations. See Philostratus in his Epistle to " Julia Augusta." Add to this a Passage out of the Catalogue of Authors, who presented their Works to the Abbot of Marolles. (b) Peter de " de Montmaur, Professor Royal in the Greek " Tongue; for many Latin Devises and Inscrip- " tions, which generally consist in a base affinity of " Names, and in Words of a double meaning, in " which he had a faculty that pleas'd himself highly.

(a) 'Twas not in this that the Character of Gorgias consisted.

(b) Abbé de Marolles denombrement des Auteurs pag. 425.

(D) We must suppose him born in Quercy ] Feramus Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, was one of Montmaur's most malignant Satyrists. He writ a Latin Poem call'd Macrini parasitogrammatei HIMEPA ad Celsum which Mr de Valois the Younger inserted in his Collection, and Mr Menage afterwards printed in his Book (c) of Miscellanies. 'Tis also one of the five Pieces of the Nuremberg Collection. Here's a fragment of this Poem: We'll give others in the following Notes.

Tu (d), MEMMI, decus Aonidum immortale Sororum,
Qui famam ingentem meritis superantibus implet,
Tu desperatis rectas spes unica rebus.
Et Musas quòd doctus amas, quòd Pallade Græcâ
Insignis, mediis clarum caput inseris astris,
Nacrinum pateris bonus, & miseris egeni
Tabentisque fame, nullo miserante, Sophistæ.
Græca etenim cum verba sonat, licet ore Cadurco,
Illa placent, seris didicit quæ Græculus annis.
Ecce tibi properatus adest, & Κοίραν χαίρε
Ingeminans, mensæ optatum sortitur honorem.

(c) It's in the Collection of Hadrian Valois

(d) Menagii Miscellan. pag. 11. in libri adoptivi.

But the Anonymus Author of the History (e) of the Life and Death of the great Mogor, expresses himself more clearly, and affirms, that Montmaur was born at Cahors, and that his Mother was a noted Prostitute. I mistrusted these Satyrical Writings, and applied my self for better information to Mr Simon de Valhebert, who I thought might have heard Mr. Menage mention several particulars in Conversation, and might be furnish'd with several Pamphlets about Montmaur at the Abbé Bignon's. He had the Civility to inform me amongst other things, (f) that this Professor was a Native of the Parish of Betaille, in the lower Limousin. I have read since a Poem of Balzac, which shews that the Province of Limosin was his Native Country.

(e) It's in the Collection of Hadrian Valois

(g) Balzac, at Page 162. of Barbon

Ne (g) jactet nimis Auratum, cunasque Mursi:
Nobilis hunc quoque tam claris natalibus, asper
Eduxit pago Lemovix; dein magna Tholosa
Civem habuit, proprumque tenet nunc maxima rerum,
Haud cedens Dominæ formosa Lutetia Romæ

We may observe by the way, that those who have Satyrically written his Life, send him first to Pourdeaux, without mentioning his Journey to Toulouse, and next to Paris.

(E) He was made Tutor to the Mareschal de Praslin in 1617 ] The Abbot de Marolles observes, that the three Sons of the Duke of Nevers, had but " one " Tutor called G. G of Orleans, a Man of no Ge- " nius, who yet was preferr'd before many, and a- " mongst others before Peter Montmaur the Grecian, " who succeeded the other as Tutor to the eldest " Son of the Mareschal de Praslin." What Mr. Menage says, that he was firnamed the Grecian by an Antiphrasis, is only a Satyrical Piece of Wit. (h) Sed quod fidem omnem superat, Græce tunc nesciat, GRÆCUS enim ex temeritate per antiphrasim, quod minimè Græcus esset, ab Invidis ac Malevolis vocabatur

(h) Menagius in vita Gargilii Mamurræ. pag 16.

(F) A Passage . . . which will shew his own Romancing and the falsity of a Story ] I have read this Story in a Book, scarce known out of the Country where it was Printed. This encourages me to give it intire There's no need of Translating it, 'twill suffice to observe on their behalf, who understand not Latin, that our Montmaur having told the Chancellor, that such and such things were to be found in such and such Authors, had the confusion of not being able to prove it, when the Books were laid upon the Table. (i) Mommorius Græcarum Literarum Professor Regius, solus sui ordinis eques, & apud Urbis Proceres inexhaustæ dictionis, eruditionis, ac memoriæ, ideoque gratus mensarum assecla, coram Illustrissimo Cancellario, (is repente me accersi jussum, & curru suo humaniter acceptum, in villulam amœnam, paulò ultra Sabaudia, exspatiatum duxerat) multos authores laudavit, Græcos & Latinos, ad locum quemdam D. Pauli, ubi ad hæsi arios & damnatos alludit. Ego subdubitavi de fide laudantis, aliosque qui aderant, in meam sententiam adduxi, nonnisi consultis libris ei credendum. Postridie, ubi diluxit, scripsi ad unum è familiaribus & domesticis Illustrissimi Cancellarii, me animi causâ, domum vesperi reversum adisse authores allegatos, nil eorum quæ dixerat, reperisse. Non credidram fore, ut id referret Dominus, aut parvo sui curâ dignum duceret. Biduo post ad solitum prandium vocat Mommorius, multis jocis super mensam exagitat me, tanquam falsi suspectus, aut planè reus. Illico hom. mirè confidentiæ partes agere, velut in scena, cœpisse, nec fuisse, vix exspectare dum è mensa surgeretur, appellare singulos & universos. Præsertim Illustrissimam Matronam, quæ ad latus viri erat, ut, quæ testis & conscia objectorum fuisset, suo de Accusatore triumpho interesse vellet: & credo, inquit, libros, Hesychium, Manilii Astronomica, Strabonem, alios; qui cùm sat cito reperiri non possent à novo nomenclatore, quamvis in refertissima Bibliotheca, mittitur consistim servus à pedibus meos postulatum, nos etiam currus, qui me adveheret. Adventu meo non parva expectatio omnium, quorsum res evaderet, nam, tametsi hominis histrioniam satis intelligebant, ob ingentem tamen fiduciam, vel à me ipso vera dicere prope credebatur. Itum est in cubiculum superius, prolato omni librorum instrumento, sedit Illustriss. Cancellarius tamquam supremus judex, assidebant duo Libellorum Supplicum Ex-magistri, Consistoriani Comites, aliquot Abbates, & viri honesti complures utrimque: Totam controversiam exposuit asserte & dilucidè Heros ille maximus, laudatâ nonnihil etiam modestiâ meâ, tum jussit Mommorium ex libris, quorum jam copia fieret, suæ authoritates petere. Ibi noster tergiversari, aliena concionari, verborum diverticula quærere, concesso semel quod petierat, me aliud requirere, eas editiones parum commodas causari, nec in re mea de sententia decedere, nec manus dare; cum urgeretur à Cancellario, nihilominus comperendinationem petere. Sequi-horam ferè tenuit ea dilatio, donec pronuntiatum est, falsi manifestum esse, & soluta risu concione, Batavus Ex-legatus ad ignem, ex tempore hos vernaculos recitavit à se factos.

Mommor, c'est fait de ta memoire,
Tu bronches sous le vieux Bourbon,
Tous les Autheurs te font faux-bond,
Si tu n'as recours au Grimoire.

(i) Nicolaus Borbonius epistola 5 ad Claudium Memmium, Avauxium, pag 471. It's to be found at the latter end of Charles Ogier's book intitled Iter Danicum Suecicum, Polonicum printed at Paris 1656 in 8.

Nicholas Bourbon's Letter, from whence I take this Story, is dated the third of November, 1637 The thing happened (k) five or six Days before. Montmaur was not forbad the Chancellor's-house, at the time that his Life was Satyrically written by Mr Menage. (l) in the Year 1636. 'Tis therefore probable, that the Words I am going to cite are a pure Fiction, or founded on a false report (m) Mamurram e Convivio propter nescio quid infandum Magnus Nomophylax turpiter ejicit: quo infortunio Magnus acerbius nomen Parasito accidere nullum potest. Aristippum quidem Dionysius olim conspuit, ac post mensa ut accumberet jussit: sed tamen ut accumberet jussit, nec cenâ, ut Mamurra, privatus est. Aristippus Mr. Ferrand, who made a Poem against Montmaur, (n) before Mr. Menage Published the Life of Gargilius Mamurra, supposes in several Places (k) Dicerat Simoni & Judæ Apostolis Sacer fuit pag. 47.

(l) The Epistle Dedicatory to the Life of Gargilius Mamurra is dated from Angers the 20th of October 1636.

(m) Menagius ubi supra pag. 22.

(n) This appears from the Epistle Dedicatory of the Life of Mamurra.

great aſſurance, but if the happieſt Memory, if his Reading (G), if his ready Wit had not recommended him, would he have had ſuch acceſs to the Chancellor, to the Preſident de Meſmes, and to ſome other Perſons eminent for their Quality, their good Judgment and Erudition? Let's beware how we take the Satyrical Deſcriptions of his Perſon and Actions, for a faithful Picture. The beſt Poets and Wits of his Time gave each other the Word, conſpir'd againſt him, and endeavonr'd to out do one another in turning him into ridicule, ſo that they have invented numberleſs Untruths of him. We muſt therefore look on what they have ſaid (H) as a trial of Wit, a meer Romance, and not an Hiſtorical Narration. Balzac liſted with ſo much Zeal in this Cruſadò, Places, that the Chancellor had forbad this Profeſſor his Houſe. He expreſſes this Admirably.

(o) Sed plurimus hæret
Claras ante domos atque alta Palatia magni
SEGUERII, cum fortunæ, ſortiſque recordan-
(Qua licuit quondam divinæ accumbere menſæ)
In vetitas audax irrumpere cogitat ædes.
Ah! quoties votis precibuſque, & ſupplice fletu
Admitti petiit. Sed inexorabilis ille
Janitor, Helvetiæ duris de rupibus ortus,
Arcet ab ingreſſu, prohibetque, & juſſa minatur
Verbera, & offenſi Domini pro crimine pœnas,
Intentans fuſtem, ſumptamque iratur haſtam,
Ni cedat procul & retro veſtigia vertat.

(G) If the happieſt Memory, if his Reading, if his ready Wit had not recommended him. ] See what Mr. Menage was forc'd to confeſs: (a) Cum felici adeo Mamurræ eſſet memoria, ut legentis modo, cuncta quæ olim in libris didicerat, poſſet referre, memorem illum convivam MEMMIUS non oderat. In all probability, Montmaur created himſelf many Enemies by the excellence of his Memory. It made him top upon all Companies, or rather ſet up as a kind of a petty Tyrant over 'em. He who can command whatever he has read, and aſſumes Magiſterial Airs, rolling a Torrent of Literature from his Lips, with the greateſt eaſe, ſilences and ſtuns other learned Men in Converſation. They look little and meer Dwarfs by him: They can't hinder his engroſſing the whole Diſcourſe, nor dare they attempt it: They ſometimes ſuſpect he is in the wrong, but have not the aſſurance to contradict him, diſtruſting their own Memory, and dreading his, even in things, which they fancy he miſtakes. We have ſeen above, that the learned Nicolas Bourbon, tho' full of Doubts as to ſome Citations of Montmaur's, yet durſt not attack him, till he had at leiſure conſulted his Library. If you add to this, that Montmaur was detractive and impudent, you'll eaſily ſee, that he muſt needs be hated. A haughty Beauty who obſcures and eclipſes all others in the Circle, is an odious Object to the Ladies. The Learned are little better diſpos'd in like Caſes. They who ſaw they were not able to make head againſt this Profeſſor with their Tongue, had recourſe to the Pen, and ſtrove which ſhou'd worry him moſt with their Writing.

I have heard ſay, that an Advocate, the Son of a Cryer in one of the Courts, made a match one Day with ſome of his Friends, to mortifie Montmaur, who was to dine with the Preſident de Meſmes. The Conſpirators met betimes at the Preſidents. The Advocate and his Friends had agreed not to let this Profeſſor have a word of the Diſcourſe, but relieve each other, and the Moment one had done ſpeaking, another was to take up the Diſcourſe Montmaur no ſooner appear'd in the Room, but the Advocate cry'd out, Hare, Hare. You degenerate mightily, ſays Montmaur, your Father never cry'd any thing but Peace, Peace. This was a Thunder-ſtroke, that diſconcerted the whole Plot. The Advocate was ſo daſh'd, that he had not a word to ſay all Dinner time I believe Montmaur by his Talkativeneſs and Confidence frequently diſengag'd himſelf from the like Plots. I don't know whether by Accident or a laid Deſign, but as he dined one Day with the Chancellor Seguier, the Servant ſpilt a Plate of Soop on him as he was taking away. He kept his Countenance to a wonder, and looking (b) at the Chancellor (whom he ſuſpected to have been the Author) he told him: Summum jus, ſumma injuria, by which extempore Alluſion, he turn'd all the Laughter on his own ſide. 'Twas a lucky hit, but the Humour of it can't be expreſs'd in any Engliſh Verſion

A great many blam'd Mr. Menage (c) for Compoſing ſo Satyrical a Piece upon Montmaur; but he excus'd himſelf by this among other Reaſons, that he did not intend to give the deſcription of any particular Paraſite, but the Character it ſelf by touches of invention. This was juſtifying himſelf by a Lye Non paraſitum unum aliquem, non aſſentatorem, ſed omnes paraſitos, omnes aſſentatores ſub Mamurræ fictis conquiſitiſque vitiis deformati perſona, deſcribere mihi mens fuit (d). I don't think Mr. Menage ever wrote any thing wherein Learning, Wit, and fineneſs of Language have been better mix'd than in this. Mr. Simon de Valhebert writes to me, that he has a Piece by him which ſeem'd to be Mr. Menage's: It's exactly the Style of his Requete des Dictionaries: Written in a Hand which he does not know, but with ſome Corrections in Mr. Menage's Hand, and intit'led, The Petition of Petrus Montmaur King's Profeſſor in the Greek Tongue to the Parliament. It contains above three hundred Verſes, wherein his Hiſtory ſeems very well written, and theſe Verſes are of the ſame meaſure with thoſe of his Requête des Dictionaires. I have obſerv'd, that Mr. Menage has not eſpouſed the Story, which is found in ſome Pieces of the Collection of Hadrien Valois, to wit, that Montmaur gave the Porter of the College of Boncour ſuch a ſtroke over the Head with a Billet, that the Fellow dy'd of it. See the following Remark.

(H) Look on what they have ſaid as a Trial of Wit— and not an Hiſtorical Narration ] But what ſhall we ſay to the fact juſt before mention'd? One would think the virulenteſt Satyriſt incapable of publiſhing ſuch a Falſhood, as that a Man is actually in Priſon for Murther. And yet ſome of Montmaur's Adverſaries affirmed, he was impriſon'd for a Crime of this Nature. Did they ground themſelves on any Reality? 'Twere infinitely more hazardous to affirm than deny it; eſpecially when we take notice, that moſt of the Satyriſts were ſilent as to this Murther, which yet was the moſt favourable Handle imaginable for rendering Montmaur, as they propos'd, the Horror and Execration of the Publick However let us ſee his Accuſation:

Quoy (e) que ſe ſoit, le Pgraſite,
Eſt mieux traitté qu'il ne merite:
On ne luy peut faire d'ennuy;
Metamorphoſer ſa perſonne
En Loup, en Pore, en une Tonne,
C'eſt encor trop d'honneur pour luy.
Qu'il ſe ſoit en une Marmite,
En Tournebroche ou Leichefrite,
En Perroquet, en un Corbeau;
C'eſt une grace tres-viſible,
Le bien ſaçonner n'eſt poſſible
Qu'aux pieds delicats d'un Bourreau
Auſſi ce Meſſer Cicofante,
Pour monſtrer que c'eſt ſon attente,
Fit l'autre jour un joly tour,
Caſſant d'une buſche flotiſe
La lourde caboche ſçavantee
Du gros Janitor de Boncour.
Mais ce grand chercheur de lippée
N'eſt pluſtoſt fait cette equippee,
Qu'il ſe vit abſous du peché:
Car il receut telle morn'ſte
Sur ſon gras muzeau qui veniſte,
Que ſon œil en reſta poché.
Et qui pis eſt, Dame Juſtice
Pour chaſtier ſon maleſice,
Grippant ce Cuiſtre entriſte arroy.
Les pieds nuds, un torchon en teſte,
Conduiſit cette malle beſte
Dans la noire maiſon du Roy.
Tous ſes compagnons de cuiſine,
Et ceux qui craignent la famine,
S'oppoſent à ſa liberté,
Crians par tout que ſa preſence
Sans doute affamera la France,
Et qu'elle à cauſe la diette

The following Latine is ſuch another ſport of Wit (f).

Horatii

(a) Miſcellan. Menag. p. 9. libri adoptivi. See alſo p. 16. & 19.

(b) Menag in vita Mamurræ, p. 19.

(c) See the continuation of Menagiana, P. 201. edit Holl.

(d) Nec ſperat in nos mique fuere qui hunc nobis de Mamuria ludum —— velut atrox & flagitioſum ſcrimus objecerunt. Menag. ſub fin. ſ. d. dicat. vitæ Mamurræ.

(e) The Hiſtorical Elegy of the Sieur Gomor in the Collection of Hadrian Valois.

(f) In the ſame Collection at the end of the Orbilius Muſca of Sarraſin.

fada, that he was willing to be at the pains of deſcending (I) from the Altitudes of his Gravity, and giving his Thoughts an Air of comical Humour: Which was much a harder Task upon him, than it would have been for Scarron to write in the ſerious and bombaſt Style. He did more, he ſounded the Alarm; he animated his Friends to take Pen in Hand, and to furniſh their Quota. It's pretty remarkable, that the Members of the Faculty of Arts in the Univerſity of Paris, did not come in to the aſſiſtance of their Brother Peter Montmaur. It's a ſign he could not gain the Love either of the Regents of the College, or of the Wits. What a ſtrange hurly-burly had there been, if theſe Regents had made a Counter-League in his favour, and oblig'd themſelves to bend all their Grammar and Rhetorick in Proſe and Verſe againſt his Perſecutors. There were ſome Men of Merit, who condemn'd (K) the Outrages of the latter. The Paſſages Horatii Gentilis Peruſini in MAMURRAM, ob cæſum ab eo Collegii Harcurtii Janitorem.

CÆDE nocens, hominiſque reus Mamurra perempti
Emiſſus vinclis eſt, Genovefa, tuis.
Et potuit reperire vades, quia plurima crimen
Elevat hoc ratio, nil graviuſque meret.
Janitor occiſus nimirum haud penditur aſſis,
Nec propter dabitur talio vile caput:
Cûmque illi Mamurra petitum ſtipite grandi
Comminuit cerebrum, perdiderat proprium.

(I) Balzac liſted himſelf——was willing——to deſcend from the Altitudes of his Gravity——and animated his Friends to take Pen in Hand.] He was not the firſt who preach'd up this Cruſade: That Honour is due to Mamurra's Hiſtorian; as we have ſeen above. This Hiſtorian concludes his Book with an Epigram, in which, by his Exhortations and Imprecations, he invites the whole World to come in to the War againſt Montmaur.

Quiſquis legerit hæc, poeta fiat:
Et de Cenipeta mihi jocoſos
Scribat Gargilio repente verſus.
Qui non ſcripſerit, inter eruditos
Inſulſiſſimus ambulet patronos.

Here you ſee the Concluſion of the Hiſtory of Mamurra. It may therefore be ſaid with a great deal of Reaſon, that Mr. Menage ſounded the Alarm to raiſe the Mob. Mr. Balzac fail'd not to liſt himſelf, and exhort his Friends to take up Arms. He ſerv'd both in the Infantry and Cavalry. The Barbon (a) a Work in Proſe, which he ſent to Mr. Menage, was accompanied with two Poems, one of which (b) is entit'led, Indignatio in Thoncem Ludimagiſtrum Ex-Jeſuitam laudatorem ineptiſſimum Eminentiſſimi Cardinalis Valetæ; the other is a Letter to Mr. Boiſrobert, in which he intreats him to attack Montmaur, and to approve his inviting Mr. Feramus to the ſame Enterprize.

Nec (c) ſolum tibi Semidei, dicantur, at ipſe
Therſites, ipſe antique qui dictus Homero,
Ore animoque canis; pridem cui ſenſus honeſti eſt,
Extinctuſque in fronte pudor. Fœdiſſima longas
Baſtia det pœnas. Deſcende ad probra Latini
Nominis, ac turpes Mamurra interprete Graios,
Pollutumque notis omni ex Auctore volumen.
Monſtra reſer verborum, alio quæ vexit ab orbe,
Terribiles Gryphos, &c.
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
Hic (d) docto te Marte potens, Ferrame, voramus,
Ante alios: (ea vota meo ſint grata Metello)
Cum tot tela volent, tot in unum tela parentur,
Otia aga, tuaque arma neges communibus armis?
Vana pium-ne putet deformi parcere Monſtro,
Religio? Tu-ne invictos torquebis lamos
In caput alterius? Vivet-ne oliſcamus amato,
Atque hoſtis Muſarum, omnis temerator Honeſti,
Pond. tera lues? Poſtem tamen ille minorem
Scalgeri Tullique clients, & Cæſare læſo
Conjuratus Cacis, nigro devovit Averno:
Nec tales Verona tulit ſine vindice Bartas.

(a) 'Twas Printed at Paris in 8. in 1648.
(b) It's in the Collection of Hadrian Valois.
(c) Balzac, p 160, 161. of the Barbon.
(d) Id. ib. p. 165

Conſidering the Methods theſe Gentlemen took to ſtrengthen their League, and raiſe the whole Poſſe of the Republick of Learning, one would think the Queſtion was, not how to make the Barbarians raiſe the Siege of Parnaſſus, when determin'd to give up the Muſes to the Soldiers diſcretion; but how to re-take it from theſe Vandals, and reſtore to their Liberty the chaſt Daughters of Memory, detained in the dark Dungeons of a ſacrilegious, impure and abominable Nation.

There were thoſe who cenſur'd ſomething in theſe Verſes of Balzac. They tax'd 'em with Inhumanity and Obſcurity. The Obſcurity conſiſted in the words, which deſign the Poet Catullus. We have ſeen above (e) what Balzac anſwer'd on this Head; and you may ſee in his Diſcourſes, his Anſwer as to the Charge of Inhumanity. He there ſhews, how wrong it is to ſay, that he's more inhumane to the new Mamurra, than Catullus was to his Enemies. "I have with'd him, "ſays he (f), only a ſimple Poetical Curſe, or at "moſt a ſimple Death; for in good Latin to devote "to Hell, or Avernus, means no more than Death; "and Poyſon, a Halter, or the Sword may give "it. But the Vindictive Catullus exceeds theſe "common Puniſhments: He condemns his bad "Poet to be burnt alive, as a Sorcerer or Atheiſt.

Infelicibus uſtulanda flammis.

And lower,

Et vos interea venite in ignem.

(e) In the Remark K. of the Article Catullus.

Others blam'd him for meddling with a kind of Compoſition which they did not think him fit for. Conſider pray theſe Words of Mr Gueret: "(g) "Men have, beſides, that diſtemper'd Fancy as to "pretend to ſucceed in every thing; they are not "willing to be reckon'd of a ſtinted Genius: As "there is hardly any Poet but extends his Juriſ"diction from the Epigram up to the Epick Poem, "ſo there's no Orator who from Panegyrick does "not deſcend to the Biller-deaux—Scarron, whom "Nature had fram'd entirely for Burleſque, and "whoſe Mind and Body ſeem'd deſignedly turn'd "for this Character, had yet the boldneſs to attempt "a Tragedy, and would doubtleſs have finiſh'd "it, if Death had not prevented the temerity of "his Enterprize. In fine, Balzac himſelf has fol"low'd this bad Example, and not content with "the Glory of the Sublime Style, would fain "have ſhewn by the Barbon, that he was no leſs "fit for Raillery: But he was much at a loſs in "this Head; the meeſt Judges diſapprov'd his "Taſte, and his Barbon has only wrong'd his other "Works. Let's always follow our Genius, and "never wander out of our own Province, nor "envy others a Glory for which we our ſelves are "not form'd." Mr de Balzac had receiv'd much more agreeable News, about his Barbon, viz. that it met with great ſucceſs, and was admir'd at Paris. See this beginning of one of his Letters to Mr Menage. (h) Bene eſt, abunde eſt, plus ſat eſt etiam mihi. Quæ ſcripſi ego olim, municipalis ille & Orator & Hiſtricus, prolata nuper ſunt Lutetiæ Pariſiorum In ampliſſimo orbis Terrarum theatro Barbo meus Saltavit & placuit. In my Opinion Mr. Gueret's Judgment is not the moſt equitable. The Barbon, I confeſs, is of too ſerious a Style. The Raillery has not all that eaſie and gay Turn which others would have given it; but his Ridicule on Pedantry is expreſs'd happily and to the Life by many ſingular Characters.

(f) Balzac, entret. 17 p. m. 264.

(g) Gueret, Guerre des Auteurs p. m. 137, 138.

(h) Balzac epiſt. ſelect. p. m. 182.

If any one would ſee an Excuſe for the ſharpneſs of Balzac's Reſentment, let him conſult Feramus's Poem, where we may read that Montmaur not only exerciſ'd his ſlandering Faculty againſt the Scaligers, the Salmaſians, and the Grotians, but alſo treated Mr. de Balzac with the laſt Contempt.

Te (i) quoque BALZACI, noſtri ed cavande Decoris,
Urbe vetat, patriâque jubet te poſſeſſe relictâ,
Indecorem Regnaque tuo nova tonare Regna
Quærere & effate Virtutes Promere dignas.

(i) Ferramus apud Menagium in Itinerario p. 14.

Here you ſee that the Affront was Perſonal and that the Publick Cauſe was not the only one he had to defend. I have ſome ſuſpicion, that the Paſſage I have cited in the Article Desbarreaux concerns our Montmaur. That would be ſtill a ſtronger Proof of the violence of Balzac's Reſentment.

(K) There were ſome Men of merit who condemn'd the Outrages of Montmaur's Perſecutors.] Three Authorities will ſuffice on this Head. I ſhall firſt cite Mr Conrart: "Among'ſt the Poems, ſays he, "that (k) Mr Menage Compoſ'd at that time there "were two which made a great noiſe. One was (k) Journal des Savans of the 11th of Auguſt 1692, in the 1st Edit. of Holl.

Paſſages I ſhall mention on this Head, contain things that will explain this Article.
Montmaur

" the Metamorphoſis of the Paraſite-Pedant into " a Parrot. Under this Name he meant a Profeſ- " ſor of the Greek Tongue, againſt whom many " other Poets had bitterly inveigh'd, black'ning " him in Sport and Merriment, with injurious " and inhumane Satyrs. The other was the fa- " mous Requete des Dictionnaires." Thus he ſpeaks in his pretended Elogy of Mr. Menage, where you may pleaſe to obſerve, that he ſays nothing of the Life of Mamurra, which is another-guiſe Work than the Metamorphoſis he has cited. But I wonder leſs at his ſilence, than at Mr. Menage's Friends, who have prefix'd an Abridgment of his Life to the ſuite du Menagiana. They ſay nothing of this Life of Mamurra.

My ſecond Witneſs is call'd by his Nick-name, Vigneul-Marville. We'll copy a part of his Diſcourſe. " (a) The Profeſſor Montmaur was not " ſo deſpicable a Man as moſt believ'd him. He " was an excellent Wit, and had great Talents " The Greek and Latin Tongues were, as it were, " natural to him. He had read all the good Au- " thors of Antiquity; and being favour'd by a " prodigious Memory, joyn'd to a great Vivaci- " ty, he made the juſteſt Applications of what- " ever he had obſerv'd moſt curious. 'Tis true, " there was generally a touch of Satyr in 'em, " which provok'd the Fury of theſe, who were " the Objects of his Wit: By theſe Talents " he eaſily introduc'd himſelf to Perſons of Qua- " lity, who lov'd the Recreations of Parnaſſus. " Avarice undid him; for he had an Eſtate which " he made no uſe of; and he was too great a " ſmell-Feaſt. He uſed to tell his Friends; Gen- " tlemen, do you find Diſhes, and Wine, and I'll " find Salt. And the truth is he dealt it about " plentifully, at the good Tables which he fre- " quented. His Satyrical Humour had no Bounds, " he was a Lucian all over. But he chiefly wor- " ried the bad Poets——(b) Never were ſo " many Satyrs in Proſe and Verſe written againſt " any one Man, as againſt Montmaur. Every Bo- " dy ſpent his whole Stock this way upon him. " Entire Collections are ſtill extant of 'em. The " beſt are thoſe of Mr. Menage. Montmaur's Friends " adviſ'd him to print his Witiciſms upon theſe " troubleſome Writers: But the love of quiet " tied up his Hands, and he was contented to " laugh at their Trifles and deſpiſe 'em. One of " his Friends having told him, that Mr. Menage " had Metamorphos'd him into a Parrot: Very " well, ſaid he, I ſhan't want Wine then to cheer " my Heart, nor a Beak to defend me; and as this " Metamorphoſis was much prais'd, no wonder, " added he, that ſuch a great Prater as Mr. Me- " nage ſhould make a good Parrot. Montmaur took " much more to Heart Mſſrs. Dupuy refuſing him " admittance into their Cloſet, which was the Cen- " ter of the fineſt Gentlemen of Paris. Theſe Gen- " tlemen of a Gravity, like that of Cato, took the " Sciences by the moſt ſerious Handle, and could " not eaſily bear thoſe who were only (as one " may ſay) the Punchinello's of Learning. They " did not underſtand Raillery: 'Twas ſafer com- " mitting a Soleciſm in the face of a whole Uni- " verſity, than deſcending to Humour and Drol- " lery in their Preſence

(a) Vigneul Marville Mélanges d'hiſtoire & de litterature, p. 86. de la 1 edit. de Rouen.

(b) Id. ib. p. 88.

My third Teſtimony is Father Vavaſſeur. He has not nam'd Montmaur, but deſcribes him in ſo particular a manner, that we may be ſure he is the Man he means. He gives him no Encomium; he charges him with ſome very great and odious Faults; but otherwiſe does him juſtice upon his Learning; and condemns not only the Authors who ſo virulently abus'd him, but even the Magiſtrates who permitted ſuch a Liberty. He afterwards makes a Reflexion that's judicious enough; to wit, that by a juſt Judgment of God it often happens, that Princes and their Miniſters who neglect to puniſh the boldneſs of Satyriſts and Libellers, are puniſh'd ſoon or late for their unconcernedneſs, in the ſame kind, and expos'd to the fury of ſlandrous Tongues. I give but a rude ſcetch of this Jeſuits Thoughts, who has very nobly expreſs'd 'em in a Work which is hardly now to be met with in the Bookſellers Shops. I ſhall therefore add his own Words. (c) Vidimus quemdam nuper non expertem literarum, ſed cui nihil placeret, nec pulcrum videretur, niſi quod eſſet ſuum. Hunc propter ipſius odioſiſſimos mores, nemo tum poeta ſcriptor alius nefas duxit conſcindere omnibus probris. Quanquam non recte nec ratione, mea quidem ſententia, & peſſimo exemplo. Non enim, ſi id quis is contumelia; perhoneſti, graves & literati viri aiqui tamen, qui contumeliam inferrent Et erant alioquin iniſto, quæ amare poſſes ſine moribus, memoria, cognitio ſermonis Græci, varietas aliqua doctrinæ & copia; unde diſcerent nonnihil etiam periti, quamvis hominem non probarent. Sed valuit nimirum maledicentia, grata cunctis, etiam iis, qui neque ſibi maledici, neque maledicere ipſi aliis velint. Atque hanc, ut a me ante dictum eſt, maledicentiam vetant, natura, ratio, mos, diſciplina, jura; leges: ubique gentium ac terrarum, atque in omni memoria pœnæ maledicis graves propoſitæ. crimen tamen impunitum perſæpe & olim fuit, & nunc eſt, & erit, vel veterno & ſocordia, vel prævaricatione eorum, a quibus oportuerit pro officio vindicari. Ac multa peccant principes, & in his illud, quod tantam petulantiam, ita ut meretur, quantumque poſſunt, non coerceant, nec populo caveant ſatis, nec privatos conſervent ab injuria. Interim nutu divini numinis & providentia quid ſit? Ne ab iſtis quidem abſtinetur tam lente ferentibus probra in alios: immo linguas hominum magis infeſtas habent, minuſque ſermones effugiunt obtrectatorum: & audire plerumque coguntur ipſi, quæ nolint, quia de aliis patiuntur dici, quæ non debeant.

(c) Franciſcus Vavaſſor de epigrammate, c. 10. p. 98, 99. This Book was Printed at Paris in 1672, in 8.

Thus I have given you the three Authorities I promis'd. If we barely conſider the formal and expreſs Declarations, the Jeſuit Vavaſſeur paſſes the ſevereſt Sentence on our Gentleman's Adverſaries: But if we weigh the Circumſtances Vigneul Marville is the ſevereſt Judge, for declaring that Montmaur was an excellent Wit, who had read all the good Authors of Antiquity, and who had great Talents, a profound Underſtanding of Greek and Latin, a prodigious Memory joyn'd with a great Vivacity, &c. He accuſes the Satyrs that were made on him, of extream Injuſtice. All his Conceſſions in favour of Montmaur, are as ſo many ſtrokes with a Rod of Iron on the Heads of theſe Satyriſts, ſince they all conſpire to make this Profeſſor thought the moſt ignorant Blockhead in Nature: And Note, that the Praiſes he has given him, ought to have the more weight, becauſe he has not diſſembled his Faults. What he obſerves of his Inſenſibility is ſurprizing, and I know not what could have been imagin'd wiſer, than to laugh, as he did, at his Cenſurers Writings. But 'tis prodigious, that a Man of ſo much Reading, Wit and Memory ſhould write nothing on that occaſion, or hardly ever publiſh a Book in all his Life. We muſt believe, that the Fire of his Wit requir'd the quickning influence of living Objects, and that his vaſt Memory ſunk in a great meaſure, when the Buſineſs was to Compoſe in ſilence, and in the ſhade of a Cloſet. We muſt ſuppoſe and ſay, that Montmaur found by Experience, as ſeveral others do, that it's infinitely eaſier to diſcourſe off-Hand, than to write a good Book. The way to make this Profeſſor's Knowledge uſeful to the Publick, had been to have given him a judicious Diſciple, who ſhould conſtantly have attended him, and Collected whatever he had heard him ſay. In that caſe we ſhould have had a Montmauriana, which perhaps would have been a good Book. I believe there were thoſe who diſapprov'd that Contempt which our Montmaur expreſs'd for the Satyrs made upon him, and who could have wiſh'd he had demanded Juſtice of the Courts; for his Adverſaries not content to accuſe him of Ignorance, and of being a vain Trifler in Anagrams, and fooliſh Gingles, Charges of which the publick Juſtice takes no Cognizance, nihil hæc ad edictum prætoris; reflected on him as a Baſtard and Murderer, as we have ſeen (d) above; and here's a Paſſage charging him with Forgery and Sodomy

Jadis (e) dans un fameux procez,
Dont il eut un honteux ſuccez,
Il appella d'une Sentence,
Qui n'eſpargnoit que la potence.
Quand de tout point il eût eſté
Convaincu d'une fauſſeté:
Car il imitoit de nature
Toute ſorte de ſignature,
Et gagna tout en jugement
Quand il ne tint qu'à ſon ſerment.
Il eut d'autres vices encore
Que je tairay, car je l'honore.

(d) In the Remarks D. and H.

(e) Hiſtoire de la vie & de la mort du grand Mogol; p. 25, 26. au recueil d'Hadrien Valois.

Montmaur lodg'd in the College (L) of Boncour, and this Circumſtance furniſh'd matter of Raillery. He died in (M) 1648. He publiſh'd ſomething againſt Barbequins *. It's ſaid † he had five Thouſand Livres per Ann. and was very covetous.

MONTPENSIER (Dutchess of) Favourite to Catherine de Medicis. See LONGWIC.

MOPSUS. There are principally but two Perſons of this Name in the Books of the Ancients. One was ‡ Son to Ampycus and Chloris; the other was the Son of Tireſias, according to ſome, or of the Daughter of Manto Tireſias, according to others. We ſhall ſay ſomething of each. MOPSUS, the Son of Ampycus was inſtructed by Apollo B in Augury, and became very conſiderable by means of this Art during the Expedition of the Argonauts. He was ſirnam'd Titareſian γ from the Place of his Birth, a Village in the Country of the Lapithæ in Theſſaly. However his own Country was not the Scene where he accquir'd moſt Honour, but that of Africa. He landed there, having loſt his Way in his return from Colchos, and died δ by the bite of a Serpent. He was buried near ζ Teuchira (A), one of the Towns of Pentapolis, and honour'd (B) with a Temple in the Province of Cyrene, which became famous for an Oracle: The firſt Inſtitution of which ϑ is attributed to Battus the Cyrenean. Ammianus Marcellinus tells us η, that the heroical Manes of Mopſus who was buried in Africa, aſſwaged ſeveral kinds of Pain, and commonly healed 'em. This Hiſtorian is guilty of an Error in this Point (C) which is § Hygin. ibid. Apollon. Argonaut. l. 1. v. 65. Valer. Flaccus Argon. l. 1. v. 383. & paſſim alibi. Statius Theb. l. 3. v. 521.

* Barbequinum mortuum nec reſponſum invaſit. Menag. in vita Manurræ, p. 30. See the Remark B.

† Suite du Menagiana, p. 200. edit de Holl

‡ Hygin. cap. 14. Scholiaſt. Apollon. in l. 1. v. 65.

γ Apollon. ibid. Heſiod in Scuto

δ Apollon. l. 1. v. 80. & l. 4. v. 152.

ζ Lycophr. Caſſand. v. 877. Clem. Alexandrin. Stromat. l. 1. & Clem. Alex. ib. η Lib. 14. c. 8.

L'on dit que ſon valet un jour
L'accuſa de la ſale amour
Imputant à ce Paraſite
Le crime d'eſtre Sodomite.

This exceeds Raillery: A Man's anſwerable for ſuch an Accuſation in a Court of Juſtice. The actio injuriarum (f) lies againſt him in this Caſe; and the accus'd may plead the Law of the Code, ſi quis famoſum, according to which the Defamer who does not produce Authentick Proofs, is puniſh'd as a Slanderer.

(f) Compare with this theſe words of Horace, epiſt. 1. lib. 2. Quin etiam lex Pœnaque lata, malo quæ nollet carmine quemquam deſcribi.

(L.) Lodg'd in the College of Boncour, and this furniſh'd matter of Raillery.] Let's prove this fact from Mr. Menage's Words.

Qua (a) collis Genoveſa tuus ſupereminet Urbem,
Stat Becodina domus, docti celeberrima quondam
Atria Gallandi, ſummo Rectore juventæ.
. . . . . .
Illic exiguo conduxerat ære penates
Gargilius.

And by theſe fine Verſes of Feramus,

Qua (b) poſuit ſtabiles Pariſina Academia ſedes
In monte excelſo, mons eminet altior. illic
Exiguâ parvos habitat mercede penates.
Non illuc ſtudia, & docti vicinia Phœbi
Pellexere hominem, ſed ut hinc toti incubet Urbi,
Majoreſque alto ſpeculetur vertice fumos,
In tua jejunus ruiturus præſidia MEMMI,
Vel famoſa tuæ, BONELLI, fercula menſæ,
Seu veſtras, HANE QUINE, dapes tantâ arte paratas,
Et quicumque alij menſâ præſtatis opimâ
Luculli illuſtres, Mæcenateſque beati

You ſee they alledge he lodg'd in this College the better to diſcover the Smoke of the Kitchens of Paris, it being the higheſt part of the Town. But if it was convenient on this ſcore, it was very inconvenient in another reſpect, by being at too great a diſtance from the Houſes, where the Paraſite uſed to dine. This put him to the expence of keeping a Horſe. Mr. Menage talks very pleaſantly upon it. (c) Verum cum ſummo in cacumine montis Genoveſani tum temporis habitaret, ut hinc ſcilicet culinarum fumos, ex quibus auguria capiebat, commodius proſpicere poſſet; atque adeo horum omnium quos aſſidue colebat, ab ejus ſuggerio domus longe diſtaret, ne ad illorum cænas ac prandia tardius accederet, Equum ſibi comparavit: qui, quoniam Becodiana in ſchola, (1) quam Parnaſum Pariſienſeum Ronſardus vocare ſolebat, ſtabulabatur, Pegaſus eſt appellatus; de quo Carmen eſt SPESSEI. The Thought in the beginning of this Paſſage is pleaſant enough; to wit, that Montmaur, in conſulting the Auguries, did not wait for the appearance of Vultures, or any other kind of Birds, but was attentive to the Smoak of the Kitchens only. He ſhould conſequently have ſaid, that Montmaur having an Opinion of the Augural Art, apply'd himſelf chiefly to Capnomancy. Theſe Gentlemen's Raillery is become a common Place to all who would Characteriſe a Paraſite. A Paraſite, ſay they, going out of his Lodgings, without knowing where he ſhall dine, guides his Steps through the Streets of Paris by the Smoak of the Kitchens, and this Smoak is his Compaſs and Polar Star.

(c) Menagius in vita Manurræ, p. m. 20.

(1) Binetus in Vita Rond.

(M) He died in 1648.] This I look on as unqueſtionable, tho' I have not found it in any Author, for Mr. Simon de Valhebert, who has taken the pains to inform me, was told ſo by the Abbot Gallois, who conſulting the Regiſters of the College Royal, found that Montmaur in 1623. had the reverſion of the Place of Profeſſor of the Greek Tongue after Jerome Goulu, that he died in 1648, and was ſucceeded by James Pigis.

(A) Teuchira, one of the Towns of Pentapolis.] Here I have follow'd the Opinion of the Learned Mr. de Valois (d), who has prov'd from Ptolemy, that Mopſus was buried near Teuchira. However, I ſhall not diſſemble, that in examining the Paſſage of this obſcure Poet, I could not find that our Argonaut's Tomb was leſs Characteriz'd in him, with regard to Auſigda upon the River Cinyps, than with regard to Teuchira. Now this River is not far from (e) Pentapolis. Beſides I own I can't conceive, why Mr. de Valois pretends (f), that if Mopſus had been buried in Pentapolis, Ammianus Marcellinus ought not to have mention'd the Shoar of Africa, and the Punick Glebe; he may eaſily be juſtified by their Authority, who ſay that Mopſus died in Africa, amongſt which are Tertullian and Apuleius, to whom we may join Apollonius and ſeveral others (g) who make him die in Libya. This reaſoning ſuppoſes, that Pentapolis was not a part of Africa; but I can't imagine, conſidering how many great Men have maintain'd the contrary, why Ammianus Marcellinus ſhould not be permitted to do the ſame: He ſometimes runs into Poetical Phraſes, wherein the general Name is preferr'd before the particular. After all, in Lycophron's Caſſander, we ſee that the Coaſt of Teuchira is call'd the Manſions inhabited by Afer. Is not this meant to ſignifie in general the Coaſts of Africa?

(d) Henric. Valeſius in Marcell. p. 41.

(e) See Mela. l. 1. c. 7.

(f) Quod ultra eſt male lit. Africa littus, & ceſpitem Punicum poſuit Marcellinus. Vid. ubi ſupra.

(B) Honour'd with a Temple.] If we had rather have the Teſtimony of a Heathen, than that of Clemens Alexandrinus, we need only read theſe words of Apuleius: Tantum ab Diis appellant qui ex eodem numero juſte ac prudenter vitæ curriculo gubernato, pro numine poſtea ab hominibus prediti ſunt. Cæterimonis vulgo adverſantur, ut a Battia Amphamanus, IN AFRICA MOPSUS, in Ægypto Oſiris, alius alibi gentium (1) Intuatur the Scholiaſt of the Poet Statius ſays, in ſpeaking of the ſame Mopſus: In tantum magna fuit in augurali peritia ut poſt mortem templa ei dicata ſint, è quorum adytis ſæpe homines reſponſa acciperent. We have already ſeen Marcellinus's (i) Teſtimony.

(g) See the Remark B.

(h) Apul. de Deo Socratis.

(C) Which is common to him.] It's his confounding Mopſus the Argonaut with the Son or Grandſon of Tireſias. Barthius (k) obſerves, that even the Ancient Writers put one for the other, and he expreſly accuſes Servius on this Head. But he does him wrong ſince Servius (l) ſpeaks only of Mopſus in general. The Charge would be much juſter againſt Ammianus Marcellinus, from whom Barthius cites that Paſſage as a good proof of theſe two things. 1. That Mopſus's Tomb was in Africa. 2. That it was not poſſible for Strabo to have ſeen it in Cilicia. He leaves us to judge which of theſe two ancient Authors is miſtaken, and does not perceive Ammianus Marcellinus's Error in the Paſſage he cites. Mr. Valois is the Perſon who obſerves it. The thing's plain. This Hiſtorian ſays on the

(i) In the Body of this Article.

(k) In Statium tom. 2. p. 818.

(l) In Eclog. 6. v. 72.

is common to him with ſome other Authors. As to the other Mopsus, I find that the ſame Strabo, who makes him the Son of Tireſias at the end of the 9th Book, makes him the Son of Apollo and Manto in his 13th and 14th Books. And that Pauſanias * makes him the Son of Manto and Rhacius, the Head of a Colony which paſs'd from the Iſle of Creet into Aſia. Nothing of all this can be eaſily reconciled with his being King of Argos, or with the National Epithete of Argian (D) which has been given him. All who mention him, make him a great Maſter in the Art of Divination. It's ſaid, that he broke the Heart of Calchas; the famous Calchas who was Super-intendant of the Augurs, during the long War of Troy, that he fairly broke his Heart in a Diſpute between 'em (E) which was the beſt Diviner. Calchas went on Foot from Troy to Claros, in Company of Amphilochus, and to try Mopſus's Ability; he asked him, ſhewing a big-bellied Sow, how many Young ſhe might carry. He anſwer'd three, one of which was a Sow-Pig. The thing was found true. Mopſus ask'd Calchas in his turn, how many Figs there were on ſuch a Fig-Tree. Calchas could not tell, and died of Grief †. Nobody ever ſo little vers'd in Books, will wonder, that this Story ſhould be differently related; for to judge of things by Experience, There's a Fatality in this which humane Nature can't avoid. There are Authors then who ſay ‡, that it was Calchas asked the number of Figs §, and that Mopſus anſwer'd ten Thouſand, and that they might all be very near contain'd in a certain Meaſure which he nam'd. This Anſwer found exactly true upon trial, made Calchas die of Vexation. Others will have it, that Calchas bid him but tell how many young Ones the Sow went with, and that the Truth of his Anſwer to this Queſtion was that which broke his Heart, ſo that there was no need of Mopſus's propoſing a Queſtion in his turn, which Calchas could not reſolve. There are ſome who maintain ‖, that all this happened not at Claros, but in Cilicia.

Mopſus

* Lib. 7. p.m. 207.
† Strabo l. 13. p.m. 442. Lycophr. v. 425.
‡ Strabo idid.
§ Servius in Eclog. 6. Virgil. v. 72. Grounding himſelf on the Poet Euphorion, ſays they were Apples.
‖ Strabo, lib. 14. p. 464.

hand, that the City of Mopſus was the place of the Habitation of Mopſus the Diviner, and on the other, that this Mopſus having been driven on the Coaſt of Africa, in his return from the Conqueſt of the Golden Fleece, died there, and that his Tomb wrought Miracles. He who gave his Name to Mopſueſtia, and he that founded ſeveral Towns in Cilicia, are doubtleſs one and the ſame Mopſus, but the latter was contemporary with Calchas and Amphilochus, and flouriſh'd after the Trojan War; it was not he therefore who went the Voyage with the Argonauts. Clemens Alexandrinus has not taken notice of this, ſince, as Mr. de Valois obſerves, he thought the Mopſus, who flouriſh'd at the time of the Trojan War, had been a Party in this Expedition. I don't object to him what (a) others might do, that length of Days, which this Suppoſition would infer; but he ought to have remember'd, that this Perſon loſt his Life in his return from Colchos. Pamelius (b) takes him for the Argonaut who gave out Oracles in Cilicia. We ſhall preſently ſee a falſe ſtep or two of Meurſius. They diſtinguiſh in Calepin three Mopſus's. 1. The Augur, who founded the Town of Phaſelus upon the Confines of Pamphylia. 2. The Lapithyte, the Son of Ampycus. 3. He that diſputed againſt Calchas.

(D) The National Epithete of Argian.] Mr. de Valois, to diſtinguiſh our two Mopſus's (c), names the firſt (d) Lapitham or Theſſalum, and the latter Argivum. But when I conſider that Tireſias was a Theban, and think on the fierce and relentleſs War which the Argians made twice upon the Thebans during the Life of Tireſias, we can't ſee how he could have a Son, who for his diſtinguiſhing Title, ſhould be call'd an Argian. If Manto was a Prieſteſs of Delphos, and Apollo begat Mopſus upon her, why ſhould this Mopſus be call'd an Argian? Or why if he ſprung from the Marriage which ſhe contracted with Rhacius in Aſia ſhould he bear this Title? There would be leſs difficulty in this, were he her Son by Alcmeon (e) However, Cicero affirms, he was King of Argos. (f) Amphilochus & Mopſus Argivorum Reges fuerunt, ſed iidem Augures, atque urbes in ora maritima Ciliciæ Græcas condidere. If ever Meziriac's Commentary on Apollodorus comes out, which I rather wiſh than expect, we ſhall learn many things about the two Mopſus's (g).

(E) Which was the beſt Diviner.] Moreri's Continuators have been guilty of ſeveral Faults in relating this Diſpute. I. They have repreſented Mopſus as the Agreſſor, which they ought not to have done, ſince he does not appear ſo in any of the different Relations, which Strabo has given. II. They ought not to have cited Heſiod, without adding, that what he has ſaid upon this Head, is to be met with only in Strabo. This Addition is neceſſary as often as we cite an Author whoſe Work is loſt, and is known only from other's Citations. III. They ought not to have cited Heſiod on any ſcore, ſince they don't relate the matter as he does. They ſay, that Mopſus put the Queſtion to Calchas how many Pigs the Sow had? Whereas Heſiod ſays it was Calchas ask'd Mopſus that Queſtion. They were doubtleſs deceiv'd by Charles Stephens (h), after Mr. Lloyd and Hofman. IV. They ought not to have cited the firſt Book of the Iliad which has nothing to their purpoſe I am leſs ſurpriz'd at all this, than at the ſtrange miſtake of Meurſius. This Learned Man (i) imagines, that Mopſus was worſted in this Diſpute, it we be decided by Seneca the Tragedian. Seneca Mopſum inferiorem factum vult in Medea:

Omnibus verax ſibi falſus uni
Concidit Mopſus, caruitque Thebis
Ille qui verè cecinit futura.

Firſt, he does not ſpeak of Mopſus Calchas's Antagoniſt in this place, but of Mopſus the Argonaut. Secondly, Seneca ſays no more than this, that Mopſus with all his prophetical Skill, died in the Expedition. I'll ſet down the whole Paſſage, ſince it is not free from Falſhood on another ſcore.

Ite nunc ſortes, perarate Pontum
Sorte timenda.
Idmonem, quamvis bene fata noſſit,
Cendidit ſerpens Libycis arenis.
Omnibus verax, ſibi falſus uni
Concidit Mopſus, caruitque Thebis
Ille qui vere cecinit futura.

Here are three Examples of the ſad Fate of the famouſeſt Sooth-ſayers The laſt is that of Tireſias, who died a Fugitive, and baniſh'd from Thebes. The firſt is that of Idmon, who dy'd in Africa by the bite of a Serpent; the other is that of Mopſus of whom Seneca is content to ſay in an indefinite manner, that he died. But here it's plain he takes one for the other: He attributes to Idmon what does not belong to him; for Mopſus was he who died in Africa of the bite of a Serpent. Beſides, Apollonius whom I have cited, obſerves how Hyginus (k) ſpeaks of him. Mopſus Ampyc. filius ab ſerpentis morſu in Africa obiit. I am not ignorant what ſtrains are given to this Paſſage, and how many different ways of pointing it the Criticks have invented. Rhodiginus (l) doubtleſs applauded himſelf on having put a Point after condidit, and taking ſerpens for a Participle. But I don't believe any judicious Perſon does at preſent think this more reaſonable than ſaying, that the Latin Poet was under a miſtake. Don't we ſee the beſt Hiſtorians confound Facts which are near their own Time, and ſuch as are no leſs remarkable than the Death of the Sooth-ſayer of an Army could be in the Imagination of a Tragick Poet? Did Gruterus (m) who refers the caruit Thebis to Mopſus, think, that Mopſus was a Lapithyte? He changes I know not how many Preter Tenſes into Futures: He'll have Seneca to have tranſgreſs'd againſt Hiſtory; but not that the temptation of crouding many great Examples of Morality into a Chorus, has made him have recourſe

(a) Loyd who alledges againſt thoſe who confound the two Mopſus's, quod Argonautica expeditio generatione integra bellum Trojanum anteceſſit; & Barth. ubi ſupra, who aſſerts that ille Argonautarum vates attingere minime potuit tempora à reditu Trojæ. Calviſius maintains the contrary, ad ann. mundi 2727.
(b) In Tertull. de anima, c. 46.
(c) In Ammian. Marcell. l. 14. p. 40. & 41.
(d) This is the Epithet Strabo gives him.
(e) See Apollodorus Biblioth. l. 3 p.m. 205.
(f) Cicero de divinat, l. 1.
(g) See his Commentary on Ovid's Epiſtles, p. 911.
(h) Dolore contabuit quod propoſita ſibi à Mopſo caprifico (ut refert Heſiodus) aut (ut Pherecides mavult) ſue gravida, conjicere non potuiſſet, quot in illa ficus eſſent, quotve hæc utero ſuculas gereret: quos tamen Mopſus ſine ullo errore divinavit. Car. Steph. in voce Calchas, p. m. 546.
(i) Comment. in Lycophron, p. 205.
(k) Fabula 14. p.m. 46, 47.
(l) Antiq. lect. l. 29. c. 15.
(m) Apud Senecam Scriverii, p. 237.

Mopſus loſt his Life (F) in another kind of Conteſt; for 'tis ſaid *, that he and Amphilochus parted together from Troy, and ſet about building the Town of Mallus in Cilicia. That Amphilochus left him there to go to Argos: That miſſing his Aim he came back again to Mopſus, who would have no more to do with him: That they fought a Duel in which both of 'em fell, and that their Tombs which were ſhewn at Margaſa near the River Pyramus, were ſo ſituated, that one of them could not be ſeen from the other. 'Tis certain that Cilicia was not the leaſt Theatre of Mopſus's Actions: He built ſeveral Towns in it †; that which was call'd Mopſueſtia ‡, had a particular relation to his Perſon: Cilicia was principally the place where he was Worſhipped ζ as a God, and where he gave out Oracles. Plutarch γ tells a Story of 'em, which confounded the incredibility of the Epicureans.

Note, That Mopſus's applying himſelf to Divination did not hinder his getting Children. He δ had three Daughters, Rhode, Meliadé and Pamphylia. Their Names were given to ſome Countries.

MORGUES (MATTHEW DE) Sieur de St. Germain, Preacher in ordinary to Lewis XIII. and firſt Almoner to Mary de Medicis, this King's Mother, got himſelf mightily talk'd of by the numbers of Libels he publiſh'd againſt Cardinal Richelieu. He was born ζ in Vellai in Languedoc, and was of a Family which had been praiſed ϑ by Lewis Pulci Preceptor to Leo X. He took on with the Jeſuits, and taught ſome ν Claſſes at Avignon in the College of the Society. He quitted this Profeſſion ſome time after, and ſcaling dextrouſly the Walls of ϕ the College, he Capitulated at liberty, and (A) made up the Buſineſs the beſt he could. He imploy'd in his juſtification (B) a kind of Dilemma, which was retorted upon him, He Preach'd (C) in Paris with great ſucceſs λ, and in the Year 1613, was appointed Preacher to Queen Margaret. From thence he was prefer'd to be Preacher to the King in 1615, in Father Portugais's place, and in 1620, was turn'd over to the Queen-Mother. He had had the Cure of Notre-Dame des

* Id. ib. & Lycop. v. 439.

† Cicero, lib. 1. de Divinat. Pompon. Mela l. 1. c. 14. & ibi Iſaac Voſſius.

‡ Μόψια. quaſi Lares Mopſi. See Strabo, l. 14 p. 466. Mopſueſtia vatis illius domicilium Mopſi, ſays Ammianus Marcellinus, l. 14 S. Jerome calls it, Mopſi viculum See Berkelius in Stephan p 567. & Photius Biblioth. n 176 p 392 C Tertull. de anima, c. 46. Origenes, l. 3. contra Celſum. Euſeb de laudibus Conſtant.

γ De Oracul. defectu

δ Photius Bibliot n. 176 p 392 ex Theopompo.

ζ Matthieu de Morgues, lettre de change proteſtée, p m 946.

ϑ Id. ib p. 947.

ν Premiere lettre de change de Sabin à Nicocleon, à la p 711 des pieces pour ſervir à l'hiſtoire edit 1643 in 4°.

ϕ Ibid. p 713.

λ Matthieu de Morgues, reparties ſur la reponſe à la remonſtrance au Roi, p 7. (d) Premiere lettre de change de Sabin à Nicocleon, p. 716. (e) Ibid p. 730. (f) Premiere lettre de change de Sabin à Nicocleon, p 711. (g) Becauſe he had claim'd the Advocatary for taking the Name of Cleonville, half Greek half Latin. (h) Morgues reparties a la reponſe, p m 11 courſe to the Aſylum of a Prolepſis, or confound his Chronology. I can beſides all this maintain, that Seneca's Words are no Proof of what Mr. de Valois would have 'em, I mean Mopſus's Death in Africa. The Paſſages he produces from Tertullian and Apuleius, only prove that Mopſus was honour'd as a God in that Country; but he ought to have alledged ſomething more expreſs from his Authors, before he offer'd 'em as Witneſſes of a Man's Deceaſe in ſuch or ſuch a Place.

(n) Strabo, l. 14. p 464.

(F) In another kind of Conteſt ] This by no means reſpecting Calchas, I ſhall venture ſay, that Strabo's Tranſlator has not render'd theſe words right, ἐ μόνον δὲ τὴν περὶ τῆς μαντικῆς ἔριν παρῃτεύκασιν, ἀλλὰ καὶ τῆς ἀρχῆς, (n) neque de divinatione duntaxat eos contendiſſe fabulantur, ſed etiam de imperio This eos neceſſarily refers to Calchas and Mopſus; we muſt therefore expect to ſee 'em diſpute for Command: Yet nothing of this appears by the Sequel; 'tis Mopſus and Amphilochus that fall out. Strabo has expreſs'd himſelf in ſuch a manner as not to have any ſhare in this ſmall Cenſure.

(A) And made up the Buſineſs the beſt he could ] What he advances on this Subject, is incompatible with what was objected to him. This Objection imports, "(a) That he became a Prieſt in a ſtate of "Apoſtacy, before he had by a Diſpenſation diſ- "engaged himſelf from the Bonds which ſtill tied "him by one end, to an Order he had deſerted. "Many, continue they, might have heard Cardinal "Spada ſay as much, before whom you ſtood "crying a long time to ſee if you could move him "to ſome Compaſſion." Now hear what he anſwered to an Author, who call'd him an Apoſtate Jeſuite: "(b) He whom you accuſe, declares "he was very young when he entred into the So- "ciety, and that he neither quitted it out of Le- "vity nor Libertiniſme. He might have Mar- "ried in his retreat if he pleaſed, or have choſen "any other Profeſſion that that he took, being in "no ſacred Orders, nor of an Age to take 'em." Does not this import that he quitted the Jeſuits before he had made any Vow? How then could he be faſt ty'd to their Order by one end of the Tedder? Note, that he anſwers nothing, to what was ſaid of his teaching ſome Claſſes in the Jeſuits College at Avignon. We muſt therefore believe the Accuſation true. Whence it follows, that he diſguiſes things, in ſaying he was free to Marry when he left the Society.

(a) Premiere lettre de change de Sabin à Nicocleon, à la page 716. du recueil des pieces pour ſervir à l'hiſtoire edit. 1643. in 4°.

(b) Morgues reparties ſur la reponſe à la remonſtrance, p. 7.

(B) A kind of Dilemma which was retorted upon him. ] "(c) He tells us, that if the Jeſuits be Men of "Probity, he ought to be praiſed for having kept "good Company; if not, he deſerves no Reproach "for having left 'em. But it is true, they are Men "of Probity, and 'twere a Sin not to have continu'd "with 'em, ſuppoſing either that a Man left 'em to "turn Libertine, or that he could not leave 'em with "a good Conſcience, or that they themſelves could "not diſpence with one who had not made Pro- "feſſion among 'em." This is his Anſwer: Let's ſee what was replied to him: "(d) Your Argu- "ment reſembles thoſe Daggers which were an- "ciently made uſe of in Tragedies: It enters in- "to it ſelf without giving the leaſt Wound. I "turn it againſt you, and ſay; if the Jeſuits "are Wicked, you deſerve blame for having "kept ill Company; if good, you can't de- "ny, but you are to blame in having left 'em "There's nothing to be ſaid againſt this. But 'tis true, they are Men of Probity and Virtue; ſay you. "This has always been my Opinion; but "it has not been always thine. You did not "ſpeak in this manner, when having weigh'd the "Jeſuits and Huguenots in a Ballance, you equally "condemn'd 'em to depart the Kingdom Your "Diſcourſe is ſtill to be ſeen in Print" Let's add to this another Paſſage, which more diſtinctly informs us, that he hated the Society he had left. "Tell us (e) of what Order was that young "Monk of your Claſs, whom you got to hold "your Writings a top of the Wall while you "leap'd down; for 'tis not certain, whether "he was a Carmelite, or Jacobin——Tell us, "what was the true reaſon of that Sentence, by "which in one of your Books, you have ſince con- "demn'd thoſe whom you deſerted, to be ba- "niſh'd France. Who ſays, that it was only the "vexation of ſeeing one of the Society at the "King's Ear, who you fear'd wou'd not recom- "mend your Preaching to his Majeſty? Who "dare pretend that it was only out of pure ſpite "to him? But 'tis moſt certain, that another of "their Enemies having ask'd you why baniſhing "Monſters and Jeſuits together, you would ſend "theſe good Fathers into a better Country than "their fellow Refugees, to whom at bottom you "deſign'd much leſs harm? You anſwer'd, It "was, that finding themſelves in a better Con- "dition, they ſhould think leſs of returning into "the Country from which you expell'd 'em" Some Pages before (f) he had been taxed with writing a Book againſt a Jeſuit, which he could not defend before the King in the Louvre, and had been reminded (g), that of the three words of which he compoſed his fine Title, the two firſt were borrowed from Rome, and the third from Athens.

(c) Id. ib. p. 8.

(C) He Preach'd in Paris ] He affirms it in a Writing des Vertus near Paris. They who writ againſt him accuſed him (D) of having ſold this Cure, but he denied the Fact. He was nam'd to the Biſhoprick of Toulon by Lewis XIII. but never could obtain his Bulls. He gave his Anſwer to the Reproaches, which were made him on this Occaſion, the beſt turn (F) that could poſſibly be given it. He retired to his Father's Houſe upon the Confinement of Mary de Medicis. Cardinal Richelieu who had taken meaſures to make him Priſoner (F) in that Retreat, failed of his aim; for St. Germain made his eſcape before the Archers arrived. The Queen-Mother having left Compeigne * and deſigning to Publiſh an Apology, ſent for him and commanded him to Anſwer a Writing, Intit'led the Defence of the King and his Miniſters, in which the Honour of this Princeſs had been treated with great Liberty. He Publiſhed the

* Matthieu de Morgues ubi ſupra pag. 5.

Writing publiſh'd in 1631, that he had Preach'd Two Thouſand times in the Capital City of the Kingdom, and ſays in another place (i), that there was not a Pariſh in this great City, but he had Preach'd in. "(k) All the Court, adds he, admir'd my Preaching: The Doctors, Batchelors, "Regulars, and the moſt celebrated Lawyers of "Paris have run about after my Sermons: Many "of the curious have filled their Table Books "with 'em, and a great number of Citizens of good "Senſe have found in 'em wherewithall to ſolace "their Conſciences

(i) Id lettré de change proteſtée pag. 925, 926.

(k) Ibid. pag. 940.

(D) Accuſed him of having ſold this Cure, but he denied the Fact.] John Sirmond under the falſe Name of Sabin, talks to him after this manner: (l) "Thou "underſtandeſt not ſo much as the two Languages, "which common uſe makes moſt familiar to well "bred Men. And therefore I look upon it, as a "kind of ſpiritual Prodigality in that honeſt Man, "who to recompence that little, thou wert capable of teaching thoſe Children, he had "committed to your Inſtruction, gave you this "(m) Cure, which you ſold after a few Years, "to go and put off thy bad French at the Table "of the late Queen Margaret." Note that 'tis obſerved (n) he had been Paſtor of Auberviller.. Let's ſee how he defends himſelf againſt the Charge of ſelling his Cure of Notre-Dame des Vertus. "I reſign'd it ſays he, into the Hands (o) of "the deceaſed Mr. Galemant, firſt Director to "to the Carmelite Nuns in France. It was not "poſſible to commit Simony with a Saint, who "did ſo many Miracles in his Life, and after his "Death, that they talk of Canonizing him. "Thus to thruſt me into Hell, Sabin would pluck "a Bleſſed Saint out of Paradiſe. The Truth is, "Queen Margaret de Valois drew me out of that "Station, where the great reſort of People, kept "a continual Noiſe and Din, Enemies to the neceſſary repoſe of a Man of Letters. The Cardinal de Joyeuſe commanded me from that Princeſs to reſign the Benefice into the Hands of "Mr. de Galemant, who had been his great Vicar "at Rohan: He reſigned it preſently after, to the "Fathers of the Oratory, who poſſeſs it ſtill, "and who know I never had any recompence "for it.

(l) He gave his Anſwer to the Reproaches made him, the beſt turn that could poſſibly be given it.] On the Popes refuſing him his Bulls, one of his Adverſaries Publiſhed this: (a) He's a Renegado "Jeſuit, the common Subject of whoſe Converſation, was inveighing againſt the Power of "the Pope, under pretence of defending the Priviledges of the Gallican Church, by that means "ſowing as much as he could, the Seeds of Diviſion between the Church and State. The intimateſt Friend he ever had was Fancan, a Man "notorious for his Impiety, a reputed Atheiſt; "and who was convicted of having always favoured the Intereſts of Hereſie, both within "and without the Kingdom. This kind of Converſation and Company got him ſo ill a Reputation, that the King having at the recommendation of ſome, who did not thorowly know the "Man, nominated him to the Biſhoprick of Toulon, he could not procure Teſtimonials from "worthy Men, ſufficient to induce his Holineſs "to grant him his Bulls; ſo that he has been "forced to quit his Biſhoprick" I paſs over (b) Matthew de Morgues's Anſwer concerning his intimacy with Fancan, and only inſiſt on what concerns the refuſal of the Bulls. "(c) He whom he "accuſes, aſſures him he never enter'd into a "Diſpute either for, or againſt the Privileges "of the Gallican Church. Nor was that the thing "which Stopped his Bulls, but the ill Offices of "the Cardinal, who was perſuaded by two ma"licious Men, that the Dignity of a Biſhop, "would render more conſiderable with the "Queen, a Perſon whom they had always kept "at a diſtance from her, becauſe they were jea"lous of his Capacity and Courage. If Mulot "did once fall out with the Cardinal, he'd lay o"pen his management with the late Mr. Herbault "Secretary of State; and if the Biſhop of Mande "du Pleſſis were alive, and would ſpeak the truth, "we ſhould know all the Tricks the Cardinal "play'd in this Affair. His Holineſs was no "Stranger to the Malice; and one of the wiſeſt "Gentlemen of France can Witneſs, what the Pope "ſaid upon this Subject in granting the Bulls, "which were demanded, when leave was deſir'd "to require a Free Gift from the Biſhoprick upon "other Conſiderations." He anſwered much the ſame to the Sieur Sirmond. "(d) Sabin alleges "too, that the Bulls for the Biſhoprick of Toulon "were refuſed me: He is miſtaken. Cardinal "Richelieu has retarded 'em by his Artifices, but "has not been able to get 'em refus'd. His Holineſs is too juſt to deny me the Recompence of "the Services I have done the Church theſe 20 "Years, and the King too Powerful to ſuffer his "Nomination to be condemned. Some againſt "the Rules of Charity, ſtruck in with the "Cardinal who oppoſed me: But the main Difficulty was removed, when of my own Mo"tion I beg'd of the King, that he would permit "me to recommend a Biſhop: Which his Maje"ſty granted with regret. I enjoy a part of the "Revenue, which the Revenge of the Cardinal "has deprived me of, becauſe I defended the Re"putation of the Princeſs, who has given him "a hundred times as much. He does not diſown his Friendſhip and Intimacy with Mr. Servin, Gillot, and Derivaux, (e) thoſe true Frenchmen, worthy Magiſtrates, and incorruptible Judges.

(m) In pag. 714. he had been reproached with ſelling his Cure of Notre-Dame des Vertus.

(n) Ibid. pag 729

(o) Morgues lettre de change proteſtée pag 923, 924

(d) Idem lettre de change proteſtée pag 924, 925

(e) Id. ib. pag. 925.

I relate theſe things only to ſhew the Spirit, which advanced or retarded Promotions at that time. I believe theſe baſe Intrigues will laſt as long as the World.

(F) To make him Priſoner in that Retreat.] Cardinal Richelieu (f) diſpatched a Commiſſion to the Sieur de Machault Intendant of Languedoc, to ſeize the Perſon of Matthew de Morgues. The Intendant charged the Provoſt of Niſmes and Villai with the Execution of it, and wrote "to Judge Mage "du Puy and ſome Lords, to aſſiſt the King's Officers in taking him. The Commiſſion ran to take "St Germain dead or alive, to ſeize all his Papers, "without making an Inventory of 'em, and "ſend 'em to Beaucaire; whilſt the Priſoner "ſhould be conducted to Mande, to be put into "the Hands of the Biſhop." The Author believes that this Prelate, who had been Valet to the Cardinal, would have got him ſtrangl'd or poiſon'd without Noiſe. He had notice of the Enterprize the Night before the intended Execution, quitted his Father's Houſe, and found a Retreat in the wildeſt Country of France, where he was conceal'd for ſix Weeks, with the greateſt Hazards in point of Health. . . . . What was cruelleſt, ſays he, in all this Proceeding, was the Affliction which the ſight of the Provoſt and Archers gave my Father and Mother, who were very old, for I was the youngeſt of eight Children, and got when they had both grey Hairs. He pretends that the Cardinal deſign'd to ſend him out of the World, to prevent his writing a Hiſtory. "This "good Lord, ſays he (g), well knew that St. Germain was not a Man of the times, that God had "given him a little Sence to obſerve how things "were manag'd, that his Soul was ſo good, as "not to ſuffer Innocence to be overwhelm'd "without a ſigh, and that his Courage was not ſo mean

(f) Idem reparties

(a) Reponſe au libelle intitulé tres-humble &c. remonſtrance au Roi, à la page 56 du recueil des pieces.

(b) It's to be ſeen at the 113 and 127 pages of Reparties.

(c) Morgues, reparties pag 10.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 3. & 4.

the Anſwer ſhe (G) deſired in 1631. and back'd it by ſeveral others afterwards, againſt the *Flatterers of the Cardinal Richelieu. His Misfortune was that he had before (H) Publiſhed Books full of this Cardinal's Praiſes. This gave his Enemies the Pleaſure of beating him with his own Weapons. He followed Mary de Medicis out of the Kingdom, and returned not into France, till after the Death of the Cardinal. He forc'd Father (I) Sirmond's Nephew, one of his principal Antagoniſts, to quit the Field, and as he

* Du Chatelet, Sirmond, Balzac, Dupleix &c.

" mean as to forſake his Miſtreſs in her Sufferings. " The Cardinal was jealous of theſe Qualities, " which are not for his turn; he ſuſpected what " was not, but what might be.... He reſolved " to impriſon a Man, who did nothing that could " juſtly diſpleaſe him, but who one Day might " give a true Hiſtory of the times, and frankly " declare what he had known good in the Queen's " Conduct, and evil in the Cardinal's.

It's probable the Cardinal dreaded St. Germain's Pen, and had a Preſage of the Libels it was hatching, and which afterwards ſadly mortify'd his Eminence. By all theſe Negotiations for recalling the Queen-Mother, it appears he articled (b) that St. Germain, who by defamatory Libels, had omitted nothing to rob him of his Reputation, ſhould be delivered up to the King. This great Man had the weakneſs to be infinitely ſenſible of Satyr, as I have related (i) elſewhere.

(b) See the Life of Cardinal Richelieu tom. 2: pag. 162, 175. édit. de Holl. 1694.

(i) In the Article Grandier.

(G) He Publiſhed the Anſwer ſhe deſired in 1631.] " It's Intit'led true and wholeſome Advices of " Francis Fidele, concerning the Calumnies and " Blaſphemies of the Sieur des Montagns, or an " Examination of a Libel, Intit'led, A Defence " of the King and his Miniſters." 'Tis one of the Principal Tracts of the Collection of Pieces in Defence of the Queen-Mother, which has been ſo often Reprinted.

(H) He had before Publiſhed Books full of this Cardinal's Praiſes] The Author (k) of the Anſwer to the Remonſtrance to the King, cites ſeveral Paſſages of it, to convict him of Contradictions, which deſtroyed all his Credit. An Extract alſo of a letter (l), which he wrote the 7th of June 1627, to the Cardinal, was alledged, in which he promiſed him a perpetual and inviolable adherence, founded on the remembrance of the great Benefits he had received, and on his Admiration of the eminent Qualities of this Miniſter. This gave ſome perplexity to de Morgues, let's ſee what he ſays in his own Juſtification. In the firſt Place, he ſuppoſed that his Adverſaries wou'd repreſent him as a Satyrical Author, from the Books he had written before his Rupture with the Cardinal. But this was not their thought, they only inſiſted on the Books he publiſhed for the Queen-Mother, after ſhe was at Variance with this Miniſter. He might ſo eaſily have underſtood their Meaning, that there's ground enough to ſuſpect him of Inſincerity in this Point. In the Second Place he pretended, that the Cardinal's ill Deſigns did not ſhew themſelves, till after the Perſecution ſtirr'd up againſt the Queen-Mother. Let's cite his own Words to each of theſe Points.

(k) It's in the Collection of Mr. du Chatelet.

(l) Ibid. p. m. 560, 561.

" (m) St. Germain never writ any thing but two " Pieces concerning Publick Affairs, one by Com- " mand of the Cardinal, and the other at his in- " ſtant Requeſt. The firſt was Intit'led Chriſtian " Truths in 1625. maintaining that the Queen had " Reaſon to complain of thoſe, who robb'd her " of the Education of her Children.... The Car- " dinal highly approv'd this Writing which was " the Manifeſto of Angers: Poſſibly he calls that " at preſent a Defamatory Libel, which he once " declared was a Work full of Divine and Hu- " mane Reaſons, and which has ſerved his Deſign. " The Second Piece, which he would ſtigmatize " with the Name of an infamous Libel, is, the De- " vine without Paſſion, written in Defence of the " Cardinal, and to ſilence abundance of Foreign " Writers, aſſiſted with the Memoirs of ſome " Frenchmen, who had given ſo much trouble to " this good Lord, that his Mind and Body were " equally indiſpoſed. If he owns this Book is " falſe, which is to be ſeen poſtſcripted and en- " larged with his own Hand, in the Original " Copy drawn up from Memoirs furniſhed by " himſelf, ſacrificed to his Intereſts, and to the " Command he cauſed the Queen-Mother to give " the Author (who was a good Miſtreſs, was wil- " ling to ſave the Cardinal from deſpair) the " Writer will condemn himſelf for rather for hav- " ing exceeded in Praiſes, than offended by Calum- " nies. Beſides it ought to be conſidered, that " this Piece was written in 1626, at which time the " Cardinal kept within ſome bounds, was in the " good Graces of his Miſtreſs, and concealed his " Deſigns, till ſuch time as he had obtained Power " to make them take effect: ſo that it can't be ſaid, " that the things which have been ſaid to his Ad- " vantage, before he threw the Kingdom and all " Europe into Confuſion, can ſerve to juſtifie him, " when accuſed only of more recent Crimes; nor " to convict a Man, who eſteemed the Card nal, " before he was changed or detected.... (a) If " you ſay that St. Germain changed his Note, he'll " tell you, the Cardinal changed his way of Life; " that God himſelf treats us in a different manner " when we are Sinners, from what he does when " we are in his Grace. The Cardinal had not yet " diſcovered his Deſigns... He whom you ac- " cuſe of Levity... has detected ſince the Year " 1626, the ill Actions the Cardinal had com- " mitted before that time; and thoſe which are " Publick and which we have ſeen, induced us " to inform our ſelves with more exactneſs of " thoſe tranſacted in the dark.... Contradi- " ction muſt relate to the ſame time and to the " ſame Action.

(m) Morgues, reparties pag. 8.

(a) Id ib. pag. 12.

It muſt be allowed, that it was hardly poſſible to make a better Apology than this, for that Inconſtancy of Pen which he was accuſed of. Whether he acted ſincerely in this Defence, is another Queſtion. We may venture to ſay by way of Conjecture, that if the Intereſts of the Cardinal had always been the ſame with thoſe of the Queen-Mother, and he had been guilty of every thing elſe, except the Hardſhips on her; St. Germain wou'd have continued to praiſe and to defend him, againſt the Libels of the Auſtrians and French Malecontents The Diſcoveries he might have made of this great Miniſter's Deſigns, would never have been deſtined to the information of the Publick. Let it however be confeſs'd, that he was to be commended on ſeveral Accounts; for he'd never have been ill treated by the Cardinal, if he had not manifeſted a ſteady Soul, unſhaken by Cowardize, and capable of ſacrificing his Fortune to his Fidelity, for the Intereſts of his Miſtreſs. We ſhall ſee (b) below the Praiſes a Critick has given him

(b) In the Remark K.

Note, That he owns, in a Letter of the 7th of June 1627, he had great Obligations to the Cardinal, and had receiv'd ſeveral Benefits from him. Nevertheleſs, in a Work Publiſhed in 1631. he ſpeaks thus, (c) " This good Prelate, who calls the " Pen Mere nary, which had written for the Cardinal. " ... has forgot to ask him, what he gave St Ger- " main for the Divine without Paſſion, and what in " Recompence of many other ſignal Services; as " particularly, for an exact Search made by him " within and without the Kingdom, for Papers, " Memoirs, Inſtructions, and Tracts, which might " give him an inſight into Foreign Affairs; and " for a great number of Curioſities and in- " genious Inventions, which he was fond of, " and received with thanks, but which were fol- " lowed the next, or even the ſame Day, by ill " Offices with the Queen, and eſpecially with his " Holineſs's Nuncio; to whom he ſignify'd, that " St. Germain was Author of the Divine without " Paſſion, in which he himſelf was ſtruck at under " covert Expreſſions, tho' the Cardinal had added " with his own Hand, the only Paſſage that cou'd " offend him. Here's the Coyn in which he has paid " the Pen, which is called Mere nary." This is not only curious, but even highly probable. The Cardinal had ſuch diſtant Views, ſo much Ambition, and ſo many Enemies to deal with, ſo many Ambuſhes to prevent and to lay, that he was forced to ſpread his Snares every where, and always have two Strings to his Bow

(c) Morgues, reparties pag. 9.

(I) He made.... Father Sirmond's Nephew quit the Field] This I find in the Hiſtory of the French Academy " (a) Mr. Sirmond.... wrote ſeve- " ral

(c) Pelliſſon, hiſtoire de l'Acad Françoiſe p. m. 3[illegible].

he had foretold during his Disgrace, * he obtained the Royal Priviledge to Publish his Books. He lived † to the Year 1670. He lodged a long time at the Incurables, in the Suburbs of St. Germain, and died there in the ‡ 88th Years of his Age. He Preached there every Year the Panegyrick (K) of St. Joseph. He boasted much of the History he had written of Lewis the Just, and said he won'd enjoyn his Heirs to Print it after his Death. Patin has spoken (L) more than once of this Work. Balzac treats Matthew de Morgues very hardly in the First Letter of the Eighth Book. To Crown his Inconstancy, says he, of a Deserter, as we have known him from at least a dozen Parties, he must for the last Scene turn Parasite to the Spaniards, and Secretary to the traiterous French at their Court.

* See the Remark I.

† Patin, lettre 53e. page 580. du 3. tome.

‡ Id. ib. pag. 579.

MORIN

" ral Pieces for the Cardinal, upon the Affairs of " the time, and most of them under feign'd " Names. The Abbot de St. Germain, who " was a Writer of the opposite side, used him very " ill in the Book, which he entit'led the Chimerical Embassador He writ an answer to it, which " is inserted in Mr du Chastelet's Collection. The " Abbot de St. Germain replied, and treated him " still more injuriously, which obliged him to set " about a new writing in his Defence. But Cardinal Richelieu and King Lewis XIII. happening to " die in this Juncture, he could never obtain under the Regency, a Licence to Print this Book. " This Troubled him heartily, and seeing at " the same time his Enemy return'd to Court, and " the Favour veering to the opposite side, he retir'd " into Auvergne, where he soon died being about " 60 Years old. "This Mr. Sirmond was a Member of the French Academy, and yet you see he had the Mortification to be forced to yield to a Rebel-writer, who had not only used him ill, but even attack'd the whole Body of the Academy, which had almost the same Destiny as Sirmond; for not finding any redress, it saw the Triumph of its Censor, and the Works of this haughty Critick Printed with the Royal Licence. Mr Pelisson supplies me with Proofs, " The first that write a- (f) Id ib. pag 67. & suiv. " gainst the Academy, says he (f), was the Abbot " St. Germain, who was then at Brussels, accompanying the Queen-Mother Mary de Medicis " in her Exile. As he never left inveighing in " his Writings, and that with the greatest Animosity against every Action of Cardinal Richelieu, he fell upon the French Academy in a very " injurious manner, confounding it with that o- " ther Academy, which the Gazzettier Renaudot had " erected in the Office of Intelligence; whether " he designed this Mistake, or whether he was " actually misinformed of what past in Paris. The " Academy would not answer him by a Book on " purpose; but Mr. du Chastelet who was a Mem- " ber of it, and whose Pen the Cardinal made use " of to answer most of these Brussel Libels, was " desired upon an offer first made to the Assembly " by himself, to add a few Lines on this Head; " which were afterwards read, and approved by " the Society (1). The Pieces of the Abbot de (1) Reg. 9. & 30 Juillet 1634. " St. Germain against Cardinal Richelieu, have been " since Printed at Paris in two Volumes, after " the Death of Lewis XIII. Mr. du Chastelet's An- " swers were part of a Work, which he had not " finish'd, being prevented by Death, and which " has never been Printed.

(K) He Preached there every Year the Panegyrick of St. Joseph.] This I learn from a most ingenious Criticism, which is a continuation of Parnassus Reformed, and is Intit'led, the War between the Ancients and Modern Authors. Mr. Gueret there supposes (k) that upon the arrival of Abbot de Morgues at Parnassus, Cardinal Richelieu and Balzac would oppose his taking a Place among the Historians; and that his Eminence made the following Speech. " Behold, behold, here the Man, who alone " had attempted to disturb the Glory of my Mini- " stry; behold the only Pen, which I was never " able to gain, and yet I now have met with " him, after whom I have sometimes marched " intire Legions in vain, and the quest of whom " had cost me the Successes of more than one " Campaign. I well knew, continued he, that I should " meet with him at last in one World or t'other; " 'tis but fit he shou'd now pay for all the Dam- " mage he has done me, 'tis fit I revenge my self " of that invincible Malignancy, which neither " the fear of Punishments, nor the Hopes of " Rewards could correct in him; and if the Di- " vinity, which presides here, does not do me " Justice, I'll quickly make him sensible, that I " have not spent all my Force against Rochelle." He supposes that this Abbot " (i) of an undaunted " Look, and above all Fear, only shook his Head, " and looking upon his Eminence, your haughty " Carriage, says he, is out of date; you have no " Armies here to back it, the Day of your Reign " is over, and I have this Advantage of you, that " Truth marches by my side, and that I am in a " Place, where you hold no other Rank, than that " of an Author. Mr. Gueret adds (k) that the Abbot escaped the Storm, that was like to be raised " against him: But there ensued a tedious Con- " test, what Place he should hold, whether among " the Historians or the Libellers during the Wars. " Each side offer'd very plausible Arguments on " this Head, and the Dispute had never been end- " ed, if he himself, tir'd out with this trouble- " some Formality, had not bethought him of " gaining a little rising Ground which join'd to " Parnassus, where all the Learned of his Chara- " cter and Profession, place themselves out of the " way, that they may have no fellowship with " the rest, whom they term profane. Brioüat, " who first descry'd him, ran forward to meet his " Friend, and after several mutual Embraces, You " renounce then, says he to him, the Panegyrick " of St Joseph, and this good Saint has lost in you, " one of the zealousest of his Adorers and his " Preacher in ordinary.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 106.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 109.

If I have collected more Particulars than the Text of this Remark required, 'twas by the Way of an Introduction, which informs us, what the Opinion of a fine Wit had been of our Matthew de Morgues.

(L) Patin has spoken more than once of this Work.] Here is an Extract of his 351th Letter, dated the 20th of March 1665. " (a) Yesterday, being the Fe- " stival of St. Joseph, Mr. Matthew de Morgues who " is 82 Years of Age, Preached the Sermon in " the Incurables, in Honour of St. Joseph before " the Queen's Majesty: He is the Author of the " Pamphlets publish'd at Brussels against Cardinal " Richelieu, and in Vindication of the Queen-Mo- " ther, whose Almoner he was: He's a Learned " Great Man, and has by him a just History of " the late King Lewis XIII. which he does not " design for the Press till after his Death; he has " got six Manuscript Copies of it, which he has " committed to six of his best Friends, who will " not fail to execute his Intentions in due time. Let's see also what he has said in the 458th. Letter. " (b) It's probable this History (c) will be confu- " ted by that which we are promised by Mr. Mat- " thew de Morgues, Sieur de St. Germain who begins " from the Birth of Lewis XIII. and continues it " to his Death: This Gentleman will not suffer " his History to be Printed in his own Life-time, " but he tells me he has put it into the Hands of " those who will be faithful to him: You must " know he is 84 Years old; I am far from wishing " his Death, yet I should be glad to see this Hi- " story, whereof I have heard him tell some very " notable Particulars and surprizing Truths, to " Cardinal Richelieu's dishonour, and in defence " of the Queen-Mother. This Man, says he, in " another Place (d), knows most of the Court In- " trigues for 60 Years past, part of which he has " been an Eye Witness to, having liv'd in the Fa- " mily of the Queen-Mother: The History he has " written will be very curious, and will bring to " light several Memoirs hitherto conceal'd, and " bold Truths concerning the Ministry of this " Cardinal, who ruled France most cruelly, and " with a Rod of Iron." Here you see two Men, one of which was not fit to write, the other not the best disposed to read the History of Cardinal Richelieu impartially. Patin hated all abuse of Power; Reason and Nature indued him with this Passion

(a) Patin lettre 351. pag. 39 du 3. tome.

(b) Idem pag 345. du meme tome.

(c) That of Cardinal Richelieu by Pere le Moine.

(d) Idem lettre 529. pag 574. du meme vol.

(k) Guerres des Auteurs pag. 14 édit. de Holl.

MORIN (JOHN BAPTIST) Physician and Royal Professor of Mathematicks in Paris, was Born the 23d of February 1583, at Villa Franca in Beaujolois. He went thro' his Course of Philosophy at Aix in Provence, afterwards studied Physick at Avignon, and was admitted Doctor there in that Faculty in 1613. The Year following he went to Paris, and was entertain'd in Claude Dormi Bishop of Boulogne's Family, who sent him to make Discoveries about the Nature of Metals in the Mines of Hungary. He was often let down into the very deepest Pits, and believing he had discovered that the Earth is divided like the Air into three Regions; he wrote a Treatise (A) on this Subject. Upon his Return to his Prelate, who had entertain'd (B) a Scotch Astrologer, he began to relish Judicial Astrology, and by the Rules of his Art calculated the Events of the Year 1617. He found that the Bishop of Boulogne was threatned either with Death or Imprisonment, and fail'd not to give him warning. The Prelate laughed at him *; but meddling soon after in some Intrigues of State, and mistaking the right Side, he was treated as a Rebel, and cast into Prison. Morin was entertained by the Duke of Luxembourg, Brother to the Constable de Luines, (C) in 1621, and liv'd in his Family eight Years. As soon as he heard of the Death of Sainclair † Royal Professor in Mathematicks; he put in for his Place and carried it. He took the Oath of Professor in February 1630. He was advised to Marry his Predecessor's Widow; but the first Visit he made her, he found she was going abroad (D) to be buried. From that time he set on a firm Resolution never to Marry, and kept it all his Life. He made himself many Friends. He had access

* And yet he was infatuated with an Opinion of Astrology. Morin. Astrolog. Gall. lib. 23 pag. 648.

† He died the 28th of June 1629

(e) Statuit res gestas populi Romani perscribere eo magis quod mihi à spe metu, partibus Reip. animus liber erat. Sallustius in proœm. bel. Catilin.

(f) In the Article Marillac.

(g) Utenim tres in regiones aer distinctus est, sic etiam triplex regio interræ viticeribus animadverti potest summa, media, infima, & id quidem validissimis rationum momentis adeo stabilivit, edito hujus argumenti ad annum 1619. libello, ut hæc sententia etsi nulla Philosophorum veterum authoritate fulciatur, suos tamen habeat sectatores. Vita Jo. Bapt. Morini, p. 3. n. 16.

(h) Vincentius Panurgus in epistola de tribus impostoribus, pag. 14.

(i) Morinus, in defensione suæ dissertationis de atomis, & vacuo, p. 5.

(k) Twas printed at Paris in 1635.

(l) Vita Morini. p. 4. n. 21.

(m) Ibid.

Passion, which betray'd him into an inconceivable Aversion for the Cardinal; he gave credit to all the Slanders an Historian could invent of him, and therefore could not judge as he ought to do, of the Merit of this History: for to pass an equitable Judgment, a Man must be intirely exempt from Hatred or Affection. By a stronger Reason we must say, that Matthew de Morgues was wholly incapable to write the History in question. He had been persecuted by his Eminence; he hated him mortally, he would consequently have envenomed the Accusation, every thing must have appear'd Criminal to him, and if any thing had looked fair in his own Cause, he'd have suppress or tarnished its Lustre. 'Tis certain that they who have had to do with the Cardinal, have left us wretched Pictures of him, some have said too much good, and others too much ill; some meant to acknowledge, or to obtain his Favour, and others to revenge themselves for his Injuries; they all wanted that Coolness, which is (e) essential to an Historian, they either hoped, or feared, or hated. Matthew de Morgues would however have had this Advantage, that most Readers would have given a specious Name to the Liberty he had taken. You'll find above (f) in a Passage of Tacitus, the Confirmation of what I have said. It must be own'd, that we are naturally more inclined to suspect the Historians who praise, than those who blame. See the Remark A of the Article of the Marshall de Marillac.

(A) He wrote a Treatise on this Subject.] 'Twas the first he Published; it came out in 1619. under the Title of Mundi sublunaris Anatomia. They who have written his Life, pretend that he proved by so many solid Arguments, that the Bowels (g) of the Earth are divided into three Regions, that he gave a Vogue to this Opinion, without supporting it by the Authority of any ancient Philosophers; this Work was dedicated (h) to Mr du Vair, Keeper of the Seals, who had been Patron to our Morin at Aix in Provence, when he was first President there, and who was also his Disciple in Mathematicks in 1588. Finding how well qualified he was for the Sciences, he encouraged him to resume his Studies. Morin himself relates this (i) Anno quippe 1608, illustrissimus D. Du Vair, Senatus Aquensis Protopræses, fuit mons in Matheseos adjapetus; qui observata mei ingenii ad has aptitudine, tam valide mihi persuasit studia mea per decennium intermissa repetere, ut anno 1609, Aquis Sextiis ingressus sim Philosophiæ cursum, sub D. Marco Antonio, tunc temporis Philosophiæ Professore; & anno 1611. cursum Mathesis sub Professoribus Regiis Fontano & Mersnelo, veris earum disciplinarum editione famosis.

(b) A Scotch Astrologer, he began to relish judicial Astrology] His Name was Davidson, he renounced Astrology, applied himself to Physick, and became very famous by his Works, and by the course (k) of Chymistry, which he exhibited publickly in the Royal Garden of Paris (l). He was invited into Poland, and had the Honour to be first Physician to the Queen (m). One thing I must not forget which is odd enough, that Davidson grew out of love with Astrology, because of the Uncertainty of this Art, and betook himself to Physick. Morin on the contrary for a like Reason was disgusted with Physick, and applied himself to Astrology. Est vero quod in ipso (Davidsono) a Morino non leviter admiramur, artium nempe quas profitebantur facilem ab utroque velut permutationem: Astrologiam Scotus, scientiam alter medicam fecitabatur, utroque prout tempora, post experimenta complura in arte propria, sibi subesse certi deprehendit, unde animus amborum fluctuans, in quo pedem figeret, non invenichat. Tædet itaque hunc & illum aberrantis plerumque judicii, Medicus ergo in Astrologum vertitur, & in Med. cum Astrologus, tam secundo exitu ut beati tranfugæ, inter hujus ætatis viros insignes annumerari mereantur (n)

(n) Ibid.

(C) Morin was entertained by the Duke of Luxemburg in 1621.] They who have given us his Life, leave a Chasm here which betrays their want of Judgment. They say the Imprisonment of the Bishop of Boulogne had left Morin destitute of support, if he had not been entertain'd by the Duke in 1621. and they had just before said that his Bishop was imprison'd in 1617. What became of Morin in this Interval of four Years? This ought at least to have been notified. Let us fill up this blank by a passage of Morin himself, who tells us, that after his Prelate's Fall, he lived with the Abbot of Bretonniere, as Physician in Ordinary, till he was entertain'd by the Constables Brother during the Siege of Montauban. Manet says he, (a) apud Ep. scopum 4 annos, tum solicitatus a reverendissimo D. De la Bretonniere Sancti Eutropii in Normania Abbatis optimi, ne cum ipso durante gravi peste Parisiensi in Normanniam contuli, ejus Medicus ordinarius. Anno autem 1621, dum Rex obsideret Montem Albanum, vocatus fui in Aulam ab illustrissimo nobisque valde amico Domino Ludovico Tronsono, Regi a sanctioribus Consiliis & secretis, ut ejus Medicus ordinarius Ducis a Luxemburgo, quod ægre tulit optimus Abbas. He often complains of this Duke's Ingratitude, and says it was the Reason of his quitting him (b), and as he was taking his leave, he threatned him with a Disease which carried him off in two Years.

(a) Morin in defensi suæ dissertationis de atomis, pag. 106. 107

(b) Quem demum sui coactus deserere ob summam ejus ingratitudinem, prædicens ibi ante discessum morbum lethalem intra biennium ex quo etiam mortuus est Morin Astrolog. Gallica, lib. 1. pag. 598.

(D) He found she was going abroad to be buried] Morin govern'd himself by the Stars; and finding they did not advise him to Marry, he resolved to live a Batchelor. However, the Persuasions of his Friends shook him in such a manner, that he thought on Matrimony in good earnest, the rather, because Sinclair's Widow was reputed Rich, and a favourable Occasion of her succeeding, not only to this Professor's Chair, but also to his Bed and Bags. He was on the Road to pay his Devoirs to the Widow, and to make the first Overture of his Design. But seeing the Door of the House in mourning, and understanding from the Neighbours that the Gentlewoman was just going to be buried; he was seized with an extream Astonishment, and immediately fell on a firm Resolution never to Wed. No doubt this confirmed the good Opinion he had conceived of Astrology. (c) Hæc nunc magis quam illud in familiaribus amicorum conventibus populo fabulas facere didicerunt, quod ea, antequam ortus in mundi molem sanctam, non aliter concipere animo posset, quam plane, & omnibus numeris consummatum Brutiam perfectus fama jactabat, Parisiensem

(c) Vita Morini, p. 6 n. 32.

9 L 2 quam

ceſs to Great Men, and even to Cardinal (E) Richelieu: And he obtained from Cardinal Mazarine a Penſion of Two Thouſand Livres, which was all along duly paid him. He was conſulted about Futurity by ſeveral Perſons, who pretended his Horoſcopes (F) often foretold quiunt, at quemadmodum Sanclari cathedræ, ſic & eiuſdem opibus ducta ipſius uxore ſuccedas: conſilio iſtiuſmodi ſæpius repetito Morinus tandem acquievit, Dominamque inviſere ea mente conſtituit, & procum gerere prima vice: propior factus ædibus nigra veſte videt limen obſeptum, docentque vicini Sanclari conjugem eſſe mox ad tumulum efferendam. Id audiens quantum obſtupuerit, cogitate: tum vero de cœlibatu perpetuo conſilium ſibi quondam ducibus aſtris injectum, certiſſimum fore decrevit, omnibuſque in poſterum renunciare nuptiis, & quicquid vitæ reliquum eſſet in doctrinis ac librorum ſeu lectione, ſeu ſcriptione placido tenore tranſigere, atque in amicorum convictu ſuaviſſime conſeneſcere. Hoc ſixum apud ſe ratumque nunquam poſtea violavit. Quid enim libero lectulo jucundius? nunquid uni conjugi moleſtiarum plerumque ſeminario tot amicos tamque illuſtres anteferret? All this is worthy of a Profeſſor of Mathematicks. His Friends had been often forc'd to return to the Charge in perſuading him to Marry; they back'd and ſupported the Motives of Duty in the Caſe, by thoſe of Intereſt; and when at laſt they had got his Conſent, he prepar'd for his firſt Viſit with ſo much deliberation, that the Lady had time enough to die before ſhe received it. He was ſo little inquiſitive about his Miſtreſs, that he heard nothing of her Sickneſs, before he knew ſhe was going to the Grave, nor did he know that, but by coming himſelf to the Place, to make the firſt Declaration of Love. This has much of the Philoſopher in it.

(n) See the Remark O.

(e) Die nona Julii 1605, duo periculoſiſſima vulnera propter famoſam mulierem. Morin. Aſtrolog. Gall. l.23.p.617

The Scheme of his Nativity (d) preſag'd him nothing but Misfortunes from the Female Sex. He confeſſes that in the Year 1605, he received two dangerous Wounds on account of (e) a Woman, and that next to the Grace of God, he owes to Aſtrology the Happineſs of ſtopping the fatal conſequences of his Conſtellation: For having diſcovered the Influence of a certain Star in the Exaltation of Venus, which was found in his Horoſcope, he took ſpecial Care of himſelf, being appriz'd from whence all the Misfortunes came, which he had gone thro' on the ſcore of Women. (f) Tot mala, infortunia, magnaque vitæ pericula mihi propter mulieres acciderunt in juventute, ut jam illa recogitando ſtupeam, multoque plura & forſan deteriora mihi accidiſſent, niſi Deus Opt. Max. mei miſertus fuiſſet, ab eiſque me liberaſſet, & Aſtrologiæ circa 35. meæ nativitatis annum quo huic ſcientiæ ſtudere cæpi, infauſtæ & mihi per experientiam periculoſæ illius conſtitutionis monuiſſet.

(f) Id.ib.

(g) Pag.6. n.33.

(h) See the Remark H at the end.

(E) And even to Cardinal Richelieu] The Author of Morin's Life, ſpeaks of it in theſe Terms: (g) Richelianus Cardinalis immenſus ille genius, judicio nunquam, ubi quempiam pertentaſſet, errante, dignum ea exiſtimatione Morinum duxit, ut ipſum ad ſecretius Muſæum admitteret, deque negotiis momenti graviſſimi conſuleret. This is a very mangled Story, and ſuch as Panegyriſts uſually give: We don't find in it the Cardinal's Charge to Morin, nor this Aſtrologer's furious rage againſt the Cardinal. Let's ſupply this Omiſſion. Morin being falſly perſuaded, that he had found out the true Science of Longitudes, and that the Cardinal did him a very great Injuſtice (i) by refuſing him the Recompence which ſuch a Diſcovery deſerv'd, conceived an extream Indignation, and a moſt lively Reſentment againſt him, which laſted as long as he lived. He went no more to wait on his Eminence, and 'twas only out of love to Mr Chavigny his Patron, and for the Glory of Aſtrology, that he made a Prognoſtick, which the Cardinal deſired of him. (i) Priuſquam Pariſiis diſcederet (k) optavit ſcire quid de ſua valetudine atque vita ſentirem eo in itinere, non quidem per ſe (qui ab annis 4, non videram ob denegatam (l) mihi remunerationem ſcientiæ longitudinum a me inventæ, utcunque ſuo ſcripto eam mihi pollicitus fuiſſet) ſed interpoſito Magnate ſibi fidiſſimo, & mihi amico, ſcilicet illuſtriſſimo D. Comite de Cheverny, qui ad tertiam uſque vicem meum ea de re petiit, quod libenter recuſaſſem ſi potuiſſem, at ipſius Magnatis obſtrictus beneficiis, & pro honore aſtrologiæ tandem reſpondi Cardinalem eo tempore cum vitæ periculo ægrotaturum. He ſpeaks diſadvantageouſly of his Eminence in moſt of the Books he has written, and imputes to him all the Misfortunes of Europe (m), and eſpecially the War between France and Spain in 1635. He obſerves that the Cardinal declar'd this War without conſulting either the States of the Kingdom or the Parliaments. (n) Galliæ bellis civilibus, & extraneis adhuc vigentibus, admodum attenuatæ, Cardinalis Richelius, inconſultis Regni comitiis, aut Senatibus, ſed ſponte propria, horrendum bellum inter Reges Galliæ & Hiſpaniæ declaravit, quod adhuc perdurat, quamvis omnia paſſim ad extremam deſolationem redacta conſpiciantur. See what Mr. Bernier anſwer'd, who accuſed him of Ingratitude, and of ſpeaking evil of the Perſon of Lewis XIII. and even of invalidating the Royal Authority: (o) An-ne, quantumve ſit crimen publice efferre, non poſſe Chriſtianiſſimum Regem indicere bellum, inconſultis Comitiis, aut Senatibus, diſceptare meum non eſt——verum jus belli indicendi abſtuliſſe Regi, ut illud tranferres in Cardinalem Richelium, non video qui poſſit id crimen à publicis ac Regiis animadverſoribus tolerari. Præterea quam injurius, & ingratus ſis adverſus tantum Cardinalem, à quo tot bona accepiſti, & cui maledicere tamen tam privatim quam publice non deſinis, eo dumtaxat nomine, quod exſtatuere immenſam tuam aviditatem noluerit, dum, ob tuam illam chimæram longitudinum inventarum, contendiſti tibi ab illo deberi montes aureos. Nempe hoc loco illi attribuis non modo uſurpatam tyrannice authoritatem, &c.

(m) Qui bellis per totam Europam excitatis pluribus hominum millionibus ferro, flamma, fame, peſte, aliiſque modis cauſa mortis extitit. Ibid. 23. pag. 613. Pluribus per totam Europam ferro, flammis, ſanguine, fame, peſte, & cadaveribus horridam, idem contra Cardinalem deprecantibus, quod olim Brutus poſt cladem Philippicam noctu aſtra intuens contra Antonium, ex Apiano, Jupiter ut feras, qui horum eſt cauſa malorum. Ib. p 647.

(n) Id in Diſſert.de atomis & vacuo, p. 31.

(o) Berner. Anatom. ridiculi muris, p. 192, 193.

(F) That his Horoſcopes often foretold the truth] His firſt Eſſay was that of foretelling the Impriſonment of the Biſhop of Boulogne; but his Maſterpiece this way, and what gave him a mighty Reputation in his Art, was the foretelling that Lewis XIII ſhould be ſeiz'd with a dangerous Diſtemper at Lions, but not die of it. Præſignificatus Bononienſi Præſuli carcer——quaſi primum in hac facultate ſpecimen Morino fuiſſe dici poteſt. Ab hoc tyrocinio magiſterium aſſecutus eſt Ludovico XIII Lugdunum ægrotante (a) The Queen-Mother alarm'd at the fatal Predictions of ſome other Aſtrologers, writ to Cardinal de Berulle, deſiring he would prevail with John Baptiſt Morin to calculate the King's Horoſcope Morin readily obey'd, and found by the Stars that the King's Sickneſs ſhould be great, but not mortal His Prediction was right, and met with a Royal Recompence. The other Aſtrologers were ſent away to the Galleyes. (b) Quod cum ex prædicto contigiſſet ſplendidam vati ſuo mercedem ac Rege dignam contulit, cæteris qui malè monuerant, ad remum (c) amandatis, forſitan quod minimè juſſi in annos Principis inquiſiſſent. Hereupon we are aſſured he (d) was the only Perſon permitted to contemplate the King's Stars, as heretofore there was only one Perſon, who had the privilege of Painting Alexander the Great. One of the Phyſicians (e) of Lewis XIII. propoſed the erecting a new place of Court-Aſtrologer in favour of Morin who ſhould be a kind of Aſſiſtant to his Majeſty's Phyſicians. His having frequently experienc'd the Truth of this Man's Predictions, was what induced him to make this Motion However the Project did not take Is Morinum vera ex ſideribus vaticinantem cum ſæpius comperiſſet, ac crebro ejus operam feliciter atque utiliter expertus eſſet, multis cum meritis ſibi planè addixit, hocque agitaverat animo, & ipſa re jam ſatagebat cum Aſtrologum inter aulica miniſteria conſtituendum eſſe, qui primario medicorum Regis comes eſſet adjumento futurus, & quidem ex (f) Galeni placito. Morin having ſent word that Lewis XIII. was threatned with ſome ill Accident, this Prince was adviſ'd not to ſtir abroad that Day. He kept up all the Morning, but after Dinner, being weary of his Confinement, he would ride out a Setting and got a fall. Don't let Morin know it, ſays he, 'twill make him too proud. (f) Pomeridiano tempore continere pertæſus aviculæ ponit retia jubet, dumque ipſe attentus ea tendere non advertens concidit, funeſtus tibiis alligato, qui ſcindi nec mora debuit. Rex aſſurgens, cavete, inquit, Morinus riſeat, nimium ex caſu meo rumoris admitteret. Cardinal ceſſum eſt Alexandrum in tabula pingere. Vita Morini ibid.

(a) Vita Morini, p. 13. n. 61.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Compare with this what has been ſaid in the Article Lutorius.

(d) Morino ſoli regalem horoſcopum intueri ac examinare licebat, ut olim uni Apelli conceſſum eſt Alexandrum in tabula pingere. Vita Morini ibid.

(e) Vautier, who had been firſt Phyſician to Marie de Medicis

(f) Vita Morini, p. 13. n. 62.

(i) Morin. ubi ſupra l. 23. p. 613.

(k) This relates to his Journey to Rouſſillon in 1642.

(l) Teſtan ur quidem omnes Aſtronomi me ſcientiam illam perfectè demonſtraſſe, ſed Cardinalis Richelius perfidia & proditione Commiſſariorum meorum me promiſſo præmio inique fraudavit. Morin. ubi ſupra lib. 24 pag. 687.

(i) Lib. 3. de diebus decretoriis.

retold the Truth. He was not very fortunate in his Predictions concerning a Secretary of State, who depended very much (G) on his Aſtrological Oracles. He publiſh'd dinal Richelieu (g) having an intereſt to know whether Guſtavus Adolphus was long liv'd, ſent the Hour of this Prince's Nativity to Morin, who miſs'd but by a few Days of ſhewing the time of this great Warriour's Death, and that Miſtake happen'd only for want of noting the Hour of his Birth with the neceſſary exactneſs; ſome Minutes were amiſs in it over or under. Something like this we are told of Guſtavus's Sword, which fell into Morin's Hands: The Figures are deſcribed which this Aſtrologer obſerv'd on it, for he was skill'd it ſeems in the Taliſmanick Art. They add (h), that Cardinal Richelieu had a very good Opinion of our Morin's Skill, that he got him to calculate his own Horoſcope, and would not ſet out on his Journey to Perpignan before he had conſulted this Aſtrological Oracle, who was out but ten Hours as to the time of his Eminence's Death (i). Having ſeen the Scheme of Cinqmar's Nativity without knowing whoſe it was, he ſaid that Man would loſe his Head. I omit a World of other Inſtances, a Catalogue of which is given us, and only ſay, that 'tis pretended the greateſt Objections againſt him were, that he was miſtaken (k) ten Days in the Death of Lewis the Juſt, and (l) ſixteen in the Death of the Conſtable de Leſdiguieres; and had not given his Benefactreſs Mary de Medicis the requiſite Aſſiſtance in his way; for this good Queen often complain'd, that the Aſtrologers had been the cauſe of her Misfortunes. The Anſwer on the laſt of theſe Heads is this, that Morin never had conſulted the Stars about the Deſtiny of this Queen, and being order'd to do it a few Days before ſhe left the Kingdom, he had not time to finiſh his Calculations. The Queen departed without giving Morin notice, and without ſtaying till her Horoſcope was taken. (m) Cur amabo fidelium illi ad eo peritus, & per ea rerum futurarum acerrimus indagator, Dominam ſuam Mariam Medicæam meritam de ipſo quam optime nulla opitulationis ab ſtellis obtenta juvit? Sic ajunt æmuli: nonne ſæpius exaggerant iidem de ſuis fatidicis aſtrologis cognita eſt, ſe tanquam à præſtigiatoribus deceptam in tot calamitatum incidiſſe voragines, unde emergere nequiverit? Enumervo quidnam iſti caperata fronte Cenſores dicturi ſunt, ubi audierunt Reginæ hujus nativitatem nunquam à Morino exploratam fuiſſe? cum tamen paucis ante diebus quam ad exteros ſe fuga reciperet, id ipſum fieri juſſerit, aſtrologo autem Morino non admonito re infecta diſceſſiſſe. We ſhall ſpeak below of his Predictions againſt Gaſſendus. I am very ſure the moſt incredulous can't but be pleas'd with the Paſſages which I have here related; becauſe they ſhew how the greateſt Stateſmen (n) ſuffer themſelves to be infatuated with judicial Aſtrology, and that even in the XVIIth Century they have not been exempt from this Phrenzy at the Courts of the greateſt Princes in Europe. Queen Chriſtina (o) was overjoy'd to ſee Morin the firſt time ſhe had been at Paris, and declar'd ſhe took him to be the greateſt Aſtrologer in the World. It's a ſign ſhe had employ'd him in ſome Horoſcops, or had taken the pains to conſider thoſe he had erected. I obſerve that the miſtake of ſix Days in the Death of Lewis the Juſt ſeems to ſignifie nothing, when we conſider it only by a general view; but when we know the Circumſtances of it as related by Gaſſendus, we can't forbear ſaying, that it was one of the greateſt Mortifications an Aſtrologer could receive.

GASSENDUS relates how Morin paid him a Viſit the 29th of April 1643, and ſaid to him, I remember you confeſs'd to me five or ſix Months a go, that if I could notifie the Day on which a certain great Perſon ſhould die, on whoſe Horoſcope I had taken much pains, and who was then indiſpoſed, you would look on it as a convincing Proof both of my Capacity, and of the Excellence of my Art. I now come to acquaint you that the King will die upon the eighth of May next. Gaſſendus has not forgot to obſerve, that Morin had given him no Anſwer concerning this great Perſon (p) who was ill at that time, and who died ſoon after. He obſerves alſo, that about the [illegible] of April 1643, the Phyſicians declar'd, that Lewis XIII. would die in a ſhort time, but as to the Day of his Death, there was a diſagreement among 'em. Morin declar'd to Gaſſendi, that the third of May would be extreamly dangerous to this Monarch, who however ſhould linger out five Days longer and no more. Gaſſendi without dwelling on the Conſideration, that this Prognoſtick was made, at a time when there was no hopes of the King's Recovery, waited for the Event as a thing that might be of ſome Conſequence to Aſtrology, ſince he had no reaſon to ſuſpect that the Symptomes obſerv'd by the Phyſicians, ſerv'd as a Foundation to Morin's Prediction, and knew withal, that this Aſtrologer had ſtudied the Nativity of Lewis XIII with infinite Application, and boaſted that he had by it diſcover'd the Days of each particular Incident in the Courſe of this Monarch's Life. If therefore his Art had any kind of certainty, it muſt be in relation to the laſt Day of the King's Life. By the way, Gaſſendus was inform'd, that Morin had told others, that by the Rules of Aſtrology, the King was in danger of dying not only the eighth of May, and ſome Days preceding, but alſo on the 16th and 17th of the ſame Month. He ſaid nothing of the 14th, which yet was the Day of his Death (q). Thus we manifeſtly ſee, that his pretended Science was illuſive, and that the Miſtake of ſix Days in this Caſe a deciſive Blow.

(G) Concerning a Secretary of State—who depended on his Oracles.] I mean the Count de Chavigni, and ſhall give an inſtance of his extream Credulity with relation to Aſtrology. Having determin'd (r) to go into Provence in 1646, he deſir'd to have Morin along with him, but as this Aſtrologer never undertook any thing without the Approbation of the Stars, he would not venture upon this Journey, except they promis'd him good Succeſs. He therefore deſir'd time to conſult 'em, and after that, promis'd to accompany his Maſter. He deſir'd he would (ſ) leave it to him to chuſe a propitious Hour for their Departure, and aſſured him he had learnt from Experience, how material a thing it is to ſet out in an Enterprize under a favourable Aſpect of the Stars. Mr. Chavigni would conteſt no ſuch Point with him, but aſſured him of his entire ſubmiſſion. Morin found, that the beſt time to ſet out would be upon the 9th of May, nine Minutes after four in the Morning, and deſired that every thing might be ready that Moment. The Orders of the Secretary were ſo punctual and ſo well executed, that every thing was accordingly ready at that inſtant. He had four good Dials in his Garden, on which they obſerv'd for half an Hour together the Approach of the Critical Minute, and took Coach precisely at the time when the ſhadow on the Dial had reach'd this Minute. They arriv'd happily at Antibes: And when Mr. Chavigni, who was Count of it was about to return to Paris, he was inform'd by his Aſtrologer, that 'twas requiſite to conſult the Heavens about the Hour of their departure. He was no leſs tractable now than he had been the firſt time; he order'd every thing to be got ready with ſuch exactneſs, that he and his Retinue were on Horſeback preciſely (a) at twenty ſeven Minutes after four in the Morning of the ſecond of July. Their Return was very proſperous, the Maſter, and Servants, and Horſes arriv'd all in good Health, notwithſtanding the Heat of the Seaſon. But when he came to Paris, he diſcover'd ſome Intrigues of the Court againſt his Fortune. He was accuſed (b) among other things, of having taken an Aſtrologer with him to conſult about the Deſtiny of the King, the Queen, and Cardinal Mazarin, &c. Finding that his Adverſaries had made him greatly ſuſpected, he twice deſir'd Morin to ſpeak whether the Stars threaten'd him with any Misfortune. Morin anſwer'd him they did not, and adviſ'd him to wait on the Cardinal, but premonitſh'd him, that all Hours were not alike propitious, and that he would chooſe him one by the Rules of Aſtrology. He choſe him an Hour in which the tenth Houſe, which is that of Dignities, was (c) very well diſpoſed. Morin follow'd his Directions, and was very well received by the Cardinal. (d) I only relate theſe things to ſhew the Weakneſs of thoſe who ſometimes ſit at the Helm. The Deſtiny of Nations

(g) Ibid. p. 14. n. 65. See alſo Morin, Aſtrolog. Gall. l. 17. p. 399.

(h) Vita Morini, p. 15. n. 74.

(i) Ibid. n. 73.

(k) Ibid. p. 13. n. 63.

(l) Ibid. n. 64.

(m) Ibid. p. 15. n. 76.

(n) See the following Remark.

(o) Quæ primum vice Lutetiam venit Morinum ad videndum accerſiri juſſit, quem in Aſtrologicis omnium perſpicaciſſimum palam & clare teſtata eſt. Vita Morini, p. 16. n. 18.

(p) This was undoubtedly Cardinal Richelieu.

(q) I take this from the 128, & 129. Page of Mr. Bernier's anatomia ridiculi muris, but 'tis a Paſſage which Mr Bernier gives from Gaſſendi's Apology adverſus alas Jo. Morin.

(r) Morin, Aſtrolog Gallica, l. 25. c. 7.

(ſ) Illuſtriſſimum Dominum ——— ab Aſtrologia non alienum rogavi, ut ipſi placeret me diem & horam ad proficiſcendum fortunatam eligere, ſequæ experturum quanti eſſet momenti ſuſcepta ſub congruo cœli ſtatu in choare. Morin. l. p. 778.

(a) Hucque ſe recipiens omnes pro diſceſſu parata ad ipſum momentum, exſpectavitque me cum illuſtriſſimus Dominus in hoc vehiculo, feneſtris ad Orientem apertis donec ſolem ortum conſpexit quo poſtea me ſequi ſine mora conſcendit equum cum toto comitatu. Morin ubi ſupra, p. 782.

(b) Ibid. p. 783.

(c) Ibid. p. 784.

(d) Ibid.

lish'd a World (H) of Books, but had not the satisfaction to see his favourite Work Printed, tions and Kingdoms is in their Hands, whilst their own depends upon the Caprices and Visions of an Astrologer. Their Passions and Ideas have commonly a greater share in the Government, than the Will of the Monarch, because they dextrously infuse into him whatever they have a mind to. And thus whilst they are manag'd by the Counsels of an Astrologer, may it not be said, that the Happiness and Misery of the People depend on this Astrologer? This Secretary of State was (e) named in 1645, for the Embassy of Munster. It's probable he would have taken Morin along with him, to know the Critical Minute when this or that Memoire ought to be presented, or this, or that Answer given. Would not this have been hazarding a thousand good Opportunities of advancing the general Peace so necessary to all Europe? Morin made such account of the Doctrine (f) of Elections, that he believed (g), there was nothing more advantageous to Kings, or their first Ministers, than a Council of three Astrologers who should have the Schemes of Nativity, not only of all the Neighbouring Princes, but also of all the great Men of the Court. By this means, said he, we should know the favourable Conjuncture to begin a War, what Confederate Prince would act first, and what Generals were to be chosen. We should not give the first Command as is usually done to an unsuccessful Prince; we should not take the Year that is most averse to him, and most propitious to the Prince his Enemy; we should not chuse unfortunate Generals: And what I have said, adds he, of War, ought to be applied to the Marriages of Kings, Embassies, &c. Let's now come to the falsities of his Predictions concerning the Count de Chavigni.

He had foretold he should have a fit of Sickness, but said nothing of his Imprisonment: Yet Mr. de Chavigni continued in good Health, but was made a Prisoner. Now see how they excuse this Astrologer: They pretend that he foresaw both the Imprisonment and the Sickness, and was more inclin'd to determine for the former, but did quite the contrary, because Mr. de Chavigni had declar'd, that he laugh'd at any Prediction of his Imprisonment. (h) Ultimum quod insimulant Chavignii carcer est, quæ solum fuit erroris interceptio. cum enim in anima ipsius revolutione ex astris & morbum & carcerem collegerit, & ad carcerem prædicendum proclivior fuisset astrologus, ægritudine tamen rem dissimulat. Namque & ipse Chavignius hujus sortis qui carceris esset, metus dissimulator, aut tale nihil sibi metuens (scilicet quippe apud animum gratissimum esse confidebat) carcerem sibi frustra intentari dixerat; vates itaque noster artis suæ non satis credulus hac vice hallucinatus est. A paltry excuse! He was afterwards charged with being deceived about the Marriage of this Lord's Daughter. I relate Mr. Bernier's Words somewhat at length, because they let us see the knavery of this sort of People: (i) Illis (quos habere amicos vultis & à quibus magnam mercedem speratis) fictæ omnia fausta, ac vitam præcipue longævam fœlicemque; nam aliqua quidem hîsce, illisque utpote ex excelsa prosapia; sed longinqua est siderum aspectus, qui malas portentosas, illa superanda præsignificet. Sæpe etiam ne fi quid in dispergere odium, ac invidiam possit; cum loquuti ad gratiam, & juxta mundi vulgi placita, spem nam illos inflatos, quod de illis eadem sentiant, mirum quibus vos, artemque vestram divis devoveant. Id vero, ut tibi imprimis caveriger, familiare est, cui publicitus exprobrata sunt mendacia propè, & nota publicè exempla, ut circa filiam illustris Comitis Cinchonæ; ut circa filium illustris Præsidis Galliæ; ut circa Præfectum ærarii Bullonicum; ut circa [illegible] ex quo causa casus insultibus, litem intentatam coram Medice sancta Genovefæ

(H) He complain'd of the abundance of Books.] Since I have already spoken (k) of the first, I shall here begin with the second. It was Printed in 1623, under the Title of Athenæum earum domorum catalogus. In 1624 (l) not being able to answer by word of Mouth (as he had prepared for it) the Theses which Antony Villon (m) would maintain, he answer'd them in Writing. This Villon, who commonly went by the Name of the Philosophical Soldier, had posted up Theses against Aristotle's Doctrine, which were to be defended at the late Queen Margaret's Palace. The Assembly was very numerous, when the first President sent a Prohibition to Villon and his two Companions, not to maintain their Propositions. There was afterwards a Decree of Parliament against them, and against their Theses. See (n) the French Mercury, where you'll find an Abstract of Morin's Writing against the Doctrine of those Innovators. 'Tis said in his Life (o), that this Book got him the Reputation of an able Chymist, and a subtil Philosopher, and upon this occasion we are told a thing which is worth relating. Morin had applied himself to Chymical Operations at the Bishop of Boulogne's, and afterwards had Conferences with the greatest Masters about this Art; he had also convers'd about the great Work with two famous Persons, one of which had seen the Philosopher's Stone, and the other had been present at the Experiments, which one Sylvius had made of his Powder of Projection before the King. This Sylvius was condemn'd for his Crimes; but his Art was no ways reprov'd: His Writings were kept by Cardinal Richelieu, who made use of 'em for finding the Philosoper's Stone at his House at Ruel. (p) Alter Sylvio quodam ipsimet regi sui pulveris experimentum præbente interfuerat, quod quidem enarrare prolixius non est hujus loci; nosse sufficerit ob scelera damnato Sylvio, artis tamen ejus mysterium minime damnatum esse, composita Richelæus Cardinalis ex hujus disciplina damnati, scriptis ab eodem tradita, in fornaculis Ruellianis instituit multa tentari. In 1633, Morin published trigonometriæ canonicæ libros tres; and in 1634, a Book intituled quod Deus sit (q). He Compos'd it in a Geometrical Method, to recover one of his Friends, who was fallen into Atheism. He dedicated it to the Clergy of France, and thought (r) he deserv'd a handsome Pension for it all his Life. He enlarg'd it in 1655 (s), and Re-printed it with this Title, De vera cognitione Dei ex solo naturæ lumine; 'tis the first Book of his Astrologia Gallica. One Peter Baudouin Sieur de Montarcis his old Disciple appear'd against him on occasion of this Treatise, pretending 'twas only the Copy of a Treatise of Richard de St. Victor. He charged him with the same Crime on the same Subject of Plagiarism, with respect to several other of his Writings. This the Author of Morin's Life (t) tells us; but Morin himself says nothing of the matter (u) but on the contrary, that this Mr. de Montarcis had pirated him. This Accusation was doubtless the reason of his Adversary's recriminating and maintaining, that John Baptist Morin was a Plagiary. It were to be wish'd, there was less Confusion, and more Chronological Order, in the Catalogue that is given us of his Works. This Confusion hinders my doing my Duty in this place; for 'twould require more Time and more Books to rectifie it than I have by me. Morin publish'd a Book in 1631, which engag'd him in some Replies; he intituled it, Famosi problematis de telluris motu vel quiete hactenus optata solutio. He declares against Copernicus, and maintaines this first Work against a Physician call'd Lansberg, and against Mr. Boullaud; for he publish'd in 1634, responsio pro telluris motu; and in 1642, Tycho Brahæo in Philolaum pro telluris quiete. The Year following he wrote against Gassend upon the same Subject, as we shall see below. His Dispute upon the Longitudes was no less opinionative: He pretended he had fix'd 'em to a certainty; this appears by his Book Longitudinum terrestrium & cœlestium nova & hactenus optata scientia, publish'd in 1634. The (w) Hollanders had promis'd a Hundred Thousand Francs to him that could make the Discovery: The King of Spain had promis'd three Hundred Thousand: Morin pretended he had merited the Reward, for he thought he had discovered the Longitudes, and had given a demonstrat on of 'em (x) in an Assembly held in the Arsenal at Paris the 30th of March 1634; but that Glory was disputed with him. Some skillful Persons nominated by Cardinal Richelieu were of a different Opinion. George Fromm.us (a) maintain'd, that that Invention was due to Longomontanus: Father du Lors the Pecollect boasted, that he himself had come nearer the matter. Hallangrenus Cosmographer to his Catholick Majesty (b at Brussels, pretended, that 'twas he had made the Discovery. Morin had all these Adversaries upon his Back, and (c) was oblig'd to defend himself by Certificates

(e) Ibid. p. 779. This nomination was revok'd.

(f) Thus the Astrologers call the Choice of the Times, according to the Aspects of the Planets, and the Position of the Heavens.

(g) Morin ibid c. 3. p. 773.

(h) Vita Morini, p 16.n.79.

(i) Berner. Anatomia ridic mutis, p 138. Morin. Defens Differt. p 121. answering Bernier, down what concerns the Daughter of Mr. de Chavigni.

(k) In the Remark A.

(l) See his Life, n. 9. n 38.

(m) He was of Provence Vinc. Panurgus de tribus impostoribus, p. 67.

(n) Tom. 10. p. 504 and the following. ad ann. 1624.

(o) Pag. 9 n. 38.

(p) Vita Morini, ib. n. 39

(q) The Judgment M. Descartes gave of this Book is to be seen in his Life written by Mr. Baillet, tom. 2. p. 118.

(r) Propter quod pensionem congruam in reliquum meæ vitæ tempus meruissem à Comitiis Gallicani Cleri convocatis ann. 1635. Morinus, defens. suæ dissert. de atomis & vacuo, p. 90.

(s) Vita Morin. ib.

(t) Ibid.

(u) Morin. ubi supra, p. 90, 91. He says this Plagiary had publish'd in 1651. Tractatus de fundamentis scientiæ generalis & universalis.

(w) Vita Morini, p. 11. n. 56.

(x) Ibid. n. 51.

(a) Professor at Copenhagen.

(b) Ibid. p. 8. n. 34.

(c) Ibid. p. 12. n. 52.

which had coſt him thirty Years Labour, and did not come out till after his Death. I ſpeak of his * Aſtrologia Gallica. He had among other Adverſaries the (l) famous Gaſſendi.

* See the Remark E.

Certificates againſt the Report made by Cardinal Richelieu's Commiſſioners. He was not diſcourag'd in the leaſt, but maintain'd the affirmative without retracting a Tittle: See the Book he publiſh'd in 1640. Aſtronomia jam a fundamentis integrè & exactè reſtituta. His great Comfort was, that he obtain'd a Penſion in 1645, of two Thouſand Livres. (d) Hunc denique laborem voluit in agro ſterili non periiſſe commonſtrat præmium ab ipſo rege, conſilioque ipſius ſecretiore tandem obtentum, cum enim ipſis annis 1645. libellum ſupplicem obtuliſſet, bina librarum millia in penſionem annuam ex Regii montis abbatia conſecutus eſt. Let's not omit his Aſtrological Notes againſt the Marquéſs de Villemor, nor his Confutation (e) of the Preadamites. This Marquiſs pretended to Aſtrology, and was willing the Publick ſhould know it; for he got a Book on this Subject Printed (f), which is aſcrib'd to Ptolemy. About four Years after Morin attack'd him with a little too much heat, as the writer of his Life (g) confeſſes, excuſing him however on his great Zeal (h) for the truth. I am indebted to Mr. Clement, who ſo well deſerves the Place he is in (i) on account of his Learning and obliging Temper, I am, I ſay, indebted to him for a Catalogue of John Baptiſt Morin's Works, wherein I have found Treatiſes not mention'd by the Writer of his Life: Here are two of this Nature. Ad auſtrales & boreales aſtrologos pro aſtrologia reſtituenda epiſtolæ (k). Letters written to the Sieur Morin, approving his Diſcovery of the Longitudes, and his Anſwer to Herigone (l).

We'll lengthen out this Note to give more light to Morin's Pretenſions about the Longitudes. He maintain'd (m) with the utmoſt confidence, that the Commiſſioners nam'd by the Cardinal ſtarted a thouſand Cavills upon him the day of the Experiment; but that he came off ſo happily as to force 'em to own to the Aſſembly, that his Demonſtrations were good. Ten Days after, continues he, the Sieurs Paſchal, Mydorge, Beaugrand, Boulenger and Herigone (n), met by Order of the Cardinal to examine this Doctrine a-new upon the four Points, which his Eminence preſcrib'd 'em. They gave a Judgment quite contrary to their firſt Declaration, and ſhew'd it the Cardinal, who commanded 'em to publiſh it. Morin appeal'd from them to the moſt famous Aſtronomers of Europe, and obtain'd their Deciſions, condemning the ſecond Sentence of the Commiſſioners. (o) Ab illis Commiſſariis proditus, & à Cardinali Richelio fraudatus promiſſo præmio, de illa ſecunda ſententia provocavi ad celebriores Europæ Aſtronomos quibus ſcripſi librumque meum tranſmiſi, qui omnes ſuis ad me reſponſis primam ſententiam approbarunt, ſecundam vero falſitatis & iniquitatis unanimiter condemnarunt. This did him no kindneſs as long as the Cardinal liv'd, but was not uſeleſs after his Death; for Morin addreſſing himſelf to the King's Counſel, and publiſhing a long relation, obtained Juſtice by a Penſion of two Thouſand Livers. He made it appear, that the Commiſſioners had betray'd their Conſcience to pleaſe the Cardinal. I relate this as I find it in his own Book; but I give little credit to it. (p) Poſtulatamen meam narratoriam quanta potui arte compoſui, ut evidentiſſime pateret injuſtitia in me perpetrata à Cardinali Richelio, quam conabar exteſſe Commiſſarios meos ut ſuam in me ſecundam ferrent ſententiam primæ ac veræ prorſus contrariam. He eſpecially meant the Sieur Herigone, and wrote violently againſt him. He denies that he was his Diſciple. See the Margin (q).

(l) [Amongſt other Aids to ſave the famous Gaſſendi] The Original of the Diſpute was this. In 1642, Gaſſendi Printed two Letters which he had written to Peter du Puy, de motu impreſſo à motore tranſlato. Here he ſtoutly reaſons againſt their Objections, who ſay the Earth does not move: Morin was one of 'em, and a great Adverſary to Copernicus. He therefore believ'd himſelf the Perſon attack'd, and complain'd, that Gaſſendi violating the Laws of their ancient Friendſhip, became the Aggreſſor. In a word, he took Pen in Hand and publiſh'd a Book (r) againſt Gaſſendi in 1643. Gaſſendi anſwer'd it (ſ) the ſame Year, without any heat, but with much ſtrength of Reaſon. He forbore publiſhing this Book, and oblig'd himſelf to ſuppreſs it for ever, when he was reconcil'd to Morin (t) by the Mediation of the Baron of Tourves: It was Printed for all this in 1649, with a violent Preface Compos'd by Neuré the Author's Friend. Gaſſendi excus'd himſelf upon it to Morin, and proteſted he knew nothing of the Printing this Piece (v). His Letter was publiſh'd by Morin in a Poſtcript to a Book of his. Gaſſendi writ him another Letter, complaining of his having publiſh'd the former. But Morin yet farther Printed a fragment of this ſecond Letter, together with a new Libel. Hereupon Gaſſendi broke off all Correſpondence with him, and ſcorn'd to take any more notice of the Writings of ſuch an Adverſary! But his Friends reſented the thing in another manner; they publiſh'd his ſecond Letter entire, and reſolv'd to ſcout this Aſtrologer. Accordingly when his Diſſertation came out de Atomis & Vacuo, publiſh'd at Paris in 1658, againſt Epicurus's Philoſophy, which Gaſſendi had (w) ſet forth, they handled it unmercifully. Bernier publiſh'd a Book (x) intit'led anatomia ridiculi muri, which was followed two Years after by the favilla ridiculi muris, in which he quite confounds the Apology which Morin Printed to his Diſſertation (y). This enrag'd him to that degree, that he Printed (z) a Book with this Title; Vincentii Panurgi epiſtola de tribus impoſtoribus. Theſe three Impoſtors were Gaſſendi, Bernier and Neuré.

He was chiefly expos'd on his preſuming to foretell that Gaſſendi ſhould be ſeiz'd with a mortal Diſtemper in 1650, and that the effects of it ſhould appear either at the end of July, or the beginning of Auguſt. This Aſtrological Prediction was falſe, and drew on the Author a terrible Peal of Reproaches and Inſults. Quæ providentia factum dicam, they are Mr. Bernier's Words (aa), ô rerum humanarum inaniſſime, fatuiſſimeque Morine! ut ultro mihi præbueris anſam, quam captare ab aliquot elapſis menſibus geſtiebam (neque ego ſolus, ſed multi etiam alii, quibus moritura [illegible] ſi ut propalarem, ſollicet mendaciloquium illud inſigne, quo in æternum opprobrium tuæ damnatæ aſtrologiæ anſus es ſcurrè atque impudenter prædicere ter, & publicis etiam ſcriptis evulgare. Gaſſendum mortali morbo laboraturum, & vim morbi extremam, ex qua deberet ejus mors conſequi, futuram in ipſomet Julii, Auguſtique confinio ſuperioris anni milleſimi ſexcenteſimi quinquageſimi. Morin (bb) anſwer'd, as all falſe Prophets do, that he did not poſitively foretell Gaſſendi's Death that Year, but only warned him of a mortal Danger, which might be avoided by good Precautions. One of his Antagoniſts was more exact than Mr. Bernier, for he acknowledg'd the Aſtrologer's Reſtrictions (cc) Aſtrologus Morinus ad ſubterfugiendam amplius ſuarum prædictionum certitudinem jam ſat ex aſtris ac divinat, ſed cum præcautionibus conſuetis Almanachiſtarum quod D. Geſſendus moriatur anno 1650. But notwithſtanding all his little Precautions, the Aſtrologer deſerv'd to be expos'd as he was. I ſhan't relate all that Gaſſendi (dd) has obſerv'd upon it, but content my ſelf with theſe words of his Abridger. "(ee) Here I might particularly re-
" late the Horoſcope (ff) of Mr. Naudé, a Mem" ber of the great Council, in which we might ſee
" that the Aſtrologer John Baptiſt Morin who caſt
" ed it, has ſucceeded much like Abraham in " that of Mr. Saſſeray; but 'tis all to full of Fool-
" eries and Banters, and falſe Events, and ſmells
" ſo ſtrong of the Fortune-teller and Gipſy, whoſe
" end is only to deceive and get a piece of Mo" ney, that I can hardly think of it with pa" tience. I ſhall only ſay to the eternal Shame of " this Aſtrologer Morin, that perceiving Mr Gaſ-
" ſendi, who made a Profeſſion of his judicial Aſtrology,
" was intirely and for ever ſunk in Deſpair on his " Lung, he was ſo impudent as to foretell and " publiſh to the World in a Printed Paper,
" that

(a) Ibid. n. 54.

(c) Refutatio compendioſa erronei ac deteſtandi libri de Præadamitis. Ib. p. 10 n. 45.

(f) Centiloquium Ptolemæo vulgò adſcriptum. Ib. n. 43.

(g) Si quid in eis eſt quod quiſpiam jure poſſit carpere, non diffitebor contra Authorem hunc nobilem calentis ingenii leves quoſdam inſultus haberi. Ib.

(b) Præfervidi erat, neque ſat tolerantis animi, ſed qui amore veritatis caleret ardentius. Ibid.

(i) At Paris in the King's Library

(k) Printed in 1628. in 8.

(l) Printed in 1635. in 4°.

(m) Morin. Aſtrologia Gall. l. 23 p. 603.

(n) They were Commiſſioners in that Cauſe.

(o) Morin. ubi ſupra.

(p) Ibid.

(q) Fallitur præceptorem. Nam dum in illum ſcripſi, quod fuiſſet ignarus, perfidus & proditor Judex in mea Longitudinum cauſa: pro ſua defenſione mihi reſpondens mania, non oblitus fuiſſet mihi exprobrare, quod ejus fuiſſem diſcipulus [illegible] Morin. in defenſ. aſſert. p. 107.

(r) Intitul. ex Ala telaris tractat.

(ſ) His Confutation is contain'd in the 3d Letter of the Treatiſe de motu impreſſo à motore tranſlato, Oper. to. 3 edit. Lugdun. 1658.

(t) Morin in defenſ. diſſertat. p. 21.

(v) Ibid. Secretaire Anatomiſte ridiculi muris p. 8.

(w) At Lyons in 1649. in 3 vol. in fol.

(x) At Paris in 1651.

(y) At Paris in 1651.

(z) At Paris in 1654.

(aa) Bernierus in Anatom. ridiculi muris, p. 127.

(bb) Mor. in defenſ. diſſertat. p. 114.

(cc) Apud Morin. ib. p. 112.

(dd) Gaſſend Phyſicæ, ſect. 2 l. 6 p. 747. to 1. Operum.

(ee) Bernier, Abregé de la Philoſophie de Gaſſendi, tom. 4. p. 385, 386 edit. de 1684.

(ff) See it in Grafſeus ib. p. 744, 745.

Gaſſendi. He died at Paris the ſixth of November 1656, and was buried in his Pariſh Church of St. Stephen du Mont *. What Guy Patin has ſaid of him (K) deſerves relating.

* Taken from his Life Printed in Latin before his Aſtrologia Gallica. I could not find that which was Printed in French at Paris in 1660, in 12°.

" that he ſhould die about the latter end of July, " or the beginning of Auguſt 1650; pretending " hereby to erect a Trophy to his Aſtrology; in " the mean time Gaſſendi was never better than at " that time, and he to gather'd up ſtrength, that on " the fifth of February the next Year (gg) we " walk'd I remember up the Mountain of Toulon to " make the Experiment of a Vacuum.

'Tis pleaſant enough to ſee how many Evaſions Morin made uſe of, when his Predictions fail'd. He ſuppos'd, that the Influences of the Stars did not act neceſſarily, and that a wiſe Man could over-rule 'em. (a) Poteſt qui ſciens eſt (hoc eſt qui propria vel alterius ſcientia monitus eſt) multos ſtellarum affectus avertere, ex Ptolemæo Aphor. 5. centiloquii. Qui eſt ipſemet Aphoriſmus quem citat D. Thomas, dum ſuperius dixit ſapiens dominabitur aſtris. Applying this to his Prediction againſt Gaſſendi, He obſerves that this Philoſopher avoided the Blow (b) by good and ſalutary Precautions, by a regular Diet, and moderate Exerciſes, and by removing to Toulon where the Air was more agreeable to his Conſtitution. He adds, that perhaps the fear of the Prediction (c) made him pray to God more earneſtly to preſerve his Health, and that his Prayers being heard contradicted Aſtrology, which otherwiſe would not have been Erroneous. (d) Deinde etiamſi data prædictio mea Tabellioni, ſuiſſet quò ad effectum ab Aſtris naturaliter inevitabilis, nonne Gaſſendus prædictionis meæ conſcius ex ſupra poſitis, potuiſſet ut Ezechias lib. 4. Reg. cap. 20. rogare DEUM ſecretò, quo ipſum à morbo vel morte liberaſſet ſupernaturaliter, ſicque deluſus & adhuc profalſo propheta habitus fuiſſem? Nonne ægroti & nautæ in procella de vita naturaliter deſperantes votis liberantur ——, His ergo omnibus ſupernaturaliter liberatis, nunquid Aſtrologus mortem eo tempore prædictam ex cauſis naturalibus, pro falſo Propheta erit habendus? Certe non magis quam Jonas, qui ex ipſius DEI verbo Niniviten, & urbis & hominum univerſalem prædixit ſubverſionem; quæ tamen non eſt ſubſecuta, quod inſigni pœnitentiâ à Rege ad minimum pecus, ſibi præcaverint adverſus iram DEI, qui illorum miſertus eſt. Courage Gentlemen Aſtrologers, you can never be baffled, while you ſhelter your ſelves under Scripture Examples. Threaten what you pleaſe, Death, Exile, Impriſonment; promiſe on the contrary, Health, Riches, Honours: Happen what will, you have an Anſwer at hand. Thoſe whom you promis'd good Fortune to, which they never enjoy'd, did not carry themſelves a-right: They did not pray to God devoutly. They whom you threatn'd with Misfortunes were Prudent and Devout: This puts me in mind of the Commentators on the Revelation, who having promis'd a Deliverance that never came to paſs, imputed it to the ill Morals of their Neighbours. This is a ſure Sanctuary. Let us not forget two good Reflexions of Gaſſendi's Diſciples. 1. That it is a piece of Impudence puniſhable by the Magiſtrate, to publiſh, that this or that Perſon ſhall die in ſuch an Year; for how many are there whom ſuch a Menace is able to kill? (e) Fieri nihil poſſe impudentius, quam mortem homini viventi publico ſcripto prædicere, eſſe nihil virgâ cenſoriâ publicique cognitoris animadverſione dignius, quam captandæ mortis occaſionem ingerere, quam oculos omnium in unum, quaſi in communi aliquod ſpectaculum, convertere; quam illi ſi credulus fuerit, (uti nemo ſive non eſt) cauſam mortis objecere; cum conſtet multos ex ſolo mortis hoc modo prænunciatæ metu, morbum, mortemque contraxiſſe —— (f) Ecqua eſt certe vindictæ ſpecies adverſus credulum inimicum major, quam ut illi prædicatur ab Aſtrologo futurum, ut tali tempore moriatur, aut in gravi mortis periculo ſit; cum exinde nihil fieri poſſit illius animo ærumnoſius, nihil, quod, ob cauſam jam dictam, poſſit illi magis & morbum, & mortem inducere? 2. That ſuch Prophets are almoſt unavoidably engag'd in Unchriſtian Practices, which is to be curiouſly inquiſitive after the State of thoſe they have threatn'd; and to be grieved at their Health: For where's the Man who had not rather ſee the Perſon go to his Grave, whoſe Death he has foretold, than to find himſelf expos'd to the Infamy of being a falſe Prophet? Permiſit Deus durare adhuc te, ſi forte acturus pœnitentiam fores; cum ob mala alia, tum ob id, quod ipſemet volens faciſtis tibi neceſſitatem experiendi mort in tui proximi, ut cogereris deluſæ artis, prædictionisque ſuiſ convictæ eam confuſionem ſuſtinere, quæ ad deſperationem te adigeret (g).

During this Quarrel ſeveral Stories were publiſh'd againſt Morin. They reproach'd him amongſt other Things; 1. With being a School Maſter, till 40 Years of Age, and then being ſeen (h) with a Pen behind his Ear, and his Desk at his Girdle, asking from Door to Door if any one would learn to Read and Write, or caſt Account for ſo much a Month. 2. That he (i) promis'd a young Gentleman, whoſe Scheme he had erected, great ſucceſs in Arms, and eſpecially in Duells; which occaſion'd the Youths growing Quarrelſome, and fighting one for a ſmall Offence who kill'd him. They added, that the Gentleman's Elder Brother hearing of Morin's Prediction, diſcharg'd his Fury on the Aſtrologer's Shoulders, that the Blows were ſo heavy as to oblige the Surgeons to draw up a verbal Proceſs, and that the Complaint was brought into the Court of St. Genevieve; but that the Fathers of the Chriſtian Doctrine interpos'd to ſtop the Suit, cauſing a good Sum to be given to the batter'd Perſon, which he receiv'd as the ſweeteſt Conſolation. 3. That he was ſordidly Covetous, work'd at his Horoſcopes only to get Money by 'em. He anſwers the firſt Reproach (k) by proving, that from the time he was admitted Phyſician, till he was made Profeſſor of Mathematicks, he had liv'd either with the Biſhop of Boulogne, or the Abbot of Bretonniere, or the Duke of Luxembourg. Obſerve, that he was but thirty Years old when he was made Doctor of Phyſick. See the laſt Remark. He (l) confutes the ſecond Reproach, by maintaining, that if they enquire of his Neighbours, and particularly of Mr Colletet, or of the Judges of St. Genevieve, or of the Fathers of the Chriſtian Doctrine, they'll find that they never heard of this Adventure. Laſtly, he ſays, that he is not Covetous, nor never was, and that the Stars ſhew him to be as Liberal as Gaſſendi is Niggardly, according to the Scheme of his Nativity He maintains, that private Lectures of Aſtrology had been worth to him an Hundred Thouſand Francs, if he would have taken all the Scholars that he might have had: But that he had always refus'd even thoſe who were Eminent for their Quality: That he need only inſtance his Nieces: God has provided for 'em, ſays he, by my Labours and Expences. I have put two of them into the Convents of Villa Franca; and as to the third who has a mind to an Husband, I have a Thouſand Crowns in ready Money for her Portion whenever a Match offers. (m) Nec curent amplius de pecuniis nec. ſſariis ad conjugia nepotularum mearum —— Placuit enim DEO ſuam erga illas providentiam exercere meis laboribus atque expenſis: duas enim feci Religioſas Francopoli, in Monaſteriis B. Mariæ Viſitationis, & Divæ Urſulinæ; & quia nubere vult tertia, ad hujus præſentaneam dotem, ſeorſim repoſita ſunt à me librarum tria millia. Quod abſit à me dici vanitatis gratia: ſed duntaxat ad repellendum à me tetrum illud avaritiæ ſordidæ crimen, quod mihi imponit Anatomiſta murium. Etenim pro tenuitate mea etiam à pueru fui ſemper liberalis; quippe tantum natus ad liberalitatem, quantum Gaſſendus ad avaritiam, ut ex utriuſque figuris cœleſtibus atque vitâ patebit, nulliſque unquam peperci ſumptibus pro veritatis & honoris mei defenſione. Siquæ lucri & pecuniarum fuiſſem cupidus, plus quam centum millia librarum mihi comparaſſem Pariſiis, ex privatis ſolum Aſtrologiæ lectionibus; ſed nullos habere volui diſcipulos etiam Magnates, mihi qualem voluiſſem mercedem offerentes. In another (n) Book he acquaints the Publick, that he had Married her as ſhe deſir'd, notwithſtanding the Misfortunes of the War. This is no ſuch mighty Matter, for he confeſſes his (o) annual Income was about four Thouſand Francs. He acknowledges he was oblig'd to Aſtrology for this Fortune: It was by that he got into the good Graces of Marie de Medicis, who procur'd him the Profeſſorſhip (p).

(K) What Guy Patin has ſaid of him] " (q) I " hear that the Aſtrologia Gallica of the Sieur John " Morin a Native of Villa Franca in Beaujolois, ſome" time Doctor of Phyſick at Valence (r), the King's " Profeſſor in Mathematicks in our College Roy" al, is at laſt finiſh'd at the Hague in Holland. I " am told there are a great many abuſive Reflexi" ons in it on the Phyſicians of Paris, and o" thers

(a) Morin in defenſ. diſſertat. p. 114.

(b) Ibid. p. 116, 117.

(c) Fortaſſis Giaſſendus mortem admodum metuens, nec omnino ſuæ conſidens rigidæ diætæ, DEUM precatus eſt, qui ipſum exaudivit. Ib. p. 120.

(d) Ibid. p. 119.

(e) Bernerius, Anatomia ridiculi muris, p. 133, 134.

(f) Ibid. p. 137.

(g) Ibid. p. 136.

(h) Me calamo ſupra aurem & ſcriptorio in latere, oſtiatim mendicaſſe Scholaſticum, ut ſtipendio menſurno docerem legere, ſcribere & computare. Morin. in d. finſ. d. ſſertat. p. 106.

(i) Ibid. p. 108.

(k) Morin. in defenſ. diſſertat. p. 106, 107.

(l) Ibid. p. 108.

(m) Ibid. p. 120.

(n) In præfat. Aſtrolog. Gallicæ, p. 31. See his words, Tertiam ad votum ſuum marito copulavi etiam difficillimis bellorum noſtrorum temporibus.

(o) Ibid.

(p) Ibid.

(q) Guy Patin, lettre 233. datée du 18. Fevrier 1661. p. 319 du 2. tome.

(r) He ſhould have ſaid of Avignon.

lating: He ſpeaks of him as of a Fool; and it's certain there was a ſpice of Madneſs in that Head of his. This Gentleman was ſtrangely perplex'd about his having told, that (L) Antichriſt was Born. But as abſurd as he was in moſt of his Principles, he was well appriz'd of one thing, in which the Peripateticks are never to be undeceived, viz. that all they teach concerning ſubſtantial Forms, is (M) infinitely impertinent. We

" others who won't approve Judicial Aſtrology, " or Chymiſtry; and I don't wonder at it, for " the Man was Mad: There are two Volumes of " it in Folio. The Queen of Poland has given two " Thouſand Crowns towards the Charge of the " Edition, at the inſtance of a Secretary of hers " who is fond of Aſtrology. Thus you ſee how " Princes are chous'd: If it were a good Book " that might be uſeful to the Publick, could no " Printer or Bookſeller be found that would un- " dertake it?" He had ſaid in another Letter (f), " I have yet another Death to tell you of. " 'Tis that of the Sieur Morin of Beaujolois, King's " Profeſſor in Mathematicks. So that you ſee " him dead at the Year's end as well as Mr. Gaſ- " ſendi: But there's no danger of their biting one " another now; for one lies at St. Nicolas in the " Fields, the other at St. Stephen's on the Hill. One " was a very ſober Man, the other crack-brain'd " and half mad: But be it how it will, 'tis cer- " tain their Noſes will be much of a length in the " other World in ſpite of all the Mathematicks, " and all the pretended judicial Aſtrology, which " Morin was bewitch'd with." It's true, that Morin's Aſtrologia Gallica was Printed at the Hague in 1661. But its only one Volume in Folio, divided into twenty ſix Books. The Author was thirty Years about it: He hop'd to have liv'd to ſee it out of the Preſs (a); for he had already ſent the fourteen firſt Books to the Holland Bookſeller, but Death came on and cut off that Hope. There are two Epiſtles Dedicatory before this Volume; one is the Author's to JESUS CHRIST, the other is by an anonymous Hand to Louiſa Mary de Gonzague, Queen of Poland. This Princeſs encourag'd Morin to this great Labour, and paid the Charges of the Impreſſion. (b) Authori animum ne tanto operi deſſet, ſubſidium ut illud in publicum proferret, regali cura, regali munificentia addidiſti. When there was a talk of Marrying her to ſome ſmall Prince, Morin declar'd, that this Marriage would never take effect, and that ſhe was deſtin'd to Marry a Monarch. This was one of his beſt Predictions; and the Author of his Life makes the moſt of it. At quam omnibus ſuis partibus abſolutum fuit vaticinium illud Mariæ, tunc Principi, nunc vero Reginæ Poloniæ ab Morino editum! de futuro ipſius conjugio cum illuſtriſſimo Principe dicebatur rumor, quod quidem potiſſimum illi fuiſſet, ac plurimæ dignitatis: nihilominus tamen haud ineundum foro noſtro aſſruit, cum Regem ei conjugem aſtra pollicerentur (c). I could eaſily believe, that he had the impudence to make this Prediction: For beſides that this Princeſs was a Royal Match, and probably enough might Marry a King; we muſt know, that Morin was naturally very fool-hardy, and had a great many back Doors to ſave himſelf by (d), in caſe his Prediction prov'd falſe. Beſides this Lady had a great confidence in Aſtrology, and 'tis to ſuch the Aſtrologers moſt ventuouſly promiſe Dignities. The Abbot de Marolles, who perfectly knew her, deſerves to be cited. " Another time, ſays he (e), ſpeaking againſt " judicial Aſtrology at the Princeſſe's, who was " very well inclin'd in favour of it, becauſe of " the advantage and ſatisfaction there was in " knowing Futurities, I had againſt me not on- " ly her Secretary, who was a Man of Senſe, and " vers'd in this Science, and her firſt Phyſician " Auguſtine Corade, who practiſes with ſo much " ſucceſs, but alſo the Abbot of Belozane, and ſome " others." We need not wonder at her Expences on a Book, the Author of which had flatter'd her betimes with the hopes of a Crown, which ſhe then actually wore. 'Tis poſſibly to this Aſtrological Promiſe ſhe alluded, when ſhe gave the following Anſwer. " (f) She was at the Pallace " of Orleans, where at the Abbot de la Riviere told " her, he paſſionately deſir'd to ſee her Mon- " ſieur's Wife; ſhe reply'd laughing, that Mon- " ſieur was not a King, and that ſhe was deſtin'd " to be a Queen." The Abbot de Marolles tells this, where he relates what Viſits ſhe made after the Ceremony of her Marriage with the King of Poland.

(f) The 8th. It's dated the 7th of November 1656. See p. 419. of the 1ſt tom. of Patin's Letters.

(a) Jam editionis hujus operis triginta annos integros accuratiſſimè limati ſtabat in procinctu libroſque quatuordecim priores ad Typographum Batavum tranſtulerat cum id meditantem mors oppreſſit. Vita Morin. p. 22. n. 55.

(b) Epiſt. dedicat.

(c) Vita Morini, p. 14. n 72.

(d) See the Remark of this Article.

(e) Memiores, p. 148. ad ann. 1643.

(f) Memoires, 166. ad ann. 1645.

(L) That Antichriſt was born.] And was immediately to appear, and in a little time to make all the Conqueſts which Tradition promiſes him. When Morin was ask'd, how it was poſſible for Antichriſt to ſeize on ſo many fortify'd Towns; he anſwer'd, that he would ſend an Army of Magicians from the Clouds, who ſhould ſwallow up the Soldiers and Inhabitants. Almoſt half Mankind, added he, are Magicians, as they aſſure us, who have been at the Devil's Sabbath; and all Magicians are Military Men. (g) Eccui enim jam fabula non es ob famoſam illam non modo adventantis, ſed etiam jam pro foribus exiſtentis Antichriſti prædictionem; de qua dum ex te quæreretur, an poſſet tam cito, ac ipſe efferres, expugnare Antichriſtus tot arces munitiſſimas; Solitus fuiſti excipere; cum ex relatu eorum, qui ex Sabbatis Magorum adveniunt, dimidia pene hominum pars in Magis ſit, ac Magi omnes milites ſint, qui Satanæ nomen dederint, quique ab Antichriſto, tanquam ſummo Duce deducendi in militiam ſunt; fore, ut cum vol.t Antichriſtus expugnare urbes, quæ ſpontaneam ſui dedit onem non fecerint, eam Magorum nubem emittat ſuſum in aerem, quæ ſuperne irruens ſtragem tam civium, quam militum immanem edat. The Author of his Life makes three Excuſes for him. 1. That he had read in a Book of Cardinal Cuſani, that the Oracles of Scripture fix the end of the World to the Year 1675. In the 2d place, that Alabaſter, a Man excellently vers'd in the Cabala and the Bible, had publiſh'd the ſame thing. 3. That many diſpoſſeſs'd People in ſeveral Countries had declar'd to their Exorciſts, that the Beaſt of the Revelation was born. (h) Cardinalis Cuſani ſcriptoris minime contemnendi conjecturam de ultimis temporibus legerat, quo libro ad annum 1675. totius orbis terminus ac interitus ex literis aſtrorum inſpiratis. Id ne ſcripſit Anglus Alabaſter in rubarum ſpiraculis libro cæco, author, inquam, Orientis ignotus, & ſcripturas & Cabalam mirifice callens. Complurium exorc ſmorum qui habentur excuſi volutarat Morinus hiſtorias, in quibus paſſim Energumeni ex variis regionibus natam eſſe b ſtiam proclamarunt, quod creditu facile nonnulla temporis noſtri præſtat & ſuadet. Three very fine Reaſons!

(M) Concerning ſubſtantial Forms is infinitely impertinent.] If we did not know it by Experience, we ſhould hardly believe it poſſible for Men of Senſe, who ſpend all their Life in Philoſophizing, to maintain, that a Subſtance diſtinct from Matter, is nevertheleſs material (i), and ſubſiſts only dependently on Matter; that it is educ'd from the power of Matter without exiſting in it previouſly; that it is not compounded either of Matter, or any other pre-exiſting Thing, and that notwithſtanding 'tis not a Created Being: Laſtly, That without the Aſſiſtance of any Knowledge to direct it in its Operations, it produces the Machines of Animals and Plants. They ſtill maintain all theſe monſtrous Doctrines, after having been overwhelm'd with the Objections of a Father Maignan, of a Goſſend., &c. Morin diſcover'd all theſe Abſurdities, and abandon'd the Peripatetick Sect upon all theſe Points (k) Quæſtionem de ortu vel productione formarum ſubſtantialium eſſe totius Phyſices difficilimam; quæque maximorum Doctorum ac præſertim Noſtrorum ingenia torſerit. Item alii volunt eas educi de potentia materiæ, alii ipſas de novo creari, alii eas eſſe tantum quandam eminentiam qualitatum proportionum; quas eas eſſe accidentales, & alii alia. Ego vero in Aſtrologia Gallica lib. 20. qui inſcribitur, de actione intellectuum corporum cæleſtium, ſectione 4 cap. 1e 7: omnes hæſce opiniones Rationis examini ſubjecio, ac evidenter probavi eas ipſarum eſſe poſſe veras: omnium autem abſurdiſſimam, eſſe eductionem formæ de potentia materiæ. The worſt of it is, he ſubſtituted in the room of theſe Doctrines, an Hypotheſis perplex'd with Difficulties. He eſpous'd the Notion he thought he had found in the Books of a Dane (l); namely, that the ſubſtantial Form of each Body is an immaterial Spirit, which God at the Beginning of the Creation inveſted with the neceſſary Knowledge for forming the Organs, to which this Form was (g) Bernerius, Anatomia ridiculi mundi, p. 183.

(h) Vita Morini, p. 16. n 77

(i) See the Remark of the Article Goriæus (David.).

(k) Morinus in defenſ. diſſert p. 66.

(l) Petrus Severinus, in ſua Medicina Philoſophica.

We must not forget, that he receiv'd several Marks (N) of Mr. Descartes's Esteem; and that he very nearly equall'd Cardan, by an ingenuous Relation of several things to his own (O) disadvantage.

MORIN

to be united. (m) Arbitor formam Physicam substantialem corporum mixtorum, (animæ rationali excepta) aliud non esse, quam spiritum immaterialem seminis cujusque rei; cui Severinus ipse proprias & specificas attribuit signaturas internas coloris, odoris, saporis; mirabilemque scientiam à DEO inditam initio creationis; quâ seminis cujusque spiritus quilibet ad generationem excitatus à causis efficientibus, congrua sibi primo adsciscit rei generandæ principia corporis ac elementa, quæ sunt ipsius rei materia, à qua ipsa forma primo & per se differt; deindeque corporis sui fabricæ & organisationi incumbit per innatam ac essentialem sibi scientiam ipsam adeo regulariter; ut ejusdem plantæ omnis flores inter se, folia inter se, & fructus inter se, conveniant in omnibus signaturis, & similiter conveniant, cum suis floribus & fructibus cujusvis alterius plantæ ejusdem speciei: quod sane cum scientia mechanica, talis seminis virtuti indita, ejusque signaturis essentialibus, concipi facile potest; quasi mentis alicujus regulare opus, quod in aranearum telis, apum alveolis, cæterisque animalium actionibus patet adhuc evidentius: aliter vero concipi nequit cum assensu rationis. He has ground enough to say, that nothing's more absurd, than maintaining, that the bare motion of Atoms is able to produce that wonderful Regularity in Plants, that Conformity in Fruits and Leaves of Trees of the same Species, &c. It's a thousand times harder to form the Leaf of a Tree, than to print a Page of Cicero: Seeing then, no Position of the Letters, which is not directed by any choice, could ever produce a Page of Cicero; we must not believe, that a fortuitous placing of Atoms could produce a Leaf of a Tree, or an Apple. We must therefore give an intelligent elective Principle to Plants capable of disposing the Materials of the Leaves in their due Order, &c. (which is Morin's Opinion) or else suppose the Plant to be Organiz'd in the Seed, which is the Opinion of many Cartesians. (a) Nihil excogitari potest absurdius quam quod illa similitudo florum, foliorum & fructuum ejusdem arboris in colore, odore, sapore & conformatione, prodeat ex solo motu atomorum, à quo sunt situs & ordo ipsarum: Nec inter omnes flores, folia & fructus pomi, ullus accidat flos, folium vel fructus pyri aut alterius plantæ ab ipso atomorum motu. Hic enim nisi prius aliquam regatur specificam scientiam, quæ in atomis concipi vel explicari nequit, causabit duntaxat certitudo situs & ordines atomorum, qui vel nunquam efficient aliquam determinatæ speciei plantam; vel saltem hanc multis extraneis foliis, floribus & fructibus inficient, si tantum planta generetur, & non potius chymæra diversarum generum rerum.

(N) He receiv'd several Marks of Mr. Descartes's Esteem.] He came acquainted with him in 1626 (b). Some time after he presented him with his Book of Longitudes, and was thank'd for it in a most (c) obliging Letter from him. He sent him (d) Objections concerning Light, in 1638. These Words of his Letter are remarkable. "I have "ever been one of your Favourers, who by my "Temper naturally hate and detest that Rascality of invidious Wits, who seeing some exalted Genius, like a new Star appear above 'em, "instead of congratulating him on his Labours and "new Inventions, swell with Envy against him, "and have no other design but to eclipse or extinguish his Name, his Glory and his Merits; "tho' they themselves are retrieved by him from "Ignorance, and receive the Knowledge of Things "from him Gratis. I have pass'd through these "Pikes, and know what it is by Experience. Posterity will resent my Misfortune, and speaking "of this Iron Age, will truly say, that Fortune "did not favour Learned Men. I wish however, "she may be more favourable to you, than me." What Pride and Vanity is here! Mr. Descartes answer'd the Objections; Morin reply'd, "(e) "And we have this second Writing inserted in "the first Tome (1) of Mr. Descartes's Letters, and "follow'd by a new Answer Mr. Descartes made "to it in September, with a Dispatch which surpriz'd him, but which let him know that he "had a Consideration for him. Mr. Morin (2) "pretended not to be entirely satisfied with this "second Answer, and thence took an occasion of "making him a new (3) Reply in October, that he "might have the Honour of writing last. Mr. "Descartes, who was ever very free from the Ambition of so false a Glory, did by that Mark perfectly discover Mr. Morin's Character of Mind. "He would not refuse him the satisfaction he "propos'd to himself, since it cost him so little. "And (4) therefore writ to Father Mersenne about "the middle of November, that he would not give "any farther Answer to Mr. Morin, since he did "not desire it." 'Tis certain Mr. Descartes did not despise this Man's Objections. (f) He judged 'em worth his notice when he had receiv'd "'em, and preferable to those of Mr. Petit, as "well for their Solidity, as for the nature of the "Difficulties in 'em. He wrote (5) more than "once to Father Mersenne, to desire him to let Mr. "Morin know from him, that he not only took "his writing kindly, but that he was oblig'd to "him for his Objections, as being very proper to "make him search for Truth with greater Application; (6) and that he would not fail to "answer them in the most punctual and civil "manner, and as soon as possible." Let's not end this Remark without relating a thing which may edifie the Readers, as much as the fastuous Complaints of the Royal Professor in Mathematicks must have scandaliz'd 'em. We have seen that Morin "(g) had finish'd his Objections by—— "Complaints of the Misfortune he was under "from the Dealings of invidious Natures, wishing "that Fortune might be more favourable to him "than she had commonly been to the generality of "the Learned. Mr. Descartes, who could hardly "relish this Language, was harder put to it to "answer this Conclusion than all the rest." "(7) "I no ways pretend, said he to him on this Subject, to deserve the Civilities you express to me at the end of your Writing, and yet it would not become me to confute 'em. Therefore I can only say, that I condole with you on the Blindness of Fortune, in that she does not sufficiently acknowledge your Merit. But as for my own particular, I thank God she has never yet done me either Good or Ill: And I know not for the future, whether I ought rather to desire her Favours, or to fear them. For as it does not seem honest to borrow any thing which a Man can't return with Usury, I should think it a great Burthen upon me to find my self indebted to the Publick." Here you see what ought to be the Language of a true Philosopher. Mr. Descartes would have merited this Title by that one Quality he here speaks of. But as for Morin, he disgrac'd Philosophy by his Murmurs against the Injustice of his Age. He manifested a Soul that was Mercenary and greedy of Pensions and Recompences: A meer Quack Philosopher and Scholar.

(O) Of several Things to his Disadvantage.] He says (h), that his Mother on her Death-Bed disinherited him, and denied him her Blessing. She was somewhat recovered from this Aversion for him; the Priest and Relations represented to her, that her Will would be null, and that she'd besides run a great risk of Damnation, so she consented to give him her Blessing, and leave him a Legacy tho' the smallest that could be. He pretends, that the cause of this Hatred, was his having said to his Elder Brother, when their Father and Mother were both Sick, that he had rather have his Father than his Mother Live, if one of 'em must needs Die. The Mother died two Days after, with the Dispositions before mention'd against her Son. Here you see a Fact very little honourable either to Mother or Son; but nothing costs an Astrologer too dear, when he can assign the Reasons of it by his Principles. This is Morin's Case; he finds (i) in his Horoscope, that his Mother was to hate him. He finds he was to be often Imprison'd, and confesses (k), that in his Youth he found himself on the brink of this Misfortune, by means of his Whoring, and vindictive Temper. The malignant Influence of some Planets of his Horoscope having been Corrected by the favourable Aspect of some others, the Prison was changed into an Evil of another kind, which had some affinity to a captive State; for from the Age of sixteen to forty six, Morin was always under some Master. He was Servant

(m) Morigus, ibid.

(a) Morin in defens. dissertat. p. 67.

(b) See Mr. Baillet, Vie de Descartes, tom. 1. p. 138.

(c) 'Tis the 57*th of the* 1*st Volume of* Descartes. See the Life of Descartes by Mr. Baillet, tom. 1. p. 265.

(d) See the 58*th Letter of the same Volume.*

(e) Baillet, ib. p. 357.

(1) Pag. 221. of the 1. tome.

(2) Pag. 234. of the 1 tome.

(3) This writing is to be found in the 1*st Vol. of the Letters of Mr.* Desc. p. 242.

(4) Pag. 416. tom. 2.

(f) Baillet, ibid. p. 355.

(5) Tom. 3. des lettres, p. 390.

(6) Pag. 396 t. 2. & p. 360.

(g Baillet, ib. p. 356.

(7) Pag. 219, 220, tom. 1.

(h) In Astrologia Gallica, l. 17. p. 398.

(i) Ubi supra.

(k) Parumque abfuit quin in mea juventute verificatum fuerit obvinedictæ & libidinis passiones. Ibid.

MORIN (SIMON) a Fanatick, burnt at Paris in 1663. His Mind had (A) been diſorder'd a long time. He taught *, that there would quickly be a General Reformation of the Church, and that all Nations ſhould be Converted to the true Faith. He pretended that this great Renovation was to be accompliſhed by JESUS CHRIST at his ſecond Advent in State of Glory, incorporated in Morin himſelf; and that for the execution of the Things, to which he was deſtined, he was to be attended with a great number of perfect Souls, and ſuch as participated in the glorious State of JESUS CHRIST, whom he therefore called the Champions of Glory. The Sieur John Des-Mareſts (B) of the French Academy, feign'd himſelf his Diſciple, and thereby diſcover'd this horrible Enthuſiaſm. Morin had already ſome

* See the Preface of the Lettres Viſionaires.

Servant to no leſs than ſixteen ſucceſſively; he liv'd with Notaries, with Writing-Maſters, with Preſidents, Biſhops, Abbots, and at laſt with the Duke of Luxemburg. The reaſon of his changing his Service ſo often, was, that he often quarrell'd with the Miſtreſs of the Houſe, or ſome unforeſeen Accident happen'd, or the Maſters were guilty of intolerable Ingratitude. (n) Quod autem per carceres fieri non potuit, per ſervitutem effecit cumulus ille Planetarum in duodecima domo ——— ſi enim ſervitus ——— ſpecies quædam incarcerationis quod homo in aliena domo non liber, ſed alteri mancipatus vivere teneatur. Siquidem ab anno 16 ad 46. vita meæ fuit perpetua ſervitus, dominoſque habui 16. quos omnes dereliqui vel ob jurgia cum dominabus, quarum imperium cum ferre nollem odia paſſus ſum ——— vel ob caſus repentinos, vel ob dominorum intolerabilem ingratitudinem. He finds the Cauſe of all theſe Events in the Scheme of his Nativity; his Wranglings with the Miſtreſs, the Ingratitude of his Maſters, the mean Condition of ſome, the middle State of others, and the high Dignity of a third ſort. No Stars hit truer, tho' ſhrewdly to his Coſt, than (o) thoſe that threatned him on the Score of Women. I have already (p) mention'd two Wounds he receiv'd for a Miſs. This probably was in a Baudy-Houſe. I reckon as nothing (q) the Violence offer'd him by ſome Soldiers, who at the inſtigation of a parcel of Whores, enter'd his Houſe. An honeſt Man is not ſecure from ſuch Affronts; Let's alledge nothing that's Ambiguous. He confeſſes (r), that having had the Honour to be known to Kings and Queens, to Princes and Cardinals, and principal States Men, there were at moſt but five Perſons of high Rank who lov'd him, or did him any good; whether becauſe of his Skill, or the Candour of his Nature, or by Smypathy; and that on the contrary, Envy or Antipathy had expos'd him to the Hatred of ſo many People, that it frighted him to think of it. (ſ) Horret memoria referre quot inimicos habuerim vel ob invidiam, vel ob antipathiam. To ſay no more, can we conceive a greater Folly than that of a Man, who complains he had been the Object of Envy, and boaſts of being belov'd by great Men, for the ſake of his Learning? His greateſt Accuſers on the Chapter of Vanity, and a mercenary Nature, are his own Books. He boaſts in one of his Anſwers, that he had maintain'd a perpetual War for ſeventeen Years together, againſt fifteen Mathematicians or Philoſophers, and had forc'd 'em all to a diſhonourable Retreat. He ſays: that in the Year 1636, his (a) Reputation was ſpread over almoſt all Europe. At every turn he tells us of his pretended Demonſtration of the Longirude, as a thing publickly acknowledg'd by the moſt famous Mathematicians. He ought therefore to be content; the Glory of the Invention was his own, and the Publick did him Juſtice by its Praiſes. Nevertheleſs Morin hardly ever ſpeaks of this; but he brutiſhly flies out againſt the firſt Miniſter, who had not ſuffered him to finger the Money this diſcovery deſerv'd. Was not this betraying a Mercenary, Baſe and Sordid Soul, which inſtead of labouring for Glory, or rather from Motives wholly diſintereſted, reckons Glory nothing, when Penſions, and pecuniary Recompences are not a part of it? Beſides, he was not ſo well known throughout all Europe from the Year 1636, as he pretends. His Name and Books have found no place in a Book (b) of Voſſius, in which we ſee a long Catalogue of Mathematicians and Aſtrologers, &c. both Ancient and Modern.

(n) Morin. Ibid.

(o) Propter ☽ & ♀ in duodecima quæ mihi exparte mulierum multa mala damna vitæque pericula pepererunt. Id. ibid.

(p) In the Remark D.

(q) Ibid. l. 23. p. 649.

(r) Ibid. l. 17. p. 398.

(ſ) Ibid. p 398, 399.

(a) Tunc vero nominis mei fama per totam ferme Europam diffuſa eſt. Ib. l. 23. p. 649

(b) That de ſcientiis Mathematicis. It reaches to the Year 1646, and farther.

(A) His Mind had been diſorder'd a long time.] See the Book intitul'd, Thoughts of Simon Morin; it was Printed in 1647. It has neither Name of Printer, nor Place where it was Printed. The Author was in Priſon at Paris for the Errors of the Illuminated, when Gaſſendi's Friends writ againſt the Aſtrologer John Baptiſt Morin, whom they reproach'd with either being the Brother or near Relation of this Priſoner. The Aſtrologer will have this to be the ſecond of their Lyes. (c) Secunda (impoſtura) dum aſſerit quendam Simonem Morinum in carceribus Archiepiſcopatus hujuſce aſſervatum, ob illuminatorum doctrinam quam profitetur, eſſe meum conſanguineum ſive fratrem.

(B) Des-Mareſts of the French Academy, feign'd himſelf his Diſciple, and diſcover'd.] He was himſelf (d) a great Enthuaſiaſt, and waited for a wonderful and holy Revolution: But imagining it would not happen in the way that Morin declar'd, nor in that of another Viſionary, named (e) Charpy de Sainte Croix, it took him in the Head to oppoſe 'em both. "(f) Charpi pretended, that all theſe "Wonders were to be brought about by a certain "Lieutenant of JESUS CHRIST, of the Race "of Judah, to whom he applied the cleareſt Pro "phecies of the Meſſiah." We have ſeen in the Body of this Article Morin's Pretenſion, and here follows that of the Sieur Des-Mareſts. I relate it in the Words of an Author, who maks uſe of the Preſent Tenſe, "(g) The Sieur Des-Mareſts teaches "with them, that it is true, the World is about "to be Reform'd, that all Sects ſhall be united to "the Catholick Religion; but that all this muſt "be done by the great Prophet Elacham Michael, "which is no other than the Sieur Des-Mareſts of "Sorlin, and by an Army of a Hundred forty four "Thouſand Victims, or humbled Souls, which he "was to Muſter, and give up to the King, that "they might execute this great Enterprize un"der his Command, according to the Lights "which the Sieur Des-Mareſts was Divinely in"ſpir'd with 'Tis very plain, that this laſt Pro"phet could not compromiſe with the two others, "and that he had in his Viſions wherewithal to "deſtroy theirs. For, as we have ſeen one Mad"Man, who fancy'd himſelf God the Father, ſi"lence, in a convincing manner, another Mad"man who fancy'd himſelf God the Son, becauſe, "ſaid he, I, who am God the Father, know very "well that I have not begotten you. So the "Sieur Des-Mareſts could with the greateſt eaſe "prove to himſelf, that Morin's and Charpi's No"tions were falſe. Charpi, ſaid he, imagines that "the World muſt be Reform'd by a Lieutenant "of JESUS CHRIST joyn'd with the Jews: "And Morin ſays, this will be by JESUS CHRIST "himſelf incorporated in him, and accompani"ed by the Combatants of Glory. Now I am "very certain that they are both miſtaken, and "it is by my ſelf, Des-Mareſts of S. Sorlin, Elacham Michael, and by my Victims that all this muſt "be wrought. After having thus condemn'd "them of Illuſion by this moſt demonſtrative "Proof, he thought himſelf oblig'd to Proſecute "'em with all his Might, and never reſted till "he had deſtroy'd Morin by the baſeſt Treachery, "unbecoming both an honeſt Man and a Chriſti"an. He boaſts in his Anſwer, that he had been "the Cauſe of Charpi's Impriſonment.

(c) Jo. Baptiſta Morinus in defenſione ſuæ diſſertatione de atomis & vacuo, p. 15. This Book was printed in 1654.

(d) See his Article above.

(e) He was a Man of a Bad Character, L'Ancienne nouveauté de l'Ecriture Sainte, which Mr. Arnaud cenſured. The Journal des Savans of the 11th of March 1666, makes mention of this Cenſure. In it is found the mention that is here. See the Queſtion curieuſe ſi Mr. Arnaud eſt heretique, p. 147 edit. 1695.

(f) In the Preface to the Lettres Viſionaires.

(g) Ibid.

See what Methods he took: He (h) depoſes, that he had ſome Diſcourſes with Dame Margaret Langlois, call'd La Malherbe, and with another called Mademoiſelle de la Chapelle; "That at firſt ſhe "was ſhy of diſcovering any thing, but by degrees began "to be familiar, and to communicate her ſelf to him, "and began by ſpeaking of this Morin and his Wife; "that ſhe told him it was certain, the Spirit of JE"SUS CHRIST was Incorporated, and raiſed a"gain in M. Morin, for his ſecond coming upon Earth "that he was the Son of Man to whom God had given "all Judgment upon the Earth. After this he de"ſcribes his Interview with Morin, which happen'd the Day after, and ſays, that at firſt Morin would ſome Followers. I have heard ſay, 1. That he had promis'd to riſe again on the third Day, and that hereupon abundance of Rabble got together at the Place where he was burnt. 2. That the firſt Preſident Lamoignon ask'd him, whether it was any where written, that the great Prophet, or new Meſſias ſhould be burnt, and that Morin being already Condemn'd, cited this Verſe of the 16th Pſalm; Igne me examiniſti, & non eſt inventa iniquitas. The Author whom I cite in the Remarks obſerves, that the XVIIth Century was (C) fruitful of Fanaticks. I have juſt receiv'd a moſt curious (D) Memoire concerning our Morin.

(h) See the ſecond Lettre Viſionaire, p. m. 261. He Depoſition of the ſieur Des-Mareſts recited.

MORI-

" fain appear to him as a very Holy Man, and of a " very collected Spirit; but after ſome Diſcourſe, finding, " that if he humbled himſelf too much before him, who " would be thought ſo high, he might treat him a long " time as a Novice, and that he had not ſo much Time " to loſe, he told him plainly what he knew of the in- " ternal States according to their Degrees, and of Spi- " rituality: That then Morin overjoy'd, took him by " the Hand, and preſſing it betwixt both his, told him, " he ſaw very well, that he was a Spiritual Man, " and in a ſtate of Grace, and that he wanted but " little of being Perfect and in a ſtate of Glory—— (i) " He relates in the Sequel of his Depoſition ma- " ny Errors, which he learnt from Morin's own " Mouth in another Diſcourſe he had with him; " as that he muſt no longer think of the Death of " JESUS CHRIST; that Impeccability is a Pro- " perty of thoſe who are Divine and Perfect; that all " ſorts of Works are indifferent. During theſe Viſits, " which the Sieur Des-Mareſts paid to Morin and " his Gentlewoman, he ſtill feign'd himſelf deſirous of being his Diſciple——But Morin to be " more ſecure of him, ſent him, as he ſaid in " this Depoſition, a Letter the 21ſt of December (k), " being St. Thomas's Day, which was brought him by " his Eldeſt Daughter, by which the ſaid Morin de- " manded of him a blind and ſincere Submiſſion, im- " plicitely and ſincerely to obſerve whatever he com- " manded, without reſerve of Time or Thing, as " may be ſeen in the ſaid Letter. This Demand " of Morin bred ſome Scruples in his Mind, not being " willing to give any Conſent to a thing that might be " ill——But at laſt——judging, that if he did not " comply with every thing, in order to diſcover the " Secrets of the Cabal, all Commerce betwixt them " would ceaſe of courſe, he reſolv'd to ſend him his Conſent " in Writing, implicitely and ſincerely to obſerve whatever " Simon Morin ſhould command him: To which he " added theſe Words, on the part of God, and ac- " cording to God——(l) This was not the laſt of " the Sieur Des-Mareſts diſguiſes. He held ſeveral " other Conferences with Morin in the ſame Spirit " of Diſſimulation and Deceit. He wrote to " him ſeveral Letters as his Diſciple, he receiv'd " many from him as from his Maſter. He ſuffer'd " this Illuminate, and theſe abuſed Gentlewomen " to conſider him as being intirely of their Ca- " bal. And at laſt proceeded to that prodigious " Extravagance, which I an going to relate in his " own Words. To hinder Morin and his Wife, who " was tormented by her Devil upon his account, from " ſuſpecting him, he reſolv'd to give him a Declara- " tion, by the firſt Letter he writ to him, that he ac- " knowledg'd him for the Son of Man, and for the " Son of God in him, knowing well that Morin was " the Son of Man, and that the Son of God was in him, " as every where elſe. This Letter, ſays he, of the " firſt of February was ſo acceptable to Morin, that " to make him an acknowledgement for that De- " claration, which he believed very expreſs, he writ " an Anſwer to him the ſecond of February, by which " he gave him, as by a great Grace, the Title of his " Forerunner, calling him a true John Baptiſt riſen " again.

The Janſeniſt whom I copy, does afterwards confute this Treachery of the Sieur Des-Mareſts, by the Principles of St. Auſtin. He ſays almoſt the ſame Things, which Mr. Arnold has ſince obſerved, in complaining of the Impoſture of a falſe Arnold, by which a Profeſſor of Douay was caught in a Snare.

(i) Ibid. p. 267.

(k) 1661.

(l) Ibid. p. 268.

(C) Was fruitful of Fanaticks.] See the Words of this Author: " (a) Our Age, which has been " as Fruitful as any other in extraordinary Things, " has particularly been ſo in Fanaticks: And it " looks as if Mens Heads were turn'd I know not " how, this way, and that they had a natural Bias " towards it; for, as in contagious Diſeaſes, we " commonly ſee all other Diſtempers degenerate " into Plagues and Carbuncles, ſo we have ſeen " in this Age irregular Devotions, and ſuch as " are built upon humane Freaks, degenerate into " Fanatical Illuſions. The Story of the Hermits " of Caen has been celebrated all over the King- " dom; and if we made a due Inquiry into the " Society of the Holy Sacrament, we might per- " haps diſcover a great many Things of this Na- " ture." He afterwards particularizes the Viſi- ons of Charpi de St. Croix, of Morin, and Des-Ma- reſts. If he had added thoſe that at the ſame time (b) were vented in Holland, he would have much ſtrengthen'd this Poſition. The Cloſe of this Age does not bely the other Parts of it, dignum patella operculum.

(a) Preface of the Lettres Viſionaires, p. 225.

(b) See the Remark I. of the Article Marets (Samuel des.)

(D) A moſt curious Memoir concerning our Morin.] Here are ſome Paſſages of it in the Words of the Original: " Simon Morin was a Native of Aumale, " and had heretofore been Commiſſioner to Mr. " Charron, extraordinary Treaſurer for the War. " He was a Man of no Letters, and groſsly Igno- " rant, who pretending to Spirituality, fell into " great Errors. He was not content to publiſh " 'em in private to ſeveral Perſons, who look'd " on him as a Mad-man, but ſet forth part of " 'em in a Book which he Printed ſecretly in 1647, " in 8, under the Title of Thoughts of Morin, " Dedicated to the King: 'Tis a mixture of Vi- " ſions and Nonſenſe, which include the princi- " pal Errors ſince condemn'd in the Quietiſts, " except that he carries 'em further than any other " has ſince done; for he formally teaches, that " the greateſt Sins do not deſtroy Grace, but " ſerve on the contrary to humble humane Pride. " He applies the Words of St. Paul, which are " commonly underſtood of Temptations to the " higheſt Enormities. He ſays, that in every " Sect and Nation, God has his Elect, which are " true Members of the Church. That among the " Means of depriving themſelves of all Preſump- " tion, a Director may forbid his Penitent from " coming to Maſs on Holy-Days, or to the Com- " munion, &c. order him the Communion without " Confeſſion, forbid what is commanded, and " command what is forbidden.

" That God permitted that St. Peter ſhould de- " ny him to humble his Preſumption; that his " deſire of dying for Jeſus Chriſt, was not a per- " fect Virtue; nor his Denial, a Vice deſtructive " of Virtue; that he denied him with his Lips " and not with his Heart.

" He denies that St. Peter's Sin was a Sin unto " Death.

" He ſays, that St. Paul was not only in the " Infirmity of the Fleſh, but that he ought to be " ſo, and ſubmit to it, and that he had given way " to the Temptations of the Fleſh.

" That frequent Communion is profitable only " to Beginners, becauſe Jeſus Chriſt is much better " found under the Bread of Croſſes, than under " the Milk of Bread.

" That one may eat before the Communion, " not only for Infirmities ſake, but by Advice of " the Director, in order to mortifie himſelf.

" That every ſlip preceded by Fear, and fol- " lowed by Pleaſure, is not a Sin, but a Teſti- " mony of our Weakneſs which ought to humble " us.

" This is pretty nigh the Tenour of this Fa- " naticks Doctrine, which is void of any Principles.

" He Printed with theſe Thoughts ſome Spiritual " Songs, the Stile of which is very pitiful.—(d) He " was for ſome time in Priſon, and releaſed as a " Viſionary, till 1661. At which time Des-Ma- " reſts St. Sorlin, who had had great Intimacy with " him, and pretended, as he himſelf confeſſes in " his Writings, to own him for the Son of Man, " raiſed from the Dead; impeached him, and be- " came his Accuſer——Upon this occaſion he was " tried, and Condemned to be burnt Alive; " which was executed in March 1663. 'Tis ſaid,

" that

(d) The Original contains in this place the Particulars of the Viſions and Impieties of this Man.

MORISON (Robert) a Phyſician and Profeſſor of Botany at Oxford, was Born at Aberdeen in 1620. He took his Maſter of Arts Degree in 1638, and a little after taught Philoſophy there. He ſtudied Mathematicks at the ſame time, and afterwards applied himſelf to Botany, and as his Father and Mother deſir'd he ſhould be a Divine, he learnt Hebrew, and Compos'd a Hebrew Grammar for his own Uſe. But his Inclination for the Knowledge of Herbs was ſo ſtrong, that they were forc'd to let him bend all his Studies that way. He made a great progreſs in it, when the Civil Wars forc'd him to leave his Country, though not till he had ſignalized his Zeal for the King's Intereſt, and his Courage in a Battle fought upon a * Bridge betwixt the Inhabitants of Aberdeen, and the Presbyterian Troops. He was there dangerouſly wounded in the Head. As ſoon as he was cured of that Wound, he went to France, and fixing in Paris, applied himſelf with great diligence to Botany and Anatomy. He took his Doctor of Phyſick's Degree at Angers in 1648, and as he had the Reputation of an excellent Botaniſt, the Duke of Orleans entertain'd him in the Year 1650, and gave him the Direction of the Royal Garden of Blois. He kept this Employ till this Prince's Death, and then went over into England in Auguſt 1660. Charles II. to whom the Duke of Orleans had preſented him in the Month of February of the ſame Year, ſent him to London, and gave him the Title of his Phyſician, and of Royal Profeſſor in Botany, with a Penſion of two Hundred Pounds a Year. The Præludium Botanicum, which he publiſh'd at London in 1669, made him ſo eſteem'd, that the Univerſity of Oxford invited him to the Profeſſorſhip in Botany; he accepted it, with the good liking of the King, and diſcharged the Duties of his Place with wonderful Application and Ability. He died at London in 1683, in the 63d Year of his Age. The Publick has ſeen a very conſiderable part (A) of the Works he Compos'd, wherein he follow'd a Method entirely new, which has been mightily approv'd by good Judges †.

MORLIN (Joachim) a rigid Follower of (A) Luther; was Born in 1514. He was Miniſter in ſeveral Places ‡, and particularly at Arnſtad, from whence the Magiſtrates expell'd him § in 1543, not being able to bear his (B) too flaming Zeal. He was call'd to a Profeſſorſhip at Konigsburg in Pruſſia, and was there opponent in a Diſpute againſt Oſiander, who maintain'd a new Doctrine about Juſtification. He impugn'd that Novelty with extream heat both in his Writings and Sermons; but was worſted by the Credit of his Adverſary, who got him expell'd out of Pruſſia in 1552, notwithſtanding ‖ the Interceſſions of the People. He retir'd to Brunſwick, where he was made Colleague to the famous Chemnitius. He enter'd into the Diſputes (C) of the Times, and was almoſt in all the Conferences, in which the Queſtions about Free-Will, and the neceſſity of good Works, &c. were diſcuſs'd. He return'd into Pruſſia in 1566, and was there made biſhop of the Province of Sambia by Sigiſmund Auguſtus, King of Poland, and by Albert Duke of Pruſſia, who was no longer infatuated with his Oſiander. He

* Ad pontem fluminis Deæ. Vita Rob. Moriſoni.

† Taken from his Life before the third part of Plantarum Hiſtoria Oxonienſis univerſalis.

‡ Melch. Adam in vit Theol p. 456.

§ Seckendorf Hiſt. Lutheran. l. 3. 468. n. 9. See alſo Micrælius Syntagm. Hiſt Eccleſ. p. 771.

‖ Etſi plebs ad principem pro eo ſupplex intercederet Melch Adam. Ibid.

" that he had ſome Diſciples, who were ſent to " the Galley's; the deceas'd Mr. de Neuré ſays he " had ſeen one of 'em, who believ'd Morin was riſen from the Dead. But they who knew Mr. " de Neuré, knew there was no great dependance " on the Stories he told, when they tended to " Libertiniſm. For he repreſented this Man, as " convinc'd in earneſt of Morin's Reſurrection. " This Man died with Conſtancy enough, and it " was then ſaid, that the Judges had been too rigourous, and that it had been enough to have confin'd him to a Mad-Houſe. They defended themſelves by the numerous Impieties, which he " had own'd for his Opinions, and which he maintain'd, not indeed with Argument, but however in cold Blood, and with great Obſtinacy

(A) The Publick has ſeen a — part of the Works he Compos'd.] Being in the Service of Gaſton of France, Duke of Orleans, he brought into the Garden of Blois 250 Plants, which no one had given the Deſcription of before, and invented a new Method of explaining Botany. He ſhew'd it this Duke, who encourag'd him to make a Hiſtory of Plants upon this Model, and promis'd to ſupply the Expences, and to give him all the Profit. This Prince's Death prevented the Execution of this Deſign. But when Moriſon had a Penſion from the King of England, he had more Thoughts than ever of this great Work. I have (e) ſpoken of the Præludium Anatomicum, which he publiſh'd in 1669. I add, that in 1672, he publiſh'd the 9th Section of the ſecond Part of his Hiſtory of Plants. The Univerſity of Oxford contributed a great deal to the Impreſſion of this Book, which the Author gave as a Specimen of this great Work. He was ſo encourag'd by the Praiſes and Exhortations written to him, that he publiſh'd in 1680, the ſecond Part of his Hiſtory of Plants. 'Tis a large Volume in Folio, intitul'd, Plantarum hiſtoriæ Univerſalis Oxonienſis, pars ſecunda, ſeu herbarum diſtributio nova per tabulas cognationis & affinitatis ex libro naturæ obſervata & detecta. This Work was much eſteem'd; we may ſee what Commendations (a) Mr. Herman gives it in the Preface to his Hortus Lugduno-Batavus. Some blam'd that part of this Volume intitul'd, Hallucinationes Caſpari Bauhini, &c. They thought there was ſomething of Pride in the liberty he had taken to cenſure the Writers, who had done ſo good Service in Botany. Our Author encourag'd by the good ſucceſs of this great Volume, labour'd diligently on a Continuation, but died before he could put the laſt Hand to the third Part; therefore recourſe was to be had to the Induſtry of another. They caſt their Eyes on Jacob (b) Bobart, a moſt able Botaniſt, and excellently vers'd in the Method he had learn'd from Moriſon. 'Tis by his Labour, that this third Part has at laſt ſeen the Light in 1699 'Tis in Folio. We don't know what's become of the firſt (c)

(A) A rigid Follower of Luther.] This I learn from Melchior Adam. (d) Fuit Lutheri ſectator & acer doctrinæ ejus in toto miniſterio ſuo cuſtos — in articulo de Cœna ſententiam Lutheri retinuit, quod Chriſti corpus in, ſub, aut cum pane ſit.

(b) His too flaming Zeal.] Melanchthon, who doubtleſs knew him, repreſents him of too fiery a Temper, and too much addicted to Wrangling. Having heard that Heſhuſius was return'd to Roſtock, with deſign to be preſent at the Diſpute of Bremen, he thought that Morlin was the Author of all this Stir. I often foretold, adds he, that he would raiſe a Storm, he never would be able to lay. (e) Cogitavi horum conſiliorum architectum eſſe Morlinum, & is habet ſocios horum technarum artifices. Scribam Davidi Chytræo ne inſtituant diſputationem theatricam, quæ non parvos motus excitatura ſit, ſi procedat. Tibi etiam hortator ſum, ut ſis in certamen vocabunt peſtiles tibi quoque concedi ut accerſas Petrum Martyrem, me, & alios quoſdam amicos. Non genuſim Morlini: & ſæpe ei prædixi, eum moturum, quæ ſedare non poterit.

(C) He entred into the Diſputes of the Times. The Author I cite in the preceding Notes, might well ſay, there was hardly any Age wherein the Diſputes of Divines were more frequent than in our (b) He's Director of the Garden of the University of Oxford.

(c) Taken from the Life of Moriſon before the third part of his Hiſtory of Plants.

(d) Melch. Adam. in vitis Theologor. p. 457.

(e) In the Body of the Article.

(a) Profeſſor in Phyſick and Botany at Leyden.

(e) Philipp. Melanth. epiſt. ad Albertum Lardenbergum, apud Melchior. Adam. Ibid.

Morlin's

He continu'd in that Poſt all the reſt of his Life, and died in 1571, being cut for the Stone againſt the Advice of his Phyſicians. He publiſh'd (D) ſeveral Books *, and left a Son as great a lover of Theological Diſputes (E) as himſelf. I forgot to ſay, that when he was admitted Doctor of Divinity at Wittemberg, a Queſtion of Luther's was propos'd to him, concerning (F) the uſe of Church-Revenues.

MORUS (ALEXANDER) one of the greateſt Preachers of his Age among the Reform'd, was the Son of a Scotchman, who was Principal of a College which the Reform'd had at Caſtres in Languedoc. He was Born in 1616, in that City, and being of a very quick Apprehenſion, the Progreſs in the Courſe of his Studies was very ſwift. When he was yet ſcarce twenty Years old †, he was ſent to Geneva, there to continue his Studies in Theology; and finding the Greek Profeſſor's Place, then vacant, was to be diſputed for, and that the Curators of the Academy by their Program had invited Strangers as well as Citizens to enter the Liſts; he ſtood for it among ſeveral other Competitors, Miniſters, Advocates and Phyſicians, who were almoſt all of them elder by one half than he; and was ſo much admir'd φ for his fine and eloquent way of turning Things, in all the Proofs of Learning that were to be produc'd, that he obtain'd the Prize of the Diſpute. Having diſcharg'd this Office about three Years, he ſucceeded to all thoſe Offices ‡ which Mr. Spanhemius who was call'd to Leyden θ had left vacant, which were that of the Profeſſor's Place of Divinity in the Academy, and that of Miniſter in the Church of Geneva. Being a very celebrated Preacher, and having added to this Gift a vaſt Stock of Learning ξ, it's no wonder if all his Collegues were not his Friends. But it muſt be own'd, there were many other Things which created him Trouble; for beſides his manners, which in all the Places where he ever had liv'd, were a Subject of Defamation, on the ſcore of his Love for Women, his beſt Friends never deny'd, that he was very Imprudent (A) and Impatient. However it be, there were two Parties

* Taken from Melch. Adam. ubi ſupra.

† Alex. Mori Fides publica, p. 225.

‡ See the Life of Stephen le Clerc one of th. Competitors, Printed at Amſterdam 1685. before the Quæſtiones Sacræ of David le Clerc, &c.

φ Mori fides publica, p. 226.

θ He came thither in 1642.

ξ See what Tanaquil le Fevre writes to him Epiſtolar. l. 1. p. 219.

Morlin's Time. Setting aſide the great Diſputes between the Roman Catholicks and the Proteſtants; let's only conſider Lutheraniſm. Good God! what Diviſions don't we ſee among the Divines of that Party; and with what Heat and Virulence were they maintain'd? All the fiery Wits that ever Africa and Aſia produc'd were but Phlegm in Compariſon of theſe German Doctors. 'Tis ſaid, that our Morlin oppoſed the Burial of thoſe who went to the Sermons of Andrew Oſiander, and could never be perſuaded to Baptize their Children (f). Was there ever a more extravagant Prejudice, and more furious Zeal than this? That which is wonderful in it is, that Lutheraniſm ſtands its Ground in the midſt of theſe violent Diſputes: Contrary to the Maxim, Concordia res parvæ creſcunt; diſcordiâ maximæ dilabuntur (g). We might hence draw a Proof of the ſpecial Protection of God; for one ſhou'd think, that what JESUS CHRIST has ſaid in his Goſpel, ought to hold in the Courſe of Humane Affairs, Every Kingdom divided againſt it ſelf is brought to Deſolation, and every City or Houſe divided againſt it ſelf ſhall not ſtand (h). If therefore there are any Exceptions to this Rule, we muſt ſuppoſe the Finger of God in it. This way of Reaſoning is ſpecious, and very probable; but let us obſerve by the by, that our Lord has alledged this Maxime, as an Axiom, the Truth of which is univerſal not in a Metaphyſical, but in a moral Senſe; and I believe he only made uſe of it ad hominum againſt the Jews. The Growth of the Roman Commonwealth in the midſt of violent and continual Diviſions, is as remarkable an Exception to this general Rule, as the preſervation of Lutheraniſm amidſt the Schiſms which diſtracted it, and which furniſh'd ſuch a Theme for the Inſults and Inferences of the common Enemy. Let's return to our Morlin, and relate what Melchior Adam ſays of him: (i) Bruſvigæ diù eccleſiaſten egit; variæ, ut nullum ferè ſeculum feracius fuit Theologicarum rixarum, quàm ſuperius, excitatæ fuerunt, ſuper variis capitibus religionis controverſiæ, utpote de neceſſitate bonorum operum: de libertate voluntatis humanæ: de Adiaphoris: de particula ſola in enunciatione illa: Fide juſtificamur: & de aliis. Harum cauſa plerique conventibus actionibuſque inſtitutis interfuit Morlinus

(D) He publiſh'd ſeveral Books.] Melchior Adam gives theſe Titles of them. Pſalmorum Davidis enarratio Catechiſmus Germanicus. Poſtilla & explicatio ſummaria Evangeliorum dominicalium. Refutatio mendacii Theologorum Heidelbergenſium, de Luthero. De vocatione Miniſtrorum, & quatenus magiſtratui fas ſit eos ab officio removere. Deſenſio adverſus accuſationem novorum Wittembergenſium Theologorum. De peccato originis contra Manichæorum deliria. Epiſtola ad Oſiandrum. Mr. de Seckendorf (k) ſpeaks of a Book publiſh'd by our Morlin in 1565, in which many things are found at large, which Luther utter'd in the Preſence of ſome Perſons a little before his Death.

(E) As great a lover of Theological Diſputes as himſelf.] He was call'd Herom Morlinus. He joined with Wigandus's Faction, againſt Hſhuſius in the Diſpute de abſtracto (l).

(F) Concerning the Uſe of the Church Revenues.] Mr. de Seckendorf has inſerted in his Hiſtory of Lutheraniſm (m), the Queſtion as it was propos'd. It was ask'd (n), whether the Revenues, which were deſign'd for the Maintenance of the Miniſters of the Goſpel, and for Schools, ought to be taken away from thoſe who oppoſe the Goſpel, that is the Monks and Romiſh Clergy. He that put the Queſtion, gave the Reaſons, which held him in ſuſpence. On the one hand, ſays he, it is not for the Miniſters of the Goſpel to conſtrain any Body, and we can't take their Eſtates from the Wicked without exerciſing Violence. On the other hand we know, that St. Auſtin maintain'd, that the Emperor was in the right to give the Eccleſiaſtical Revenues of the Donatiſts to the Orthodox. The Magiſtrates are oblig'd to ſee, that every Body injoys what rightfully belongs to him. But the Revenues in Queſtion do not belong (o) to impious Canons, but to the true Church, and therefore Orthodox Magiſtrates ought to deal with theſe Wretches as with Robbers. If they do not, the good Paſtors and poor Scholars muſt periſh. If Morlinus had deſign'd to anſwer according to Luther's Mind, he might eaſily have decided that Queſtion; for Luther, as it plainly appears, was of Opinion, that the Revenues of the Roman Church ought to be appropriated to the Maintenance of Miniſters and Schools.

(A) Very Imprudent and Impertinent.] It's own'd in a Preface (a), which was written in behalf of Mr. Morus, that his fiery Temper, his too great liberty of Speech, and his violent deſire of exalting himſelf above others, had often raiſed thoſe Enmities which reign'd betwixt him and his Rivals. This Author adds, that he had never heard Mr. Spanheim ſay any thing worſe againſt Morus, than that he was Proud: He ſays alſo, that in the Judgment of Salmaſius, Mr. Morus truſted too much to his falſe Friends, and that he did not care for taking Pains, but was otherwiſe a very fine Wit, and had a Head for any thing. Mr. Diodati in a Letter (b) he wrote in favour of Mr. Morus, confeſſes, that this Miniſter "aim'd at no "thing more than making an innocent Defence, "but did this generally with a Warmth and Vi"gour

(f) Dogma Oſiandri quantopere deteſtentur qui confeſſionis Auguſtanæ cenſeri volunt, cum ex Wittenbergenſium Doctorum cenſura, tum ex Matthiæ Flacci, & Joachimi Merlini non ſcriptis magis quam factis, abunde cuivis perſpicere licet. Nam quo loco Merlinus habuerit eos, qui cum gregis ſui eſſent, Oſiandri ſermones audiebant, obſcurum non eſt Nec ſepultura mortuos dignabatur, ne infantes eorum ut baptizaret, adduci potuit. Hoſius de expreſſo verbo Dei, apud Pratcolum, Elencho hæret, p. m. 512. (g) Salluſt de bello Jugurth, p. m. 214. (h) Evang. de Saint Matth. ch. 12. v. 25. (i) Melch. Adam. ubi ſupra, p. 456.

(k) Seckendorf, hiſt. Lutheran, l. 3. p. 693.

(l) Micrælius, Syntagm. hiſt. Eccleſ. p. 771.

(m) Lib. 3. p. 313. n. 12.

(n) Li (Morl no) ut moris eſt, quæſtio propoſita fuit per ephebum a Luthero conſcripta, his verbis, utrum reditus donati Eccleſiis ad Evangelii Miniſtros alendos, &c. Ibid.

(o) Hi reditus non ſunt impiorum Canonicorum, ſed ſunt veræ Eccleſiæ. Quare Magiſtratus Eccleſiæ debet eriam pœnam ſumere de impiis tanquam prædonibus. Ib.d.

(a) Before the Apology of Milton, edit. Hagæ Comit. 1645. George Crantzius Doctor in Divinity, is the Author of this Preface.

(b) Produced in th. Fides publica, p. 111, &c.

Parties form'd in Geneva; one for, and the other againſt him. Nor is it at all to be doubted, that the firſt of theſe Parties was compoſed not only of ſuch as had an Eſteem and Friendſhip for Mr. Morus, but of others alſo, who without any real Love or Eſteem for him, ſaw their Enemies at the Head of the contrary Party. Every Day that paſſed afforded Inſtances of this kind. I know not how Mr. Morus got himſelf into the good Graces of Mr. Salmaſius; but 'tis certain that the latter drew the other into the United Provinces. Some think he did this purely to vex Mr. Spanheim (B) who had quarrelled with Mr. Morus at Geneva. At firſt Mr. Salmaſius endeavour'd to procure him * a Profeſſor of Divinity's Place at Harderwick, and this not ſucceeding, he got him call'd to Middleburg. Mr. Morus accepting of the Call, parted from Geneva in 1649, and carry'd a good Teſtimonial (C) of his Orthodoxy. He preſented himſelf before the Synod of the Walloon Churches †, aſſembled at Maeſtricht, Preach'd with the Applauſe of the whole Auditory, and then went to take Poſſeſſion at Middleburg of the Office of Profeſſor of Divinity in the Schola illuſtris, and of that of Paſtor to the Church. The Gentlemen of Amſterdam at his arrival in Holland ‡, offered him the Place of Hiſtory-Profeſſor, which was become vacant by the Death of Voſſius in their Schola illuſtris; but not being able to diſengage himſelf from the Obligations he lay under to the City of Middleburg, they ſent for David Blondel: And yet three Years after, hearing that Mr. Morus was offered a Divinity Profeſſor's Place in France, they renew'd their Offers to him. He accepted the Call, and diſcharg'd the Place like an able Man. He diſappear'd

* See the Remark C.

† Fid. publica, p. 157.

‡ Ibid. p. 213.

" gour cut thoſe to the Quick who aſſaulted him. " ——That he was good Natur'd without Fraud " or After-game, Free and Noble——warm, and " very ſenſible of Affronts, but eaſily reconcil'd; " that he never was the Aggreſſor, but had ter- " rible Nails to defend himſelf withal. I ſcarce " ever knew any one, continues he, who had rea- " ſon to boaſt of attacking him. Conſcia virtus, " and if you add to it, genus irritabile vatum, fur- " niſh him a compleat ſuit of Armor againſt his " Aſſailants." Give me leave to make a Reflexion in this Place upon the Illuſions, occaſion'd by Friendſhip. Here you ſee that Mr. Diodati, from a tender Reſpect for Mr. Morus, reckons that for nothing, which is indeed a Capital and moſt unbecoming Vice in a Miniſter I mean a vindictive Spirit in the higheſt Degree, and extream Pride and Paſſion. It's in effect black'ning a Miniſter, and diveſting him entirely of the Spirit of the Goſpel, which ought to be inſeparable from his Character, to confeſs what Mr Diodati has here confeſs'd of him; and yet he does not think that this abates any thing to ſpeak of in the Praiſes which he beſtows plentifully upon his Friend He excuſes as well as he can this vindictive Humour of Mr. Morus. " The Importunity, ſays he " (c), of his Enemies ſeem'd ſometimes to de- " ſerve the ſevereſt Rebukes to teach them to be " quiet. I every Day meet with ſuch who are Blind the ſame way with reſpect to a Miniſter of whom they have a great Opinion, who mention his very Iſmaeliſm (d) almoſt with Commendation. He is a dangerous Enemy, ſay they, he has a Bill and Claws, and woe be to him (e) who provokes him; as if they deſign'd to ſpeak like Heathens of a Colonel of Dragoons, or as if a Miniſter of the Goſpel were a Knight of the Thiſtle, arm'd with a threatning Device,

Nemo me impune laceſſit, nul ne s'y frotte (f).
Qui me (g) carmorit, (melius non tangere, clamo)
Flebit & inſignis tota cantabitur urbe.

One can hardly believe, that ſuch Miniſters are bound to Religion by any other Ties than thoſe of Vanity; and becauſe it furniſhes 'em with a Pretence of ſetting up for petty Tyrants. But once more, run through all the Faults to which humane Nature is ſubject, and you'll find none more oppoſite to the Spirit of Chriſtianity, than the Violence that appears in the Quarrels of ſome of theſe Gentlemen. They ſhew by all their Proceedings, that they have a mind to make their Power known, that no Perſon for the future may preſume to reſiſt them: Tho' they never read Homer, yet they practiſe the Words of Agamemnon much more than any Text of Scripture.

(h) Ἐγὼ δ' ἢ κ' ἄγω Βρισηΐδα καλλιπάρηον
Αὐτὴν ἰὸν κλισίηνδε, τὸ σὸν γέρας· ὄφρ' ἐυείδῆς
Ὅσσον φέρτερός εἰμι σέθεν, σύγε δ' ἢ κε καὶ ἄλλος
Ἴσον ἐμοὶ φάσθαι, καὶ ὁμοιωθήμεναι ἀντην.

Ego autem abducam Briſeïda pulchram-genam,
Ipſe profectus ad tentorium, tuum præmium: ut bene intelligas
Quanto potentior ſum te: timeat autem & alius
Æqualem ſe mihi dicere, & comparari contra.

See Milton at p. 44. and 193, of his Reply. See alſo the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nantes (i), where 'tis confeſs'd, that Morus " among all his good " Qualities, had ſome which did him no Honour; " that he was Imprudent, Imperious, Satyrical, " Contemptuous, and that he ſcarce allow'd any " thing good but his own Works, and the Pſalms " given 'em by thoſe who approv'd 'em.

(B) That it was to vex Mr. Spanheim] For this Sorbiere ſhall be my Witneſs, who writes thus to Mr. Patin: " (k) I can only tell you of Mr. " Spanheim what was publiſh'd at the time of his " Death, that Salmaſius had Murder'd him, and that " Morus was the Dagger. The Story is long, but " to give it you in a few Words, I ſhall only ſay, " that M. Salmaſius hated the late Spanheim from an " emulation of Wit and Reputation in the Schools; " to mortifie him, he caus'd Mr. Morus to be ſent " for into Holland, tho' he knew him only by " Name, becauſe he was the Scourge and Abhor- " rence of his Collegue: That the Doctor mov'd " Heaven and Earth to hinder his coming, and " died juſt as he receiv'd the News that his " Adverſary had ſet out on his Journey "——To this he adds a ſhort Eulogy on Mr Spanheim, and then concerning Mr Morus he ſays, " I cannot give " my Judgment of him without being ſuſpected " by you, becauſe he had been my intimate Friend " ſince I came to the College, i. e. for above " twenty five Years, and I fought the Battels with " him, in which F Jarrige was engag'd. But this " is certain, and all the World owns it, that he " is of a very fiery Temper, that he has vaſt " Thoughts, that he affects to make a mighty " Noiſe and Figure

THE Letter (l) which M Spanheim wrote to Voſſius in March 1648, deſerves to be conſider'd, and may ſerve for a Confirmation of ſome Things which Mr. Sorbiere has ſaid. In it we find this particular, that Mr (m) Godefroy had not given ſo advantageous and glorious a Teſtimony to M Morus, but out of hatred to Mr. Spanheim, who threaten'd to publiſh all the Tranſactions at Geneva relating to the good Teſtimonials he had obtain'd there, and what had been his manner of Life and Behaviour in that City I learn in the ſame Letter, that Mr Morus proteſted upon Oath to the Magiſtrates of Geneva, that he had not Mr Spanheim in view when he made the Harangue which ſhall be ſpoken of (n) hereafter.

(C) And carry'd a good Teſtimonial of his Orthodoxy.] This Teſtimonial was given him by the Church of Geneva, January 25, 1648 It is ſet down at full length in Latin and French in the (b) Fides publica of Mr. Morus, where we find beſides, that the Enemies of this Miniſter to fruſtrate the good Intentions of Salmaſius, who had a mind to ſettle him as Profeſſor of Divinity in Gueldr, had ſpread abroad in the World, that Mr Morus was a pernicious Heretick, who not only believ'd, that according to the Intention of God, JESUS CHRIST ſuffered equally for all Mankind, and that the Sin of Adam was not imputed to us; but alſo that the Holy Spirit is not God, or that we are not bound to believe he is. Upon this occaſion the Church of Geneva gave the Perſon

(c) Ibid. p. 114.

(d) Milton, Defenſ. pro ſe p. 134. produces a Letter, in which is ſaid of Mr. Morus what was Prophecy'd of Iſmael, that his Hand was againſt every one, and every one's Hand againſt him.

(e) Δυσμενέων παῖδας τῶσῶ μένει ἀνιαζείαν.

(f) 'Twas that of a King of Navarre. See Pere Bouhours Entret. des Deviſes, p. m. 463, 464.

(g) Horat. Satyra 1. l. 2.

(h) Hom. Illiad. l. 1. v. 184.

(i) Hiſt. de l'édit. de Nantes, tom. 3 p. 454.

(k) Sorbiere, letter 64. p. 442.

(l) Its the 447. of thoſe which were written to Voſſius.

(m) Profeſſor in Law at Geneva.

(n) In the Remark L.

(b) Pag. m. 81.

appear'd for some time, having taken a long Voyage (D) into Italy, which 'tis said he had no cause to repent of (E). During this Voyage he wrote a fine Poem * on the Defeat of the Turkish Fleet by the Venetians. This Poem was thought to be worth a Chain of Gold, which the Republick of Venice presented him. He return'd to discharge his Office, and after having weather'd some (F) Storms in the Walloon Synods, he went into France, to be Minister there of the Church at Paris, where a great part of the People wish'd for him: Others oppos'd him, and presented to some Provincial Synods, and afterwards to the National Synod of † Loudun Sacks full of Papers against Mr. Morus. All their Accusations were eluded (G) or found null; he was admitted Minister of the Church of Paris. Mr. Daillé (H) who had serv'd him with all his Credit in several Synods, quickly repented of what he had done; for there arose a terrible son accus'd a Testimonial so full of Praises, that it look'd rather like a Retorical Panegyrick than a Sentence of Absolution. By it Mr. Morus appear'd whiter in all respects than Snow, both as to Life and Doctrine. They affirm (c), that his most inveterate Enemies can object nothing to him that deserves any Censure. Yet we shall show hereafter (d), that Milton receiv'd several Memoires from Geneva, which blacken our Morus frightfully.

* See its Elogy in the Letters of Tanaquil le Fevre, l. 2. p. 157.

† It began the 10th of Novemb. 1659. and ended the 10th of January 1660.

(c) Si vitæ integritatem spectes, hinc te niveus morum candor retrahit, illinc admirabilis & sibi semper constans innocentia. Apostolus vult Episcopum esse ἀνεπίλημπτον. Nihil utique illi vel ab infensissimis hostibus & livoris felle maligno turgentibus meritò objici queat, quod justæ sit reprehensioni obnoxium.

(d) In the Remark M.

(c) Panegyrique de Mr. Morus, imprimé à Amsterdam 1695. p. 14.

(f) Here are the Words of the Synod Article 27. The Assembly declares, that the said Alexander Morus is incapable of exercising any Function of the Holy Ministry of the Gospel among us, or of partaking of the Holy Supper of the Lord, till by a sincere Repentance of his Sins, and a blameless Conversation he makes a Reparation as well for the Scandals he has brought upon us, &c. (g) The Assembly has judged, that the former Assembly had sufficient Reasons to pronounce this Sentence; and wherefore the present Synod has approv'd ratify'd and confirm'd a new the 27th Article of the former Synod. Acts of the Synod of Nimuegen of the Month of Sep. 1659. Art. 21

(D) He disappear'd for some time having taken a Voyage into Italy.] This we find in a Latin Oration which he spoke at Amsterdam, after his Return from Italy, showing the Reason why he return'd no sooner; he sets forth in it, that he had run through various Dangers. They who say he undertook this Journey without acquainting his Superiors, are not much in the wrong; for the Leave given him at Amsterdam the 20th of December 1654, was only for a Journey into France, which was to last three or four Months. But upon his Return he appear'd before the Synod of Leyden in May 1656, told 'em he saw great probability of advancing the Glory of God in Italy by the Preaching of the Gospel, and was thank'd for his good Advice.

(E) He had no reason to repent of his Journey into Italy.] 'Tis reported, that having fallen dangerously ill at Florence, he said so many fine Things to the Physician who had him in hand, that the Man was perfectly in Raptures, and that having given an account of him to the Great Duke, he gave his Highness a longing Desire to see this learn'd Stranger. Whereupon Mr. Morus being recover'd, was introduc'd to an Audience from the Duke, and so charm'd him with his Discourse, that he receiv'd several Marks of a particular Favour and Esteem. Others will have it, that Mr. Morus was known to this Prince before he fell ill. Here's what is said in a small Book just publish'd. "(e) "The Great Duke of Tuscany receiv'd Mr. Morus "very graciously into his Country and Capital "City; he favour'd him with his Friendship and "Esteem; he sent him his own Physician when "he was sick at Florence; he made him rich Pre"sents, worthy both of him that gave, and of "him that receiv'd them. 'Tis said, that the "Physician whom the Duke sent him, was so sur"priz'd to hear him reason with so much Force, "Judgment and Penetration about all the Sciences, "and particularly that of Physick, that tho' an "able Man in his own Profession, he declar'd his "Patient knew more of it than he who had be"stow'd all his Care and Pains on that Science.

(F) Having weather'd some Storms in the Walloon Synod.] In effect the Synod of Tergou summon'd him [in April 1659, to answer certain Articles exhibited against him. He went to Tergou, but did not think fit to appear before the Synod, and only acquainted 'em, that he depended on no Church but that of France, to which he had engag'd himself. This did not prevent his Condemnation as he hop'd it would; for the Synod declar'd him incapable of exercising the Office of a Minister in this Country to the Edification of the People, or holding Communion in it (f). The Synod of Nimeguen confirm'd this Censure (g) in September 1659, notwithstanding the Letters of the Church of Paris, concerning the Admission of Mr. Morus into their Church, accompany'd with an Act of the Synod of Ai, dated May 8. 1659, ratifying this Admission. Mr. De Thou, who was then Ambassador of France at the Hague, concern'd himself about this matter in favour of Mr. Morus, by presenting a long Memorial to the States General, who by an Act of April 6th 1666, which was communicated to the Synod of Haerlem, order'd that Informations might be laid before 'em of all the Proceedings in this Affair. The Synod deputed three Pastors and two Elders to the States, to give them the Account which they desir'd. And here I think the Matter rested.

(G) All their Accusations were eluded or found null.] We shall relate what is found about this Matter, in the History of the Edict of Nantes. The King's Commissioner to the National Synod of Loudun "(h) did not oppose the reading of the Informa"tions sent from Holland against Alexander Morus, "whose Ministry was then enquir'd into by the "Church of Paris. He desir'd them in judging "upon it, to have regard to these Acts, and to "ground their Resolutions upon them: But he "caus'd to be inserted in the Decree of the Synod "a kind of Protestation, importing, that Judg"ment should be given according to the Free"doms of the Edict, the Laws of Discipline, and "the Customs of the Kingdom, without being "subject to any Authority, Jurisdiction, or fo"reign Decision; or remitting the Party accus'd "to the Jurisdiction or Judgment of others with"out the Kingdom, contrary to the Orders and "Edicts, made for the Benefit and Advantage of "the King's Subjects. By this means the Com"missioners judg'd of the Affair rather than the "Synod, because the Process not being finish'd "in the Country where the Accusation was "brought at first, and the Protestation of the "Commissioner hindring to remit Morus thither, "to justifie himself upon the Place, the Infor"mations were not found sufficient to convict "him: He was therefore Absolv'd and his Vo"cation confirm'd. But it would be difficult to "say, whether this Vocation did more Hurt or "Good, because it made such a Division in the "Consistory, that what one of the Parties call'd "Edification, the other call'd Scandal: Which "appear'd by the great Excesses on one side, and the "passionate Suspicions on the other; every thing "being sifted and enquir'd after that tended to "destroy Morus, and all violent Means made use "of to support him. A Provincial Synod of the "Province of Berry ended the Affair by the King's "Permission, and was accus'd of being too partial "in favour of the accus'd, and of pleasing them"selves too much in mortifying a Consistory so "famous as that of Charenton, which by the Me"rits and Capacity of the Members who Com"pos'd it, was then as it were the Oracle of all "the Churches.

(h) Hist. of the Edict of Nantes, tom. 3. B. 5. p. 315. ad ann. 1659.

(H) Mr. Daillé who had serv'd him with all his Credit.] I think my self oblig'd to set down here the Insults which Mr. Daillé's Adversaries offer'd him upon this Occasion, and what Answer he made 'em in his own Justification; for this is a part of Mr. Morus's Adventures. Here then is what Mr Cottiby formerly Minister of Poitiers, objected to Mr Daille: "(a) That which surprizes "me most, is to see my self accus'd by you, Sir, "from whom I might have hop'd for the surest "Protection and Support, if by Misfortune I "should have happen'd to fall into any Fault, "which had oblig'd me to appear before these "Tribunals, in which you commonly hold so "eminent rible Quarrel between them, which produc'd a thouſand partial Doings in the Flock. In general, Mr. Morus in the midſt of the Applauſes which his inimitable (I) Way of Preaching procur'd from an extraordinary Croud of Auditors, had the Mortification at Paris to ſee his Reputation attack'd by Perſons of Merit, who accus'd him a-new to (K) the Synods from which he was ſav'd only as by Fire. His Death which was very edifying, and the ſigns of Piety which he ſhow'd in his laſt Sickneſs, blotted out the Remembrance of any Irregularities in his Behaviour. He died at Paris, at the Houſe of the Dutcheſs of Rohan, in the Month of September 1670. He was never Married. We ſhall ſee below the Titles of his Works (L).

(a) Cottiby, Replique à Mr. Daille, p. 17.

I ſhall

" eminent a Place; for what elſe could I reaſonably " expect from a Man who in the Perſon of one of " his Brethren, is the declar'd Defender and Advo- " cate of one of the impureſt Lives in the World, " and who, after he had pleaded his Cauſe in a " Provincial Synod of the Iſle of France, was " hardy enough in a National Synod, whereof he " was the Head, (a fine Head for ſuch a Body) to " Patronize him openly; I will not ſay againſt " the faithful Memoirs of the Miniſters of Rohan, " of Caen and Lyons, but which is more aſtoniſhing, " againſt a Multitude of Accuſations from ſome " entire Provinces, and all this by I know not " how many Turns, much leſs innocent than " thoſe of the Tongue." Father Adam made him almoſt the ſame Reproaches, whom Mr. Daillé anſwer'd in theſe Words: " (b) Wherefore would " you have me condemn him, and judge him un- " worthy of thoſe charitable Offices which are " owing to our Neighbour in neceſſity; me " who have heard him, me who have not only " heard him, but who, after an exact Enquiry in- " to the Cauſe with all the Diligence and Appli " cation I was capable of, was convinc'd of his In- " nocence? Although I were oblig'd only by my " own Conſcience to do him theſe ſmall Offices of " Kindneſs; yet this alone would ſufficiently " juſtifie me againſt thoſe Violences and ſtrange " Calumnies, to which your Proſelyte is tranſport- " ted againſt me in this place. But both you and " he do ſo much the more unjuſtly blame my " Conduct in this Affair, as I did him thoſe Of- " fices, which you reprove in me, not from any " private Opinion of my own, but by the Order " of my Superiors; firſt by Order of the Conſiſtory " of my own Church, which entruſted me and " the Deputies with this Affair in the Synod of " the Iſle of France mention'd by your Proſelyte, " which was held at Ferté by Juare in 1657; and " then two Years after, not only by Order of my " own Conſiſtory and Church, but alſo by that " of the General Synod of theſe Provinces held at " Ai in Champagne, in 1659. I have done, with " as little ill Grace as was poſſible for me, what " the Aſſemblies, on whom I depend, expreſly " enjoyn'd and commanded; what my own " Conſcience was ſo far from being ſhock'd at, " that I approv'd it as Juſt and Reaſonable What " Crime have I committed in all this? Certain- " ly altho' the Defendant were in reality Guilty, " as I believe him Innocent, yet its evident I " ſhould be no Partner in the Crime, from which " in this Caſe he has been acquitted by two Judg- " ments; becauſe I have only defended a Cauſe " which I did, and ſtill do believe to be very juſt. " I neither had, nor could have any Vote in the " Sentence given; for I did the Office of an Ad- " vocate and not of a Judge. Beſides, I muſt " add, that I neither did the one nor the other in " the National Synod, which made the laſt De- " cree about this Affair; for the Defendant him- " ſelf being preſent there, pleaded his own Cauſe " in five or ſix full Hearings, with ſo much Force " and Evidence, that Thanks be to God there was " no need of any Body's Help." See below the Remark M. towards the end.

(b) Daille replique au Pere Adam, part. 3. p. 154.

(I) His inimitable manner of Preaching] It conſiſted in certain Sallies of Fancy, which contain'd ingenious Alluſions, and I know not what Air of Paradox very fit to ſurprize the Hearer, and engage his conſtant Attention. But his Manner of delivering theſe Things was what was moſt taking. Whence it came to paſs that his Sermons in Writing were not near ſo much admir'd; and that the greateſt part of thoſe who endeavour to imitate him, only make themſelves ridiculous. The deſire of imitating him, which began to corrupt many of the young Miniſters, oblig'd the Synod of the Iſle of France in the Year 1675, to make an Act which was read in the Pulpit of Charenton and elſewhere, by which all Perſons were commanded in Expounding the Word of God to avoid the Sportings of Fancy, and playing with Words, &c. It will not be amiſs in this place to ſee the Judgment of an Hiſtorian, who knew Men incomparably better than I do. He was (), ſays he ſpeaking of our Morus, extraordinarily followed by the People, and they who leaſt knew why he deſerv'd Admiration, were nevertheleſs his moſt paſſionate Admirers. It's a Diſpute among Perſons of good Judgment, whether his Excellency lay in any thing that was ſolid, or only in ſhew, whether it deſerv'd to be call'd a flaſh of Lightning, or a ſteady Light But even thoſe who gave Sentence againſt him, could not but hear him with great pleaſure, and feel in themſelves the ſame Paſſions, which he rais'd in others. Some have thought that he had much leſs Learning than is commonly imagin'd: But no Body doubts that he knew how to ſet forth to the beſt advantage that which he was Maſter of, and to give a luſtre to any thing he expos'd to publick view. However, never did any Man receive more flattering Applauſes than he, nor could that which was ſaid of another be better apply'd to any Man than him; that if he did not deſerve the eminent gross Character given of him, at leaſt he ravi[ſh]'d his Hearers ſo that they could not ſpeak to his Diſadvantage He had ſaid p. 316. that Morus's Way did not pleaſe all the World, and that they who affected to imitate him, had almoſt always bad Succeſs.

() Hiſt of the Edict of Nantes, tom. 2. p. 463.

(K) A-new to the Synods] Mr. Morus did not live long at quiet in the Church of Paris; for after the Month of September 1661, Complaints were brought againſt him before the Conſiſtory, which came to nothing and perhaps the Reaſon was becauſe he ask'd leave to go into England in December 1661; but he return'd in 1662 And then the Complaints being immediately renew'd, the Conſiſtory order'd that he ſhould be heard; but that in the mean time he ſhould forbear Preaching. His Partizans would have him Preach in ſpite of the Conſiſtory, and to that end ſeiz'd upon all the Avenues to the Pulpit, and would not ſuffer Mr. Daillé's Son to get up into it, which caus'd ſo terrible a Commotion, that there was no Preaching that Sunday Morning Some Maſters of Families had recourſe to the Parliament, which upon July 27 1662, order'd a Veſtry to be ſummon'd upon it. This Meeting ſuſpended Mr. Morus for a Year. The Synod of the Iſle of France confirm'd and even heighten'd the Suſpenſion; but that of the Province of Berry, to which this Miniſter appeal'd, reſtor'd him to his Office (c) This kind of Appeals is allow'd by the Regulations of the National Synods

(c) All this is related at large in the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nantes, at the end of the 5th Book of the 3d Tome

(L) The Titles of his Works] There's a Treatiſe of his de gratia & libero arbitrio; another de Scriptura ſacra ſui ipſius; de cauſa Dei; a Commentary on the 53d Chapter of Iſaiah; Notes ad loca quædam vet. fœderis; an Anſwer to Milton, entitled, Ad Andr. Mori fidem publicam; Orations and Poems in Latin Some Fragments (c) of his Sermons have been Printed ſince his Death, and ſome entire Sermons We ſhall add one word about his Orations He ſpoke three of them at Geneva, which are very fine. The Latin of them is rather Learned than Elegant He affected uncommon Words, and ſuch ſignifications of Words as there are ſcarce any Examples of to be found Of theſe three Orations, one is a Panegyrick upon Calvin; another is entitled de pace, wherein he briskly condemns, without naming any Body, Mr. Amyraldus and Spanheim, who were at open War about Univerſal Grace He tells 'em their own roundly. This was a true Juniper Lecture; it comforted the very Cockles of the Hearers Hearts. Let's alſo ſay a word about his Latin Poems. Thoſe which he made on the Birth of our Saviour were much eſteem'd, and ſo were thoſe which were a Thouſ-

(c) At the Hague in 1685 , ſee the Nouvelles de la Republ des Lettres, for the Month of March, 1685 p. 333, of the Edition. Eighteen of his Sermons have been Printed in the Collection of Sermons Printed in the Low Countries, at Amſterdam in 1691.

I ſhall ſay ſomething of his Quarrel (M) with John Milton: And obſerve, that there are ſome things in the Menagiana (N) very much to his Glory, and others which are not. One of his laſt Panegyrical Writers relates a Fact (O) which is not true.

The

giving to God after a great Sickneſs. Mr. Perachon, who was then a Proteſtant, tranſlated 'em into French Verſe, and publiſh'd 'em at Paris in 16—I do not remember that I ever ſaw any other French Verſes of Mr. Morus's except the Anſwer he made in the ſame Rhyme to a Sonnet which Corras inſcribed to him after his Abjuration.

(M) His Quarrel with John Milton.] The ground of the Quarrel was this; in 1652, Mr. Morus got a Book of Peter du Moulin the Son to be Printed at the Hague (a), and Dedicated as from the Printer (b) to the King of Great Britain. This Book which is entit'led, Regii ſanguinis clamor ad cælum adverſus parricidas Anglicanos, is a bitter Invective againſt the Parliamentarians, and particularly Mr. Milton is extreamly ill treated in it. The Epiſtle Dedicatory does not handle him more civily, but he is much more furiouſly beſpatter'd in ſome Verſes at the latter end of the Book. Milton, who had let ſeveral violent Books publiſh'd againſt the Parliamentarians to paſs without any Reply, could not contain when he ſaw this, in which he was perſonally concern'd to ſuch a degree, as well by the vaſt Elogiums given in it to Salmaſius, as by the terrible Reproaches heap'd upon himſelf. He anſwer'd therefore, and ſuppoſes either ſincerely or craftily, that he might have the more Scope againſt the Perſon whom he refuted, that Morus (c) was the Author of this Book. He treats him like a Dog, or rather like a Goat; for he accuſes him of a thouſand lewd Actions, and particularly of having Debauch'd a Maid-Servant at Geneva, and of having entertain'd her ſince ſhe had a Husband, and of having got a Chamber-Maid of Madam Saumaiſe with Child under Promiſe of Marriage. He accuſes him of being Convicted of ſeveral Hereſies at Geneva, and of having ſhamefully abjur'd them with his Mouth, but not with his Heart. He repreſents him as depriv'd at Geneva of eight or ten Months Salary, and of his Offices of Profeſſor and Miniſter, on account of a Charge brought againſt him for Adultery, &c. the Iſſue whereof was, that he muſt have been Condemn'd, if he had not avoided the definitive Sentence, by declaring he would quit the City. He accuſes him alſo of being forbidden the Exerciſe of the Miniſtry by the Magiſtrates of Amſterdam. In fine, he defames him after the crueleſt manner in the World, interlarding the Stories he makes of him with a World of buffoon ſcurrilous Jeſts. Mr. Morus defends himſelf by a long Liſt of Teſtimonials, of his Orthodoxy and good Life, which the Conſiſtories, the Academies, the Synods and the Magiſtrates of the Places where he had liv'd, had given him. He makes it appear, that the Judges as well Civil as Eccleſiaſtical, which took Cognizance of the Pretenſions of the Chamber-Maid of Madam Saumaiſe, had declar'd 'em null, and clearly acquitted him in this Affair, notwithſtanding the Plots of this Lady (d) who ſet all her Engines at work to ruin his Reputation. He makes it appear by the Authentick Certificates of the Magiſtrates of Amſterdam, of the Walloon Conſiſtory, and of the Curators of the Schola illuſtris of the ſame City, that he was never forbid the Exerciſe of his Miniſtery. I am not ignorant that ſome Exceptions may be alledg'd againſt his Certificates of a good Life, and it's a little ſtrange, that thoſe which Morus obtain'd at Geneva ſhould be ſo different from the Teſtimony of publick Fame: For after all, its certain, that Milton receiv'd Memoirs from Geneva, and that he produc'd (e) a Letter written from that City, telling, that all the World admir'd how he came to be ſo faithfully inform'd about the Conduct of Mr. Morus. He did not come ſhort of him in Certificates; particularly he ſays as to thoſe of Geneva (f), that they were given before thoſe who accus'd Mr. Morus of Adultry had formally proſecuted him. Beſides, it's well-known, that the greateſt Storm this Miniſter endur'd at Geneva, was rais'd ſince the time of his obtaining the Atteſtations of January 25. 1648; and a certain Perſon has publiſh'd (g), that the Magiſtrates of that City ſtifled the Depoſitions againſt Mr. Morus before the Conſiſtory, and commanded the Conſiſtory to give this Miniſter a Teſtimonial of good Life. But after all, there are incomparably more Exceptions to be alledg'd againſt the defamatory Reports, which ſuch an Author as Milton is capable of Collecting, than againſt theſe Certificates and Teſtimonials. Upon the whole, I ſhould be of Opinion, that conſidering thoſe Certificates which have been produc'd by his own Party, and the Inconveniences juſtly to be apprehended, if ſuch Accuſations as are uncertain and without judicial Proof, ſhould be preferr'd before Juſtifications drawn up in due form, that he deſerves to be ſtigmatiz'd as a publick Calumniator, except as to thoſe Facts in which he can defend himſelf by the help of ſome Authentick Acts. Particularly I am of Opinion, that the Diſtich he has inſerted in the London Gazett, ſhould be declar'd a Diabolical Slander. That Diſtich is in theſe Words, for I can't think (h) Mr. Colomies would have produc'd another.

Galli ex concubitu gravidam te (i) Pontia Mori,
Quis benè moratam morigeramque neget?

Milton's Hatred was inveterate enough, as appears by a Letter (k) he wrote to the National Synod of Loudun, when Mr. Morus's Affair was in agitation. He believ'd, that tho' they ſhould decree nothing more than the depoſing this Miniſter, ſomething might be ſaid for that Synod which could never yet be ſaid for any other, viz. that it had had a happy Iſſue. Synodo interea proteſtantium Loudunenſi, (l) propedicm, ut ſcribis, convocandæ, precor id quod nulli adhuc Synodo contigit, fœlicem exitum, non Nazianzenicum; fœlicem autem huic nunc ſatis futurum ſi nihil aliud decreverit quàm ejiciendum eſſe Morum. This Letter is dated December 20. 1659; i. e. the 30th New Style. The Synod had already ſat near two Months, and yet Mr. Milton ſpeaks of it as an Aſſembly to come, which ſhows, that he had ſcarce any Correſpondence in France. In another Letter (m) he ſpeaks yet more harſhly of Mr. Morus's Call to Charenton, but without naming him.

(N) In the Menagiana which are very much to his Glory.] "(n) Mr. Morus declar'd ſome time before "his Death, that no one had tempted him to "change his Religion ſo much as I. The Dutcheſs of Aiguillon order'd me to offer him in her "Name four Thouſand Livres Penſion. I communicated this Affair to Mr. Perefix, then Archbiſhop of Paris by Abbot Gaudin, and Mr. Perefix ſpoke of it to the King. Whereupon his "Majeſty ſaid, that it was not a fit time, and "that it would do hurt to Mr. Morus, becauſe he "was engag'd in a Difference or Suit with his "Brethren. Mr. Morus made Diviſions wherever "he came: This he did in Holland and elſewhere, "and even at Paris. One might compare him to "Helena, who kindled a War wherever ſhe came. "——(o) Marſhal Grammont having been by the "King's Order to viſit M. Morus in his laſt Sickneſs: The Marſhal told the King at his Return, "when he ask'd him how he did; I ſaw him die; "he died a good Huguenot. But one thing I can't "but pitty him for, viz. that he died in a Religion as much out of Faſhion now as a High-Crown'd-Hat.

(O) A Fact which is not true.] "The whole Sorbonne was one Day (p) ſurpriz'd, and there happen'd a thing very glorious for Mr. Morus, which "made all its Doctors bluſh, and which they "look'd on as a kind of an Enchantment. A certain Man whoſe Face was altogether unknown "to 'em, and whom they took at firſt ſight for "the Prieſt of ſome Village, being preſent at "their Diſputes, deſir'd the Profeſſor who preſided in that Aſſembly, to give him leave to "propoſe ſome Arguments; and acquitted himſelf ſo well, that he quickly gain'd the Eſteem "of all the Doctors; and becauſe this new Antagoniſt urg'd his Arguments with a terrible "Force, and beyond what was expected from him, "their Eſteem was chang'd into Admiration. But "when they ſaw that this powerful Enemy treated 'em after a hoſtile manner, and that they "could

(a) See Daillé Replique au P. Adam, 2. partie, p. 127. Colomies Biblioth. choiſ. p. 19.

(b) There were ſome Copies to which Mr. Morus had put his Name as Milton ſays, Defenſ. pro ſe, p. 23, 25.

(c) The Oxford Catalogue aſcribes it to Morus.

(d) Illa mihi graviter jamdudum inſenſa—nihil intentatum reliquit ut me in naſſam infauſtiſſimi matrimonii compingeret. Quod ubi fecaſit innotuiſſe vulgo, me vero palam vehementiſſimeque reluctari, A. Iverona movebo, inquit, & per dam ipſum, quâ ſæpe formulâ utitur. Morus, Vitæ privatæ, p. 190.

(e) Milt Defenſ pro ſe, p. 132.

(f) Ibid P 92. 141.

(g) Ludov. Molinæus, Paræneſi ad ædificat. P. 433.

(h) Bibl choiſie, p. 19.

(i) This he call'd the Chamber-maid of Madam Saumaiſe. Mr. Morus without telling what her Name was, denies that Milton call'd her by her right Name. See Miltoni Defenſ. pro ſe p. 164

(k) It's the 29.

(l) He ſhould have ſaid Juliodunenſi, or Lauſdunenſi, &c.

(m) It's the 24th, and dated the 1ſt of Auguſt 1657.

(n) Menagiana, p 153. of the 2d Edit of Holland.

(o) Suit du Menagiana, p. 82.

(p) That's to ſay at the force of Mr Morus's Genius.

The Judgment which Mr. Chevreau has made of the Character of Mr. Morus, is very agreeable to that which is given by many other good Judges of Men, and shows (P) at the same time, that the Things which are written to a Man, do not always resemble those which are said of him, in Letters written to other People. I shall not pass over in silence, that the illustrious Mr. Huet gives very great Elogiums to Mr. Morus in some Latin Poems which he inscrib'd to him. See p. 30, and 77, of the Poems of this learned Prelate, of the † Utrecht Edition 1700.

MOSYNIANS, or β MOSYNOECIANS. Thus certain Mountainers were call'd, who liv'd in γ Trees, or in the Walks δ of some Woods ζ in the Neighbourhood of the Euxine Sea. Their Customs were so opposite η to those of other Nations, that those things which others do privately in their Houses, they did in the Face of the World; and what others do in publick, they did in their private Recesses, not excepting the Work (A) of Generation from this preposterous Rule. The highest part of the Wood was the Habitation of their King, a miserable Prince, because he must determine all their Differences as a Judge, and if he happen'd to give a wrong Judgment, they made him a Prisoner upon the spot (B), and allow'd him no Food nor γ Strabo l. 12 p. 548.

† It's the 4th; his Notes on the Anthologia are joined to Daniel Heinsius, inhabiting Towers. See Apollonius & Strabo ubi infra.

δ Id. ib.

ζ Pomponius Mela Bithynia, & Dionysius Periegetes, v. 795.

η Apollon. Argon. l. 2 v. 1025 &c.

" could stand against the force of his Reasons no " longer, all their Admiration and Esteem was " chang'd into Anger and Indignation; and the " Dispute grew so hot, that if he had not quickly " got out of so dangerous a Place, there was reason to fear they would have done him some Mischief. But he imitated Jesus Christ our great " Master, when he went out of the Temple to " shun the Snares of the Pharisees whom he came " to confound: For after he had stopp'd the " Mouths of these Pharisees of the latter Ages, " he amus'd 'em with soft Words, went out of " their Synagogue, and so left 'em. After he " had made his Escape, they order'd one of their " Scholars to follow him at a distance, and watch " where he went in, and afterwards enquire what " kind of Man this was who knew more than all " the Sorbonne together: But the Matter being " observ'd by him whom they so much desir'd to " know, he turn'd about to him who follow'd " him, and said only these two words memento " Mori; this made those who sent him presently " conclude, that he who had given 'em so much " Trouble, was that famous Man who is one of " the Pillars of the Church of Charenton, and " the Terror of the Romish Church (a)." This I find in a Book publish'd about a Year ago, which is worth the reading. It's now twenty five Years since I told this Story in the Presence of a Doctor of Divinity, Curate of R. a Man of Wit, and well vers'd in the Customs of his Religion. I was persuaded of the Truth of the Fact, for I had heard it told upon several Occasions by Men of good Sense; and at the Age I was then of, I scarce distrusted any thing that came from such Persons. The Doctor answer'd me, it's a pretty Story indeed, and the Conclusion is very ingenious; but assure your self it's a Romance, for they who propose Arguments against the Theses that are maintain'd in the Sorbonne, are always such Persons as are well known, and Graduates in the Faculty, and oblig'd to wear the Habits or Badges of their Degree. Had the Author of this Story known as much, he would have shifted the Scene.

(a) Panegyrique d'Alexandre Morus, imprimé à Amsterdam chez Jean du Fresne l'an 1695. p. 14, 15, 16.

(P) The Judgment which Mr Chevreau——is very agreeable—and shows at the same time] Read the two Letters (i) which he wrote to him in 1665, the one in French, and the other in Latin, and compare 'em with this Passage of his Letter to Mr. le Fevre: " (c) You know there are some who " naturally love Incense from what Hand soever " it comes, and who are so accustom'd to it, " that it's impossible to please, unless one has " always a Censer in his Hand. This is a failing " that deserves to be pitty'd; but it's a human " Failing; besides, that the profound Attainments " of (d) our Friend in human Learning and an exact Knowledge of the Greek, and of all the Oriental Tongues, do justly render him consi " derable, and distinguish him from so many o- " thers who resemble him only in his Defects. " That which pleas'd me in the frequent Conversations we had together, was, that he always " told me sincerely he thought himself infinitely " below Mr. Daillé, whom he believ'd to be a " more solid Divine than your-self. But with- " al, a certain Proposant, whom you know lately " assur'd me, that Mr Morus was preferr'd before " Mr. Daillé by the general Voice of the World, " that his fantastick Turn of Imagination and " Freaks of Fancy, please People much more by " their Novelty, than the Eloquence of Mr. " Daillé, who was fit to be his Master——(e) " But what I fear is, that he'll be intoxicated by " these extraordinary Applauses, that he has not " the power to offer the least Violence to his " free Humour, and that he will not hear his " Inclination —— without any regard to his " Character, his Reputation, or his Fortune." Mr. Morus, says he (f), in another Letter, " has a " deal of Wit and Learning, but little Religion " or sound Judgment. He's Indiscreet, Ambitious, Restless, Changeable, Bold, Presumptuous and Wavering. He understands Latin, " Greek, Hebrew and Arabick, but does not understand human Life.

(b) Oeuvres mêlées de Mr. Chevreau, p. 40. & 50.

(c) Ibid. p. 48.

(d) That's to say, Mr Morus.

(A) Not excepting the Work of Generation from this preposterous Rule] Apollonius had reason to compare 'em to Swine, since they were not asham'd to do the Act before the Eyes of their Neighbours

Οὐδ' (g) εὐνῆς αἰδῶς ἐνδημίου, ἀλλὰ συῶν ἀϊ
Φῦλα δίκην ἐρέουσιν ἐπιχθόνιοι πάντες ὅτῳ
Μίσγονται χαμάδις ξυνὸν φόλιτιν γυνὸ κεῖ
Nec cos in populo pudet actus Veneris facere in medio
populorum
Grege gallum, nihil quicquam reverita arbitros,
Hunc & in propatulo commisceri cum uxoribus corpora

(e) Apoll. Argon. l. 2 v. 1028 p. 243, 244

The Scholiast observes, that we must not understand this as if they joyn'd Couples in publick with all Women indifferently, but each with his own Wife. Pomponius Mela makes no such Distinction Propatulo vesci[untur], says he (h), PROMISCUE concumbunt & palam. I know not what ground the Scholiast had for this Distinction. Had he a mind to make use of the Maxim, that in doubtful Matters we should always embrace the more favourable Opinion, and pass the mildest Sentence. But the Phrases of Apollonius seem very clear against this Exception, and do plainly authorize the Words of Pomponius Mela; Di aurus Siculus (i) has given them little less Authority. Note, that we find in Xenophon (k), that the Mosynoecians, with whom he made a League, had a great mind to live with the Wenches that follow'd the Camp of the Grecians, and that publickly according to their own Custom. This inhumous Impudency has been known in (l) other Nations.

(h) Pomponius Mela l. 1 c. 19 p. m. 22.

(i) Diod. Siculus, l. 14 c. 31

(k) Xenophon. de Exped. Cyri l. 5. p. m. 329.

(P) They made him a Prisoner upon the spot, and allowed him no Food nor Nourishment.] We finding give the very Words of Apollonius

(l) Conf. Plutarch. de Vitios. Pudore & Herodot. l. 1 p. 57. Strabo l. 17 p. 1161. Justin. l. 44 c. 3. Ammian. Marcell. l. 14 c. 6. Plutarch. in Lycurgo. Aelian. Var. Hist. l. 3 c. 38. Athenaeus l. 13 c. 3. Aristot. Politic. l. 2 c. 6. Plutarch. in Apophthegm. Lacon. Aristot. Oeconom. l. 1 c. 5. Aristot. Politic. l. 7 c. 16. Plutarch. in Lycurgo. Aelian. Var. Hist. l. 3 c. 38. Athenaeus l. 13 c. 3. Aristot. Politic. l. 2 c. 6. Plutarch. in Apophthegm. Lacon. Aristot. Oeconom. l. 1 c. 5.

(m) Apollon. ubi supra, v. 1032.

(n) Pomponius Mela ubi supra.

nor Suſtenance θ. Their Kingdom was Elective, and they always kept their Prince ν in Chains and under ſtrong Guards. They liv'd upon Acorns and the Fleſh of wild Beaſts, laid Traps to catch Travellers λ, and treated Strangers very ill μ. They mark'd themſelves in ſeveral parts of their Bodies φ. Conſult Xenophon in the Fifth Book of the Expedition of Cyrus the Younger. He has given a long Account of their manner of Arming and Maintaining themſelves. He ſays, that when they were alone they Talk'd, Laugh'd and Danc'd, as if they were in a great deal of Company.

θ Taken from Apollonius ibid.

ν Pompon Mela, l. 1. c. 19 See alſo Diodorus ſiculus, l. 14. c. 31.

λ Strabo, ibid.

φ Pomp. Mela, ib.

μ Id. ib.

MOTHE LE VAYER (FRANCIS DE LA). See VAYER.

MOTTE-AIGRON (JAMES DE LA) became famous in the quality of an Author during famous Conteſt betwixt Balzac, and Father Goulu, General of the Feuillant Monks. He wrote a Preface to Balzac's Letters, and was Commiſſion'd joyntly (A) with Mr. Vaugelas, to carry to Father Goulu a Copy of Balzac's Apology, in which he treated a certain young Feuillant very harſhly. Father Goulu took the ſending of this Copy * as a Challenge, and immediately ſet himſelf to write againſt Balzac in an outrageous manner, and ſpent ſome of his ſmall Shot upon Mr. Motte-Aigron, particularly in ſaying that he † was the Son of a very honeſt Apothecary, and that he commonly liv'd at Balzac's Table. It's pretended, that this was in ſome meaſure violating the Laws of Hoſpitatility, ſince Father Goulu had more than once lodg'd at β Mr. Motte-Aigron's Father's: On the other ſide, it's a Preſumption, that he knew things from the firſt Hand. Be that how it will, he exaſperated his Man moſt bitterly, and occaſion'd ſome one's informing the Publick in the Dedication of a Book, that the pretended Apothecary of Father Goulu was Abraam Aigron, Eſquire, Counſellor to the King, and Commiſſioner of the Cuſtoms of Angouleſme. This Epiſtle Dedicatory is not ill written γ; but being in Latin, and prefix'd to the Anſwer which Motte-Aigron wrote in French to Father Goulu, there's an Affectation in it which only ſerv'd to beget a diſlike of the grand Elogiums which the Author very liberally beſtows on his Father, and which he turns in ſuch a manner, as might moſt effectually remove all ſuſpicion of Pharmacy. Nor ſatisfy'd with touching this Matter in the Preamble, he informs us δ in the Body of the Book, that his Great Grandfather having accompanied Henry II. in his Journey to Germany, was one of the chief Captains which the King left in Metz, and one of thoſe who defended that Place with great Bravery againſt Charles V. He adds, that his Great Grandmother Catherine de la Rovde was of as noble a Houſe as any in her Country, and that his Great Uncle by the Mother's ſide, had the Honour to be Secretary of the King's Edicts, and Principal Miniſter to Margaret ſince Wife of Henry Albret King of Navarre. Father Goulu had already chang'd his Note, ſince before the publiſhing of this Book, he had ſaid ζ, that Mr. La Motte-Aigron was too honeſt a Gentleman to deny, &c. Let any one that pleaſe conſider whether this be equivalent to a fair Retraction: I don't think it is. And I have heard ſome ſay, that the Father of Mr. Motte-Aigron had been really an Apothecary at firſt, but better'd his Condition by buying the place of a Commiſſioner of the Taxes, and at laſt became Mayor of Coignac in Angoumois. Mr. Malleville has given a hint of this in an Epigram (B) which never was inſerted in the Collection

* Preface to the ſecond Part of the Lettres de Phillarque & 1. Letter of the 2 part.

† Lettre 13. de Phyllarque 1. partie.

β LaMotte-Aigron, Reponſe à Phyllarque, p. 318, 322. See the Article Goulu (Jean) R mark N.

γ See among the Letters of Balzac, that which he wrote in 1622 to LaMotte-Aigron, where he compliments him highly, eſpecially on his fine Latin.

δ Page 306, 307.

ζ Preface to the 2d part of the Lettres de Phillarque.

in the Collections of Stobæus. Mela verba illa ad famem illo die, pro illius diei accepit. At Apollonii enarratores contra intelligunt, eo ipſo die quo contra jus pronunciaverit in carcerem trudi, quoad fame pereat, citanque ſuæ expoſitionis aſſertores Ephorum & Nymphodorum. Addo ego aſtipulari interpretibus Apollonii, Nicolaum de moribus gentium referente Joanne Stobæo (a). The whole Paſſage of the Scholiaſt is this: Ἴσως δὲ ἔφορος καὶ νυμφόδωρος περὶ τούτων, ὅτι τὸν βασιλέα αὐτῶν ἀδικόν τι πείναντα, ἐγκλείσοι καὶ λιμαγχονῆσαι. I have related this on purpoſe to ſhow, that the Critick ſtrains his Privileges a little too far; for it's not true, that the Scholiaſt gave the Explication of Pintian to the Words of the Text, and afterwards proved it by the Authority of Ephorus annd Nymphodorus; for he only cites what theſe two Authors ſay, I am therefore of Pintian's Opinion, and find that Iſaac Voſſius has refuted it pitifully. He ſuppoſes (b), that the Moſynæcians condemn'd their King for ſlighter Faults to faſt a Day, and that for greater Faults they condemn'd him to die of Hunger. He gives this (c) as the true ſenſe of the Words of Apollonius, and maintains they were well interpreted by Pomponius Mela. Interpretatio Melæ, adds he, ut facilior ita quoque melior. This is ſtrange! Apollonius would have inform'd us of the Diſtinction which this People made between the ſmall and the greater Offences of their Prince. He would inform us, that for the former the Prince was to faſt a whole Day, and for the latter to be famiſh'd to Death; and yet there ſhan't be the leaſt Phraſe or Word in his Relation which inſinuates any ſuch Diſtinction. Pomponius Mela ſhall be ſaid to have given the ſenſe of Apollonius faithfully, and yet he ſhan't ſay a Syllable of the Puniſhment of the greater Faults. He ſhall dwell on Characters the leaſt diſadvantageous to the Nation, which Apollonius intended to defame; he ſhall be wholly ſilent with regard to ſuch Matters as might render it the moſt odious of any: In a word, there ſhan't be a hint in any Expreſſions of his of the leaſt Footſteep of the Diſtinction in queſtion. What Man alive can digeſt this? What does Iſaac Voſſius take his Readers to be? A thouſand ſuch Faults might be found in the beſt Writers, if one would take the pains to examine their Books rigorouſly.

Note, that it muſt be granted, that Apollonius expreſſes himſelf very confuſedly, which occaſion'd Pomponius Mela's Miſtake. I wonder Diodorus Siculus ſays nothing of this Law, who obſerves, that theſe Barbarians (d) ſhut up their Prince all his Life in the Dungeon of their chief City.

(a) Pintianus, Caſtigat. in Pomponium Melam, p. m. 37.

(b) Iſaacus Voſſius in Melam, p. m. 164.

(c) Hic quidem videtur ſenſus eſſe verborum Apollonii quæ recte interpretatus eſt Mela, licet contrarium exiſtiment Pintianus aliique viri magni. Id. ib.

(d) Locus iſte aliorum caſtellorum veluti caput & primaria regionis arx, fuit: in cujus parte editiſſima rex aulam habebat. Patrius autem hic mos pro lege erat, ut per totam inibi vitam rex ſubſiſtens mandata populis inde diſtribuerit. Diodor. Siculus, l. 14 c. 31. p. m. 592.

(A) Joyntly with Mr. Vaugelas. Father Goulu in the Preface to the ſecond part of his Letters, ſays, that he who accompanied Motte-Aigron was the Prior of Chives; (there are ſome Letters to this Prior among thoſe of Balzac) but Motte-Aigron informs (e) us, that he with whom he went to make a viſit to Father Goulu was Mr. Vaugelas.

(B) In an Epigram which never was inſerted.] Sorel having obſerv'd (f), that Motte-Aigron to ſhow where the Buſineſs ſtuck with thoſe who underſtood ſomething of the matter, and to create a great Opinion of his Family, dedicated his Book to his Father in a Latin Epiſtle with very high Titles; adds theſe Words: If it were proper in this place we ſhould ſet down the Epigram which Mr. Malleville made upon this occaſion; but ſome Officers of France being concern'd in it too, 'twould look like inſulting their Misfortunes in the preſent juncture of Affairs. As for me who know not what this juncture might mean, and who believe it by (e) Reponſe à Phyllarque, p. 299.

(f) Bibliotheque Françoiſe, p. 132. de la 2 edit.

Collection of his Poems. I cannot diſcover what became (C) of our Author, after the publiſhing his Anſwer in 1628, or what became of the Deſign he ſeem'd to have, after he had humbled the General of the Feuillants, of retrieving the Fruits of his Labours which a Fire had deſtroy'd. Thoſe Labours of his § concern'd the Hiſtory of Spain, and ſome other Matters. It belongs to thoſe who write the Bibliotheque of Angoumois, to inform us about 'em.

§ See his Epiſtle Dedicatory.

I ſaw a Book ſome Days ago, in which it is affirm'd, that the pains Motte-Aigron took in Writing againſt Phyllarchus, and in favour of Balzac, was the Seed of ſome Animoſities between him and the latter, for Balzac would fain (D) have been thought the true Author of the Book which appear'd under the Name of Motte-Aigron.

MOUGNE (Robert) publiſh'd in 1616 * a Book entit'led, The Cloſet of a Chriſtian Widow, containing Prayers and Meditations upon divers Subjects of the Holy Scripture, and dedicated it to the moſt Prudent and Virtuous Lady Benigne de Rabutin, Baroneſs of Huban, Lady of Eſpeville and Brinon. She informs us in the Epiſtle Dedicatory dated at Blois, July 7. 1615, that ſhe had been a Widow twenty ſix Years. After this Epiſtle we find a Sonnet to Madamoiſelle du Cheſne Belon my Mother, upon her Cloſet of a Chriſtian Widow. Nicolas Vignier, a Miniſter of the Holy Goſpel, is Author of this Sonnet, and informs us, that the immortal Pen of the Husband of our Mougne deſcribes in his learned Writings the Virtues of that Woman. She was of the Reform'd Religion, and ſhows in her Book a judicious Piety, nouriſh'd with the good Juice of the Word of God. The Lady Rubutin, whom ſhe calls a rare Patron of Piety, Chaſtity and Charity, and one who may ſerve as a Pattern to all Chriſtian Widows, was alſo of the Reform'd Religon.

* At Paris by Antoine Joallin in 16

MUCIA

by this time intirely over, I ſhall make no ſcruple to ſet down that Epigram, which is as follows:

Objet du mepris de Goulu,
Que ton inſolence eſt publique;
Depuis que ton pere eſt Elu,
Et qu'il a fermé ſa boutique:
Mais bien que cette qualité,
Si l'on en croit ta vanité,
N'en trouve point qui la ſeconde;
Il n'en eſt pourtant pas ainſi:
C'eſt un beau titre en l'autre monde;
Mais on s'en moque en celui-ci.

(g) Menagiana, p. 132. de la 1. edit. de Holl.

Since the writing of this Article, a Book (g) has happen'd to fall into my Hands in which theſe Verſes are to be found.

(b) It's the 37th of the 6th Book of fol. Edition.

(C) What became of our Author.] I only know by a Letter of (b) Balzac, dated July 29th 1634, that Motte-Aigron was Married at Rochel, that he had ſome Place in the Government, and that there was ſome Quarrel between them two. The Menagiana (i) informs us, that he was a Lawyer in the Preſidial Court of Rochel.

(i) Pag. 131.

(D) Balzac would fain have been thought the true Author.] You may ſee the particular Account of all this in theſe Words of Javerſac: "(a) Notwithſtanding this, I was ſenſible how grievouſly he had "provok'd me by his Demand and Manner of Proceeding: Which I thought the leſs ſtrange, when "I conſider'd after what manner he had treated Mr. "Motte-Aigron, whom the ſtricteſt Bonds, with which "Nature unites the Minds of two Brothers, had "link'd to his Fortunes: The Obligation of a Thouſand good Offices which his frank Kindneſs had "laid him under, the Innocence of all his Actions "from their firſt Acquaintance to this preſent "Time, were not ſo conſiderable with him as his "own Vanity. After they had communicated to one "another their deſign of Writing againſt Phyllarchus, and Balzac had taken to himſelf the larger "Field of Matter, as being the more barren Genius, and more concern'd than the other; he was "not ſatisfy'd with having more than a Year's "Leiſure and Liberty to advance his Work, while "his Friend was all that time forc'd to dance Attendance to his Judges, upon a Proſecution of "which he was honourably acquitted by the "Court: But would needs for ſeveral Reaſons ſuppreſs a Book, which after this Suit was over his "Friend had leiſure enough to get to the Preſs. He "does well in order to Monopolize the Title of "Eloquent, to hinder all others from Writing, for "if he deſigns to be a Nonpareil, it muſt be where "no one is found with whom he may be compared. I'm apt to think him capable of acting "like that crafty Maſter Poet who put to Death "the moſt ingenious of his Scholars, for fear "they ſhould excel him in his Art. He's ſo jealous of the Glory even of his Friends, that he "never would confeſs that Mr. Motte-Aigron wrote "the Preface to his Letters, it being a kind of "Death to him that any one ſhould ſhare in the "Glory of that Work: And even at this Day I am "certain, that by an ungrateful and vain Impoſture he endeavours obliquetly to inſinuate; "that as to the Book which is now expected, Mr. "La Motte is only the Godfather who gave it a "Name, but that he himſelf is the true Father. "Which I know to be ſo much the more falſe, as "I am aſſured that Mr. la Motte has broke off all "Correſpondence with Mr. Balzac, and rejoices "in being diſoblig'd by him, that he might have "a juſt Reaſon to ſhun him, and grow wiſe at the "Coſt of his Apologiſt (l), whoſe Reputation he "had blaſted, which was eſteem'd much greater than his own." Mr. Motte-Aigron's Preface may ſerve for ſome Proof of this Narrative; thus he begins it: (c) The Advice that's come to me from ſeveral Hands, that tho' this Book is not extraordinary, yet ſome would aſſigne it another Maſter according to their fancy, obliges me to inform you, that this Adventure is wholly mine, and there is nothing here of a Roger who fights under the Arms of Leo; Tho' I can't indeed ſufficiently commend the Complaiſance of thoſe who ſuffer Children to be Fathered upon them, and am even raviſh'd with their good Nature; yet I don't find I have Generoſity enough to be of their Principle, nor can I endure that any one ſhould make Books for me. I cannot ſo far command my Fancy, as to perſuade my ſelf, that a Work of this kind is really mine; nor ſhould I make more Conſcience of taking another Man's Goods, than of receiving Benefits of this Nature. The Concluſion of this Preface is of the ſame ſtrain with the Beginning, for it contains what follows. But to return to what concerns me, altho' it be very true, that I have not led ſuch a Life, but that I have known, and among them, even ſome who underſtand the Art of writing Books, yet be it known to you, that as to what concerns the framing of this Work, they are as much Strangers to me as they who live in the furthermoſt Part of the World; or, as thoſe were for whom who paſs'd on the Opinion of ſome for the Preface of the Book, which I have order'd to be taken to the end of this Diſcourſe. This is ſpoken like a Candid Perſon; none but the meaneſt ſpirited Creature would paſs for the Author of a Book he had never wrote. It's a vain Excuſe to ſay they have ſo ardent a Paſſion of Glory, that they would act in it by Adoption, when they cannot by Generation; for ſuch a Deſire of Glory betrays a meanneſs of Spirit. The Cuſtodino's of a Biſhoprick have leſs of the Poltron than the Cuſtodino's of a Book. Theſe latter are guilty of willful Cuckoldom; let 'em ſay as much as they pleaſe, that it's only a Cuckoldom in the Commonwealth of Wit; it's nevertheleſs a Blot, it's a ſhameful Thing

(a) Javerſac, diſcours d'Ariſtarque à Calidoxe, p. 158, & ſuiv.

(b) See the Remark D. of the Article Balzac.

(c) La Motte-Aigron, avertiſſement au lecteur dans ſa Reponſe à Phyllarque. See the Remark D. of the Article Balzac.

(d) That's to ſay, the Preface to Balzac's Letters.

(l) And

MUCIA the Wife of Pompey, was the * third Daughter of Quintus Mutius Scevola, and the Siſter (A) of Quintus Metellus Celer. She committed Adultery ſo openly, that her Husband was forc'd to diſmiſs her, although he had had three Children † by her. 'Twas during the War againſt Mithridates, wherein he gain'd ſo much Glory, that Mucia was debauch'd. When firſt he heard this ill News, he was not much mov'd at it; but as he came nearer Italy, he conſider'd with a ſedate Judgment the Importance of this Diſhonour, and was ſo diſturb'd at it, that he ſent his Wife a Bill of Divorce ‡. People remark'd (B), that Providence by this Diſaſter deſign'd to give a Counterpoiſe to the Glory he had lately acquir'd. He complain'd of Julius Cæſar (C) as the debaucher of Mucia, and was wont, not without ſighing, to call him his Ægyſthus, in alluſion to the Gallant of Clytemneſtra, the Wife of Agamemnon; nevertheleſs he made an Alliance with him ſome time after. The intereſt of (D) his Ambition extinguiſh'd all Thoughts of a juſt Reſentment. He was expos'd to the bittereſt Reproaches ¢ on this Score. Mucia quickly found another Husband, for ſhe Married Marcus Scaurus, and had Children by him. Pompey was a little diſguſted at this new Husband: He took it ill that any one ſhould ſlight (E) his Judgment to ſuch a degree. Auguſtus γ made uſe of this Mucia, to diſſuade Sextus Pompeius her Son from joining with Mark Anthony againſt him, and to win him over to his own Party againſt Mark Anthony. No doubt he had a very great Reſpect for her, ſince after the Battle of Actium δ, he gave Marcus Scaurus this

* Aſconius Pedianus in argum. orat. Ciceronis pro Scauro, p. m. 17.

† See the words of Suetonius in the Remark C.

‡ Plut. in Pompeio, p. 641.

¢ See the Remark C.

γ Dio. l. 48. p. m. 418. ad ann. 714.

δ Id lib. 51. p 508.

(A) And the Siſter of Quintus Metellus Celer.] Cicero informs us of this in a Letter he wrote to Metellus. Ego cum Claudia, ſays he (e), uxore tua, & cum veſtra ſorore Mucia, cujus erga me ſtudium pro Cn. Pompeii neceſſitudine multis in rebus perſpexeram, ut eum (f) ab illa injuria deterrerem. This Paſſage ſhows, that Q. Metellus Celer, and Q. Metellus Nepos were Brothers to Mucia, i. e. according to Manutius (g), her Couſin-Germains, or her Brothers by the Mothers ſide. The laſt Opinion ſeems to me moſt probable. I believe the Mother of Mucia Married Quintus Mutius Scevola, after ſhe had by Quintus Metellus Nepos the two Brothers I have now mention'd. See below a Paſſage of Dion.

(e) Cicero epiſt 2. l. 5. ad famil. p. 229, 230.

(f) That's to ſay, Quintus Metellus Couſin-German to him whom Cicero writes to.

(g) Manutius in Cicero. epiſt. 2. l. 5. ad famil.

(B) People remark'd, that Providence by this Diſaſter deſign'd to give a Counterpoiſe.] Plutarch has made this Obſervation: "So that now by all theſe Acts, "ſays he (h), ſpeaking of Pompey, he well hop'd to "return into Italy in the greateſt Splendor and "Glory of any mortal Man, having likewiſe a "paſſionate deſire to be ſeen of his Family, where "he thought he was equally deſir'd: But that "God, whoſe Providence and Charge it is always "to mix ſome Ingredient of Evil even with the "greateſt and moſt glorious Goods of Fortune, "had privily provided a bitter Pill at home "for him, whereby to make his Return more "ſorrowful; for Mucia during his Abſence had "diſhonour'd his Bed: Whilſt he was abroad at "a diſtance, he gave little heed to the Report; "but when he drew nearer to Italy, where the "Report grew warmer, and that his Thoughts "were at leiſure to muſe upon the Crime and Re-"proach, then he ſent her a Bill of Divorce; but "neither then in Writing, nor afterwards in Diſ-"courſe, did he ever give a Reaſon why he diſ-"charged her, but the Cauſe is mention'd in Ci-"cero's Epiſtles." Hence we learn, that Plutarch's Memory was rather Vaſt than Faithful. He remember'd that Cicero had writ ſomething about the Divorce of Mucia, and that not without ſome Praiſes of Pompey's Conduct. Upon the Credit of his Memory, and without ever conſulting Cicero's Letters, he affirm'd, that the Cauſes of this Divorce were to be found in them: But there he was miſtaken, and if we had all the Authors the other has alledg'd, we ſhould find him very often guilty of the like Faults. All that Cicero ſays is this: Divortium Muciæ ſatis commode probatur (a). This is found in a Letter written in the Year of Pompey's Triumph; i. e. in the Year of Rome 692.

(h) Dio, ubi infra.

(a) Cicero epiſt 12. l. 1. ad Atticum, p. 67.

(C) He complains of Julius Cæſar as the Debaucher of Mucia.] Suetonius having nam'd ſeveral Women whom Cæſar lov'd, ends with Mucia, and expreſſes himſelf thus: Etiam Cn. Pompeii Muciam. Nam certè Pompejo & à Curionibus patre & filio, & à multis exprobratum eſt quòd ejus cauſſa poſt tres liberos exegiſſet uxorem, & quem genetrix Ægyſthum appellare conſueſſet, ejus poſtea filiam potentiæ cupiditate in matrimonium recepiſſet.

(c) Μέτελλον ὃν ὠνόμαζε τὸν ἀδελφὸν αὐτῆς καὶ τοῦτον παῖδας ἐξ αὐτῆς ἔχων, ἀπεπέμψατο, καὶ πρὸς πάντα ἀλλα. πραξεν.

Metellus vero Pompejo iratus qui ejus ſororii, ſuſceptis etiam ex ea liberis nuntium remiſiſſet, in omnibus ei actionibus obſtitit. Dio. l. 37. p. 58 ad ann. 693.

(d) Plutarch. in Cæſare, p. 713. See alſo in Pompeio, p 644.

(D) The Intereſt of his Ambition extinguiſh'd.] Men of the greateſt Courage act upon ſeveral Occaſions like the greateſt Cowards. They forget the moſt ſtinging Reproaches, provided their ambitious Deſigns make it their Intereſt to be reconcil'd. Pompey at his Return from the War of Mithridates (b), would have all his Conduct approv'd and ratified, and Lands diſtributed to his Soldiers: This ſhew'd he had vaſt Deſigns in his Head. He got two Perſons choſen Conſuls, from whom he expected the greateſt Favour: But he was miſtaken; the one, viz. Afranius, was better at Dancing than any thing elſe; the other, viz. Metellus Celer (c), reſenting the Divorce of his Siſter Mucia, oppos'd him in all Things and in all Places. Thus Pompey having obtain'd nothing, and finding his Credit declining, form'd a League with Craſſus and Cæſar, which was the curſed Source of the Overthrow of the State. Here for the moſt part we find the firſt Link of the greateſt Revolutions; trace 'em to their Original Cauſe, and you come up to Adultry at laſt. If Mucia had been an honeſt Woman Cæſar had not lain with her; nor had Pompey divorc'd her: If he had not divorc'd her, Metellus Celer would have continu'd his Friend; if he had been his Friend, Pompey would ne're have joyn'd in a League with Craſſus and Cæſar; a deadly Aſſociation, as Cato (d) wiſely foretold. New Marriages were projected in order to cement the League. Cæſar who had promis'd his Daughter to Servilius Cepio, broke his Word, choſe Pompey for his Son-in-Law, and gave Servilius hopes of Pompey's Daughter, although ſhe was deſign'd for Sylla's Son. Piſo's Daughter was Married to Cæſar, which procur'd Piſo the Conſulſhip. Then it was that Cato could not refrain crying out againſt this kind of bawding, againſt this baſe bartering Dignities for a Petticoat. "(e) Ἐνταῦθα δὴ καὶ σφόδρα μαχλυομένων Κάτων, καὶ βοῶν, ὡς ἀνεκὸν εἴναι, γάμοις διαμασχοπουμένης τῆς ἡγεμονίας, καὶ διὰ γυναίων εἰς ἀπραξίας καὶ στρατεύματα καὶ δυνάμεις ἀλλήλας ἀνθισουμένων. Quo tempore palàm teſtatus eſt Cato, clamavitque rem indignam eſſe, at adderetur nuptiarum lenocinis imperium, ac per mulieres mutuo ſe ad provincias, imperia, exercitus provecherent.

(b) Plutarch in Life of Pompey. p. 144. Engliſh Tranſlation.

(c) Id. ib p. 714. A.

(d) Id. ib. p. 675.

(E) He took it ill that any one ſhould ſlight his Judgment.] And made Scaurus feel the Effects of his Indignation (f) when he was accus'd of Extortion in the Year of Rome 690. Scaurus (g) had a great Confidence in Pompey's Favour; for he had a Son who was Brother by the Mother's ſide to Pompey's Sons; this was the Foundation of his Hope. But he was deceiv'd, for Pompey did him no manner of Service. He was leſs ſenſible of the Relation of Conſanguinity between his Sons, and thoſe of the Perſon accus'd, than of the Affront put upon him by Scaurus's expreſſing a great Eſteem for a Woman he had diſgrac'd. I ſay nothing here but what I have read in an ancient Writer, and what is probable enough (h) In eo judicio neque Pompejus prop.ſum adjutorium præbuit, videbatur enim apud animum ejus non minus offenſionis contraxiſſe, quod jud.cium ejus in Mutiam, crimine impudicitiæ accuſatam, levius ferſſe exiſtimaretur, cum eam ipſe probaſſet, quam gratiæ acqui neceſſitudo is this Lady's Son his Life, and ſhew'd him ſo much Clemency purely on Mucia's account. This ſhows, that moſt great Lords in all Ages have look'd upon Cuckeldom as a Diſgrace only among Citizens,—and that the Ladies who loſe their good Name, do not therefore loſe their good Fortune and Credit. I ſhall obſerve by the by, that Pompey was not (F) happy in his Marriages.

(f) Aſconius Pedianus in argum. Orat. Cicer. pro Scauro, p. 168.

(g) Id. ib. p. 172.

(h) Id. ib.

MUNUZA

(i) Ἐξελαυνομένης τῆς Ἀντιστίας ἀτίμως καὶ ἀνικήτως Expellitur Antiſtia ignominioſe miſereque. Plut. in Pompeio, p. 613. B.

(k) Taken from Plutarch, ib.

(l) Plut. ib p 644.

(m) Id. ib. p. 647. B. You'll alſo find theſe words there, p. 644. E. Ταχὺ μὲντοι καὶ αὐτὸς ἐμαλακίσθη τῷ τῆς γυναικὸς ἔρωτι καὶ προσετίθει ἐκείνην πολλὰ καὶ συνδιημέρευεν ἐν ἀγρεῖς καὶ κήποις, ἡμέλει δὲ τῶν κατ' ἀγορὰν πραττομένων. Brevi tamen ipſe quoque uxoris juvenculæ emollitus eſt amore, ac ferè aſſiduus cum ea ruri, & in hortis egit. Poſtmiſit etiam negotia forenſia (n) Ex Plutarch. ib. p 647.

(o) Id in Cæſare, p 719 C.

(p) Id in Pompeio, p. 644.

(q) Id ib. p 659. A.

neceſſitudinis jure, quod ex eadem uterque liberos haberet) neque Cato ab æquitate ea, qua & vitam ejus, & magiſtratum illum decebat, quoquam deflexit.

(F) Pompey was not very happy in his Marriages] He had had five Wives; the firſt was call'd Antiſtia; he divorc'd her much againſt his Will, to comply with Sylla the Dictator, who would have him Marry Æmilia the Daughter of Scaurus and of Metella, who was then the Wife of Sylla. Æmilia had been Married before, and was big with Child; ſo that Pompey took her to Wife in pure Obedience to the imperious Will of the Dictator. He did not in his Mind approve the forcing away Æmilia big with Child from her own Husband, and the Obligation this muſt lay him under of divorcing Antiſtia (i), whoſe Father had been kill'd purely on a ſuſpicion that he favour'd the Party of Sylla for Pompey's ſake. The Mother of Antiſtia kill'd her ſelf upon hearing the Tragical End of her Husband. Pompey did not live long with Æmilia, for ſhe died in lying in of that Child (k) which ſhe was big of when ſhe Marry'd Pompey. He afterwards Marry'd Mucia, and after her Divorce Julia the Daughter of Cæſar, who was to have (l) Married Scipio in a few Days. Whether he really lov'd (m), or was tenderly belov'd by her, he never would ſtir from her: He amus'd himſelf in going about with her from Place to Place, and ſhowing her the fine Seats of Italy, without concerning himſelf in any Affairs. This effeminate Life did him hurt and expos'd him to Calumny. But it did not laſt very long. One Day at an Aſſembly of the People, a Murder happen'd to be committed near him, and ſome of the Blood having ſprang upon the Cloaths he wore, he was oblig'd to ſend for others. Julia happening to ſee 'em all bloody in the Hands of his Servants, was ſo ſtruck, that ſhe ſwooned away and Miſcarried upon it. Some time after ſhe was big with Child again, and died in Child-birth of a Daughter (n), which liv'd but a few Days (o). At laſt he Married Cornelia; and tho' ſhe was a Perſon of great Merit, he had the Mortification to hear, that this Marriage was much condemned. Here follows a Citation out of Plutarch, which is very curious: "(p) No ſooner did Pompey return into the City, "but he Married Cornelia the Daughter of Metellus Scipio, not a Virgin but a Widow, the late "Relict of Publius, (the Son of Craſſus) who died "in Parthia, and with whom ſhe cohabited from "her Virginity: This Lady, beſides the Charms "of her Beauty, had many attractive Qualities "from her Education; for ſhe was learned e-"nough in moſt Sciences, play'd well upon the "Lute, was ſkill'd in Geometry, and took great "Pleaſure in hearing Diſcourſes of Philoſophy; "to theſe may be added, her Graces in Morality, "and in this ſhe was extreamly commendable, "that her Humour was free from Peeviſhneſs "and Curioſity, Vices very common to Ladies "of ſuch liberal Endowments. Her Father alſo "was very conſiderable, as well in the Honour "of his Family, as that of his own Virtues; "however, theſe unequal Marriages were not ve-"ry pleaſing to ſome ſort of People; for Cornelia's "Age was more agreeable with that of Pompey's "Son than his own: But the wiſer ſort thought "the Concerns of the City quite neglected, "when he (to whom alone they had committed "their broken Fortunes, and from whom alone, "as from their Phyſician, they expected a Cure "to theſe Diſtractions) went crown'd with Gar-"lands, and was revelling in his Nuptial Feaſts: "Never conſidering, that this Conſulſhip was a "publick Calamity, which would never have "been given him contrary to the Rules of Law, "had his Country been in a flouriſhing State." This illuſtrious Lady (q) repented ſhe did not execute the Reſolution ſhe had taken to kill her ſelf when ſhe was bereft of her firſt Husband. She repented, I ſay, when ſhe ſaw Pompey in a forlorn Condition on the Coaſt of Mytilene, after the Battle of Pharſalia. She had been left in this City during the War, and there receiv'd ſo good News (r) of the Battel of Dyrrachium, that ſhe thought it deciſive, and expected to hear of nothing after but her Spouſe's purſuing Cæſar. The Loſſes of the Enemy were magnified to Flatter and Cheer her according to Cuſtom. Judge of the Grief and Diſtraction this poor Lady was in, when ſhe ſaw her Husband flying to the Iſle of Lesbos in a borrowed Ship (s). She was his faithful Companion (d) in his flight as far as Ægypt, and having recover'd his Aſhes, ſhe buried them (t) on Mount Alba. But this Faithfulneſs was by accident that which deſtroy'd him, for if ſhe had not follow'd him, he had fled to the Country of the Parthians, and not into Ægypt, where he was ſlain. 'Tis ſaid, that the only thing which made him change his Deſign of going towards Euphrates, was a fear of the Diſhonour to which the Beauty and Youth of Cornelia might expoſe her among a laſcivious People. He was ſo nice upon this Head, that he could not bear even the moſt groundleſs Surmiſe. Thus ſhows that he was not very happy in his laſt Marriage, and that a Young and Beautiful Wife is not the beſt Fellow-Traveller (f). Be that how it will, you'll be pleas'd to find here this Paſſage of Plutarch: "(g) but "Theophanes the Lesbian thought it madneſs to leave "Ægypt, (that was but a Voyage of three Days "ſailing) and forſake Ptolomy, (who was juſt come "of Age, and highly oblig'd to him for that "Friendſhip and Favour which he had lately ſhewn "to his Father) only to put himſelf under the Par-"thian, and truſt the moſt treacherous Nation in "the World: Or what is worſe, to ſubject himſelf "to the Tyranny of Ariſtus the King of Parthia, "and make him his Lord, (a Power which he "was not able to compaſs in the Life-time of "Craſſus) rather than try the Clemency of a ge-"nerous Roman, and one that had been his Fa-"ther-in-Law, to whom if he would but yield "to be Second, he might aſſure himſelf to be the "firſt and chief over all the reſt: Beſides, he "thought it would be great Cruelty to expoſe a "young Lady, deſcended from the noble Family "of the Scipio's, among ſuch a barbarous People, "who govern by their Luſts, and meaſure their "Greatneſs by their Power to commit Affronts "and Inſolences; from whom, though ſhe ſuffer "no Diſhonour, yet it would be thought ſhe did, "being in the Hands of thoſe who had the Power "to do it: This Argument alone they ſay, "was ſo perſuaſive, as to divert his Courſe, "that was deſign'd towards Euphrates, if it were "ſo indeed that any Council of Pompey's, and "not his own Fate, made him take this other "way.

I know not to which of theſe five Spouſes of Pompey what we read in Suetonius is to be applied. A very learned Grammarian (t) had for his Patrons Pompey and Caius Memmius. He carried an Aſſignation from Memmius to Pompey's Wife. The Lady gave it her Husband, who forbad him his Houſe. All things rightly conſider'd, this ought not to be taken for good Fortune in Marriage, but rather for a Misfortune. It's a trouble to be betray'd by a learned Man whom a Body had a Kindneſs for; to be betray'd, I ſay, by a Man of Letters, and a Gentleman of one's own Family. It's far from agreeable to think, that ſuch a Man as Caius Memmius endeavours to debauch your Wife, writes her a Billet-Doux, and prejudges an Aſſignation. One's well pleas'd, that inſtead of giving him a Meeting, ſhe ſhows her Husband the Letter, and names the Bearer; but after all, 'twere better if no ſuch thing had ever happen'd: for the Imagination does not ſtop where a Man would have it. Who can ſay that ſuch Addreſſes have been always, or will always be repulſed after this manner? Who'll anſwer, that it ought not to be

(r) Id. ib. p 658

(s) Id. ib.

(d) Id. ib. p 659. & ſeq.

(t) Id ib. p. 662.

(f) See the Remark (o) of the Article Sulla

(g) Id ib. p 660

(t) Curtius Nicias hoſtis Cn. Pompeio & Cajo Memmio ſed quem cubiculo Memmii ad Pompeii uxorem deſtitutum perfuliſſet, proditus ab ea Pompeium offendit, domoque ejus ejectus eſt. Cæſar

MUNUZA, ζ a valiant Mooriſh Captain (A), and Governor of Cerdaigne for the Saracens who Conquer'd Spain in the beginning of the VIIIth Century, made a ſecret Alliance with Eudes Duke of Aquitain, to the Prejudice of theſe Conquerors. He complained that they treated the Moors ill: But beſides this Reaſon, which perhaps was only a Pretence for covering the Treachery which he was meditating, he had another much more powerful. He was in Love with the (B) Princeſs of Aquitain to an exceſs ζ Others call him Munioz. Roderick of Toledo calls him Muniz here be ſaid, Non amo nimium diligentes, too much Precaution is a Trick; you diſcover one Intrigue that you may conceal others, and cover your ſelf from all Suſpicion. The Imagination, I tell you, is a ſtrange gadding thing, which turns it ſelf on every Hand when once it's rouz'd; 'twere to be wiſh'd, that it were rather lull'd to Sleep.

(g) Hiſtor. Sarracen. l. 1. p. m. 81.

If any one think it ſtrange, that I bring things in here which are foreign to the Article of Mucia, I would have 'em know I do it, that every thing which concerns the Marriages of Pompey may be found together. The Article of this great Man affords ſo much Matter, that I'm oblig'd in Prudence to anticipate ſome Pieces of it to make it ſelf leſs prolix. I have elſewhere done the ſame on the like Occaſions.

(A) A Mooriſh Captain.] Auguſtin Curio (i) ſpeaks of two Gothiſh Captains, Subjects of the King of Spain, who favour'd the Sarracens, one of which was call'd Mugnuza, and the other Mugnos: The latter Lord of Cerdania, Cerdaniæ Regulus, obtain'd of the Sarracens the Government of ſome Neighbouring Places; and as he knew the Country, and was beſides very cruel, he did (k) much Miſchief to the Spaniards, who from the Mountains and Woods, in which they ſhelter'd, made Excurſions upon the Sarracens. Preſuming to make ſome Complaints, that the Treaty made by his Mediation with Eudes his Brother-in-Law, was not obſerv'd; he was Beſieg'd by Abderamus; but eſcap'd, and was afterwards taken and Beheaded. Thus, ſays my Author (l), did theſe Traytors to their Country periſh ſuddenly. What Confuſion is there in this Hiſtory! Some ſay, that Munuza was a Mahometan Moor, who rebell'd againſt his Caliſe; others, that he was a Spaniard and a Chriſtian, who went over to the Party of the Sarracens, and continu'd faithful to them, except as to ſome Complaints. Roderick of Toledo ſays (m), that Muniz, Son-in-Law of Eudes, put ſeveral Chriſtians to Death, and burnt the Biſhop Anambaldus.

(i) Lib. 2. p. 112.

(k) Contra quos exercitum duxit Mugnoces vir immaniſſimus, qui quod regionum & locorum peritus eſſet, magnis eos cladibus afflixit. Auguſt. Curio, hiſt. Sarracen. l. 1 p. m. 88.

(l) Hiſt. Arab. c. 13.

(m) Abreg. Chronol. tom. 1 p. m. 192. Moreri has copy'd this Fault

(B) The Princeſs of Aquitan.] She was the Daughter of Eudes; but I confeſs, I do not know how ſhe was call'd, although I have read in Mezerai (n), that her Name was Lampagia, and in another Author (o), that ſhe was call'd Menine, or Numerana (p). What keeps me in ſuſpence as to Lampagia, is the Chronicle (q) of the Biſhop of Auxerre, which gives this Name to the Daughter of another Eudes, the Wife of Aimon, King of Savageſa. Contigit eo tempore (thus ſpeaks this Chronicle) Pipinum filium prioris Karoli Aquitaniam ex vocatione Eudonis Aquitanorum Ducis adverſus Aimonem Caſaraugaſtæ Regem perrexiſſe, qui Lampagiam ipſius Eudonis filiam in conjugium ſumpſerat, & fœdus conjugis ruperat. 'Tis very certain, that the Author does not mean the Father-in-Law of Munuza in this Paſſage; for beſides, that he died ſome Years before Pepin ſucceeded to Charles Martel, no Perſon ſays, that he had ever recourſe to his Neighbour, to revenge the Injuries done his Daughter by her Husband. Here then is a Lampagia, who was never the Wife of Munuza. However, ſince there are Writers (r) who apply to Eudes the Father-in-Law of Munuza, the Words of the Chronicle of Auxerre, and which conſequently makes him the Father of Lampagia, it is not improbable, that by the like Error ſome have ſaid, that the Daughter which was given to the Governor of Cerdaigne, was call'd Lampagia. Thus we can diſcover nothing certain concerning the true Name of the Wife of Munuza. Let's now go on to the other Names given her. It's pretended (f), that ſhe was call'd Menine or Numerana; and ſome endeavour to prove it from Monuments in Biſcay, upon the Credit of which Garibai relates that Eudes had a Daughter call'd Menina or Numerana, who was the Wife of Froila King of the Aſturia's. To make ſomething of this Proof, we muſt ſuppoſe, that the Princeſs of Aquitain with whom the Governor of Cerdaigne fell in Love, was Married a ſecond time to Froila, King of the Aſturia's. And this is what they ſuppoſe. (t) She was Married twice; the firſt time to Munioz King of Cerdaigne, a Sarracen, who revolted againſt Iſcan Miramolin, who under the Conduct of Abdiramus, his Lieutenant General in Spain, and of Froila King of the Aſturia's, who was then the Ally of Miramolin, defeated Munioz, who was ſlain in the Field of Battel (v) in 747, and left behind him this fine Widow in the power of Abdiramus, who deſign'd her for the Seraglio of Iſcan—— But King Froila being paſſionately in Love with her, Miramolin very honourably diſmiſs'd her, and Froila Married her——The French and Spaniſh Authors have therefore falſely aſſign'd two Daughters to Eudes, one by the Name of Menina, Married to Froila, the other by the Name of Numerana, Married to Munioz; for it is certain that it was one and the ſame Woman, who was Married ſucceſſively to theſe two Kings, whoſe Names were ſomewhat wreſted to the Spaniſh and Mooriſh Idioms, but were in reality the ſame. This Suppoſition is founded only upon theſe Words of Sebaſtian of Salamanca. (w) Numinam quandam adoleſcentuiam è Waſconum præda ſibi ſervari præcipiens (Froila) poſtea eam in regale conjugium copulans. But who does not perceive the weakneſs of this Proof? In the firſt place, the Wife of a Governor of Cerdaigne, a Moor by Nation, and who had no Gaſcogn Troops in her Service, could not be a part of the Prey which was taken from the Gaſcogns. In the ſecond place, the Wife of this Governor was deliver'd up to Abderamus, who ſent her to his Caliſe. She was not therefore the Numina of Sebaſtian of Salamanca; for ſince Froila gave order, that this Numina ſhould be ſet a part for him, it's plain, that Abderamus had not the diſpoſal of her. It ſeems therefore probable alſo, that if he had been preſent in the Action wherein this Numina was taken Priſoner, Froila could have given no Command as to this part of the Prey. In the third place, if theſe Words, Froila commanded, that a certain young Gentlewoman ſhould be kept for him, which was found among the Priſoners taken from the Gaſcogns, could be explain'd after this manner, Froila became paſſionately in Love with the Widow of the Governor of Cerdania, who was ſain under the Power of Abderamus, and had been ſent to Miramolin, who diſmiſs'd her very honourably, and Froila Married her. If, I ſay, theſe kind of Explications were once allow'd, there's nothing but what may be found in any Words, nor would it be a hard matter at this rate to prove that Black is White. I don't here ask, whether it's probable, that any Author would treat the Daughter of a Duke of Aquitain, the Widow of a Governor of a Province, who was become Head of a Party, the fineſt Princeſs of her Time, in the Style of quandam adoleſcentulam è Waſconum præda. I do not ask this, I ſay, how reaſonable ſoever it might appear, for fear I ſhould be anſwer'd, that the Authors of that Time, wrote in a very ſimple and careleſs manner. I have ſeveral other Proofs beſides this againſt the Suppoſitions of Mr. Audigier. For without making much a-do, one need only conſider the Words (u) immediately preceding thoſe which he cites, and he may point at the place which diſcovers the Fallhood of his Pretenſions; Vaſcones rebellantes ſuperavit atque edomuit, Numinam quandam adoleſcentulam ex Waſconum præda ſibi ſervari præcipit.us, &c. It's manifeſt, that this Prey was taken, not when the Governor of Cerdaigne revolted, but when the King of Aſturia's puniſh'd the Rebellion of ſome of his own Subjects. Now ſince this King of Aſturia's could have no rebellious Subjects beyond the Pyrenean Mountains, with which he would have any concern, 'tis plain the Gaſcogns whom he quell'd, were not under the Obedience of the Duke of Aquitain.: How then could the Daughter of Eudes be a part of the Prey? The Learned Ambroſius Morales (x) has ſhown, that the Gaſcogns mention'd in (f) Audigier, ubi ſupra, p. 245.

(q) See the Extracts in the 1 tome Veterum Franciæ Hiſtoricorum, publiſh'd by the Ducheſne

(r) Othenart, Not. Vaſcon. p. 367. Audigier, Orig. des François, tome 2. p. 220. Note, that Audigier, p. 245, ſays quite the contrary, that Lampagia was the Daughter of Hunaud Son of Eudes.

(t) Id. ibi.

(v) See the following Remark.

(w) Othenart, Not. Vaſcon. p. 191. ſays, that in the Manuſcript of the College of Navarre at Paris, it's Muniam, and in the Printed Edition Munimiam.

(u) He has cited the Paſſage in p. 224.

(x) Lib. 13. c. 17. & 25. apud Othenart, p. 192.

in

teſs of Paſſion, and knew very well, that he could not obtain her, but by making her his Queen, and by promiſing to enter into a War againſt the Saracens, and thereby prevent their giving Eudes Duke of Aquitain any Diverſion, while he attack'd Charles Martel: Love therefore was the great Principle of the Revolt of Munuza. He was the hardeſt Favour'd Man alive; on the contrary, the Daughter of Eudes was a great Beauty: Beſides, he was a Mahometan, whereas the Princeſs was zealous for Chriſtianity. Yet all could not hinder her being yielded to him. The Ambition of the Father prevail'd over the Reluctance of the Daughter. Munuza was as good as his Word, he took up Arms as ſoon as the Marriage was concluded; but with ill Succeſs. Abderamus the Governor * of Spain, puſh'd him ſo briskly, that he was forc'd to ſhut himſelf up in Puycerda. Munuza had ſome hopes of holding out here, as Don Pelagius had done in the Mountains of Aſturias; but Water beginning to fail, and he finding himſelf odious to the Inhabitants, quitted this Poſt, and endeavour'd, by Ways which he thought unknown, to retire with his Wife to the Duke of Aquitain. He was cloſe purſued, and grown perfectly Deſperate, in this ſad Condition, he threw himſelf headlong from the top of the Mountains †. that he might not fall alive into the Hands of his Enemies. His Head was carried to Abderamus; his Wife was alſo (C) carried to him; but Abderamus thinking her too beautiful for himſelf, ſent her to the Caliſe ζ. He choſe to make this Preſent to his Soveraign in favour of his Ambition, rather than keep her for his private Pleaſures. There's no doubt but he diſcover'd the Alliance between Munuza and Eudes, and that among other Motives, he deſign'd to chaſtiſe the Father, who had excited the Son-in-Law to riſe in Arms. Accordingly we find that no one was more alarm'd than Eudes at this Expedition of Abderamus, and that no one ſuffered ſo much as he, which may ſerve to refute thoſe who accuſe him of having invited in the Saracens, as I have elſewhere obſerved γ.

* Cæliphe Iſcam had given him this Government.

† En. 731.

ζ See the Hiſtory of France by Cordemoi, tom. 1 p. 403.

γ In the Remark I. of the Article Abderame.

MUSCULUS (WOLFGANGUS) one of the moſt famous Divines of the XVIth Century, was Born at Dieuze in Lorrain September the 8th 1497. His Father who was a Cooper by Trade, finding he had an Inclination to Learning, deſign'd to make him a Scholar; but the Scholar muſt provide his own Subſiſtence, that is, beg his Bread by ſinging from Door to Door. He ſung one Evening at Veſpers in a Convent δ of the Benedictins with ſuch ſucceſs, that they offer'd him gratis the Habit of the Order. He accepted the Propoſal, and was then but fifteen Years of Age. He applied himſelf hard to his Studies, and became a very good Preacher. He approv'd Luther's Opinions, and maintain'd 'em ſtoutly upon all Occaſions; which made a great Impreſſion upon ſeveral of his fellow-Friers, for the greater part of the Benedictins of this Convent quitted the Habit. On the other ſide he made himſelf a great many Enemies, and was expos'd to ſeveral Dangers; but at laſt deliver'd himſelf out of theſe Broils, by making an open Profeſſion of Lutheraniſm. He eſcap'd to Strasburg towards the end of the Year 1527, and there Married in the face of the Church on the 27th of December of the ſame Year, Margaret Barth, to whom he was Contracted before he came out of the Monaſtery. Having nothing to ſubſiſt upon, he plac'd his Wife a Servant in a Miniſter's Houſe, and bound himſelf Apprentice to a Weaver, who turn'd him off about two ξ Months after. He reſolv'd to earn his Livelihood by working at the Fortifications of Strasburg; but the Evening before he was to begin this ſervile Work, he was inform'd that the Magiſtrates deſign'd him to Preach every Sunday in the Village of Dorliſhem. He was very glad of this, and diſcharg'd the Office with great Care, which did not oblige him to Reſidence, for he went from Strasburg every Saturday Morning, and return'd on Munday Morning. He lodg'd the reſt of his Time (A) at Martin Bucer's δ In the Country of Lutzelſtein.

ξ The reaſon of this was becauſe Muſculus would be always diſputing with an Anabaptiſt Miniſter who lodg'd at the Weaver's.

in this Paſſage of Sebaſtian of Salamanca, are the Inhabitants of Alava, Alavenſes. Hence we conclude, 1 That there is no probability, that the fine Widow did ever ſee Europe again, after ſhe ſet Foot in the Seraglio of Caliſe Iſcham. He was far from any Thoughts of parting with ſo ſweet a Bit in favour of Froila, whoſe Alliance with Miramolin I take to be very doubtful. 2. That the Daughter of Eudes, Wife to Froila, King of Aſturias, mention'd in the Monuments of Garibai, is different from her that was Married to Munuza. 3. That the Nunina whom Froila order'd to be kept for him, and whom he afterwards Married, is not the ſame with Menina or Numerana, the Daughter of Eudes, who was the Wife of Froila, according to the Monuments of Garibai. 4. That without giving our ſelves too much trouble to reconcile Garibai and Sebaſtian of Salamanca, it will be beſt to ſay, that one of the two was miſtaken, and in all Caſes to prefer the latter before the former. Catel obſerves (e), that the Name of the Daughter of Eudes Married to Munios Lord of Cerdaigne, is not known.

(e) Hiſt. du Languedoc, p. 525.

(C) His Wife was alſo carried to him] Here are two expreſs Paſſages to this purpoſe (d), the firſt of Roderick of Toledo, the ſecond of Iſidore of Badajos. Viri exercitus caput Muniz præcipitio jam colliſum cæde ſecunda detruncant, & cum filia Eudonis regi ſuo læti præſentant. Abdiramen autem de rebelli interitu jucundatus ejus uxorem, cum eſſet pulcherrima, ſummo regi trans maria honorifice aſtinavit. I ſhall now hear Iſidore of Badajos; cujus caput ubi eum jacentem repererunt trucidant, & regi una cum filia Eudonis memoratæ ducis præſentant; quam ille maria trajiciens Elano ſublimi principi procurat honor ſue diſtinationis. By this it appears, that Mr Audigier is miſtaken when he ſays, that Munioz remain'd among the Dead in the Field of Battle in 737. For firſt the Death of this Governor preceded the Expedition of Abderamus, and therefore happned before the Year 732. 2. This Governor was not kill'd in a Battle, for he eſcaped by Ways unknown, and being purſued, for fear he ſhould fall alive into the Hands of the Saracens, he threw himſelf Head-long from the top of a Rock. Mezerai is miſtaken (f) when he ſays, that Abderamus took Munuza Priſoner in Cerdaigne.

(d) Apud Audigier, tom. 2. p. 225. He attributes at p. 245. to Iſidore of Badajos what he had attributed to Roderick of Toledo at p. 220.

(f) Abreg. Chronolog. tom. 1. p. 192.

(A) He lodg'd the reſt of the time at Martin Bucer's Houſe.] There he earn'd his Diet by Transcribing; for Bucer's Hand was ſo bad, that the Printers could not read it; and he himſelf was often at a loſs, and had much a do to decypher it. But Muſculus who could read it with eaſe, tranſcribed it in a wonderful good Hand, and did Martin Bucer a great deal of Service, who was at that time employ'd on ſeveral Books for the Preſs. I ſhall here ſet down the Words of Melchior Adam, relating to this

* Taken from Melchior Adam in vita Musculi p. 367. & seq. vitar. Theologor. All that he says is taken from the Life of Musculus written by Abraham Musculus his Son. It's to be found before the Synopsis festalium concionum Wolfgangi Musculi. edit. of Basil, 1595 in 8

Bucer's House. Some Months after Affairs look'd with another Face, and it was thought fit that he should reside; accordingly he remov'd to Dorlisheim, and there (B) suffer'd extreme Poverty with a constant Mind. He was recall'd to Strasburg at a Year's end, to be employ'd as a Deacon in the principal Church. Having discharg'd this Office about two Years, he was call'd to Augsburg, and began to Preach there January 22. 1531. The Office of the Ministry which he there discharg'd was very painful during the first Year; for he did not only dispute with the Roman Catholicks, but also with the Anabaptists. He oppos'd those who were of Opinion, that the latter should be put to Death, and by degrees obtain'd of the Magistrates, that Popery should be wholly (C) banish'd. He serv'd the Church of Augsbourg till such time as the Magistrates were so weak as to receive the Interim in the Year 1548; then he quitted this City, and retir'd into Switzerland. His Wife and Children follow'd him after some Weeks; he went to meet them at Constance July 30, and having waited at Zurich till some convenient Call should offer, he was at last invited by the Lords of Berne to be Professor of Divinity. He accepted it with a very good Will, and discharg'd the Duty of the Place with all Diligence; and to testifie his Acknowledgement to the City of Berne, he refus'd Employments (D) that were offer'd him in other Places. He confin'd himself to Theological Lectures, and would not accept of a Preacher's Place (E) which was offer'd him. He died at Berne August 30, 1563 *. He was a very laborious learned Man, and publish'd several Books (F). He was also employ'd in some Ecclesiastical Deputations, Matter. (a) Adeò malè pingebat Bucerus; ut quæ scribaret, a Typographis, imò ab ipsomet sæpè Bucero, difficilimè legerentur: Musculus verò ea legebat expeditissime, & pingebat elegantissimè. Descripsit itaque ei cum alia plura, tum vero potissimum explicationem Zephaniæ Prophetæ, quæ extat, in cujus fronte ejus leguntur carmina, & Psalterium illud totum, quod sub Aretii Felini nomine in lucem edidit. Erasmus, Lipsius, and several other great Authors, had the same Defect as Martin Bucer; and there were very few learned Men who could write as well as Musculus; for this was more rare in the XVIth than in the XVIIth Century.

(a) Melch. Adam. in vitis Theolog. German. p. 374.

(B) And there endur'd extreme Poverty with a constant Mind.] He had no Houshold Goods, but a little Bed which he brought from his Convent; his Parishioners were so charitable as to offer him necessary Utensils; but (b) he lay generally on a little Straw spread upon the Floor. The Historian observes (c), that his Wife was about that time ready to be brought to Bed; and 'tis from hence Mr. Baillet takes occasion to say, That (d) the Protestants reckon it amongst the most heroical Mortifications of Musculus, that he lay on the hard Ground, and had the generosity to resign to his Wife the Bed he brought from his Convent, as soon as she wanted it to lie in. He serv'd the Church a Year in this Village, without receiving one Farthing of his Pension. At last the Magistrates of Strasburg took pity of him, and assign'd him something of a publick Salary. (e) Annum totum in illa ecclesia docuit, cum ne teruncium quidem à quoquam stipendii loco acciperet, nec etiam peteret; sed in summa paupertate patientissimè & tranquille viveret. Quo minus autem illi stipendium solveretur; in causa erat Abbas Cœnobii Hohenforst, qui cum omnes illius ecclesiæ decimas, & census annuos colligeret; ministro tamen Evangelii stipendium pendere recusabat; tandem verò Argentinenses ut ipsius penuriam sublevarent, aliquam illi pecuniæ summam, è publico ærario benignè numerarunt.

(b) Parum autem straminis solo instratum illi pro lectica erat. Id. ib.

(c) Cum uxor ejus jam partui vicina esset. Id. ib.

(d) Baillet au 1. tom. des Anti p. 169.

(e) Melch. Adam. ubi supra.

(C) That Popery might be wholly banish'd.] Musculus was at first a Minister to the Church of the Holy Cross. The Catholicks who still possess'd the Church of Notre Dame, and many others better than that, and the greatest part of the Convents, mov'd Heaven and Earth, not only to maintain their Possession, but also to expell the Lutherans. They were stoutly oppos'd by all the Ministers; but the Zeal of Musculus flam'd much higher than that of any of his Collegues. Hence it came to pass that the Catholicks had him chiefly in Detestation. He so far prevail'd by his Importunity, that on the 22d of July 1534, the Senate and People of Augsburg absolutely forbad them to Preach in any part of the City, and left them only eight Places where they were permitted to say Mass: They abolish'd it every where else, together with their Images. And at last the great Council on the 17th of January 1537, expell'd all the Priests and Monks, and purg'd these eight Places of Idolatry, and Consecrated them to the Service of the Protestants. Upon this Musculus was made Minister of the Church which had been Consecrated to the Holy Virgin. He began to Preach there July 15th 1537, and continued to do so quietly till the 30th of July 1547 (f). But from that Day forward, to the time of his quitting Augsburg, his Ministry expos'd him to great Troubles. Charles the Vth having made his publick Entry into that City, caus'd the Church of Notre Dame to be restor'd to the Catholicks. Musculus Preach'd in the other Churches with his usual Zeal and Freedom. He was watch'd, he was accus'd to the Emperor as a seditious and railing Preacher. Michael Sidonius Suffragan to the Archbishop of Mayence, went often to hear his Sermons, and took Notes of 'em in his Table-Book. The Senate fearing least this Minister should be affronted, appointed three Men to guard him constantly to Church, and home again. There were often Tumults at his Door: The Domesticks of the Cardinal of Augsburg gather'd a Mob there who call'd him all to naught, scoffed at him, and broke his Windows with Stones from the Street. The Spaniards and Priests laid Snares for him, and overwhelm'd him with Slanders and Noise (g). Thus all humane Things are sometimes up and sometimes down, and every Dog has his Day.

(f) Melch. Adam. ubi supra, p. 377.

(g) Taken from Melchoir Adam. ubi supra, p. 380, 381.

(D) The Employments that were offer'd him in other Places.] He was thrice invited into England, and chiefly after the Death of Martin Bucer. The City of Augsburg having recover'd it's former Liberty in 1552, reckon'd him among its banish'd Ministers whom it recall'd. Those of Strasburg, the Electors Palatine, Otho Henry, and Fredrick, and the Landgrave of Hesse did often sollicit him to come and serve their Churches and Academies, and promis'd him great Pensions. He excus'd himself as for other Reasons, so chiefly because he had a mind to consecrate the rest of his Life to the Service of the Republick of Berne, who had so civily receiv'd him in the time of his Exile (h). This Conduct was very commendable, and there are not many who have the Courage to follow it.

(h) Ex eodem, ibid. p. 384, 385.

(E) He confin'd himself to Theological Lectures, and would not accept of a Preacher's Place.] This shows, that Thuanus ought not to have said, that he exercis'd the Office of a Pastor at Berne, (i) Pastoris munere defungens.

(i) Thuan. l. 35 (and not as Konig cit.) sub fin p. m. 716.

(F) And publish'd many Books.] He began with Translations out of Greek into Latin. The first Book which he publish'd of this Nature (k), was St. Chrysostome's Commentary upon the Epistles to the Romans, Ephesians, Philippians, Colossians and Thessalonians. He publish'd (l) afterwards the second Tome of the Works of St. Basil, and then the Scholia of the same Father upon the Psalms, and several Treatises of St. Athanasius and St. Cyril; the Ecclesiastical History of Eusebius, Socrates, Sozomen, Theodoret, Evagrius and Polybius. The principal Books which he wrote of his own Composing are these: Two Sermons, de Missa Papistica, Preach'd in the time of the Diet at Ratisbon in 1541, which were Printed at Wittemberg, and then at Augsburg, cum additione de externis Missæ abusibus. Cochlæus wrote (k) At Basil by Hervagius in 1536.

(l) Ibid. ann. 1540.

Deputations (G) of great Importance. He became a great Maſter of the Greek and Hebrew Tongues, tho' he began very late (H) to ſtudy 'em. We ſhall ſet down ſome Judgments that have been made of his (I) Writings. It's obſerv'd *, that he renounc'd the wrote againſt this Book in 1544, and from thence came the Anti-Cochlæus (m) which Muſculus publiſh'd in Latin and High Dutch the ſame Year at Augsburg. He publiſh'd five Years after four Dialogues under the Name (n) of Eutychius Myon, and with the Title of Proſcerus, upon this Queſtion, whether a Proteſtant can hold external Communion with Popiſh Superſtitions? They were tranſlated into French at London, and publiſh'd under the Title of The Temporiſer, by V. Poulain, in the Year 1550, in 12°. Note, that the word Proſcerus is an alluſion to the Greek word πρόσκαιρος, Temporarius. His Commentary on the Pſalms was publiſh'd in 1550, and that upon Geneſis in 1544, and one upon the Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Romans in 1555, and another upon Geneſis in 1557: One upon the Epiſtle to the Corinthians in 1559: One upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul to the Galatians and Epheſians in 1561. His Commentary upon the Epiſtles to the Philippians, Coloſſians and Theſſalonians, and upon the firſt Chapter of the firſt to Timothy, was after his Death publiſh'd by his Heirs. His Common Places are a Work which took him up ten Years, and which he publiſh'd in 1560 (a). A certain Perſon obſerves, that in it he has diſcover'd the ſordid Abuſes in the Rates of the Romiſh Chancery. This Obſervation would be good for nothing in an Engliſh Verſion; let's give it therefore in Latin. (b) Minimè ridiculus hic MUSCULUS Papiſtis habetur, præcipuè cum turpiſſimam illam Nundinationem, Taxarum ſcilicet Cancellariæ Apoſtolicæ, id eſt ſcelerum omnium & blaſphemiarum theſaurum toti Mundo in Locis ſuis Communibus aperuerit. quo facto craſſi illi Romani Elephanti, inſatiabiles ventres, furere videntur, non ſecus ac ſi ipſorum in proboſcidas, mures, ad rabiem uſque eoſdem vexantes, irrepſiſſent. Magnus igitur MUSCULUS exiſtimandus, qui in Romani Plutonis Purgatoriique Regis aurcam Cameram atque Adyta penetravit. I ſay nothing of the Books which Muſculus wrote in the German Tongue; but ſhall add, that he wrote (c) all this vaſt number of Volumes with his own Hand, and never had any Amanuenſis; and that if his Works were very uſeful to the Proteſtant Party in thoſe Days, as doubtleſs they were, they are no leſs uſefull ſtill: Yet no Body reads them now, nor has done of a long time, which perhaps proceeds from too nice a Reliſh, and too great an Affection to the Modern Methods. The Works of Muſculus and other Divines of thoſe Days, are ſold almoſt for nothing at all Auctions.

* Micræ-lius Synt hiſt Eccl p. 781. edit. 1699.

(m) See Mr. Baillet ubi ſupra.

(n) Epit. Biblioth. Geſneri, p. m. 825.

(a) Ex Melch. Adam. ib. p. 383. I wonder Melch. Adam. does not ſpeak of the Commentary of Muſculus on the Goſpel of St. Matthew, and that of St. John.

(b) Jac. Verehiden in effigiebus & elogiis præſtantium Theologorum, p. 101.

(c) Melch. Adam. ib.

(G) Employ'd in ſome Eccleſiaſtical Deputations.] He was deputed, together with Boniface Lycoſthenes, by the Senate of Augsburg in 1536, to the Synod that was to be held at Eiſenac, where he was to treat of the Re-union of Proteſtants as to the Doctrine of the Lord's Supper. There was nothing done at Eiſenac: Luther wrote to the Divines who were met there, that his Health would not permit him to undertake a long Journey, and therefore pray'd them to come a little nearer him. Whereupon they departed from Eiſenac, and went as far as Wittemberg, and there ſram'd and concluded a Concordat. Muſculus, and many others being fully perſuaded of the falſhood of Luther's Doctrine about the Real Preſence, conſented nevertheleſs to the Articles of Agreement, whereby they forſook thoſe clear and diſtinct Explications which they had hitherto made uſe of. They had good Reaſons for this Condeſcenſion, for they hop'd, they ſhould by this means, to the great Benefit of the Church and Commonwealth, put an end to a conſiderable Controverſie, and reſtore the Peace which had been ſo long wiſh'd for: But the Event ſhow'd, that as they did not ſatisfie the more Obſtinate by this diſguiſe of Words, ſo they led the ſimpler ſort into an Error, and occaſion'd ſome to think, that the Followers of the figurative Senſe had chang'd their Opinion. Thus oblig'd 'em to reſume their firſt Expreſſions, to explain their Meaning fully and clearly, and openly to declare their Sentiments. I write, you ſee, upon a very nice Affair, and perhaps unleſs I make it appear, that I only tranſlate the very Words of the Author of the Life of Muſculus, I ſhall expoſe my ſelf to the Cenſure of ſome Readers; therefore to prevent their Malice, I ſhall tranſcribe the Latin from the Original. (d) Quibus autem rationibus, cùm ipſe (Muſculus) tùm alii multi boni viri, impulſi ſint; ut, cum in hac cauſa craſſam quorundam ſententiam minimè amplecterentur, in hanc tamen concordiam conſentirent, deque ſua, qua hactenus docuerant, perſpicuitate nonnihil decederent, prudentes vos facilè intelligunt. Nimirum quod perſuaſum hoc illis eſſet, facturos ſe id ſummo cum eccleſiæ & Reip bono. Sic enim ſolum gravem & malè conſultam illam de hac cauſa controverſiam tolli, eccleſiis diu deſideratam pacem reſtitui, & Reſpub. etiam firmius conjungi & conſociari poſſe. Poſtquam verò, rerum eventu edocti, hos quaſi ſuis verborum pertinacioribus non ſatis fieri, ſimpliciores verò in errorem abduci, ſeque apud omnes bonos in ſuſpicionem mutatæ ſententiæ venire cernerent, ad priſtinam ſuam perſpicuitatem reverſi, & palim quid ſentirent, profeſſi ſunt. They who tell us in a declaiming way, that we muſt put an end to Controverſies by indeterminate, ambiguous and intricate Forms of Expreſſion, wherein each Party may find their own Account; can they ſhow many Treaties of Religion by this means peeably concluded? Was not that done at Wittemburg which they think ſo uſeful? We have juſt now ſhown that the Fruits of it laſted not long.

(d) Ibid. p. 179.

Muſculus was deputed from the Senate of Augſburg to aſſiſt at the Conferences held between the Proteſtant and Catholick Divines during the Diet of Worms, and during that of Ratisbonne in 154 , and 1541. He was one of the Secretaries of the Conference at Ratisbon, between Melanchthon and Eccius, and drew up the Acts of it (e). The Inhabitants of Donawert having embrac'd the Reformation in 1544, pray'd thoſe of Augsburg to ſend them a Divine, who might form a Church among 'em, and lay the Foundations of the true Faith. Muſculus was made choice of for this Office, and Preach'd his firſt Sermon December 28 to thoſe new Converts, and after that Preach'd the Word of God every Day for three Months together (f).

(e) Melch. Adam. ib. p. 379, 380.

(f) Id. ib.

(H) He began very late to ſtudy 'em.] He began to ſtudy Hebrew when he was Miniſter of Augsburg, being then thirty two or thirty three Years of Age. He's ſaid to have made a very ſwift Progreſs in this Language (g) Tantam Irenæus in linguæ cognitionem ſui comparavit, ut non ſolum Biblia; ſed & Rabinorum diſcurſiones commentarios, & Chaldaicos etiam interpretes, perfecte intelligeret. Some add (h), that while he was at Augsburg he learn'd Arabick to a great Perfection without the help of any Maſter. He was forty Years old when he began to ſtudy the Greek Tongue. Wolfgang Betuleius, firſt Regent in the College of Augsburg, taught him the firſt Rules of it (i). It's wonderful, that Muſculus beginning ſo late to ſtudy the Greek Tongue, ſhould acquire ſo great a knowledge of it.

(g) Id. ib. p. 378.

(h) Id. ib. p. 376.

(i) Id. ib.

(I) Some Judgments that were made of his Writings.] Mr. Huetius commends his Tranſlations in ſome reſpects, but does not think him learned enough either in Greek or Latin. (k) Offenderunt Muſculus, vir bonus, ſed Græca linguæ notitia imperitus, non ſatis Latina valde inſtructus, brevitate & nitore, fortaſſe etiam ac fide commendatus. nam & ea quæ non intelligebat, uti poterat, expreſſit: nihil videas illum ſtudio prætermittere, nihil alienum ſubſtituere. ceterum in haluc naufragia ſæpe, utpote carens arbitro, quæ qu. celant, incidit. You would do well to conſult the whole Paſſage of Caſaubon which Mr. Huetius has an Eye to, there you'll find a Parallel between Perot and Muſculus, as to the Tranſlation of Polybius. Let's ſee what is ſaid of another Verſion of this Miniſter. "(l) Muſculus, a Proteſtant undertook a new Tranſlation of the Hiſtory of Euſebius, which he perform'd tolerably enough. He "adheres very much to the Letter, and has tranſlated the Text with great clearneſs and brevity. "But he did not always well underſtand his Author, and there are ſeveral faults in his Verſion." Some think (m), that in his Commentary upon

(k) Huet. de claris interpret p. m. 225.

(l) Caſaub. Præfat. ad Polyb.

(l) Du Pin Biblioth. to 2 p. 4. col 1 edit. de Holl.

(m) Simon Critical Hiſtory of the New Teſtament, l. 3 ch. 14. p. m. 438.

the Doctrine of Zuinglius, in the Concordat of Wittemberg, and embrac'd it a-new, after he retir'd from Augsburg. See the Remark G. We muſt not confound him with Andrew Muſculus a Lutheran Author, and Profeſſor of Divinity at Frankfort upon the Oder, and Superintendant General of the Churches of the Country of Brandenburg in the XVIth Century. He was Born at Schneberg in Miſnia, and died in 1580*. He was a zealous promoter of the Doctrine of Ubiquity (K), and explain'd it after a very bold manner. He publiſh'd a great † number of Books, and being perſuaded that he ſhould ſoon ſee great Revolutions in Germany, and that the End of the World was near at Hand; he wrote on theſe Matters with the aſſurance of one who pretends to have a Key to all the Oracles of the Old and New Teſtament. The Romiſh Writers of Controverſie have found in one of his Works (L) on this Subject, a thing which they have ſufficiently harp'd upon.

* Ex Micrælio hiſt Eccleſ. p. 781. edit. 1699.

† See the Epitaxy of Geſner's Bibliotheque, p. 46, & 47.

MUS-

" upon the Pſalms, he has ſhown much more Modeſty, and alſo more Reſpect for Antiquity than " the greateſt part of other Proteſtants——that " the Method he follow'd is very exact——it may " be ſaid, that this Author knew the true way of " explaining Scripture, but had not all the helps " that were neceſſary to be perfect in it, not " being ſufficiently vers'd in Languages and " Critical Learning. Yet he examines without " Prejudice the Ancient Greek and Latin Tranſ- " lations, and he had Lights ſufficient to diſcover " that the Points which are at this Day in the He- " brew Text, were not in it at the Time of the " Seventy and St. Jerome's Tranſlation." We ſhall ſhow elſewhere (n) what Opinion ſome have of his Commentary upon the Goſpel of St. John, and the Epiſtle to the Romans. Baudouin obſerves, that Muſculus publiſh'd in his Common-Places ſeveral Things which ſhould have made Calvin more moderate in puniſhing of Hereticks, but which rather fier'd his Zeal; for writing upon Zacharias he carries this Doctrine ſo far, that he ſeems to put the Sword into the Hand of private Perſons to kill Hereticks (o). I don't vouch this Matter of Fact for true, but I relate it only to ſhow my Readers, that 'tis thought Muſculus diſapprov'd the Puniſhment of Servetus. Some think, that by a Fault very incident to Diſputants, he carried the Matter ſo far from one Extreme, that he came too near the other; as when in oppoſing the Anabaptiſts, he raiſes the Authority of Paſtors more than he ought. See the Paſſages which Mr. Crenius has Collected (p) upon this Subject.

(n) Idem Critical Hiſtory of the Commentators on the New Teſtament, chap. 50. pag. 749. and the following (o) See Fr. Balduini reſponſio altera ad Jo. Calvinum.

(p) Crenius animadverſ. parte 7. p. 149. & ſeq. See him alſo at p. 148.

Note, that Mr. Simon pretends, that Muſculus in his Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Romans obſerves a Neutrality between the different ways of explaining Predeſtination. " (q) He alledges " upon the Places which are moſt intricate, the " Expoſitions given by the moſt ancient Commen- " tators, and he himſelf declares for no ſide. " Wherefore upon theſe Words of Chap. 9. Itaque non volentis neque currentis, &c. He gives an A- " bridgment of the various Interpretations he had " read without eſpouſing any Party. He endea- " vours to reconcile Grace with Free-Will, by " attributing to each what is its due. Ab hujuſmodi contentionibus, ſays he, nos libenter abſtinemus, credentes hominis quidem eſſe voluntatem & conatum, ſed quatenus ad velle & currere divinitus, vel ex gratia, vel ex indignatione Dei fuerit motus. " Nevertheleſs he rejects the Opinion of thoſe " who with the Greek Fathers have recourſe to " the Preſcience of God, and thinks that this can- " not be reconcil'd with the Judgment of St Paul: " Hæc ſententia planè aliena eſt à Paulo, qui omnia tribuit miſerentis Dei liberæ voluntati & gratiæ." I do not underſtand the Management of this Miniſter; for the Latin Paſſage which Mr. Simon mentions, contains in effect whatever's moſt rigid in Calvin's Hypotheſis. They who oppoſe Free-Will with the greateſt rigour, never denied but that the Soul of Man Wills or Inclines to this or that, according as it is mov'd by God.

(q) Simon Critical Hiſtory of the Commentators of the New Teſtament, ch. 5. p. 515

(K) A zealous promoter of the Doctrine of Ubiquity, and explain'd it after a very bold manner.] Hoſpinian obſerves, that this Doctrine was invented by Brentius, and that James Andreas added to it the Hypotheſis of the Majeſtatick Body of JESUS CHRIST; but withal, that it appear'd Eutychian, and aſſerted only one Nature in Chriſt, even in the Judgment of many of the Lutheran, and that in effect it is plainly refuted by that Article of the Apoſtle's Creed, He aſcended into Heaven. For which reaſon, adds he, Andrew Muſculus coming up to the Succour of James Andreas, at ſo hard a Pinch, maintain'd, that the Aſcenſion of JESUS CHRIST was nothing elſe than a ceaſing of the viſibility of his Fleſh here upon Earth. He aſſerted that this Fleſh was ſtill in the Clouds where it vaniſh'd out of the ſight of the Apoſtles; and that according to the ſtyle of Scripture, and the propriety of the words Aſcending and Deſcending, we muſt imagine no change of Place in the Aſcenſion of JESUS CHRIST. I ſhall give you the Words of Hoſpinian at ſome length, becauſe in the relating of ſuch Paradoxes, the ſhorter a Man is, the more danger he runs of impoſing upon his Reader. " (a) Idcirco Jacobo Andreæ ſuccenturiatus eſt in gravi iſto periculo Andreas " Muſculus, qui aſcenſionem Chriſti in cœlos dixit eſſe " diſparentiam, & evaneſcentiam duntaxat carnis " Chriſti in his nubibus, ubi adhuc ſit, & videtur, ſed non viſibili modo, forma, & eo converſationis genere, quo ante aſcenſionem & mortem converſatus eſt cum ſuis Apoſtolis. Sic enim Sectione 3. Articulorum Marchiticorum, Articulo 6. ſcribit; " Conſtare ex Spiritus ſancti Grammatica, & vocabuli Deſcendere vel Aſcendere proprietate, " Filii hominis aſcenſionem in cœlum nihil aliud " eſſe, quàm viſibilem diſparentiam, ac ut propriſſimè loquitur Lucas Actor. 1. Subductionem per nubem ex oculis Apoſtolorum, diſceſſionem ex hac mortali hominum vita, tranſmigrationem ex viſibili converſatione hominum, evaneſcentiam ex oculis hominum palpabilis & viſibilis hujus vitæ converſationis, ingreſſum in " cœlum, regnum Dei Patris glorioſum. Et Artic. " 7. Hanc, dicit, aſcenſionem non factam eſſe motione Phyſicâ de loco in locum, &c." Thus the Carteſians reaſon about the motion of Spirits; they admit no change of Place with reſpect to them, and pretend, that the departure of the Soul out of the Body is nothing elſe, but the ceaſing of a Relation, which during the Life of a Man, took place between the Modifications of the Brain and the Thoughts of the Soul. But when People advance ſuch Hypotheſes concerning thoſe Beings which are really extended, as the Body of JESUS CHRIST, it's impoſſible to make them comprehended by any one. The ſame Muſculus declares in a Sermon in 1564, that they who teach that JESUS CHRIST died only as to his humane Nature, belong to the Devil both Soul and Body, and that the Orthodox Doctrine is, that he died both as to his Humane and Divine Nature. " (b) " Andreas Muſculus quoque hoc anno feria quarta " ſeptimanæ Magnæ ante Paſcha publicè pro " ſuggeſtu ad populum hæc verba inter alia locu- " tus eſt. Hic eſt Diaboli, qui docet Filium hominis " paſſum & mortuum eſſe: Et quiſquis in hac ſententia " perrexerit, Diaboli eſt. Iterum dico: Quicunque docent, Chriſtum ſecundùm humanitatem tantùm mortuum eſſe, anima & corpore, Diaboli ſunt. Hæc autem vera eſt ſententia, Chriſtum ſecundùm utramque " naturam, divinam & humanam, mortuum eſſe." He publiſh'd a Book in 1575, to ſhow that, it is no-wiſe neceſſary that the Glorious Body of JESUS CHRIST ſhould Phyſically fill up any Space: (c) Contra neceſſitatem phyſicæ locationis in corpore Chriſti clarificato & glorioſo. What's very ſtrange and melancholy in all this is, that theſe abſurd Doctrines which ariſe one from another after the real Preſence of J. CHRIST in the Sacrament once aſſerted, &c have had ſuch Defenders, as neither wanted Wit, nor Eloquence, nor Learning, and ſuch as have infinite Ways to elude the Objections of their Adverſaries. It muſt be ingenuouſly confeſs'd, that to ſatiſfie the Reaſons of the Ubiquitarians, ſome are forc'd to ſay things no leſs unconceiveable than Ubiquity it ſelf.

(a) Hoſpin. hiſtor. Sacrament. part. 2. p. 492. ad ann. 1561.

(b) Id. ib. p. 553. ad ann. 1564.

(c) Id. ib. p. 600. See alſo Beza in his Tractatiſe de unione hypoſtatica, p. 89 tom. 3. operum.

(L) In one of his Works on this Subject one thing which

MUSSO (CORNELIO) Biſhop of Bitonto, one of the greateſt Preachers of his Age, was Born at Placentia in Italy, in the Month of April 1511. He dedicated himſelf to the Order of St. Francis, to fulfil a Vow (A) of his Mother; and when he was nine Years old he enter'd into a Monaſtry of that Order at Placentia. The quickneſs of his Wit, the ſtrength of his Memory (B), his good Qualifications to become a great Preacher, induc'd Father James Roſa of Candazzo to take him for his Diſciple. He carried him to Carpi and other Places, where he ſtudied under good Maſters. The young Man learn'd Humanity very perfectly, and Preach'd ſo eloquently, that he ſoon acquir'd a great Reputation, and the Friendſhip of Leonello Pio of Carpi, who ſent him to Venice with Letters of Recommendation, to give him an opportunity of Preaching before the Senate, and getting a Settlement in the Univerſity of Padua. This Deſign had

Y He had a Son who became a Cardinal.

(d) Ala, p. 47.

which they have ſufficiently harp'd upon.] The Epitome of the Bibliothec of Geſner (d) informs me, that Andreas Muſculus publiſh'd a Book at Frankfort upon the Oder in 1577, de Meſech & Kedar, de Gog & Magog, de magna calamitate ante finem mundi; and that in 1578. he had Printed in the ſame place, Conſiderationes appropinquantis ultimi judicii. Before theſe two Books there was an Expoſition of a Prophecy of JESUS CHRIST, applied to the Miſeries now impending over Germany. (e) Prophetiam Domini noſtri Jeſu Chriſti, de imminente Germaniæ infortunio, expoſuit anno 1557. Francoford. ad Viadrum. 'Tis in this laſt Piece the Paſſage is found which the Romiſh Controvertiſts have ſtrain'd to make the World believe that the Proteſtants deſpiſe their Miniſters to that degree, that they refuſe all Affinity with them by Marriage. An Iriſh Jeſuit having given this Title, quam infamis ſit ubivis conditio Miniſtrorum, to one of the Chapters (f) of his Britannomachia Miniſtrorum, alledges in the firſt place this Paſſage of Andrew Muſculus, and cites the 27th Folio of the Treatiſe of Prophecy. Ut jam quis prædicantem agere velit, præoptaret, ſcio, nunquam ſe in lucem hanc prodiiſſe. Parentes quoque in primo lavacro aquis ſuffocatum eſſe malunt. Quod ſi etiam aliqui ex noſtris liberis prædicantes fieri fortaſſe cuperent, infamiæ & turpitudinis metu adſpirare non poſſunt. Uſu venit etiam, cum quis juvenis virginem aliquam ſibi in matrimonio locari peſcit; ut cum parentes virginis, aut etiam virgo ipſa, ſciſcitentur, utrùm prædicans fieri cogitet. Habemus etiam (quod multò magis horrendum eſt auditu) eorum exempla, qui ne repudiarentur, hac lege & conditione matrimonium contraxerunt, ut ſe prædicantes nunquam fore jurejurando promitterent. Afterwards he ſays, that Downham at p. 67. of his Sermons makes the ſame Complaint as to England. I believe Downham had in view the firſt Times of the Reformation under Queen Elizabeth; for Sanders relates (g), that the New Preachers were at the beginning ſo negligent or unhappy in chooſing their Wives, that they almoſt always lit on lewd Women and Adultreſſes, which gave Scandal to the meaner ſort of their own Sect, and was the Sport of the Catholicks. Elizabeth put forth a Proclamation that the Biſhops and Prieſts ſhould take no Woman in Marriage that was not of good and honeſt Reputation in the Judgment of ſome; but, adds he, this did not remedy the Evil, becauſe on the one hand many could no more live without Wives, than they could without Bread, to uſe their own Expreſſions; and on the other, they could find no Man either among the Catholicks or the Hereticks themſelves, who would give his Daughter in Marriage to a Preacher; for it was counted a ſcandalous thing to be the Wife of a Prieſt, and according to the Laws of the Kingdom, ſuch Marriages are no better than Adultery, and ſuch Women are not rank'd among Married Perſons, the thing being contrary to the Nature of true Marriage. Elizabeth, ſays he, would not admit the Wives of Prieſts into her Court: People of Quality would not converſe with them; the Wives of Archbiſhops had no Rank nor Title, and their Husbands were oblig'd to keep 'em at Home, as Inſtruments and Veſſels of their Uncleanneſs and Neceſſities. All the World knows that Sanders writ this Book with ſo much Rancour and Paſſion, that he deſerves little Credit. But Things are in all reſpects chang'd much for the better ſince thoſe Days, as to the Article we are now upon: And as to the Paſſage of Andreas Muſculus, 'tis plain the Adverſaries have abus'd it. 'Tis eaſily perceiv'd that this Lutheran Doctor being big with his Hypotheſis, that Germany was ſhortly to feel the Scourge of Divine Juſtice, contain'd in a Prophecy of JESUS CHRIST, exaggerated the Contempt that was ſhown to the Word of God, and declaim'd very ſharply againſt the want of a due Reſpect to the Miniſters. Being heated with theſe Ideas, he repreſents by Hyperbolical Figures the Averſion the People had to the Miniſtry; as if a Father would rather chooſe to ſee his Son die in the Cradle, than ſee him a Preacher; and as if the Parents of a young Maid, and the young Maid her ſelf would carefully enquire of him that ſought her in Marriage, Have you any Thoughts of being a Miniſter? In fine, as if to prevent a Refuſal in Courting a Maid, a Man muſt proteſt upon Oath, that he never would be conſecrated to the Miniſtry of the Word of God. The Enemies (a) of the Proteſtants have not fail'd to make an Advantage of theſe Exaggerations. But when they make the moſt of it, it may be truly ſaid, that the Proteſtants of France have given no occaſion to ſuch a Reproach: They had always a very good and laudable Cuſtom of Honouring and Reſpecting their Paſtors; and 'tis certain, that they who were Miniſters of the Goſpel, Married to more Advantage than if they had been Laymen.

(f) The 10th Section of the 5th Chap. of the 3d Book of Henry Fitz-Simon, p. 342.

(g) Hiſtory of the Schiſm of England.

(a) See Hypocriſis Marci Antonii de Dominis detecta auctore Fideli Annoſo Veremetano Theologo. See alſo Julius Calvinus in Analyſi Tertulliani de præſcript. adverſ. hæret. c. 41. n. 5. p. m. 131. & Sylveſter Petra Sancta n. 1 in epiſt. Molinæi ad Balſacium, c. 1. where they ſpeak of the Corpſe that was burnt.

(A) to fulfil a Vow of his Mother] Note firſt, that he was Born upon Wedneſday in Eaſter Week. His Mother by an over ſtrict obſervance of the Faſts of the Church, had impaired her Health, and 'twas thought ſhe could not out live the Pains of Childbearing. In this weak Condition ſhe implor'd Help from on High, and had recourſe to the Interceſſion of the Holy Virgin, and to that of St. Francis, and having a particular Devotion for this laſt Saint, ſhe made a Vow, that if her Pains went off, and ſhe ſhould bring forth a Son, ſhe would conſecrate him to God as a Member of his Seraphick Order. After ſhe had made this Vow ſhe found her ſelf reliev'd, and was brought to Bed of our Cornelio, He was nam'd Nicolas after his Grandfather by the Father's ſide, but being enter'd into a Religious Order, would be call'd Ira Cornelio, becauſe his Mother was call'd Cornelia. He knew the Vow ſhe had made when ſhe was in Travail with him, and often thought of it after her Death, and this was it that induc'd him to be a Monk (b)

(b) Eſſendo io in his Lafe mortale. (c) Don Giuſeppe Muſſo

(B) The ſtrength of his Memory and his good Qualifications to become a great Preacher.] After he had heard a Sermon he was perfect Maſter of it, and could repeat it ſo readily, that one would have ſaid he had made it. This was extraordinary! (d) Si ſcoprì di ſpirito coſì gentile, e dotato di memoria coſì eccellente, ch' era da gran maraviglia, e da ſtupore a tutti, intanto che ſtando egli ad udir le prediche che ſi facevano dall' hora in Coro, le apprendeva coſì bene e le recitava poi con tanta gratia che parevano veramente coſe fatte. When he repeated ſuch Sermons, he would perfectly imitate the Way and Geſtures of the Preacher. They try'd him this way more than once before the Preacher in ordinary to the Conventual Cordeliers, who was mightily ſurpriz'd to find himſelf ſo well copy'd. (d) Queſto commoſſe di modo il fratello, che altre volte ſperanza alle ſue prediche, ove egli recitava in refettorio, l'imitava con i movimenti e co' geſti, che parea ſteſſo fatto nel predicar aſſiduamente ammaeſtrato e eſſercitato da lui. It was eaſie for ſuch a young Man to become a good Orator. He had nothing more to do than propoſe to himſelf the Action of ſome great Maſter as his Model. Note, that Muſſo had the Talent of Diſcourſing well without much preparation. A Funeral Oration; a Panegyrick upon a Saint coſt him but a little Time. Whenever his Superiors had occaſion for ſuch extemporary Diſcourſes (e) they addreſs'd themſelves to him.

(a) Hoc tactum ut funebribus oppugnam eruditionis ornatum dicendi, vel laudationem factis ſtatis hebus reproberetur patrum ſuorum monitu celebrandis præter Muſſum ſufficeret nemo Imperialis in Muſeo Hiſtorico p. 68.

(e) Ibid.

(d) Ibid.

had good Succeſs. Cornelio Muſſo little and lean as he was (C), was admir'd for his Sermons; and Peter Zeno, Lewis and James Cornaro, eſpous'd him with ſo much Zeal, that they procur'd him an honourable Poſt in the Convent of the Franciſcans of Padua, where without neglecting the Art of Rhetorick, he apply'd himſelf to the Study of Philoſophy, under the famous Zimara, and to that of Divinity under Father Simonetta. He took the Degree of Batchelor, and read Lectures, and held Diſputes, which got him the Reputation of a rare Wit. He Preach'd a Couſre of Lent-Sermons at Padua with great Applauſe. He maintain'd Theſes for ſeveral Days together, and was at laſt promoted the Degree of Doctor in Divinity, as a Reward of his Merit. Peter Bembo who was afterwards Cardinal, honour'd him with his Friendſhip, and gave him good Advice as to Rhetorick, and about a Latin and Tuſcan Style. Lampridius * inſtructed him in the Greek Tongue, and others in the Hebrew and Chaldee, for the underſtanding of the Text of Scripture. He was appointed to Preach a whole Lent in the Convent of his Order at Venice. He perform'd the ſame Office in the moſt illuſtrious Pulpits in Italy, particularly at Milan, where he was much eſteem'd by the Duke †. He was made Profeſſor in ordinary of Metaphyſicks in the Academy of Pavia, and had this Prince frequently for his Auditor. This Academy being diſpers'd after the Death of the Duke, by the Confuſions of War, he was call'd to Bologna, to be Profeſſor of Metaphyſicks, and had a greater Salary ſettled upon him, than ever was given to any Regular before; but ſeveral Cities ‡ vying, as it were, which ſhould make moſt Intereſt to get him for their Lent Preacher, his Academical Lectures were diſpens'd with during this Seaſon; to however make amends, he was oblig'd to read Lectures upon the Scripture on the Feſtival Days at other times of the Year. The Epiſtles of St. Paul were the Subject of theſe Lectures. A Concurrent ſtruck up who by explaining the ſame Epiſtle after a Heterodox manner rais'd great Tumults, and drew after him a great many Followers. Campegio Biſhop of Bologna was oblig'd to employ his Authority, to put a ſtop to this Diſorder, by expelling the Innovators, and impoſing upon the Competitor the Penance of a publick Recantation. From this time he conceiv'd a particular Eſteem for Cornelio Muſſo, and preſented him to Paul III. who kept him at Rome to Preach at St. Laurence in Damazo, and to live in quality of Theologiſt with the Cardinal his Grandſon. Not long after Ochinus, who had Preach'd in this Church, retir'd from Rome, after he had diſputed with our Cornelio, who convicted him of being a falſe Brother. The new Preacher of St. Laurence drew a great Croud to his Auditory, and being about four Years after promoted to the Biſhoprick of Bertinaro, he did not diſcontinue his Preaching, only when he had a mind to read Lectures upon the Epiſtles of St. Paul in the ſame Church. They were very well reliſh'd, and as the Pope had a mind to hear him ſometimes, but could not with convenience, out of the Apoſtolical Palace, he took him from theſe publick Exerciſes, and gave him another Office, which was to Preach in Latin upon the Goſpel for the Day, in his Holineſſe's Chamber, or at his Table, and immediately after to maintain a Diſpute, and anſwer what Objections ſhould be propos'd to him. There was an extraordinary Concourſe of Eccleſiaſticks Regular and Secular at theſe Exerciſes. Some Cardinals and ſeveral Prelates were preſent at 'em: The Pope himſelf propos'd ſometimes both Anſwers and Objections, and being very well ſatisfy'd of the Ability of Muſſo, he promoted him † to the Biſhoprick of Bitonto, and ſent him to the Council as a proper Perſon (D) to diſpute among the reſt of the learned Divines upon any Matters which might offer. The Article about Juſtification paſs'd through the Hands of Muſſo; he digeſted it, and explain'd it with very great Diligence and Application. The Council being tranſlated from Trent to Bologna, was at laſt interrupted.

Paul III.

* Lampridio Maeſtro in quei tempi delli illuſtriſſimi Signori Gonzaghi Giuſeppo Muſſo ubi infra.

† This was Francis Sforza.

‡ Accio che poteſſe predicare e ſodisfare alle Citta di, che a gara l'una dell' altra un'anno o due avanti lo ricercavano ſempre Id. ib.

† By exchange for that of Bertinoro.

(b) Drelincourt, demandes à l'Evêque de Belley, p. m. 37. He cites a Sermon of the Biſhop of Bitonto on the Magnificat, in which the Preacher invokes the Virgin in the words of Terence. Lucina Lucina fer opem.

(a) Palavicin, iſtor. del Concilio l. 5 c. 8. n. 9. ad ann. 1545.

(b) Id. ib. c 17. n. 9.

(c) Fra-Paolo, hiſt du Concile de Trente l. 2. p. m. 121. ad ann. 1545.

(d) Id. ib. p. 122.

(e) Palavic. ubi ſupra, c. 18.

(f) Fra-Paolo ubi ſupra, p. 140, 141.

(C) Little and lean as he was.] The firſt time he was ſeen in the Pulpit at Venice, there was nothing expected from one of his mean Appearance, but they were undeceiv'd as ſoon as they began to hear his Voice. (f) Quivi invitati li primi ſenatori di Vinegia, lo fece ſalire in pulpito, ove veduto da loro coſi g evenetto, di p.ccola ſtatura, languido e eſtenuato nell' aſpetto, ogn' uno fra ſe ſteſſo faceva giudicio ch' egli non haveſſe ne ſcienza, nè forze, per negocio tale, ma udita c'hebbero la voce, e che furono ſatti i ſuoi alti concetti, con quella ſingular' attione naturale nata a lui da Dio, tutti all' hora reſtarono. There are ſome Preachers who may be compar'd to the Nightingale, ſuch as being meager and ſmall, have yet ſo ſounding a Voice, that they make all the Vaults of a Church ring again; ſo that one who heard without ſeeing 'em, would think they were Perſons of a Gigantick Stature. Look at 'em and you are as much ſurpriz'd as one is who compares the ſmallneſs of a Nightingale with the ſtrength of its Notes. If I ben't miſtaken there's a Fable to this purpoſe, and I remember the Thought of a Lacedæmonian who having pluck'd off the Feathers of a Nightingale (g), deſin'd it a Thing which was nothing but Voice. How happy a Forerunner in favour of him who ſpeaks in publick is a good Mein! It diſpoſes the Aſſembly to liſten and canvaſſes for Votes before he opens his Mouth. He does not want half the Eloquence that's neceſſary for a Preacher of a bad Mien to gain Applauſe. This gives an extraordinary Idea of our Muſſo's Action and Way of Thinking; conſequently the Remark I have made is not uſeleſs. You muſt know he is call'd the Chryſoſtom of the Italians, as Mr. Drelincourt obſerves (b).

(f) Gioſeppe Muſſo, ubi ſupra.

(g) Plut. in Lacon. apophth. p. 233. A.

(D) He ſent him to the Council as a proper Perſon to diſpute among the reſt of the learned Divines upon all Matters which might offer.] Let's here collect all Muſſo's Tranſactions at the Council of Trent. He was one of the firſt that went thither: (a) The Legates found only the Biſhop of Cava at Trent, but were quickly follow'd by Thomas Campeggio Biſhop of Feltre, and by Cornelio Muſſo. This latter Preached in Latin at the opening of the Council (b). His Sermon, an Abridgment of which you'll find in Father Paul (c), was Criticiz'd (d). Palavicin (e) has much a do to anſwer and confute this Critick, altho' he employs all his Learning to do it. A ſort of People more troubleſome than Cenſurers, aroſe againſt the Biſhop of Bitonto; for his Creditors, I mean thoſe who had Penſions out of his Biſhoprick, proſecuted him in the moſt rigorous manner; of which this Account is given by Father Paul: "(f) In the Congregation of the "fifth of March 1546, the Biſhop of Bitonto, who "had been lately cited to Rome by the Auditor, at "the Requeſt of his Penſioners, who endeavour'd "to force him by an Excommunication, accor-"ding to the ſtile of that Court, to pay what was "owing

Paul III. died. Julius III. ſucceeded him, who ſhew'd a great deal of Kindneſs to the Biſhop of Bitonto, and made choice of him for his Domeſtick Prelate and Aſſiſtant. He would not part with him to go to the Council till as he was inform'd by the Legate, that the Preſence of a learned Biſhop was abſolutely neceſſary. The Aſſembly having broke up, Muſſo went to ſee his Biſhoprick, and reſided upon it the Elevation of Pius IV. then he made a Journey to Rome, and was again employ'd by the Pope after the ſame manner as he had been under Julius III. and Paul III. for Pius IV. entertain'd him to Preach, and to maintain Diſputes at his Table. He remembred, that when he had been in minoribus, he had often diſputed with him in the ſame place, under the Papacy of Paul III. Some time after † he ſent him with his Nephew into Germany, which gave him an opportunity of raiſing himſelf a great Reputation at the Court of Ferdinand. He was afterwards employ'd at Rome in the Affairs of the Inquiſition, and in the examination of Matters that were treated of at Trent. This Prelate departed from Rome after the concluſion of the Council, and retir'd to Bitonto, where he apply'd himſelf to the Reformation of Abuſes, and to all the Offices of a good Biſhop. He had a mind to ſettle a Seminary, but he was forc'd by the Difficulties he met with to give over that Deſign. After a Reſidence of ten Years, he reſolv'd to go and pay his Duty to Pius V. then ſee his own Country, and afterwards take a Journey to Venice, to put ſome Books in the Preſs. He arriv'd at Rome about the time that Gregory XIII. ſucceeded Pius V. The new Pope detain'd him for his Aſſiſtant, and would not ſuffer him to continue his Journey till the opening of the Jubilee. Muſſo did not live ſo long: He died at Rome January 9. 1574, Aged near 63 * Yeras. He is mightily commended for his Chaſtity (E), his Sobriety, his forgetting of Injuries (F), his Devotion, &c. He wrote ſeveral

† In 1560.

* And not 64, as Moreri and Ghilini.

" owing to him, complain'd of this way of proceeding, and ſaid, that the Demands of his Penſioners were juſt; but that he was not to be blam'd, becauſe he could not live at the Council and pay his Penſions: So that he muſt either be diſcharg'd, or be gratified with an equivalent Sum (1) The poor Prelates concern'd themſelves for him, looking upon it as a common Cauſe; and ſome ſpoke out plainly, that 'twas an Affront to the Council, that an Officer of the Court of Rome ſhould proceed by Cenſures againſt a Biſhop who aſſiſted at it: That after ſuch an extravagant Proceeding the World would have reaſon to ſay, that the Council was not free: That to vindicate their Honour, they muſt cite the Auditor to Trent, or at leaſt give ſuch a Demonſtration of their Reſentment as might ſecure the Dignity of the Council. Others ſet themſelves to ſpeak againſt Penſions, and ſaid, it was very juſt, that the Rich Churches ſhould relieve the Poor, but in a way of Charity, and not by Conſtraint, nor ſo as to deprive themſelves of Neceſſaries, and that St. Paul taught the ſame thing (2): That it was unjuſt, that the poor Biſhops ſhould be forc'd by Cenſures to retrench themſelves of Neceſſaries to accommodate the Rich; and that this Abuſe deſerv'd very well to be provided againſt by the Council, and the ancient Uſage re-eſtabliſh'd. But the Legates conſidering whither ſuch juſt Complaints might tend, put an end to them, by promiſing that they would write to Rome, to ſtop the Proceedings againſt the Biſhop, and to grant him ſome Means " wherewith to ſubſiſt at the Council" Palavicini affirms (g), that the Acts of this Congregation ſay nothing of theſe Complaints, or of theſe Reflexions of the Prelates. He adds, that they would have been groundleſs, ſince it was very unjuſt to diſpenſe with paying one's Debts, upon pretence of aſſiſting at a Council. He does not deny that Muſſo being cited before the Auditor, repreſented modeſtly to the Legates his Neceſſities, and deſir'd their Aſſiſtance: Which he obtain'd; for upon their Recommendation, the Pope at that time reliev'd him very well, by making him a Preſent of a hundred Pieces of Gold, to the value of five and forty Pounds ten Shillings.

It is obſerv'd (h), that this Biſhop maintain'd ſtoutly, that the Scripture and Traditions deſerv'd an equal Reſpect; but at laſt abated a little, and propos'd, that inſtead of an equal Reſpect, it ſhould be ſaid, a like Reſpect, which Propoſal was rejected. Palavicin blames the Abatement Ben è di maraviglia, ſays he, che il Muſſo havendo per se la bontà della cauſa, la forza della ragione, e'l numero de' ſeguaci, ſi ritiraſſe nella vegnente Congregazione, dalla ſentenza felicemente deſa; e proponeſſe che in luogo d'uguale, ſi poneſſe, ſimigliante. Il che non ſorti approvazione. This Prelate was more Orthodox as to the matter of Reſidence, for he aſſerts (i) by many Reaſons, that it was jure divino. He practis'd this Doctrine too rollerably well (k) Fanno ultimamente, e chiedo il parere, e ragionando eſſo Monſignore di ritornare alla ſua Chieſa, fu ſua renitenza, e mettere in oſſervanza il ſacro Concilio, anzi quello ch' egli haveva ſempre predicato al mondo, mantenuto nel medeſimo ſacro Concilio, e perſuaſo a ſua Beatitudine in materia della reſidenza, con dire ſpeſſo, ubi oves, ibi paſtor; ibi paſtor ubi oves ——— che ſe licenza à ſua Beatitudine, e l'hebbe, coſi parti per Bitonto. His Explications of the Doctrine of Juſtification (l) were applauded in the Council. He rejected the rigid Hypotheſes (m) as to the Point of Predeſtination, and made an Apology for the Court of Rome (n) againſt thoſe who aſcrib'd the Abuſes in the Elections of Biſhops, and thoſe in the plurality of Benefices to the Pope's. In a word, he was look'd on (o) as the Right Hand of the Council. He and the Archbiſhop of Matera were the two whom the Diſpatches from the Legates extoll'd moſt (p).

Here follows a Paſſage which contains in it an Error of Commiſſion, and another of Omiſſion (q) Inde Bertanori, mox Bitontii antiſtes electus Germaniam ad ſuadendum Ferdinando Imperatori concilium tranſmiſſus. ad id porro Tridentii alia tertia orbi celebritate mutum Julii tertii, non ita quarti Pontificum nutu hos profectus, diſputatoris, arbitri, examinatoris ſuſe pram acriter provinciam exercuit. Muſſo was ſent to the Council by Paul III. and was not ſent thither by Pius IV. He has not therefore ſaid that which he ſhould have ſaid, and he has ſaid that which he ſhould not have ſaid. If you would have another Error, you need only conſider, that 'tis ſuppoſed he was ſent to Germany before Julius III departed him to the Council, which is palpably falſe, for it was Pius IV. that ſent him to the Court of Ferdinand.

(E) He is mightily commended for his Chaſtity, his Sobriety.] 'Tis pretended that he died a Virgin. (a) Viſſe egli caſtiſſimo, e così nel ſuo, come in tutto il tempo ſuo, e ſi tiene che di quella integrità ſi ſegnaſſe, che nacque, ſi morìſſe ancora, poiche non ſi ſcoſſe mai in eſſo ne detto, ne fatto men ch'hon ſi in tutta la ſua vita, di che n'hanno fatto fede quelli che l'hanno praticato dalla gioventù fino alla ſua morte. Nel mangiare, e nel bere fu molto ſobrio, poiche bevea più acqua che vino, e di una o di due ſorte ſole de cibi, e quelli ſimplici contentava.

(F) His forgetting of Injuries.] He was expoſed to the Perſecutions and Calumnies of envious Men, and never ſhow'd the leaſt Reſentment: (b) Come huomo pazientiſſimo, e modeſtiſſimo in ſoppor ar le persecutioni e le calumnie de' ſuo emuli e adversarii cosi egli eran fatte, rendendo à ciaſcuno ſempre ben per male, e pregando il ſignore che a loro perdonaſſe. His Calumniators who endeavour'd to oppreſs him, did not ſucceed in their Deſign, on the contrary all the Confuſion

(1) Out of 600 Crowns which his Biſhoprick was worth, he paid 200 Penſion.

(2) Veſtra abundantia illorum inopiam ſuppleat. 2 Cor. 8. Unuſquiſque prout deſtinavit in corde ſuo, non ex triſtitia, aut ex neceſſitate. Hilarem enim datorem diligit Deus. 2 Cor. 9.

(g) Palavic. lib. 6. c. 13 n. 4. p. m. 636.

(h) Id ib. c. 14 n. 3. p. 639

(i) Id. l. 6. c. 13. p. 709

(k) Giuſeppe Muſſo ubi ſupra.

(l) Pallavicin ubi ſupra, l. 8. c. 4 n. 14.

(m) Fra-Paolo, l. 7. p. 495

(n) Id ib. p. 531, 532

(o) Pallavicin ubi ſupra, c. 7 n. 4 p. 781.

(p) Id ib.

(q) Imperialis ubi ſupra.

(a) Giuſeppe Muſſo ubi ſupra.

(b) Id ib.

several Books, some of which (G) have been publish'd γ.

MUSTAPHA, Emperor of the Turks succeeded his Brother Achmet, who died November the 15th 1617 δ. The People soon found their Mistake in thinking him more capable of reigning than Osman the Son of Achmet. They therefore depos'd him about two Months After, and plac'd Osman upon the Throne of his Father. We shall shew elsewhere ζ, how Mustapha was restord, and then depos'd a second time.

MUSURUS (MARK) a Native of Candia, distinguish'd himself among the Learned Men who appear'd in Italy towards the beginning of the XVIth Century. He taught Greek in the University of Padua with great Reputation, and with so much Application in the discharge of * his Office, that he scarce miss'd reading publick Lectures four Days in a Year. He read 'em commonly at seven a Clock in a Morning. He was admirably skill'd in the Latin Tongue, which had scarce been observ'd before of any Greek transplanted into the West †, and he studied Philosophy with extraordinary Application. This is what is said of him by one who knew him (A) Personally. Some say, that the hopes of raising his Fortune, was that which (B) oblig'd him to go to Rome, to make his Court to Leo X. His Journey was not in vain, for he obtain'd of this Pope the Archbishoprick of Malvazia in the Morea, but scarce was he dignified with his high Title, when he died at Rome in the Autumn of the Year 1517 *, of a Dropsie, if we may believe Paulus Jovius ‡, who adds, that meer Grief at his not being promoted to a Cardinal's Hat, threw him into a languishing Disease. They add, that he was a good Poet, and that the Elogium of Plato, which he wrote in Greek Verse, and prefix'd to the Works of this Philosopher, was receiv'd with great Applause, and look'd on as a Piece which equall'd the best Poems of Antiquity. The same Paulus Jovius pretends, that the League which made War against the Venetians, oblig'd Musurus to quit his Professor's Place, and lie by for some time in his Study. This is not relating Matters accurately ||. Mr. Varillas has a very pleasant Article ‡ upon our Musurus: But all his Embellishments γ Taken from his Life written in Italian by Giuseppe Musso, sua creatura. It's Printed before the prediche quadragesimali, &c. di Cornelio Musso. I make use of the Venice Edition in 1603.

δ Mercure François, tom. 5. ad ann. 1617. p. m. 185.

ζ In the Article Osman.

* Erasm. epist 5. l. 23 p 1209

† Id. ib.

‡ Paulus Bombasius epist. ad Erasmum 23. l. 2. inter Erasmianas.

‖ In elog c 30.

‡ See the Remark B

‡ Anecdotes de Florence, p. 180, 181, 112.

Confusion fell back upon themselves (c) Yet they put a stop to the advancement of his Fortune, and hinder'd his attaining some Dignities which had been promis'd him (d). If we knew all the Particulars of these Proceedings, we should the better know how far it's to be wondred at, that such a Man obtain'd as a Reward of all his Pains nothing more than the Bishoprick of Patonto.

(G) Several Books: some of which have been publish'd] His Treatise de visitatione & de modo visitandi, was Printed under the Title of Synodus Bitontina. The Author (e) who informs me of this, adds, that the three Books de Deo & de divina historia, would soon be Printed I find in Ghilini (f), that there are five Books of Cornelio Musso, de historia divina. But the principal Works of this Prelate are his Sermons: Several Volumes of 'em were publish'd after his Death (g) Scrisse molte volumi di prediche, chiamati quadragesimali, oltre quelle stravaganzi che vanno fuori di diverse materie e soggetti. There's a Discourse of Bernardin Tomitano, at the beginning of the first Volume, concerning the Beauty, the Method and the Character of the Sermons of our Cornelio The prediche quadragesimali, were dedicated to Cardinal Farnese in 1586, by Giuseppe Musso. You may see in Moreri, that Gabriel Chapuis publish'd a French Translation of the Sermons of this Prelate in 1584

(c) See Ghilini teatro parte 1. p. 59

(d) Communi literatorum fato livoris terros expertus aculeos destinata sibi honorum fastigia non attigit Imperialis ubi supra.

(e) Giuseppe Musso ubi supra.

(f) Ghilini ubi supra, p. 40.

(g) Giuseppe Musso ibid.

(A) One that knew him personally.] I mean Erasmus, and I'm persuaded that several will read with pleasure what he says of Musurus. (h) Patavii nemineni vidi celebrem, mortuos tantum commemoro, præter Raphaelem Regium hominem admodum natu grandem, sed cruda viro viridisque senectus. Erat tum, ut opinor, non minor annis septuaginta, & tamen nulla fuit hyems tam aspera quin ille mane hora septima adiret M. Musurum Græcè profitentem, qui toto anno vix quatuor intermittebat dies quin publicè profiteretur. Iuvenes hyemis rigorem ferre non poterant, illum senem nec pudor nec hyems abigebat ab auditorio. Musurus autem ante fuit [illegible] tem peritis, postquam ex benignitate Leonis captivat esse Archiepiscopus, vir natione Græcus, numerum Cretensis, sed Latinæ linguæ usque ad miraculum doctus, quod vix ulli Græco contigit præter Theodorum Gazam, & Joannem Lascarem qui adhuc in vivis agit. Deinde totius Philosophiæ non tantùm studiosissimus, vir summis rebus natus, si licuisset superesse. The Letter from whence I take these words, was written in 1524 Erasmus says something in it of the Father of Mark Musurus, a good old Man (i), who knew only his Mother-Tongue. It's somewhat considerable, and very glorious to the Greek Professor, that so learned a Man as Raphael Regius should so constantly frequent all his Lectures at seventy Years of Age. If all the Elogiums, which Musurus has receiv'd from Gelius Rhodiginus in an (k) Epistle be true, we cannot justly deny him the Title of a great Person

(h) Erasm epist 5. l 23. p. 1209.

(i) Quodam die cum domi ipsius cœnaturus essem & adesset pater seniculus, qui nihil nisi Græce sciebat. Id ibid.

I shall now cite an Author who gives him much Reading, a great Memory, a very penetrating Judgment, an admirable clear Head, and an exceeding Tenderness for his Father. (l) Nihil erat tam reconditum, quod non aperiret, nec tam involutum quod non expediret Musurus, vere Musarum custos & antistes. Omnia legerat, excusserat omnia. Schemata loquendi, fabulas, historias, ritus veteres ad unguem callebat. Hanc tam consummatam eruditionem etiam insignis pietas commendabat, dum patrem Græculum jam grandævum amanter fideliterque foveret.

(B) The hopes of advancing his Fortune oblig'd him to go to Rome] According to Paulus Jovius (m), the War forc'd him to quit his Professor's Place at Padua, when a formidable League (n) was form'd against the Republick of Venice: He must therefore have left Padua in 1509. Paulus Jovius would have Musurus, after this Retreat, to live quietly in his Study, till he went to Rome, whither Leo X. enticed him by the Rewards he bestow'd upon the most famous Wits. But having seen in a Letter written to Erasmus in 1518, that (o) the Senate of Venice had given publick notice, that at the End of two Months they would choose a Professor of the Greek Tongue in the room of Mark Musurus, I am tempted to reject what Paulus Jovius says; for I think it improbable, that after the Venetians had in 1509, beaten back the Emperor Maximilian who had besieg'd Padua, and that their Affairs were settled again in a better Condition than ever, they should not think of filling the Professor's Place of the Greek Tongue till 1518. But here are some Words of Aldus Manutius, which inform us, that Paulus Jovius did not speak exactly They shew, that Musurus read Lectures in Venice upon the Ancient Greek Authors, at the time that he was invited by Leo X. (p) Hæc autem à nostris præstari tibi potuerunt suasore adjutoreque M. Musuro, quem nuper heroicarum literarum decus Venetis propagantem Græciæ priscis autoribus partim illustri juventuti enarrandis non sine laude, partim emendatione castigationeque in pristinum nitorem. quod ejus fieri potuerit, restituendis, Leo X. Pont Opt. Max. sponte sua nihil tale cogitantem admirabili consensu sacrosanctorum Cardinalium in Archiepiscopalem dignitatem evexit. Aldus Manutius owns there the Assistance he had receiv'd from Musurus for publishing Pausanias. I shall add by the way, that at the Beginning of this Edition, there is a Greek Letter of Musurus to John Lascaris, which Mr. Perrault might have made an Advantage

(k) Before the 14th book des Antiques leçons

(l) Beat. Rhenan. in vita Erasmi, p. m. 33, 34.

(m) Jovius In elogiis, c. 30.

(n) Sæva conjuratione externarum gentium afflictis bello Venetis inde exturbatus. Id. ib.

(o) Scias in Senatu Veneto sanctum esse, atque etiam præconio publicatum, eligendum esse successorem Marco Musuro, qui publicè Græcas literas auditores doceat, stipendiumque centenorum aureorum decretum: Epist. Erasm. 28. l. 10. p. 530.

(p) Aldus Manutius præfat in Pausaniam.

ments to me shall seem Romance (C), till he produces better Proofs of his Narrative. We shall make (D) some Reflections on this Narrative, and on the Abridgment given of it tage of, for it refutes those who admire none but the Ancients.

To rectifie this Narrative of Paulus Jovius, I think we must suppose, that Mark Musurus at his leaving Padua, retir'd to Venice, and there read Lectures till such time as he went to Rome. We must also say, that the Successor which the Senate of Venice had a mind to appoint in 1518, was to fill not the Professor's Chair at Padua, but that at Venice. We shall see hereafter (a) in a Passage of Pierius Valerianus, that Musurus taught first at Padua, and afterwards at Venice.

(a) In the Remark ΕΔ.

(C) All his Embellishments to me shall seem Romance.] He informs us, that Musurus had already signaliz'd himself in Candia by his Criticisms upon the Greek Authors, when the Republick of Venice gave him a Professor's Chair at Padua; that "The number of his Auditors in this last Place "was so great, that they were forc'd to enlarge "the publick School, and give Musurus leave to "teach Grammar in the Morning and Poetry at "Night, to satisfie those who had a mind to hear "him explain these two liberal Arts: That he "continu'd Professor till the War dispers'd his "Audience, and oblig'd himself to provide for his "own safety: That he retir'd to Rome, where he "wrote a (b) Poem, which was thought too excellent "to be Compos'd by him; and therefore many would rather suppose that he had found it in some ancient Manuscript, and publish'd it under his own Name: That their Distrust was grounded on this, "that it was not possible any Man should in those "Days compose a Piece, in which the Stile and "Beauty of the Greek Poetry in the Age of Alexander were retriev'd in the highest Perfection: That Musurus himself help'd to confirm this "Opinion, for he would write nothing more of that "kind, lest by a weak Piece, or one less finish'd, "he should diminish the high Reputation to "which he was advanc'd all of a sudden, and "without ever expecting it: That he contented "himself by explaining to the Romans, the finest "Places of Homer, Hesiod, Theocritus and Anacreon, "to shew he was able to imitate them, since he "understood so perfectly the Turn and Delicacy "of their Verse; and to live so regular and even a "Life that People left off insensibly, the suspecting "him of any Fraud: That he was on such a Foot "when Leo X. was chosen Pope: That he experienc'd the earliest Liberalities of this Pope, and was "promoted to the Archbishoprick of Ragusa: That he "presently set about canvassing to be made a Cardinal: That he quitted his Books to study Intrigues, in which he became so able a Man, "that the Pope astonish'd at this Change, used to "chide, and sometimes rally him: That nevertheless he persisted in this way, and took such "new Measures with those whom he saw in "greatest Favour at Court, that they assur'd him "of a Cardinal's Hat the first Promotion; but "that the Pope purposely disappointed them, "that he might have the Diversion of seeing how "Musurus would turn himself next: That Musurus "did not forget to furnish his House, to encrease "his Train, and even prepare a Speech of Thanks "which he intended to make use of: That not being included in the Promotion of thirty one, who "were added at one time to the sacred College, "his Virtue prov'd too weak to digest the Affront "he thought he had receiv'd: That he complain'd "of it as a Contempt of the whole Greek Nation "in his own Person, and to carry his Resentment "as far as he could, fell sick of a Dropsie and "died.

(D) Some Reflections upon this Narrative.] In the first place I can hardly imagine, that if it had been necessary to enlarge the publick School, Erasmus, who could not be ignorant of this, should say nothing of it in the Passage above cited (c), where he tells us at what Hour, and with what exactness Musurus read his Lectures; how great was the Diligence of an old Man of 70 Years of Age to be present at them, and how much it exceeded that of the young Students in the coldest Weather. II. I have already said (d), that Musurus quitting Padua, when the Venetian State was ravag'd by the Enemy in 1509, did not wholly withdraw himself from the Service of the Republick of Venice. I add, that according to Paulus Jovius, he writ his Panegyrick upon Plato before he went to Rome: Where then has Mr. Varillas found that this Poem was written in Rome? III. If this Poem be only one of the Epigrams Printed before the Works of Plato, as Vossius (e) and Mr. Baillet (f) affirms; it's an Exaggeration beyond all the Bounds of good Rhetorick, to say all that Mr Varillas has said of it. He had better have translated Paulus Jovius litterally, an Author who does not much stand in need of a Paraphrase, he himself is a Paraphrast upon his own Thoughts, and loves to enlarge and spin 'em out in a great number of affected Words. Now see what he says of this Elogium of Plato: (g) Est tot id poema, & in limine operum Platonis legitur, commendatione publica cum antiquis elegantiæ comparandum. But once more, if this Poem be nothing but an Epigram, what can be more Childish than the Remark of Paulus Jovius (h), that the War did not reduce Musurus to such a state of Idleness, but that he made Verses in the praise of Plato? Does not this plainly suppose, that a Professor who is forc'd to quit his Place, is not wholly given up to Idleness, if it appear that he has made an Epigram? I shan't conceal what Vossius (i) has said, that it was believ'd, that Leo X. promoted Musurus to the Archbishoprick, chiefly upon the account of this Epigram. Mind the Exhortation which I shall make below (k). IV. It's a poor way of proving one's Innocence as to the stealing of other Men's Thoughts, to alledge, that he leads a good Life; it never was observ'd that a Plagiary is less reclus in curia, with respect to Manners, than they who cite their Authors, and scorn to deck themselves with another's Feathers. It's doubtless a moral Fault, and a real Sin to pirate Authors; but it's a Sin of such a Nature, as prevails neither more nor less in one who is Sensual and Debauch'd, than in the Chaste and Sober. V. Musurus did not obtain the Mitre till 1517; and therefore it's not true, that he experienc'd the earliest Liberalities of Leo X. who was made Pope in 1513. VI. He was not promoted to the Archbishoprick of Ragusa, but to that of Malvasia in the Morea. Archiepiscopus Epidaurensis in Paulus Jovius, signifies neither the Old nor the New Ragusa; but is the same Bishoprick with that which others call Monembasiensis. Thus we find that a Friend (l) of Erasmus, writing to him about the Death of Musurus, makes use of these words, Marcus Musurus qui paulo (m) ante Monovasiensis Archiepiscopus esse caperat, hic autumno Romæ agens in communem abiit locum. Laurenzo Crasso (n), who knew nothing almost of Musurus but what he had read in Paulus Jovius, has taken Archiepiscopus Epidaurensis for Archbishop of Ragusa: And several others have been mistaken in this as well as he. VII. There was so little time between the Nomination of Musurus to the Archbishop of Malvasia, and the Promotion of the thirty one Cardinals, that what Mr. Varillas makes him do in this Interval, all his canvassing for Votes, and all the Measures he took to arrive at a Cardinal's Hat, can be nothing but pure Romance. Besides, Musurus would not have been the last who complain'd of the small Regard they had at Rome for the Greek Nation, when there was made a Promotion of 31 Cardinals. We have already shown, that Erasmus made this Complaint to Paul III. VIII. The Passage (p) I have cited proves, that Mr Varillas has misrepresented the Complaint that Musurus made. I grant, that an Historian may represent Persons according to what they think, altho' they do not openly express themselves. But this requires two Conditions; one is, that it be manifest, or at least very probable that they think such a thing; the second, that the Historian give notice, that the Party has not said so or so; but however has sufficiently discovered,

(c) In the Remark A.

(d) In the Remark B.

(c) Vossius de Poët. Græc. p. 84.

(f) Jugemens sur les Poëtes, tom 3. p. 1248. p. 118. Here's nothing of Musurus in the Edition of Plato at Frankfort in 1602. Translated by Ficinus, not at all of 1578. of Henry Stevens, Translated by de Serres.

(g) Jovius ubi supra.

(h) Inde exturbatus ita tranquillum otium quæsivit, ut Græco carmine divi Platonis laudes decantaret. Id. ib

(i) Ubi supra. Konig in relating this put Leo XI by a mistake for Leo X.

(k) In the Remark F

(l) Paul Bombasius His Letter among those of Erasmus, in the 23*d of the* 2*d Book, and dated the* 6*th of* December 1517.

(m) Paulus Jovius says to the same sense, Vix ostentatis mitræ insignibus expirarit.

(n) Istor. de' Poeti Greci (p) Quum sæpe quæreretur Græci generis neminem quisi probro gentis lectum fuisse, quando princeps in donanda purpura maxime liberalis, uno comitiali die supra triginta nationum omnium delecta capita galero perornasset Jovius's Elog. cap. 30 it (E) in the Supplement to Moreri. Muſurus has not been forgotten in the Catalogue of unfortunate Learned Men (EΔ). But he is repreſented in it as a Man free from all Ambition, that Dignities appear'd to him an unſupportable Burden. Thus you ſee how differently Authors ſpeak of him. He publiſh'd only a ſmall number of Greek Verſes (F), and ſome Prefaces in Proſe. The Publick is indebted to him for the firſt Edition (G) of Ariſtophanes and for that of Athenæus. We ſhall mention the Judgment Eraſmus (H) gave of him. Andreas Schottus (I) ought not to have aſcrib'd to him the Great Etymologicon. The Sieur Paulus Freherus has committed a groſs Fault (K).

cover'd, that he thinks it. Mr. Varillas has not obſerv'd the laſt of theſe two Conditions; he repreſents Muſurus not as complaining inwardly in his Heart, but as expreſſing his Complaint viva voce, and in expreſs Words, that the Greek Nation had been deſpis'd in his Perſon. He did not complain ſo, he only ſaid, that to create more than thirty Cardinals in one Day, without promoting any one Greek, was an Affront to that Nation. Here's nothing in theſe Words that concerns the Perſon of Muſurus: The Expreſſions may admit of this Senſe, that if any Greek had been promoted, Muſurus had not complain'd that he was forgotten. It plainly appears, you'll ſay, what his Thought was. I own it, but then we muſt ſay he thought ſo and ſo, and not that he ſaid it.

(E) Given it in the Supplement to Moreri.] I have nothing to ſay of it, more than that the Author of the Supplement has not corrected any thing in the Anecdotes of Mr. Varillas.

(EΔ) In the Catalogue of unfortunate Learned Men.] Theſe are the Words of Pierius Valerianus: (a) Neque Marci Muſuri ſortem quiſquam lætam dixerit, qui licet & Patavii, & Venetiis apud nobilitatem veſtram ſumma omnium commendatione, & gratia complures annos Græcas litteras docuiſſet, & doctrinæ nomine ab Leone Decimo Pontifice Maximo duplici flaminis honore decoratus, à Julio ejus Pontificis fratre tunc Cardinali ſacerdote, qui nunc eſt ſummus Pontifex, in amicitiam ſuſceptus magna omnium dilectione coleretur, neſcio qua tamen animi mæſtitia clam exulceratus, ut qui non modo non dignitatem ullam, aut beneficii commodum in eo vitæ colore duceret, qui hominum opinione judicatur ampliſſimus, ſed ſibi ſumma in libertate verſari ſolito ſummam etiam deformitatem, & miſeriam arbitraretur, in occultum ex ea cura incidit morbum, cujus nulli Medicorum cauſa cognita, interque tacitas anxietates, miſerrimaſque fortunæ ſuæ deplorationes diutiſſime vexatus expiravit.

(F) Only a ſmall number of Greek Verſes.] Theſe Words of Geſner appear to me remarkable: (b) Marcus Muſurus Cretenſis ſcripſit epigrammata aliquot, præcipuè in Græcos libros per Nicolaum Blaſtum Venetiis impreſſos circa annum 1500, quibus ipſe opinor corrigendis præfuit: item præfationes aliquas proſa, ut in Etymologicon Græcum, &c. They appear to me remarkable for two Reaſons; becauſe they give me an opportunity to exhort thoſe who have proper Libraries at their command, to declare in the firſt place, whether the Epigram upon Plato is to be found among the others which Muſurus publiſh'd towards the Year 1500; in the ſecond place, whether he was Corrector of Blaſtus's Printing Preſs at Venice, as Geſner believ'd. One might laugh heartily at Paulus Jovius, and ſome others, if it ſhould appear that this Epigram preceded the famous League of Cambray againſt the Republick of Venice.

I hop'd that the Exhortation juſt now read might procure me all the Information I ſtood in need of; and yet no body has had the goodneſs to come in to my Relief: However I have found ſomething to my purpoſe in a Book of Mr. Chevillier. There I find that our Muſurus was really Corrector of a Printing-Preſs, and that he (d) Corrected the great Etymologicon, which was Printed at Venice in Folio in 1499, by Zachary Calliergus, at the Expence of Nicolas Blaſtus. I have found alſo, "that "Aldus Manutius with whom he Corrected the Greek "Manuſcripts, and Revis'd the Printed Sheets, inſerted "his Elogy in theſe Words in the Greek Plato of 1513. "Muſurus Cretenſis, magno Vir judicio, magnâ "doctrinâ, qui hos Platonis Libros accuratè re- "cognovit, cum antiquiſſimis conferens Exempla- "ribus, ut unà mecum, quod ſemper facit, mul- "tum adjumenti afferret & Græcis & noſtris ho- "minibus." I was ſtill at a loſs as to the Poem wherein Muſurus made Plato's Elogium, but am ſet right by the good Offices (c) of Mr. Villemandi, who has taken the pains to conſult the Copy in the Library at Leyden. He writes to me, that the Plato Printed at Venice, in ædibus Aldi & Andreæ Soceri, in 1513, contains after the Epiſtle (f) Dedicatory, a Greek Poem of two Hundred Hexameter and Pentameter Verſes, which fill up four Pages, and written after Muſurus's ſtrain, being an Elogium of Plato. From hence we conclude, that Voſſius ought not to have call'd it an Epigram: However Paulus Jovius's Proof from it, that the Author was not idle after his Departure from Padua, is certainly ridiculous.

(G) For the firſt Edition of ——— and Athenæus.] We have already obſerv'd in the proper Place, that Caſaubon thought this Edition very defective: Yet Aldus Manucius who Printed it, praiſes the Care of Muſurus. Thus he ſpeaks: Muſurus noſter libros hos ſic accurate recenſuit collatos & cum multis exemplaribus, & cum epitome, ut infinitis pene in locis eos emendaverit, carminaque quæ veluti proſa in aliis legebantur, in ſua metra reſtituerit. Adde quod primus & ſecundus liber, qui in aliis deerant, ex epitome additi ſunt cum bona parte tertii libri: erat enim hic ſine capite, quo factum eſt, ut iidem ferè hi exiſtimari poſſint, qui erant integri, quoniam ea eſt materia, ut non multa ſubtrahi ex eis potuerint (b).

(H) The Judgment which Eraſmus gave of him.] See what I have already cited (i) out of one of his Letters; and add what here follows: (k) M. Muſurum propius novi, virum inſigniter eruditum in omni diſciplinarum genere, in carmine ſubobſcurum & affectatum: oratione proſa præter unam alteramve præfationem nihil, quod ſciam, reliquit. Mirabar hominem Græcum tantum ſcire Latine. Et hunc fortuna retinuit à Muſis, dum Leonis favore Romam accitus incipit Archiepiſcopus eſſe, fato præreptus eſt. Theſe Words incline us to believe, that Muſurus renounc'd the Profeſſion of Letters from the time when Leo X. did him the favour to invite him to Rome: Yet 'tis certain that he was Profeſſor at Rome, as appears by theſe Verſes:

Ce (l) mien Pere, Angevin, gentilhomme de race,
L'un des premiers François qui les Muſes embraſſe,
D'ignorance ennemi, deſireux de ſçavoir,
Paſſant torrens & monts juſqu'a Rome alla voir
MUSURE Candiot: qu'il ouit pour apprendre
Le Grec des vieux auteurs, & pour docte s'y rendre:
Où ſi bien travailla, que dedans quelques ans
Il ſe fit admirer, & des plus ſuffiſans.

(I) Andreas Schottus ought not to have aſcrib'd to him the great Etymologicon.] Mr. Menage (m) was he who clear'd this Miſtake, and refuted it by obſerving that Euſtathius has cited this Etymologicon. This deſerv'd the Parentheſis I am now to ſet down. Auctor magni Etymologici quiſquis tandem ille ſit (Nicam eſſe ſcribit amicus noſter Iſaacus Voſſius in notis ad Pomponium Melam: quod an verum ſit neſcio: certe falſum eſſe ſcio, quod vir doctiſſimus Andreas Schottus, in præfatione ad proverbia Græcorum, exiſtimabat, auctorem hujus libri eſſe Marcum Muſurum, ſiquidem ab Euſtathio Magnum Etymologicon laudatur Auctor, in quam Etymologici conditorem Academia, & Academum & Ecademum fuiſſe dictum ſcribit.

(K) Paulus Freherus has committed a groſs Fault.] He has not only rank'd Muſurus in the number of Cardinals, but has built his Aſſertion on the Teſtimony of Paulus Jovius. He cites this Author alone, and ſets down his Words, which plainly ſhew, that Muſurus died of Grief, at his not obtaining the Purple. And yet Paulus Freherus ſays (n), Vix deguſtata Cardinalatus dignitate Romæ exſpirarit.

(a) Pier. Valer. de literat. infelicit. l. 1. p. 11.

(b) Geſner in Biblio. fol. 495. verſo.

(d) Chevillier, origine de l'imprimerie de Paris p. 194.

(c) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des lettres, Oct. 1685. art. 5. & Auguſt 1686. art. 6.

(f) Addreſſ to Leo X.

(b) Aldus in præfat. Athenæi.

(i) Above in Remark A.

(k) Eraſm in Ciceronian.

(l) It's Antony de Baif who ſpeaks of Lazarus de Baif, his Father, in a letter to Charles IX. it's before his Works Printed at Paris in 1573. in 8.

(m) Notis ad Diog. Laertium l. 3. n. 7. p. 141.

(n) In Theatro viror. erudit. p. 25.

A N
Hiſtorical and Critical
DICTIONARY.

N.

NANNIUS † (JOHN) a famous Dominican Monk, commonly call'd Annius Viterbienſis, was raiſed to the degree of Maſter of the Sacred Palace in the Year 1499. He died on the 13th of November 1502, at the age of ſeventy Years β. The City of Viterbo was ſo proud of being the Place of his Nativity, that in the Year 1618 * they repair'd his Epitaph. He was one that wanted no Learning according to the time he liv'd in. He underſtood the Oriental Languages ‡, and wrote Commentaries on the Scriptures ⸸. He was a long time Profeſſor of Divinity: But nothing brought him ſo much into the Eye and Vogue of the World, as his Edition (A) of ſome very ancient Authors whoſe Works were ſuppos'd to have been loſt. 'Tis true, almoſt all the (B) Learned have but little valu'd this Edition, as looking upon it to be ſuppoſititious; of which we are now more than ever convinc'd; for although there have been from time to time certain Authors (C) that have defended him, yet β He was not therefore born in the Year 1437, as Moreri aſſures us, after Voſſius de Hiſt. Lat. pag. 609.

† He is ſo nam'd in his Epitaph. Altamura in Bibliotheca Dominican. p. 223.

* Altamura ubi ſupra.

‡ Leand. Albert. in Deſcripe. Italiæ, pag. m. 115.

⸸ See the Catalogue of 'em in the Epitomy of Geſner's Bibliotheque.

(a) See the Epiſtle Dedicatory of his Queſtions, pag. 594: Edition of Antwerp 1552 in 8vo.

(b) Lib. 7. de Salomo. cap. 27. Numb. 4. apud Theophil. Raynaud. de malis & bonis libris n. 269. pag. m 164.

(c) Entituled Hiſpaniæ Bibliotheca. See there, pag. 354, &c.

(d) Schottus in Hiſpaniæ Bibliotheca, pag. 355.

(e) Printed in the Year 1557. See Bibliotheca Hiſpan. Script. of Nicolao Antonio. T. 1. pag. 398.

(f) The Hiſtory of Hiſtories. p. 209.

(g) In Antiquitatibus Veronenſibus.

(h) In Ceſoraph. Pitanis, p. 5. This Work was printed in the Year 1681.

(i) His Name is Francis Sparaverius, a Native of Verona.

(k) De Hiſt. Latinis, p 609.

(l) In Bibliotheca Dominic.

(m) Ubi ſupra.

(n) Sigonius de antiquo jure Italiæ. L. 1. c. 25. fol. m. 54 verſo.

(o) The Italian Journal of the 28*th of* Feb. 1674, mentions it.

(p) See the Italian Journal of the 26*th of* January 1675.

(q) See the 8*th* Italian Journal of the Year 1678, p. 121.

(A) His Edition of ſome very ancient Authors.) Here follows a Liſt of the Pieces contain'd in this Collection of Annius: Archilochi de temporibus Epitome lib. I. Xenophontis de Æquivocis lib. I. Beroſi Babylonici de Antiquitatibus Italiæ ac totius orbis lib. V. Manethonis Egyptii ſupplementa ad Beroſum lib. I. Metaſthenis Perſæ, de judicio temporum, & Annalibus Perſarum lib. I. Philonis Hebræi de temporibus lib. II. Joannis Annii de primis temporibus, & quatuor ac viginti regibus Hiſpaniæ, & ejus antiquitate lib. I. Ejuſdem de antiquitate & rebus Ethruriæ lib. I. Ejuſdem Commentariorum in Propertium de Vertumno ſive Jano lib. I. Q. Fabii Pictoris de aureo ſæculo, & origine urbis Romæ lib. II. Myſili Lesbii de origine Italiæ, ac Turrheniæ lib. I. M. Catonis fragmenta de originibus lib. I. Antonini Pii Cæſarus Auguſti Itinerarium lib. I. C. Sempronii de Chorographia ſive deſcriptione Italiæ lib. I. Joannis Annii de Etruſca ſimul & Italica Chronographia lib. I. Ejuſdem Quæſtiones de Thuſcia lib. I. Cl. Marii Arctii, Patricii Syracuſani de ſitu inſulæ Siciliæ lib. I. Ejuſdem Dialogus in quo Hiſpania deſcribitur. The firſt Edition of this Work was publiſh'd at Rome by Eucharius Silber in 1498. The ſecond at Venice the ſame Year by Bernardino Veneto; but without our Author's Commentaries. As for other Editions, there were ſeveral publiſh'd afterwards in divers Places. I make uſe of that of Antwerp. publiſh'd in 1552 in 8vo. The Author dedicated thoſe Books to Ferdinand and Iſabella, becauſe, he tells them, they were recovered at the time Their Majeſties ſubdued the Kingdom of Granada. He pretends to have found them at Mantua, when (a) he was there with his Patron Paul de Campo Fulgoſo Cardinal of St Sixtus. This Work is not divided into 27 Books, as Moreri will have it, but into 17; which however may not be Moreri's Fault, but his Printers.

(B) Almoſt all the Learned have but little valu'd.] The Article Annius of Viterbo in Voſſius, is very well fill'd, and Mr Moreri has not a little profited by it; whence it comes, that you find in his Dictionary ſo ample and curious an Account of this Dominican. You meet alſo there with the Names of ſeveral Learned Men that have confuted him; but one would do well to have recourſe to Voſſius himſelf, who not only names divers other Criticks, but quotes their Words. Pineda (b) alſo names ſeveral. Andrew Schot has inſerted in one (c) of his Books two learned Digreſſions: Firſt, a ſhort Account of the Antiquities of Antwerp, publiſh'd by Goropius Becanus; and, ſecondly, a Tranſlation of the Cenſure Gaſpar Barreiros publiſh'd upon Annius. This Author printed his Book firſt at Rome (d) in Latin, and afterwards in his Mother-Tongue, the Portugueſe. This Cenſure is inſerted, according to the Latin Edition, in the Collection of Annius's Works, printed in Germany by the Commelins; whereas Andrew Schot has given it us from the Portugueſe, which he tranſlated himſelf into Latin. Don Nicolas Antonio did not know that Gaſpar Barreiros had publiſh'd this Cenſure in Latin; he ſpeaks only of the Portugueſe Edition (e). Barreiros and Goropius Becanus ſhow the Forgery of Annius plainly. La Popeliniere has alſo written (f) againſt this Author, but I know not whether his Work was ever publiſh'd. The learned Onuphrius Panvinius, (g) declar'd openly againſt theſe Writings; and there appeared at Bologna, in the Year 1638, a Letter of John Baptiſt Aguchi, wherein theſe pretended antient Authors are refuted. Father Noris (h) has alſo quoted a Perſon, (i) who had lately written againſt this Work of Annius. I think Volaterran and Sabellicus were the firſt that declar'd they look'd upon theſe Authors to be ſpurious.

(C) Certain Authors that have defended him.] When I ſay the greateſt part of the Learned have look'd upon theſe Pieces of Annius as ſpurious, I do not deny, but there have been ſeveral famous Authors who have thought them Authentick. Voſſius (k) names among theſe laſt Leander Alberti, Nauclerus, Driedo, Valerius Anſelmus, Joannes Lucidus, Medina, and Sixtus Senenſis; nay, if we believe Altamura (l), Pineda ought alſo to be join'd with them: But Theophilus Rainaud (m) reckons him among thoſe that have rejected the Writers of Annius. I find Albert Krantz, and even Sigonius, have eſteemed theſe Writers Authentick. Here follows a Paſſage of Sigonius: (n) Quibus Epitomis (Caronis) meritò tantam ego tribuo auctoritatem, quantam incorruptis veteribus monumentis meritò tribuendam eſſe. An Italian Dominican, one Tomaſo Mazza, publiſh'd (o) a Folio at Verona in the Year 1573, whoſe Title was, Apologia per Frate Gioanni Annio Viterbeſe. His principal Intent was to prove, that if there were any Falſity in that Publication, it was not to be imputed to Annius: But he goes farther, and maintains thoſe Writings were Authentick; nay, he endeavours to anſwer all the Objections againſt them. This Apology having been criticized, Father Macedo fell upon the Critick, not (p) with a Deſign to maintain that the Beroſus, &c. publiſh'd by Annius, was the true Beroſus, but to ſhow that Annius had not forg'd thoſe Manuſcripts. A more modern Apologiſt pretends to prove both the one and the other: His Name is Didimus Rapalligerus Livianus. He publiſh'd at Verona in the Year 1678, a Work in Folio, Entituled, (q) I Gothi illuſtrati; ovvero Iſtoria de i Gothi antichi.

yet for the moſt part, even the Dominicans have acknowledged his Works to be ſpurious. They content themſelves with affirming, that their Annius was an honeſt Man, and not an (D) Impoſtor, as he is commonly ſaid to be. A Perſon that had ſeen him ſaid †, he was a Fool.

† Scaligerana voce Annius.

NAOGEORGUS ‡ (THOMAS) a Native of Straubingen in Bavaria, liv'd in the XVI Century. He compos'd divers Latin (X) Verſes, which did not pleaſe the Romans Catholicks, becauſe they were ſevere Satyrs againſt them. A Sorbon (Y) Doctor, who in the Year 1670, publiſh'd ſome Treatiſes againſt the Rejoycings of the Twelfth-Day, obſerves that Naogeorgus had not omitted to reproach the Catholicks with Superſtitions and Exceſſes at that Feaſt. The German Name of this Author was * Kirchmaier. He was one that underſtood Greek indifferently well (Y). He was born ‡ in the Year 1511, and dy'd in the Year 1578, or thereabouts.

‡ And not Naogeorgius, as Borrichius calls him; nor Neageorgius, as Konig.

One of his Dramatick Pieces was repreſented at Heidelberg under ſo benign a Conſtellation, that, as it is ſaid, the Heavens declar'd in (Z) its Favour. This Paſſage deſerves to be related.

NAPLES (JOAN I. Queen of) deſcended from (A) Charles of Anjou Brother to St.

---

antichi. In this Piece he gers together all the reaſons he can to prove that the Writers which Annius publiſhed were Authentick, and that this Dominican by no means invented them. 'Tis very well known, ſays he, Beroſus was given him at Genoa, by Father George of Armenia a Dominican; and that he had all the reſt, except Manetho, from William of Mantua. Now, though we know not whence he had Manetho, yet ought we not to believe he forg'd it: His Candour in all other Reſpects ought to ſecure him againſt this Cenſure. As to thoſe who accuſe him of trumping up Marble Tables, pretending them to be antick though he had forg'd them, this Author defends him, ſhewing that Acculation is calumnious; ſome of theſe Tables having been diſcovered before Annius's Birth, and others by Perſons that preſented them to Pope Alexander VI. (a) E tacciato per impoſtore d' alcune tavole di marmo dalle quali diede in luce la ſpiegazione. Se però ſi deve ponderare la verità, con ſodi argomenti queſt' Autore libera dall' impoſture de ſuoi Avverſarii Annio, con provar evidentemente eſſer le due tavole da lui chiamate Libiſcille dal luogo, ove furono trovate, ſtate diſſepellite molto tempo avanti che Annio naſceſſe..... E in quanto alle due Cibelarie, e la Longobarica, furono da altri trovate e preſentate ad Aleſſandro VI. per tacere dell' Oſiriana che avanti che naſceſſe Annio, fu reſa alla luce.

(a) Giornale viii. de Letterati 1678, pag 122.

(D) And that Annius was not an Impoſtor.] I have already mentioned thoſe Perſons that endeavour'd to defend him, and refer my Reader to the Appendix of (b) Altamura, where he will meet with the names of divers other Apologiſts. I was ſurpriz'd to find there that Altamura was not acquainted with any Author before Petrus a Valleclauſa that had accus'd Annius of Viterbo of Impoſture: But let us take notice, that this Petrus a Valleclauſa, Author of a Book de Immunitate Cyriacorum a Cenſuris, was no other than Theophilus Rainaud. Now it is certain, that before him an infinite number of Authors had accus'd Annius of Impoſture: See in Moreri the Paſſage of Antonius Auguſtinus. That which is pleaſant is, that in a certain Book, where Theophilus Rainaud was not in an ill humour with the Dominicans, as when he conceal'd himſelf under the name of Petrus a Valleclauſa, he declares, that conſidering the Profeſſion of John Annius, he was inclinable (c) to believe him innocent. Let us conclude with the Words of a Lutheran, who believed the Authors which Annius publiſh'd, were Authentick; and, that if there were any faults found in them, they were rather to be imputed to the Ignorance or Malice of the Copyers, than to this Monk. Quod enim, ſays he (d), per Deum immortalem, prodigium fuerit clauſtralem illum & minime tam profunde doctum Monachum talia comminiſci poſſe? Ais multa ineſſe ficta, minime pro iis auctoribus. Nec nos negamus interpolatos univerſos illos auctores, ruptos, fractos, minime bona aut fide aut intelligentia tranſlatos, tamen antiquitus ex legitimis veriſque auctoribus excerptos, talia argumenta ſunt, ut quæ contra aſſeruntur omnia evanelcant. Vel unum Catonem mihi vide. Cerſe, recenſe, damna etiam ut libet, videbis tamen veri illius Catonis, & fateberis etiam, ingenium ſtilumque hic ſupereſſe, quos mentiri aut fingere non fuit talium hominum.

(b) Appendix Bibliothecæ Dominic. pag. 527.

(c) Fortaſſis tamen ab alio quopiam impoſitum eſt ipſi Annio, quem doli expertem fuiſſe malo exiſtimare, cum Religioſum inſtituerum Prædicatorum ſit profeſſus. Th. Raynaudus de malis ac bonis libris, n. 269, pag. m. 164.

(d) Earthius in Animadverſionibus ad Gallum. pag. 62.

(X) He compos'd divers Latin Verſes.] The moſt famous of his Poems was that entituled Bellum Papiſticum. He publiſh'd it in the Year 1553, and dedicated it to Philip Landgrave of Heſſe: It is in Hexameter Verſe, and divided into four Books. The Author reſided at Baſil when he printed it. He compos'd alſo divers Tragedies which may be ſtil'd Controverſial: Such is that entituled Pammachius, which he dedicated to Cranmer Archbiſhop of Canterbury. The Prologue begins with theſe four Verſes:

Quid adferamus ſi vacat cognoſcere
Spectatores, paucis exponam ſingula:
Pammachium, qui Romanus eſt Epiſcopus,
Evangelicæ doctrinæ cepit tædium.

It came out in the Year 1537: Such another is this that follows, (e) viz. Incendia, ſive Pyrgopolinices tragœdia, nefanda quorundam Papiſtarum facinora exponens. His Mercator (f) is of the ſame kind; whoſe Title runs thus, Mercator, ſeu judicium in qua (Tragœdia) in concilio ponuntur Apoſtolica & Papiſtica doctrina, quantum utraque in conſcientiæ certamine valeat & efficiat, & quis utriuſque futurus ſit exitus. He (g) alſo compos'd five Books of Satyrs, An abridgment of Eccleſiaſtical Tenets, and ſome other Poems.

(e) Publiſh'd at Wittemberg in the Year 1538.

(f) Publiſh'd in the Year 1539.

(g) See Borrichius de Poetis. pag. 134; or rather the Epitomy of Gesner's Bibliotheque.

(Y) He underſtood Greek indifferently well.] He tranſlated into Latin divers Tracts of Plutarch, Dion Chryſoſtom, and the Letters of Syneſius.

(Z) That the Heavens declar'd in its Favour. This Paſſage deſerves, &c.] This Dramatick Piece of Naogeorgus is entitled Haman. It was repreſented at Heidelberg on the 24th of Auguſt: The Elector's Scholars (h) were the Actors in it. A Theatre was erected for that purpoſe in a Court of the Monaſtery of the Cordeliers. There was ſo great an Appearance of much Rain while the Actors were preparing themſelves, that it was thought it could not be play'd: But all of a ſudden the Sky clear'd up, the Sun appear'd; which laſted not only for a moment, but during all the time of the Repreſentation. (i) Ibi ſubito qui poſt nubila latuerat ſol, quaſi ad ſpectaculum venit, tus videns prorupit, nec uſque dum ludi exacti eſſent vel minimæ nubeculæ locum conceſſit. Yet the Play was no ſooner over than the Air began to be cloudy again; and ſo remain'd for great part of the Winter (k). Mr. Fabricius, Profeſſor at Heidelberg, relates this in a Diſſertation, wherein he maintains that a good uſe may be made of Stage-plays. This he oppos'd to a certain popular Report, that as often as Plays were acted, a Tempeſt was ready to riſe. Quoniam nuper inaudivi te nescio quas jactare obſervationes de tempeſtatibus quoties Comœdiæ edebantur ex improviſo obortis, operæ pretium fuerit brevem tibi narrare hiſtoriolam qua & imaginaria tua experientia confutetur, & quid olim hic factum ſit edoceatis. From this Remark, we learn that thoſe who condemn any Practice, are uſed to ſuppoſe that Heaven declares in their Favour: This they eaſily make People believe; and thereby keep their Minds in Slavery. But the beſt way would be to make them prove their Aſſertions, or elſe oppoſe them with contrary Obſervations.

(h) Frederick the Prous.

(i) Joannes Ludovicus Fabricius de Ludis ſcenis, pag. 101.

(k) Ipſa vero hora qua ſpectatores domum redierant redierunt & nimbi, nec abillo die (erat autem xxiv. Auguſti) in adultam uſque hiemem ceſſarunt. Id. ibid.

(A) Daughter of Charles of Anjou, Brother to St. Lewis.] Charles of Anjou created King of Naples and Sicily by the Pope in the Year 1266, did not obtain a peaceable Poſſeſſion of that Kingdom before the Defeats (l) of Manfred, and (m) Conradin. He died in the Year 1285. Charles the Lame his Son, ſucceeded him, and was married to Mary of Hungary, Siſter and Heireſs of Uladiſlaus IV. King of Hungary. From this Marriage came ſeveral Children: The eldeſt known by the name of Charles Martel was King of Hungary: The ſecond named Robert was King of Naples: The third nam'd Philip, founded the Branch of the Princes of Taranto: And the fourth, nam'd John, founded that of the Dukes of Durazzo. Robert King of Naples was Father to Charles Duke of Calabria, who died the 10th of November 1328. and who had two Daughters, viz. Joan, who is the Subject of this Article, and Mary married

(l) The 26*th of February* 1266. Anſelm Hiſt. Genealog. p. 336.

(m) The 23*d of* Auguſt 1268. Id. ibid.

St. Lewis King of France succeded King Robert her Grandfather in the Year 1343. She was (B) already married to her Cousin Andrew, Son to Charles King of Hungary. They reigned together three Years *; at the end of which, 'tis said, she caus'd him to be strangled; And, if we believe the scandalous Chronicle, the Cause was, because he was not sufficiently (C) provided for her. She had recourse in a short time (D) to a second Marriage, marrying Lewis † Son of Philip Prince of Taranto: But she did not peaceably enjoy ried to Charles of Durazzo her Cousin. Robert being then Grandfather to Joan bequeath'd her his Kingdom, and died at Naples the 19th of January in the Year 1343 (a). Pandolphus Collenuccio (b) is deceiv'd, where he says, that Charles Duke of Calabria, left three Daughters. Tomaso Costo (c) has mended this fault in his Supplement to the History of that Author.

(B) She was already married to Andrew.] Here follows a new Error of Collenuccio: He pretends (d), that Joan married Andrew after the Death of Robert, and that purely to comply with the Will of her deceased Grandfather; but he should have said that Robert, a little after the Death of the Duke of Calabria, thought of marrying his Grand-daughter to one of the Sons of Charobert King of Hungary, his Nephew. The Proposal he made to the King of Hungary was accepted. Charobert went to the Kingdom of Naples in the Year 1333, with Andrew his second Son, aged about seven Years. The Nuptials were solemniz'd at Naples with great Pomp on the 26th of September 1333. The Year following the King of Hungary return'd home, leaving his Son at Naples with King Robert (e). I never yet read when the Marriage was consummated, perhaps immediately, which might be the Cause of that Weakness which was so fatal to the Husband. I have read in an Italian Author, that he was but seven Years old when he married the Princess Joan: Yet I find in Father Anselm (f), that he was born the 30th of November 1327; then he must hardly be six Years old at the time of his Marriage. There is great likelihood he consummated it betimes; and having an Italian Wife, something elder than he, and consequently more ripe for Marriage, it could not be expected that he should perform the Duties of Matrimony without weakning himself; which gave occasion to those Reproaches of Effeminacy, which we shall speak of in the following Remark. Spondanus relates, that Queen Joan began to despise her Husband, because, being but 19 Years of Age, he could not content her. (g) Sunt porro qui dicant Joannam in contemptum viri devenisse, tum ob subbarbaros mores Hungariæ, tum ob ignaviam, & quod usu Veneris libidini ejus non sufficeret adolescens tunc annorum undeviginti. If she complain'd of him when he was 19 Years (h) old, could she be satisfied with him when he was but fifteen? However it be, they liv'd but ill together in the Year 1343. The Queen of Hungary, Mother to Andrew, made a Journey to Italy this same Year; and return'd much dissatisfied with the Behaviour of her Daughter-in-Law, and the unfortunate Condition she found her Son in. (i) Elizabeth Regina mater Ludovici visitavit sedem Apostolicam, transivit per Apuliam, cui fuit obvius Andreæ filius suus cum Johanna Regina conjuge sua: & ex Neapoli veniens fuit valde honorata etiam a populo Romano. Ex Neapoli redut in Hungariam male contenta de moribus Johannæ nurus suæ, quam vidit male tractare Andream filium suum in regno Apuliæ.

(C) Not sufficiently provided for her.] Let us see how Brantome relates this. "(k) Joan eldest Daughter (l) of King Robert... had for her first Husband her Cousin-German (m) Andrew; with whom having reigned some time, she began at length to be disgusted at him; so both being one Night in the City of Aversa, he being absent, she sent for him, under pretence of discoursing him about some Affairs that had newly happened: He going to know her pleasure, and coming under a Beam, was taken and hang'd by Order from the Queen. Most People agree this was occasion'd by his not being able to satisfie her inordinate Lust, though he were young, brisk, and in good Health. It has also been reported, both at Naples and elsewhere, that the same Lady making one Day a Gold string of a more than ordinary size, her Husband Andrew ask'd her what she was making it for; she answer'd, To hang him. It seems she made so little account of him, that she car'd not what she said to him; whilst he, poor Man, took no notice of her Threats; yet the Event shew'd she was as good as her Word." Montagne, speaking against those who complain that their Wives are not satisfied with them, among other things, says, (n) Inconstancy is peradventure, more pardonable in them than in us: They may allege, with us, a common Inclination to Variety and Novelty, and even without us, that they purchase a Pig in a Poke. Joan Queen of Naples, caus'd her first Husband, Andrew, to be strangled at the Grates of her Window, with a Gold and Silk String twisted with her own Hand, because in the Matrimonial Exercise, she did not find his Shape, Beauty, Youth and Disposition, answer the Expectation she had conceived of them. A little after he quotes some Verses out of (o) Martial, which he thought proper to be attributed to this Princess; yet he does not say all that a more modern Author reports of her. Here follow the Words of this Modern: "(p) Andrew King of Naples, never saw either the rising or setting of the Sun: That Planet always found him in Bed; He went to Bed betimes, and always rose late. Moreover, his Wife had but little Kindness for him, because he was not a good Precker, says Michael Montagne, Book III.„ Observe, Brantome has only translated Pandolphus Collenuccio, whose Words are these: (q) La cagione per molti fu che fu, perche detto Andreasso, anch'esso fusse molto giovene, non era si bene sufficiente alle opere veneree, come lo sfrenato appetito della Regina haveria voluto. Tomaso Costo (r) observes, that Collenuccio is too spiteful, and too little vers'd in Affairs to deserve Credit. He adds, 1. That Villani the Florentine, has not related this Story of the Death of Andrew, but on the Report of an Hungarian, who was then in the Service of that unfortunate Prince; 2. That Petrarch has given a Description exceedingly disadvantageous of the Hungarian Barons, who govern'd the Kingdom under Andrew. 3. If we join this with the Hatred they had for Queen Joan, we shall easily conceive how much the Relation of Villani may be suspected of Falsity. 4. That Boccacio has not said that this Queen was concern'd in that Execution. (s) Il Boccacio ne'casi de gli huomini illustri da tutta la colpa a congiunti, e niente alla Reina. Mr Mezerai seems to me to have related this Story more faithfully. "(t) Andrew not "being over-well lik'd by Joan, and having caus'd "himself to be crown'd King by the Pope, as pretending the Kingdom belong'd to him; some Conspirators took him away from her in the Night-time, and "hang'd him at a Window. Charles Prince of Durazzo, who was also of the Blood of the Kings of Sicily, and who had married Mary Sister to Joan, "was the chief Counsellor and Author of this infamous Action: Joan her self was not wholly innocent. She might cry if she would, but her Tears "and Lamentations justify'd her yet less than her entering Marriage with Lewis her Cousin-German, a fine "Prince, and agreeable to her Appetite."

(D) She had recourse in a short time to a second Marriage.] King Andrew was hang'd the 18th of September 1346. Queen Joan was great with Child, and brought to Bed of a (u) Son the 26th of December following: She married her second Husband the 20th of August 1347 (w). This is according to the Calculation of Tomaso Costo. He does not make the Widowhood of the Queen to last quite a Year. But he has ill observ'd the Year of King Andrew's Death, which makes me wonder, that in Cases of this Nature, Historians are not more exact as to the Circumstance of time. Villani assures us (x), that King Andrew was strangled the 18th of September 1346. They that pretend that this Prince (y) was 19 Years old, and that he liv'd three Years (z), with his Wife after the Death of Robert, ought to suppose that he dy'd in the Year 1346: It is nevertheless certain, he was hanged in the Year 1345: Of which this is a demonstrative Proof. Queen Joan his Widow, some few Days before her lying in, (aa) requested the Pope to stand Godfather to her Child; to which his Holiness sent her a favourable Answer (bb), dated from Avignon the first day of February, in the fourth Year of his Pontificat. Now he was created Pope the 7th of May 1342: His answer must then have been made the 1st of February 1346; and consequently this Princess, who was brought to Bed on Christmas-Day, as it appears by another Letter

* Felinus Sandeus, Epitome de Regibus Sicilia. pag. 34. See the Remark D.

† Felinus Sandeus, ubi supra.

(a) Taken out of Father Anselm's Genealogical History of the House of France. Chap. 14.

(b) Pandolfo Collenuccio, Hist. del Regno di Napoli lib. 5. fol. m. 82. verso.

(c) Tomaso Costo Cittadino Napolitano Annotazioni e Supplementi. fol. m. 111.

(d) Collenuccio, ib.

(e) Tomaso Costo, ib. fol. 108. verso. He quotes Michael Ricci, and the two Johns Villani, the Neapolitan, and the Florentine.

(f) General Hist. of the House of France, p. 343.

(g) Spondanus ad Ann. 1345. n. 4.

(h) Note, he never arrived at this Age.

(i) Felinus Sandeus, Epitome de Regibus Siciliæ, p. 69. Spondanus speaks of this Voyage ad An. 1343. n. 6. quoting Thurof. Par 3. Cap. 4. Bonfin. 2. dec. 10.

(k) Brantome's Lives of Illustrious Women, p. 347.

(l) He should have said Grand-daughter.

(m) He is mistaken, he should have said they were Cousins descended from Cousin-Germans.

(n) Montagne's Essays, Book pag. m. 179.

(o) Deinde experta laras, maque didoque familiam loro Inguina, nec lassa stare coacta manu, Deferat umbelles thalamos, mollemque maritum. Martial Epigr. 87, lib. 7.

(p) Cæsar de Rochetort his general and curious Dictionary, pag. 130. Col. 1.

(q) Collenuccio, lib. 5. fol. 82 Edition of Venice, 1601 in 4o.

(r) ubi supra, fol. 111.

(s) Ibid.

(t) Mezerai's Chronological Abridgment. Tom. 3. p. 30.

(u) He called an Infant in Hungary, whither King Lewis, Brother of Andrew, had sent him. Tomaso Costo, ib. fol 112. verso.

(w) Taken out of Tomaso Costo. Ibid. fol. 112.

(x) Apud Tomaso ubi supra, fol. 111.

(y) See above, Col. 1. Letter g.

(z) The Father of this Article (see the Lives of those Popes that have resided at Avignon, published by Mr Baluze; Printed at Paris in 1693. Tom. 2. pag. 389.

(aa) It is related by Mr Baluze, Ibid.

Spondanus. (bb) See Felinus Sandeus quoted in the Body of this Article.

ter

enjoy the Happineſs of her ſecond Marriage: For Lewis King of Hungary, being deſirous to revenge the Death of his Brother Andrew, marched into the Kingdom of Naples with a conſiderable Army in the Year 1348, and forc'd the Queen to ſave her ſelf into † Provence, where ß ſhe ſold Avignon to the Pope for a very inconſiderable Sum. Her Huſband, who follow'd her, did not obſerve a neceſſary (E) Moderation in his Careſſes; for he thereby ruin'd his Health, and died ſuddenly, if we may believe Collenuccio: But it is certain this Author went too far; for the ſecond Marriage of Joan laſted 15 years. She * was recalled into her Kingdom ſo ſoon as the King of Hungary, who had ſubdued Naples in few Days, was return'd home; who, after having hang'd Charles of Durazzo ‡, chief Promoter of the Death of Andrew, and who was violently ſuſpected to be the Queen's Gallant, ſet forward for his own Country. This Princeſs, accompanied by her Huſband, re-enter'd Naples in the Month of Auguſt 1348, and recover'd part of her Towns; but the King of Hungary returning in the Year 1350, put her to ſome ſtraits. At length the Pope ended this War to the Advantage of Joan: For he oblig'd the King of Hungary to leave her in quiet Poſſeſſion of her Dominions: Both ſhe and her Husband were afterwards crown'd at Naples on Whitſunday 1352 ‖. Having loſt her Huſband in the Year 1362, ſhe quickly married again to the Infant of Majorca, whoſe Head ſhe caus'd to be cut off (F) ſo ſoon as ſhe came to know he had a Miſtriſs. At length in the Year 1376, ſhe married again to a German Prince; with whom ſhe lived peaceably till ſuch time as Charles of Durazzo, General of the Hungarian Troops, conquer'd and took him Priſoner: ſoon after which ſhe was forc'd to ſurrender her ſelf. Some ſay this Conqueror had her (G) ſtrangled, but others will have it ſhe was ſtifled with a Cuſhion. This was † Id. ib.

ß Bouche's Hiſt. of Provence.

* Tomaſo Coſto, in his Supplements to Collenuccio. fol. 113, &c.

‡ Era ſtato conſapevole & conſenziente alla morte d' Andreaſſo, e era opinione che anchor' egli haveſſe havuto comercio venereo con la Regina. Pandolfo Collenuccio, Hiſtoria del Regno di Napoli. lib. 5. fol. m. 83.

‖ Id. ibid.

(cc) It is related, ib. pag. 690.

(a) Brantome ubi ſupra pag. 348. & 349.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 353.

ter (cc) from the ſame Pope, lay down the 25th of December 1345: Her Husband was not therefore hanged in 1340. See the Acts and the Lives of the Popes that reſided at Avignon; which Mr Baluze has publiſh'd and embelliſh'd with very fine Notes.

(E) A neceſſary Moderation in his Careſſes.] (a) "She married ſoon after one of her Couſins, Son "to the Prince of Taranto, whom ſhe had had a "Kindneſs for during her Husband's Life: She us'd "him well, and liv'd with him in great Affection "three Years; but at length he dy'd, exhauſted, as "'twas thought, by the many amorous Combats he had "perform'd in her Service." The Author from whom I had theſe Words declares himſelf an Apologiſt for the Queen on this Head; and ſee after what manner he does it: (b) As for her Couſin, Son of the Prince of Taranto, who died for having exhauſted himſelf in her Service, She could not help it; for who can hinder a Man from getting drunk with his own Wine? And then if Wine gives its Owner a mad Fit, it is not to be blam'd, but the Drinker of it. Without all doubt the great Beauty of this Queen, her Addreſs, her Majeſty, her winning Behaviour, her charming Enticements, her bewitching Embraces, and ſoft Touches, were more than ſufficient to make this young Man endeavour at performing more than Nature would allow: But ſtill this Effort was owing to him, and not to her; for in theſe caſes a Man is not to be forc'd, not even with a Cudgel, as one may ſay; for all muſt come from the Humour of the Perſon, and his Ability, but above all from an ardent Deſire. And, ſuppoſe it were not ſo, how could he better die, than in the Service of his Queen and Lady, in ſhowing what an ardent Affection he bore her, ſince he ſpar'd neither Pains, Vigour nor Violence to content her; and choſe rather prodigally to expoſe his Life, than not give her the utmoſt Satisfaction. We read how Medor and Claridan, when they ſo furiouſly aſſaulted the Camp of Charlemagne, kill'd a certain Lord, one Albret, in his Miſtriſs's Arms, where he had ſlept that Night ſo deliciouſly, that every one could not but envy his Death: How much more then ought this Prince to be envied, who dy'd ſo happily in the Service and ſoft Embraces of his Queen, his Wife and Couſin. Collenuccio (c) Remarks, that Lewis liv'd not above three Years after his Marriage. Da tre anni ſtette il Re Lodovico Tarentino in ſignoria, e ellenuato per lo inordinato e frequente uſo delle coſe veneree con la Regina, che di quella ſola era vaga, finalmente morì; ne molto ſtette la Regina poi la ſua morte, che preſe ill terzo marito, chiamato Giacomo Tarraconeſe infante di Majorica, il quale era tenuto il più leggiadro e bell' huomo, che in quel tempo ſi troveſſe. But Tomajo Coſto (d) ſhows either the Malice or Ignorance of this Author. Lewis married Queen Joan in the Year 1347: He was crown'd with her at Naples in 1352, and he did not die till the Year 1362. There happen'd many great Things in his Reign; whereof he acquitted himſelf like a brave Prince: The Particulars of them you may find in Tomajo Coſto.

(c) Collenuccio ubi ſupra fol. 83. verſo.

(d) Tomaſo Coſto, ubi ſupra. fol. 115, &c.

(F) Caus'd his Head to be cut off, ſo ſoon as ſhe knew.] Collenuccio does not affirm this poſitively; he contents himſelf with Saying, 'tis the Opinion of ſome Hiſtorians. (e) Morì queſto Giacomo infra pochi anni, chi ſtrive per morte naturale, e chi dice che la regina li fece tagliar la teſta per havere uſato con un' altra femina. Come ſi ſia egli morì, e la regina tolſe il quarto marito. Let us ſee what Brantome ſays: "(f) She married afterwards, for her third Husband, one James of (g) "Tarencen, Infant of Majorca, who was one of the "moſt prudent and fineſt Perſons that was to be found "in that Country: Yet ſhe would not ſuffer him to "aſſume the Title of King, but made him content "himſelf with that of Duke of Calabria; for ſhe "had not a Mind to part with her Supreme Authority, "nor could endure any Rival in it: But as ſhe had "reſerv'd this Power to her ſelf, ſo ſhe ſoon made uſe "of it upon her Matrimonial-Lord: For coming to "underſtand he had made uſe of another Woman, tho' "he could not have a finer than his Queen, ſhe caus'd "his Head to be ſtruck off; and ſo he died." That which is pleaſant, is, that though Brantome was verily perſwaded (h) the Queen had not put her third Husband to Death; yet he is not aſhamed to make a long Apology for it. As for her third Husband, ſays he, (i) the Infant of Majorca, whom ſhe caus'd to be beheaded for violating her Bed, and forſaking her for another Woman, though ſome Hiſtorians ſay he died a natural Death; ſuppoſing it to be true, had ſhe not reaſon to puniſh the Adultery, ſince he had no more power to commit it againſt her, than ſhe had againſt him? For the Law of God is equally binding to both, and no leſs ſevere to the Husband than the Wife: Moreover, if he had found her doing ſuch an Act, what would he not have done to her? I appeal to the Jealous, and ſuch Perſons as are nice in that Particular. Altho' he were not abſolute King, nor had any Power, but what he derived from her; yet I do not doubt but in ſuch a caſe he would have murther'd her; and therefore ſhe made uſe of her Royal Authority to do the like by him. And though all theſe Reaſons ſhould not have been; who is that Judge ſo eaſy and merciful, that would not have condemn'd ſo notorious a Delinquent; one that could violate his Faith to ſo fair a Queen, ſo great a Princeſs, the greateſt perhaps of that time; nay, forſake her to go and co-habit with another that had not, it may be, the fourth part of her worth? Wretch, that he was, ſince he did like one, who having a clear and pure Fountain to drink out of, goes to quench his Thirſt in a naſty and muddy Creek.

(e) Collenuccio ubi ſupra. fol. 83. verſo.

(f) Brantome ubi ſupra, pag. 349.

(g) The Italian Words of Collenuccio, chiamato Giacomo Tarraconeſe, ſhould have been rendered called James of Tarragona that is of Arragon.

(h) He relates, as a fact, which he believes that which Froiſſard ſays concerning the natural Death of the Infant of Majorca.

(i) Brantome ibid. p. 355.

(G) Some ſay the Conqueror had her ſtrangled.] Charles of Durazzo, having made himſelf Maſter of the Kingdom, and of the Perſon of Queen Joan, ſent Word to the King of Hungary how matters ſtood, and deſir'd to know his pleaſure, what he ſhould do with the Queen. Hereupon the King of Hungary, "(k) ſent back to Charles "two of his Barons to congratulate him upon his Victory. And to let him know his Pleaſure was, he "ſhould carry the Queen to the place where ſhe had "hang'd her Husband Andrew; and there, in the ſame "place, and after the ſame manner, hang her; which "was accordingly done: and her dead Body, being "carried to the Nunnery of St Clara at Naples, after "it had remain'd there three Days, was buried. The "two Barons having ſeen this Execution perform'd, "return'd

(k) Ib'd. pag. 351.

was in the Year (H) 1382 *: She died about fifty eight Years old. There are some Hiſtorians who give her great Commendations, and deny moſt of the Things I have related of her. See her Elogium in one † of the Books of Father Maimbourg. Conſult alſo Brantome (I), who has done all he could to excuſe her, though he faithfully relates ſeveral Satyrical Reports that went of her: He makes mention of a Book wherein ſhe is compared to Mary Stuart (K) Queen of Scotland; and he has not forgot to inſert the ſhort, but thundering Anſwer (L) ſhe receiv'd from the King of Hungary. No great ſtreſs ought to be laid on the favourable Sentence (M) it is pretended ſhe obtain'd of the Pope; for if

* Mezerai's Chronology abridg'd, Tome 3, pag. 119.

† Schiſm of the Weſt. Lib. 2. p. 150. Edit. of Holl.

" return'd to carry the News to their Maſter. After " this, the Head of Mary, the Queen's ſecond Siſter, was " cut off; ſhe had been a lewd and infamous Woman, " and a great Promoter of the Death of Andrew. This " Mary, being Wife to Robert of Artois, was belov'd " by Boccacio, who flouriſh'd in that time: Upon " whom he wrote thoſe two Excellent Books in his " Mother-Tongue, Entituled, Fiammetta and Philoco- " po. „ This is the Tranſlation which Brantome makes of the Italian of Collenuccio: But Tomaſo Coſto (I) obſerves, 1ſt, That Collenuncio is the only Author that ſays the Queen was hang'd: 2*dly*, That the Earl of Artois's Wife was called Joan, and not Mary; 3*dly*, That ſhe was Niece, and not Siſter to this Queen; 4*thly*, That ſhe that was prais'd and belov'd by Boccacio, was neither Niece nor Siſter to Joan, but natural Daughter to King Robert. La Maria per cui ſcriſſe il Boccac. fu figliuola baſtarda del Re Roberto avanti ch'ei fuſſe Re: vedilo chiaramente eſpreſſo nel principio del Filocopo (a).

(I) In quanto al morire della Reina Giovanna, chi dice ch'ella fu ſtrangolata, e chi affogata: ma impiccata lo dice ſolo il Collenuccio. Tomaſo Coſto, ubi ſupra. fol. 121.

(a) Tomaſo Coſto ubi ſupra.

(b) Stephanus Baluzius in notis ad vitas Paparum Avenionenſium, pag. 1257, 1258.

(H) This was in the Year 1382.] This cannot be denied: It is then a little ſtrange her Obſequies were not perform'd in Avignon, by order of the Pope, before the fifth of May 1385; and that the News of her Death was not ſent to the Inhabitants of Marſeilles by the ſame Pope before that time. Mr. Baluze had reaſon to wonder thereat. I inſert the Extract which he gives us of the Journal of John Le Fevre, Biſhop of Chartres, with his Obſervation upon it. " (b) The " fifth Day the Pope caus'd a Maſs of ſolemn Requiem to " be ſaid for Joan Queen of Sicily, put to Death by " Charles de Durazzo. The Maſs was ſaid by the Car- " dinal of Coſenza; who, at the ſame time, preach'd an " excellent Sermon upon the Occaſion. The King was pre- " ſent, and was afterwards conducted Home by the Car- " dinals of Coſenza and Ambrun. Sed mirum eſt tum " primum in his regionibus auditum nuntium de mor- " te iſtius Reginæ, quam conſtat anno ſaltem milleſimo " CCCLXXXII. occiſam fuiſſe die XXII. menſis " Maji. Et tamen primum auditum hinc liquet, " quod paulo poſt verba quæ mox deſcripſimus ex dia- " rio Epiſcopi Carnotenſis ſequitur: Alio it was de- " termin'd to ſend a Solemn Meſſage to Marſeilles to " ſignify the Death of the Queen; and that there ſhould " be a Sermon. „

(b) Maimbourg's Schiſm of the Weſt. Lib. 2. p. 151. 152, ad. ann. 1382.

(I) Brantome has done all he could to excuſe her] Obſerve (c) what he ſays concerning the Death of the ſecond and third Husband; and add thereto what he remarks touching that of the firſt; and concerning thoſe many Marriages. (d) For as to reproaching her with having four Husbands, and for that reaſon to believe her Unchaſte, we ought by no means to do it, ſince Marriage is good and holy, having been ordain'd of God: Alſo it was far better ſhe ſhould marry than burn, or what is worſe, proſtitute and abandon her ſelf to every Body, as many Queens, Princeſſes, and great Ladies have done, and ſtill do; whether they be Maids or Widows, who make Love and Fornicate with whom they pleaſe, and all this rather than marry; to which they prefer prohibited Whoredom, which Queen Joan never did: For tho' ſhe burnt never ſo much with a deſire after the Fleſh, yet ſhe did always enjoy it lawfully with her Husbands. As for Andrew, her Husband, whom ſhe put to Death, 'tis ſaid he was a drunken, malicious and dangerous Hungarian; who, whilſt he ſeem'd a ſilly Man and a Fool, would have murther'd her to make way for himſelf to the Throne; but ſhe was before-hand with him, and did that Kindneſs for him, which he had deſign'd for her.

(c) Hereabove Remark E, Letter h; and Remark F, Letter i.

(d) Brantome ubi ſupra, pag. 352, 353.

(K) Wherein ſhe is compar'd to Mary Stuart.] " (e) " I have ſeen a Book printed in England, entituled, A " Defenſe of the Lawful Sentence, and moſt juſt Executi- " on of the deceaſed Mary Stuart, late Queen of Scot- " land. In this Book there are many Compariſons be- " ween Queen Joan of Naples, and the Queen of Scot- " land, as well in what relates to their Lives and Man- " ners, as to their Amours and kinds of Death. " There they are painted by the ſame hand, and no- " thing is ſo like as they two, if you believe the " Author. „ He afterwards relates in ſhort the Parallel of theſe two Queens, which he divides into twelve Heads.

(e) Brantome, ib. pag. 380.

(L) The Anſwer ſhe received from the King of Hungary.] It is this: " (f) Thy former diſorderly Life, " thy Uſurpation of the Kingdom, which thou haſt " always kept to thy ſelf; thy not proſecuting the " Murtherers of thy Husband; thy marrying ſoon af- " ter to another Man, together with the Excuſe thou " afterwards ſenteſt me, are to me plain Indications that " thou wert Accomplice and Acceſſory in thy Husband's " Murther. „ They that have a mind to have it in Latin may read what follows. (g) Johanna, inordinata vita præ- cedens; retentio poteſtatis in regno; negletta vindicta; vir alter ſuſceptus; & excuſatio ſubſequens; recta vni tui te probant fuiſſe participem & conſortem.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 348.

(M) The favourable Sentence . . . . ſhe obtain'd of the Pope.] Let us ſee the Words of Father Maimbourg, " (h) As to the Death of her firſt Husband, Andrew, " which many have imputed to her; ſhe has fully ac- " quitted her ſelf, as well by the ſevere Juſtice ſhe made " the Murtherers undergo; not one of which offered to " accuſe her while under the greateſt Torments; as by " her Eloquent Apology which ſhe made in a full Con- " ſiſtory before Pope Clement VI. and the Ambaſſa- " dors of ſeveral Chriſtian Princes, with that Energy and " Force, that the Holy Father afterwards pronounced " her in an Authentick Act, not only innocent of that " Crime, but that it was not in the leaſt to be ſuſpect- " ed that ſhe had any hand in it. „ This Hiſtorian quotes no Body as to this particular Fact. Obſerve that Brantome, who copies (i) from Froiſſard the Harangue which this Queen made to the Pope, with the Pope's Anſwer, ſays not a Word of the Sentence of Abſolution: I'll tell you the reaſon preſently; He contents himſelf with ſaying (k), that the Pope engaged himſelf to protect the Heir of this Princeſs. Obſerve likewiſe, that the Harangue, which Froiſſard puts into the Mouth of Queen Joan, contains divers Falſities: As, 1ſt, That Joan was Daughter to Robert; 2*dly*, That ſhe was not married to Andrew of Hungary, till after the Death of Robert; 3*dly*, That ſhe had never a Son by that Prince; 4*thly*, That Andrew died young at Aix in Provence; 5*thly*, That her ſecond Husband became a Priſoner to the King of Hungary, and died in that Kingdom, whither that King had ſent him: And, 6*thly*, That the Daughter which ſhe had by her ſecond Husband, and whom ſhe married to the Earl of Artois, died in Priſon with her Husband; and that afterwards Queen Joan and her fourth Husband, Otho of Brunſwick, entered into a Treaty of Peace; whereby they recovered their Liberty, and the Kingdom of Naples, by giving up Apulia and Calabria to Prince Charles of Durazzo, their Conqueror. All theſe are are very great Falſities, as may appear by what I have already ſaid in my former Remarks, and what I am about to ſay. The two Daughters which Queen Joan had by her ſecond Husband, died Infants. The Wife of the Earl of Artois was Niece to this Queen, being the Daughter of Charles of Durazzo, whom the King of Hungary put to Death, and of Mary Siſter of Joan. This Mary had been a long time dead, when her Siſter was ſtrangled: Therefore Mr Mezerai is miſtaken, when he tells us (l) Queen Joan and her Siſter Mary, ſurrender'd themſelves to Charles of Durazzo, who ſtrangled them both in Priſon. The Earl of Artois and Joan his Wife died the 20th of July 1387, as their Epitaph (m) ſhows, and conſequently they muſt have ſurvived Queen Joan. Likewiſe it is falſe, that this Queen either enjoy'd her Liberty or Kingdom, after ſhe had ſurrender'd her ſelf to the Duke of Durazzo. Let us conclude then that her pretended Harangue to Pope Clement, is a meer Forgery of Froiſſard, and that Brantome laid a Snare for us, into which he fell firſt himſelf; when (i) She humbled her ſelf greatly before Pope Clement at Fondi, confeſſing her ſelf to him, and diſcovering to him all her Game and Tricks without Reſtraint. (This Word betrays her Wantonneſs.) Froiſſard uſes theſe very Words, and diſcovered her Secrets to him, and afterwards regarded her Harangue, which I ſhall deliver in the ſame terms as the Author preſents them, without altering them. Brantome ubi ſupra, pag. 359.

(k) Ibid. pag. 364.

(l) Mezerai Chronolog. Abridgment T. 3 pag. 119. Brantome is in the ſame Error

(m) It is to be ſeen in a Chapel of the Church of St Laurence at Naples, in theſe Words: Hic jacent corpora illuſtrium Dominorum Domini Roberti de Artois, & Domina Jeharne Duracii, conjugum qui obierunt anno Domini MCCC LXXXVII. die XX. menſ. Julii. Tomaſo Coſto ubi ſupra fol. 121.

he

if she obtained it of Clement VI. it may be objected she gave him Avignon, or did as good as give it him. If she obtain'd it of Clement VII. it may be said he was an Anti-Pope, who having occasion for the good Reputation of those Princes that acknowledg'd his Title, would certainly neither condemn her, nor suffer her to be expos'd to any infamy. The other Anti-Pope did not deal so kindly by her: For he declared she had forfeited * her Crown for divers Crimes and Misdemeanours, but chiefly for siding with his Rival, Clement † VII. She had a Sister, with whom Boccacio was (N) in Love, as some Authors affirm: But I will show they are mistaken; and that Froissard has related a great many Falsities ‡. You will find in the following Article who were the Successors to this Queen. Her Death was reveng'd in Hungary, if we may believe Brantome; but, when he speaks

* In the Year 1379. Per sentenzia privo del regno di Napoli la Regina Giovanna per molti delitti, e massimamente per haver prestato luogo e favore alla scisma, & havere prestato obedientia a Clemente VI. Collenuccio ib. fol. 84. verso.

† 'Tis so he ought to have said; and not VI. as Collenuccio

‡ See Remark M.

he says (n), Let us then believe Froissard, who says this Queen confess'd her self to the Pope, and who has been curious to collect her own Words, pronounced by her own Mouth, which must best testify her Life. What he says presently after is as follows: I do not say but Froissard touches on some Passages of her Life, as the Death of Andrew, and other such Amorous Slips; but still I can never believe she was so wicked and debauched as that foolish Neapolitan Historian would make her.

The better to comprehend the confus'd Relation of Froissard; we must observe that he supposes Queen Joan went to wait on the Pope at Fondi; and that it was there she made him that Harangue. But it is certain Clement VII. left Italy in the Year 1379 to go and reside at Avignon. How then could Queen Joan make an Harangue to him at Fondi, after she was clapt up in Prison in the Year 1381? It is not to be wonder'd at, that we should not find the Sentence of Absolution in Froissard, since it is plain he never pretended to speak but of such matters as pass'd between Clement VII. and Queen Joan. Now it was by Clement VI. that she was absolv'd, as you may find hereafter: But all this is very confus'd. Brantome says we may read in the History of Anjou, that in the (a) Schism of the Church .... among other Princes that declared for Clement, there was the King of France, his Brothers, and good Queen Joan .... who went to visit Pope Clement; by whom, and all the Cardinals, she was honourably receiv'd .... And that after she had remain'd some time at his Holiness's Court, she requested he would be pleased to hear her Confession, and absolve her from her Sins. The good Pope willingly and kindly granted her Request, which he could by no means deny, since she deserv'd a Secret, Auricular and Ocular Confession, and a Penance light and easy to be born. After this Confession made in Presence of his Holiness, and the sacred College of Cardinals, the said Queen .... remonstrated the many ill Turns, and ungrateful Tricks had been play'd her by her Nephew Charles of Durazzo; who had many times sought her Life to enjoy her Kingdom. Moreover, that she desiring to observe the last Wills of her Father and Grandfather. did, in presence of all the Nobility there assembled, resign and yield up to his Holiness, as well her Kingdoms of Sicily and Naples, as her Dutchies of Apulia, Calabria and the Earldom of Provence. All this is related in the express Words of Froissard. The Pope having accepted this, through the perswasion of his Council, she adopted Lewis of Anjou for her Son; to whom were given Charters and Authentick Letters; but the Pope purchased the County of Avignon from her .... This being over, the Queen took her leave of his Holiness, and return'd to her Kingdom, where Charles of Durazzo, having some time after taken her Prisoner, caus'd her to be stifled between two Feather-Beds; and this when he came to understand the Adoption she had made. If one believ'd this Relation, one would be tempted to think that the Fact of which Father Maimbourg speaks, belongs to the Pontificate of Clement VII. and not to that of Clement VI. But I would not advise any Body to rely either on the Relation Brantome has from Froissard, or that which he borrows from the History of Anjou: 'Tis impossible to reconcile them together, they are full of Confusion and Uncertainty. Let us then stick to what I am going to say. It is certain, Queen Joan having made her Apology in the Year 1348, before the Pope and Cardinals, was declar'd (b) innocent of the Murther of her Husband, yet this Declaration was slightly made, and there is great probability it proceeded from the Passion the Pope had for Avignon. In short, the same Affair having been brought in question three Years after, the Queen was oblig'd to confess she had been induc'd by Witchcraft not to love her Husband, which gave encouragement to several Persons to conspire against him. The Judges being favourably enclin'd towards her, said, It would be hard to condemn her for an Inchantment which she could not resist, and consequently acquitted her: When one has recourse to such a Trick as this, 'tis a sign his Cause goes ill. 'Tis plain, the Pope, who was chosen Judge in this Matter, had a mind to preserve to her the Kingdom of Naples, which he could not have done, unless he had found her innocent; for the Truce he mediated between her and the King of Hungary in the Year 1350 (c) imported, that if Joan were found guilty, she should be oblig'd to surrender her Kingdom to that Monarch; which, on the contrary, he was to have no Pretensions to, if she were declared innocent. Consider well the following Words of Spondanus: (d) Cum remissa ex pacto Causa Johannæ Reginæ ad judicium Sedis Apostolicæ, agre inveniretur modus asserendæ ejus innocentiæ, nec tamen justum videretur famam ejus diutius in dubium relinquere; demum admissa est ejus excusatio de maleficio seu fascinatione, cujus vi fragilis ejus natura coacta fuisset minus amare virum quam deceret, indeque alii conspirare in eum ausi essent: productisque pluribus ejus rei testibus, declarata est a benevolis Judicibus innocens eorum omnium quæ ex ejusmodi fascinatione secuta essent. Father Maimbourg has not then acquitted himself like a faithful Historian since he has not mention'd one Word of the Revival of this Process.

(b) See Spondanus ad ann. 1348. n. 3. He quotes John Villani, lib. 12. cap. 114. Matthew Villani, cap. 18. and Summonte lib. 3. cap. 4.

(c) Spondanus ad. ann. 1350. n. 6. pag. 505. He quotes Matthew Villani, lib. 1. § 89, 91, &c.

(d) Idem ad. ann. 1351. n. 1. p. m. 509.

(N) With whom Boccacio was in Love.] Tomaso Costo has shown this Mistress of Boccacio was a Bastard of King Robert. I have quoted him before; but Brantome (e) knew nothing of the Matter. He makes several Reflections upon this trifling Amour, without touching the principal Point, which was to prove, that Boccacio had not aspir'd so high, as to make Love to the Sister of so great a Queen. Perhaps the Reader will be glad to find here some passages of Brantome. "(f) If it be true he lov'd her Sister Mary Countess "of Artois, and that he wrote his two Books Fiammetta and Philocopo for her sake, then I think he ought "to have written more amply and advantageously of "the two Sisters than he has done; for no Man knew "better how to do it than he, by reason of his great Learning: But I believe, as is common with great Talkers, "he never had so great a Passion for that Lady as his Writings seem'd to intimate; nothing being more frequent than for an Author to form a fine Object in his "Mind, the better to help his Imagination. So Poets, "(g) and other Composers, have always some imaginary "Mistriss to raise their Fancy, or make the World believe their Fortune is greater than it really is; and "this, that they may procure themselves the greater Respect. Moreover, it is highly improbable that so great a "Princess would have submitted to such mean Things, "as he describes in his Fiammetta; for then you might "conclude she was ravish'd with him, would die for "him, or run away with him where-ever he went. Very "likely indeed, if he were such a Person as his Picture represents him, which I have seen at Florence, "Naples, and many other places, and which by no "means show'd him either amiable or agreeable. "To which I add, that her Husband, the Earl, "was a hundred times more desirable than he." Brantome adds, this Princess might have lov'd him for his great Wit, and not for any thing she had seen in his Person, as he says he has known several great Ladies to have done: Whereupon he relates what a certain Dauphiness once answer'd after she had kiss'd a Poet that was (h) a-sleep. Afterwards he goes on thus: "(i) It is possible this Princess Mary may have "lov'd Boccacio for his Excellent Parts, and fine Pen, to "the end he might render her Immortal, by celebrating her "Virtues to the whole World; wherein this Gallant de-"ceiv'd her: For he did nothing but write these two "lying Books, which rather scandaliz'd than prais'd "her; though he never enjoy'd her. But it is a "common thing for Authors, Poets and Courtiers, to "publish those Favours they have never enjoy'd, though "I have known some Poets (k), who have had Favours "conferr'd on them; which I shall have occasion to speak "of hereafter.

(e) Remark G. towards the end.

(f) Brantome ubi supra, pag. 370, 371.

(g) This confirms what I have formerly said in the Article Lotichius, as also in Remark I. of the Article Malherbe.

(h) Alain Chartier. See the Continuation of the Critical Observations upon Maimbourg's History of Calvinism. Letter 18. pag. 591.

(i) Brantome ubi supra, pag. 372.

(k) See the Continuation of the Critical Observations upon Maimbourg's History of Calvinism. ubi supra, pag. 590, &c.

(O) When

ſpeaks of that, he falls (O) into ſome Errors. To conclude, the Barbarity, exercis'd upon the unhappy Andrew, was a plain Indication he had render'd himſelf odious to others (P) beſides his Wife.

NAPLES (JOAN II. Queen of) deſcended from (A) Charles of Anjou, Brother of St Lewis, and was the Daughter of Charles of Durazzo, who caus'd Queen Joan I. to be put to Death. She was born in 1371, and married to William of Auſtria † about the Year 1402. She became a Widow in 1406 †; and Ladiſlaus her Brother, King of Naples, dying without lawful Iſſue in 1414, ſhe ſucceeded him in his Kingdom, and the Year following

(l) Brantome ubi ſupra. pag. 364, 365.

(m) He had ſaid that Queen Joan was Daughter of King Robert.

(n) She whom the Hungarians call'd King Mary. Collenuccio ibid. fol. 88. verſo.

(o) Collenuccio ibid. fol. 89.

(a) Exultaſſe ferunt Urbanum ad nuncium mortis, cultrumque quo ictus fuerat ad ſe delatum, recenti ſanguine reſperſum, aviditſime conſpexiſſe. Pogius apud Felinum Sandeum de Regibus Siciliæ, p. 30.

(b) Matthieu Schism of the W. Jo. Lib. 3. p. 223. He quotes Thuroſius and Lonnius.

(c) Rampale has made a Diſcourſe against this Mistake.

(d) That is to ſay, the XVII.

(e) Urban ſixth Clementis VI. p. 246. edit. Baluzianæ 1693.

(g) Clem. VI. in Collatione facta contra intercessores Andreæ, apud Baluzium, notis ad vitas Paparum Avenionenſium. p. 85.

(O) When he ſpeaks of the revenging of the Death of Joan, he falls into ſome Errors.] Obſerve what he ſays " (l), Alſo God, the juſt Avenger of innocent Deaths, " reveng'd hers both upon the Hungarian, and Charles " Durazzo, whom Margaret, eldeſt Siſter of Queen Joan, " and Grand-daughter of King Robert, whilſt he was " at Buda, whither ſhe had invited him to a Banquet, " during his drinking a Glaſs of Wine, caus'd " to be ſtruck in the Nap of the Neck with a " Hatchet; of which Wound he inſtantly dyed." Brantome affirms four things: 1*ſt*, That Charles Durazzo was kill'd by order of the Queen of Hungary; 2*dly*, That this Queen's Name was Margaret; 3*dly*, That ſhe was eldeſt Siſter to Queen Joan; and, 4*thly*, That ſhe was Grand-daughter to King Robert. Now theſe things four are all Untruths; and in the laſt Brantome (m) contradicts himſelf. When Charles of Durazzo went into Hungary, after he had put Queen Joan to Death, he found theſe two Queens, viz. the Widow and Daughter of the deceas'd King Lewis: Now the Widow's Name was Elizabeth, Daughter of the King of Boſnia, and the Daughter's (n) Mary. They had both conſented that Charles ſhould be crown'd King of Hungary; but afterwards the Widow gave Orders to have him murther'd. (o) Fu coronato in Alba Regale di volonta della Regina Iſabetta, & del Re Maria ſua figliuola, le quali ogni loro ragione li rinuntiarono; ma poi andato a Buda, e con finte blanditie della Regina invitato ad un convito, mentre beveva li fu dato d'una ſecure nella coppa per ordinatione della Regina, e fu morto dell' anno 1386. a dì 3. di Giugno. This is what the Author, whom Brantome follows, teaches us; whence we may collect another Falſity of Brantome, it being by no means to revenge the Death of Joan, that the Queen of Hungary caus'd Charles of Durazzo to be murthered: She deſigned thereby only to gratify the Ambition of her ſelf, and her Daughter Mary. Let us obſerve by the bye, that Urban VI. who had many ill offices done him on the part of Charles, and who, for that reaſon, excommunicated and depos'd him in the Year 1385, was not a little pleas'd with the News of his Death. 'Tis ſaid (p) he contemplated with a great deal of pleaſure the Hatchet, yet reeking with the Blood of that Prince. His Death nevertheleſs was not long unreveng'd; for a Lord of his Party having ſurpriz'd the two Queens in the Country (b), threw Queen Elizabeth into the River. 'Tis a miſtake (c) to believe the World grows worſe and worſe every Day; ſince the Age (d) wherein we live has not been able to furniſh us in the Weſt with a Series of Enormities in few Years, comparable to thoſe that that were acted in it, between the Years 1345 and 1390.

(P) Odious to others beſides his Wife.] There are ſome Hiſtorians who ſay, that his threatning to puniſh ſeverely ſeveral Lords of his Court, that had ill behav'd themſelves; to puniſh them, I ſay, ſeverely, ſo ſoon as he was Crown'd, caus'd thoſe Offenders to conſpire againſt him. (e) Occaſio autem hujus ſceleris ſpecialiter fuiſſe dicitur, quia ipſe, tanquam virtuoſus & audax, verbo & facto monſtrabat ſe vel e punire aliquos quos videbat criminoſos & malè ſe habentes, quam primum per coronationem plenum dominium dicti regni ad ipſum perveniſſet. De quo malè ſibi conſci & merito formidantes cogitaverunt adverſus eum modo præmiſſo ſibi ipſis præcavere. But theſe Conſpirators muſt needs have been animated by a perſonal Hatred, beſides the deſire of preventing their being puniſh'd; ſince they could carry Matters to that Height, as to exerciſe ſo great Inhumanities upon that Prince. They tormented him barbarouſly in all his Members; nay, they were ſo far from ſparing thoſe we forbear to name that they exercis'd their greateſt Cruelties upon them. The Informations Clement VI. caus'd to be exhibited againſt the Murtherers, contain ſo many barbarous Particulars, that they are not to be read without great Horrour. (g) Statim cum per eos vocatus venit ad gazophylacium vel deambulatorium quod eſt ante cameram, aliqui poſuerunt manus ad os, ut clamare non poſſet, & ita impreſſerunt illos gan- taletos ferreos circa os ejus, quod etiam veſtigia & characteres apparebant poſt mortem. Alii vero funem in collo poſuerunt ut ſtrangularent eum, ſicut etiam characteres poſt mortem oſtendebant. Alii vero receperunt eum per genitalia, & adeo traxerunt quod multi qui dicebant ſe vidiſſe retulerunt mihi quod tranſcendebant genua. Alii capillos de capite evulſerunt. Alii eum in platea trahendo projecerunt. Alii dicunt quod cum fune cum qua eum ſtrangulaverant eum quaſi ſuſpenſum in platea projecerunt. Alii ſuper eum cum genibus aſcenderunt, & eum uſque ad compaſſionem cordis oppreſſerunt. Et audivi quod etiam de hoc veſtigia exterius apparebant. Fuit etiam nobis dictum quod volebant eum projicere in puteum profundum, ſicut projectus fuerat ille ſanctus Jeremias in foveam, & poſtea dicere quod reperat extra regnum de conſilio aliquorum fidelium ſibi, qui diſpoſuerunt poſtea capere & mittere Regi Ungariæ captivos ac ſi eſſent ubi eſſet. Et perfeciſſent, niſi natura dicti Regis ultra ceſſiſſet.

(A) Deſcended from Charles of Anjou, Brother of St. Lewis.] She was Daughter of Charles of Durazzo III. He was Son of Lewis of Durazzo, Count of Gravine, whoſe Father was John of Durazzo, Brother of Robert King of Naples, and Son of Charles the Lame, Son and Succeſſor of Charles of Anjou Brother of St Lewis (b). It is eaſy to apprehend by this Genealogical Account, that John of Durazzo, Brother of Robert, founded the Family of Durazzo: He died the fifth of April 1335, leaving three Sons, Charles, Lewis, and Robert.

Charles married Mary Siſter of Joan I. Queen of Naples. He was (i) both Adviſer and Author of the Death of King Andrew. (k) He was made Lieutenant-General, and Governour of the Kingdom of Naples, when Joan retir'd into Provence, upon the coming of Lewis King of Hungary, into Italy. Not being able to oppoſe the Hungarians, he was vanquiſh'd, taken and beheaded (l). Others (m) ſay he went with other Lords, and offered to pay Homage to the King of Hungary; who, having convicted him of the Death of Andrew, firſt put him to Death, and afterwards hang'd him. The greateſt Evidence againſt him was a Letter he had written to the Count of Altomonte. Dicendo al Duca di Durazzo che gli moſtraſſe il luogo, dove ſu morto ſuo fratello. E benche il Duca moſtraſſe di ſaperlo il Re lo convitò con molti ogli una lettera ſcritta da eſſo Duca a Carlo d'Altomonte, intorno al trattato della detta morte, e chiamandolo traditore lo fece in quell' inſtante occidere e buttar dal medeſimo verone, onde era ſtato buttato Andrea (n). Charles of Durazzo left no Son, whatever Collenuccio pretends, but only four Daughters.

Lewis of Durazzo his Brother, Count of Gravine, (o) was impriſon'd in the Caſtle dell' Ovo at Naples, by order of Queen Joan I. and that on a ſuſpicion ſhe had, he intended to invade her Territories: Wherefore ſhe made him ſhadow Poiſon, of which he died in the Year 1362. He was buried in the Monaſtery of the Nuns of Santa Croce at Naples. Some place his Death in the Month of June, and others on the 22d of July. He left one Son nam'd Charles, who retir'd to the Court of Lewis King of Hungary; to whom he did many great Services, being his General againſt the Venetians: He happily ended that War, which procured him the honourable Sir-Name, Della Pace. It was he was ſent to Naples to drive thence Queen Joan, when the King of Hungary was ſolicited by Pope Urban to take poſſeſſion of that Kingdom. (p) Charles had great Obligations to this Queen; ſhe had brought him up tenderly in her Court, as her own Son; ſhe had married him to the Princeſs Margaret her Niece; ſhe deſign'd him for her Succeſſor, and kept his Children with her. Yet the execrable Ambition of Reigning made him Ungrateful, and violated all theſe Ties of Amity. He was crown'd King of Sicily at Rome in the beginning of the Year 1381: Afterwards he march'd for Naples; where, having been receiv'd without Reſiſtance, he beſieg'd the Queen in the Caſtle dell' Ovo, and at length forc'd her to ſubmit, having defeated and taken her Husband, Orho of

(i) Corneil Eutic. Anſelm, Hiſt. ubi ſupra, p. 360. calls him Duke of Auſtraſia.

† Father Ante'm's Chronology of Hiſtory of the Houſe of France. p. 358.

(k) See Father Anſelm's Genealogical Hiſtory of the Houſe of France p. 364. &c. Hiſtory of the Lords of Durazzo.

(l) Mezerai's Chronological Abridgment. Tom. 3. p. 30.

(k) Anſelm ibid. p. 355.

(l) Collenuccio, Lib. 5 fol. 83.

(m) Tomaſo Coſto in his Supplement to Collenuccio. fol. 112. who quotes Matthew Villani.

(n) Ib. id.

(o) Father Anſelm, ubi ſupra. pag. 356, 357.

(p) Mezerai's Chronological Abridgment. Tom. 3. pag. 118.

ing married James of Bourbon. This Prince, not being able to endure her scandalous Life, depriv'd her both of (B) her Gallant, and all Authority: But he was not Politick enough to maintain himſelf againſt the (C) Subtleties of this Princeſs; for ſhe at length got the upper-hand of him, and proſecuted her Advantage ſo well, that in a ſhort time ſhe oblig'd him to return to France, where he turn'd Monk †. The Queen having rid her ſelf of this Huſband, ſoon found her ſelf involv'd in new Troubles; for ſhe had ſo diſoblig'd the brave Sforza of Cotignola, that he invited Lewis of Anjou to the Conqueſt of the Kingdom of Naples; promiſing that he himſelf would head the Malecontents. Pope Martin V. favoured Lewis; whereupon he beſieg'd Naples both by Sea and Land, and had certainly made himſelf Maſter of it, had not Alphonſus of Aragon ſent a powerful Succour to the Queen: He did this becauſe ſhe had promis'd to adopt him, and ſhe kept her Word with him; but the ungrateful Prince dealt ſo ill by her that ſhe revok'd her Adoption, and transferr'd it to Lewis of Anjou γ. This Prince reduc'd all the Cities which held for the Aragonians, and behav'd himſelf ſo well towards the Queen, that when he died in the Month of November 1434 *, the Grief ſhe conceiv'd of Brunſwick, and caus'd her to be ſtrangled in Priſon in the Year 1382. In the mean time Lewis of Anjou, Brother of Charles V. King of France, had been adopted by this Queen Joan, and crown'd at Avignon by Pope Clement VII. The News of the Tragical Death of this Queen, did not hinder him from leading a fine Army into the Kingdom of Naples, to drive Charles thence; but his Misfortune was ſuch, that Famine deſtroy'd his Troops, and he died of Grief in the Year 1384 (q). Charles by this means remain'd in quiet poſſeſſion of that Kingdom. He afterwards fell out with the Pope; but having been invited by the Hungarians into Hungary, who were diſſatisfied with the Government of the Daughter and Widow of their King, he went thither and was crown'd by the Archbiſhop of Gran: He nevertheleſs periſh'd there ſoon after by the Contrivance of the Queen Dowager, as has before been ſaid (r): His Son Ladiſlaus ſucceeded him, and vanquiſhed Lewis II. Duke of Anjou, who endeavour'd to maintain his Father's Right: This Ladiſlaus was a brave and bold Prince, and had he liv'd longer might have done many great Things, but (ſ) he died the 16th of Auguſt in the Year 1414, aged 38 Years. We ſhall ſee hereafter (t), how he came to be put to Death. His Siſter Joan, we treat of in this Article, ſucceeded him.

Robert of Durazzo "(v) took upon him the Quality "of Prince of Morea. He was Arreſted in the "City of Averſa, and carried Priſoner into Hungary, "together with his Brother the Count of Gravine, by "Order of the King of Hungary. Having been ſet at "Liberty in the Year 1352, he came into France, "where he challeng'd Lewis King of Hungary, accuſing him of having put to Death his Brother Charles "of Durazzo, without any Reaſon. Some time "after, being in the Retinue of King John, "he was at the fatal Battle of Poictiers; where he "died (t) honourably in the Field the 19th of September 1356."

(B) Depriv'd her both of her Gallant and all Authority.] When ſhe went to her Husband "(a) ſhe carried along with her a Napolitan Gentleman, nam'd "Pandolfo Alopo; whom ſhe exceedingly countenance'd, and created her Chamberlain with her own "Hand: Her Chamberlain indeed, for he ſerv'd "her well in her Chamber both Day and Night; "but not without the Obſervations and Reflections of the Courtiers and People. To appeaſe "them, ſhe, by the Advice of her States, reſolv'd to marry, which ſhe ſoon after did to James "of Narbonne, as the Hiſtory of Naples ſays: But "Meſſire Olivier de la Marche, a great Lord and faithful Hiſtorian, calls him James of Bourbon; which "latter Opinion I am rather inclinable to be of, ſince "he liv'd in that time. Upon concluding the Marriage, it was ſtipulated he ſhould not bear the Title of "King, but only that of Prince, Duke or Count, but "he would have no other Title than what he "had. At length the Queen's Captains, who bore "a mortal Hatred and Envy both to Pandolfo and "Sforza, put it into his Head to aſſume the Title of "King; which, going one Day to wait on him, they "all ſaluted him by, except the brave Sforza, who "would ſtile him no otherwiſe than Count. Hereupon James, by the Advice of thoſe about him, ſent "Sforza to Priſon, and had him tormented, and cauſed "Pandolfo's Head to be cut off.... As for the Queen, he "laid her aſide, depriv'd her of her Power, and in a manner confin'd her to her Chamber, ſeldom or never admitting her either to his Preſence or Bed: Nay, he "was ſo unkind, as to ſay many reproachful Things "to her, which ſhe always artfully and maliciouſly diſſembled her Diſlike of." Brantome has all this out of Pondolfo Collenuccio. (b) Tutto il governo di ſe, della corte, e del regno poſe in mano à Pandolfello Alopo Napolitano, Conte Camerlengo e letiſſimo giovene, e ſuo creato, il quale ella ſommamente amava; e havendolo menato ſeco quando andò a marito al Duca di (c) Sterlic, morto il Duca il ritornò a Napoli, e ſempre lo tenne con publica infamia di venereo commercio con lei.... il (d) Conte Giacomo .... poſta la Regina da parte non le laſciava maneggiar coſa alcuna, e in alcune camere quaſi relegata la teneva, non ammettendola molte volte ne'anche a gli atti matrimoniali, e con repulſe e villane parole da ſe lontana la teneva.

Note, that Brantome imagin'd falſely that there was ſome difference between Olivier de la Marche and Pandolfo Collenuccio, concerning the Husband of Queen Joan, ſince it may eaſily be obſerved they agree well enough together. The former ſays (e) this Queen was married to a noble and vertuous Knight of the Blood Royal of France, and of the Houſe of Bourbon, both by Name and Arms, called Meſſire James of Bourbon, Count de la Marche: The latter (f) ſays, eleſſe Giacomo di Narbona Provenzale, Conte della Marca, e di ſtirpe regale di Francia ancor' egli. They ſpeak both of the ſame Man, and draw his Character much after the ſame manner; the only difference is, the Italian Author makes him of Provence, and calls him James of Narbonne. He was certainly miſtaken in the firſt Reſpect; but as to the laſt, I believe 'tis only a fault in the Printer, who has put Narbona for Borbone; or if the Printer has not done ſo, then it muſt have been in the Authors which Collenuccio copy'd, and that either thro' the Negligence of the Tranſcribers or Printers. Let us not leave this Matter till we have mended two Faults in Mezerai. Although, ſays he, (g) Joan was firſt married to James of Bourbon Count de la Marche; yet was ſhe never the leſs governed by the Counſels of Pandolfo Alopo, and Mutio Sforza the Stock of the Dukes of Milan, who, 'twas ſaid, were her Friends. This is to ſuppoſe, 1*ſt*, That Joan had never been married before ſhe was to James of Bourbon; and, 2*dly*, That ſhe married another Husband, after ſhe had loſt this; both which however are falſe. Now, if I ſhould likewiſe remark the faults in the Stile, I could find a third Error in this Hiſtorian; for by the placing his Words, he ſeems to have a mind to make us underſtand, that the Sforza's Dukes of Milan went for Queen Joan's Friends.

(C) To maintain himſelf againſt the Subtleties of this Princeſs.] "(b) She play'd her part ſo well, that one "Giulio Ceſare of Capua, who had formerly offended "her, to make his Peace, offer'd to kill her Husband "James; when ſhe, not leſs Politick than malicious, "took hold of the occaſion, as well to revenge her ſelf "on Giulio, as to regain her Husband's Favour. Seeming therefore to hearken to the Propoſal, ſhe bid "the Traytor be ſure to conſider of doing it effectually; for which end ſhe gave him eight Days. In "the mean while ſhe went and acquainted her Huſband with the whole matter, telling him he ſhould lie "conceal'd with ſome of his moſt faithful Domeſticks, "where he might hear how the whole Villany was to "be tranſacted: Accordingly the eighth Day being "come ſhe convey'd Giulio privately into her Chamber, where they two diſcourſing ſomewhat loudly "of the Conduct of their Affair, the King, of a "ſudden, ruſh'd forth and cut off Giulio's Head, embracing at the ſame time his Queen, and declaring "he thought her the moſt loyal of Wives. Caſi ſi pigliano le volpi, ſays the Italian Proverb. Soon after the Queen had her Liberty, governing all as formerly; γ See Father Maimbourg's Hiſtory of the great Schism, lib. 6.

† Brantome in his Lives of Illuſtrious Women, p. 388, &c. rails at him ſeverely.

* And not 1431. as Mezerai ſays in his Chronological Abridgment, ad hunc ann.

(q) ibid. p. 121.

(r) In the Remark O of the foregoing Article.

(ſ) Anſelm ubi ſupra, p. 359.

(t) In the Remark E in the Paſſage of Mezerai.

(v) Anſelm, ibid. pag. 355.

(t) Chron. of Father Ptolemy of Lucca.

(a) Brantome of illuſtrious Women, p. 384.

(b) Pandolfo Collenuccio Hiſt. del Regno di Napoli Lib. 5. fol. 93. verſo.

(c) Neither Brantome nor Collenuccio have underſtood this Word. According to Baudrand, Auſtria is call'd in High-dutch Oeſterreich, and pronounc'd Eſterich, whence Collenuccio hid his Duca di Sterlic, and Brantome, pag. 348, his Duchelie de Sterlich.

(d) Idem Collenuccio, ib. fol. 94.

(e) Olivier de la Marche's Memoirs, lib. 1. cap. 1. p. m. 76.

(f) Collenucio, ubi ſupra, fol. 93. verſo.

(g) Mezerai's Hiſtory of France. Tome 2. pag. 627.

(b) Brantome, ubi ſupra, pag. 386.

ceiv'd at the Loſs of him (D) depriv'd her of Life ſoon after ‡. She had nam'd for her Succeſſor † René of Anjou, who had not Forces ſufficient to poſſeſs himſelf of the Kingdom; and therefore left to his Deſcendants only a bare Title. He was more fit to make a quiet State happy, than to quiet a diſturb'd one; and ſpent more time in Painting (DΔ) than in preparing for an Expedition. The true Succeſſor of this Princeſs was Alphonſo of Arragon; of whom I ſhall treat in the following Article. No Body will deny but this Queen diſhonour'd her ſelf greatly (E) by her Laſciviouſneſs. Brantome (F) vindicates her very ill. It was perhaps to expiate this Crime that ſhe was ſo kind to the

‡ The 2d of February 1435.

† He was Brother of Lewis.

(i) Serò nimis exiguæ tam patientis & obſequentis filii habitæ curæ, mortiſque ei ſummâ ingratitudine conciliatæ ingentibus gemitibus ſeſe incuſavit. Spondan. ad ann. 1434. n. 16.

(k) Petrus Alcyonius in Medice legato poſteriore de exilio.

(l) Matthew's Hiſtory of Lewis XI. Lib. 9. p. m. 503.

(a) Balzac in his Prince ch. 126. p. m. 88, 89.

(b) Scudery in his Illuſtrious Baſſa. Tom. 1. p. 326.

(c) Le Pays, Nouvelles œuvres 2 part. 1 Lib. Let. 35. pag. m. 71, 72.

(d) See Matthew ubi ſupra, and Ruffi. Hiſtory of Marſeilles. T. 1. p. 269, &c.

(e) He died in the Year 1480.

(f) Collenuccio, Lib. 5. ſub fin. fol. 100 verſ.

(g) Ubi ſupra, p. 39.

" formerly; through which means, being one Day at " a Banquet, which ſhe had prepared on purpoſe; " and ſeeing her Opportunity, ſhe gave the Watch- " word to her Friends and Accomplices, who on a " ſudden, riſing with great Clamours, ſeiz'd, kill'd " and plunder'd the French Officers, and clap'd up " the King in the Caſtle of Ovo. Being there, he " found means to eſcape to Taranto in a Genoeſe Ship " that happen'd then to be in the Port; which the Queen " hearing of, ſhe ſent to beſiege him; when, not " being able to hold out againſt her, he ſurrender'd " and got away into France, where, applying himſelf " to Religion, he turn'd Monk."

(D) The Grief ſhe conceiv'd at the Loſs of him, depriv'd her of Life.] Her Concern was the more afflicting, in that ſhe had not anſwer'd by a like Treatment, the Reſpect he had all along paid (i) her.

(DΔ) And ſpent more time in Painting, than in preparing for an Expedition.] See what an Italian Author ſays on this Head. (k) Qualis avorum memoria Renatus Neapolitanus Rex fuit. Hic enim picturæ maxime delectabatur, & ob ejus ſtudium res maximas conficere negligebat. Illum & familiares, & propinqui reguli admonebant, è dignitate regia non eſſe dies noctesque in pingendo conſumere, ſemperque tabellas contemplari, & de figuratione corporum diſceptare. Ad quos reſpondebat ſe non minus pictorem quam Regem natum eſſe. At quàm melius conſuluiſſet ſibi & poſteris ſuis, ſi tantam curam non egiſſet artis illius pulcerrimæ quidem, ſed Regibus nunquam admodum neceſſariæ, profectò ex illo regio ſolio non excidiſſet, nec privatus in Galliam Narbonenſem navigiſſet. Let us add to this Teſtimony another of a French Hiſtorian. " (l) He " ſpent his time upon Pictures ſo excellent (1) " that they are yet to be ſeen in the City of " Aix. He was painting a Partridge when News " was brought him of the Loſs of the Kingdom of " Naples, yet would not he give over his Work; ſo " much was his Mind ſet upon it." Balzac, having ſaid that Lewis XIII. had not miſpent his Time in Exerciſes unbecoming a King, adds theſe Words: (a) I do not doubt but he had read with a great deal of Contempt the Story of King René, laſt Earl of Provence, who was found finiſhing the Picture of a Partridge by him that brought him News of the Loſs of his Kingdom of Sicily; and I likewiſe aſſure my ſelf, that if Selym, Emperor of the Turks, had not in that Picture he made and publiſhed, repreſented a (1) Battle he had gain'd, this King would not eaſily have pardon'd him the making himſelf known to be a Painter. Mr de Scudery obſerves (b), that Selym ſent this Battle, painted with his own Hands, to the Venetians, who keep it to this Day in their Treaſury. This Occupation of Selym did no injury to his Memory, for it did not hinder him from Conquering; but a like Application diſhonour'd the good King René, who loſt almoſt all his Dominions. " (c) A certain Painter having ſeen a Picture of " this King René at Aix, ſaid wittily, 'twas a great " deal of pity René was a King, and that he had not " been a Painter by Trade." Obſerve the Inhabitants of Provence (d) were very happy under this Painting King, who liv'd a (e) long while.

(E) No Body will deny but this Queen diſhonour'd her ſelf greatly by her Laciviouſneſs.] Let us alledge firſt, the Words of Pandolfo Collenuccio: (f) Fama lascivo di le inſtabile e impudica, dicendoſi di lei, che nulla onestà ſola fu ſtabile, e che ſempre ne fusta innamorata, havendo in più modi e con molti la ſua laſciva macchiata; ma ſopra tutto con Pandolfello Alopo, e Urbano Auniglia, e M. Giovanni Caracciolo gran Siniſcalco, tutti tre Gentilhuomini, e molto deſti, virtuoſi, e coſtumati; ma ſopra ogni coſa di perſona e effigie vellisſima. Brantome (g) has tranſlated this after the following manner. " Now the Hiſtory of Naples ſays, this " Queen left behind her the Character of an unchaſte " and diſorderly Woman; inſomuch, that it was " ſaid of her, ſhe was conſtant only in inconſtancy, " and that ſhe was always in Love with ſome Body or " other, having many ways, and with many Perſons " made a Pleaſure of her Body:" Collenuccio is ſo well known for Partiality againſt the Houſe of Anjou, that not only the French Hiſtorians, but alſo ſome (h) Italians have cenſur'd his Virulency and Calumnies, and that chiefly in regard of Queen Joan I. But they let paſs, and even follow his account of Joan II. Is it not a plain ſign that the Irregularities of the former are doubtful; whereas thoſe of the latter are certain? The Paſſage I am going to quote is very curious: " As Ladiſlaus (i) was very lewd and exceedingly ha- " ted for his Cruelties, ſo was he poiſon'd after " a baſe manner, receiving his Death from the " very Source of his Pleaſure and Life. A Phyſi- " cian (k) perceiving his Familiarity with his Daugh- " ter, gave her a poyſonous Drug to rub her ſelf with- " al; which ſhe thought was only a Philtre to raiſe " a greater Deſire in her Lover, but it proved the " Cauſe of both their Deaths. The King's Siſter " Joan II Relict of William of Auſtria, ſucceeded " him. She was then four and forty Years old; " which Age far from abating her Paſſions, enflam'd " them to the greateſt degree." See what I quote from Spondanus (l); and alſo obſerve, that tho' the Jeſuit Maimbourg play'd ſo much the Panegyriſt and Apologiſt in favour of the firſt Joan, yet he confeſſes of this (m) that ſhe diſhonour'd her Reign by her exceeding ſcandalous Life; and that ſhe at length abandon'd both her Perſon and Kingdom to the Pleaſure of John Caracciolo, he of all her Favourites whom ſhe lov'd moſt.

(F) Brantome vindicates her very ill.] Theſe are his Words: " (n) The Hiſtory of Naples ſays, this " Queen .... was always in Love with ſome Body or " other, having many ways, and with many Perſons " made a Pleaſure of her Body; which is the leaſt " fault in a great and fair Princeſs: whereas when " ſhe is malicious, revengeful and tyrannical, as " many now a-days are, the People ſuffer more " thereby, than by her Amours; as I have heard " a great Man diſcourſe." 'Tis much after the ſame manner Paulus Jovius has endeavour'd to defend the voluptuous Life of Leo X. as I have formerly obſerv'd, where I made my Reflexions on ſuch kind of Apologies: To which I now add, there's a great deal of difference between the known Laſciviouſneſs of a King, and the ſcandalous Amours of a Queen. Without doubt 'twere much better for the Subjects that their Sovereign ſhould ſcandalize them with a great number of Baſtards, than load them with Taxes, and tyrannize over them: And it is very poſſible a Prince, inordinately given to Women, may preſerve order in his Dominions, make Juſtice and Commerce flouriſh, and no ways inure his Subjects. I confeſs alſo a People may be more happy under an unchaſte Queen, in caſe ſhe treats them gently and prudently, than under one that is chaſte, yet withal covetous, cruel and ambitious. But it ſeems to me morally impoſſible, that in a Country where the Laws of Religion and Honour are ſo ſevere againſt Female Unchaſtity, as they are in our Weſtern Parts of the World, a People ſhould be happy under a Queen that tramples under-foot Modeſty and Virtue, though proper to her Sex. The Indulgence we commonly have for the unlawful Amours of a Monarch, hinders us from concluding, that ſince he gives ſuch a Looſe to that Paſſion, he will likewiſe be incapable of governing himſelf in any other. Whereas the ſeverity of Honour againſt the moſt Impurities of a Woman of what Quality ſoever, induces us to believe, that a Queen who has tranſgreſs'd thoſe Bounds, will ſtop at no Excels whatſoever: She muſt neceſſarily have loſt all manner of Shame, be inſenſible of Glory, and have a mean Soul, that can reſolve to ſacrifice her Honour and Conſcience, together with a publick Eſteem, to a Criminal Paſſion, which ſhe has conceiv'd either for one of her Domeſticks or Vaſſals: Can the Subjects of ſuch a Princeſs have any Reſpect for her, after they have

(h) Tomaſo Coſto, Summonte, &c.

(i) Mezerai's Abridgment, Tom. 3. pag. 190. in the Year 1414. See alſo his Hiſtory at large. To 2. p. 627.

(k) Collenuccio relates this at large, ubi ſupra, fol. 93. and Brantome after him, ubi ſupra, p. 404.

(l) In the Remark G. Letter a.

(m) Maimbourg's Hiſtory of the great Schiſm of the Weſt. Book. 6. p. m. 284.

(n) Brantome, ubi ſupra. p. 395.

CONSIDERATIONS upon the unlawful Amours of QUEENS

the Church (G), and that ſhe permitted Capiſtran to vex the Jews. I have elſewhere ſpoken of Caracciolo, one of her Gallants. What Brantome has ſaid of her is taken from Collenuccio. I muſt here ſpeak a Word or two concerning (GΔ) Bartolomeo Coglione.

NAPLES (ALPHONSO I. King of) by his Vigour and Art join'd the Kingdom of Naples to the Dominions he inherited from his Father Ferdinand King of Arragon, who died in the Year 1416. Joan II. Queen of Naples, being beſieg'd in her Capital City by Lewis of Anjou, had recourſe to our Alphonſo, promiſing to adopt him for her Succeſſor, in caſe he could deliver her from her Enemies. Alphonſo, who had juſt then ſignaliz'd himſelf in Sardinia, would not let ſlip ſo fair an Opportunity of raiſing himſelf; therefore ſending a Fleet to Naples, he rais'd the Siege; and was thereupon adopted by the Queen in September 1420. This Friendſhip, nevertheleſs, between the Queen and her adopted Heir, did not laſt; for the Adoption was annull'd in June 1423, after many great Quarrels, which were at length converted into violent Hoſtilities. Hereupon Lewis III. of Anjou was adopted by the Queen, and Alphonſo thought fit to return for Spain: For this end he embark'd at Naples, in October 1423, and took Marſeilles in his way. This Conqueſt of his was due to the good Counſel that had been given him, to puſh his point after he had poſſeſs'd himſelf of the Harbour, and to attack the City all Night, not giving the Inhabitants time to recover out of their Aſtoniſhment. During his Abſence the Faction of Anjou got the upper-hand again at Naples; but as Queen Joan, who, to ſpeak Truth, was a Perſon of no great Conſideration, was ſurrounded by a ſort of People that minded only their own Intereſt, and were not a little inconſtant in their Inclinations, the Faction of Arragon regain'd its Force when it was the leaſt expected. Alphonſo then found himſelf immediately ſollicited to return. The Duke of Anjou died in November 1434, and Queen Joan followed him ſome few Months after. Now all ſa-have formed ſuch an Idea of her Life? Can they help having the laſt Contempt for her; and may not ſuch a Contempt produce many Seditions? Moreover, It is next to impoſſible but ſuch an unchaſte Conduct in a Queen muſt debauch all the Ladies of her Court, and likewiſe ſpread throughout her Kingdom a pernicious Neglect of that Decorum which all Women ought to obſerve. Then what was only deſpis'd before will immediately become odious and abominable to all that have any regard to the Publick Good. What can one expect will be the Conſequence of ſuch a Behaviour, but Factions and Revolts? The Libertinage of a Sovereign Prince is not liable to the ſame Inconveniences. Ambition, an Arbitrary Luſt of Power, a falſe Idea of Grandeur, have almoſt always had a greater ſhare in the Downfal of their Favourites, than Love: Whereas an amorous Queen is wholly plung'd into thoſe Diſorders, that debaſe her, by the Brutal Paſſion of carnal Pleaſure: Let us add this other Conſideration. A Queen that abandons her ſelf to her Gallants, becomes their Slave; ſhe can deny them nothing, and conſequently, properly ſpeaking, 'tis they, and not ſhe, that reign. Their Vain-Glory, and their other Paſſions, which are a Source of Diſorders, become yet more pernicious thro' the Jealouſies they raiſe in the Minds of the great Men. Endeavours are uſed to undermine them, they cabal, they retire, which does not a little exaſperate the People: Can any Subjects be happy under ſuch a Government? Experience confirms what I ſay, and Hiſtory has plenty of Examples, that ſhew the Miſerable Reigns of ſuch Queens, as have been inordinately amorous and unchaſte: What Troubles were there not in Naples during the Reigns of theſe two Joans? What Wars of all kinds? What Ravagings? Wherefore we may conclude, contrary to the Opinion of Brantome, that Unchaſtity in a Queen is a very blameable Vice, and a capital Defect; nay, ſuch as the People have no ſmall reaſon to apprehend ill Conſequences from.

A Lawyer of thoſe Times made this Quibble in Italian againſt the firſt Joan. She is, ſaid he, (p) not la Regina(q), but la Ruina of the Kingdom of Naples; and againſt the ſecond Joan there went a Prophetick Verſe, that ſhe ſhould be the Deſtruction of her Country. (r) Della quale un verſo profetico per il reame ſi diceva:

Ultima Durazzi fiet Deſtructio Regni.

This Lawyer was for the Salique Law: He (ſ) was not for admitting Women to the Throne. All things duly conſider'd, one would be oblig'd to confeſs, that the Statutes which permit Kingdoms to fall to the Diſtaff, have not been wiſely conceiv'd. It is not that Women have leſs Wit or leſs Capacity than Men: There have been ſome that have reign'd with ſo great Glory, and diſcover'd ſo great Wiſdom, Courage and Ability, that the greateſt of Kings have ſcarce deſerv'd to be compar'd with them. But then it may happen, that thoſe States which obſerve not the Salique Law, may expoſe themſelves to ſeveral Inconveniences for want of it: Of which this is not the leaſt, that he that marries the Heireſs of the Crown, is almoſt always upon the (3) Qui vive both with his Subjects and Queen. They, for the moſt part, look upon him only as their Queen's Husband; and ſhe is not diſpleas'd that they ſhould do ſo; nay, moſt commonly, even ſhe her ſelf does not allow him the Title of King. 'Tis from thence that many Diſorders aroſe in the Kingdom of Naples, during the Reign of the two Joans. Read in the Hiſtory of England the Reign of Queen Mary I. Wife of Philip II. The Father and Grandfather of the latter under went a like Tryal, the one in Spain, and the other in the Low Countries. Father le Moyne furniſhes me with a Supplement: He has refuted by very good reaſons the looſe Morality of Taſſo: (a) He ſuppoſes that that famous Poet being in Love with the Princeſs Eleonora d'Eſt, ſacrificed the Intereſts of Virtue to thoſe of his Paſſion, in maintaining that Chaſtity was not neceſſary to any but ordinary Women: This Wicked Philoſophy was vigorouſly attack'd, and among the other remarks on it, is this. (b) "The Publick decency is joyned to the honour of pri- "vate Perſons againſt that new Morality of Taſſo. Im- "purity is not only more filthy, and worſe in eminent "Perſons; 'tis alſo more contagious and of more dange- "rous Conſequence. An evil Example is an infected Air, "which there is reaſon always to fear, from whence "ſoever it comes, and what ever Wind drives it on: "But there is a more ſubtle Poiſon, and a more pene- "trating Malignity when it comes from great Fami- "lies; when it blows from a Mouth of Authority; "when it is carried in Habits of Silk and Gold: and if "at this time Princeſſes, and thoſe who approach their "Quality, ſhould declare for Taſſo's wicked Doctrine; "the next Day every Body would believe that it was "for their Honour to be gallant; and the Licence of "the Ladies would come into faſhion, as well as their "Cloaths and Head Dreſſes."

(G) To expiate this Crime that ſhe was ſo kind to the Church, and that, &c.] Spondanus ſays thus much expreſly, in relation to the ſmall Pomp ſhe ordered ſhe would be buried with. Sepulta eſt, ſays he, (a) in Eccleſia Virginis Annunciatæ ignobili ſepulturâ, ut ipſa juſſerat, in pœnitentiam luxurioſæ vitæ quâ vehementer infamata eſt. See what he adds in reſpect to the care ſhe took of the Chriſtian Faith. (b) Inter vitia quibus fœdata eſt, egit & multa pia opera, tam in Eccleſiarum quàm in ſtatus regni utilitatem, quæ Summontius Neapolitanus enumerat. Inter quæ ſunt, quod profeſſatem fecit Fr. Joanni Capiſtrano inſigni Ordinis S. Franciſci profeſſori, interdicendi Judæis uſuras & alia ab Eccleſia prohibita; & cogendi ferre ſignum Thau, ut dignoſcerentur à Chriſtianis. So furious a Zealot as was this Cordelier, who had been appointed Inſpector of the Conduct of the Jews, and who made them wear the Letter Thau, to diſtinguiſh them, might well be ſuppoſed withal to have made them undergo divers Vexations.

(GΔ) A Word or two concerning Bartolomeo Coglione.] He was one of the moſt famous Captains of his Time.

(p) Collenuccio, ubi ſupra. fol. 85. verſo.

(q) That is to ſay, not the Queen, but the Ruine.

(r) Id. ib. fol. 92. verſo.

(ſ) Ponendovi queſti due verſi in biaſimo del ſeminil governo. Regna regunt vulvæ, gens tota clamat ſimul, oh. veh. Interitus regni eſt à muliere regi. I quali verſi in vulgar noſtro ſuanono coſi, La vulva rege, ohime gridan le lingue, Il femminil governo il reg' o eſtingue. Id. fol. 8. verſo.

(3) Jealous of his Authority.

(a) Father le Moyne, Galer. des Femmes fortes. p. m^d 192.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 195.

(a) Spondan. ad. ann. 1435. n. 3. pag. 831. He had ſaid in the Year 1414. n. 6. p. 734. Succeſſit in regnum ſoror ejus Joanna hujus nominis ſecunda, vidua Guillelmi Auſtrii, annum agens jam 44. ſed amore cujuſdam Pandolfelli Alopi Neapolitani conſpicuâ formâ juvenis à multo tempore infamis.

(b) Id. ib. ad. ann. 1435. n. 3

" (c) He favour'd Alphonſo, although the People of Naples had already proclaim'd René of Anjou King, for he was no formidable Rival. France was very (A) unlucky at that time; but notwithſtanding all theſe favourable Appearances on the part of Alphonſo, the Beginnings of the Enterprize were very unfortunate. He firſt beſieged Gaeta, and was taken Priſoner in a Sea Fight † he loſt againſt the Genoeſes, who were come to relieve that Place. Then it was ſeen there are a ſort of People that cannot be wholly unfortunate, ſince good Fortune ſprings for them β even out of the midſt of Adverſity. The Duke of Milan was the chief Cauſe of Alphonſo's Elevation to the Throne of Naples: The Duke of Milan, I ſay, whoſe Priſoner Alphonſo now was, did not content himſelf with giving him his Liberty, but alſo furniſhed him with Troops for a Conqueſt of the Kingdom of Naples. But this was not the work of a Day: The Preſence of René of Anjou γ ſupported his Faction for ſome time; yet at length the City of Naples fell into the Hands of Alphonſo in the Year 1442, which was the ultimate Deciſion of the Difference. This Prince entered that City in Triumph after the manner of the Antient Romans, the 26th of February 1443, and found the Temper of Eugenius IV. very mild in his Reſpect. He had, 'tis true, been thwarted by that Pope ſo long as Fortune did not declare her ſelf; but ſo ſoon as ever ſhe had pronounced Sentence to the prejudice of France, Eugenius did not pretend to the Virtue of Cato δ, but immediately acknowledg'd Alphonſo to be the lawful Poſſeſſor of the Kingdom of Naples, in conſideration of a certain annual Tribute to be paid him. This Conqueſt procured Alphonſo a great Reputation, and gave him an Opportunity to make the Florentines, and ſome other People of Italy, feel the force of his Victorious Arms; ſo that he was careſſed by all the Princes who at that time fear'd the Ottoman Power. He met with ſo many Charms in Italy, that he had no Thoughts of returning to Arragon. He was a Prince throughly accompliſh'd, and who did great Honour to Spain *. He was a great lover (B) of Letters and Learned Men, and β See Jovian Pontanus de Principe fol. m. 62.

† The fifth of Auguſt 1435.

γ He arrived at Naples in the Month of May 1438.

δ Victrix Cauſa Diis placuit; Sed victa Catoni. Lucanus Lib. 1. v. 128.

* Princeps ſua ætate clariſſimus, nulli veterum poſthabendus, Hiſpaniæ gentis lumen decuſque perpetuum. Mariana l. 22. c. 18. See Vatillas's Hiſtory of Charles VIII. l. 2. p. 178. Edit. of Holland.

(c) Varillas, Anecdotes de Florence pag. 35.

" (c) He was born in the Neighboorhood of Bergamo, " and his Family had been almoſt entirely deſtroyed " in the Quarrel between the Guelphs and the Gibelins " He beg'd till he was eighteen Years old; when, coming to Naples, and no Body daring to diſpute " with him the Prize of Wreſtling or Running, by " reaſon of his prodigious Strength and incompa- " rable Agility, Queen Joan II. who valu'd Men only " for their Vigour, made him her Minion. But he " was quickly weary of this infamous Employment, " and conſequently ſtealing from the Court, went to " learn the Exerciſe of Arms under the famous Braccio." It will not be amiſs to acquaint the Reader that the ſame Relation is to be met with among the Panegyricks of Paulus Jovius, ſince the bare Authority of the French Hiſtorian would not be ſufficient to hinder us from doubting the Truth of it. See the Words of the Original he has made uſe of. Fuit Coleo corporis ſtatura erecta atque habili, adeoque formoſus atque agilis ut Reginæ Joannæ, ingenio proca i mulier, avidaque virorum fortium Co'conis amore caperetur, quam ea ſpectante cenſtis in palæſtra jactuque ferrei veſtis & ſaltu curſuque certantes cum magno ſpectantium plauſu ſuperaret (d).

(d) Jovius Elogior. virorum bellica virture Illuſtrium, Lib. 3. p. m. 237.

You may hereby come to underſtand the Nature of this Queen: During the Solemnity of a publick Show, ſhe ſpies an Adventurer of a good Mien, and good Complexion, who bore away the Prize of Wreſtling, Running and Jumping, from all thoſe that contended with him; who, in a word, threw the Javelin farther than any other could do, which the perceiving, waits for no better Tryal, but immediately chuſes him for her Favourite. To her therefore may be apply'd the Fable of the Mare, related in the Mercure Galant of the Year 1673, which, as I remember, concludes with this Moral Stanza.

Maintes connois qui trompent à leur mine,
Et ſont du goût de la jument,
Il n'importe qu'il ait comment,
Pourveu qu'il ait bon rable & bonne echine.

(A) France was very unlucky at that Time.] It is permitted us at this Day to ſay of Fortune what the Pagans ſaid, who did not underſtand by that Word, with the ſame Evidence as we have, a Direction of the moſt wiſe and juſt Hand of God, we ſhould be apt to accuſe her of too great Partiality towards Spain againſt France; for 'tis not poſſible to read the Hiſtory of the XV and XVI. Century, where it treats of the Affairs of Italy, without obſerving the Aſcendant and Superiority the former had over the latter; which ought alſo at this Day to give Confuſion to the French, and Pride to the Spaniards. But herein the Providence of God ought to be admired: He is the common Father of all People, and thoſe Temporal Bleſſings he affords one Nation in one Century, he deprives them of in the next. The XV. and XVIth. Centuries brought good to Spain, and the XVIIth. took it away from them: The Aſcendant and Superiority of France was reſerved for that Age. I only clear and paraphraſe on the Text of Mariana; (e) Sic fortuna ludit in rebus humanis: ſic nos noſtraque verſamur. Aragonio nimirum cælum viam ad regnum ſtruebat cui nihil eſt arduum.... Multum ei familiæ (Andegavenſi) ſuperi per hæc tempora adverſati videntur, Gallorum genti infenſi, ac Aragoniis propitii. Sed eſt fere ut aliarum rerum ſic felicita'is orbis: per varias gentes atque familias inerrat, nulli propria (f). What may comfort France, is, that it was even then thought infinitely more formidable than Spain; and conſequently ſtronger Leagues were made to hinder her eſtabliſhing her ſelf in Italy, than to hinder Spain from making any Conqueſt in that Country. The Princes of Italy hop'd to be able to put a ſtop to the Spaniards, but deſpair'd to reſiſt the Efforts of the French. For this reaſon at all Times, and in this Age more than ever, the Leagues againſt France will be difficult to be diſſolved, the Fear of each Member ſerving for a good Cement to unite them the ſtronger.

(e) Mariana l. 21. c. 7.

(f) Confer quæ Horatius Od. 29. Lib. 3. Fortuna ſæ vo læta negotio & Ludum inſolentem ludere pertinax, Tranſmutat incertos honores, Nunc mihi nunc alii benigna.

Whilſt (g) this Page was reprinting I came to underſtand, by the publick News, that a Duke of Anjou ſecond Son to the Dauphin of France, ſucceeds not only to the Crown of Naples, but likewiſe to all the Dominions of the Monarchy of Spain. This confirms what I have ſaid concerning the XVIIth Century's bringing on the Turn of France; ſince it is an Age, whoſe laſt Year confers on a Prince of the Blood Royal of that Kingdom the whole Dominions of (a) the King of Spain.

(g) This was writ the 25*th of* November 1700.

(a) Charles II. who died the firſt of November 1700.

(B) He was a great Lover of Letters and Learned Men.] Over and above what ſhall be related in the following Remark, I ought to let you know here that he honour'd, with a particular Eſteem, Laurentius Valla, Antonius Panormita, Georgius Trajezuntius, and Bartholomeus Facius: But I had rather let Mariana ſpeak, whoſe Words are, (b) Literas in pretio habuit, viriſque eruditione præſtantibus tantum tribuit, ut iis ſe inclinata quamvis ætate recognoſcendum præberet. Laurentio Vallæ familiariter eſt uſus, Antonio Panhormita, Georgio Trajezuntio immortali laude viris. Bartholomæum Facium cujus extant de rebus Alf nſi commentarii, menſe novembri ſuperioi (c) extinctum tulit ægerrimè. Philelphus having brought him his Satyrs, return'd loaded with Preſents, and honour'd with an Order of Knighthood. (d) Philelphum poetam ad ſe ſatyras diutiſſime evigilatas deferentem illaſque canentem ac prope agentem, non prius quam militiæ honore decoratum præmiſque auctum remiſit. He held a Correſpondence by Letters with Leonard Aretin, and endeavoured to bring him to his Court: But the old Age and bad Health of that Learned Man would not permit him to benefit himſelf by thoſe Offers. Poggius a Florentine tranſlated the Cyropædia of Xenophon, by King Alphonſo's Order; and was conſiderably rewarded for it. In a Word; this Prince brought to his Court, from the moſt remote Countries, a great number of Learned Divines, and advanced ſome of them to the moſt conſiderable Imployments. His Court was full of Learned Men, who all ſhar'd in (b) Mariana l. 22. c. 18.

(c) That is to ſay in 1457.

(d) Anton. Panormit. de Dict. & Fact. Alphonſi. l. 3. n. 11.

and many extraordinary Things (C) have been related of him on that account. He died at Naples the 27th of June 1458, aged 64 Years ‡, leaving his Dominions in Spain to his Brother, and the Kingdom of Naples to his Baſtard Son, Ferdinand ‖. What Mr Moreri ſays is not true, viz. "That Antony of Palermo wrote a very exact Hiſtory of "King Alphonſo, entituled, De Factis & Dictis Alphonſi Regis"; for the Work that bears this Title is nothing but a Collection of pleaſant Repartees, witty Sayings, and ſome extraordinary Actions of this Prince: And altho' there may appear divers Particulars of his Life in the ſeveral Circumſtances wherein he has ſaid or done theſe Things; yet cannot ſuch a Work be properly term'd An exact Hiſtory of this King. 'Tis a ſtrange Negligence of Paulus Jovius: He was ignorant that Alphonſo (D) was eldeſt Son of Ferdinand King of Arragon; and that he was (E) married, and reigned much above twenty two Years. Mr Varillas, without doubt, meant this Prince in his Preface to his Anecdotes, ‡ Jovius Pontan. de Bell. Neapol. l. 1.

‖ Taken out of the Hiſtory of Spain of Mariana.

his Liberality. He (e) maintain'd many poor Scholars of good hopes (f), at his Expence. I had almoſt forgot Bracellius (g), who was one of the Learned Men of his Court, and who left a Hiſtory of the Wars of this Monarch.

(C) And many extraordinary Things have been related of him on that account.] During an Indiſpoſition he labour'd under at Capua, every one brought ſuch Things to him as they thought might divert him. Antonius Panormita (h) made choice of Books, and brought among others Quintus Curtius: Hereupon this Prince hearkn'd with ſo great Pleaſure to the Hiſtory of Alexander the Great, that he was in a manner cur'd by it the firſt Day; which greatly ſurpriz'd the Phyſicians. He continu'd this Exerciſe thrice every Day, till ſuch time as Panormita had read the Book through: Whereupon he rail'd the Phyſicians, laugh'd at their Avicenna, and loaded Quintus Curtius with Praiſe. Being told there was an Epitaph in old Characters on the Tomb of Cicero, near Formium, he could not be at reſt till he had ſeen it; therefore cauſing himſelf immediately to be tranſported thither, he tore away the Buſhes that grew about the Sepulchre with his own Hands: But he found not the Name of Cicero, but that of one M. Vitruvius. (i) Quod rex ut primum accepit lætitia pene perditus ire nihil cunctatus eſt, & ſentibus rubiſque primo tumulum purgans mox legere inceptans, non M. Tullii, ſed M. Vitruvii epigramma eſſe comperit. At the Siege of Gaeta (k), when he was told there was no more of thoſe large Stones with which he loaded his Mortars to be had, but at an old Country Seat, which, according to the Tradition of thoſe Parts, had once belong'd to Cicero; he anſwer'd, he would rather chuſe to let his Artillery be uſeleſs, than to profane any thing that had belong'd to that great Man. We ſhall ſee elſewhere (l) the Reſpect he had for Livy, and the Honour he paid to that great Author, and (m) the Country of Ovid. He collected (n) with great care the Medals of the Roman Emperors, and above all thoſe of Julius Cæſar, keeping them in an Ivory Box, almoſt as choicely as Reliques. He always carried (o) along with him the Commentaries of Cæſar, and never let a Day paſs without reading ſomething of them attentively. He took (p) for his Device, An open'd Book. His Soldiers (q) knew ſo well his Paſſion for Books, that whenever they plunder'd any place they ſtrove which ſhould carry him ſome ſooneſt. One Day, as ſome Body was talking of the Loſs of precious Things, he proteſted (r) he had rather loſe all his Jewels, of how great value ſoever, than the meaneſt of his Books. He always caus'd ſeveral to be laid about his Bed; and when-ever he wak'd, would order ſome one to be given him to read. He would ſometimes go on Foot (s) to the Lectures of Profeſſors, though never ſo diſtant from his Palace: He eſteemed (v) that Day loſt which he had ſpent without reading ſomething; and would not ſuffer a time allotted for a Lecture to be any otherwiſe employ'd, though he had never ſo much Buſineſs on his Hands. (w) Antonio poetæ incredibili quadam voluptate operam dabat, aliquid ex priſcorum annalibus referenti, quinetiam veterum ab eo ſcriptorum lectiones ſingulis diebus audiebat, ac licet multis magniſque interim gravaretur curis, nunquam tamen paſſus eſt horam libro dictam à negociis auferri. He had read the Bible (x), with the Gloſs and Commentaries upon it, fourteen times, and could remember abundance of Paſſages in it. Finding one Day his Library ſhut (y), and not having Patience to wait his Library-Keeper's return, he took an Inſtrument to break open the Door; which ſurprizing the Standers-by, one of them ask'd, If his Majeſty would condeſcend to do that with his own Hands? To which he anſwer'd; What! do you think God and Nature has given Kings Hands for no uſe? He always read with ſo great Attention (z) that no Dancing or Sound of Inſtruments ſeem'd to diſturb him: An Inſtance of this we have in the extraordinary Attention he gave to a certain piece of Eloquence. Jannot Manetti (aa) Deputy of the Florentines, making him one Day a learned and long Harangue, the King not only had his Eyes all along fix'd upon him, but alſo ſtood ſo motionleſs that he did not drive away a Flie that had plac'd it ſelf on his Noſe from the beginning of the Harangue: The Orator could not ſufficiently admire this Patience; but as ſoon as he had done ſpeaking Alphonſo, drove away the Flie, which he ſuffer'd to be at quiet during all that long, but charming Diſcourſe. One would now a-days laugh at ſuch a ſight; and I believe there were Perſons in thoſe Times of the ſame Temper.

(e) Ex Anton. Panormit. ib. l. 2. ſub fin.

(f) Ibi l. n. 52.

(g) Et qui bellorum ejus hiſtoriam non illepidè perſcripſit Bracellius Ligur. Jovius elog. l. 3.

(h) See his Work, de Dictis & Factis Alphonſi. l. 1. n. 43.

(i) Ib. n. 47.

(k) Ibid. n. 48.

(l) In the Article of Titus Livius.

(m) In the Article of that Poet.

(n) Idem. Anton. Panormit. ib. l. 2. n. 12.

(o) Ib. n. 13.

(p) ibid. n. 14.

(q) Ibid. n. 15.

(r) Idem l. 4. n. 34.

(s) Cum libris ſub ſponda ſolitum dormire regem ſcimus experrectum illos cum lumine poſcere ac lectitare.

(t) Ibid. n. 31.

(v) Ibid. l. 1. n. 39.

(w) Diem illam in qua nihil legeret ſe perdidiſſe dicebat. Sed & cum auditet Veſpaſianum Cæſarem (he ſhould have ſaid Titum) eam diem ſe perdidiſſe ſolitum dicere in qua nihil quicquam alicui donaſſet, egiſſe gratias rex dicitur immortali Jeſu Chriſto, quod eo modo nec diem ipſe perdidiſſet. Ib. n. 16.

(x) Panorm. ib. n. 17. Gratiani de caſib. vir. p. 19. ſays quadragies: he is miſtaken.

(y) Panor. ib. n. 37.

(z) Idem. l. 4. n. 15.

(aa) Idem l. 1. n. 46.

(D) That Alphonſo was the eldeſt Son of Ferdinand.] This is what Mariana obſerves in expreſs Terms, whoſe Words I ſhall relate becauſe they contain ſomething that belongs to the Life of our Alphonſo. Interea, ſays he, (a) Valentiæ Rex Aragonius Alfonſi MAJORIS filii nuptias inſigni celebrabat apparatu... Sponſam è Caſtella Sanctius Rogius deduxit... nuptiæ confectæ pridie Idus Junii. In the following Chapter he ſpeaks after this manner. Alfonſum NATUM MAXIMUM regni hæredem ſcripſit. The Words of Antonius Panormita deſerve alſo a place here becauſe they contain a ſingular Paſſage. "Ferdinandus pater & ipſe inclytus "rex, moriens Alphonſum filium iis pene verbis allo-"locutus fertur; optime fili, quoniam regna quæcunque "dum Deo placuit obtinui, ad te ÆTATIS PRÆROGA-"TIVA deferri & ſcio & volo, optavim eas modo terras "quas ea parte Hiſpaniæ quam Caſtellam vocitant habe-"mus, Joanni fratri tuo, ſi modo per te liceat, relinque-"re. Quod ne moleſtè feras ais te peto, & ſi pateris "etiam rogo" Ferdinand has a mind to leave ſome Lands to his younger Son, and entreats in a manner Alphonſo to conſent to it: Alphonſo anſwers like a Hero, that if his Father be pleas'd, he conſents with all his Heart, that his Brother ſhall not only inherit ſome Lands, but the Crown likewiſe; and that for his part he does not pretend to ſucceed to it any otherwiſe than through Grace and Favour. (b) Ego, mi pater ac domine, ſatis intelligo iſthæc regna & tua ferè omnia ad me quidem pertinere, ſed non aliter quam beneficio tuo. Idcirco & pluris ſemper voluntatem tuam & feci & faciturus ſum, quam ætatis privilegium. Imo vero ſi pro tua ſingulari prudentia regnis ita demum proſpicere iri conſultum, ſi Joannem regni ſucceſſorem reliqueris, nihil recuſo, quin ipſum vel ad omnia inſtituas hæredem: non aliter (mihi credas velim) voluntati per me tuæ uſque ad poſtremum ſpiritum parebitur, quàm divinæ. Muſt it not now be acknowledg'd that Paulus Jovius took a great deal of care to inform himſelf (c) of the Qualities of thoſe whoſe Panegyricks he wrote? I am not very far from believing that he thought it better a younger Son ſhould become a King, than an elder conquer another Kingdom.

(a) Mariana. lib 20. c. 7. ad ann. 1415. pag. 223. edit. Mogunt. 1619. in 4.

(b) Antonii Panormitanus de dictis & factis Alphonſi lib. 2. n. 30.

(E) And that he was married.] We have already quoted Mariana on this Head: Now follows a ſecond Teſtimony, which will inform us that Alphonſo met with an excellent Wife. "(d) Acceperat aliquando à "Maria ſingularis exempli uxore literas quas cum ſemel "atque iterum attentiſſimè perlegiſſet, mox inquit, "inſtitueram olim nihil de uxore extra thalamum dicere, "ne benedicens uxorius aut immodeſtior haberer. At "nunc mihi proſus mutandum conſilium, & quidvis "homines obloquantur quocunque in trivio curque obvio, "ſine modo & modeſtia de uxoris virtute atque conſtan-"tia prædicandum." He once reſolv'd never to ſpeak

(c) Ad magnum imperium novumque regnum... vehementiſſimè contendebat, poſtquam ipſum naturæ jus ad Joannem fratrem majorem natu paterni Tarraconenſis imperii hæreditatem detuliſſet. Jovius elog. bellicæ virt. illuſtr. l. 3.

(d) Panormit. ubi

any

lates, though he denoted him by a falſe Chronology. What he ſays of him (F) is very curious. It is falſe that our Alphonſo ſent Aſſiſtance to Scanderbeg for the Siege of Belgrade; and if he once informed him that the Italians were not leſs formidable to their Friends than their Enemies, this nevertheleſs was not (G) at the time of that Siege. He was a greater King than a good Huſband; and in his old Age he had a Concubine, whom he would (H) have married, if he could have known how to divorce his Wife.

I have juſt hit upon a Paſſage which ſeems to me very curious, and learns us the (I) Cauſe any thing of the Merit of his Wife, leaſt he might be thought too fond of her, a thing Perſons of his Rank have little reaſon to fear; but having receiv'd a certain Letter from her, he chang'd his Mind, and would be talking of her Virtues on all occaſions. This Deſign was both good and honeſt, but then he ſhould have remembred her in his Will, where there was not the leaſt mention made of her: On which account Hiſtory ſays he would have repudiated her, that he might marry a Concubine. (e) Reginæ nullâ mentione factâ: fama fuit & magni viri teſtantur ea repudiata Lucretiam Alaniam pellicem ducere cogitaſſe. This Concubine was in hopes the Pope would have conſented to her Marriage, and therefore took a Journey on purpoſe to Rome, with the Equipage of a Queen; but ſhe obtain'd not what ſhe deſir'd (f): Others ſay only, that Alphonſo would have married her, if his Queen had been dead. This Lucretia was a fair Neapolitan, who knew ſo well how to cajole the good old King, that ſhe obtain'd of him what ever ſhe deſir'd (g) Hæc eſt illa Lucretia, cujus per orbem terrarum amores fuere quàm notiſſimi. Eam Alphonſus adamatam propter formæ quæ præſtabat excellentiam, ſuaviſſimis etiam puellæ illecebris ſenex ipſe delinitus, divitiis, opibus, authoritate ita extulerat, ut plerique arbitraventur, ſi Maria vita exceſſiſſet, legitimæ uxoris eam loco habiturum. I know not well of what Woman thoſe two Daughters were born which Alphonſo married advantageouſly, one to the Duke of Ferrara, and the other to the Duke of Seſſa (h). Mariana agrees that Incontinence (i) was a Fault in Alphonſo. Ferdinand, who ſucceeded him in the Kingdom of Naples, was a Baſtard he had in Spain (k), and who had no great reaſon to have any kindneſs for Lucretia, the laſt Concubine of Alphonſo; ſince ſhe embraced (l) the Faction of Anjou. Now is it not ſtrange that Paulus Jovius ſhould talk of the Celibacy of this Prince? (m) In cælibatu ſingularem eamque pauci incompertam liberi & tranquilli animi felicitatem repoſuit, ſic ut cum nunquam pœnituerit connubia rejeciſſe, quem filium Ferdinandum regiæ indolis ex nobili concubina in ſpem regni ſuſceperat. Antonio Maria Gratiani was not in the ſame Error with Paulus Jovius, but he was not in a much leſs: He believ'd Alphonſo ſoon became a Widower. (n) Ex uxore quam juvenis duxit Caſtellæ Regis propinqui filia liberos non tulit, eaque brevi amiſſa cælebs inde permanſit.

(F) What Mr. Varillas ſays is very curious.] "(o) Never King was ſo concern'd at what ſhould be ſaid of "him after his Death, as was the laſt Alphonſo, who "wore the Crown of Naples. He not only labour'd to "get Battels, and do ſuch Actions as had much of "the Roman in them; but alſo made it his buſineſs to "ſeek out ſuch Pens as might be able to record and "embelliſh them. There was hardly anyone that was "famous, but attempted this Subject; and thoſe that "ſucceeded receiv'd from him Penſions or Preferments in "whatſoever Country of Europe they liv'd: Nevertheleſs, there was never any Monarch whoſe Deteſts "have been more particulariz'd than his. The leaſt "Circumſtance of his Weakneſſes is not unknown; "and one may read as long as one will in Pontanus, "Panormita, Benedicti, and ſixty four other Hiſtorians, that he poſſeſs'd all the great Qualities that "can make a Hero; for no Body will believe it; and "People are rather apt to hearken to Bernardino Corio, "who attributes to him only ordinary Qualities, "though this Corio was but a pitiful Hiſtorian." Now I cannot perſwade my ſelf that this relates to the laſt Alphonſo, Son of Ferdinand the Baſtard; for on one hand his Reign was ſo ſhort (p) it could not allow him time to make all thoſe Searches after Hiſtorians Mr. Varillas ſpeaks of; and on the other, this Prince was ſo openly vicious, and unprovided of thoſe great Qualities, that could make any amends for great Vices, that he was not a Subject proper for ſo many flattering Hiſtorians to paint an Hero by. It muſt then be Alphonſo the Grand father, whom one may look upon as ſuſceptible of ſuch ſort of Accounts. See what Mr. Varillas has ſaid (q) of the laſt Alphonſo, after having given a ſtrange Relation of the Life of Ferdinand. "There remains only to re- "mark that his Son Alphonſo II. imitated and even "ſurpaſſed him in that he had leſs care to conceal his "Vices: He obſerv'd neither Divine nor Humane "Laws; and no Body could have known he was a "Chriſtian, but becauſe he had been baptiz'd: The Ra- "viſhing Ladies of the greateſt Quality and Virtue, "paſs'd with him for Gallantry. He gave to Violence "the Name of his Prerogative; and it is held for cer- "tain, that it was he that counſell'd his Father to "maſſacre the Senators of Naples in the Church of "St. Leonard." Would any one ſay of ſuch a Prince, as Mr. Varillas does of him he ſpeaks of in the Preface to his Anecdotes, that an Hiſtorian who was no Flatterer, has particulariz'd his Deteſts to us, has informed us of the leaſt of his Weakneſſes, and the like? Without doubt the Author of the Anecdotes meant the King of Naples, whom we treat of in this Article; but then he ſhould not have deſcrib'd him by theſe Words, The laſt Alphonſo who wore the Crown of Naples; for if we look upon, as nothing, Alphonſo II. his Grandſon, then would there be only one Alphonſo King of Naples; and conſequently 'twould be to no purpoſe to call him the Laſt.

(G) It was not at the time of that Siege.] However unexcuſable ſoever my Reader is, he will be apt to gueſs there may be Hiſtorians that affirm what I deny in the Text of this Remark: But as every one is not able to know thoſe Hiſtorians, 'tis neceſſary that I ſhould tell it. See then what I find in a Quotation out of Baylet, in the Hiſtory of (a) Mahomet II. "Scanderbeg undertook "the Siege of Belgrade, a City of Albania, which the "Turks had taken from him. The better to "bring his Intent about, he beſought the Aſſiſtance of "Alphonſo King of Naples, the moſt zealous of his "Allies; demanding of him, among other Things, "Miners and Gunners; and telling him pleaſantly "enough and with a Freedom an old Friend might aſ- "ſume, that the Albanian Soldiers were only fit to fight "with Men; whereas he knew the Italians were able "to force Stone Walls. Hereupon Alphonſo ſent him "both Men, Money and Artillery, adding, by way of "Anſwer, agreeably enough, That the Italians that "were come to join him were not only proper to fight "with Men and Walls, but alſo to triumph over the "Ladies of Albania; and therefore adviſed him to let "his Country-men take care they did not entertain Do- "meſtick Enemies, inſtead of Foreign Friends. "Scanderbeg ſhew'd this Anſwer to his Army, and "laugh'd heartily at it. But he had reaſon to repent "of his beſieging Belgrade, for never Enterprize of "his was ſo unſucceſsful." 'Tis plain here muſt be a miſtake; for in 1465, when this Letter is ſaid to have been ſent, there was no King of Naples that had the Name of Alphonſo.

(H) He had a Concubine whom he would have married.] This appears by the Paſſage I have formerly quoted out of Mariana (b): But do not believe, becauſe of the amorous Slips of this Prince, that his Reader (c) has told an Untruth; where he tells the World, that his Maſter never uttered a ſmutty Word, nor ever diſcovered certain Parts of his Body to be ſeen. All Licentiouſneſs has its bounds: Laciviouſneſs does not always extend it ſelf to the Tongue and the Eyes; and 'tis not impoſſible but Alphonſo and Lucretia might have reciprocally kept their Age from each other's amorous Myſteries. It would ſignify little to alledge, that where one grants the moſt, one grants the leaſt, ſince there are good Anſwers to be given to ſuch an Objection. See the Captain Lucas (d) of Sebaſtian Rouhaut. Our King Alphonſo the Eighth (e) there was no greater Folly than to look for a Wife after he had Eloped, hos maxime inſanire dicebat qui uxorem à gige ſibi fugitivam petere vellent. This ſhews he would not have taken ſo much pains in Caſe Queen Mary his Wife had left him. He could not therefore be ſuppoſed to love her extraordinarily.

(a) By Mr. Guillet. Tom. 2. p. 83. ad Ann. 1465. He quotes Barlet. l. 6. f. 8.

(b) In the Remark E, Letter e.

(c) Antonius Panormitanus had this charge with King Alphonſo: See what he ſays in the Life 41. of his 4th Book. Ab ore Alphonſi nunquam omnino cerebum obſcœnum cucullo ſcimus, nunquam interiora membrorum eius quempiam vidiſſe.

(d) In the 48th page you may read theſe Words: Le force & contraint à leur honte commune de reveler ce vergogneux ſecret de mariage; quod vellet factum ſic appetit. Sint, ut tamen celetur. and at the tenth page there, Sit ut lovdroue defend a la femme de ne jetter les yeux ou les mains petulantes ou la honte de ſon mary ſe cache, à mondre raiſon doit il ne ſe permis à l'homme de divulguer qu'elle ait ſeulement de celles de ſon ſexe. Nam etiam (Divit Quintilian) ſocietate conjugali omnia adeo miſcentur, ut arcanum non habeat aliquid ſecretum.

(e) Pontan. l. 4. n. 8.

(f) Mariana. ib.

(g) Pontanus de Bello Neapolit. l. 2. fol. m. 145. verſo.

(h) Gratianus de Caſibus virorum illuſtrium. P. 24.

(i) Id maxime intemperantiæ vitium in Alfonſi moribus accuſare licet. Mariana. ibid.

(k) Alfonſo mortuo Ferdinandus ſuccedit quem hæredem in regno Neapolitano Pater inſtituerat, natum Valentiæ in Hiſpania exteriore, atque ex muliere ſuſceptum quam Valentiæ cum ageret in deliciis habuiſſet. Portanus ib. lib. 1. fol. 103.

(l) Idem fol. 145.

(m) Voſſius ſupra.

(n) Gratian. ubi ſupra.

(o) Varillas Preface to the Anecdotes of Florence.

(p) It laſted about a Year.

(q) In the Life of Charles VIII. l. 3. pag. 281. Edit. of Holland.

(a) Mariana. l. 22. c. 18.

(b) Mariana. ib.

(c) Pontanus de Bello Neapolit. l. 2. fol. m. 145. verſo.

(d) Gratianus de Caſibus virorum illuſtrium. P. 24.

(e) Id maxime intemperantiæ vitium in Alfonſi moribus accuſare licet. Mariana. ibid.

(f) Alfonſo mortuo Ferdinandus ſuccedit quem hæredem in regno Neapolitano Pater inſtituerat, natum Valentiæ in Hiſpania exteriore, atque ex muliere ſuſceptum quam Valentiæ cum ageret in deliciis habuiſſet. Portanus ib. lib. 1. fol. 103.

(g) Idem fol. 145.

(h) Voſſius ſupra.

(i) Gratian. ubi ſupra.

(k) Varillas Preface to the Anecdotes of Florence.

(l) It laſted about a Year.

(m) In the Life of Charles VIII. l. 3. pag. 281. Edit. of Holland.

(I) Cauſe of the miſunderſtanding between Alphonſo and his Queen. We muſt ſay ſome thing of his (K) Deſcendants, and of the Pretenſions of the Houſe of (L) Trimouille.

NARNI, an Italian Capuchin, and a great Preacher, flouriſh'd about the beginning of the XVIIth. Century. Some think Balzac (A) ſpoke of him in the Paſſage that ſhall

(I) The Cauſe of the Miſunderſtanding between Alphonſo and his Queen.] Don John Vitrian, who has added many Notes to his Spaniſh Verſion of the Memoirs of Philip de Comines, maintains, that a very jealous Humour in a Woman often does a King a great deal of Service. (f) Paſion es ella de los celos y ſoſpechas, que à las Damas ſuele quitar el juicio, y à los Principes darlo en lo concerniente à ſu imperio. Donna Juana of Caſtile, adds he, loſt her good Senſe by giving way to a Jealouſy of her Husband, Don Philip, one of the fineſt Gentlemen in the World. The Queen, Donna Maria of Arragon, was a Woman of extraordinary Judgment, yet a like Jealouſy made her commit a Thouſand Extravagancies. She caus'd Donna Margarita d' Ixar, one of her Maids of Honour, and who was accounted the Mother of Ferdinand I. King of Naples, to be ſtrangled, as alſo Lopez de Concut, whom ſhe ſuſpected of being the Miniſter to her Husband King Alphonſo V's Amours; which occaſion'd that King (g) to go to Naples, where he died without ever ſeeing her more: So that this may be a reaſon why he made no mention of her in his Will. Let us conclude, that the reciprocal Diſguſt to each other muſt have been very great, ſince it could make him rather abandon his Kingdom of Arragon, than live with his Wife; and her to chuſe rather to forego any ſhare in the Crown of Naples, than to return to her Husband. It was very fortunate for Alphonſo that he could make himſelf amends for the Dominions he quitted beyond the Pyrenées; but, it may be, if he had not met with ſo good a Reception at Naples, he would have rather choſen to paſs the remainder of his Days like a Knight-Errant, than conſent to reign in Arragon with his Queen. The Neceſſity of living under the Bonds of Wedlock is ſometimes ſo irkſome, that a Man would rather chuſe to go to the end of the World. (h) Ultra Sauromatas fugere hinc libet & glacialem Oceanum.

(f) Vitrian, in his Notes upon Philip de Comines, Chap. 1. Letter E, pag. 2.

(g) Le hizo irſe à Napoles, y morir ſin jamas verla. Id. ib. pag. 3.

(h) Juven. Sat. 2. v. 1.

(K) Say ſomething of his Deſcendants.] Ferdinand I. his natural Son ſucceeded him, and was married twice, firſt to Iſabella of Clermont, and afterwards to Joan Siſter to the King of Spain. The Children by his firſt Wife were Alphonſo Duke of Calabria, Frederick Prince of Altamura, John a Cardinal, Francis Duke of St. Angelo, Donna Beatrix Wife of Matthew King of Hungary, and Donna Leonora Dutcheſs of Ferrara. He had only one Daughter by his ſecond Wife, viz. Donna Giovanna, whom he married to King Ferdinand II. his Nephew. He had likewiſe ſome Baſtards, and reign'd 35 Years, dying in the beginning of the Year 1494, aged 71 Years.

(i) Taken out of Tomaſo Coſto, in his Book, entituled, Nomi delle Provincie citra ... del regno di Napoli, dei Re che vi regnarono con le lor diſcendenze figurate in alberi &c.

Alphonſo II. Duke of Calabria, and his eldeſt Son, ſucceeded him, being married to Hippolita Maria, Daughter of Francis Sforza Duke of Milan; by whom he had two Sons and one Daughter: His Sons were Don Ferdinand and Don Pietro; his Daughter was Donna Iſabella Dutcheſs of Milan. His three Baſtards were Don Alphonſo Duke of Biſegli, Don Cæſar, and Donna Sancha Wife of Geofrey Borgia. The Dread he had of Charles VIII. of France, made him reſign his Dominions to his eldeſt Son Ferdinand. He reign'd about a Year.

Ferdinand II. ſucceeded, by the Abdication of his Father Alphonſo; and was driven out of his Kingdom by the French, but re-eſtabliſh'd by the Aſſiſtance of the Great Captain, yet he died ſoon after in 1495. He left no Children: He had married his Aunt Donna Giovanna.

(k) The common Orthography is thus; but the true and antient way of Spelling the Word is Tremoille.

Frederick Son of Ferdinand I. ſucceeded Ferdinand II. and was depriv'd of his Dominions in the Year 1501, without either he or any of his Childrens being able to re-eſtabliſh themſelves (i).

(l) A Memorial containing the Right of Mr. de la Tremoille to the Kingdom of Naples, pag 2 & ſeq. 1664.

(L) The Pretenſions of the Houſe of (k) Trimouille.] To diſcover the bottom of this, I need only produce the Extract of a Memorial which ſhews what the Fate of King Frederick and his Family was.

" (l) This Prince, after he had reigned ſome " Years, was ſo unfortunate, that Lewis XII. of France, " and Ferdinand King of Arragon, ſir-named the Ca- " tholick, agreed to diſpoſſeſs him: Hereupon their " Armies enter'd his Kingdom, made themſelves Ma- " ſters of it, and divided it.

" The King ſeeing himſelf thus diſpoſſeſs'd, choſe " rather to truſt to Lewis XII whoſe Probity was u- " niverſally known, than to Ferdinand the Catholick: " Wherefore he retir'd into France, where he died.

" Frederick was twice married, firſt to Anne of Sa- " voy, Daughter of Amadeus IX. Duke of Savoy, and " of Yolande of France, Siſter of Lewis XI. Of the firſt 1478. " Marriage he had only Charlotte of Arragon, who, " during her Father's peaceable Poſſeſſion of the King- " dom of Naples, was married in France to Guy XVI. " Count of Laval, one of the greateſt Lords of Europe, 1500. " and of one of the moſt illuſtrious Families.

" King Frederick married a ſecond time Iſabella de " Baux, by whom he had three Sons, Alphonſo, Cæſar " and Ferdinand; and two Daughters, Iſabella and " Julia. Of theſe five Children there were but two " that married, viz. Ferdinand and Julia. This laſt " married George Marequiſs of Montferrat, but ſhe died 1533. " the very Day her Nuptials were to have been conſum- " mated.

" Frederick Duke of Calabria, defended the City of " Taranto againſt the Spaniards, who took it after a " long Siege; and, notwithſtanding the Capitulation, " by which that Prince was to retire whither he " pleas'd, they carry'd him into Spain, and forc'd him " to marry two old Princeſſes: The firſt Mencia de " Mendoza, Widow of Henry of Naſſau; and the ſecond " Germaine de Foix, Reliſt of Ferdinand the Catholick. " He had no Children by either of theſe two Wives; " and died in 1559.

" Alphonſo, call'd the Infant of Arragon, came from 1512. " Naples into France; where, after he had received 1515. " the Honours due to his Birth, he died without Iſſue, " in like manner as Cæſar and Iſabella had done.

" Of all the Children of the unfortunate Frederick, " laſt King of Naples, there was none but Charlotte of " Arragon his Daughter, by the firſt Venter, that left " any Poſterity. She had by Guy XVI. Count of La- " val, one Son, who was killed in a Duel without ha- " ving ever been married; and two Daughters, Ca- 1522. " therine and Anne of Laval.

" Catherine was married to Claudius de Rieux, who " took the Name of Laval; and whoſe Houſe has been " entirely extinct by the Deceaſe of Guy XX. Count of " Laval, who died without having ever been mar- " ried, in the Year 1605.

" Anne of Laval, ſecond Daughter of Charlotte of " Arragon and of Guy XVI. was married to Francis de la 1521. " Tremoille, Son of Charles de la Tremoille, Prince of " Talmond, kill'd at the Battle of Marignan, and Grand- " ſon of Lewis II. de la Tremoille, kill'd at that of " Pavia.

" Now 'tis certain, Daughters and their Deſcen- " dants have ever ſucceded to the Kingdom of Na- " ples; therefore Mr. de la Tremoille has an un- " queſtionable Right to that Kingdom, as Deſcendant " in a Right-line from Frederick of Arragon, laſt King " of Naples; and that with ſo much the more reaſon, " becauſe by Charlotte of Arragon's Marriage-Contract " with Guy XVI. Count of Laval, that Princeſs had " expreſsly reſerv'd to her ſelf and her Heirs, all the " Right to the Succeſſion of King Frederick, and " his Heirs, for want of Heirs Male. Now this is what " oblig'd the Houſe of Tremoille to ſend their Plen- " potentiaries to the Aſſemblies of Munſter and Nime- 1648. " guen, to ſet forth their Right, and claim Juſtice 1678. " from the Mediators: which having been refus'd " them, they enter'd their Proteſtations againſt their " Proceedings." This is what I have taken from a Memorial, printed in France with neceſſary Proofs. It was ſhown to the Mediators at Nimeguen in the Year 1678, and at Ryſwick in the Year 1697, by Monſieur Sanguiniere, Counſellor of the Chatelet at Paris, and Deputy from the Duke of Tremoille. You may ſee further, in the beginning of the 4th Tome of (a) The Acts and Memoirs of the Negotiation of the Peace of Ryſwick, all that relates to this Deputation.

(a) Printed at the Hague, by Adrian Moetjens in the Year 1680.

(A) Balzac ſpoke of him in the Paſſage that ſhall be quoted.] " (b) And when that Excellent Capuchin " of Pope Gregory, preaching one Day at Rome, con- " cerning the Obligation of Reſidence, ſtruck ſo " great a Terror into thirty or forty Biſhops that heard " him, that they all immediately repair'd to their re- " ſpective Dioceſes. And when, at another time, he " converted a whole City with one of his Lent-Ser- " mons; inſomuch, that going out of the Church " they all cry'd, Mercy, and as they paſs'd through the " Streets; and in the Holy Week it was computed " two Thouſand Crowns were expended in Cords for

(b) Balzac in his Miſcellaneous Works Diſcourſe 6. entituled, Paraphraſe ou de la grande Eloquence, p. m. 164

" Diſci-

ſhall be quoted hereafter. He admir'd him * in the Pulpit, but had not ſo good an Opinion of him in the Preſs: See the judicious Critical Obſervations he has made on the † Sermons of this Capuchin. I have elſewhere ſaid ‖ they have been publiſh'd in French; and that d'Ablancourt, who tranſlated them, yielded all the Glory and Benefit of them to Father du Boſc. I have alſo ſaid that our Narni and Balzac's Father were like one another. I have juſt now conſulted an Author, who tells me this Monk's Name was Jerom Mantin of Narni, that, after having made himſelf famous in divers Cities of Italy, and even at Rome it ſelf, he was made choice of to preach before the Pope and Cardinals; and that he had all the Qualifications requir'd in an excellent Orator, viz. a good Geſture, fine Language, great Purity of Manners; and ſo vehement a Deſire to reform the Faults of Men, that he render'd himſelf odious to all Impenitent Sinners. When he ſaw he could gain nothing (B) upon the Corruption of his Auditors, he reſolv'd to appear no more in the Pulpit; and having obtain'd that Permiſſion, cloiſter'd himſelf up in a Cell, where he apply'd himſelf to writing the Hiſtory of the Capuchins; but the granting this Diſpenſation was ſoon repented of, and he was perſuaded to reſume his Function of a Preacher. He appear'd again in the Pulpit, and had the ſame diſſatisfaction as before, to ſee the Inutility of his Cenſures and Exhortations; and that People came to hear him only to pleaſe their Ears. His ill ſtate of Health at length, procured him an entire Quietus. As the Reputation he had for his good Life, was not leſs than that he had acquir'd by his Eloquence, he was inter'd with greater Pomp than ever any Monk of his Order had been before. His Sermons were printed as ſoon as he was dead; which did not come up to the Expectation (C) of the publick, which had entertain'd too advantageous a Notion of 'em. This was very prejudicial to 'em; and beſides they were deſtitute of the good offices of Action: This is what I have learnt from Nicius Erythræus ‖.

* Balzac, Letter 27. Book 2. to Ch. Jeſuit.

† See Colomies, Bibliotheque, p. 171.

‖ In the Name of his Country: Narni is a City of Italy.

‖ In Pinacoth. 1. pag. 143, 144.

NAVARRE (MARGARET de Valois Queen of) Siſter to Francis I. was born * in the City of Angouleſme the 11th of April 1492. She was a Princeſs of extraordinary Merit, and who made her ſelf admir'd by her Vertue, Piety, Wit, and the productions of her Pen. She was educated † at the Court of King Lewis XII. with very particular care, and married the Duke of Alençon in December 1509. She became a Widow in April 1525 ‡. Her Affection to her Brother King Francis I. was to be admired. She went into Spain, when he was Priſoner there, and did him all the Services (A) that a good and ingenious Siſter was capable of doing: She was very ſerviceable to

* Moreri, Dict. Geogr.

† Hilarion de Coste Eloy of Illuſtrious Ladies, t. 2. p. 292.

‡ Idib.

" Diſcipline; though 'tis no very dear Marchan-" dize; tell me, I beſeech you, what could this " poor Chriſtian Philoſopher want of the Power of a " Monarch, ſince he had ſo perfect a Submiſſion af" forded him by all People? Did not he triumph in his " Raggs, and tatter'd Cloaths? Was not his Meanneſs " full of Majeſty, and environ'd with Glory? Was " not he Lord, and almoſt a Tyrant over thoſe that " gave him Alms, &c." 'Tis a great Fault in this Author to deſcribe People by ſuch uncertain Characters. There were fifteen Popes of the Name of Gregory; therefore how ſhou'd a Man be able to gueſs in what Time this Capuchin of Pope Gregory wrought ſuch wonderful Exploits by his Eloquence? Ought not Balzac, who, I ſuppoſe, intended to write not only for the time preſent but for that to come, to have manag'd matters ſo, that after his Death his Readers might underſtand who the Perſons were he ſo commended? Father Rapin avoided this Fault. " (c) 'Tis ſaid of a certain Capuchin, ſays
" he, nam'd (d) Philip de Narni, who liv'd under the " Pontificate of Gregory XV. that he preach'd at Rome
" with ſo great Force, Eloquence and Vehemence, that " he never ſpoke (e) in Publick, but he made the People
" as they came out from his Sermon, cry for Mercy,
" as they paſs'd along the Streets. 'Tis alſo ſaid, that
" as he was one Day haranguing before the Pope, con" cerning the Obligation Biſhops lye under of reſiding
" in their Dioceſies, he ſo frighten'd, through the Ve" hemence of his Diſcourſe, thirty Biſhops his Audi" tors, that they hurried away next Morning to their
" reſpective Dioceſes."

(c) Rapin's Reflections on the Eloquence of the Pulpit, n. 15. of the firſt Edition of Holland 1686.

(d) Nicius Erythræus calls him Jerome.

(e) Balzac ſays this only of a Lent-Sermon, and does not ſay that it was at Rome.

I fancy Peter de St. Romuald miſtakes the Teſtimony of Balzac, for he applies it to another Capuchin than Father Narni: Nay, he does worſe, he falſifies it, pretending to find things in it which are not there. Any one will be eaſily convinc'd of this; and we need only compare the Words of Balzac, with theſe that follow, to give a thorough Demonſtration: " (f) About this " time Father Alphonſo le Loup a Capuchin, and Na" tive of the City of Medina Sidonia, died. 'Twas " ſaid of Father Tollet a Jeſuit, that he taught well,
" and of Panigarolus, another great Preacher, that he " pleas'd; but of this great Man (meaning Philip de " Narni) that he touch'd the Heart, and that with " good Reaſon; for Balzac aſſures us in his Miſcella-
" neous Works, that this Perſon preaching one Day
" before Pope Gregory, concerning the Reſidence of " Biſhops, he ſo frighten'd thirty or forty Biſhops his " Auditors, that they hurried the next Morning to " their reſpective Dioceſes: As likewiſe that upon " another Sermon of his preach'd at Salamanca, the " chief Univerſity in Spain, eight hundred Scholars
" renounced all the Honours, Riches and Pleaſures of " this World, to profeſs a Religious Life in ſeveral
" Orders, eſpecially that of St. Francis."

(f) Peter de St. Romuald his Abridgment of the Chronological Treaſury. To. 2. pag. m. 485. ad an. 1600.

(B) That he could gain nothing upon the Corruption.] This is very different from the Relation Balzac has publiſh'd, and which you have juſt read. I leave it to thoſe that have leiſure to reconcile thoſe Matters; for my part I ſhall content my ſelf with relating the following Teſtimony for my Warrant. (g) Vitiorum incuſatio & querela ita acris ac vehemens, ut iis, qui eidem adhærebant, cum nollent exaudiri, gravis & moleſta accideret: quamobrem ille, cum intelligeret aliquandiu ſe operam perdere, & ſurdis, ut dicitur, fabulam canere, valetudinis excuſatione, eo ſe munere abdicandi & in ſolitudinem aliquam abeundi poteſtatem ſibi fieri poſtulavit: quæ impetrata, totum ſe ad hiſtoriam ſui ordinis ſcribendam contulit: ſed rurſus, ad eandem provinciam revocatus, cui, non minore libertate, in corruptos eorum mores, apud quos docuit, invehebatur; ita ab aliquibus audiebatur, ut qui delectationem ex eo quærere, non autem vitiorum, quibus laborabant, medicinam aliquam petere, aut oblatam accipere vellet, fixum ac deliberatum haberent. Itaque in perpetuum, (præſertim infirma valetudine cum eſſet,) ejus vacationem muneris obtinuit. A great many People will give more Credit to Nicius Erythræus than to Balzac.

(g) Nicius Erythræus Pinacoth. 1. pag. 143.

(C) Which did not come up to the Expectation of the Publick.] I have obſerved the ſame thing concerning Mr Maimbourg; to whom we may apply that Paſſage of Nicius Erythræus, as well as to Father Narni. (a) Laber ejus concionum, ſimul ac diem obiit, ſtatim impreſſus apparuit, cui nihil tam obſtet, quam expectatio, quæ de ejus ingenio & eloquentia labebatur; quæ efficiebat, ut omnia quantumvis magna, minora expectatione viderentur. In quo etiam falſi non eſt palam, quanta in actione vis inſit, & quam jure primas illi Demoſthenes, ſecundas, & tertias dederit, cum ea deficiente oratio eadem alia eſſe exiſtimetur.

(a) Nic. Erythr. ubi ſupra

(A) All the Services that a good and ingenious Siſter was capable of doing.] We'll comment this Text with Brantome's Words: " (b) When the King was thus
" ſick, being a Priſoner in Spain, ſhe went to viſit
" him, as a good Siſter and Friend, with the leave and
" Paſſ-port of the Emperor; and ſhe found her Bro" ther in ſo wretched a Condition, that had ſhe not " come he had died; inaſmuch as ſhe underſtood his " Temper and Conſtitution, and treated him, and cur'd

(b) Brant Memoirs of Illuſtrious Ladies, p. 313, 314.

to him in the Affairs of (B) Government. He had alſo an unexpreſſible Friendſhip and Conſideration for her; whereof he gave Proofs even (C) before the Recovery of his Liberty. He married her in 1527 to Henery d' Albret II. King of Navarre, and gave him great advantages in the Contract (D) of Marriage. She diligently applied her ſelf with her Huſband to all the Functions that were capable of raiſing their States (E) to a more flouriſhing Condition: And there was a time when ſhe deſired to plant the Eccleſiaſtical Reformation in them. She much inclined to what they called the New Opinions, and protected thoſe (F) who were perſecuted on that account. She wrote a Book which was cenſur'd

" cauſed him to be treated accordingly, ſo as to re" cover him: Therefore the King often ſaid, that had
" it not been for her he had died; and that he was
" ſo much oblig'd to her for it, that he ſhould for " ever acknowledge it, and love her for it (as he did)
" to his dying Day; and ſhe mutually returned this " Love: Inſomuch, that in his laſt Sickneſs, I have " heard, that ſhe ſpoke to this purpoſe. Should the " Courrier, who brings me the News of the King
" my Brother's Recovery, be never ſo tired, ha-
" raſs'd and dirty, I would embrace and kiſs him
" as the fineſt Prince and Gentleman of France; and " ſhould he want a Bed, and not be able to find one
" to repoſe himſelf, I would give him mine, and gladly
" lye on the hard Ground for the ſake of the good " News he would bring. But, when ſhe heard of his " Death, ſhe fell into ſo great a Lamentation, and " ſuch cutting Sorrow, that ſhe could never after
" come to her ſelf, and take care of her Affairs; as " I have heard my Relations ſay. When ſhe was in " Spain ſhe ſpoke ſo bravely and handſomly to the " Emperor, concerning his ill Treatment of the King
" her Brother, that he was amazed at her.... Theſe " Words ſo gravely ſpoken, and in ſo great a Paſſion,
" brought the Emperor to Conſideration; ſo that he " moderated himſelf, and viſited the King, and pro-
" miſed him a great many fine Things; but which,
" notwithſtanding, he never had. But if this " Queen ſpoke ſo well to the Emperor, ſhe did no leſs
" to thoſe of his Council, where ſhe had Audience,
" and where ſhe triumph'd with her fine Speaking,
(d) Id. ib. pag. 315. " and good Grace, with which ſhe ſpoke.... (d)
" She obtain'd, at laſt, that her Arguments were al-
" low'd to be good and pertinent; and ſhe continu'd
" in great eſteem with the Emperor, his Council and " Court.

(B) She was very ſerviceable to him in the Affairs of Government.] We'll go on with the Expreſſions of Brantome: (e) " Such was her Diſcourſe, that the
(e) Id. ib. pag. 312. " Ambaſſadors, who ſpoke to her, wonderfully admir'd
" it, and gave great accounts of it to their Country
" men at their return, as how ſhe eaſed the King
" her Brother; for they always waited on her after " their principal Embaſſy, and frequently, when they " had great Buſineſs, referred the Definition and total
" Reſolution of it to her, who knew how to entertain
" and pleaſe 'em with fine Diſcourſes; and was very " dextrous at pumping their Secrets out of 'em: Inſo" much, that the King ſaid often, that ſhe extremely
" aſſiſted him and diſburthen'd him of his Trouble;
" as alſo did the two Siſters in Emulation, as I have " heard ſay, who ſhould ſerve their Brother beſt, the " one the Queen of Hungary her Brother the Emperor,
" and the other King Francis; but the former by way
" of War and Force, the latter by the Induſtry of her " fine Wit and good Nature." Add to this, this other Paſſage of the ſame Author. (f) Whilſt the
(f) Id. ib. pag. 316. King her Brother was in Priſon, ſhe was greatly aſſiſtant to the Regent her Mother in governing the Kingdom, in contenting the Princes, and Grandees, and gaining the Nobility; for ſhe was very acceſſible, and won the Hearts of People by the fine Qualities ſhe had in her.

(C) Whereof he gave Proofs, even before the Recovery of his Liberty.] He ſubſtituted her under his Mother
(g) Hilarion de Coſte Elog. Tom. 2. pag. 271. (g) to be Regent and Governeſs of Dauphiné.... with the ſame Honours and Powers as he declares in theſe Words, in his Edict made at Madrid in November 1525. " And if it happen that our ſaid Lady and Mother by
" Sickneſs, and Indiſpoſition, or other Impediment,
" or by Death (which God of his Mercy and Good-
" neſs prevent) ſhall not be able to exerciſe the ſaid
" Command, with reſpect to our ſaid Son, and our " other Children: WEE, in that caſe, Will and Or-" dain, that our moſt dear, moſt beloved and only " Siſter, Margaret of France, Dutcheſs of Alençon and
" Berry, ſhall in all things, reſpecting the ſaid Com" mand, ſucceed our ſaid Lady and Mother; and do
" all that is above-ſaid, and have the like Power,
" Command and Authority, as our Lady and Mother
" aforeſaid."

(D) Gave him great Advantages in the Contract of Marriage.] " (b) By the Treaty of this Marriage, (b) Id. ib.
" concluded in the Caſtle of St. Germain en Laye,
" King Francis, promiſed and accorded, that he " would ſummon the Emperor to reſtore to this Prince
" his Kingdom of Navarre, with its antient Juriſdicti-
" ons; and, upon his Refuſal, furniſh him with a " ſufficient Army to make himſelf maſter of it. Be-
" ſides this, the King gave him in Marriage the Dut" chies of Alençon and Berry, and the County of " Armagnac; the latter whereof ſhould deſcend to his " Poſterity, whether Males or Females proceeding from
" this Marriage."

(E) Applied her ſelf ... to all the Functions that were capable of raiſing their States to a more flouriſhing Condition.] Let us hear the ſaid Minim, who has ſupply'd us with the Comment of the two preceding Notes. (i) This new married Couple deliberated .... how to put Bearn in a different ſtate from what it was. This Country, naturally good and fruitful .... lying in a bad Condition, uncultivated and barren, through the Negligence of its Inhabitants, quickly changed its Face by their endeavours. Husbandmen were drawn out of all the Provinces of France, who rented, improved and fructified the Lands: They cauſed the Towns to be adorned and fortified; Houſes and Caſtles to be built; that of Pau amongſt others, with the fineſt Gardens that were then in Europe. After they were well houſed, they took care of the Polity and Laws; eſtabliſhing a Court for the differences of their Subjects to determine 'em without appeal; and they reformed the Common Law of Oleron, which ſerves to the Country; which, ſince its laſt Reformation in 1288, had been greatly corrupted. By their Converſation and Court they made the People more civil, and to guard themſelves from a new Uſurpation from Spain, they covered themſelves with Navarrins, a Town upon one of the Gaves, which they fortified with good Ramparts, Baſtions and Half-Moons, according to the Art then in uſe. This is one of the fineſt Elogies, that can be given this Queen of Navarre. (i) Id. ib. pag. 272, 273.

(F) Protected thoſe that were perſecuted for the new Opinions.] The Catholick and Proteſtant Writers are agreed upon this Point. Let us firſt alledge the Teſtimony of Beza in the place where he relates the firſt Perſecution which the Reformed ſuffered in France, which was that of Meaux in 1523. (a) And ſuch was the Iſſue of this Perſecution, that the Biſhop of Meaux would not go farther: Marrial publickly retracted .... Fabri (b) retired to Blois, and from thence at laſt to Nerac in the Dutchy of Albret by the countenance of the King's only Siſter, afterwards Queen of Navarre, a Princeſs of excellent Underſtanding; and at that time raiſed by God, to break as much as poſſible the cruel Deſigns of Antony Duprat, Chancellor of France, and other Abbettors of the King againſt thoſe whom they called Hereticks. The ſame Author having ſpoken of ſome Perſons that were martyred, and carried his Narration to the Year 1533, goes on thus: " (c) During theſe (c) Id. ib. pag. 13.
" Tranſactions, Margaret Queen of Navarre, only Si" ſter to King Francis, did all that was poſſible to " mollify her Brother; wherein ſhe did not totally
" loſe her Labour, making uſe of William Farel,
" Doctor of the Sorbonne, Biſhop of Senlis, and Con-
" feſſor to the King; who, to gratify her, and not " for any true Zeal to the Proteſtant Religion, printed (d) Id. ib. pag. 14.
" the Primmer in French, having firſt ſtruck out part " of that which was moſt Superſtitious. After this Im-
" preſſion ſhe publiſhed her ſelf a Tract of her own in (e) 'Twas Gerard Rouſſel Doctor of the Sorbonne, and Bertault and Couraut Auguſtin Monks.
" French Rhyme, called The Mirrour of a ſinful Soul;
" wherein there were many ſtroakes unuſual in the " Church of Rome, having made no mention either of " Male or Female Saints, or of Merits, or any other " Purgatory, than the Blood of Jeſus Chriſt; and even
" the Prayer, commonly called Salve Regina, ſhe ap-
" ply'd in French to the Perſon of Jeſus Chriſt....
" (d) The Queen of Navarre purſuing her point, had " adorned Paris with (e) three excellent Preachers,
" declaring the Truth ſomewhat bolder, than had been " formerly done."

(a) Beza Hiſt. Eccleſiaſt. Book I. pag. 5.
(b) That is James Faber Stapulenſis.

We

censur'd by the Sorbonne, and found (G) her self expos'd to the Indignation of the Divines; so that the King her Brother was forced to employ his Authority to restrain their Insolence. She had taken such Measures, as would perhaps have induc'd him ‡ to favour the Reformation, if the extravagance of some hot headed People, who posted up some Placarts in 1534, had not exasperated him to such a degree, as to make him become afterwards a violent Persecutor † of Lutheranism. She was obliged after that to be cautious, and to conduct her self by a Method, that (H) the Calvanists have highly condemned, and which ‡ See Beza Hist. of the Churches, Book I. p. 15.

† This was the Name in France, of what is now called Calvinism.

We shall see a more particular account in this Narrative of Florimond de Raemond: (f) The Queen of Navarre, a good, but too easie a Princess, lends an Ear to 'em, receives their Pamphlets at first by the Hands of her Ladies, causes the Latin Prayers of the Church to be translated into French, by the Bishop of Senlis, the King's Confessor. She talks to him of the Lutherans, and discourses of the Articles of their Religion, hoping to make him more soft and pliable; out of Commiseration she opens her Houses to banished and proscribed People and commands they should be their Retreat and Sanctuary. This is particularly observed by all the Historians of both Parties; that this Princess alone was the cause, without designing any ill, of the preservation of the French Lutherans; and that the Church, which afterwards took the Name of Reformed, was not stifled in the Cradle: For besides that she lent an Ear to their Discourses, which at first were specious, and not so bold as afterwards; she kept many of them at the Colleges, not only in France, but also in Germany, with a good meaning. She had a wonderful care to preserve and secure those that were in danger for the Protestant Religion, and to succour the Refugees at Strasburg and Geneva. Thither she sent to the learned at one time a Benefaction of four thousand Livers ... (g) I have read in the privates Registers of our (h) Parliament, that entering the Court as Governess in the absence of the King her Husband, she made an earnest request to the Court to release one Andrew Melancthon accused of Heresie, and Prisoner in the Court-Gaol, which Philip Melancthon, she said, Counsellor to the Duke of Saxony had earnestly required of her by his Letters: The Andrew, under the pretence of teaching School, came to disseminate his Relation's Doctrine in the Agenois; settling in the Town of Tonneins, where he so industriously sowed his Heresy, according to the Augsburg Confession, that the roots of it could never since be extirpated. In short, this good-natur'd Princess had nothing more at heart for the nine or ten Years, than to procure the Evasion of such as the King exposed to the rigour of Justice. She frequently talked to him, and by little strokes endeavoured to impress on his Soul some pity for the Lutherans. This Historian gives also this account: (i) "Rousset being returned from his Travels, and received "in Favour by this good Princess, and entertained in her "Houshold, discours'd agreeably to her of the Protestant Religion. He perswades her to read the "Bible, then blockishly turned into French; which "she did with so much pleasure, that she compos'd "a Tragi-Comical Translation almost of all the New-"Testament, which she caused to be represented in the "Hall before the King her Husband; having for that "end obtained the best Comedians that were then in "Italy. And as these Buffoons are only to make "sport, and, like Apes, to be pleasant Imitators of the "Humours and Desires of their Masters; so they, "perceiving the Queen's Inclination, amongst their "Sports, intermingled many Stanza's and Roundelays "upon the Subject of Ecclesiasticks. Some poor Monk "or Religious had always some part in the Comedy "or Farce. It seemed they could not be merry "without laughing at God and his Ministers. But "these Laughing quickly turned into Tears. The "King her Husband, a Prince as good-natur'd and easie "as the Queen, came from Comedies to Preachments, "which they called Exhortations, which were made "in his Chamber, both by Rousset, and a fugitive "Carmelite of Laval, called Solon. These Preachers, "particularly Solon, who was more sharp and poignant than his Companion, vomited Abales against "the Pope and Church-men: A brave and courageous "Monk, who before he died, dispatch'd five Wives. "They mingled some appearance of Piety and Devotion, with an Ostentation of the pure understanding "of the Gospel: Hereupon the Cardinals de * Foix "and Grammont, not being able to bear these extraordinary ways of the King, who but perfunctorily "went to Church, retired from his Court. But, as "from the Comedies of his Hall he was led to the "Exhortations of his Chamber; so from these Prayers "he descended to the Manducations in the Cave, or "at least in the secret places of the Mint; which is "upon the descent of the Castle of Pau. This was "the Name they then gave their Ceremonies, which "at present they call the Supper." 'Tis added (k), that Francis I. advertised of this fine Trade that was driven at Pau, was angry, and sent for his Sister, that she came to him, conducted by the Lord de Burie, Governour of Guienne, who was seized with the same Folly: That at her coming the King rebuk'd her, though he lov'd her infinitely; that she answer'd like a Catholick; that she nevertheless proposed to the King the introduction of a reformed Mass, which was called the Mass in seven Points; that she caused him to hear the Sermons of three Lutheran Preachers; that at her request Rousset, one of 'em, who had been put in Prison, was released; that the King was (l) something shaken at the proposal of a Mass of seven Points; and had it not been for the Placarts, it was to be feared his Sister's Address would have made great a Progress.

(i) Id. ib.

(k) Id. ibi.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 854.

(G) A Book which was censured by the Sorbonne, and found her self exposed to the Indignation of the Divines.] This book was intituled, The Mirrour of the sinful Soul, and was printed in 1533. I have spoken of it above (m). "The Contents of it (n) extremely provok'd "the Sorbonne, and particularly Beda, and others of "his Humour; so that they could not forbear attacking her in their Sermons: And particularly a Comedy was acted in the College of Navarre, where-"in she was transformed into a Fury of Hell; which "is more, they condemned her Book: Whereupon, "complaining to the King her Brother, some of the "Actors of this Comedy were imprison'd; and the "King demanding upon what Reasons the Condemnation of this Book was founded; The University, who "then had Nicolas Cop for their Rector, expressly "disowned the Censure of the Sorbonne, which, "in some measure, abated the fury of our Masters, "and greatly strengthened the little number of the "faithful. At that time also John Calvin, upon his "return from his Studies of the Law, came to Paris, "where he greatly promoted the Work of the Lord, "not only by teaching the Truth, but also by opposing "Hereticks, whom the Devil indeavour'd to intrude into "the Church, particularly that wretched Monster Michel Servetus, who denied amongst other Blasphemies "the Holy Trinity and the Eternity of the Son of God; "which Servetus having appointed to dispute with Calvin at a certain Day and Hour, durst not appear. Then "it was also that he first repulsed the Libertines, which, "in our Time, have renewed the abominable sect of the "Carpocratians, removing all distinction between "Good and Evil. It happened at the same time, that "upon the Custom of the University of Paris assembling at All Saints in the Church of the Mathurins, "where the Rector is to be harangued; Cop be-"fore-mentioned, spoke an Oration, which had been "made for him by Calvin in a quite different "manner from what was usual. This being reported "to the Parliament, the Rector was sent for with a "design to retain him, and Serjeants were also sent to "the College of Forteret, where Calvin then liv-"ed." This we have from Beza. You'll find a fine Narrative upon this, with all the Circumstances of the Fact, in a Letter (a) written by Calvin to Francis Daniel in 1533, where, amongst other Things, it is said, that after the Satisfaction, which was made by the Rector of the University, the King commanded that the Bishop of Paris should appoint the Preachers in the Parishes. This was in order to hinder the Sorbonnists from continuing to dispose of 'em, according to their Caprices, and to make choice of the most outrageous Preachers. (b) Allatum est regium diploma, quo Parisiensi Episcopo permittitur præficere quos velit singulis parochiis concionatores, qui potius pro tuendine illorum eligebantur, ut quisque erat clamosissimus & stolido furore plenus quem illi zelum vocant. We have seen in another place the furious Insolence where with a Guardian of the Cordeliers preach'd against his Queen.

(m) In the Remark F.

(n) Beza ubi supra pag. 13.

(a) To the first in the Collection of Calvin's Letters.

(b) Calvinus Epist. 1. p. m. 3.

(H) By a Method that the Calvanists have highly condemned.] Beza, relating the Consequences of the ri-

* Florimond is here mistaken; there was no Cardinal de Foix: Others say the Cardinal d'Armagnac. See Hilarion de Coste, ubi supra. pag. 273.

which has occasion'd the Papists to say she perfectly renounced her Errors. There are Proofs that she took very great pleasure (I) in reading the Bible. She had some Mortifigorous Persecution, to which the Faithful were exposed, after the business of the Placarts, says, that " (d) " the greatest Misfortune was, that most of the " Grandees began to accommodate themselves to the " humour of the King; and by degrees grew such " strangers to the study of the Scriptures, that at last " they became worse than all the rest; nay, even the " Queen of Navarre began to behave her self quite " otherwise, falling into Idolatries like the rest; not " that she inwardly approved such Superstitions, but " because Ruffi, and others like him, persuaded her " they were indifferent Things: The Issue whereof, " was, that finally she was blinded with a Spirit of " Errour, having admitted into her House two desperate Libertines, Quintin and Pocques, whose Blasphemies and Errors, with an ample Confutation of " 'em, are to be seen in John Calvin's Works." He speaks more gently of her in his Icones; for, having in a few Words represented the good Services she had done the Reformed, he contents himself to add, that she a little eclipsed her Glory by her Credulity in her latter Years. (e) Quamvis ipsius gloriæ nonnullam in ultima tandem ipsius ætate credulitas labem asperserit. Many are perswaded, that in compliance to the King her Brother, she observed all the externals of Popery, with an exactness that deceiv'd this great Monarch. Read the following Passage; (f) The Constable of Montmorenci, discoursing .... one Day with the King, did not scruple to tell him, that if he would exterminate the Heretick of his Kingdom, he must begin with his Court, and with his nearest Relations, naming the Queen his Sister; to which the King answered, Let us not speak of her; she loves me too much; she'll never believe but what I believe, nor be of a Religion to the prejudice of my State. Brantome had been saying (g), That this Queen was suspected of Lutheranism, but out of respect and love to the King her Brother, who loved her entirely, and always called her his Minion, she never made any profession, nor appearance of it; and if she believed it, she always kept it secret to her self, because the King violently hated it, saying, that this, and every other Sect, tended more to the Destruction of Kingdoms, Monarchies and Dominions, than to the Edification of Souls. Others believe, that it was not possible for Francis I. to be ignorant that the Queen of Navarre was a Lutheran in her Heart; her correspondencies with the Party, and the protection of the Fugitives for this Cause, were not things the King of France could be ignorant of: He only pretended not to know 'em, and was satisfied with the exterior of a Princess whom he loved and was not willing to grieve. But if she inwardly adhered to the Roman Communion, it was not till towards the end of her Life; for 'tis certain, that Roussel (h) whom she made Bishop of Oleron, was nothing less than a Papist (i), though he did not come to an open Rupture. However, let us see what a Catholick Writer says of the end of this Queen. But not, says he, (k) to obscure the Honour and Glory of so great a Princess .... 'tis certain that some Years before her Death, she was sensible of her Fault, and escaped from the Precipice into which she was falling, resuming her first Piety and Catholick Devotion, protesting to her Death, that she had never departed from it, that what she had done for them, proceeded rather from Compassion, than any ill-will to the ancient Religion of her Fathers .... Lying upon her Death-Bed, she received the Body of her Creator, and resigned her Soul, embracing the Cross she had upon her Bed, as I have heard it related by Giles Caillau, a good Religious Confessor, who gave her the extreme Unction, and assisted her to the last Gasp. The Lady de Riberac, a good and vertuous Woman, of the Family of Candalle, who was educated with her, told me, that Calvin .... frequently exhorted her, both by Letters and Messages to maintain the Truth; and that she desired him to come to her, to make her see and acknowledge her Error, and to restore her to the way of Salvation. Hilarion de Coste relates, that " (l) in her latter Years " she frequented the Sacraments of Confession and the " Altar, in the Church of the Blancs-Manteaux at Paris, " where .... she confess'd to Francis le Picard .... " Doctor of Divinity .... communicated from the " Hand of this Holy Person, having heard his " Mass and Sermon." He adds, that she built and founded (1) at her Expence, in her latter Years, Churches and Hospitals, amongst others that of the Enfans Rouges at Paris, where are maintain'd and educated the Orphan Children, whom she named the Children of God

(d) Beza ubi supra pag. 22.

(e) Idem in iconibus, fol. T. iij.

(f) Brantome illustrious Ladies. p.g. 310.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 309.

(h) The same that Beza calls Ruffi.

(i) See Florimond de Remond, ubi supra, pag. 850, 851.

(k) Id. ib. chap. 4. pag. 855, 856.

(l) Hilarion de Coste, ubi supra, pag. 275.

(1) L. du Breuil in his Antiquities of Paris.

the Father. Here is still a stronger Testimony: " (m) " she died a good Christian and Catholick, against the " Opinion of many: But as for me I can affirm, being " a little Boy in her Court, with my Grand-mother " and Mother, never to have seen her do any contrary " act; so that when she retired into a Nunnery, in " Angoumois, after the Death of the King her Brother, " called Tusson, where she performed her Quarantine, " and staid a whole Summer, and built a fine House, " she was often seen to do the Office of the Abbess, " and to chant with the Nuns at their Masses and " Vespers."

From all this we may infer, that Mezerai did not much examine things, when he writ (n), that the Queen of Navarre, being censured by the King her Brother (o) in 1535, protested to him, she would never more depart from the Catholick Religion, and even shew'd her self an Enemy to its Opposers; nevertheless, towards the end of her Days, which was in 1549, she seemed to repent of her Repentance, and desired Calvin by Letters, to come and instruct and comfort her. Such strange Falshoods give mighty prejudices against this Author; and if there arise any good Censurers of his Histories, I am certain it will be wonder'd, how he made himself so much esteemed. We'll observe, by the by, two other Faults: He says (p), that after Briconnet's Recantation (q), James le Feure retired to Nerac to Queen Margaret, and that Roussel was Bishop of Oleron at the time she was reprimanded by Francis I. (r). All this is false; Bricomnet retracted in 1523; and our Margaret was not married till 1527 to the King of Navarre, Lord of Nerac: Roussel was not Bishop till a long time after the Reprimand here in question.

Beza's Words, which we have seen at the beginning of this Remark, greatly want to be explained. He gives us to understand, without any Reserve, that the Queen of Navarre suffer'd her Mind to be corrupted by two wretched Libertins, whose illusions and Blasphemies Calvin confuted. This should not be so expressed; for Beza himself has own'd in another Book, that this Queen did not follow (s) the mystical Doctrines of these Men; and that she was abused no farther by 'em, than to believe 'em honest Men. What he there says rectifies the former Passage, and stands in need of a farther softning; for the term of fascinating or bewitching is too strong on this occasion. (a) Offensa est tho libro in Libertinos edito Navarrena, quod ab illius horrendæ sectæ Antesignanis duobus Quintino & Pocqueso, quos nominatim Calvinus arguerat, (rem pene incredibilem) eo usque fuisset fascinata, ut quum alioquin illorum mysterium non teneret, pro tonis vinis illos haberet, ac proinde sese quodammodo per eorum latus consolari arbitraretur. Beza needed not wonder, that this Queen, though not conforming to the Spiritualities of these fanatick and mystical People, believ'd 'em however to be honest Men, fully perswaded of what they said, and possess'd with a true desire of serving God, according to their Understanding. Her Charity induc'd her to protect em; and it was not difficult to make a good use of their Maxims, which tended to quicken the inward Man. And 'tis less to be wonder'd that she was provok'd against Calvin, who with that cutting Stile, peculiar to him, had severely handled the Persons, protected and maintain'd by her. She caused her Complaints to be made to him, and she wrote (b) a respectful Letter to him, to justify her Conduct. Note, that at the time he wrote to her, that is, on the 20th of April 1545, she was still acknowledg'd (c) the Protectress of the Reformed.

(I) That she took very great Pleasure in reading the Bible.] See in the Remark F of (d) this Article Florimond de Remond's Words, and in the Remark O of the Article Marot, what was written to Catherine de Medecis, and strengthen this with the Testimony of Peter Olhagaray. Bearn, says he (e), was the Sanctuary of the Persecuted, and King Henry permitted 'em not to be disturbed. James Faber Stapulensis, the Light of his Time, as his Philosophical Writings witness, was very ne come there, having an honourable Pension from Margaret, that learned Queen, the best in the World; that so perfect Instrument, who retrieved King Francis her Brother from Prison, always attentive to reading, particularly of the Scripture; which our Elias (f) in his Collection declares to have observ'd of her, being in her

(m) Brantome, ubi supra, pag. 318.

(n) Mezerai Chronological Abridgment. To. 6. p. 409.

(o) He should say in 1533.

(p) Id. ib. pag. 406.

(q) Bishop of Meaux.

(r) Id. ib. pag. 408.

(s) 'Tis thus, I interpret the Words, illorum mysteriûm non teneret of Beza's Passage cited in the following Letter a. Those which would have 'em signify, that she knew not their Hypocrisy, seem to me to be mistaken; and if they would have 'em mean, that she understood nothing of the Jargon of these Fanaticks, they come up to my Sense of 'em.

(a) Beza in vita Calvini, ad. an. 1544.

(b) 'Tis Calvin's 62 Letter.

(c) Cum acceptis illis literis statim ad hanc responsionem me contulerim, qua eo tibi nomine à me satisfactum curarem, ne quid de eo affectu remitteres, quem erga pios hactenus abunde præ te tuliti & ipsa exhibuisti. Calvin. epist. 62. p. m. 151.

(d) Letter i.

(e) Peter Olhagaray, History of Foix, Bearn and Navarre, pag. 502.

(f) This is an Author who has writ the History of the Counts of Foix in Latin.

City

Mortifications to bear from her Husband, and loved not (K) to hear talk of Death. The Curiosity that induc'd her to an attentive Consideration (L) of a dying Person, clearly shews, that she had not the Ideas of a true Philosopher concerning the Nature of the Soul; but some very great Wits, and very great Philosophers have thought no better than she upon that important Subject. Her Heptameron, which is a Book after the Taste of Boccacio's Novels, has some Beauties in that kind which are wonderful. She dy'd (M) in December 1549, and was honoured with abundance * of Elogies. Of four Children, which she had by her second Marriage, † a Son and three Daughters, only one Daughter

* Hilarion de Coste, ib. pag. 275, 276. Thuan. lib. 6. p. 117.

† Hilarion de Coste, ibid. pag. 272.

City of Appamyers, where he received this grave Advice from this brave and wise Princess: That he should never let pass a Day, without an attentive reading of some Pages of this Holy Book, which watering our Souls, said she, with an heavenly Liquor, administers faithful Preservatives against all sorts of Mischiefs and Temptations of the Devil. The Author relates Bertrand Elias's Words; which I doubt not many Readers will be glad to know. Cujus etiam manibus sanctissimum illud veteris novique Test. volumen, quod Bibliam appellant, nunquam vel raro exit, semper divinis ut verè Christianam decet intenta libellis: nihil unquam nisi divinum cogitat, suadetque adeo ut ipse etiam meminerim me aliquando ab ea cum Appamyam venisset humanissime submonitum, jussumque partem aliquam vel veteris vel Novi testamenti maximo affectu, orationis instar quotidie legere, quo sane, ut ipsa ajebat, no que etiam politica experti sumus, nostra mens à vitio averteretur, & ad virtutes facilius accederet (g).

(g) Elias fol. 104. apud Olhagaray, ib.

(K) She had some Mortifications to bear from her Husband, and loved not to hear talk of Death.] Hilarion de Coste gives out (b), that Henry II. King of Navarre, "having intimation, that they used in his Wife's "Chamber some Form of Prayer and Instruction con- "trary to that of his Fathers, enter'd into it, resolved "to chastize the Minister; and, finding they had con- "trived his escape, the remains of his Anger fell up- "on the Queen, who receiv'd a Box o'th' Ear from "him, saying to her, Madam, you are willing to be "over-knowing, and immediately gave advice of it to "King Francis." Brantome having given some Instances of Matrimonial Discord betwixt Princes, adds this: "(i) And lately King Henry d' Albret with Queen "Margaret of Valois, as I have it from good Hands, "who treated her very ill; and had done worse, had "it not been for King Francis her Brother, who spoke "home and rough to him, and charged him with "threatnings to honour the Queen his Sister, considering "the Rank she bore." Note, by the way, what little reliance there is upon an Epitaph; that of this Princess says in great Characters, that her Husband lived with her in the most entire Agreement, CONCORDISIMUS. I have spoken elsewhere (k) concerning Fallfhoods of this kind.

(b) Hilarion de Coste, ubi supra. pag. 274. He cites P. Matthew.

(i) Brantome ubi supra, pag. 242.

(k) In the Rem. G of the Article Herlicius.

As for the other part of the Text of this Remark, I'll cite a Passage of Brantome: "(l) This Queen "was used to say, to those that discours'd to "her of Death, and Blessedness, All this is true, "but we remain a long time dead in the Earth, before "we come to it: Insomuch that I have heard my Mo- "ther say, who was one of her Ladies, and my Grand- "mother her Maid of Honour, that when it was told "her, in her extreme Sickness, that she must dye, she "thought that Saying very severe, and immediately "repeated what I have been saying; and that she was "not yet so super-annuated, but that she might still "live some Years." She had inherited this from her Mother, as the same Writer informs us. I'll only alledge, says he (m), the Example of the late Queen Regent, Mother to the Great King Francis I. She was in her time, as I have heard many say, who have seen and known her, a very fine Lady; but very worldly withal, and was the same in her declining Age, and hated the Discourse of Death, even from Preachers in their Sermons: As if (said she) we did not well know, that we must all dye some time or other; and these Preachers, when they have nothing else to say, and are at the end of their Lessons, like ignorant Block-heads, fall to talk of Death. The late Queen of Navarre, her Daughter, liked no more than her Mother, these Lessons and Preachments concerning Death. We have seen elsewhere the weakness of Lewis XI. upon the same Subject.

(l) Brantome ubi supra.

(m) Idem, Memoirs of Gallant Ladies. T. 2. p. 331.

(L) To an attentive consideration of a dying Person.] Here is something that is singular: (o) I have heard say of her, says Brantome, that one of her Maids of her Bed-Chamber, whom she had a great Affection for, being near Death, she had a mind to see her dye; and, whilst she was at the brink of Death, she stir'd not from her, fixing her Eyes stedfastly upon her, even till after she was dead; some of her more intimate Ladies, ask'd her why she beheld so wistly this dying Creature? she answered, that having heard so many learned Men discourse, that the Soul and Spirit departed from the Body, as soon as it deceased; she had a mind to see, whether there proceeded from it any wind or noise, or the least Sound at the Separation, but that she perceiv'd nothing at all; and she told a reason which she had from the same Doctors, that having ask'd 'em why the Swan sung before his Death; they answer'd, it was for the sake of the Spirits, that labour'd to pass through his long Neck: In like manner, she said she had a mind to see the Soul go out, or perceive and hear what this Soul or Spirit did at its departure; and added, that if she was not well-settled in the Faith, she should not know what to think of this Dislodgment, and parting of the Soul and Body, but that she resolved to believe, what her God and his Church commanded her, without entering farther into other curiosities; as indeed she was one of the devoutest Ladies in the World, who had God as frequently in her Mouth, and feared him as much as am. This Passage would bear many Reflections, but we'll only observe two things; one is, that this Princess is very excuseable for conceiving the Soul of Man as a Being, that separates locally from the Body at the Moment that the Man expires; for in that Age, this was the universal Opinion of the Divines and Philosophers, and is at present the Opinion of all the Doctors, that are not Cartesians. They suppose that the Soul is locally present in the Organs of the Humane Body, and is extended with the Matter that she animates; but that at the moment of Death, she ceases to possess that place, and passes locally and physically into another. I confess this does not prove, that we ought to believe this Transmigration to be accompanied with any noise or sibilation, as the Queen of Navarre imagined; but 'tis not strange that a Lady, that carried her Views farther than the generality, should suspect, that a subtle, invisible, and yet actually extended Substance, must fly out of the Body with some sort of noise, like that of the flight of an Arrow, or of spirituous Liquors, when they find their way out through some chink of a Vessel that contains 'em. The other thing I have to say, is, that the Queen of Navarre conducted her self in her doubts in the wisest manner possible. She imposed Silence on her Reason, and her Curiosity, and humbly submitted her self to Revelation.

(o) Brantome Memoirs of ill. Illustrious Ladies, p. 319, 320.

(M) She dy'd in December 1549.] These Words are Brantome's (a), and he adds that she died in Bearn in the Castle (b) Dandaus, and that she took (c) her Illness looking at a Comet, which then appear'd upon the Death of Pope Paul III. and she was of that Opinion, but possibly it appear'd for her; and immediately her Mouth was a little distorted; which her Physician Mr d Elcurans seeing, had her thence and ordered her to Bed and took care of her; for it was a Catarrh, and she died eight Days after. Brantome is mistaken as to the place, and does not note the Day. She died in Bigorre and not in Bearn. Olhagaray (d) calls the place Eudos, and others (e) Odos. (f) Odosii Ligeronum decessit, says Mr. de Thou. (g) Fato functa est Odosii Tarbellorum, says Scevola de Sainte Marthe. Mr. de Thou's Words have not been well translated by du Rier, nor Sainte Marthe's by Mr Teissier. (h) The former translates Ortez in Bigorre, the latter Tarbes in Gascogne. Peter de St. Romuald (i) is the most out; for he will have this Queen to have died in Bretagne. I believe Spondanus, who was of those Parts, specifies better than all other Writers, the name of the Castle she died in. He calls it Audos; (k) Apud Audosium e castrum in Bigerronibus vitam finivit. I have said elsewhere that the Parisians pronounce the Diphthong au like o; which might deceive Mr. de Thou. They vary as to the Day of her Death. Father Labbe (m) has mark'd the 24th of December; du Tillet (n) the 14th, Mr de Thou the 21st; which last Opinion we must hold to, it being the date upon her Epitaph. It is therein noted also that she lived 59 Years; but this cannot agree with the Historians, who all say she was born in April 149..

(a) Brantome ubi supra, pag. 318.

(b) I believe, that Brantome had writ d' Audaus, or rather d' Audos; and that the Transcribers or Printers have corrupted this Word.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 318.

(d) Olhagaray, ubi supra, pag. 505.

(e) Hilarion de Coste, ubi supra, p. 275.

(f) Thuan. lib. 6. p. 117.

(g) Sammarth. elog. lib. 1. p. m. 28.

(h) See Mr Teissier Elog. Tom. 1. pag. 17 & 19. Edit. 1696.

(i) St Romuald Abridgment of the treas. Chron. ad. ann. 1549. pag. m. 306

(k) Spondanus ad. ann. 1549. n. vi.

(m) Labbe Chron. Tom. 2. p. 701

(n) Du Tillet Chr. of the Kings of France, a Liege ed. p. m. 196.

Daughter remained. I ſpeak of her in the following Article. The two others were born before their time, and dyed the Day of their Birth. The Son died two Months old ‡. I deſign a Remark for what concerns (N) this Queen's Writings: And I will not forget ‡ Id. ibid.

(N) For what concerns this Queen's Writings.] She compoſed many Works of Poetry; the Titles whereof we have in (o) du Verdier Vau-Privas. They were collected into one Body by John de la Haye, her Valet de Chambre, and publiſhed in the Year 1547, with the Title of Marguerites de la Marguerite des Princeſſes, tres illuſtre Royne de Navarre. Du Verdier relates this Title very well; but he has ſome groſs Faults upon other points; for he ſays, that this Queen's Poetical Works, were collected and put together after her deceaſe, by the diligence of Simon Sylvius, called de la Haye, her Valet de Chambre, who printed them in 8vo. at Lyons, by John de Tournes 1547. I have ſeen this Edition, and obſerved that the Priviledge granted by the Parliament to J. Sylvius, called de la Haye, is of the Year 1546. This then is one fault of du Verdier to call him Simon, whoſe name was John: But this fault is not ſo groſs as the following. He pretends that a Book printed in 1547, came out after the Death of the Queen of Navarre. If he had read the Epiſtle (p) before the Book, he would have known that this Queen was ſtill alive, when John de la Haye, the Author of this Epiſtle, printed Margaret de Valois's Poems. Mr. Moreri is miſtaken in ſomething. He ſays, that this Queen publiſh'd amongſt other Works, "La Marguerite des Marguerites, which contain'd ſome "Poems and divers other Comedies. The Mirrour of a "ſinful Soul. The Triumph of the Lamb. The Hepta-" meron." There is nothing exact in this. This Title, la Marguerite des Marguerites is falſe: The true one is (q) Marguerites de la Marguerite des Princeſſes. Paſquier (r), and many other Writers, have committed the ſame fault. Theſe Words, contain'd ſome Poems and divers other Comedies, are good for nothing; and I wonder Moreri's Reviſors have not yet perceived it. There is no oppoſition betwixt Poems and Comedies; for Comedies are generally in Verſe, and there were hardly any other ſeen among the French in that Age. He ſhould not then have noted a diſtinction between the Queen of Navarre's Poems and Comedies: Much leſs ought he to have ſaid other Comedies; ſince this ſuppoſes, that other pieces had been ſpecified which were Comedies; but this had not been done. But the moſt conſiderable miſtake is to ſay, that the Mirrour of the ſinful Soul, and the Triumph of the Lamb, are two different Works from the pretended Marguerite des Marguerites, ſince one of them is the firſt Work that appears in the Collection, entituled, Marguerites de la Marguerite, &c. and the other is (s) in the 2d ſide of fol. 182 to the 212 of the ſame Collection. Note, that du Verdier Vau-Privas, by ſaying that Simon Sylvius collected the Poems of the Queen of Navarre, occaſion'd another Error in Mr. Moreri; for this made him believe (t) that Simdon Boſius, whoſe Learned Notes we have upon Cicero's Epiſtles to Atticus, was called de la Haye, and had been Valet de Chambre to Margueret Queen of Navarre: He might have avoided this miſtake, had he conſidered, 1. that this Princeſs's Valet de Chambre was old (u) when he publiſh'd the Marguerites, &c. 2. that Simdon Boſius died young, as Sainte Marthe, cited by Mr. Moreri, informs us. Note, that (w) there was printed at Pau in 1552 in 4o. an Eclogue which had not appear'd in the Collection of the Marguerites; and which was compoſed by the ſame Queen. Dr. Sibylline in 1693, ſent me from London a Copy of the Tombeau de Margeurite Royne de Navarre. Some Body had written in it, that this Princeſs was the Author of a Book, entituled, the Pious Meditations of a Chriſtian Soul, which was tranſlated into Engliſh by Queen Elizabeth, and printed at London in 8o. in 1548.

Let us now ſpeak of the Heptameron, and firſt cite Brantome: "(x) She wrote in her gay "Hours a Book, entituled, The Novels of the Queen of "Navarre; which ſhe did in a Stile ſo ſoft and "flowing, and ſo full of excellent Diſcourſes and fine "Sentences, that I have heard ſay the Queen-Mother, "and the Dutcheſs of Savoy, undertook to write No"vels ſeparately, in imitation of this Queen of Navarre, "well knowing that ſhe was writing ſome; but when "they had ſeen hers, they were ſo diſguſted with "their own, which no ways came up to 'em, that "they threw 'em into the Fire, and would not publiſh "'em. .. She compoſed all theſe Novels generally in "her Litter, as ſhe travelled; for ſhe had great Oc"cupations when ſhe was retired. I have heard my "Grand-mother alſo tell this, who always went with "her in her Litter, and held her Desk for her; and ſhe "writ 'em as faſt and as well, or better, than if they "had been dictated." This confutes the Uncertainties of la Croix du Maine: You'll find 'em at the end of the following Paſſage; The Heptameron, ſays he, (y) or the Queen of Navarre's ſeven Days, is a Book full of divers Hiſtories, for the moſt part fabulous, in imitation of John Boccacio a Florentine. This Book has been methodiz'd by Claude Gruget of Paris, and intituled the Heptameron, or the Hiſtory of Fortunate Lovers; Novels of the moſt illuſtrious and excellent Princeſs Margaret de Valois Queen of Navarre, &c. Printed at Paris by Gilles Robinot in the Year (z) 1567: I queſtion whether this Princeſs compoſed this Book; foraſmuch as it is full of bold Diſcourſes and tickliſh Words. If la Croix du Maine had read the Epiſtle Dedicatory of Claude Gruget's Edition, he could not have been dubious; for this Gruget addreſſing himſelf to Jane d' Albret, only Daughter to Queen Margaret, declares that he had reſtored the Book of this Queen's Novels to its firſt ſtate; becauſe the firſt Edition had, as it were, totally transformed it, and omitted or concealed the Name of this Princeſs. Wherefore, adds he, to make it worthy of its Author, as ſoon as it was publiſhed, I collected from all parts, the Manuſcript-Writings that could be recovered, and collated 'em by my Copy; and I have taken care to reduce 'em to the true order, in which ſhe wrote 'em. Since that, by the King's Permiſſion, and your conſent, they have been put into the Preſs to be publiſh'd as they ought. Such a preſent, continues he, will not be new to you, who will only recognize it, as your Mother's Heireſs: However I perſwade my ſelf, that it will be acceptable to you to ſee it by this ſecond Impreſſion reſtored to its Primitive State: For (as I have heard) the firſt diſpleas'd you; not but that he who undertook it was a learned Man, and had taken pains in it; and, as is eaſie to believe, would not have thus diſguis'd it without ſome reaſon for it; yet his labour was diſagreeable. Theſe Paſſages of Claude Gruget's Epiſtle Dedicatory may ſerve for two purpoſes: They acquaint us with ſomething of the Hiſtory of the Heptameron, and invincibly confute all thoſe who believe the Queen of Navarre did not compoſe theſe Novels. Would any one have ventured to talk to the Princeſs her Daughter, as he does in the Epiſtle Dedicatory, if this Book had been ſuppoſititious, or if the Liberty had been taken to add Thoughts or Expreſſions that were too free and exceptious? Mr. de Thou does not doubt, but that Queen Margaret was the Author of this Work; he does not think it becoming the Gravity and latter Conduct of this Heroine; but he excuſes her upon the Time and Youth in which ſhe writ it. (a) Ejus nomine & fabellarum volumen imitatione Joa. Bocatii editum circumfertur, ſi tempora & juvenilem ætatem, in qua ſcriptum eſt, reſpicias, non prorſus damnandum, certe gravitate tanta heroina, & extrema vitæ minus dignum. The Sieur Sorel denies this Princeſs to be the Author of the Heptameron. I relate his Words, becauſe they contain a bad Reaſoning, that ought to be refuted. "(b) We have the Novels of the Queen of Navarre; "in which there is a Story of a Gentleman, who lay "with his Mother, and afterwards married the Daugh"ter that he had by her, who was at once his Siſter, "his Wife and his Daughter. There are alſo in it "many execrable Stories of Prieſts and Cordeliers; "all which things never were, but were the Inven"ons of a Huguenot, who was the Author of the "Book." The Argument this Writer alledges, has two great Faults. In the firſt place it proves too much; for it it were good, we muſt ſay that Boccacio, and many other Italians, who have written Novels, and fill'd 'em with an hundred bad Actions of the Monks, were Lutherans. In the ſecond place; It it were peculiar to a Huguenot to write ſuch Stories, the Queen of Navarre might do it; for ſhe was a good Friend to the Party, ſecretly at leaſt, for a good many Years together.

Note, that the Heptameron was grown very ſcarce; which cauſed the Bookſellers of Amſterdam to reprint it in 1698. They made two Editions of it, one by that of Claude Gruget, the other metamorphos'd into new French: The latter will pleaſe Foreigners, who only underſtand the modern Language, and many ignorant and lazy French-men, who care not to be at the pains of informing themſelves, how they ſpoke in the Reign of Francis I. I ſhall ſay ſomething elſewhere (c) againſt the falſe and ſhameful Delicacy of theſe People

(o) In page 843 & 844 of his French Biblioth.

(p) It is addreſs'd to Madam the Princeſs of Navarre Daughter to Queen Margaret.

(q) It muſt be obſerv'd, that Marguerite is the name of a Flower; and that by a metaphor ſlorid Diſcourſes, Compliments of a high and ſtudied Strain, were formerly called Marguerites.

(r) In the Searches of France, Book 7. ch. 5. p. m. 614.

(s) In the Paris Edition by Stephen Grouleau 1552. in 10.

(t) See Moreri in the Article Bois (Simon du.)

(u) This appears by the Epiſtle Dedicatory.

(w) Du Verdier, ubi ſupra. pag. 844.

(x) Brant. ubi ſupra, f. 320, 321.

(y) La Croix du Maine, French Biblioth. P. 309.

(z) When he ſpeaks of Claude Gruget, p. 58, he only ments ons the Edition of 1561, by Gilles Robinot: And, note that du Verdier Vau-Privas ubi ſupra, pag. 844 only quotes the Edit. of 1578, by the ſame. in 4°.

(a) Thuan. lib. 6. p. 117. col. 2. D.

(b) Sorel Remarks upon the 12 Book of the extravagant Shepherd. p. 720.

(c) In ſome of the Remarks of the Article Oſiat.

forget the baſe Attempt (O) of Admiral de Bonnivet. It would be needleſs to advertiſe my Reader here, that The Hiſtory of Margaret de Valois Queen of Navarre, Siſter to Francis I. Printed † at Amſterdam in two Volumes in 12*o* in 1696, is a Contexture of Fictions and Romantick Chimera's from the beginning to the end, upon a little Foundation of Hiſtorical Facts. It had been much better that the Perſon, who thus abuſ'd his Leiſure in forging ſuch Fables, had employ'd it in giving the true and entire Hiſtory of this illuſtrious Princeſs. Such an Hiſtory had been more for the Honour of this Queen, than the Quality of a Heroine of a Romance fond of a * Prince, not knowing whether ſhe ſhould be his Wife, and with whom ſhe was never married. There is infinitely leſs Heroiſm in ſuch a Paſſion ‡, invented by the Writer, than in the Generoſity, wherewith our Margaret de Valois actually protected many Perſons of Merit perſecuted (P) for Religion.

† According to the Paris Edition.

* The Conſtable de Bourbon

‡ Note, that according to the ordinary Courſe of humane Actions, Virtue is compatible with the love of a Maid for a Man, tho' ſhe knows not more than ſhe ſhould with how. But according to the Idea of Perfection, ſuch a Love is contrary to Virtue. It ought not to be found in a Lady from 16 at Pleaſure, for a Model of Perfection. This is what the Writers of Romances cannot conform to, for they take it for a Rule, that Love is the Soul of their Works.

NA-

People. The other Edition will only be uſed by the reaſonable and judicious Frenchmen.

Before we leave off, let us make a more conſiderable Obſervation. Here we have a prudent, moſt vertuous and moſt pious Queen, who nevertheleſs compoſes a Book of Stories pretty free and ſmutty, and would have the World to know her to be the Author of it. How many Ladies are there actually plunged in the Diſorders of a filthy Gallantry, who would not, for all the World, write in that Strain? What they write, and even what they ſpeak, has the Air of an extraordinary Modeſty: One would ſay their Imagination durſt not approach Obſcenity within two hundred Leagues: Diſcourſes never ſo little free, that a Man ſhould offer in their Preſence, would put 'em to the bluſh, and give 'em a ſerious Demeanour that beſpoke an extreme Indignation. It is not impoſſible but they may be inwardly full of Reſentment, and diſguſted with ſuch a Converſation; for there are ſtrange Inequalities in a humane Soul, and great diſparities betwixt the Head and Heart. Such an one has greater Purity in his Heart and Morals, than in his Tongue: Another has his Heart corrupted, a Concubine or two; and at the ſame time an extreme diſguſt to the Tales of Boccacio, Farces, and all Writings that bear not the Character of a rigid Gravity. This being the turn of his Head, his Taſte goes no farther, and has no influence on his Heart and Morals. The Queen of Navarre was of a different Temper: "(d) She frequently compoſed "Comedies and Moralities, which at that time were "called Paſtorals; which ſhe cauſed to be acted and "repreſented by the young Ladies of her Court. She "delighted much in compoſing Spiritual Songs; for "ſhe had her Heart much addicted to God; and "therefore ſhe had for her Device the Marigold (e).... "with this Inſcription, Non inferiora ſecutus, to ſignify "that ſhe directed and intended all her Actions, "Thoughts, Will and Affections, to this great Sun "which is God; and for this Reaſon ſhe was ſuſ"pected of Lutheraniſm." Theſe laſt Words are very remarkable, and do as much Honour to the Reformed, as diſhonour to the Catholicks: but that is not the Point in queſtion. I am only to obſerve, that a Princeſs, fully poſſeſs'd with the Love of God, notwithſtanding exerciſ'd her Pen upon obſcene Matters, as are thoſe of the Heptameron.

(d) Brantome, ubi ſupra, pag. 308, 309.

(e) Brantome ſays here that this Flower has more conformity with the Sun than any other; and that it turns always with the Sun from Eaſt to Weſt.

(O) The baſe Attempt of Admiral de Bonniver.] He loved our Margaret de Valois; and 'tis ſaid (f) that this Princeſs's Virtue, inſtead of conquering this Lover's Paſſion by denying him all hope, made him commit Follies, which had no ſucceſs, and which had been puniſh'd, if the King had not had greater condeſcenſion for him, than Juſtice for his Siſter. Mr. Varillas, who gives us this Fact, has theſe Words in the Margin: "He attempted to force her three times; and ſhe de"fended her ſelf ſo well, that the ſecond time he was "oblig'd to keep his Chamber above five Weeks, by rea"ſon of his Scratches." This Hiſtorian obſerves in another place (g), that Charles V. pardoning the Crime (h) of Mary de Padilla, would have the Cauſe of it declared in the Act of Abolition, but that Francis I. did not uſe that Form in the Impudent Action, that Bonniver's Love put him upon. The Court coming to viſit him in one of his Eſtates, he had the Policy to lodge a great Princeſs, whom he loved, in a Chamber ſo ſituate, that he might enter it from his own through a Trap-door, which he ſlip'd through in the Night; but the Prince's waking at the Noiſe he made in taking up the Trap-door, called her Women, and by their appearance ruined Bonniver's deſign. The King, when he heard it, only laugh'd at it; and alſo immediately departed, to ſave his Favourite the Shame he would have had, if the Court had ſtay'd longer at his Houſe. Brantome tells this Story with a Circumſtance that overthrows the laſt part of Varillas's: For he ſuppoſes that Francis I. did not know of this Adventure. He ſays (i) that the Princeſs deſign'd to complain to the King her Brother, but that Mr (k) de Chattillon's Widow, her Lady of Honour, induced her not to ſpeak of it; and alledged good and prudent Reaſons, which the Queen of Navarre has related in one of her (l) Stories. 'Tis her own Adventure, that ſhe recounts in it. And if you would know, ſays Brantome (m), who is meant in the Novel, it was the Queen of Navarre her ſelf, and Admiral de Bonnivet, as I had it from my deceaſed (n) Grand mother: In which methinks the Queen ought not to have concealed her Name, ſince the other could gain nothing upon her Chaſtity, but was put to confuſion; and ſhe would have divulged the Fact, but for the good and prudent Remonſtrance of this Lady of Honour, Madame de Chaſtilon. Brantome was more reſerved in the Elogy of Admiral de Bonnivet; he indeed alludes to human Enterprize related in the Queen of Navarre's Novels, but he adds, he will not divulge the Name of the Princeſs, whom this Favourite had endeavour'd to ſurprize.

(f) Varillas Hiſt. of Francis I. Book 4, p. 256. Holl. Edit. 1690.

(g) Id. ib. Book 13, pag. 397.

(h) See the Article of this Padilla.

(P) Generoſity wherewith our Margaret .... protected many Perſons of Merit proſecuted for Religion.] I don't examine whether Florimond de Remond has it from good Memoirs (a) that ſhe proteſted at her Death, that what ſhe had done for the Followers of the New-Opinions, proceeded rather from Compaſſion, than any ill-will to the antient Religion of her Fathers. Granting her proteſtation to be ſincere, I maintain, there was ſomething more Heroical in her Compaſſion and Generoſity, than there would have been, had ſhe been perſwaded that the Fugitives ſhe protected were Orthodox: For a Princeſs, or any other Woman, to do good to thoſe, whom ſhe takes to be of the Houſhold of Faith, is nothing extraordinary, but the common effect of a moderate Piety. But for a Queen to grant her Protection to People perſecuted for the Opinions ſhe believes to be falſe; to open a Sanctuary to them, to preſerve 'em from the Flames, into which their Enemies would thruſt 'em, to furniſh 'em with a Subſiſtence, liberally to relieve the Toils and Inconveniences of their Exile, is an heroical Magnanimity which has hardly any Precedent. 'Tis the Effects of a Superiority of Reaſon and Genius, which very few can aſcend to: 'Tis to be able to pity the Misfortune of thoſe that err, and admire at the ſame time their Conſtancy to the Dictates of their Conſcience: 'Tis to know how to do Juſtice to their good Intentions, and to the Zeal they expreſs for the Truth in general: 'Tis to know they are miſtaken in Hypotheſis, but that in Theſis they conform to the immutable and eternal Laws of Order, which require us to love the Truth, and to ſacrifice to it the Temporal Conveniences and Comforts of Life: 'Tis, in a word, to know how to diſtinguiſh in one and the ſame Perſon, his oppoſition to particular Truths, and his love for Truth in general, a Love, that he evidences by his great Zeal to the Doctrine he thinks to be true. This was the diſcerning Judgment of the Queen of Navarre. 'Tis difficult for all ſorts of Perſons to arrive at this Science: but eſpecially difficult to a Princeſs like her, who had been educated in the Communion of Rome, in which nothing was talk'd of for many Ages, but Faggots and Gibbets againſt thoſe that Err. Family Prejudices potently torcify all the Obſtacles that Education had put in the way of this Princeſs; for ſhe entirely loved the King her Brother, an implacable Perſecutor of thoſe they called Hereticks, a People whom he cauſed to be burnt without Mercy, where ever the indefatigable Vigilance of Informers diſcovered them. I cannot conceive by what Method this Queen of Navarre raiſed herſelf to ſo high a point of Equity, Reaſon and good Senſe: It was not through indifference to Religion, ſince 'tis certain ſhe had a great

(i) In the 4th of the 11th Day of the Heptameron.

(k) He that died at Ferrara of the Wound he received at the Battle of Ravenna.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 155.

(m) She was given for Lady of Honour to the Queen of Navarre, by Francis I. after Madam Chaſtillon's Death. Id. ib.

(n) Florimond de Remond was ſupra, p. 850

NAVARRE (JOAN d' Albret Queen of) Daughter of the preceding, was one of the moſt Illuſtrious Princeſſes of her Age. She was not yet eleven Years of Age *, when Francis I. married her to the Duke of Cleves. This Marriage, celebrated at Chatellerand with (A) an extraordinary Pomp † the 15th of July 1540, was declared null ſometime (B) after; and indeed it had been concluded in ſpite of the Proteſtations of the young Lady, and againſt the Will of Henry d' Albret, and Margaret de Valois her Father and Mother. She married at Moülins in October 1548, Antony de Bourbon, Duke of Vendome. They had * in the three or four firſt Years of their Marriage, two Sons that died both (C) in the Cradle by extraordinary Accidents. She found her ſelf with Child again the third time † in 1553, being in Picardy with her Huſband, who was Governour of that Province, and commanded an Army againſt Charles V. When Henry d' Albret her Father, underſtood that ſhe was with Child, ß he recalled her Home to him. She departed from Compiegne the 15th of November, and arrived at Pau the fourth of December, and was brought to Bed of a Son γ the 13th of the ſame Month ζ. She manifeſted in her Pains of Child-Birth an extraordinary Courage and (D) Force. She became Queen of Navarre by the Death of her Father θ the 25th of May 1555; and had, as well as her Huſband, much Indulgence χ for the Reformed Religion; a nd 'tis very probable, they would have ſoon publickly profeſſed it, if ‡ the Menaces of the King of France, and thoſe that Cardinal d' Armignac made them of the Pope's Indignation, had not reſtrained 'em. The deſign of preventing † Henry II's ill Intentions, obliged 'em to make a Journey to the Court of France in 1558. They paſſed through Rochelle; and there happen'd an

* Spond. ad. ann. 1541. n. 5.

† Olhagaray Hiſt. of Foix, Bearn and Navarre, p. 504. Spondanus is miſtaken in the Year: He hath placed this Marriage in June 1541.

* Perefixe Hiſt. of Henry the Great, pag. m. 13.

† Id. ib. pag. 14.

ß Id. ibid. pag. 15.

γ Who was afterwards Henry IV. King of France.

ζ Id. ibid.

θ Olhagaray, ubi ſupra, pag. 508.

χ See the Remark F.

‡ Id. ibid. p. 517.

† Id. ibid.

great Piety, and ſtudied the Scriptures with a ſingular Application. It muſt therefore be the Beauty of her Genius, and the Greatneſs of her Soul, that diſcovered a Path to her, which hardly any one had trodden. It will be ſaid perhaps, that ſhe needed only conſult the primitive and general Ideas of Order, which moſt clearly ſhow, that involuntary Errors hinder not a Man who intirely loves God, as he has been able to know him, after all poſſible Inquiries, from being reckoned the Servant of the true God, and that we ought to reſpect in him the Rights of the true God. But I might immediately anſwer, that this Maxim is of it ſelf ſubject to great Diſputes; ſo far is it from being clear and evident: Beſides that theſe primitive Ideas ſeldom appear to our Underſtanding without Limitations and Modifications, which obſcure 'em a hundred Ways, according to the different Prejudices contracted by Education: The Spirit of a Party, the Addiction to a Sect, and even Zeal for Orthodoxy, produce a kind of a Ferment in the Humours of our Body; whence the Medium thro' which Reaſon ought to behold thoſe Primitive Ideas, is muddied and darkned. Theſe are Infirmities that will attend our Reaſon, as long as it ſhall depend on the Miniſtry of the Organs. 'Tis the ſame thing to it, as the low and middle Region of the Air, incorporated with Vapours and Meteors. There are few that can elevate themſelves above theſe Clouds, and [b] poſt themſelves in a true Serenity: If any one can do it, we muſt ſay of him, what Virgil ſaid of Daphnis:

Candidus (c) inſuetum miratur (d) lumen Olympi,
Sub pedibuſque videt nubes & ſidera Daphnis.

And he would leſs reſemble a Man, than the immortal Beings, placed upon a Mountain (e) above the Region of Winds and Clouds, &c. There is almoſt as much need of being above the Paſſions to come to the Knowledge of ſome kind of Truths, as to act virtuouſly. Now we know that this Mountain is the Emblem of a good Man, whom no Paſſion withdraws from the Road of Juſtice.

(f) Sed ut altus Olympi
Vertex, qui ſpatio ventos hiemeſque relinquit,
Perpetuum nulla temeratus nube ſerenum,
Celſior exſurgit pluviis, auditque ruentes
Sub pedibus nimbos, & rauca tonitrua calcat:
Sic patiens animus per tanta negotia liber
Emergit, ſimiliſque ſui; juſtique tenorem
Flectere non odium cogit, non gratia ſuadet.

I think I have ſet off the Queen of Navarre's Heroiſm to good Advantage.

(A) Celebrated with an extraordinary Pomp.] Spondanus (g) obſerves that the Coronation of Charles V. was leſs expenſive than this Wedding; and he juſtly condemns the laviſh Humour of Francis I. as to theſe vain Magnificences. William Paradin has deſcribed (h) the Juſts that were made at that time, and the triumphal Palaces in the antick way. in which were armed Knights, who ſtood in honour of their Ladies. See alſo William du Bellai's Memoirs (i).

(B) Was declared null ſometime after; and indeed it had been concluded in ſpite.] Olhagaray (k) tells, that Francis I. cauſed Joan d' Albret to be educated at Pleſſis in Tours, and ſuffered her not to go from thence; for he feared that her Father would marry her to Philip the Emperor's Son. He adds, that ſhe wearied her ſelf to Death in this Place, and fill'd her Chamber with Complaints, and Sighs: "Which King Francis "hearing, married her to the Duke of Cleves, without "the conſent of her Father or Mother.... upon which "ſhe proteſted, and cauſed to be proteſted, in the "Preſence of John Sieur d' Abere.... Therefore this "forced Marriage, continues this Author, had no o-"ther Fruit than Ceremonies... and our Prince (l) "Henry cauſed this Marriage to be condemned, and "the Form that had been uſed, by the Pope's Authori-"ty; ſo that quickly after, on an Eaſter-Day, it was "declared null, in the Cathedral-Church of Tours, "and both Parties were left at Liberty to marry whom "they pleas'd: Whereupon the Duke of Cleves mar-"ried the Daughter of Ferdinand King of the Romans, "the Emperor's Brother." Note, by the way, a Fault of Spondanus: He will have Joan to be diſ-engag'd from her Contract, only becauſe the Duke of Cleves had married Ferdinand's Daughter.

(l) That is, the King of Navarre, Father to the Bride.

Brantome relates a Fact, that proves, that the Queen of Navarre, the Bride's Mother, was preſent at the Marriage: The thing is curious. "(m) The Day that "Madam the Princeſs of Navarre was married to the "Duke of Cleves at Chaſtelleraud, as ſhe was to be led "to Church, becauſe ſhe was laden with Jewels and "Cloth of Gold and Silver, and by reaſon of the "weakneſs of her Body could not walk, the King "commanded the Conſtable to take his little Niece in "his Arms, and carry her to the Church; at which "all the Court was ſurprized, as being an Office not "ſuitable or honourable in ſuch a Ceremony for the "Conſtable; and which might well be diſpoſed of to "another: Wherewith the Queen of Navarre was no "ways diſpleaſed; and ſaid, There is the Man (n) "who would ruin me with my Brother, who ſerves "at preſent to carry my Daughter to Church. I have "this Story from the Perſon I have mention'd; and "alſo that the Conſtable was much diſguſted with "this Office, and was greatly enrag'd to be made ſuch "a Spectacle to all the Company; and ſaid, There is "an end of my Favour, Farewel to it; as it happen'd; "for after the Entertainment, and the Wedding-Din-"ner, he was diſmiſs'd, and departed immediately. "I have this from my Brother alſo, who was then "Page at Court, who ſaw the Myſtery, and remem-"ber'd it very well; for he had a very happy Me-"mory."

(m) Brantome's Memoirs of Illuſtrious Ladies, p. 311.

(n) See the Remark H of the foregoing Article.

(C) Died both in the Cradle by extraordinary Accidents.] "(a) The firſt was ſtifled with Heat, becauſe "his Governeſs, who was chilly, kept him too hot. "The ſecond loſt his Life by the Foolery of a Nurſe; "for one Day, as ſhe was playing with the Child with a "Gentleman, and they were throwing it to one ano-"ther, they let it fall to the Ground, and it pined "away."

(a) Perefixe Hiſt. of Henry the Great, p. m. 13.

(D) An extraordinary Courage and Force.] The King of Navarre her Father (b) promis'd to put his Will into her Hands, aſſoon as ſhe ſhould be delivered, but upon condition that in her Child-Birth ſhe ſhould ſing a Song, to the

(b) Id. ib. pag. 16.

(b) Munita tenere Edita doctrina ſapientum templa ſerena. Lucret. lib. 2. v. 7.

(c) Virgil. eclog. 5. v. 56

(d) Moſt editions ſay limen.

(e) That of Olympus. See Apuleius in Libro de Mundo, p. m. 73. and Homer's Verſes, which he cites.

(f) Claudian. de Mallii Theod. conſulatu, pag. m. 6. col. 2.

(g) Spond. ad. an. 1541. n. 5.

(h) William Paradin Hiſt. of our Time. Book 4. p. m. 406. & ſeq.

(i) In Book 8. ad. ann. 1540, p. m. 909.

(k) Olhagaray Hiſt. of Foix, Bearn and Navarc, pag. 503, 504.

an Adventure, during their ſtay there (E), which is very curious. 'Tis obſervable that Queen Joan ſhewed her ſelf more Luke-warm (F) than her Husband, both whilſt they were at the Court of France, and after they returned to their Dominions; but that at laſt he totally renounc'd Calviniſm, and became its Perſecutor; and that ſhe made open Profeſſion of it, and declared her ſelf (G) its Protectreſs with all imaginable Zeal *. They

* Beſides all that ſhall be ſaid in the Remark G, I ſhall here ſay, that ſhe caused the New Teſtament, the Catechiſm and the Liturgy of Geneva, to be tranſlated into the Biſcay Language, that it was printed at Rochel by Peter Haultin in fine Characters. See Mr de Thou, Book 51 pag. 1059. & de vita ſua lib. 2. pag. 1182. where he relates that he ſaw in 1582, at Baſtide de Clarence, John Licarragues Miniſter of the place, and Author of the aforeſaid Tranſlation.

the end, ſays he, you may not bring me a crying and a crabbed Child. The Princeſs promiſed him, and had ſo much Courage, that, in ſpite of the great pain ſhe ſuffered, ſhe kept her Word, and ſang in her Bearniſh Language, as ſoon as ſhe heard him enter her Chamber. Theſe are the Words of the Song: (c) Noſte Donne deou cap deou pon, adjouda mi en aqueſte houre; that is, Our Lady, at the end of the Bridge, aſſiſt me at this Hour.

(c) Hilar. de Coſte Elogies of Illuſtrious Ladies, T. 1. p. 614. He cites A. Favin in his Hiſtory of Navarre

(E) An Adventure during their ſtay there, which is very curious.] Mr Vincent has found in Peter Pacheau's Journal a large Relation of the Magnificent Reception the Rochellers gave the King and Queen of Navarre in 1558. He found alſo theſe (d) very Words: "Whilſt the "King of Navarre was in this City, the Word of God "was miniſter'd to us in St. Bartholomew's Church by "his Preacher Mr. David, who was a wiſe and good "Preacher." But here foollws the Adventure mentioned in this Remark. "(e) Whilſt the King and "Queen of Navarre ſtaid at Rochelle, there came a "Company of Comedians. One Day that they had a "notable Comedy to repreſent (which they had given "publick notice of) the King and Queen came with "their Court; and there was alſo an extraordinary "Affluence of People: They repreſented a Woman "a dying, who fetch'd deep Sighs and Groans, and "demanded immediately to be confeſs'd. The Cu"rate of the Parith was ſent for; he came with all his "Equipage and did all he could; but the ſick Wo"man was ſtill impatient, ſaying ſhe was not "well confeſs'd. Other Eccleſiaſticks came after the "Curate, and had no better Succeſs than he. After "them came the Monks of the ſeveral Orders in their "Turn, and ſpared neither for Relicks nor Indul"gences; whereof they had Sack-fulls, and which "they read one by one to the Sick, who, for "her laſt Remedy was cloathed in St. Francis's Habit. "All this operated nothing to give her Conſcience "repoſe; ſhe ſaid, lamenting, that none of em all "knew what it was to confeſs well. Hereupon one of "her Acquaintance came upon the Stage, and look"ing about on all ſides, as having a Secret to tell, "which he would not have any Body to hear, he ac"quainted the ſick Perſon, that he knew a Man who "would confeſs her as ſhe ought, and reſtore her to a "good Condition; but that the Day being prejudicial "to this Man, he only came out by Night: The Wo"man prayed and preſſed he ſhould be ſent for. After "having waited ſometime, this Man came in an or"dinary Habit, and, coming to her Bed-ſide, he "ſpoke to her, ſo as thoſe preſent could not hear any "thing he ſaid; they only obſerv'd by the Woman's "Geſtures that ſhe appear'd to be very well ſatisfy'd. "At laſt he drew a little Book out of his Pocket, which "he gave her ſaying aloud, that this Book contain'd "infallible Receipts againſt her Diſtemper, and that "if ſhe uſed it, ſhe would in a few Days find her "Health perfectly reſtored. When the Man was gone, "the Woman aroſe found and entirely cured, and, "having taken two or three Turns upon the Stage, "ſhe told the Spectators, that this unknown Perſon "had done what was impoſſible for all the reſt; and "that it muſt be confeſs'd his Book contain'd admi"rable Receipts, as might be ſeen from the ſpeedy Ef"fect ſhe had found of it; That if any of 'em was ſeized "with the ſame Diſtemper, ſhe would adviſe em to "have recourſe to this Book; which ſhe would glad"ly lend them, but admoniſhing em withal, that in "touching it they would find it ſomewhat hot; and "that there proceeded a vehement Odour from it, "ſmelling of the Faggot: That, for the reſt, it the "Aſſiſtants deſired to know her Name that ſpoke, "and the Name of the Book, they were Riddles, that "ſhe left them to divine. The King and Queen of "Navarre declar'd they were pleas'd with this Co"medy, and ſo did all the Court; and by their Ex"ample a great number of the Spectators, many "whereof were already diſguſted with the Romiſh Re"ligion. They eaſily underſtood that this ſick Perſon "was Truth; that the firſt that had not well confeſs'd "her, were ſuch as took the Title of Doctors and "Paſtors; and who, inſtead of confeſſing the Truth of "God, held it in Unrighteouſneſs: That this laſt "Comer was one of the pretended Hereticks, whom "Perſecution conſtrain'd to hide themſelves; and "who alone, when they were called, duly confeſs'd "the Truth, which they had known: That, laſtly, "the hot Book, which ſmelt of the Faggot, was the "New Teſtament, which they were forbidden to have "and read in the vulgar Tongue, upon peril of being "burnt. But that which ſo well ſatisfied ſome, as "much diſpleas'd others: eſpecially the Eccleſiaſticks "were offended, and went to make their Complaints "to the King of Navarre himſelf, and afterwards to "the Magiſtrates of the Town, who already talk'd of "drawing up an Information: So that the Comedians "thought it the beſt way to depart as ſilently and as "ſuddenly as might be; and they wou'd not have "come off ſo eaſily had it not appear'd that they be"long'd to this Prince, and the Queen his Wife." See the Margin (f).

(d) Philip Vincent Inquiries into the beginning and progreſs of the Reformation in the Town of Rochelle, pag. 31.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 36 & ſeq.

We muſt ſay a Word or two of the Preacher David, who followed the Court of Navarre in their Progreſs to Paris. He was a Monk (g) who came into Guienne with the Mareſchal de St Andre in 1555, when this Mareſchal came to conſult about his Health that Excellent Phyſician Julius Cæſar de l'Eſcale. This Monk's Sermons awaken'd the Minds of many, who began to meet ſecretly. This cauſed the Biſhop of Agen (h) to force him to abſent himſelf: But God made uſe of this abſence for the Benefit of the City of Nerac, where Preaching was allowed by the King and Queen of Navarre, in the great Hall of the Caſtle, who began in ſome meaſure to taſte the Truth; which, from henceforth, took ſuch Root in that Country (though there was no mention yet of any ordinary Miniſtry) that it could never ſince be extirpated. You ſee here that in the Year 1555, the King and Queen of Navarre clearly manifeſted their Inclination to a Reformation. We ſhall ſee divers Facts of this Nature in the Remark G.

(f) See Mr de Thou, Book 51 pag. 1059. & de vita ſua lib. 2. pag. 1182. where he relates that he ſaw in 1582, at Baſtide de Clarence, John Licarragues Miniſter of the place, and Author of the aforeſaid Tranſlation.

(F) More Luke-warm than her Husband.] Brantome relates (a) that the King of Navarre cauſed his Miniſter David to preach in the Towns he paſſed through; and that he brought him to the Court which was then at Fontainebleau; and that King Henry did not like his bringing this Miniſter along with him. The Queen of Navarre at that time, continues Brantome, (b) who was young, handſome, and a moſt worthy Princeſs, and who loved a Dance as well as a Sermon, was not pleaſed with this Novelty of Religion, nor ſo much as has been ſaid, and this I have from good Hands, tha ſhe remonſtrated one Day to the King her Husband, and boldly told him that if he had a Mind to ruin himſelf, and have his Eſtates confiſcated, ſhe would not ſuffer hers, nor the little which remained to her of the Kings her Predeceſſors to be minions, who for Hereſie had loſt the Kingdom of Navarre. Beza agrees well enough with this. See his Words in the following Remark.

(a) Brantome Life of French Captains. I. 3. p. 237.

(b) Id. ib.

(G) She declared her ſelf the Protectreſs of Calviniſm.] We'll give here a ſhort account of the Progreſs that the Proteſtant Religion made in Bearn under this Queen. We have ſeen (d) what was done at Nerac in 1555. I find that in 1557 the (e) Sieur de St. Martin went to Geneva (f) for a Miniſter for the King of Navarre's Court, to whom all the Houſhold gave an Ear. The Court of France having notice of it, threatned the King of (g) Navarre to make War upon him, if he continued to give the Proteſtants Liberty to preach publickly in Bearn. This made him obligingly deſire the Miniſter Boiſnormand to retire elſewhere. The Miniſter retired, but he continued to preach ſome time after, induced by the Entreaties of the Courtiers at Mazeres les Pau one of the moſt antient Families of Bearn, and moſt faithful to the Proteſtant Intereſt. The King and Queen of Navarre going into France in 1558 took with them Peter David (h) and made him generally preach in a Prieſt's Habit without a Surplice. We have ſeen above that he preached at Rochelle, and it appears by Letter i, it appears that ſhe only imitated her Mother in making uſe of like Comedies.

(d) In the Remark E Letter b. (e) O'Hagaray, ubi ſupra, pag. 517. (f) Called Francis le Guay et ſurnamé Beau Normand (Beza calls him Boiſnormand) and commonly la Pierre. Id. ib. (g) Id. ib. (h) Beza ubi ſupra, p. 103.

(g) Beza Hiſt. Eccleſ. Book 2. pag. 102. (h) Id. ib. (a) Brantome Life of French Captains. I. 3. p. 237. (b) Id. ib. (c) Id. ib. (d) In the Remark E Letter b. (e) O'Hagaray, ubi ſupra, pag. 517. (f) Called Francis le Guay et ſurnamé Beau Normand (Beza calls him Boiſnormand) and commonly la Pierre. Id. ib. (g) Id. ib. (h) Beza ubi ſupra, p. 103.

They returned to Bearn before the Death of Henry II. This Abſence of the King of Navarre favoured the Guiſes, in the Uſurpation of the Government in the Reign of Francis II. He did not make ſo much haſte to Paris as the Conſtable of Montmorenci deſired, and the (i) Prayers he uſed at the beginning and end of his Sermon, that his Language was that of a Miniſter. This King having ſeen Henry II. at Fontainebleau (k) returned to Paris, and (l) took Courage, ſo as to appear in ſome meetings amongſt People of mean Condition: Which is more, it happening that two Miniſters of Paris were ſurprized in their Chamber; one whereof was diſmiſs'd by the Serjeants, who had ſome Crowns put in their Hands; the other named Antony Chandieu .... was impriſon'd in the Chaſtelet: This King went himſelf the next Day to own him as one of his Family, and brought him off ſafe. He was preſent at the publick Aſſemblies in a Field, where David's Pſalms were ſung. (n) The Cardinals de Bourbon and Lorrain, having promiſed a large Benefice to Peter David, he undertook to reſtore his Maſter and Miſtriſs to the Roman Communion more than ever: This coming to his Maſter's Ears, he turn'd him out. When this Prince left Bearn with his Queen, he left his Son (o) under the Direction of Suſanna de Bourbon, John d' Albret's Wife; and under that of Lewis d' Albret Biſhop of Leſcar. (p) The Abſence of the King and Queen, by the Protection of the Regents tho' Roman Catholicks, elevated the Proteſtants: Inſomuch that they held notable Aſſemblies in the Country, with the Permiſſion of the Governours; a thing, ſays the Original, that is very remarkable, That by means of a Child, a Biſhop and a Woman, the main Foundations of Religion were laid in Bearn. This News was ſpread abroad; the King of Navarre pretended to be ſorry, though he had given his Conſent; ſo that he permitted, that George Cardinal d' Armagnac ſhould come to Bearn, and made him Lieutenant-General with my Lord the Prince. Being arrived, he was ſo far from hindring the Pretenſions of the Proteſtants by a Conference, he ſaid he would have in Bearn; that on the contrary, they reſolved amongſt themſelves not to give way to the Violence of their Lieutenant, who began with impriſoning Henry de Barran, their Miniſter, who had been a Dominican, but received without any Offence, to be preſented to the King at his return; who commanded him to go on with the faithful Exerciſe of his Duty, which God had given him. The King of Navarre was retired from the French Court, much diſcontented; and that, amongſt other Reaſons, becauſe no care was taken of his Intereſts at the Treaty of Cateau. He returned to Paris after the Death of Henry II. 'Tis true, he did not uſe that haſte, which the Conſtable of Montmorenci adviſed him to: He arrived a little too late, and could not maintain his Priviledges during the Minority of Francis II. Let us hear Beza:

" (q) At laſt he enter'd upon his Journey and made " wonderful Promiſes to the Miniſters of the Churches, " through which he paſs'd, who remonſtrated his Duty to him, both as to the State in general, and to the " poor Churches, which he knew to have been ſo long " ill treated, by thoſe who abuſed the late Kings: But " when he came to Court, though he was very well " attended, to aſſume the Authority due to his Rank; " in which he would have been aſſiſted with the favour and principal Forces of the Kingdom; yet ſuffering himſelf to be govern'd by two of his Train, " namely the Sieur d' Eſcars, and the Biſhop of Mande, " who were dealt with by his Enemies, after he had " ſuffered a thouſand Indignities, he ſeemed not ſo " much as to reſent them; and after he had aſſiſted " at the Coronation of the King at Reims the 18th of " Septemb er the ſame Year, he was ſent back into his " Country with a Commiſſion to conduct the Queen of " Spain, the King's Siſter, to the King of Spain her " Husband." Having conducted the Queen of Spain, (r) he retired to Bearn, and for ſome time deſpiſed the Court, openly countenancing the Proteſtants, and a Monk adminiſtring the Sacrament, in his Habit on Eaſter-Day, in Pau Church, where he had preach'd the Lent, whoſe Name was Arnauld Guilhem Barbaſte, a Carmelite, he was willing to communicate; although Francis le Gay, who was recall'd into Bearn, celebrated it the Tueſday after in the Houſe of Caſſe, where was a great concourſe of Nobility, and particularly a Lady of the Family of Carmaing, who had been a Nun in Caſſes. After the Affair of Amboiſe, the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde his Brother, had Orders to come to the Court of France. They came: The Prince was immediately put into Priſon, and would have been beheaded, if Francis II. had not died †. The King his Brother was alſo in a ſort of Confinement. He had declared before his Journey, that he highly favoured the Reformed. " (s) He publickly complained of the " Houſe of Guiſe, and found himſelf well attended " with Gentlemen, almoſt all profeſſing the Proteſtant " Religion, who promis'd him, upon that Complaint, " Succour and Aſſiſtance.... A few Days after (t) " came Beza to Nerac, whom the King of Navarre " had ſent for from Geneva, which wonderfully ſtruck " all the Adverſaries.... (v) At that time alſo was " printed a Petition in French, addreſs'd to the King " of Navarre, and other Princes of the Blood, for " the Liberty of the King and Queen, and the King- " dom, againſt the uſurp'd Government of the Guiſes, " which ſerv'd but to inflame the Cardinal more: " And, as this made a great Noiſe, the Cardinal d' Armagnac came alſo to Nerac, bringing a great Bull with " him, by which the Pope excommunicated Boynormand " the Sieur de la Gaucherie, Preceptor to the Prince of " Navarre, and their Adherents; but no great account " was made of him or his Benedictions, which he " gave at his Entrance into the Town, which were " laugh'd at by every Body. The King of Navarre at " that time, ſhewed himſelf zealous for the Proteſtant " Religion; foraſmuch as he would have no more " Maſs, and only talk'd of God (thinking only, as " every one affirmed on the means of advancing the " Kingdom of Chriſt.) But the Queen his Wife behaved herſelf very coldly, fearing to loſe her Eſtate, " and being unwilling to leave many things of this " World, to put her ſelf under the Conduct of a purer " Religion: In which at laſt appeared the inſcrutable " Wiſdom of the Judgments of God; for the King a " little after quitted all, upon the bare arrival of the " Sieur de Curjol; and had little Concern for the future. The Queen his Wife on the contrary began a " little after to profeſs it entirely; and with ſuch a Perſeverance, that ſhe became an Example to all the " Princeſſes in Chriſtendom. The Cardinal de Bourbon, and the Sieur de Cruſſol came alſo to Nerac to " forward the Conſpiracy that was formed againſt the " two Brothers; at whoſe arrival all went backwards: " For the King and Queen of Navarre ordered Maſs to be " ſaid at the Convent of the Cordeliers; at which they " were preſent, and obliged their Son, the little Prince, " to be there too .... (w) The Queen of Navarre after " her Husband's Departure, retir'd to Bearn, where " ſhe had notice in few Days of the taking of the " Prince at Orleans, and the Conſpiracies againſt her " Husband, and how ſome Councils were held in Spain, " to ſurprize her Principality of Bearn, and the Remainder of Navarre. Thus ſeeing all the Confidence ſhe had in Men loſt, and all Humane Aſſiſtance failing her, being inwardly touch'd with the " Love of God, ſhe made her recourſe to him with " all Humility, Lamentation and Tears, as to her only " Refuge; proteſting ſhe would keep his Commandments: Inſomuch, that at the time of her greateſt " Tribulation, ſhe made publick Profeſſion of the pure " Doctrine; being fortified by Francis le Gay, alias " Bonormand, and N. Hemy, faithful Miniſters of the " Word of God, and referring all to his Mercy, took " a Maſculine and courageous Heart, going to viſit and " provide for a long time her Forreſts of Navarreins " in Bearn: For the Report was, that the Spaniards " meant to ſurprize it; in which place ſhe heard of " the King's Sickneſs (a), and quickly after of his Death. " Upon which News, on Chriſtmaſs-Day (b) afterwards, ſhe again made a publick and clear Confeſſion of her Faith, and communicated in the Holy Sacrament. And quickly after ſhe ſent to the King her " Confeſſion of Faith, drawn up, written and ſigned " with her own Hand, as being a Woman of extraordinary Senſe."

What Beza affirms, that the King of Navarre, after the Sieur de Cruſſol had engag'd him to go to the Court of France, was little concern'd for the Reformed Religion, is very falſe; for this Prince after the Death of Francis II. kept ſtrictly united for ſome time with the Admiral, and other Huguenot-Leaders, and by their means obtain'd the Poſt of (c) Lieutenant General, repreſenting the Perſon and Authority of the King throughout the Kingdom, and that the Regent Catharine de Medecis ſhould do nothing without his Conſent. They made a great advantage of this: I'll deſcribe it in the Words of Mr Maimbourg. " (d) The King of Navarre, who " had openly declar'd for 'em, in order made ſcrupe to " ſay

(i) You'll find it in Mr. Vincent's Writing, pag. 31 & ſeq.
(k) Beza, ubi ſupra, pag. 140.
(l) Id. ib.
(n) Id. ib. pag. 103.
(o) Olhagaray, ubi ſupra pag. 518.
(p) Id. ib.
(q) Beza, ubi ſupra, Book 3, p. 226.
(r) Olhagaray, pag. 520.
† See the Remark H.
(s) Beza, ubi ſupra, pag. 324. ed. ann. 1560.
(t) That is, about the end of June 1560.
(v) Id. ib. pag. 325.
(w) Id. ib. pag. 326.
(a) That is, of Francis II.
(b) 'Tis then the 25*th of* December 1560. Note that Olhagaray ubi ſupra, pag. 530. ſays, that this Queen always made Profeſſion of the Romiſh Religion, till the Year 1565, who on Eaſter-day at Pau having publickly proteſted, received the Sacrament the Day 1565, is either a Fault of the Printers, or a groſs Ignorance of the Author. He ſhould ſay 1561.
(c) Maimbourg Hiſt. of Calviniſm, pag. 189, Holl. Edit. ad ann. 1561.
(d) Id. ib. See alſo Varillas' Hiſt. of Charles XI. Book 1. p.m. 37.

and being at last arrived, he was no wise capable of establishing himself in the exercise of the Priviledges, which his quality of first Prince of the Blood gave him. They removed him upon pretence of conducting † the Queen of Spain to the Frontiers of the Kingdom; and when he was recalled, with the Prince of Conde his Brother, it was only (H) to oppress them. They were saved by the Death of Francis II. They disputed their † Elizabeth of France, Daughter to Henry II. married to Philip II. King of Spain in 1559.

" say to the Danish Ambassador, that he might assure " his Master that in a Year's time, he would cause " the pure Gospel to be preach'd all over France: " And whereas the Ambassador, who was a Lutheran, " had desired that it might be according to the " Doctrine of Luther, and not of Calvin; Antony " answered, that these two Doctors were agreed in " forty Articles against the Pope, and only differed in " two or three Points; and therefore the first thing to " be done, was for the Lutherans and Calvinists to unite " in destroying the Papacy, and after that they " shou'd apply themselves to find means of Ac- " commodation. Such an open Declaration of the " King of Navarre, inspired the Huguenots with that " Presumption, that they thought they might, in spight " of all the Edicts, make publick Exercise of their " Religion, with Impunity, as they did openly at Fon- " tainebleau, whilst no Body durst oppose 'em, since " the Court permitted it. And indeed the Princes, " and the Admiral, who made no doubt, that " the Queen would keep her Word, caus'd Sermons " to be preach'd in the Chambers they had in the " Castle; and then it was .... (e) that Heresy was " seen to enter, as in Triumph, into the Palace of the " most Christian Kings, there to erect the Throne of " its Empire: It may be said, that it then exercis'd a " full and entire Dominion, being supported with the " Authority of the two first Princes of the Blood, and " the favour of the Queen." This Author adds (f), that not only the Queen permitted the Ministers to preach in the Apartments of the Princes, where the People flock'd in shoals to hear 'em; whilst a poor Jacobin, who preach'd the Lent-Sermons at Fontainebleau was deserted (1); but she also was present her self with all the Ladies at the Sermons of the Bishop of Valence, who preach'd openly in one of the Halls of the Castle the new Doctrines he had drawn from the Heresies of Luther and Calvin. Collate with this the Remark F of the Article of the Chancellor de l'Hospital: You'll there see that the good Condition the Protestants of France were in, in the Year 1551, proceeded from the King of Navarre's Adherence to their Party; and that the decline of their Affairs dated its Origin from this King's Change. He was gain'd by the Chimerical Hopes of the Kingdom of Sardinia: He was caught in the Snares of Love by the Stratagems of a wanton Maid of Honour of Catherine de Medicis. Hence he changed from white to black; he became the Enemy of the Protestants, and (h) would constrain the Queen his Wife to abandon 'em; but he took not that Method till after the Colloquy of Poissy (i). She was present at it, and we have seen elsewhere with what Pomp she caus'd Sermons to be preach'd in the Borough of Argenteuil the 25th of September 1561. Note, that before the left Nerac for the Court of France, in August the same Year, he had (l) given the Convent of the Cordeliers, which was then void, for the entertainment of the Ministers, and making a College of it; And that passing through Perigueux, the (m) committed the Ministers Erastier to the Protection of the Canons, who had put him in Prison, and assur'd 'em that if they did him any injury, they should answer for it, which preserved him for that time. Note also, that 'tis very probable that the King of Navarre only made an outward change, and grew a Persecutor with the meer prospect of obtaining the advantages which the Court of Rome and Philip II. had given him hopes of; for when he saw Death was like to cut off his Hopes, he unmask'd. " (n) He died " repenting (some say) that he had changed his Reli- " gion, and resolved to carry on the Reformation " more than ever, as he sent Word to the Prince his " Brother by a Steward of his Houshold, called Os- " querque. This was said by some of our Party. Mr de Thou (o), Mezerai (p), Varillas (q), and many other Historians relate in general the same thing more or less. See also d'Aubigné *.

(c) Maim. ib. p. 190.

(f) Id. ib. pag. 192.

(i) The last Session of this Colloquy was the 26th of September 1561.

(l) Beza, ubi supra, Book 5, pag. 793.

(m) Id. ib. 794.

(n) Brant. ubi supra, pag. 244.

(o) Thuan. lib. 32. pag. 668.

(p) Mezer. Abr. Chronol. Tom. 5. pag. 64.

(q) Varill. Hist. of Charles IX. Tom. 1. p. m. 267.

* D'Aubigné, Tom. 1. book 3. Chap. 10. page 220.

The Constancy wherewith Jane d'Albret resisted the Severities of her Husband, and the Solicitations of Catherine de Medicis, has been related in another place. Let us continue to relate what she did for her Religion. She returned to Bearn sometime after her Husband's Revolt; and understanding that many Violences had been committed against the Huguenots in the Country of Foix (s), she was much offended at it, and writ roughly to the Sieur de Pailles; and remembring her Subjects of Foix, de Gibel and Haute-rive and other places, she obtain'd for them an entire discharge of all their Impositions, and fortify'd 'em by her Letters fill'd with notable Consolations taken from Scripture. This rais'd their Hearts, much sunk by their extreme Afflictions past: And seeing Bearn resolv'd to stand by her Desires, she absolutely forbid the exercise of the Romish Religion; caus'd the Images and Altars to be pull'd down and sent to Geneva, to the Sieur du Merlin; and a little after, at a great expence, she recall'd twenty Ministers of Bearn, to preach in the Country Language, and some Basques to instruct the lower Navarre, and especially forbid all publick Processions. The Cardinal d'Armagnac writ to her hereupon a long Letter the 18th of August 1563. She return'd him a very fine Answer off Hand (t), and calling (u) a Synod at Pau, she communicated to all the Ministers both these Letters. She caused Regulation to be made for the Receipt of the Ecclesiastical Dues, and for the giving up of Accounts, and for her Academy, and commanded her Seneschal to hold Assizes thro' her Country of Bearn, which are somewhat like those, that are called les Grands Tours in France. Whilst she was at the Court of France in 1566, there was held an Assembly in Bearn (w) in June " by those of the Protestant Religion; in " which it was concluded to depute to her Michael de " Vignaux Minister of Pau, to beseech her to proceed " to the entire Abolition of the Ceremonies of the " Romish Church, and to regulate the Country, ac- " cording to the Laws agreeable to the Gospel; and " that against all Whore-masters, Robbers, Usurers, " Drunkards, Tavern-Haunters, Card Players, and Con- " temners of Discipline. She received the Deputy " very graciously, and immediately caused her Coun- " cil to proceed in the Examination of all his Remon- " strances: And in July she answered to them, by Let- " ters Patents, containing a certain Regulation about " the Time, that the exercise was permitted to the Pro- " testants, forbidding all Swearings, Blasphemies, " Whoredoms, Games of Hazard, dissolute Dances, " publick or private, publick Processions, burying in " Churches, and enjoyning the Ecclesiastical Senate, " established by her Majesty, to find out a good num- " ber of Children, capable of Letters, and to main- " tain 'em at the College, at the publick Charge, that " they might be serviceable to the Republick, and the " Attorney-General to prosecute Usurers, ordaining, " that excommunicated Persons, who remained above a " Year so, should be prosecuted and fin'd by the same " Senate: She took away the Power from Ecclesiasticks " of conferring Benefices, impowering the Patron to " present whom he pleas'd, provided he profess'd " the Protestant Religion: She ordered a Pension for the " Ministers, reserving the rest till the return of from " Court." Understanding that Grammont (x), who feared some Disorder, had suspended the publication of her Patents for some time, she returned to Pearn; and assoon as she had some leisure at Pau, she caused 'em to be fully executed. (b) She appointed Commissioners to proceed every where in the abolishing of Images and Altars in all places of her Dominions. The Roman Catholicks rose in several places, and made Conspiracies, but were quell'd by the Queen. (c) The States of Bearn assembled at Pau, urgently demanded the Revocation of her Patents; but she only granted an Amnesty for the Rebels of Oleron, who were in the Hands of the Executioner, ready to be executed, and absolutely refused the Restrictions or Modifications which were required. She lost her Dominions by the Rebellion of her Catholick Subjects, supported by the Troops of France in the third War. But the Count of Montgomery recovered 'em; and willing to finish (d) his Trophies with a new Victory over Scandals and Impieties, he called a Synod at Lescar the tenth of October 1569, where the Discipline of the Sovereignty of Bearn was renewed. I imagine that the Queen also then renewed her Edict, concerning the Abolition of the Mass, and the Confiscation of all Ecclesiastical Estates; for which Reason most Historians (e) fix the Date to the Year 1569, though the true Date is July 1656.

(s) Olhagaray, ubi supra, pag. 535.

(t) These Letters are at length in Olhagaray's Hist.

(u) Id. ib. pag. 552.

(w) Id. ib. pag. 563.

(x) Id. ib. pag. 565.

(b) Id. ib.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 569.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 622.

(e) The Historian of the Edict of Nantes. Tom. 1. p. 38, is one of 'em.

(H) It was only to oppress them.] The Prince of Conde was try'd, and condemn'd to lose his Head; and their Authority with the Guiſes the firſt Year of Charles the IXth's Reign; and no doubt if they had not been divided, they would have carried the point; but the King of Navarre leaguing with the Catholick Party, periſhed in it in a little time. He died the 17th of November 1562, of the Wound he had received at the Siege of Rouen the 25th of October the ſame Year. The Embaſſy of Obedience, which he and Joan d' Albret had ſent to Pope Pius IV. in 1560, had been favourably received, notwithſtanding the oppoſition of the King of Spain *. This Queen, ill-uſed by her Husband, after his renouncing the Proteſtant Religion, retired from the Court of France, and arrived in Bearn in ſpight of (I) Monluc's Endeavours to ſtop her Paſſage. This was a Man that deſigned her much Miſchief. She did not content her ſelf with eſtabliſhing the Reformed Religion in her Dominions, but alſo aboliſhed Popery, and ſeized γ the Goods of the Eccleſiaſticks, deſigning them for the Maintenance of Miniſters and Schools ‡. The Pope cited her to Rome in 1563, and cauſed the Citation to be fixed on the Gates of St Peter, and thoſe of the Inquiſition, declaring that if ſhe did not appear, all her Lands and Lordſhips ſhould be confiſcated, and that her Perſon would incur all the Pains of Hereticks; but the Court of France thought this Procedure ſo contrary to the Liberties of the Gallican Church, that it cauſed the Citation to be revoked †. This Queen met with much Diſobedience in her Catholick Subjects, they frequently rebell'd; and 'tis alſo ſaid that they formed a horrible Conſpiracy to put her and her Children into (K) the King of Spain's Hands, who would have delivered 'em up to the Inquiſition; but ſhe defeated all their Conſpiracies, and never condeſcended to abate any thing of the Prerogatives of Sovereign Authority. She left her Dominions in 1568, to go and joyn the Proteſtant Leaders. She had a Conference at Cognac with the Prince of Conde her Brother-in-Law, and preſented to him † her Son the Prince of Navarre, whom ſhe devoted, as young as he was, to the Defence of the Cauſe, with her Rings and Jewels, which were afterwards engaged to contribute to the Charge of the Army; and ſhe writ to Foreign Princes; and, retiring to Rochelle, ſhe ſent to the Queen of England, an ample Account of the Deſolations of France, and its great Miſeries, praying her to have Compaſſion of ſo great a People, unjuſtly oppreſs'd in the midſt of the Kingdom of France; and to believe, that ſhe was not induced to take up Arms, but with a great and extreme neceſſity. She wrote to her by the Sieur de Chaſtelier the 15th of October 1568. The Catholicks of Bearn took advantage of her Abſence; and, with the Succours they received from Charles IX. they ſeized on the greateſt part of the Country; but Montgomery, whom ſhe ſent, retook the Places, and fully reſtored the Queen's Authority. He put ſome Leaders of the Rebellion to Death, though they had obtain'd the promiſe of Life in their Capitul-

* Spond. ad ann. 1561. n. 6.

γ Grimond. Hiſtor. Galliar. lib. 6 pag. m. 310.

‡ Mezerai Abridgment of the Hiſtory of France. Tom. 2, p. m. 425.

† Spond. ad. ann. 1563. n. 50, pag. m. 952.

† Olhagaray, ubi ſupra pag. 572.

(f) See Olhagaray ubi ſupra, pag. 325 &c ſeq. Thuanus, Lib. 29. p. 522. Jurieu Apology for the Reformation. T. 1. p. 344 & ſeq.

(g) Olhagaray, ubi ſupra pag. 53[illegible]

(h) Beza, ubi ſupra. Thuan. lib. 29. p. 525. Spond. ann. 1562. n. 7.

(i) The other two were Madam d'Aſſier, Daughter to the Gallican Queen Mother of the Antelopes of France, and the third Madam de Loyac. T. 1. p. 795.

(k) Id. ibid.

(l) Olhagaray, ubi ſupra, p. 574.

(m) Id. ib. pag. 575.

(n) Monluc's Memoirs. T. 2. pag. m. 242 & ſeq.

(o) In page 35 of the firſt Tom.

(p) Thuan. lib. 36. pag. 728.

(q) Spondan. ad. ann. 1564. n 8.

(r) Id. ad. ann. 1562. n. 51.

(a) Vidimus de his literas earundem Reginarum, & Navarræ quidem propria ejus manu ſcriptas quæ ibi diſerte tenentur. Spondan. ibid.

tis believ'd, he would have loſt it by the Hand of the Hang-man, if Francis II. had lived a little longer. The Story goes, that the Guiſes had perſwaded Francis II. to ſtab the King of Navarre; and that he promis'd 'em, but that his Heart failed him at the moment of the Execution: 'Tis added, that they endeavoured to poyſon him; and that miſſing of their aim, they bethought themſelves of another Expedient, which was to cauſe him to be aſſaſſinated, as he was hunting (f). See above the Remark B of the Article Guise (Francis).

(I) In ſpight of Monluc's Endeavours .... this was a Man that deſigned her much Miſchief.] The King of Navarre quitting (h) the Proteſtant Religion would force the Queen his Wife to do ſo too; ſo that being ſomewhat ill-treated at his Court, ſhe took the Road to Bearn, where ſhe thought fit to retire; but was purſued by the Sieur de Monluc, who had undertaken to arreſt her at Nerac; which, being caution'd of, ſhe gave advice of it to her Subjects of Bearn, who under the Conduct of the Sieur d'Audaux, went to receive her upon the Bank of the River Garonne. Beza tells a Circumſtance, which ſhews Monluc's Animoſity, and is expreſſed in Terms that favour more of the Soldier, than a reaſonable Gentleman. I will cite the Hiſtorian's Words ſomewhat at large, as containing a fine Elogy of this Queen. (i) 'God 'raiſed up to the poor People, afflicted for his Names-'ſake .... three Ladies amongſt others, whoſe Me-'mory ought to be precious for ever for their great 'Charities; one (k), and the firſt, was the Queen of 'Navarre, verifying in effect the Saying of the Pro-'phet, that Queens ſhould be Nurſing-Mothers to the 'Church of God, though at that time ſhe was menaced 'and terrified, as much a Queen as ſhe was, all man-'ner of ways, ſo far as to let her underſtand that ſhe 'ſhould be divorced by the Pope, deprived of her 'kingdom and Eſtates, and condemn'd at leaſt to 'perpetual Impriſonment. What is more: Monluc 'puffed up with the Victory obtain'd againſt Duras, 'and, forgetting that he was a little Muſhroom, ſtart-'ed up of a ſudden, durſt publickly ſay, that he ho-'ped, that having made an end in Guienne, the King 'would command him to go to Bearn, having a 'great deſire to try, whether he could not lye as well 'with Queens, as with other Women; a Saying truly 'becoming ſuch a Man, but wholly unworthy of ſuch 'a Queen and Princeſs, whom God reſerved, for the 'preſervation of his poor Children, and for greater 'Things, as ſhe ſhewed from that time to her Death: 'For I may moſt juſtly ſay, ſhe was the moſt precious 'Jewel in the World, and one of the moſt accom-'pliſh'd Queens and Princeſſes, in good Senſe, Piety, 'and all extraordinary Virtues, that ever was ſeen." Olhagaray relates (l), that in 1568, the Cardinal de Lorrain charged Loſſee, that if he could not perſwade the Queen of Navarre, to come to France, to uſe Force, and to take the Prince her Son from her; in which the Sieur de Monluc was to help him This Deſign miſcarried: The Queen having received the Sacrament the 6th of September, paſſed the River Garonne, the 8th .... (m) under the Noſe of the Sieur de Monluc, whom ſhe knew how to lull aſleep, accompanied only with fifty Gentlemen, moſt her own Domeſticks. And this old and ſkilful Warriour formed his Troops at Villenabe d' Agenois les Toneins. See in Monluc's Memoirs (n) how he excuſes himſelf for not hindering her to paſs this River.

(K) Formed a horrible Conſpiracy to put her .... the King of Spain,] The Author of the Hiſtory (o) of the Edict of Nantes, gives this Fact for moſt certain, and applies it to the Year 1564. Thuanus (p) relates all the particulars very well circumſtantiated. Spondanus (q) looks upon it as a thing uncertain, or rather as a Fable, invented by the Huguenots. He ſays (r) nevertheleſs, that he had ſeen Letters written by the King of France to Monluc, which ſhewed that this Monarch had an account, that the King of Spain offered the Queen of Navarre's Subjects ſome things; from which it might be concluded, that there was ſome Conſpiracy going on. This Hiſtorian had been ſaying, that the King of Spain being adverti's'd by the Court of France of what the Pope had done againſt the Queen of Navarre, anſwered, he was ſo far from approving this Conduct of the Court of Rome, that he offer'd his Protection and Aſſiſtance againſt all that attempted to ſeize Joan d' Albret's Dominions. This Anſwer of Philip II was communicated by Catherine de Medicis to the Queen of Navarre; who, in Conſequence thereof, ſent a Gentleman to thank his Catholick Majeſty, and to intreat him to continue his Good-will. Spondanus declares, that he ſaw the Letters (a) of theſe two Queens; and ſhe concludes with theſe Words, Quam dubia ſunt Regum conſilia! How hard it is to judge of the Conduct of Kings! Here one of 'em offers to oppoſe all thoſe that ſhould attack the Queen

Capitulation. The Queen would not have that Article (L) of the Capitulation obſerv'd; in which, doubtleſs, ſhe was to blame, and gave occaſion to Monluc to make a great Slaughter at Mont de Marſan. If any thing could excuſe her, it would be to ſay, that at that time, the violation of Capitulations was ſo frequent, that it was thought a Trifle. There are two things in this Princeſs's Life, that look like a Prodigy; one is, that ſhe had a ſufficient Courage to aboliſh the Maſs in her Dominions; the other is, that this ſo well ſucceeded, that the Regulations ſhe made againſt Popery, have ſubſiſted either in whole or in part till Lewis XIII's. perſonal Expedition to Bearn in 1620. I believe indeed that an Amazon, * the brave Penthefilea, would have ventur'd to have aboliſh'd a Religion ſhe believ'd falſe; but in thoſe Ages they did not know what our Joan d' Albret could not be ignorant of. They did not know that the People, whoſe Altars are deſtroyed, have Directors of their Conſcience, who incourage them to Rebellion, and find an hundred ways to conſpire againſt the Lives of Kings. If it be ſtrange that the Queen of Navarre was ſo undaunted as not to fear ſuch Dangers, which ſhe was perfectly acquainted with; it is ſtill more ſurprizing that ſhe maintain'd her ſelf, ſurrounded as ſhe was on both ſides, with potent Princes, the King of Spain, and the King of France, both poſſeſs'd with ſuch a Cruelty againſt the Sectaries, as has few Examples, both animated and encouraged ‡ by the ſtrong Sollicitations of the Court of Rome. But if ſhe had all the neceſſary Vigour to quell the Seditions of her Subjects, and to triumph over the Forces lent 'em by the Court of France, ſhe had not a ſufficient Prudence to diſcover the Treaſon that was formed againſt her, under the ſpecious Propoſal of the Marriage of the Prince her Son with the Siſter of Charles IX. She conſented to it, and came to Paris, where ſhe was poyſon'd, as 'tis believ'd §, while ſhe was making Preparations for the Marriage. She died the tenth of June 1572 in the 44th Year of her Age †. This Death could not but be very ſeaſonable to this Princeſs, who would have been paſt Comfort, had ſhe ſeen the Paris Maſſacre, and heard the Reproaches that might have been made her for being the innocent cauſe of the loſs of ſo many brave People, by her Misfortune of falling into the Snare. There could have been no great Conſolation in the Anſwer ſhe might have made, that it was not probable, that the Wickedneſs of Catherine de Medicis was ſo extenſive, or that Charles IX. whoſe Paſſion had no bounds, ſhould be capable of ſo long, ſo profound and artificial a Diſſimulation; and that after all, the Artifice muſt have been very † ſubtle, ſince Admiral de Coligni's Reaches were deceived by it. This Queen's Vertue was very great; and had we no other Teſtimony of it than (M) her Deſire to draw her future Daughter-in-law immediately from the Corruption of the Court of France, we ſhould have a very high Opinion of it. Her Will contain'd things ‡ that ſhew'd the Generoſity of her Soul, and her prudence and ardent Zeal for the Religion ſhe profeſs'd. I will examine below γ what Moreri ſays, that ſhe compoſed divers Pieces in Proſe and Verſe. She left a Son, whom I have ſpoken of in his place *, and a Daughter, who was her perfect Copier both in Virtue and Religion; for her Conduct was moſt prudent and regular in the midſt of the bad Examples of that time; and no

* Ducit Amazonidum lunatis agmina peltis Penthefilea furens, mediuſque in millibus ardet. Virgil Æn. lib. 1. v. 490

‡ See Spond. ad. 1568. n. 26.

§ See d' Aubigne. Tom. 2. Book 1. ch 2. p. m. 531. & Olhagaray ubi ſupra, pag. 627.

† Thuan. lib. 51. pag. 1058.

† Mezerai Abr. Chron. Tom. 5. p. m. 149. pretends, that if God had not blinded the Eyes of the Proteſtants, they would eaſily have perceived the Knives that were ſharpen'd to cut their Throats.

‡ Vide Thuanum, ubi ſuprr.

γ In the Remark Q at the end.

* In the Article Henry IV.

(b) Advertiſement of the Engliſh Catholicks, pag. m. 53.

(c) Du Pleſſis Mornai's Memoirs, Tom. 1. p. 633.

(d) Capitibus inter Teridam & Montgomerium perſcriptis comprehenſi Sancolumbus, & vi. alii torquari equires, qui vita Salva dimitti debebant. Thuan. lib. 45. p. 915. Col. 1. D.

(e) See his Hiſtory of the Troubles. book 8. fol. m. 244.

(f) In Tome 1. of his Hiſtory Book 5 ch. 14. pag. m. 421.

Queen of Navarre; and in the mean time the Court of France is adverti's'd, that he is conſpiring ſomething againſt her Dominions.

(L) The Queen would not have that Article of the Capitulation obſerved; in which, doubtleſs, ſhe was to blame; and gave occaſion to Monluc.] If I had read this Fact only, in the furious Lewis Dorleans's Libel, I would not believe it; for this Author accompanies it with a Calumny ſo manifeſtly falſe, as to render himſelf unworthy of all Credit. He affirms in the ſame Page, where he alledges Montgomery's Action, that the Queen of Navarre was perfectly Unnatural. What Honour, ſays he (b), did ſhe do to the Memory of King Henry d' Albret her Father in ſuffering his Tomb at Caſtelgelous to be broke open? and after the Huguenots had plunder'd that Golden Collar wherewith he was buried, to leave his Body to be devoured by Dogs? Who knows not in the Country, that the Catholicks gathered up the Father's Bones, and buried 'em ſecretly, to preſerve them from the barbarity of this cruel Daughter, and her pretended Reformed? Let us ſee the Anſwer that Mr du Pleſſis made to this Paſſage of the Engliſh Catholick: (c) King Henry d' Albret was buried at Leſcar in Bearn, with his Predeceſſors, where his Body and his Tomb are ſtill entire; and thereby judge either of the Ignorance or the notable Malice of the Petitioner. Notwithſtanding this I muſt ſay, that Lewis Dorleans does not lye in what he preſently relates concerning the murther of Montgomery's Priſoners; for if he had lyed on that account he woul have been confuted by Du Pleſſis, as in his other Falſhoods. But 'tis certain that Du Pleſſis has obſerved a profound Silence in this particular; and we find that Thuanus expreſſly notes, that the Capitulation obtained by Terride (d) imported that the Garriſon ſhould have their Lives, and particularly Sainte Colome, and others afterwards put to Death. La Pope meire (e) a Proteſtant Hiſtorian makes the ſame confeſſion without exception or reſerve. D' Aubigné (f) dodges and cavils a little; but 'tis eaſily apparent, that he does not believe his ſhifts to be of any force. I have found in Thuanus a groſs Fault of Geography; which I ſhall ſhew by the bye. He ſays (g), that Montgomery having croſs'd the County of Foix, paſs'd the Garonne at St. Gaudens, and a little after the Ariege, and made great Marches towards Bigorre. A Man cannot caſt his Eyes upon the leaſt Map of France but he muſt manifeſtly ſee, that Montgomery could not paſs the Garonne till after he had paſs'd the Ariege. Here is Monluc's Paſſage that will ſerve me for a Proof: "(h) Hereupon arrived "Monſieur de Savignac, Captain Fabien, and ſome o-"ther Gentlemen with 'em to tell me, that the Garri-"ſon (i) would ſurrender, and to ſee whether I would "give 'em Terms in capitularing with them: Per-"ceiving Monſieur de Savignac, and Captain Fabien "had a Mind to ſave Favas, and give him quarter, be-"cauſe he had the Reputation of a good Soldier, I "told them they might make what Capitulation they "thought fit, I would ſign it, tho I had a great deſire to "diſpatch 'em out of the way. For this Reaſon, when "they were gone, I ſent after 'em a Gentleman, to go and "talk ſecretly with the Soldiers, and ſome Captains, "that as they were parlying, they ſhould take care to "enter on one ſide or other, and put all to the Sword; "for the Death of thoſe Gentlemen was to be reveng'd, "who had been ſo miſerably maſſacred at Navarrens; "becauſe, contrary to the promis'd Faith, they had "ſtab'd the Sieur de Sainte Colombe, and ſeven or eight "others, who had yielded at Orthez, upon Condition "of Life, when Monſieur de Terride was taken. This "Execution was made upon pretence they were the "Queen of Navarre's Subjects." The thing ſucceeded according to Monluc's deſire. The Soldiers ſcaling the Walls on one ſide, whilſt they were parlying on the other, enter'd, and put all to the Sword (k).

(M) Her deſire to draw her future Daughter-in-Law immediately from the Corruption.] Here is an Extract of a Letter ſhe writ to her Son, whilſt ſhe was at the Court of France, to marry him with Margaret de (b) Monluc's Memoirs. To. 2. Book 7. pag. 369, 370.

(i) Of Mont de Marſan.

(k) Id. ib. pag. 371.

no Marriage (N), upon Condition of going to Maſs, was acceptable to her. Henry IV. her Brother, who had a moſt particular Affection and Eſteem for her, in vain exhorted her to turn Catholick. He married her to the Duke of Bar, eldeſt Son to the Duke of Lorrain in 1599. She found no great ſatisfaction in (O) that Alliance, and was forced to go † and receive the Sacrament out of the City of Nanci, and was allow'd only Preaching and Prayers for her ſelf and Dependents. She died in the beginning of the Year 1604, with the falſe Opinion of her being with Child. The Duke of Lorrain, and the Duke of Bar, conjur'd her in the extremity of her Sickneſs to think of her Salvation; but ſhe told them, that ſhe was reſolved to dye as ſhe had lived; and ſo ſhe ſwerved not at the laſt Moment of her Life from the Conſtancy ſhe had always ſhewn for her Religion, which had reſiſted the ſtrongeſt Temptations, and the moſt obſtinate Importunities in the World. She had had † Salmon Macrin's Son for her Tutor, and underſtood well ‡ the Latin Tongue. Du Verdier Vau-Privas † calls her a Princeſs of a lofty Spirit: She began ſo early, adds he, to imitate thoſe two knowing Queens of Navarre, Margaret of France, and Joan d' Albret, her Grand-

† Matthieu Hiſtory of the Peace. Tom 2. p. m. 677. ad. ann. 1604.

† Sammarth. Elog. lib. 1. p. m. 21.

‡ See the Remark N

† Biblioth. France. pag. 144.

* Le Labourcur addit. to. Caſtelnau. Tom. 1. p. 903, 904.

† Jurieu Apology for the Reformation. Tom. 1. p. 413, 414. He cites le Labourcur's Additions, Book 3.

(a) He hath changed ſome Words, but without changing the Senſe: 'Tis nevertheleſs a want of exactneſs.

(b) Cayet, Septennial Chronology of the Hiſtory of the Peace, fol. 50. verſo ad. ann. 1598.

(c) Id. ib. fol. 51.

(1) Moſt Faithful is a Title given to the Kings of Navarre, as Moſt Chriſtian is to the Kings of France.

Valois. " *She is handſome and prudent, and of a " good Mien, but bred in the moſt curſed and cor- " rupt Company in the World; for I ſee no Body " but has a Tincture of it. Your Couſin, the Marchi- " oneſs, is ſo chang'd by it, that ſhe has no appear- " ance of Religion: This Meſſenger will tell you how " licentious the King is; 'tis pity: I would not for " any thing in the World that you ſhould make any " ſtay there. You ſee the Reaſon, why I deſire you to " marry, and that you and your Wife ſhould get out " of this Corruption: For, though I believed it very " great, I find it ſtill greater. The Men here don't " importune the Women, but the Women importune " the Men." Mr Jurieu † uſes theſe Words (a) to ſhew the Corruption of the Court of France at that time.

(N) No Marriage, with the Condition of going to Maſs, was acceptable to her.] There are few Princeſſes who had more Offers than Madam Catherine de Navarre, only Siſter to Henry IV. Here follows a long account upon this Subject, which I have from a Man who might know things, as being this Princeſs's Miniſter. He ſays (b), that there were great Difficulties in the Negotiation of the Duke of Bar's Marriage, both becauſe ſhe would not depart from the Religion ſhe was bred in, and becauſe ſhe could not prevail with her ſelf to go out of France. And indeed, continues he (c), " to ſay the Truth, ſhe " was courted by many great Princes; to whom, for " one or other of theſe Cauſes, or for both together, " ſhe would not give her Conſent. Firſt, to reſume the " thing higher, as ſoon as ſhe was born, which was " the 7th of February 1558, there was a Talk of " marrying her to Francis, who was afterwards " Duke of Alençon, and Earl of Flanders; and that " by the Kings their Fathers, Henry II. Moſt Chriſtian " King of France, and Antony I. Moſt Faithful (1) " King of Navarre.... Which Conſent of the ſaid " Madam Catherine, was deſired by Francis, and that it " ſhould be effected in the Year 1582: But the Diffi- " culty was then greateſt in point of Religion, conſi- " dering the Importunity that was made to the King of " Navarre her Brother, to reduce him to the Catho- " lick Religion, by Force of Arms. And before " this, King Henry III. returning from Poland deſired " her: And 'tis ſaid, that if ſhe had been in the Jour- " ney to Lyons at his return, and the King had ſeen " her, he would infallibly have married her; but the " Queen-Mother Catherine de Medicis, repreſented " her a Dwarf, and crooked, which was very falſe; for " ſhe was of a a middle ſize, and finely ſhap'd: " It is true, ſhe had one Leg a little ſhorter than the " other (which is a Mark of the Family of Albret, in- " cident to Alain Sire d' Albret, Father to King Dom " Juan, great Grand-father to this Princeſs Catherine.) " The Queen-Mother, diſdaining to advantage the " King of Navarre, did that ill office to her God- " Daughter. This great Match failing, the Duke " of Lorrain (who afterwards was her Father- " in-Law) would marry her, provided the King liked " it, and the King of Navarre was much averſe to " it. Departing from Court, after the King of Navarre " her Brother, ſhe was much loved by the Prince " of Condé. King Philip of Spain ſent alſo in the Year " 1580, to ſee her; promis'd the King of Navarre " great Advantages, ſo far as to adviſe him to " make himſelf King of Gaſcogne, to which purpoſe he " would aſſiſt him with Men and Money; and even " kept for a long time eight hundred Thouſand Du- " cats in Ochagavy, a Village of the upper Navarre, " above Roncevaux, to make War in France, if the ſaid " King of Navarre would have accepted them. This " failing, the Duke of Savoy in 1583, ſent to her twice, " with a promiſe no ways to diſturb her Religion: His " Agent arrived at Viſezenſac in Bigorre; from whence, " being refuſed, he went to Spain, and there proceeded " to the Marriage of the Infanta Catherine Michelle with " this Duke. In 1586 the King of Scotland ſent Mr. " Melvin a Scotchman, the Sieur de Liſle Groſlot a " Frenchman, and the Sieur de Barthas, with ſuch Im- " portunity, that the Queen of England writ to her in " theſe Terms, that if ſhe would come over into her " Iſland, for her ſake (calling her her Siſter of France, " by a good Omen) ſhe would in her Life-time ſecure " her of being Queen of England after her deceaſe. " The Prince of Anhalt coming to the Succour of the " King her Brother, upon his Advancement to the " Crown of France, demanded her himſelf in Perſon; " but by reaſon of the War, which was in all " Parts in France, he returned as he came, not without " diſcontent. During theſe ſame Wars, two other " Princes of the Blood ſought her, the Count of " Soiſſons, and the Duke of Montpenſier: but the near- " neſs of Relation, the Difference of Religion, and " the unſettled Poſture of Affairs, would not ſuffer " their good Deſires to take effect." The ſame Hiſtorian relates, that after the Ceremony of the Marriage, the Princeſs Catherine (e) ſhewed all poſſible ſatisfaction.... coming to that which ſhe was uſed to ſay, (f) Grata ſuperveniet, quæ non ſperabitur hora. For this Lady underſtood Latin well; and remember'd this Latin Verſe, the rather becauſe ſome People had ſaid, She would never be married: Others had one Day placed half a Verſe oppoſite to another, which ſhe had written with her own Hand in her Houſe of Caſtelbeziat, at Pau (which the Queen her Mother had built on purpoſe for her) namely, upon a certain Commotion, happening during theſe latter Wars: Seeing her ſelf obliged to go to her Brother, (which the Bearnois did not eaſily conſent to) ſhe writ theſe Words, Quo me fata vocant. Immediately waſhing her Hands to ſit down to the Table, ſhe found the Verſe fill'd up thus, Ne quo te fata vocarent. Now this was an Ambiguity by an Antiperiſtaſis, to diſſuade her from her Journey; yet they that did it got nothing by it, for ſhe was reſolved to go into France to her Brother, according to his Order. If we may believe Clement VIII. what I have ſaid is liable to ſome exception: There was a time when the Princeſs Catherine was ready to change her Religion, provided ſhe could have had the Husband ſhe had a mind to. We'll quote a Paſſage of the 348 Letter of Cardinal d' Oſſat, written from Rome the 16th of June 1603. " (dd) One of the greateſt Difficulties that he put on " me (ee) was, that when that Marriage (ff) was in " Agitation, Madam the King's Siſter acquainted him, " that if his Holineſs would uſe his Intereſt with the King " to get her married to the Count of Soiſſons, ſhe " would be a Catholick: From whence his Holineſs " had good reaſon to judge that it was not Conſcience " which kept her to her Sect, but a certain Oſtenta- " tion and Preſumption, which ſhe had, that the Holy " See, and every thing elſe ought to accommodate " themſelves to her Deſires: and becauſe that Objecti- " on was very home, I waved it, and told him, that the " Princeſs would be ſo much the eaſier to Convert; " which Hopes I had counted for one of the ten Cau- " ſes of the Diſpenſation which we required."

(O) She found no great ſatisfaction in that Alliance.] She was a good Huguenot, and her Husband was a zealous a Papiſt. This different Zeal for Religion had made 'em very indifferent for Marriage, and had formed ſome Difficulties (g) that had ſpun out this Affair for above two Years together.... Both the Parties were diſſatisfied to be ſacrificed by their Relations to the Intereſts of State, againſt the Sentiments of their Conſcience. The Husband's Zeal abated for the firſt ſix Months of the Marriage; but then it grew ſo warm, that the Duke of Bar look'd upon the Conjugal Action, as a great Sin, and (e) Id. ib. fol 63. ad. ann. 1599.

(f) 'Tis a Verſe of Horace Epiſt. 5. lib. 1. See in the New Letters againſt Maimbourg, pag. 663. what was ſaid of a Marriage ſhewn at a diſtance, and as the Empire was ſhewn to Galba, by theſe Words, & tu Galba quando- que de- guſtabis imperium.

(dd) Letters of Cardinal d' Oſſat. Tom. 2. pag. 625.

(ee) That is Clement VIII.

(ff) That is, the Marriage of the Duke of Bar, and the Princeſs Catherine.

(g) Mezerai Chron. Abridgment. Tom. 6. p. 194.

Grand-mother and Mother .... to produce at one time the Flowers and the Fruit which the Muſes ſow, that ſhe compoſed Garlands of all the Colours that could be required, having ſcarce attained the Age of twelve Years: Beſides (which is wonderful) ſhe made Verſes in her Sleep, as 'tis ſaid in an Ode made on that occaſion, and addreſſed to her Excellency by one of her Preceptors. 'Tis ſaid, that in the Tapiſtry which ſhe worked with her own Hands, ſhe affected to ſhow ſome Monuments of (Oo) Liberty, which ſhe pretended to have acquir'd in ſhaking off the Popiſh Yoke. We'll examine (P) a thought of Scaliger. 'Tis a baſe Falſhood and religiouſly abſtain'd from it. Let us uſe Mr. Mezerai's Expreſſions. "(b) He ſuffer'd his Confeſſor to "throw ſo many Scruples into his Conſcience, that he "ſeparated from her Company, and took the occaſion "of the Jubilee to go and ask the Pope's Abſolution "and Diſpenſation for the future. The Pope flatly re"fuſed him this laſt point, without Catherine's Con"verſion; and for the other, he put his timorous Con"ſcience ſo much upon the Rack, that he promis'd to "return to his Wife no more, but to divorce her, unleſs "ſhe turn'd Catholick. For that Proteſtation he was "ſecretly reſtor'd to the Communion of the Faithful; "for in order to be received into it publickly, the Fault "being publick, he muſt have undergone Penance for "the ſame. A ſmart Word or two from the King "would have obliged the Court of Rome to remove all "thoſe Difficulties, and ſuffer the Husband to return "to his Wife: For want of this Vigour the poor Prin"ceſs remained for ſome time a Widow in the midſt "of Marriage." Can any thing be more tyrannical than the Yoke ſo many Chriſtians have ſubmitted to from the Court of Rome? Here is a Prince married by the Duke his Father to a Lady, authoriz'd by her Superiours: The Marriage is ſolemnly celebrated, and bleſſed by an Arch-biſhop; and yet you ſee a Husband go to Rome ſix Months after, only to beg Pardon for having ventur'd to enjoy his Wife, and leave to do it for the future: He obtain'd favour upon very harſh Conditions on the firſt Point, but all the ſecond was rigorouſly deny'd him. See in the Hiſtorian (a) of the Edict of Nantes all the Train of Diſcontents and Diſguſts that the Princeſs Catherine was oblig'd to ſwallow. It had been much better that thoſe who predicted, ſhe would never by married, had been good Prophets: The Anſwer ſhe made 'em that this time coming, when it was leaſt thought on, would be moſt acceptable, was not ſo juſt as ingenious. This Maxim could not be better apply'd, generally ſpeaking; for commonly an old Maid, who is paſt Hopes of Marriage, joyfully receives the News of a Sweet-heart: She receives, I ſay, the News with ſo much the more Joy, as it was unexpected. But the particular Fate of the Princeſs Catherine contradicted the general Rule.

For the reſt, I ſhould be deſirous to know, whether her Husband would have been expoſed to the ſame ſcruples with reſpect to the enjoyment of a handſome Concubine, and whether his Confeſſor would have been able to govern him in the caſe of Adultery, as magiſterially, as he govern'd him in a Marriage contracted with an Heretical Wife. We ſeldom find, that a Confeſſor's Authority has the ſame effect with reſpect to the Gallantries of Princes, as was obſerv'd in the Conduct of the Duke of Bar. Not but that the Miſtreſſes of Princes are very liable to be diſcharged, but the Confeſſors are very ſeldom the cauſe of it. Diſguſt, the diſcovery of an Infidelity, or of ſome Intrigue, the Charms of a new object, commonly produce all the diſgraces of a Miſs.

Since the Printing of what precedes, I have diſcovered a thing which diſcovers the ſuſpicions I had, and which I durſt not declare. It ſeemed to me that the Duke of Bar, Acted leſs by a ſcruple of Conſcience, than by the deſire he had to be Un-married, becauſe he was diſguſted at his Wife. This was his true motive, as I have read it in a new Edition of Cardinal D'Oſſat's Letters. That Duke's Confeſſor demanded alternatively (g) either a diſpenſation, or an Order to ſend the Dutcheſs back again. Mr. Amelot commeats on it thus: (h) "The Duke "of Bar covered under the vail of Conſcience and "Religion, the diſguſt he had taken for his Wife, "whom he did not Love nor was beloved by her, and "as he durſt not ſend her back for fear of angring "the King his Brother-in-Law, he endeavour'd cun"ningly to engage the Pope to command him to di"vorce her, that he might lay all the blame on him, "and have the Liberty to marry another Princeſs. But "the Pope was wiſer and more cunning than the Duke "of Barr, and the Cordelier his Confeſſor, who "according to the uſual Saying of his Holineſs would "catch a Serpent with another Man's Hand." This Author treats of this more at large in the Life of Cardinal (i) D'Oſſat, and refutes Mezerai, who, as we have ſeen before, did not believe that the Affair of the diſpenſation was ſo difficult.

(Oo) To ſhew ſome Monuments of Liberty, which ſhe pretended to have acquir'd by ſhaking of the Yoke of the Pope.] I have no other Commentary to give, than the Words of a Jeſuit. As ſhe naturally had a fine, curious and knowing Mind, ſays he, "(k) ſhe endeavour'd to re"ſtify not only with her Pen in printed Books, which "are called the Stories of Queen Joan (l), the Liber"ty which ſhe pretended to take according to her own "belief; but alſo with the Point of her Needle: For as "ſhe was very much given to Invention, ſhe made fine "and large Pieces of Tapeſtry; among which was a Suit "of Hangings of a dozen or fifteen Pieces, which "ſhe called The Priſons open'd; by which ſhe gave us "to underſtand that ſhe had broken the Bonds, and "ſhook off the Yoke of Captivity to the Pope. In the "middle of every Piece is a Story of the Old Teſta"ment, which favours of Liberty; as the Delive"rance of Suſannah; the Coming of the Chi'dren of "Iſrael out of Egypt; the ſetting Joſeph at Liberty, "&c. and at all the Corners are broken Letters, "Shackles, and Gibbets, and over them, in great "Letters, theſe Words of the 3d Chap. of the "ſecond Epiſtle to the Corinthians, Ubi Spiritus, Ibi "Libertas. And to ſhew the Animoſity yet more, "which ſhe had conceived againſt the Catholick Re"ligion, and particularly againſt the Sacrifice of the "Maſs, having a fine and excellent Piece of Tapeſtry, "made by her Mother Margaret, before ſhe was "cajoled by the Miniſters, in which was perfectly "well embroider'd the Sacrifice of the Maſs, and a "Prieſt, who ſhew'd the Holy Hoſt to the People, ſhe "took out the Square in which this Hiſtory was; and "inſtead of the Prieſt put in a Fox, who making an "horrible Grimace with his Paws and Mouth, ſaid "theſe Words, Dominus Vobiſcum." The ſame thing is found in the Continuation (m) of Flormond de Remond at the 5th and 6th pages of the 9th Book.

(P) We will Examine a thought of Scaliger.] (c) "Madam Catherine Siſter to King Henry IV. was very "vain; ſhe deceiv'd me, I did not think ſhe would "have been ſo conſtant in her Religion as ſhe was," Theſe are Scaliger's words; his Miſtruſt was founded upon his obſerving this Lady to be conceited with her Grandeur, and having lofty and high thoughts; and 'tis certain, this gave ſome reaſon to conclude ſhe would turn to that ſide, where more worldly Grandeur and advantages appear'd; that is, ſhe would imitate Henry IV. who in caſe ſhe would have abjured her Religion, would have rais'd her, to the higheſt point of credit, and have married her to the greateſt advantage in the World; but ſeeing her perſiſt in Calvinism, he was obliged (d) by maxims of State to neglect her. Nevertheleſs, as there are different kinds of vanity, or Fondneſs of Grandeur, Scaliger's argument might perhaps be turned to a quite contrary ſenſe. There are People proud and ambitious, who to ſatisfy their vanity, ſtoop to an hundred baſeneſſes; but others find no better way to content their paſſion, than to appear inflexible, whatever ill conſequence their Stiffneſs may draw after it. It is not unuſual to ſee Perſons of Quality very virtuous, and moſt zealous for their Religion, and at the ſame time ſo jealous of their rank, and ſo induſtrious to have Honours paid 'em, that they are always upon theſe punctilio's on that account. Madam de Turenne is an Example of it. Her Virtue and Piety are not more memorable, than her exact precautions to preſerve the priviledges of Highneſs, and the preferences ſhe pretended to above the Dutcheſſes. Madam Catherine de Navarre might well be ſtruck with this kind of Infatuation, as virtuous and pious as ſhe was. Could ſhe that was deſcended from ſo many Kings, that was the only Daughter of a Queen adored by the Proteſtants, that was Siſter to their leader who was afterwards King of France, forbear taking a ſtrain of grandeur and loftineſs, that Scaliger and many others thought too vain? It ſhould not however have been concluded, as a thing certain, that ſhe would change her Religion; for beſides the conſiſtency of the character

(b) Id. ib. pag. 222.

(a) Hiſt. of the Edict. of Nantes. Tom. 1. p. 268, &c ſeq.

(g) Letters of Cardinal D'Oſſat. Tom. 2. p. 251 Paris Edition. 1698.

(h) Amelot de la Houſſaie Notes on the 247*th Letter of Cardinal* D'Oſſat. p. 261. 2 Tom. See alſo pag. 173. of the ſame Tome.

(i) Pag. 30, 31

(k) Garaſſe curious Do Rheims, p. 225, 229.

(l) I believe that 'tis a Lye, and that Margaret de Va'ois, Siſter to Francis I is confounded with Joan d' Albret Queen of Navarre.

(m) Claude Malingre general Hiſtory of the progreſs and fall of the modern Herely.

(c) Scaligerana, p. m. 46.

(d) See the Hiſtory of the Edict of Nantes, ubi ſupra. p. 267

hood to ſay, as has been done in a publick Work, that Queen Joan d' Albret contracted a Marriage of Conſcience with a Man, whoſe Name (Q) is not told; and that d' Aubigné the Hiſtorian was the Fruit of it. We will conclude with the Words of Peter Matthieu *: She "would have the Safety of Conſcience preferr'd before the Aſſurances "of Honours, Grandeurs, and Life it ſelf; and was uſed to ſay to thoſe of her Party, "that Arms ought never to be laid down, but upon theſe three Conditions, either of a "ſafe Peace, or an entire Victory, or an honourable Death †."

NAVARRE (MARGARET de Valois Queen of) Daughter-in-Law to the precedent, and Daughter to Henry II. was born the 14th (A) of May 1552. She was a Princeſs of infinitely more Wit and Beauty than Virtue. Her violent Zeal for Popery, whereof (B) ſhe gave mighty Proofs from her Infancy, ſtood her in no ſtead, as to good

* Matthieu Hiſtory of the Peace. Tom. 1. p. m. 198. ad. ann. 1599.

† See Peter Matthieu's Marginal Note, Joan d' Albret Queen of Navarre, was d 12 Medals to be made at Rochelle with this Inſcription, ſafe Peace, entire Victory, honourable Death.

racter with a ſtrong perſwaſion of the truth of her Sect, and an averſion to a Religion, which perſecuted that which ſhe profeſs'd, an averſion that, to take it rightly, frequently makes up three fourths of one's Love for his Religion: Beſides this, I ſay, is not Pride ſometimes the cauſe of our doing nothing that can expoſe us to the reproaches of inconſtancy? I ſay this, without eſpouſing the Narration of Peter Victor Cayet; (e) Madam Catherine .... would not change the pretended reformed Religion, in which ſhe was bred, for the ſake as ſhe ſaid of her deceaſed Mother Queen Joan of Navarre, from whom ſhe had her Life and all her imitable Actions. This is one of the things that moſt retain'd her in that Religion, as ſhe often declared. Beſides, ſhe apprehended the reproach of levity in her Age, as ſhe ſaid, if ſhe chang'd her Religion, having returned to this, after ſhe had once been a Catholick.

(e) Cayet, ubi ſupra. fol. 62.

(Q) 'Tis a baſe Falſehood to ſay .... that Queen Joan d' Albret contracted a Marriage of Conſcience .... whereof D' Aubigné the Hiſtorian was the Fruit.] I have read in a Book (f) printed more than once, that a Genealogiſt had orders to make Madam de Maintenon deſcend from Joan d' Albret Queen of Navarre; who after the Death of the King her Husband, married ſecretly to one of her Gentlemen, who was, as is pretended, Father to Mr d' Aubigné Grand-Father to Madam de Maintenon. Invincibly to confute this Story, we need only attend to theſe two points of Chronology; one is, that the King of Navarre, Joan d' Albret's Husband, dyed not till November 1562: The other, that Mr. d' Aubigné was born in 1550, as appears by his Epitaph (g), which every one may read in the Cloyſter of St. Peter's Church at Geneva. He made this Epitaph himſelf a little before his Death, at 80 Years of Age, and dyed the 29th of April 1630; whence it follows, that he was born in 1550. He ſays it himſelf in expreſs Words (h), at the beginning of his Hiſtory: It is not therefore poſſible that he ſhould be the Son of Joan d' Albret, and of a Man married to this Queen after the Death of Antony King of Navarre. There is in the Mercure Galant of September 1688, a Genealogy of the d' Aubigné's: If you conſult it, you'll find no Shadow nor Foot-ſtep of this pretended Extraction, related by the Author, whom I confute. If, in his Excuſe, it be ſaid, that it ſhould be Margaret inſtead of Joan, this would be as groſs a Miſtake; for Margaret Queen of Navarre, Joan's Mother, dyed (a) before the King her Husband, and before d' Aubigné was born. If we take the thing by another Handle, and ſuppoſe him to be the natural Son of the King of Navarre, Joan's Father, this could not be confuted by Chronological Arguments, ſince 'tis certain this Prince died not till 1555, and that he had (b) a Miſtreſs; but it might be overthrown, by what d' Aubigné has written (c) of his Father.

(f) Gallantries of the Kings of France. Tom. 2. pag. 293. Bruſſel's Edit. 1694. and page 84 of the Cologne Edition 1695.

(g) 'Tis in Spon's Hiſtory of Geneva, pag. 504. 505, of the Utrecht Edition of 1685.

(h) In the middle of the XVI. Century, the Native Year of the Book and the Author. D'Aubigné, pag. 1.

(a) In December 1549.

(b) Mr. de Pereſixe, Hiſt. of Henry IV. p. m. 15. obſerves, that in 1553, Joan d' Albret had a great deſire to ſee her Father's Will, becauſe it had been told her, that it was made to her diſadvantage in favour of a Lady, whom he had loved.

Having confuted the Falſhoods inſerted in the Gallantries of the Kings of France, 'tis neceſſary to touch upon a ſort of Tradition, which makes Joan d' Albret to be clandeſtinely re-married, but not without the Approbation of her Miniſters; to whom ſhe confeſs'd, as 'tis ſaid, that ſhe could not contain. I never heard this ſaid but by ſuch as had no ſort of Proof to alledge: This made me one Day ask an Advocate, very well read in the Hiſtories of the XVIth Century, whether he had met with this Fact in the Libels ſpread about by the Catholicks againſt this Queen of Navarre: He anſwer'd, No; but that he had not read all that kind of Writings, nor the main part of 'em; but otherwiſe, he found nothing in it improbable, nor injurious to the Memory and Honour of Joan d' Albret; that Continence and Incontinence, being rather Qualities of Conſtitution, than of Morality, it was not the acknowledgment of a Vice, to confeſs ſhe was incontinent, and reſolv'd only to make uſe of lawful Remedies; that ſuch a Reſolution couples Chaſtity and Incontinence together; and whereas many Miniſters of that time, the better to manage their Diſputes againſt the Vow of Celibacy, had treated of Continence as a very particular, and even extraordinary Grace of the Spirit of God, it was no more a ſhame for the Queen of Navarre to acknowledge her Incontinence, than for a primitive Chriſtian to confeſs he had not the Gift of Languages nor Prophecies; and that, laſtly, it was to the Glory of this Princeſs to have had ſo tender a Conſcience, as not to ſuffer her to ſatisfie the Neceſſities of Nature by ways forbidden in the Word of God. I anſwer'd him, if he had no other Reaſons to alledge, he could not deliver me from my Doubts; and that I only conſulted him to know whether he had any printed or Manuſcript Authorities; and that, ſince he had none, it was to no purpoſe to talk more upon the Subject. I have not from that time found any Light, and I confeſs, that, in compoſing this Article, I have not been able to conſult any Work, in which Joan d' Albret's Actions are cenſur'd: However I much queſtion that Tradition, or rather believe it falſe.

(c) See his Hiſtory in the places, mark'd in the Table, under the Word Aubigné the Author's Father.

I have found no Foot-ſtep of it in Mr. le Laboureur, who is one of the French Hiſtoriographers that is beſt acquainted with ſuch particulars. He knew that this Queen (d) made an extempore Stanza the 21*ſt of* May 1566, when ſhe went to ſee Robert Stephens's Preſs. He relates it thus:

Art ſingulier, d' icy aux derniers ans,
Repreſentez aux enfans de ma race,
Que j'ai ſuivi des craignans Dieu la trace,
Affin qu'ils ſoient les meſmes pas ſuivans.

He alſo relates the Sonnet, that (e) Robert Stephens, who was a Proteſtant, made in anſwer to it in the Name of the Preſs; as alſo (f) a long intire Letter this Lady wrote to the Prince her Son, the 6th of March 1572. I have cited ſomething of it in the Remark M. He obſerves (g) that amongſt other Languages ſhe ſpoke Latin and Spaniſh: But he ſays nothing of this clandeſtine Marriage. For the reſt I doubt not but this Stanza, and the Letter he has inſerted in his Book, were the occaſion of Mr. Moreri's Saying, that Joan d' Albret compoſed divers Pieces in Proſe and Verſe: Which is to make her an Author, and to miſlead us. For the Letters that a Prince writes, let 'em be never ſo fine, cannot paſs for the Compoſition of an Author, unleſs they receive the form of a Book, deſigned for the Republick of Learning.

(d) Le Laboureur Additions to Caſtelnau. Tom. 1. p. 901.

(e) This could not be Robert Stephens Henry's Father, but Henry's Brother.

(f) Ibid. pag. 902 & ſeq.

(g) Ibid. pag. 901.

(A) Was born the 14*th of* May 1552.] Hilarion de Coſte, citing du Tillet, gives her this Birth-day; and ſo doth Father Labbe, Father Anſelme, and many others. We have reaſon therefore to believe that ſhe was above ſeven Years old in June 1559, and yet ſhe affirms (i), that ſhe was but four or five when ſhe made a Repartee to the King her Father, who held her upon his Knees to make her talk, a few Days before that fatal Blow (k) he died of. She ſuppoſes the ſame thing when ſhe ſays (l), that in 1561, at the time of the Colloquy of Poiſſi, ſhe was but ſeven or eight Years old. 'Tis pretty odd, that a Daughter of a King of France ſhould be two Years out in the reckoning of her Age: Can Princeſſes be ignorant of what every Body knows, when their Birth-day is noted in the Almanacks, in the Copper-Cutts of the Picture-Sellers, and in abundance of common Books; or dare they make themſelves younger than they are? This little Piece of Sophiſtry may be of uſe to Tradeſmens Daughters, who cannot eaſily be contradicted; but it can be of none to the Daughters of Kings. It ſeems however, that our Queen of Navarre was ſo uſed to leſſen her Age, that ſhe habitually ran into the ſame Stile in compoſing her Memoirs.

(i) Memoirs of Queen Margaret, p. 7.

(k) He received this Blow in a Turnament the 30*th of* June 1559.

(l) Ibid. pag. 12.

(B) She gave mighty Proofs of her Zeal to Popery from her Infancy.] The Particulars ſhe tells us of it are very curious, and contain a piece of the Whimſical Inconſtancy of Henry III. Never Man had more Averſi-on good Morals. She was married to the King of Navarre the 18th of August 1572, a few Days before the horrible Maſſacre on St. Bartholomew's Day. They attempted ſoon after to diſſolve this Marriage; for † they that had begun the Conſpiracy of butchering the Proteſtants, were diſturb'd at the ſaving the Lives of the King of Navarre, and the Prince of Conde; they thereby ſaw, that they had fail'd of their principal Deſign, which was not ſo much againſt the Huguenots as the Princes of the Blood, and knowing that the King of Navarre being married to Charles IX's Siſter, no Body would attempt him, they contriv'd another Plot, which was to perſwade Catherine de Medicis ‡ that the Princeſs Margaret ought to be unmarried. This Deſign miſcarried (C) by the Anſwer the new Bride made when ſhe was asked, whether ſhe † Memoirs of Queen Margarer pag. 66 Paris Edition 1628.

‡ Ibid. pag. 67.
* Ibid. pag. 68.

on for the Huguenots than this Monarch, and yet he had zealouſly learnt their Notions, and endeavour'd to poſſeſs others with them. Our Margaret thinks (m) that in her childiſh Actions, there were ſome, as worthy to be recorded, as the Child hood of Themiſtocles (n) and Alexander; the one expoſing himſelf in the midſt of the Street to the Horſes Feet of a Carman, who would not ſtop at his Requeſt; the other deſpiſing the Honour of the Prize at the Race, if he did not diſpute it with Kings. To prove this, ſhe alledges amongſt other Things, the Reſiſtance I made, ſaid ſhe (o), "to preſerve my Religion at the Time of the Colloquy of Poiſſi, when all the Court was infected with Hereſy, "to the imperious perſwaſions of many Ladies and "Lords at Court, and even of my Brother d' Anjou, "who was afterwards King of France; whoſe Infancy "could not eſcape the Contagion of wretched Hugue"notiſm, who importun'd me continually to change "my Religion, often throwing my Primmer into the "Fire, and inſtead of it giving me the Huguenots "Pſalms and Prayers, and forcing me to carry them; "which, aſſoon as I had, I gave to Madam de Curton "my Governeſs, whom God had been pleas'd to pre"ſerve a Catholick, who took me often to the good "Man Cardinal de Tournon, who adviſ'd and incou"rag'd me to ſuffer all Things for the Maintenance of "my Religion, and gave me again a Primmer and "Beads, inſtead of thoſe my Brother (p) Anjou burnt: "and his other particular Friends, who had indea"vour'd to ruin me, finding them about me, paſſionate"ly reproach'd me, ſaying, it was Folly and Child"hood made me do it; that it was plain I had "no Underſtanding; that all People of Senſe, of "whatever Age or Sex, upon hearing Charity preach'd "had forſaken the Corruptions of this Bigottry: "But that I was as fooliſh as my Governeſs. And my "Brother d' Anjou adding Threatnings, ſaid, the "Queen my Mother would have me whipp'd; which he "ſaid of his own Head, for ſhe knew not of the Error "he was fallen into; and as ſoon as ſhe did, ſhe ſe"verely reprimanded him and his Governours; and "cauſing 'em to be inſtructed, conſtrain'd 'em to re"ſume the true, holy and antient Religion of our "Fathers; from which ſhe never had departed. I "anſwer'd him to his Menaces, melting into Tears, as "the Age of ſeven or eight Years I was of is but ten"der, that he might cauſe me to be whipt and kill'd, "if he pleas'd; that I would ſuffer all that could be in"flicted on me, rather than damn my ſelf." Add, that, by reaſon of the Difference of Religion, ſhe was very averſe to the marrying Henry IV. We may prove this by a very curious Paſſage, which I take from a Letter written to this Prince. (a) She told me, tis Joan d' Albret that ſpeaks concerning our Margaret, that when theſe Diſcourſes were ſet on Foot, it was known that ſhe was a Catholick and a zealous one. I told her that thoſe who had engag'd in it, did not ſay ſo; and that the Buſineſs of Religion was repreſented very eaſy, and that ſhe had ſome affection for it; that otherwiſe I ſhould not have proceeded ſo far, and I deſired her to conſider of it. At other times that I ſpoke to her, ſhe did not anſwer me ſo abſolutely, nor ſo roughly. I believe ſhe ſpeaks as ſhe is prompted; and alſo that the Diſcourſes we have heard, concerning her Zeal for Religion, were only to make us believe it.

(m) Ibid. pag. 7.
(n) 'Tis of Alcibiades and not of Themiſtocles that this was ſaid. See Plutarch in Alcibiade, pag. 192. D.
(o) Ibid. pag. 9 & 29 ſeq.
(p) See the Remark ΑΔ of the Article Cipierre.
(a) Le Laboureur Addit to Caſtelnau Tom. 1. pag. 594.

(C) The Anſwer the new Bride made when ſhe was asked whether ſhe was a Woman.] We will make uſe of Queen Margaret's Relation. "(b) They attempt to "perſwade the Queen my Mother, that I ought to be "unmarried: Upon that Reſolution, going one Holy"day to her Levee, when we were to perform our Eaſter-Devotions, ſhe conjur'd me to tell her the Truth; "and ask'd me whether the King my Huſband was a "Man; ſaying, if he was not, ſhe had power to un"marry me. I beſeech'd her to believe, that I was "not ſufficiently ſkill'd to give her an anſwer. (I "might ſay then, as that Roman Lady, whom her "Huſband chid for not acquainting him with his "ſtinking Breath; that ſhe thought all Men had the "ſame, having never come near any other than him"ſelf.) But be it how it would, I would abide where "ſhe had placed me; very much apprehending, that "the deſign of ſeparating me was to do him an ill "Turn." 'Tis not probable this Princeſs was ſincere in this Diſcourſe: She was above twenty Years old; ſhe had been bred in a Court every way corrupt, and particularly in the Article of Immodeſty. Obſerve how a Man of Wit characterizes this Court (c), Mr. Saint André .... Maid of Honour to Catherine de Medicis is of ſo tractable a Virtue, that the Prince of Joinville will teach her nothing new in marrying her. A thing, continues he, which ought not to ſurprize you, ſhe is handſome, educated amongſt the great Ones, where Example is ſome ſort of Authority; ſhe is almoſt ſixteen Years of Age: An Age, in which the Honour of a Maid begins to enjoy its Rights; we ſee few that carry their Continence ſo far; and good Senſe will not ſuffer you to wonder at a thing that cuſtom has render'd ſo familiar: But, Couſin, here's ſomething that ought to ſurprize you, &c. Judge whether our Margaret was like to remain in an Ignorance, which the chaſteſt of the Veſtals, and the honeſt of all the Religious, in the moſt ſimple and innocent Ages, cou'd hardly boaſt of. But to prove that her account is unfaithful, and that ſhe has retrench'd many Circumſtances; it ſuffices to ſay, that her Mother was not a Woman to be ſatisfied with ſo ambiguous and oblique an Anſwer as this. Catherine de Medicis being reſolved to diſſolve the Marriage, if it had not been conſummated, would have made, or cauſed to have been made, a ſecond Interrogatory, which would have capacitated her Daughter to explain the Matter, and given her ſufficient Underſtanding for it, in ſpite of that profound and very extraordinary Ignorance ſhe intrench'd her ſelf in: She would have taught her the Definition of a Man, not by the Properties of a reaſonable Creature, like the Books of Philoſophers, but by the particular Attributes, agreeing with the individual or ſpecifical Relation of a Huſband; and afterwards would have made exact Compariſons betwixt that Diſſinition, and things that happen'd in her Nuptial-Bed. You ſay you don't underſtand what a Man is; but you well remember whether, &c. has the King of Navarre, &c.? anſwer Ay, or No. Thus Catherine de Medecis might have preſs'd, or cauſe to have been preſs'd this pretended ignorant Lady, and, though her Daughter had continued to declare that ſhe did not know how the Affair in queſtion could be known by ſuch ſigns or marks, yet ſhe would not have failed to reſolve the Query, and give full ſatisfaction to the Queen-Mother. But as lame as her Narration was, we may infer from it, that Catherine de Medicis was fully convinc'd by her Daughter's Anſwer, that there was not the leaſt Grounds to commence a Suit of Impotence againſt her Son-in-law. I don't think that any one ventur'd to ſay, that the Marriage was not conſummated; and yet this Argument had been one of the ſtrongeſt of thoſe that were ſo carefully collected, when they proceeded to declare the Marriage null. Let us here give a Paſſage of the Satyrical Divorce: (e) This Manifeſto ('tis Henry IV. that is made to ſpeak) will one Day inform the Lovers of Truth what I was willing to conceal, out of Modeſty to our Holy Father, and Cardinal Joyeuſe his Commiſſioner, deputed to hear me upon the Subject of our Divorce; having not upon twenty two Articles of his Interrogatory, anſwer'd any thing that might give him any blame or diſhonour, unleſs perhaps to his Enjoy, whether, even during the Marriage, we had any Commerce together: To which I anſwer'd, conſtrain'd by Truth, that we were both ſo young, when we were married, and ſo much given to whoring, that we could not forbear. That which is ſaid of Margaret's Conſtitution very well agrees with the Hiſtory of her Adventures. Now there is nothing more proper than that ſort of Complexion to awaken a certain Curioſity, which early expels an Ignorance which ſhe pretended to boaſt of: 'Tis a Curioſity which has ſo ſudden Effects that every Body is amazed at it.

(b) Queen Margaret's Memoirs, p. 67, 68.

(c) The Author of a Romance, entitled, the Prince of Conde, pag. 32. Holl. Edit. 1681.

(e) Satyrical Divorce among the Pieces printed with the Journal of Henry III. pag. 206, 207.

Read

ſhe was a Woman. Her Anſwer is very remote from the Calumnies (D) that may be read in printed Books. She was advertiſed by a Catholick Gentleman named Mioſſans * that her Huſband and her Brother the Duke of Alençon deſigned to eſcape, and put themſelves at the Head of ſome Troops, whilſt the Court, who had accompanied the Duke of Anjou King of Poland as far as Beaumont, were in their return to Paris. She diſcovered this Deſign to Catherine de Medicis, and Charles IX. and made 'em Promiſe to be contented with preventing their eſcape without doing any injury to theſe two Princes. They kept their Word with her till the Conſpiracy was known, for which † la Mole and the Count de Coconas loſt their Lives, but after this diſcovery they arreſted 'em, and Commiſſioners of Parliament were deputed to hear them. Margaret drew up in Writing what her Huſband was to anſwer. She was in very ill eſteem with Henry III. and in very good with her other Brother the Duke of Alençon. This Duke and the King of Navarre were in Love with Madam de Sauve, which much weakned the Union that was betwixt 'em. Buſſy the Duke's Favourite grew ſuſpected of being Margaret's Gallant, and this Princeſs was obliged to ſend away (E) Mademoiſelle de Torigni her confident. She took this very heinouſly, as what might * much prejudice her reputation, and declared her reſentment to her Huſband, who for his part had but little value for her β. They neither lay together, nor converſed with each other. She knew the reſolution of her Huſband and Brother to depart from Court. Her Brother eſcap'd firſt γ: her Husband did the ſame ſoon after ♪ without taking leave of his Wife. Henry III. imagining ſhe would go and join them, or if ſhe was left at Liberty at Court, would be their Spy, arreſted her. She received very obliging Letters from her Huſband, and ſome Civilities from the King her Brother, who was obliged to act in that manner, becauſe the Duke of Alençon would not diſarm, unleſs ſhe was ſatisfied. She accompanied the Queen her Mother to the Conferences, that were held near Sens, and where the Treaty of Peace ζ was concluded with the Duke of Alençon. After this ſhe deſired to retire to the King her Huſband, who earneſtly demanded her, but η Henry III. would not ſuffer her. Under the falſe pretence of an indiſpoſition ſhe took a Journey to the Spaw Waters, in order to favour the deſign that had been put into the Duke of Alençon's Head of getting himſelf elected Sovereign of the Netherlands. ~~Being returned into France, ſhe teſtified a freſh her deſire to~~ go

* Ibid. pag. 69.

† Ibid. pag. 74.

* Ibid. pag. 119.

β Ibid.

γ In 1576.

♪ Ibid. pag. 129.

ζ In 1576.

η Ib. pag. 157, 162.

(f) Buſſi Letter 316 of the 4th part, pag. 421. of the Holl. Edit.

Read theſe Words of the Count de Buſſi: (f) "You "have heard of the Paſſion of.... for her Husband "when ſhe married him. This they ſay is much "changed. The little Lady can no longer bear him. "'Tis ſaid to excuſe her, that which appears to you to "be the Man, is not the Man; which made every Body "inquiſitive, how a young Maid of thirteen or four-"teen Years of Age came to learn what was requiſite "to make a Man, a Man."

(D) Her Anſwer was very remote from the Calumnies that may be read in printed Books.] What a vaſt difference there is betwixt Margaret's Relation of her Conduct, and what others have publiſhed of it! She pretends to all the Ignorance of little Children, upon the Theory of Marriage; and might have been impoſed upon, according to her own Story, and ſhe never the wiſer. But caſt your Eyes a little upon theſe Words of the Satyrical Divorce; in which, as I have already ſaid, Henry IV. is introduc'd ſpeaking: "(g) "I was not able to avoid my Misfortune, though King "Charles, who reigned at that time, who well knew "his Siſter's Temper, gave me ſome Senſe of it under "this Oracle, when aſſuring the Huguenots of a pre-"tended Peace, to allure and deceive them, he pro-"teſted with a Thouſand Oaths, that he gave not "his Margaret for a Wife only to the King of Navarre, "but to all the Hereticks of his Kingdom. Oh the too "true Prophecy and worthy of a Holy and Divine In-"ſpiration! if he had put the general and not the "particular, and inſtead of the Huguenots alone, had "comprehended all Mankind; for there is no ſort nor "quality of Men in all France, with whom this Strum-"pet has not exerciſ'd her Laſciviouſneſs; nothing "comes amiſs to her Pleaſures, and ſhe values not "Age, Greatneſs nor Extraction, provided her Luſts "be ſatisfied and ſatiated; and never ſince ſhe was "eleven Years old, has ſhe denied any Body: At "which Age Antragues and Charins, (for they both "of 'em thought they had firſt obtained this Glory,) "had the firſt Fruits of her Heat; which augmenting "daily, and they being unable to extinguiſh it, tho' "Antragues made an Effort, which afterwards ſhor-"ten'd his Life: She caſt her Eye on Martigues, and "fix'd it there ſo long, as to liſt him under her Banner, "and the thing was made ſo publick, that it "was the common Diſcourſe and Converſation of "all the Soldiers in the Armies; in which Martigues "was known not only for his Valour, but as Colonel "of Foot." 'Tis added, that after Martigues's (a) Death the Duke of Guiſe was obliged to go through her Hands, by the Mediation of Madam de Carnavalet, a young, brave and ambitious Prince, who already beginning to build that Machine, which being too ſuddenly ſhaken, will fall upon him, expected by his laſcivious Kiſſes to come to Marriage, and thereby fortifie his Pretences and Deſigns; having dexterouſly broken off her Treaty of Marriage with the King of Portugal, already far advanced.... ſhe quickly after added her young Brothers to her ſalacious Conqueſts; one whereof, namely Francis, continued this Inceſt all his Life; and Henry grew ſo out of conceit with her, that he could never love her afterwards; having at length perceived, that Tears, inſtead of cooling her Deſires, augmented their Fury, and that, being moveable as Mercury, ſhe ſhook at the leaſt Object that approach'd her. Here is a Virgin for you; which my Relations and the publick Good obliged me to take for good and virtuous to the great diſcontent of her and her Favourites; amongſt whom Antragues, as the Marſhal de Retz formerly told me, was like to dye of deſpair, or of a great Loſs of Blood, which the violence of his Pain to ſee us married forced out in divers places. If you would ſee another Teſtimony, read the firſt Dialogue of Euſebius Philadelphus Coſmopolite, where you'll find this at the 44th Page of the Edinburgh Edition 1574. "(b) "Hereupon the King pretending to be vex'd with ſo "many Delays, blaſpheming and raging, ſwore, that "he would have the Marriage conſummated with-"out more a-do: That if Cardinal de Bourbon would not "marry them, he would lead them himſelf to a Huguenot "Meeting to have them married by a Miniſter; and that, "by Chriſt, he would not have his Margaret (for ſo he "called his Siſter) kept any longer in this languiſhing "Condition."

"Ali. The good Lady took care not to ſtay ſo "long: Her Brother very well knew that he had her "Maidenhead.

"Hiſt. I did not know that; but I have heard ſay, "that ſhe was ready to lye in, when the Queen was at "Xaintles.

"Ali. It is ſo, I aſſure you."

(E) To ſend away Mademoiſelle de Torigni her Confident.] Le Guaſt, Henry the IIIth's Favourite, repreſented to him (c), that he ought not to ſuffer young Princeſſes to have Maids, with whom they had ſuch a particular Friendſhip, and ſo fully convinc'd him of this Maxim, that he declared to the King of Navarre (d) that he would never love him more, if Mrs. Torigni was not removed the next Day. The King of Navarre was therefore forced to deſire his Wife, and even to command her to diſmiſs this Maid. The Queen of Navarre obey'd with the greateſt Reluctance. Mrs. Torigni (e) departed the ſame Day, and retired to her Couſin, Mr. Chaſtelas. The King ſometime after, to give his Siſter (f) the cruelleſt Mortification imaginable, ſent ſome People to Chaſtelas's Houſe, under Pretence of taking Mrs. Torigni, and bringing her to Court, to do own her

(g) Satyrical Divorce, pag. 189.

(a) Ibid. pag. 190.

(b) The Reveille-matin of the French and their Neighbours pag. 44. the Interlocutors are Philalthia, Alithia, and the Hiſtoriographer.

(c) Queen Margaret's Memoirs, pag. 117.

(d) Ibid. pag. 118.

(e) Ibid. pag. 119.

(f) Ibid. pag. 131.

earneſtly demanded her, but || Henry III. would not ſuffer her. Under the falſe Pretence of an Indiſpoſition ſhe took a Journey to the Spaw-waters, in order to favour the Deſign that had been put into the Duke of Alençon's Head of getting himſelf elected Sovereign of the Netherlands. Being returned into France, ſhe teſtified afreſh her deſire to go to her Huſband. It was conſented to at laſt, and the Queen her Mother conducted her † to the King of Navarre, who came to receive them ‡ at la Reolle, and treated his Wife kindly during Catherine de Medicis's ſtay in Gaſcogne §. They attended her as far as Caſtelnaudarri, when ſhe returned; and afterwards went to reſide at Pau in Bearn, and quickly fell out, both becauſe Margaret preſs'd her Huſband to diſgrace a Secretary, and alſo on account (F) of the Gallantries he engag'd in. The Reaſon of her demanding

|| Ibid. pag. 157, 202.

† In the Year 1578.

‡ Ibid. pag. 313.

§ Ibid. pag. 315.

her in a River hard by: But ſome Troopers, who went to join the Duke of Alençon, delivered her (g). We may affirm, generally ſpeaking, that the Principle which Guaſt reaſon'd upon, is good; for Princeſſes could never ſucceed in any Intrigue of Gallantry, if they had not their Chamber-Confidents: And 'tis a ground of Suſpicion to ſee much Intimacy betwixt 'em, and the Maids that wait on 'em. A great Lady deſires to be punctually ſerved, and is diſturbed and chides, if it be not done. This is the way to be little beloved by one's Servants. Liberality it ſelf is not a very certain means of procuring their Affections, unleſs it be attended with Carreſſes and Civilities. But a Lady ſeldom ſtoops ſo low, unleſs in ſome Caſes of Neceſſity, in which ſhe has occaſion for the Diſcretion and Mediation of her Women: Careſſes are not then ſpared; openneſs of Heart, and Familiarity then diſpoſe the Inferiours to love their Superiours (h), Facinus quos inquinat, æquat. The Ladies muſt be excepted from this Rule, who, by a prudent Conduct, have obtained a very good Reputation: But as our Queen of Navarre was none of thoſe, it can't be thought ſtrange that her Intimacies with Mrs. Torigni were ſuſpected by Henry III. 'Tis a point of nice Policy in a King to place about his Children not ſuch Perſons as aſpire to be Confidents, but ſuch as are contented with being honeſt Spies: And therefore ſuch People are generally made choice of, and others removed that anſwer not thoſe good Intentions. Once more, Henry III. would not have been to blame to follow the Counſel that was given him, if he had only aimed at correcting his Siſter's Fault, and removing ſome evil Inſtrument; but the violence he uſed was inexcuſable; he would have drown'd the Confident: From whence it may be ſuſpected that his Motives were Criminal. He was willing to ſatisfie his Jealouſie; he was enrag'd that his Brother poſſeſs'd the Heart of Queen Margaret. The ſcandalous Chronicle makes 'em both to love her criminally, and to be loved by her one after the other; but at laſt ſhe gave the preference to the Younger, and not to the right of Eldership: A Right, that unchaſte Women (i) have but little reſpect for.

(g) Ibid. pag. 135.

(h) Lucan. Pharſ. lib. 5. v. 290.

(i) The Author of the Romance of the Prince of Condé ſuppoſes, pag. 120. that this Prince being loved by the Mareſchaleſs de St. Andre, who had refuſed her Heart to the King of Navarre, the King told the Mareſchaleſs, I plainly ſee that the being younger Brother by ſeven or eight Years, is a recommendation to your Favour.

(F) On Account of the Gallantries he engag'd in.] The Love he had for (a) Dayelle Maid of Honour to Catherine de Medicis, did not embroil him with his Wife. But when Queen Catherine was gone, he † began to ſeek out Mrs. Rebours, who was a malicious Maid, who did not love Margaret, but did her all the ill Offices ſhe could with her Huſband. She remained ſick at Pau, when the King of Navarre left it; and, as this (b) Prince, when he loſt ſight of her, loſt his Affection too, he began to engage with Mrs. Foſſeuſe. The Duke of Alençon (c) alſo fell in Love with her. This had like to have excited the King of Navarre to break with his Wife: For He believed, that ſhe did good Offices to her Brother again him; which, when ſhe underſtood, ſhe was ſo importunate with her Brother to deſiſt, that he ſpoke no more to Foſſeuſe. The latter, to remove from the King of Navarre, whom ſhe extremely loved, his Jealouſie of the Duke of Alençon (d), ſo gave her ſelf up to content him in every thing he deſired, that the great misfortune was, ſhe grew big with Child. Finding her ſelf in this Condition ſhe quite altered her Behaviour to me ('tis Queen Margaret that ſpeaks;) and whereas ſhe was uſed to be free, and to do me all the good Offices ſhe could with my Husband, ſhe began to conceal her ſelf from me, and to do me as many bad Offices as good ones before. She ſo poſſeſs'd the King my Husband that in a little time I perceiv'd him quite altered. He grew reſerved, and my preſence was no longer agreeable to him, as it was the four or five happy Years I had ſpent with him in Gaſcogne, whilſt Foſſeuſe behaved her ſelf there with Honour She relates afterwards how Foſſeuſe put it into the King of Navarre's Head, for a Cloak to her Big Belly, or at leaſt, to get rid of it, to go to the Bath in Bearn. This Prince earneſtly preſs'd his Queen to go thither, telling her, that his Daughter (for ſo he called Foſſeuſe) had occaſion to drink the Waters for the illneſs of her Stomach, and that there was no probability ſhe would go without her Miſtriſs, and that this would occaſion ſuſpicion where there was no reaſon for it. All that he could obtain was, that two of her Companions ſhould go with her, Rebours and Villeſavin, and alſo the Governeſs. They went with her; and I (e), ſays Queen Margaret, waited (f) at Baveire. I had conſtant advice from Rebours (who was ſhe that he had loved, a corrupt and deceitful Creature, who only deſired to exclude Foſſeuſe, thinking to ſucceed in her place in the favour of the King my Husband) that Foſſeuſe did me all the ill Offices ſhe could; commonly abuſing me, and perſwading her ſelf that if ſhe had a Son, and could make away with me, ſhe ſhould marry the King.... At a Month or five Weeks end, (g) we returned to Nerac, where finding every Body talked of Foſſeuſe's being with Child, and that not only in our Court, but round the Country, it was the common Diſcourſe; I was reſolved to try if I could quell this Noiſe, and to ſpeak with her about it. The Queen offered her aſſiſtance, (h) and to do the Office of a Mother, that is to take her to a remote Houſe; and whilſt the King was a hunting another way, not to ſtir from her till ſhe was delivered (i). She, inſtead of thanking me, with an extreme Arrogance ſaid, ſhe would make all thoſe Lyars, who had ſpoken of it; that for ſome time I had not loved her, and only ſought a pretence to ruin her: And, ſpeaking as high as I had ſpoke low, ſhe flies in a paſſion from my Cloſet, and went to the King my Husband; ſo that he was very angry with me for what I had ſaid to his Daughter, ſaying, ſhe ſhould make all her Accuſers Lyars; and kept this Countenance with me a long time, even for ſome Months, till her Hour came. As ſhe was taken in the Morning at break of Day, lying in the young Ladies Chamber, ſhe ſent for my Phyſician, and deſired him to go and acquaint the King my Husband, which he did. We lay in the ſame Chamber in different Beds, as we had accuſtomed. As the Phyſician told him this News he was in great trouble, not knowing what to do, fearing on one hand ſhe would be diſcovered, and on the other, that ſhe would be ill aſſiſted, for he loved her very much. He reſolved at laſt to confeſs the whole to me, and prayed me to go to her aſſiſtance.... I told him.... that I would go, and do as much for her, as if ſhe was my Daughter; that in the mean time he ſhould go a hunting, and carry all the People abroad, that no Body might hear of it. I quickly had her removed from the Maids of Honour's Chamber, and put her into a remote Chamber, with my Phyſician and Women to aſſiſt her, and had her well taken care of: And God would have it, that ſhe only brought a Daughter, and that Still-born. Being delivered, ſhe was carried back to her Chamber; where, though all imaginable Diſcretion was uſed, we could not prevent the report from being ſpread all over the Caſtle. The King my Husband returning from Hunting, went to ſee her, as he uſed to do: She deſired him that I would come and viſit her as I uſed to do all my Maids when they were ſick, thinking by that means to ſtifle the report. The King coming into my Chamber found me laid upon the Bed, being weary with riſing ſo early, and with the pains I had taken to aſſiſt her. He deſired me to riſe and go and ſee her: I told him, that I did this when ſhe had occaſion for my help, but that at preſent there was no more to do; that if I went I ſhould rather diſcover than conceal the Matter, and that all the World would point at me. He was very angry with me; and that which diſpleas'd me moſt was, that I did not deſerve this Recompence for what I had done in the Morning. She often put him into ſuch Humours as theſe againſt me.

(a) Queen Margaret's Memoirs, pag. 314.

† Ibid. p. 321.

(b) Ibid. pag. 322.

(c) Ibid. pag. 345.

(d) Ibid. pag. 347.

(e) Ibid. pag. 350.

(f) It ſhould be at Bagnieres.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 352.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 353.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 354.

(k) Id. ibi pag. 356.

We have ſeen elſewhere, that Andromacha, the valiant Hector's Wife, was ſo complaiſant and debonaire, as to give ſuck to her Husband's Baſtards. But here you ſee a Queen of Navarre, who was almoſt as good-natur'd, being, as it were, the Mid-wife to her Husband's Miſtreſſes. We muſt ſay, that thoſe who have ſo much blamed this Prince: Conjugal Patience, ſhould have conſidered that he, the leaſt of all Men, deſerved a faithful Spouſe, and that his Conduct would ing this Secretary's Disgrace deserves to be known (G), and will give occasion to observe the unjust extravagance of those that are against Toleration. The War began again against the Protestants, and was not very advantageous to the King of Navarre. The Queen his Wife obtained, that the City of Nerac, where she resided, † should have a Neutrality, and that War should not be made within three Leagues of it: She obtained this, I say, provided the King her Husband was not in the Town. This exception caused the Marshal de Biron to cannonade the Town one Day that the King of Navarre came into it. This extremely displeased (H) the Queen of Navarre. She had still farther Mortifications from that time to have been able to spoil the best Dispositions to Virtue in his Wife. Some one has said (m), that in the ordinary Causes of Separation, the blame is laid upon the Wife, but that the Husband is commonly the Cause of the Woman's blame. This agrees in part to Henry IV. How little is he in this place of Queen Margaret's Memoirs! much more little than he is great in some other occasions. For a King, who is the Leader of a great Party, that makes Head against the Guises, and all the Court of France, to go to the Bath with a young Lady he has got with Child; to be angry with his Wife, who was willing to inform her self of this big Belly, the better to conceal it; to cry it is a Calumny against a Maid, whose Innocence time would discover; to go and humbly entreat his Wife to assist her in her Travel, are meannesses below a Tradesman.

† Ib. pag. 332.

(m) Serious and Comical Amusements, pag. 56. Amsterdam Edit. 1699.

(G) The Reason of her demanding this Secretary's Disgrace deserves to be known, and will give occasion.] This is her Relation: '(n) We returned to Pau in Bearn, 'where having no exercise of the Catholick Religion, 'I was only permitted Mass in a little Chappel, not above 'three or four Paces long, which was filled with seven 'or eight People. At the time we went to Mass we 'took up the Bridge of the Castle, for fear the 'Catholicks of the Country, who had no exercise of 'their Religion, should hear it: For they were infinitely desirous to be present at the Holy Sacrifice; of 'which they had been deprived many Years. Led 'with this holy and just Desire, the Inhabitants of 'Pau found means on Whitsunday, before the Bridge 'was taken up, to enter the Castle and creep into the 'Chappel, where they were not discovered till towards 'the end of the Mass, when half opening the Door to 'let in one of my Domesticks, some Huguenots, who 'were spying there, perceiv'd 'em, and went and told 'du Pin my Husband's Secretary, (who had an entire 'command of his Master, and great Authority in his 'House, managing the Affairs of the Protestants) who 'sent my Husband's Guards; who, drawing 'em 'out, and beating them in my presence, carried 'em 'to Prison, where they were a long time, and paid a 'great Fine. This Indignity was infinitely resented 'by me, who expected nothing like it. I went to com'plain to the King my Husband, beseeching him to 'release these poor Catholicks, who had not deserved 'such a Punishment, for desiring, after being so long 'deprived of the exercise of their Religion, to take 'advantage of my coming, and hearing Mass on so 'good a Festival. Du Pin puts in without being call'ed; and, without respect to his Master in suffering 'him to answer, replies himself, and tells me, that I 'ought not to importune the King my Husband with 'this Affair: For whatever I could say, it would not 'be remedied; that they had well deserved what they 'had suffered, and that my Discourse could signify 'nothing one way or other; that I ought to be content'ed with the Liberty of having Mass for my self and 'my Domesticks. This Discourse highly offended 'me from a Man of his quality; and I beg'd the 'King, if I was so happy as to have any share in his 'Favour, to let me see that he resented the Indignity 'I received in his Presence from this mean Man, and 'that he would do me Justice. The King seeing me in 'so just a passion, ordered him to depart the Room, 'telling me, he was very sorry for Du Pin's Indiscre'tion, that it was his Zeal for Religion that had thus 'transported him, and that he should make me what 'satisfaction I pleas'd; that as for the Catholick Pri'soners, he would advise with his Counsellors of the 'Parliament of Pau, what was to be done to content 'me. Having said this he went to his Closet, where 'he found du Pin, who having spoken with him, en'tirely chang'd him again: So that, fearing lest I 'should desire his dismission, he shunn'd my Com'pany, and put on an angry look. At last, seeing that 'I obstinately persisted to desire, he would either dis'miss du Pin or Me, which he thought most agreeable; 'all that were present and hated du Pin, told him, that 'he ought not to discontent me for such a Man, who 'had so much offended me; that if this came to the 'Knowledge of the King, and the Queen my Mother, 'they would highly resent it, that he suffer'd him any 'longer: Which obliged him at last to dismiss 'him. But he continued to use me ill, and to give 'me bad looks." I believe she made infinite Reflections upon this, for 'twas a Case that must seem very strange and perfectly injurious to her: But I believe, that the most natural, lawful and reasonable Reflection that could offer it self, was the only one she never thought on. She ought above all things to have considered the inexcusable Injustice of her Grand-father, her Father and her Brothers in their barbarous Edicts against the Protestants; which, doubtless, she was far from thinking on. And 'tis very probable, that the Catholicks of Bearn, who had been beaten and imprison'd, persisted in believing, that it was just to persecute the Huguenots, and to deprive 'em of the Exercise of their Religion; for 'tis likely, they said, the Court of France is Orthodox, and that of Navarre Heretical; the former therefore ought to persecute and not the latter (†). Go and represent your fine Reasons to the Sieur du Pin, (it might have been said to them) he'll only convert the Propositions: The Court of Navarre is Orthodox, that of France is Heretical; the former therefore ought to forbid going to Mass, and the latter ought to permit going to Sermons. Wretched Persecutors! Your Disease must needs be extravagant, which can't be cured by Retaliation.

(n) Memoirs of Queen Margaret, pag. 315, &c. seq.

† See the Philosophical Commentary upon compel them to come in. part 1. pag. 187. &c. seq. &c. part 3. p. 122, &c. seq.

(H) This displeased the Queen of Navarre.] I would make no comment upon these Words, did not I find occasion to shew, that the best Historians deceive us. This is the Queen of Navarre's Account. (a) The Marshal de Biron discharged seven or eight Volleys of Cannon upon the Town, one whereof reached even to the Castle; which having done, he retires, sending me a Trumpeter to excuse himself to me, saying, that if I had been alone he would not for all the World have done this; but that I knew it had been concluded in the Neutrality, &c. Margaret was not satisfied with these Excuses, but answered the Trumpeter (b), that she was highly affronted with the Marshal de Biron's Conduct, and that she would complain of it to the King. The Duke of Alençon went into Guienne some time after, and having ended the Civil War, induced the Marshal de Biron (c) to take the Command of his Army in Flanders: He reconciled the King of Navarre and the Marshal de Biron, and would have this Marshal at the first sight give Queen Margaret Satisfaction by a modest excuse of what was done at Nerac, and commanded this Queen to use him with all the rude and disdainful Words imaginable: I made use of this passionate Command of my Brother, says she, with the discretion that is requisite in such cases, as knowing that he one Day would be sorry for it, since he may hope much from the assistance of such a brave Gentleman. This is the Rule by which we must compare the Accounts of other Historians, which can be true only in proportion to their Conformity with Queen Margaret's; for she knew the Matter better than any Body, and nothing oblig'd her to disguise it. Let us see what Brantome says: (d) For the greater Bravado, 'the Marshal discharged some Volleys of Cannon a'gainst the Town; so that the Queen, who was walk'ing upon the Walls for her Diversion, had like to 'have had her share of 'em; for a Ball happen'd to 'fall hard by her, which extremely provok'd her, 'both for the little respect the Marshal had shewn 'her, to come to brave her in her Town, and because 'he was commanded by the King not to make War 'five Leagues round the Place where the Queen of Na'varre was, which he did not then observe; for which 'she conceiv'd such a Resentment and Enmity 'against the Marshal, that she resolv'd to be re'veng'd of him. A Year and a half after she came 'to Court, where the Marshal was, whom the King 'had recall'd from Guienne, for fear of new Com'motions; for the King of Navarre threatn'd to Arm, 'if he did not remove him. The Queen of Navarre, 'still resenting the Marshal's Affront, gave him no 'respect, but scorn'd him, every where vilifying him 'and

(a) Queen Margaret's Memoirs, pag. 336.

(b) Ibid. pag. 338.

(c) Ibid. pag. 343.

(d) Brantome of Illustrious Ladies, p. 264, 265.

to the Journey she made to the Court of France in 1582. 'Tis with this Journey she ends the Memoirs she has left us of her Life (I), from which I have taken what we have seen before. There was Reason to say, that she address'd them to Brantome, and not to Charles de Vivonne, Baron de la Chastaignerave, or to Monsieur de Rendan. 'Tis a Work that deserves to be read, containing some things that are curious enough; and 'tis to be wish'd, it had reached to the last Years of the Author's Life. It has many Faults of Omission; but could it be expected that Queen Margaret would confess things that might stain her Reputation? Those Acknowledgments are reserved for the Tribunal of Confession; they are not designed for History. We need not wonder then, that we don't see in her Work any shadow of the Gallantries, in which she engag'd her self, * and her Maids of Honour, in order to oppose Catherine de Medicis with a Counter-battery. But to resume the Thread of the Narration, I must say, that in leaving the Court of France in 1583, she received a barbarous Affront (K) by order of King Henry III. It may be most justly said, that her Husband had so little Delicacy upon the Point of Domestick Honour, that he was not content to shut his Eyes, but proceeded to the Approbation of his Wife's Gallantries. † The Practice she made of Love was not at all conceal'd, pretending that the publick Profession bespoke some Virtue, and that Secrecy was the sign of Vice. Henry IV. quickly learnt to caress his Wife's Gallants, and she to caress her Husband's Mistresses. But if he was blamable in a thousand Instances for this sordid Complaisance, he discovered in the Juncture here in Question a great deal of Vigour and Sensibility. He pressingly required (L) of Henry III. either that his Wife's Affront should receive Satisfaction, or that it might be permitted him not to receive her. He obtained neither of these Demands

* See the Remark (I) of the Article Henry IV.

† D'Aubigne, Universal Hist. Tom. 2. Book 4, ch. 5. pag. 988, 989. ad. ann. 1579.

(b) Varillas Hist. of Henry III Book 7. p. 232, 234. Holl. Ed. ad ann. 1584, wherein he is mistaken, for the thing was done in August 1583. See du Plessis Mornai's Memoirs, Tom. 1. pag. 275.

(c) D'Aubigne Universal Hist. Tom. 2. Book 5, ch. 3. pag. 1083.

† D'Aubigné is mistaken, Margaret went thither alone, and without her Mother. See her Memoirs towards the end.

(d) Id. ib.

† He relates it also in Sanders Catholick Confession, Book 2. ch. 7. pag. 447. Edit. 1629.

(e) Mr. du Plessis Mornai's Life, pag. 71.

(f) That is, that Queen Margaret had received the Affront mentioned in the preceding Remark.

(g) That is to say the Queen but Wife

(e) Mezerai Chron. Abridgment Tom. 5. pag. 246. ad. ann. 1580. He says, pag. 493. Tom. 3. of his great History, that a Cannon-shot fell within three foot of her Feet.

(f) See Colomies, choice Bibliotheque, pag. 173. of the 2*d Edition.*

(g) Idem Historical Miscellanies, pag. 86, & seq.

(a) Mezerai Hist of France, Tom. 3. pag. 546, 547.

" and aggravating the Injury he had done her. At last " the Marshal, fearing the Fury and Hatred of the " Daughter and Sister of the Kings his Masters; and, " knowing the Temper of this Princess, bethought " himself of waiting on her, and begging her Pardon, " making his humble Excuses; which, as she was of a " generous Temper, she was no ways averse to, but " received him into her Favour and Friendship, for- " getting what was past.' The first Fault of this Author is to say, that the Queen of Navarre ran the Risk of her Life upon the Ramparts: She would not have omitted a Circumstance of this Nature if it had been true. The second Fault is, to extend to five Leagues what was but three. The third Fault is an Omission, charging Biron with having most unjustly exceeded his Orders. He did nothing but what he might do, conformably to the Instructions he had received from Henry III. For the Neutrality granted the Queen of Navarre had no place, but in the King's Absence. Brantome's last Error is a Fault of Chronology. The Marshal de Biron made his Peace in Guienne. 'Tis therefore false that Queen Margaret used him ill at the Court of France eighteen Months after; and that he then pacified her by his Humiliation. Mr de Mezerai is mistaken in two Things. The Marshal de Biron, says he (e), discharged some Volleys of Cannon against the Walls, upon which the Queen was beholding the Skirmish, which so offended this Princess, that she never pardon'd him.

(I) The Memoirs she has left us of her Life .... she address'd 'em to Brantome.] Auger de Mauleon, Sieur de Granier publish'd 'em (f) at Paris in 1628, in 8*vo*. There were some other Editions of 'em afterwards. He says in the Preface, that the Baron de la Chastaignerave is the Person, that Queen Margaret address'd them to; and that they who believe, they were address'd to Mr. de Rendan, do believe a thing not probable. Mr. Colomies has very well proved (g) that they were address'd to Mr. Peter de Bourdeille, Abbot de Brantome. You'll see his Reasons in Moreri's Dictionary.

(K) She received a barbarous Affront, by the Order of King Henry III.] Observe how Mezerai relates it: " (a) " The King .... banish'd two certain Ladies her Con- " fidents from about her, writing to the King of Na- " varre with his own Hand, that he had expell'd 'em " as a most pernicious Vermin, and not to be suffer'd near " a Lady of such Extraction. And some Days after he " commanded her to return to her Husband, without " permitting her to take leave of him. His Hatred " went still much further: He sent after her a Captain " of Guards, with sixty Archers, who having stopp'd her " Retinue beyond Palaiseau, and rummaged her Lit- " ter, so as to make her pull off her Mask, he seized " her Querry, her Physician and Apothecary, whilst " Larchant went to seize these two Ladies another way. " He caused all these Persons to be brought to him in the " Abbey of Ferrieres near Montargis, separated 'em " into several Chambers, question'd each of 'em a- " part concerning the Life, Morals and Conversation " of his Sister, and would have the Depositions in Writ- " ting; departing from thence, he sent some of 'em " to the Bastile, who were examin'd before the Lieu- " tenant of the Provost, and let his Sister go." Mr. Varillas (b) has related this Adventure with all the same Circumstances, as Mr. de Mezerai. I am surpriz'd that a Huguenot Historian, who lived in that time, and whom few such things escap'd, has given a much shorter account, than that which may be read at the beginning of this Remark. Consider, I pray, the Sieur d'Aubigné's Brevity, and the little Agreement betwixt his Narration and that of others, in respect of the Circumstances of place. The Queen of Navarre, says he (c), returning to Court † with the Queen her Mother, this restless Woman remained not long without offending the King her Brother, and his Favourites, combining at Court, with those that defamed the Prince, imputing to him most filthy Pleasures; in which it seemed, that the Ladies were concern'd. Hereupon this Princess received some Affronts; the last whereof, was, that Salern, Captain of the Guards, made her unmask at St. James's Gate, as she left Paris to return to Gascogne with her Husband; with whom, at the same time, she lived a very scurvy Life.

(L) He pressingly required of Henry III either that his Wife's Affront should receive Satisfaction, or that it might be permitted him not to receive her.] See what d'Aubigné relates immediately after the foregoing Passage: " (d) The King of Navarre taking Advice " of his Council in that Affair, they all unanimously " agreed, that he ought to resent it; and for that " effect to demand of the King a notable Satisfacti- " on; with a Clause that bespoke a Challenge, or " at least a Separation of Friendship in case of " Refusal: All advised to this, and all refused the Ex- " ecution, except Aubigné; who, after he had re- " monstrated how he was accus'd of having saved his " Master, and of some free Writings and offensive " Discourses; and that what would be born with from " another, would be mortal in his Mouth; yet seeing " the Passion of this offended Prince, he resolved to " undertake the Journey. He finds the King at St. " Germains, who having given the Messenger all the " Appearances of Terror, heard him harangue upon " the Interests included in the Injuries of Princes: " How this Act of Infamy had been play'd before " the most magnificent Company, and upon the most " exalted Stage of Christendom .... At last, not up- " on the Refusal of Justice, but upon the Delay which " bespoke a Refusal, the Messenger put into the King's " Hands the Honour of his Alliance and his Friend- " ship." He afterwards relates the Menaces contain'd in the King's Answer, the vigorous † Reply he made to them, his Answer in the same Strain to the Queen-Mother, and the diligence wherewith he returned, and Prevented the Assassins of the Court of France. This being so, it can't be deny'd, that Henry IV. express'd his Indignation with all the Constancy of a brave and resolute Prince. " (e) The King of Navarre " having receiv'd this News (f) at Nerac, concluded " (g) that he ought not to receive her, till he knew " the Cause of this Affront, which being offer'd and " receiv'd at Mid-day could not be dissembled: " Therefore, to have it fully explain'd or repair'd, he " resolved to send Mr. Du Plessis to the King, who " was gone to Lions, where he went to find him in " Post-haste. This thorny Negotiation, and full of mands, and was obliged to receive Margaret (M) in Nerac with all her Diſgrace. Being ſometime after excommunicated by Pope Sixtus, ſhe made uſe of this pretence* to leave him, and make War upon him. She poſſeſs'd herſelf of Agenois, which was given her in Dowry, but ſhe

* Mezerai Hiſt. of France. Tom. 3. pag. 596.

" Precipices on all ſides, where the Honour of a Wife " and Husband were concern'd, of ſuch a quality; and " wherein two Kings, one his Maſter, and the other " his Prince, were engag'd, is found entire in his " Memoirs: But this is the Sum of it. Having re- " preſented to the King the Heinouſneſs of the Fact, " he demanded two Things, in the Name of the " King of Navarre. One was, that he would pleaſe to " declare the Cauſe of his Indignation, that had induc'd " him to ſuch Indignities againſt his Wife, who had the " Honour to be his Siſter; ſince the meaneſt Woman in " the World is not robb'd of her Honour, till ſhe has " firſt loſt it herſelf. The other was, that at leaſt, as the " Head of the Family, he would do Juſtice; and, as a " good Maſter, adviſe him what was to be done in ſo per- " plexed an Affair. The King ſhuffl'd, and perhaps " finding himſelf guilty of too much Precipitation, was " willing to throw the Cauſe upon the Ladies above- " mention'd, whom he accus'd of a bad Life: But Mr. du " Pleſſis replied to him, that it was not his Buſineſs to " plead their Cauſe, that the King his Maſter did not do " him that injury, as to ſend him in their Favour: " That the Queſtion was concerning the Queen his Siſter, " if ſhe had committed a fault deſerving ſuch an Affront, " he demanded Juſtice on her; if not, he deſired him to " give her Juſtice upon thoſe, who were Authors of this " ill advice to the Diſhonour of the Royal Family, and " his own.... (b) that he was inſtructed in brief to " tell his Majeſty that he had done too much or too " little; too much, if the Fault was leſs than extreme; " too little, if thinking, ſhe deſerved to loſe her Ho- " nour, he ſuffered her to ſurvive it. Hereupon the " King anſwered, that he was obliged to the King of " Navarre for the proceeding he had taken; that he " had a Mother and a Brother intereſted in this Affair, " as well as himſelf, to whom he would communicate " it.... Mr. du Pleſſis plainly perceived, that he " could get nothing more of him: But there remain- " ed one ſcruple, that in the mean time the Queen " his Siſter continued her Journey; upon which he " ſaid: But what will Chriſtendom ſay, Sir, if the " King of Navarre receives her, embraces her without " ſcruple, thus return'd to him ſtain'd and diſhonour'd? " To which the King replied, What? but that he'll re- " ceive the Siſter of his King; what can he do leſs? " But of a juſt and equitable King, ſays Mr. du Pleſſis, " who would not require this Obedience from ſuch a Sub- " ject at the expence of his Honour and Courage. Hereup- " on the King reſolved to write to the Queen his Mo- " ther, that ſhe ſhou'd cauſe her to ſtay by the way in " ſome Town." The Iſſue of all this was, that Bellievre deputed to the King of Navarre obliged him at laſt to receive his Wife, without any ſatisfaction to his Demands. Read the Letter that was written (a) to Mr. de Montagne, by Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai in 1584. It begins thus: " (b) Sir, we have heard Mr. de Bel- " lievre. To tell the Truth, he has propos'd no other " ſatisfaction for the Indignity done to the Queen of " Navarre, than the Authority and Liberty that a " King has over his Subjects. A Reaſon, as you know, " that has more Vinegar than Oil in it, and improper " for ſo ſenſible a Wound, and in ſo nervous a part: " And I know not whether I may not ſay little ſuitable " to the Grandure of our Princes, who have always " tempered the Sovereign Power with a gracious Equi- " ty, and have never diſpoſed of the Honour of the " leaſt of their Subjects, but with their good liking. " However the King of Navarre has been willing to " ſhew, that he choſe rather to give the King ſatisfa- " ction than himſelf; to which purpoſe he is reſolved " to make his Honour buckle under his Reſpect to his " Commands: being determined to go and receive " the Queen his Wife... his Houſe at Nerac."

(a) Michael de Montagne Author of the Eſſays.

(b) Du Pleſſis Mornai's Memoirs. Tom. 1. p. 297, 298.

Behold here a very perplexing Riddle. D' Aubigné poſitively affirms, that he was the only Perſon employ'd to demand Reparation for this inſult, all the others having refuſed to undertake ſuch a Commiſſion. Du Pleſſis Mornai, affirms as ſtrongly, that he was the only Perſon ſent to the Court of France: On this Affair D' Aubigné makes no mention of du Pleſſis, nor du Pleſſis of D' Aubigné; but contents himſelf with ſaying, that the King of Navarre (c) ſpoke firſt of ſending the Sieur de Frontenac. It can't be ſuppoſed that there are two Affairs in queſtion; for though we may ſpeak in the plural Number of Affronts received by Queen Margaret, it can by no means be pretended, that D'Aubigné demanded ſatisfaction for an Affront before or after that, which obliged the King of Navarre to depute Mr. du Pleſſis. Both theſe Authors, who relate their Commiſſion, have in view the Action of the Captain of the Guards, who ſtopp'd Queen Margaret's Litter, &c. He is called Saliers in the Life (d) of du Pleſſis, and Salern in the Hiſtory (e) of D'Aubigné. This ſhews that they mean the ſame Man; but that, by the Error of the Preſs, or by ſome little ſlip of Memory, his Name is differently written or ended. I confeſs, that, according to Mr. du Pleſſis, this Captain's Exploit happen'd (f) four Leagues from Paris (g) between Palaiſeau and St Cler; and, according to D' Aubigné at St: James's Gate: I confeſs alſo, that in D' Aubigne's Account, the Complaint and demand of Satisfaction was made to the King at St. Germains, but at Lions, according to du Pleſſis. And yet I can't conceive, that in this occaſion the King of Navarre ſent two Deputies to Henry III. ſince Mr. du Pleſſis affirms, that he was the only Perſon charged with this Negotiation: If I were to diſtruſt the Memory or Probity of either of theſe, it would not be Mr. du Pleſſis. I ſhould ſuſpect. However, I will not determine to the prejudice of the other. I chuſe rather to ſuſpend my Judgment, being not ſufficiently ſatisfied with my Conjectures to place 'em here. For the reſt, I am not the firſt (h) that has been perplexed with the account of this Adventure. Note, that D' Aubigné, in the ſecond Edition (i) of his Book, might have known what is related contrary to his Narrative in (k) du Pleſſis's Memoirs.

(d) In Page 71.
(e) At Pag. 1083.
(f) Du Pleſſis's Life, pag. 71.
(g) Du Pleſſis's Memoirs. Tom. 1. p. 275.

(h) Ibid. pag. 72.

(b) See the Notes upon Sanci's Catholick Confeſſion. Book 2. ch. 7. p. 469. Edit. 1699.
(i) In 1626.
(k) Printed in 1624.

(M) Obliged to receive Margaret in Nerac with all her Diſgrace.] Here we may apply to the King of Navarre, Parturient montes, naſcetur ridiculus mus, if it be true that he ſent a Challenge to the King of France (l), related above by D'Aubigné; but if the Matter be reduced to the Terms of Mr. du Pleſſis's Negotiation, the Fall will appear much leſs Scandalous. The ill ſtate of his Affairs did not permit him to be ſo prepoſterouſly Haughty. Bellievre deputed from Henry III. ſpoke with ſo much the more Haughtineſs, as the Garriſons placed round about Nerac made him believe the King of Navarre durſt refuſe him nothing. This Prince therefore was forced to ſubmit whether he wou'd or no: and to ask, as a Favour, that at leaſt the Garriſons might be ſent away. Obſerve the reſt of the Paſſage we have ſeen (m) above, I mean the Words of the Letter from Mr. du Pleſſis Mornai: " (n) Reſolving " to viſit and receive the Queen his Wife, in his " Houſe at Nerac, on Condition only, that the Garri- " ſons might be removed that were placed round a " bout; both that this Reception might have no ap- " pearance of force, and for the Security of their ſtay. " You know whether it be civil to receive her in a " borrowed Houſe, or incivil to demand Liberty in " one's own. Mr. de Bellievre notwithſtanding made " great difficulty of it: Hereupon, this Day, Mr. de " Clervant was diſpatch'd to the Queen of Navarre; " and from thence will proceed to their Majeſties, who " in my Opinion, conſidering the Matter paſt, and " conſidering it in the Perſon of the King of Na- " varre, will not refuſe him ſo little an Acceſſory; " ſince in a thing of this Importance he has granted " the principal. Judge in what trouble thoſe People put " us. We had reduced the Matter almoſt to the beſt " Point that could be hoped for; and at preſent they " barter upon a Trifle, and deſtroy our Credit, if " our Sincerity was not well known to our Maſter." Let us once then excuſe the King of Navarre, and not ſuffer the Cenſure to fall upon this particular of his Life, related by a Modern Hiſtorian. The Malicious, ſays he, (o) " ſpared not his Domeſtick Affairs: they high- " ly blamed his Conduct in abandoning Queen Marga- " ret to her Gallanting Humour; more patient than the " Emperor Claudius, ſaid they, he ſuffer'd this new " Meſſalina, known to be his lawful Wife, to diſhonour " him publickly. Had he a Mind at his own Coſt to teach " thoſe, whoſe Wives he debauch'd, to become contented " Cuckolds?" If he had receiv'd with Marks of Eſteem, his Wife, diſhonour'd by the publick Affront the King her Brother had given her, we might reaſonably accuſe him of the moſt cowardly Tameneſs: But he took not that Method; he manifeſtly gave her to underſtand, that he deſpiſed her; and this was one of the Motives that induc'd her to break with him. Read theſe Words of Mr. du Pleſſis's Letter (p) Queen Margaret, whether ſhe could not bear to be [illegible] whether

(l) In the Remark L.

(m) In the Remark L.
(n) Du Pleſſis's Memoirs. Tom. 1. pag. 298.

(o) Le Vaſſor Hiſt. of Lewis XIII. Book 1. pag. 54.

(p) Du Pleſſis's Life, pag. 90.

(c) Ibid. pag. 275.

she found few Grounds of Satisfaction in that War, being obliged (N) to leave Agen precipitately, and to fly into Auvergne, where she consumed the rest of her Youth in Adventures more becoming a Woman, who had abandon'd her Husband, than a Daughter of France †. Lignerac with some Gentlemen conducted her to the Town of Carlat, where his Brother was Chatelain ‡. Henry III. engag'd the Inhabitants β to prepare to betray her. She smelt the Treachery and escap'd; but she was taken by the Marquis of Canillac, and carried to the Castle of Usson. He fell in love with her, and suffered himself to be so bewitch'd with her fine Tongue, that she made her self the strongest, and expell'd him thence γ. In this Fortress she lived a Recluse till she came to the Court of France in 1605. She had been solicited to consent to the dissolution of her Marriage; but she refused it δ, during the Dutchess of Beaufort's Life, but afterwards she gave her consent; and her self began the Process by a Petition presented to this purpose to Pope Clement VIII. The best Reason she alledged was the want of Consent, and that was good for nothing; for besides, that this was to declare, that she was guilty of a great Perjury in Notre Dame Church in Paris ζ where Cardinal de Bourbon performed the Nuptial Ceremonies, she manifestly contradicted what she has written in her Memoirs. We there find that she rejected * the Proposal of a Divorce; and that she had nothing more to Heart than to testifie her Passion, Respect and Obedience to her Husband, so far as to be present at the Travel of his Mistrisses π, to assist 'em to her utmost, and to take all possible care of him θ, when his Excesses with other Women cast him into a fainting Fit. Her Marriage having been declared null, Henry IV. married Mary de Medicis. He, and his second Wife, gave our Margaret a very honourable Reception in 1605. ↓ She was first lodged in the Castle of Boulogne, and afterwards in the Palace of Sens, which she quitted to go and live in the Subburbs of St. Germains, where she built a Palace answerable to the Majesty of the Kings she descended from. She there led a very odd Life, which was a mixture (O) of Gallantry, Devotion and Study. She died the 27th of March 1615. We cannot forbear condemning her Panegyrists, who have boldly suppress'd her Faults and ill Actions, notwithstanding they were so publickly notorious; and it seems the Historian, Scipio Du Pleix, has not deserved all the Censures, which † Id. ibid pag. 598. See the Article Usson.

‡ Id. ibid.
β Brantom. Illustrious Ladies, pag. 255.
γ Id. ib. See also d' Aubigné, Tom. 3. Book 5. ch. 4.
δ D' Aubigné ibid.
ζ Memoirs of Queen Margaret, pag. 40. n. 1. f. 68.
π See the Remark F.
θ Ibid. pag. 115.
↓ Hilarion de Coste Eloges of Illustrious Ladies. Tom. 2. pag. 306.

whether she returned to her old Practices, threw her self into Agen, and there made War for the League. After all; it must be remember'd, that there are Princes, that are much more at a loss than other Men, what Resolution to take when they are loaded with Horns. 'Tis a very difficult part to act: Patience and Impatience are equally the Object of Laughter; and 'tis not easie to find a just Medium betwixt the Severity of Henry VIII. and the debonaire Humour of Henry IV. Let every one in Cases of this Nature remember the old Maxim, 'Tis easie to find Fault, but difficult to do better.

(N) Being obliged to leave Agen precipitately.] "(q) "She was very ill served by means of Madam de Duras, "who had a great command over her; and under her "Name made great Exactions and Contributions: "The People of the Town were exasperated, and under-hand contrived their Liberty, and the means of "expelling both their Lady and her Garrisons; upon "which discontent the Marshal de Matignon took "occasion to make an Enterprize upon the Town; as "the King, being acquainted with the opportunities, "commanded him with great Joy, to oppress his Sister, "whom he did not love, with more and more Mortifications: Wherefore the Enterprize which miscarried the first time, was so dextrously managed the "second, by the said Marshal and the Inhabitants, that "the Town was taken; and forced in such a manner, "with that suddenness and alarm, that all this unfortunate Queen could do, was to get behind a Gentleman, and Madam de Duras behind another, and to "make the best of their way, riding twelve Leagues "the first Day, and as many the next, and to escape "into the strongest Fortress of France, which is "Carlat." Queen Margaret observes in the beginning of her Memoirs, that there is an Error in Brantome's Relation, but we don't know how she would have rectified it. Let us see how the Author of the Satyrical Divorce mkes Henry IV. speak: (a) She suffered her self again to be carried away by her Lasciviousness and Debauchery, leaving me without saying a Word, and going to Agen, a Town opposite to my Interest, to set up her Trade there, and to continue her Lewdness with greater Liberty: But the Inhabitants presaging horrible Successes from so horrible a Life, gave her occasion to depart in so much haste, that there was scarce found a House to carry her, nor hired or Post-Horses for half of her Maids; many whereof followed one after another, some without Masks, some without Aprons, and some without both; all in so wretched a pickle that they rather resembled the Whores of Lansquenets in the March of a Camp, than Women of a noble House. She was attended with some Nobility unequipp'd, who half without Boots, half on Foot, conducted her under the Guard of Lignerac to the Mountains of Auvergne into Carlat, where * Marie his Brother was Chatelain, a strong Fort, but more resembling a Den of Thieves, than the Habitation of a Prince, the Daughter, Sister and Wife of a King. There are some Circumstances in the Scaligerana, which are not in the Satyrical Divorce: (b) She got behind a Gentlem in without a Cushion; she wore off the Skin of her Thighs; of which she was sick a Month, having a fever. The Physician, who took care of her, was at present with the King, she order'd him to be hang'd .... she was forced to borrow a Smock of a Servant-Maid at a Neighbouring place, until she came to Usson (c) at the entrance into Auvergne. Observe by the bye, that too much Liberty is taken in the general and curious Dictionary; for 'tis there said (d), that Scaliger affirms, that the Physician, who had this Princess in cure, when she had lost her Skin, was hang'd for speaking too freely. These last Words are not in my Edition of the Scaligerana; and I don't believe they are in others, or that Cæsar de Rochefort had any reason to add 'em of his own Head, though 'tis probable that Scaliger had such a meaning. It is not lawful to cite an Author according to our probable Imaginations of what he meant to say, but according to what he has said: for otherwise things would be quickly multiplied and falsified: Before this came to a fourth or fifth hand, it would import, that the Physician had said this and that, that he had made a Draught and a kind of a Topographical Map.

(O) A very odd Life, which was a mixture of Gallantry, Devotion and Study.] Mr de Mezerai relates, that Queen Margaret (e), having employ'd Intrigues to discover the secret Practices of the Count d' Auvergne, gave much intelligence to the King, so that at last he resolv'd to comply with her Request, that she might come to Paris. She arrived there in August 1605, "and had the Castle of Madrid in the Forest "of Boulogne, assigned her for her Lodging. She "lived there six Weeks, afterwards she removed to "the Palace of Sens: But there an unfortunate Accident happening to one of her Minions, who was "killed at the Door of her Coach, by a young Gentleman, mad that this Spark had ruined his Family with this Princess, She quitted that unfortunate Palace, and bought another in the Suburbs of Germain, near the River, and the pré aux Clercs, where "she began great designs of building and Gardening. "Here it was she kept her large Court the rest of her "Days, mixing together Pleasure and Devotion, "the love of Letters, and the love of Vanity, Christian "Charity and Injustice: For as she prided her self in "being seen frequently at Church, entertaining Learned Men, and giving the tenth of her Revenue to the "Monks, she gloried in having still some Gallantry, "inventing new Diversion, and never paying her "Debts."

(q) Brantome Illustrious Ladies, pag. 254, 255.

(a) Satyrical Divorce, p. m. 196, 197.

* Others call him Marie.

(b) Scaliger ana at the Word Navarre, p. m. 166.
(c) Scaliger is mistaken, she went not to Usson till after she had lain a considerable time at Carlat.
(d) Cæsar de Rochefort general and curious Dictionary, pag. 415. Col. 1.

(e) Mezerai Chronological Abridgment Tom. 6. pag. 316 which were caſt on him for ſpeaking of this Queen's Baſtards. But this I ſhall examine in another place †, this Article being too long already. I will not conclude without ſaying, that the wiſe and famous Pibrac was her Chancellor (P) and Gallant.

(P) He

† In the Article Uſſon, where I relate many Things which have been ſaid of this Queen's ill Morals.

NAUCRATIS, a City of Egypt upon the Nile. Some Authors have placed it upon the moſt Weſtern Branch (A) of that River; but every one (B) is not of their Opinion. 'Twas a Colony (C) of Mileſians, if we will believe Strabo: He is not the

(P) The wiſe and famous Pibrac was her Chancellor and Gallant.] See the Remark N of the Article Henry IV. I have read in Thuanus (f), that in 1582 Pibrac communicated to him a Draught of the Anſwer he deſigned to make to a ſmart Letter, which he had received from the Queen of Navarre: In which this Princeſs reproach'd him amongſt other things, with being too much addicted to Love, and preſuming to caſt his Eyes even upon her. Pibrac recited his deſigned Anſwer, with ſo much heat to Thuanus (g), that he gave occaſion to believe that Margaret's Reproach was well-grounded. Truſt after this thoſe venerable Magiſtrates, who make moral Stanza's ſo grave and ſententious, that Cato himſelf would be proud of compoſing them. Here is a Paſſage of Queen Margaret's Memoirs: (h) Monſieur de Pibrac play'd a double Game, telling this Princeſs, that ſhe ought not to ſuffer her ſelf to be brav'd by ſuch an inconſiderable Man (i) as that, and whatever came on it, ſhe muſt get him to be removed; and telling the King of Navarre, that there was no probability that ſhe would deprive him of the ſervice of a Man, who was ſo neceſſary to him: Which he did to induce her by her Diſcontents to return into France, where he was fixed in his place of Preſident and Counſellor to the King. Add, that as he loved the Queen, he could not reſolve to return to Paris without her.

(f) Thuan. de vita ſua, lib. 2. p. m. 1186.

(g) Adeo accuratis verbis, tantaque contentione & affectus vehementia, ut Margaritæ exprobrationi fidem aſtrueret. Id. ib.

(h) Memoirs of Queen Margaret, pag. 321.

(i) That is to ſay, the Secretary du Pin, of whom we have ſpoken in the Remark G.

(A) Upon the moſt Weſtern Branch of that River.] This Branch was that which was called Oſtium Canopicum, the Mouth of Canopus; near which Alexander the Great built the City of Alexandria. 'Tis plain, that Herodotus has placed Naucratis upon this Arm of the Nile. See in the Body of the Article what I cite from the 179 Chapter of his ſecond Book. Salmaſius (a) embraces this Opinion.

(a) Salmaſ. Exercit. Plin. in Solin. pag. 476.

(B) Every one is not of their Opinion.] Indeed (b) Pliny obſerves that the Arm of the Nile, which by reaſon of the City Naucratis was called Naucraticum, came immediately after that of Canopus. Naucratis unde oſtium quidam Naucratiticum nominant, quod alii Heracleoticum, Canopico, cui PROXIMUM eſt, præferentes. Let there be a Fault, if you pleaſe, in the Word præferentes, it will ſtill be true, that, according to Pliny, the Mouths of Naucratis and Canopus are not the ſame. Tacitus (c) is perfectly of this Opinion; for after having ſpoken of the Mouth of Canopus, he adds, Inde proximum amnis os dicatum Herculi, quem indigenæ ortum apud ſe & antiquiſſimum perhibent. Dionyſius Periegetes (d) affirms the ſame thing. But let us ſee a little what Strabo ſays: He obſerves (e), that the Bolbitick Mouth is next to that of Canopus; and that the Sebennytick immediately comes after the Bolbitick. In this he agrees with Pliny, proximo Alexandriæ Canopico, ſays (f) this latter, deinde Bolbitino, Sebennytico; whence we may infer by the bye, that, according to Pliny, Heracleoticum, Bolbitinum, Naucratiticum ostium are the ſame Arm of the Nile. Strabo adds, that the Mileſians entred with thirty Sail into the Bolbitick Mouth, at the time of Pſammitichus and Cyaxares, the former King of Egypt, the latter King of the Medes; and that making a Deſcent they built what was call'd the Mileſians Wall, Μιλησίων τεῖχος, a place betwixt the Bolbitick and Sebennytick Mouths. Another time, continues he, they ſet ſail towards Sais, and having obtained a Naval Victory againſt Inarus, they built the City of Naucratis, a little above Schedia. The City Sais, was according to him, farther from the Bolbitick Arm, than the City Sebennys. It ſeems therefore, that ſince they built Naucratis, after their conducting their Fleet towards Sais, Naucratis muſt be imagined pretty near Sais; and this would not only refute thoſe, who ſay that Naucratis was built upon the moſt Weſtern Arm of the Nile, but alſo thoſe that place it upon the ſecond Arm, reckoning from Weſt to Eaſt. But we muſt not fix the true Situation of Naucratis by the place where the Mileſians ſet Sail, and vanquiſhed Inarus, ſince Strabo explains himſelf, and gives us another Rule. They built, ſays he, Naucratis a little above Schedia. The queſtion is at preſent concerning the Poſition of Schedia. Salmaſius (g) places it upon the Mouth of Canopus, but he is miſtaken; for Strabo has placed a Canal betwixt this Mouth and Schedia; and conſequently a Town might have been built above Schedia upon the ſecond Arm of the Nile. The diſtance of Alexandria from Schedia was above twelve (h) or fifteen of our Leagues. Here is a Paſſage of Strabo that (i) deſerves to be obſerv'd: They who went up the Nile from Schedia to Memphis, found on their right Hermopolis, Momemphis, &c. with Canals leading to the Lake Marcotis; on the left they found Naucratis upon the River, in the Delta it ſelf, and Sais at ſome diſtance from the Nile. This is deciſive againſt the Poſition of Naucratis upon the moſt Weſtern Arm of this River. I don't think Salmaſius thought of this Paſſage of Strabo: Nor has he well examin'd the other, but has ill inferr'd from it, that Naucratis was where Herodotus placed it; namely, upon the Mouth of Canopus, the moſt Weſtern of the Nile. What he adds, that this Canopic Mouth, and the Herculean are the ſame in Strabo, Diodorus Siculus, Ptolemey, Solinus and Ammianus Marcellinus, only ſerves the better to convince us of the Confuſion in which the antient Writers have left Geography; ſome ſaying one thing, and others affirming the quite contrary. This is moſt commonly the Fruit we reap, after having labour'd hard to reconcile theſe People; we put their Wanderings and Darkneſs in a great Light.

(g) Exercit. Plin. p. 476.

(h) Of four Schœni, according to Strabo; now one Schœnus according to Herodotus, l. 2. c. 6. contained 60 Stadia; eight Stadia a Mile. See Strabo, l. 17. p. 553: who obſerves that this meaſure varied according to the places.

(i) Lib. 17. pag. 552.

(C) 'Twas a Colony of Mileſians.] Here is a Proof of what I have been obſerving: Herodotus is ſo far from ſaying with Strabo, that the Mileſians built Naucratis after their Naval Victory over Inarus, that he obſerves (k), that King Amaſis (l) abounding with Good-will towards the Greeks, conſented that ſuch of this Nation, as were willing to live at Naucratis, might do it; and that others, who had a more rambling Humour, and loved rather to ſail up and down, might build Temples in certain places. This Hiſtorian adds, that, in purſuance of this Grant, many Grecian Cities built a Temple at the common Charge, and that the Mileſians in particular built that of Apollo. He inſinuates that the places, where theſe Temples were, became ſo many Magazines or Store-houſes, for the Merchandizes of the Grecians; and that thus they abridg'd the Priviledges the City Naucratis enjoy'd of being the ſole trading Town of Egypt. I don't think it eaſie to reconcile with this Paſſage of Herodotus, that which I have cited from Strabo in the preceding Remark: It would be much if this Geographer could be reconciled with himſelf. He ſpeaks of two (m) Expeditions of the Mileſians. The Effects of the firſt were the Building in Egypt a City called the Mileſians Wall: The Effects of the ſecond were the building the City Naucratis. He does not reckon the Years betwixt theſe two Enterprizes; but he places the firſt under Pſammitichus, and the ſecond under Inarus; and he makes Pſammitichus Contemporary with Cyaxares King of the Medes. It follows from hence, that the Mileſians made their firſt Expedition into Egypt, betwixt the 37 and 40 Olympiad; for (n) that is the time wherein the Reigns of theſe two Princes concur: And perhaps this Expedition ſhould not be diſtinguiſhed from that mention'd by (o) Herodotus, when he tells, that Pſammitichus having taken the Ionians and Carians, who landed in his Country, into his Service, by their means overcame all the other Kings of Egypt; after which he gave Lands to theſe Foreigners, who had ſo well ſerv'd him: 'Tis true, they were plac'd far enough from the Eſtabliſhment (p) of Strabo's Mileſians. As for the Expedition made in Inarus's time, it muſt fall about the 80 Olympiad, being the time in which the Egyptians elected him their King, in order to deliver themſelves from the ſevere Yoke of the Perſians. But if Naucratis was not built till the Mileſians had conquered Inarus, this City muſt have been founded after Xerxes's Expedition: Whence comes it then, that Strabo (q) relates, that Charaxus, Sappho's Brother, traded in Lesbian Wine at Naucratis? Did not Strabo know, that Alcæus and Sappho flouriſhed at the ſame time; that is, one hundred and fifty Years, more or leſs, before the Reign of Inarus? It muſt therefore be conteſs'd, that this Geographer's Account of Naucratis is undigeſted, and very doubtful. I ſhould rather believe what Euſebius ſays of it, namely, that it was built towards the end of the 6th Olympiad, at

(k) Herodot. l. 2. c. 178.

(l) He began his Reign 42 Years after the Death of Plammitichus. Helvic. Chron.

(m) Lib. 17. pag. m. 551.

(n) See Helvicus in his Chronological Tables.

(o) Lib. 2. c. 52.

(p) A little above the Town of Bubaſtus, upon the Mouth of Peluſium, which is the moſt Oriental of the Nile. Herod. ib. c. 154. See what ſhall be cited from Diodorus Siculus in the Remark D.

(q) Lib. 17, pag. 556.

the only one * who has ſaid it, but he is not conſiſtent with himſelf; and there are many Reaſons that oppoſe his Opinion. Diodorus Siculus (D) do's not favour him. That which is moſt certain is, that Naucratis was a very famous City. Herodotus β ſays, that it was antiently the only trading City in Egypt; and that to continue this Priviledge, no Merchant-ſhip was ſuffered to unlade in any other Port. All that put into any other Mouth of the Nile, were obliged to ſwear they did it againſt their Intention, and to ſail for the Arm of Canopus in the ſame Veſſel. That if they could not arrive there for contrary Winds, they unloaded their Effects in Barges, which they brought up the Nile, through all the Meanders of that River, quite to Naucratis. 'Tis not a little ſtep towards the proving the great Wealth of that City, and the mighty Concourſe of Foreigners, to obſerve, as Herodotus does †, that the Courteſans took great care there to be charming. Though this Hiſtorian confutes thoſe who have ſaid, that Rhodope, by her Proſtitutions, got Wealth wherewithal to build one of the principal Pyramids of Egypt; yet he owns ſhe got immenſe Summs, and clearly enough inſinuates, that ſhe carried on her chief Trade at Naucratis. Athenæus accuſes him of confounding this Rhodope with Dorica. It was the latter, according to Athenæus, who had Sappho's Brother for her Gallant; but, according to Herodotus, ſhe that was loved by Sappho's Brother, was called Rhodope. Let them diſpute it out. Athenæus ‡ ſeems to draw an advantage from this, that Naucratis, his Native place, had produc'd moſt famous and moſt handſome Women of Pleaſure. He forgets not to mention γ Archidice, who, as Herodotus relates δ, had a great Renown throughout all Greece. She ought not to be diſtinguiſh'd from her, who had a Suit with her Gallant. I have ſpoken elſewhere ζ of what the Courteſan Lamia thought of the Judgment, which was given upon that Cauſe. This City pretended to have a great ſhare in the Protection and Favour of Venus η, and boaſted of poſſeſſing a miraculous Image of this Goddeſs, which was conſecrated in her Temple, after it had done a great miracle in a violent Storm. The Story was to be found in a Book compoſed by Polycharmus, concerning the Goddeſs Venus. If we had this Book, we might ſee perhaps many Things, of which ſome Stories of our Legendaries would ſeem only a Copy; and if we had Apollonius Rhodius's Work concerning the Foundation of Naucratis, it would be eaſie to make a long and curious Article concerning this City. Origen θ has obſerv'd, that the God Serapis was particularly adored there, though antiently they worſhip'd other Gods. Athenæus κ relates ſome Cuſtoms that were practis'd there. He is not the only Author that was born in this City: Polycharmus λ, Julius Pollux μ, Lyceas ν, and according to ſome, Philiſtus ξ, and Ariſtophanes ο, were born there alſo. Philiſtus had compoſed χ ſomething concerning this City. It drew infinitely more advantage from its Potters Ware (E) and Nitre, than from its ingenious Men, though theſe have moſt contributed to its Glory.

NAUSICAA or NAUSICAE, Daughter of Alcinous King of the Phæaces, in the Iſle of Corcyra *, appears with great Luſtre in Homer's Odyſſes. The Poet has been very liberal of his Favours to her, and repreſented her like a Goddeſs † in Soul and Body; and was pleaſed that his Hero, after his Shipwrack, ſhould receive from her the firſt Aſſiſtance he wanted. Naked, as he was born, he was laid upon the Earth in at the ſame time as Rome. I find (r) that Athenæus upon the Teſtimony of an Author, a Native of Naucratis, relates, that in the 23 Olympiad, Heroſtratus a Merchant of that City, was wont to trade by Sea in ſeveral Countries. This does not beſpeak a City built but t'other Day. Scaliger, who depends rather on Strabo than Euſebius, accuſes the latter (s) of a prodigious Anachroniſm; he finds an hiatus of about 150 Years betwixt the Year of the Foundation of Naucratis, according to Euſebius, and the Year that this Town was actually built; for he believes that the Mileſians built it towards the end of Pſammitichus's Reign or the beginning of Cyaxares's. He cites Strabo, without pretending to perceive the Victory obtain'd over Inarus: He therefore draws a falſe Conſequence from his Citation, ſince 'tis manifeſt, that if Naucratis was not built till after the Defeat of Inarus, contemporary with Artaxerxes Longimanus, 'tis impoſſible that Scaliger ſhould have well-fix'd the time of this City's Foundation. But Salmaſius (t) takes this Inarus of Strabo for a City: Upon this foot the Mileſians might have built Naucratis, according to Scaliger's Date. But where ſhall we find the City Inarus? what Geographers have ſpoken of it? Let it not be ſaid, that this was a perfectly obſcure City; for Strabo in that caſe would not have barely named it: When we ſay briefly that Conquerors have taken ſuch or ſuch a Town, it is ſuppoſed to be known.

(D) Diodorus Siculus does not favour him.] He tells us (a), that Pſammitichus, one of the twelve Princes that govern'd Egypt for fifteen Years, was oblig'd, in order to maintain himſelf againſt his Partners, to liſt Strangers into his Army; by which means he gained a Battle, which ſubjected the whole Kingdom. Theſe Strangers were Arabians or Carians or Ionians. From that time Strangers were had in great Eſteem, whether they were Soldiers, or came to ſee Egypt. He made an Alliance with the Athenians, and with other Grecian Nations; and was the firſt that permitted Foreigners to traffick in Egypt: For in the preceding Reigns all the Strangers, who landed in this Country, were either murther'd or made Slaves. Now, according to Athenæus, the City Naucratis was already conſiderable in the 23 Olympiad: It is not therefore poſſible, according to Diodorus's Hypotheſis, that it ſhould have been built by the Mileſians, ſince by that Hypotheſis no Stranger could ſafely land in Egypt, before the Reign of Pſammitichus; that is to ſay, before the (b) 30 Olympiad more or leſs. Judge whether Euſebius could find his account in this Hypotheſis; he will have Naucratis to have been built by the Mileſians in the 6 Olympiad: There is nothing but Confuſion in all this.

(E) From its Potters Ware and Nitre.] The Paſſage where Athenæus (c) ſpeaks of theſe Potters Wares, has not been well tranſlated. Πολλοὶ δ' ἐν τῇ Ναυκράτει κεραμεῖς, ἀφ' ὧν καὶ ἡ πλησίον θύρα κεραμέων πύλη Κεραμικὴ καλεῖται. His meaning is, that there was a great number of Potters at Naucratis, and that the Gate of the City, which was called Ceramick, took its Name from its Neighbourhood to the Potteries. Inſtead of this Senſe 'tis turn'd thus, that the Arm of the Nile, in the Neighbourhood of theſe Potteries, was called the Ceramicum oſtium. Dalechamp (d) has been ſo fond of this Verſion, as to make uſe of it to change the Word Canopicum, in a Paſſage of Pliny, into that of Ceramicum. It ſhould be read, ſays he, Naucratu, unde oſtium quidam Naucraticum nominant, quod alii Ceramicum, &c. (non Canopicum.) If there was any change to be made, it ſhould not have gins this Reign in the ſecond Year of the 27 Olympiad, excludes not the time that Pſammitichus reign'd with his Aſſociates.

(r) Lib. 15. pag. 675.

(s) Μέγα χάσμα ἀναχρονισμοῦ. Scalig. in Euſeb. Chron. pag. 74.

(t) Expugnata Inaro condiderunt Naucratim. Salmaſ. Exercit. in Solin. pag. 476.

(a) Lib. 6. c. 2.

(b) Helvicus begins and doubtleſs

(c) Lib. 11. pag. 480. (d) Not. in Athen. ad pag. 48..

* Euſeb. Stephanus Byzantin. Suidas alſo ſays it.

β Lib. 2. c. 179.

† Φιλέουσι δὲ πάντες ἐν τῇ Ναυκράτει ἐπαφρόδιτοι γίνεσθαι αἱ ἑταῖραι. Gaudent autem quodam modo in Naucrate proſtibula fieri gratioſa. Herod. l. 2. c. 135.

‡ Γνοὺς δὲ ἐπῄνεσας ἐκ τῆς καλλίστης διαφερούσας ἑταίρας ἡ γεγονυῖα καὶ ἡ Ναύκρατις. Celeres quoque meretrices & inſigni forma tulit Naucratis. Athen. lib. 13. c. 7. pag. 596.

γ Id. ib.

δ Herod. l. 2. c. 135.

ζ In the Article Lamia Remark Y.

η Athen. l. 15. c. 6. pag. 676.

θ Contra Celſum, l. 5. pag. m. 257.

κ Pag. 149, 150, 675.

λ Athen. p. 675.

μ Philoſtr. de Sophiſt. l. 2. Suidas.

ν Athen. p. 616.

ξ Suidas.

ο Heliodorus Athenienſis, apud Athenæum. l. 6. p. 229.

χ Suidas.

* Now Corfou.

† A'βανδ τοῦ ὄνου κ' ἐμοῦ. Immortalibus indole & forma ſimilis. Homer Odyſſ. lib. 6. v. 16.

† Ἦτοι ὁ μὲν ὣς ἀμφὶ πολύτλας δῖος Ὀδυσσεὺς, Αὐτοῦ πὰρ ποταμὸν ἐδήτυος ἔκλιν᾽ ἀπάνευθε. Atque ipse bibebat & edebat prudens divinus Ulyſſes, rapaciter; jampridem enim cibum non guſtaverat. Id. ibid. v. 249.

‡ Τῷ κέν τοι καὶ ἔπειτα θεῷ ὡς εὐχετοῶμεν αἰεὶ ἤματα πάντα. Sic enim tibi etiam illi, velut Deo vota faciam ſemper diebus omnibus. Odyſſ. 8. v. 467.

γ Spon's Voyage. Tom. 1. p. 99. Edit. of Holland. There is a Cut of it in Wheeler's Travels.

* Ariſtoteles de republ. Ithacenſi; & Hellanicus apud Euſtath. in Odyſſ. lib. 15. Dictys Cretenſis lib. 6. pag. m. 204.

† Mr. du Pin in his new Bibliotheque of Eccleſiaſtical Writers. Tom. 2. pag. 201. &c. Edit. of Holland, and Monſieur le Clerc in the beginning of the 18*th Tom. of the Univerſal Bibliotheque.*

a place, where the buſhy Branches of two Trees ſecured him from the Eyes of the Paſſengers; and he very quietly ſlept by the favour of Minerva, when the Cries of ſome Maids awak'd him. They were Nauſicaa, and her Maids, who were playing (A) at Tennis, waiting till the Linnen, they had waſh'd and hung out, was dried by the Sun. Ulyſſes firſt covered his obſcene Parts with Leaves, and then went to ſee what was the matter. The ſight of him put all thoſe poor Girls to flight, except Nauſicaa, who had, by Inſpiration, been adviſ'd by Mercury to wait the naked Man's coming, and hear what he had to ſay. Ulyſſes, fearing to diſpleaſe her if he embrac'd her Knees, made his Complement at a diſtance, telling her, that, perceiving her ſo beautiful, he could not gueſs whether ſhe were a Goddeſs, or a Woman; that her Father, Mother and Brothers were happy in her; but yet more happy would he be that ſhould eſpouſe her: And ſo, after a long Encomium, ſo well contriv'd, implor'd her Aſſiſtance chiefly in Relation to his Nakedneſs, praying the Gods to give her a Huſband, Children, and a Domeſtick Concord. Nauſicaa anſwered, as became her, calling back her Servants, and commanding them to give the Man both Meat and Drink, and to waſh his Body. Immediately they led him to the Bath, and brought him both Cloaths and Oil, bidding him to waſh himſelf in the River; but he deſired them to retire at a little diſtance, being aſhamed to appear naked before ſo many young Women: Hereupon they retir'd, and he began to waſh and rub himſelf. When he had done he put on the Cloaths that were brought him, and ſo return'd to Nauſicaa, who was ſo well pleas'd with him, that ſhe told her Servants ſhe ſhould be glad of ſuch a Man for her Husband. After he had eaten with all the † Precipitation that a famiſh'd Perſon, who had faſted a long while, could do, ſhe told him he muſt go with her Servants to a certain Cave near the City, and wait there till ſhe ſhould have entered her Father's Palace with all her Attendants. She gave him her Reaſons for this, very frankly; and which were, that ſhe would give no occaſion of babbling to any Slanderers, of whom that City was full, and who would not fail to ſay, in caſe they ſaw her go into that Cave with her Servants, that ſhe went thither in queſt of a Husband; upon which they would make ſo many malicious Reflections, as ſhe her ſelf ſhould be apt to do on another, that before Marriage, and without the Conſent of either Father or Mother, ſhould lie with a Man. Ulyſſes, in obedience to theſe Remonſtrances, went to the place appointed him; whence he was afterwards inviſibly conducted by Minerva (B) to Alcinous, who receiv'd him very kindly. He there again ſaw Nauſicaa ‡, who deſir'd him to remember when he ſhould be return'd home, how ſhe had ſav'd his Life. He anſwer'd, he would every Day pay his Vows to her as to a Goddeſs. I will ſhow hereafter how I came to enlarge (C) upon this Epiſode of Homer. There is in the Muſæum of the Sieur γ Nigri at Bologna, an exceeding rare Medal of this Heroine.

There are ſome grave * Authors that affirm Telemachus, Son of Ulyſſes, was married to our Nauſicaa, and that he had a Son by her, whom ſome name Perſeptolis, and others Ptoliportus.

NAUSITHOUS, King of the Phæaces: See the Article ALCINOUS.

NAZIANZEN (GREGORY) one of the moſt famous Fathers of the Church, in the IVth Century. I could make a very long Article of him; but as then I muſt repeat what many † great Authors have ſaid before me, whoſe Works are in every Body's Hands, and ſtill retain the Grace of Novelty, I ſhall be very ſhort. He that cenſur'd Gregory (A) Nazianzen for writing againſt the Emperor Julian, has committed been (e) Canopicum but Heracleoticum, which ſhould be chang'd into Ceramicum. But, as Salmaſius (f) well obſerves, Athenæus do's not ſay, that the Arm of the Nile, upon which Naucratis was built, was called Ceramick; I'll ſay, by the bye, that there was in Athens a fine Street (g) called Ceramick, and a Suburb of the ſame Name; and the Street ſtill goes by its antient Name, which it had from a Hero call'd Ceramus, the Son of Bacchus and Ariadne: But the Subburb was called ſo from a great Pottery there. It was in the way to the Academy. As concerning the Nitre of Naucratis, I will content my ſelf with citing Pliny (h).

(A) Who were playing at Tennis.] You ſee that Homer is contented to ſay, that Nauſicaa diverted her ſelf with her Attendants, at this Play: But Amagallis (i) a Grammarian Woman has made her the Inventor of it. 'Tis true, that Athenæus (k) contradicts her; and ſuppoſes, that being of Corcyra, ſhe was willing to do a Favour to Nauſicaa her Countrey-woman.' Tis true alſo, that it ſeems to be rather the Invention of a Dance, than of Tennis, that is aſcrib'd to her: But theſe Things lie too deep concealed in the obſcurity of Antient Times.

(B) By Minerva to Alcinous.] This is what neither Charles Stephens, Mr. Lloyd, nor Mr. Hoffman have taken notice of; for they all make Nauſicaa Introduce's of Ulyſſes to Alcinous. There has been more care taken in Calepin; for inſtead of ſaying with others In Regnum patris ſui eum perduxit, it is there ſaid, In Regiam Patris ſui ire juſſit. The two Verſes of Martial which are quoted,

Si mihi Nauſicae patrios concederet hortos,
Alcinoo poſſem dicere malo meos, are not in the ſecond Book, as has been affirm'd; but in the 31 Epigram of the twelfth Book, where Martial commends the Gardens of his Wife. I have reproved an Errour (a) in another place much more groſs.

(C) Why I have enlarged upon this Epiſode.] It was to make every one ſenſible, by touches that are within every Man's Capacity, of Homer's Simplicity, and the Difference there is between the Character of his Age, and this of ours.

(A) He that cenſur'd Gregory Nazianzen for Writing againſt the Emperor Julian, has committed a great Error in Chronology.] It was Cunæus Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Leiden, that committed this Error. Theſe are his Words: (b) Fuit profectò, fuit Græcorum quorundam, qui eâ tempeſtate Eccleſiam rexere, magna imprudentia. Etenim, uti cauſæ ſuæ ſervirent, principem Chriſtianis infeſtum laceſſebant, quem tolerare ſatius fuiſſet. Sunt in hominum manibus Orationes eorum, in quibus, tanquam in ſcena, palam eum omnibus ludibrium fecere, & faciem illius, formamque corporis, atque geſtus, tum alia fortuita, quæ vulgus & imperitiſſimus quiſque notat, traxerunt in culpam. Qui viri, ſi meminiſſent temporum, quibus nati erant, ſanè neceſſitati, quæ pertinax regnum tenet, ſine contumacia paruiſſent, & quod magnæ prudentiæ eſt, obſequio mitigaſſent imperia. This was reproved in a Book that appear'd in 1690. Wherein it is ſaid, that a celebrated Profeſſor is guilty of (c) falſifying Hiſtory, by accuſing of (a) In the Remark C of the Article Alcinous.

(b) Cunæus, Prefat. in Juliani Cæſares. p. m. 119.

(c) An Important Advice to the Refugees.

m. 212, 258. (h) Nitrariæ Ægypti circa Naucratim & Memphim tantum ſolebant eſſe, circa Memphim deteriores. Plin. l. 31. c. 10. (i) Suidas in Ἀμαγαλλὶς & in Ὀργὰ Cas. (k) Athen. lib. 1. c. 11.

mitted a great Error in Chronology. Some over-nice Criticks have pretended that he has corrupted the Purity of the Greek Tongue, (B) and given way to the Barbarisms of the Latin Divines. They also complain his Greek Verses were substituted for the Instruction of Youth, in the Room of the Pagan Poesy, which was burnt (C) at the Instigation of the Priests.

NEPHES OGLI. This Name among the Turks signifies, The Son of the Holy Spirit, and has been given to certain Persons, born after an extraordinary manner; I mean of a Virgin-Mother. There are, tis said, a sort of Turkish Women, which live in such Retirement, that they never see a Man. They go very rarely to the Mosques; and when they do, they tarry there from nine a Clock at Night till Mid-night, and join to their Prayers such Contorsions of Body, and so many Howlings, that, by thus weakening themselves, it oftentimes happens they fall down on the Ground in a Swoon. If they find themselves with Child from that time, they give out they are so by the Grace of the Holy Spirit, and thence the Children, they bring forth, come to be call'd Nephes Ogli ‡. They are look'd upon as a sort of People that have (Z) the Gift of Miracles.

‡ Georgievitz cap. 1. Id mihi narratum est, says he, rediisse à quis earum, nam nec ipse vidi, nec alterius visionem coram eadem hujusmodi spectaculo interesse potest.

NESTORIUS, Bishop of Constantinople, was depos'd as a Heretick, by the Council of Ephesus, in the Year 431. The Reason of this was, that he maintain'd that the Holy Virgin ought not to be call'd, The Mother of God. There are some People, who maintain, that the Sense in which (A) he rejected this Epithet was reasonable and

" of a very great Imprudence those Prelates, of whom " we have yet the Invectives against Julian. They " had better, says he, have complied with the Neces- " sity of the Times, by an humble Submission, and " born with the severe Humour of that Prince against " the Christians, than to have exasperated him yet " more by their Writings. Now is not this to suppose " that St. Gregory Nazianzen, and St. Cyril, the only " two that Cuneus could speak of, published their " Invectives during the Life of that Emperor; which " nevertheless is an apparent Falsity; for St Gregory " did not write his till after the Death of Julian, and " St. Cyril did not live till a considerable time after the " Decease of that Prince: Where was then the great " Imprudence of these two Prelates?" Father Petau in his Epistle Dedicatory to his Edition of the Works of Julian, is very angry with this Cuneus, reproaching him, among other things, with the Error in Chronology before-mentioned. See what he says, after having copy'd the Latin Words of Cuneus: Hæc ille non solum imprudenter talibus de viris, sed etiam imperite. Verum Græci illi Patres, quos imprudentiæ arguit: quorumque contra Julianum extare orationes asserit, sunt omnino duo. Gregorius Nazianzenus; & Cyrillus, quorum alter haud paucis post Juliani obitum annis vixit, ac scripsit, alter æqualis quidem fuit illius. Sed eo modo συγχρονικῶς illos duos conscripsit, ex quibus, cæteroquin tale dignioribus liquet; fuisse Imperatorem istum multos, veri pene vitæ præditum, &c. 'Tis possible Cuneus might have reply'd to the other Sarcastick Complaints of Father Petau; but he must be contented to undergo Condemnation in regard of this.

(B) He has corrupted the Purity of the Greek Tongue, and given way to the Barbarisms of the Latin Divines.] I have read this Complaint in a Work of Alcyonius. You will find there a fine Encomium upon St. Gregory; but which concludes with these Words:

(d) Petrus Alcyonius in Medice legato prior fol. c. iij verso. (d) Utinam irruptionem Græcæ linguæ integritatem fuisset in tanta rerum silva & tam magna librorum vi, certe sanctissimum illum pontificem omni laude cumulatum judicem.... evellius maxime scriptis barbariem inrepsisse in Theologiam Latinorum doctorum. Nam veteres nostri interpretes mediocris literaturæ, nullius fere judicii homines, cum animadverterent Theologum hunc frequentes usurpare voces quasdam novas eoque non satis apte fictas, se esse sibi esse crediderunt illas Latine reddere, atque hunc in modum sordida barbaries Latinæ infusecata. 'Tis the Cardinal John de Medicis, who speaks here.

(C) In the Room of the Pagan Poesy, burnt at the Instigation of the Priests.] Let us continue to hear the same John de Medicis

(a) Id. ib. (a) Audiebam etiam puer ex Demetrio Chalcondyla Græcarum rerum peritissimo, pueros Græcos tanta fuisse audacia apud Cæsares Byzantios, ut integros illorum patres complura de veteribus Græcis poemata combusserint in pompæque ea ubi amores, lupes ejus, & reparatæ amantum contumeliæ, atque ita Menandri, Diphili, Apollodori, Philemonis, Alexis fabellas, & Sophas, Eurips, Æschylis, Mimnermi, Homeri, Simonidis, Alcæi carmina interciderint. Eum pro eis substituta Nazianzeni nulla poemata, quæ etsi caruerint animis veterum hominum illa flagrantissimi veluti ingenii cultum, non tamen verborum atticorum proprietatem & græcæ linguæ elegantiam edicent. Tum pater quidem Sacerdotes ista in veteres Græcos in ferula fuerunt sed integritatis, probitatis, & religionis maximam dederint testimonium.

(Z) Who have the Gift of Miracles.] A Monk, who liv'd a long while in Turkey, assures us, that, as it was said, there was always two or three of these Nephes Ogli's in the City of (b) Brulezia, whose Hair, and Pieces of their Habits, cur'd all sorts of Maladies. Dicuntur tales, adds he, (c) prodigiose nasci, id est sine virili semine, & per consequens tota eorum vita & actio supernaturalis & mirabilis credenda est.

(A) That the Sense in which he rejected this Epithet was.... Orthodox.] See after what manner Nestorius lays down his Sentiments in a Letter he wrote to Celestin Bishop of Rome: He says " (d) that having met with " some Persons at Constantinople that corrupted the " Orthodox Faith, he endeavour'd to reclaim them " by ways of Lenity, although their Heresy came very " near those of Arius and Apollinaris, because they made " the Union of the two Natures of JESUS CHRIST " to degenerate into Confusion and Commixtion, ma- " king the Divine Nature to be born of Mary, and the " Body of CHRIST to be chang'd into his Deity: " That upon this Foundation they gave the Virgin-Mo- " ther of CHRIST the Quality of Mother of God; " that this Term, although most improper, might " be born with on account of the Union of the Word " with the Flesh, did not one understand it of the " Deity, and suppose that the Virgin is the Mother of " the Word of God, which is not to be maintain'd." In another (e) Letter he commends St. Cyril for distinguishing between the two Natures in JESUS CHRIST; but he accuses him afterwards of destroying this Truth, by rendering the Deity passible and mortal. He confesses the two Natures are united, but denies, that, by reason of that Union, the Qualities that belong only to one of the two, can be attributed to the other, and says also, that as often as the Holy Scripture speaks of the Passion and Death of JESUS CHRIST, the Human Nature is meant, and not the Divine. St. Cyril acknowledges (f), that Nestorius owns the Word was incarnate, and has been in the Womb of the Virgin together with the Man who was born of Mary; but he says, this Man is not naturally God; and that it was he only that died and rose again. We own, says St Cyril (g), the Word of God to be Immortal, and Life it self; but we believe at the same time he became Flesh, and that being united with the animated Body, he has suffer'd in that Body as is said in the Scripture: And, because his Body has suffer'd, we say he has suffer'd likewise, although he be of an impassible Nature; and because his Body was glorified, we say he was risen again also. But Nestorius is not of this Opinion; for he says 'tis as the Man that rose again, and that 'tis the Body of the Man that is proposed to us in the Holy Mysteries: We believe, on the contrary, 'tis the Flesh and Blood of the Word that enlivens all Things.

(b) It was undoubtedly the City of Prusa in Bithynia, the first Residence which the Ottoman Empire had.

(c) Septemcastrensis de moribus Turcorum, pag. 47. apud Hottinger. Histor. Orient. pag. 295.

(d) Du Pin's Bibliotheque of Ecclesiastical Authors. Tom. 3. part 2. pag. 287. Edit. of Holland.

(e) This was the second Answer he gave St. Cyril. See Du Pin ib.

(f) Du Pin ibid. pag. 285.

(g) Du Pin ibid.

Now 'tis easy to comprehend there was only a dispute of Words between them; for St. Cyril did not pretend that the Word, as Word, had suffer'd Death, for he acknowledg'd the Word was of an impassible Nature; but he meant only that inasmuch as a humane Body, united to the Word, died and rose again, it might be said the Word died and rose again. The Contest was then only about a Term of Phrase; the Dispute did not run upon the Thing it self. Nestorius and St. Cyril agreed, that the Word, as Word, was not born of the Lady of Mercy, and could not die on the Cross; but that he was united with the Flesh, formed in the Womb of the Holy Virgin, and which had been created. They disputed then only whether, by reason of this Doctrine, they could use certain Phrases. Nestorius would not consent to it, because he fear'd the Consequences

and Orthodox; and that therefore this pretended Hereſiarch was condemn'd moſt unjuſtly. At leaſt it ought to be owned, that the Proceedings of St. Cyril his Adverſary, were altogether irregular. Never was a Judgment (B) more precipitate nor more to be ſuſpected of Paſſion, than that given againſt our Neſtorius by the Council of Epheſus. Nevertheleſs St.

(b) Might they not ſay that, according to the Chriſtians, God has a Father and a Mother, a Grand-father and a Grand-mother, a great Grand-father and a great Grand-mother, and ſo go through all the Degrees of Parentage both Lineal and Collateral? and then ſay with Cicero, Si (Saturnus) eſt Deus, patrem quoque ejus, Cælum, eſſe Deum contitendum eſt. Quod ſi ita eſt, Cæli quoque parentes Dii habendi ſunt, Æther, & Dies, eorumque fratres, & ſorores, qui à genealogis antiquis ſic nominantur, Amor, Dolus, &c. De natura Deor. l. 3. p. m. 625.

(i) This is a Figure by which the Name of the Whole is given to the Part, or the Name of the Part to the Whole; that of the Genus to the Species, or that of the Species to the Genus, &c.

(k) Neſtorius might have ſaid that the Councils never made uſe of the Term Mother of God, yet that Term was in uſe, ſo that the People of Conſtantinople, being accuſtom'd to hear it, were extremely diſpleas'd when the Neſtorians affirm'd it ought not to be made uſe of. See du Pin, ubi ſupra, pag. 61. (b) 'Tis the 12*th Letter of the firſt Part.* (c) In the Remark L. (d) See the Remark H.

ſequences of ſuch Expreſſions; and St. Cyril would have it ſo, becauſe he apprehended the Conſequences of rejecting thoſe Phraſes: So that, to judge charitably, they were both truly Orthodox, and animated with a good Zeal; but they had the Misfortune to explain themſelves ill, and not to underſtand one another. Now one that had been accuſtom'd to give Things an ill Conſtruction, would perhaps ſay, they did underſtand each other very well, but that finding themſelves once in the career, like two famous Champions they would not own their Conteſt was grounded on a Trifle. They did like thoſe brave Duelliſts, who, for fear of being ſuſpected of Cowardice, will not own that they have not offended, or that they have not been offended. By giving ſatisfaction they might confeſs a ſort of Deſire not to draw, and they might teſtify the ſame deſire by acquieſcing in the Satisfaction. However it be, the whole Doctrine of the Hypoſtatick Union, may be retain'd, and the Title of Mother of God, be nevertheleſs rejected, as well becauſe it may furniſh Infidels with an occaſion of (b) Drolling, as the Primitive Chriſtians, though with greater Reaſon, did upon Cybele, as, becauſe in a rigorous Senſe, it is not true, that the Holy Virgin is the Mother of God. It is poſſible for an Angel to be united with a Humane Body, at the Time of Conception, in ſuch a manner that that Angel and that Humane Body, may make a Man juſt as the Body and Soul of Adam made one. The Woman, that ſhould conceive and nouriſh this Body, to which this Angel was united, would be the Mother of the Perſon that proceeds from this Hypoſtatick Union; but ſhe would not be the Mother of the Angel. We cannot ſay Eve was the Mother of the Soul of Abel, though ſhe was the Mother of his Body. Let us ſay the ſame of the Holy Virgin: She was the Mother of JESUS CHRIST, but not of the Word; which, by uniting with the Body, formed a Whole, which was called JESUS CHRIST. To ſay that the Holy Virgin may be term'd the Mother of JESUS CHRIST, but not of God, is not therefore an Argument that one rejects the Hypoſtatick Union, but only that one prefers the exact Language of the Philoſophers to that of the Vulgar, and to (i) the Synecdoches of Rhetoricians. I am of Opinion nevertheleſs, that Neſtorius was blamable for oppoſing the Torrent: He ought to have contented himſelf to make his Adverſaries explain what they underſtood by the Mother of God (a). St. Cyril on his part was alſo blamable for not making Neſtorius explain what he meant by the Mother of CHRIST. They might have ſav'd the Church from a great many Troubles, if they would have underſtood each other. The Buſineſs was only to give reciprocally a right Definition of Words. I here call to mind (b) a Chapter in the Art of Thinking, where it is ſhown, that a thouſand Diſputes would ceaſe, did but the Diſputants take upon themſelves the trouble of explaining what they meant by the Terms they employ. As for the reſt, it ſeems to me that the Abuſes, in reſpect to the Adoration of the Holy Virgin, were equally to be fear'd, whether ſhe was call'd the Mother of JESUS CHRIST, or the Mother of God: For, doubtleſs, the moſt extravagant Votaries did never believe that the Word, as ſuch, received from the Holy Virgin its Life and Subſiſtence, in like manner as Children receive them from their Mother. And it is certain, that by urging the Conſequences of the Title of Mother of JESUS CHRIST, as much as thoſe of Mother of God have been urg'd, one might as eaſily have introduced the Worſhip of the Holy Virgin, and the O Felix Puerpera noſtra prans ſcelera, Jure Matris Impera Redemptori. I ſhall ſpeak of this hereafter (c). This refutes thoſe that find in the Conduct of Neſtorius (d) ſome thing that was capable of preventing Idolatry. What follows may perſwade us that at the bottom, his Opinion was Orthodox; which is, that he offered (e) to call the Virgin Mary the Mother of God, provided the Error of Apollinaris maintain'd by St. Cyril, was condemned.

(B) Never was a Judgment more precipitate, or more ſuſpected of Paſſion.] But one Seſſion was employ'd in citing Neſtorius, examining his Writings with thoſe of St. Cyril, hearing Witneſſes, and depoſing him. He that preſided at this Aſſembly was St. Cyril, Neſtorius's Adverſary. He made the Council begin to act, without waiting for the Oriental Biſhops, or the Pope's Legates, (f) and notwithſtanding the oppoſition of ſixty eight Biſhops, who demanded that the Arrival of John of Antioch, and of the Eaſtern and Weſtern Biſhops ſhould be ſtaid for. Candidian, the Emperor's Commiſſioner, had alſo demanded (g) that the arrival of the Oriental Biſhops might be waited for, alledging, that the Emperor his Maſter's Intent was, that a General Council ſhould be held, and not a particular and factious Aſſembly: But as his Remonſtrances were taken little notice of, he retir'd, and proteſted againſt the Council. St. Cyril having over-rul'd all theſe Proteſtations and Remonſtrances, open'd the Council, and in the firſt Seſſion condemn'd and depos'd his Antagoniſt, altho' he had promis'd to appear as ſoon as all the Biſhops ſhould be arriv'd. All this ſhows, that the Emperor did not write to St. Cyril (h), that he look'd upon him as the Author of all this Diſturbance, without a Cauſe. It was not without reaſon that he reproach'd him with diſturbing the Church, with having a Mind to divide the Imperial Family, by writing ſeparately to the Empreſſes; and in a word, with meddling with what he had nothing to do, and acting with too much Authority and without Prudence.

Let us make uſe of Monſieur du Pin's Words to ſet forth the Irregularities of St. Cyril more at large. (i) There are many Objections made againſt this Council, and the Conduct obſerv'd in it. They ſay, it cannot paſs for any thing but a tumultuous and raſh Aſſembly, where nothing reign'd but Faction and Paſſion, and that it cannot be term'd an Oecumenical Council. Alſo that St. Cyril held it in ſpight of the Commiſſioners the Emperor ſent to convene it; That not only Neſtorius, and thoſe of his Party, but many other Catholick Biſhops likewiſe oppoſed it; That he reſolved not to wait for the Oriental Biſhops, though they were juſt upon their Arrival, and had requir'd that he ſhould ſtay for them; That he did not in like manner wait for the coming of the Pope's Legats, and the Biſhops of the Weſt; That this Synod was only compoſed of ſome Egyptian Biſhops, and others of Aſia, all intirely devoted to his Will; That he alone did all, and govern'd all in that Council. As he refus'd Neſtorius for his Judge, becauſe he look'd upon him as his Enemy, had not Neſtorius the ſame Reaſon to refuſe him? The manner with which he acted againſt Neſtorius, and the raſhneſs he condemn'd him with, ſeems to make it plain, that nothing but Paſſion did animate him. He cited Neſtorius twice in one Day: Neſtorius anſwer'd, he was ready to come, as ſoon as the Biſhops of the Eaſt and Weſt ſhould arrive, and the Council was full, for he did not refuſe to be judged, but did not care to be ſo by his Enemies only: Theſe Excuſes ſeem reaſonable. St. Chryſoſtom alledged no other to avoid his Appearance at the Synod of Theophilus. Nevertheleſs St. Cyril, in imitation of his Uncle and Predeceſſor Theophilus, received the Acculation, commenc'd the Proceſs, deliver'd his Opinion againſt his Enemy firſt, and at length condemn'd him. This is what Iſidorus of Damiata reproach'd St. Cyril with; letting him know " there were many that "laugh'd both at him and the Tragedy he play'd at E-" pheſus; That it was publickly ſaid he ſought only to " revenge himſelf upon his Enemy; That he herein imi-" tated his Uncle Theophilus; and that, although " there were a great difference between the Parties ac-" cus'd, yet the Conduct of the Accuſers was the ſame; " That he would have done better to have ſate down " quietly, and not to have reveng'd himſelf for particular " Offences, at the Expence of the Church in general, and " not to have ſow'd an eternal Diſcord amongſt its Mem-" bers under a falſe Pretence of Piety." Theſe are the very Words of Iſidorus of Damiata, which he ſpake to him as a Friend. Gennadius Biſhop of Conſtantinople, compares likewiſe the Conduct of St. Cyril with that of Theophilus, calling him the ſecond Scourge of Alexandria. The manner after which this Affair of Neſtorius was determin'd (e) In a Letter he wrote to the Emperor, during the holding of the Council of Epheſus. See du Pin pag. 297.

Neſtorius was now depoſed by the Biſhops, who adher'd to St. Cyril; but the latter was in like manner depoſ'd by thoſe that adher'd to John of Antioch.

(f) Du Pin, ubi ſupra. pag. 293. He quotes Collect. of Lupus. Cap. 7.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 292. He quotes 1. p. Act. Council. c. 31.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 320, & 321.

St. Cyril, who preſided there, and was the Soul of that tumultuous Aſſembly, has preſerved his Rank (C) and Dignity ever ſince, and throughout all ſucceeding Ages, has been venerated as a Saint; whereas Neſtorius ſpent miſerably the remainder of his Days, and his Memory ſtill continues Odious: Nay, ſome have not ſcrupled to ſay, that his Death (D) was occaſion'd by the Divine Curſe and Malediction. His Sect multiplied exceedingly, and ſubſiſts ſtill; which ſome have attributed with great probabi*termin'd, ſeems to prove plainly it was Paſſion only that influenc'd St.* Cyril and the Biſhops of his Party; that they were reſolv'd, at what rate ſoever, to condemn him, and that they apprehended nothing ſo much as the Arrival of the Oriental Biſhops, for fear of not having then a full Power of doing what they pleas'd; for in the very firſt Seſſion they cited Neſtorius twice, read the Depoſitions of the Fathers, the Letters of St. Cyril, with his twelve Chapters, and the Writings of Neſtorius, and gave all their Opinions. Nothing was ever determined with ſo great Precipitation, ſince the leaſt of theſe Matters requir'd a Seſſion a-part. How could then the twelve Propoſitions of St. Cyril be examin'd in ſo ſhort a time, which needed ſo many Explanations, and which have cauſed ſo many Diſputes? How could ſo many Paſſages out of the Sermons of Neſtorius be compar'd with thoſe that preceded, and ſuch as follow'd, to find out the true Senſe? How could any one inform himſelf in ſo ſhort a time of the Opinions of the antient Fathers? All theſe Matters required a long and ſedate Examination of many Days; whereas the Biſhops of this Council ſo dreaded the not finiſhing their Matters in this one Seſſion, that they ſhut themſelves up from Morning till Night to judge of that Affair for fear, if they ſhould delay till next Morning, Things might be otherwiſe diſpos'd. The Sentence they notified to Neſtorius, ſufficiently ſhows they were wholly animated by Paſſion: it was expreſs'd in theſe Words, To Neſtorius the new Judas. Was it not enough to condemn and depoſe him, but they muſt alſo injuſt over him with injurious Words? In a word; this Council, very far from procuring Peace, procur'd nothing but Diſturbance, Diviſions, and Scandal to the Church of Chriſt; and there never was any of which it might more truly be ſaid, what St. Gregory Nazianzen ſaid of the Councils of his Time; 'That 'he had never known any Aſſemblies of Biſhops bring 'any thing to a happy Concluſion; (k) That they had 'always rather encreaſed the Malady, than heal'd it; 'That the obſtinate Heats, and Deſire of Conqueſt and 'Dominion, which commonly reign'd amongſt them, ren'der'd them prejudicable; and that for the moſt part 'thoſe that pretended to judge others, did it rather thro' 'ill will, than out of any Inclination they had to 'mend them.' This ſeems to agree more with the Council of Epheſus, than with any other Aſſembly of Biſhops. The Hiſtory of the Troubles that follow'd this Council makes this plain, and it may be ſaid that theſe Troubles were not appeas'd, but when People began to leave off Talking of what was done at this Council. Monſieur du Pin has forgot nothing in order to anſwer theſe Objections; but the Subject was ſo little favourable to him, that it may well be ſaid his Anſwers are extreamly weak.

(k) Compare with this what has been ſaid of the Aſſemblies of the States-General of France in the Remark B. of the Article Marillac.

Why have not we a Hiſtory of this Council, written by a Father Paul? And what might not be obſerved in an Hiſtorical Comment on the Words of St. Gregory Nazianzen? For it ought not to be imagin'd, that becauſe in other Councils, there has not been ſo great a Precipitation as was that of St. Cyril, at the Council of Epheſus; there has been leſs Paſſion or Cabalting. 'Tis highly neceſſary the Holy Ghoſt ſhou'd preſide in theſe Aſſemblies, otherwiſe there can be no good expected from them. This extraordinary Aſſiſtance ought to perſwade us firmly that the Holy Ghoſt has done his Work, amidſt the Irregularities of Men, and drawn from the Darkneſs of Paſſions the Light of Truth, not in all the Councils, but in ſome only.

(C) Preſerved his Rank and Dignity.] We have ſeen in the foregoing Remark, that he did not wait for the Arrival of the Oriental Biſhops, before he open'd the Council. They arriv'd five Days after the Depoſing of Neſtorius, and held a Council, where John of Antioch preſided, and St. Cyril was depoſed. Each Party deputed ſome Perſons to the Emperor, to give him an Account of what had paſs'd. The Oriental Biſhops ſent him a Relation, wherein (a) they complain'd that the Church of St. John had been ſhut upon them; inſomuch that they were forc'd to ſay their Prayers without Doors, and in coming back were ill-treated. They beſeech'd the Emperor to baniſh from Epheſus St. Cyril and Memnon, the Heads of that Perſecution. A little after they diſpatch'd alſo Count Irenæus on the ſame Errand; to whom they gave another Relation againſt St. Cyril, pretending they had been hinder'd by Stones thrown at them from entering the Church of St. Paul. St. Cyril's Party deputed three Biſhops to the Emperor; whereas the Orientals contented themſelves with deputing only Count Irenæus, (b) who play'd his part ſo well, that he perſwaded the Emperor, that the Synod held by St. Cyril, ought not to be eſteemed a lawful Council, and had almoſt prevail'd upon him to confirm the Proceedings of the Oriental Biſhops, and to baniſh St. Cyril. But John, the Emperor's Phyſician, and St. Cyril's Friend, intervening, ſoon gave a change to the Face of Things, by gaining the greateſt part of the Miniſters; whereof ſome were of Opinion, that what had been done on both ſides was lawful; others ſaid, all ought to be declar'd void, and that diſintereſted Biſhops ſhould be conven'd to examine the Cauſe of Faith, and what had paſſed at Epheſus. In this Confuſion Theodoſius was of Opinion to approve the depoſing of Neſtorius, St. Cyril and Memnon, on account of their Factions.... And ſent Count John to execute that Order and to re-unite all the Biſhops in one Synod, after having expell'd Neſtorius, St. Cyril and Memnon. The Party (c) of John of Antioch, acquieſced in the Emperor's Pleaſure; but the other Party oppos'd it in ſuch a manner, that Count John was obliged to commit Neſtorius to the Cuſtody of Count Candidian, and St. Cyril to that of Count James, and to write to the Emperor, (d) that he found the Minds of the Biſhops ſo exaſperated againſt each other, that he ſaw no way to reconcile them. The Emperor ordered, that each Party ſhould ſend him Deputies; to whom (e) he gave Audience at Chalcedon, and ſeem'd very favourable to the Oriental Biſhops; nevertheleſs he began (f) by little and little to be againſt them: His Council had been gain'd. Acacius of Beroea, in a Letter to be found in the Collection of Lupus, chap. 41. accuſes St. Cyril of having chang'd the Sentiments of the Court, by giving Money to a certain Scholaſtick Eunuch. He ſays alſo that this Eunuch dying, and leaving a great deal of Money, the Emperor found a Note in his Cuſtody, that imported he had received ſeventy Pounds of Gold from St. Cyril, which had been paid him by Paul, that Saint's Nephew. Monſieur du Pin obſerves, that there is no reaſon to believe what Acacius of Beroea ſays, ſince he was none of St. Cyril's Friends. Let it be ſo; But what better reaſon can one give of that ſudden Change of the Emperor? He acknowledg'd for (g) Orthodox the Biſhops of both Parties, and nevertheleſs he pronounces, that (h) Neſtorius (i) had been juſtly condemn'd; that St. Cyril and Memnon ſhould keep their Poſts, and that all the other Biſhops ſhould return in like manner to their Dioceſes: He pronounces, I ſay, all this after he had ſhown himſelf favourable to the Oriental Biſhops that had ſubmitted to his Orders; whereas the Party of St. Cyril had altogether refuſ'd to ſubmit to him. This Proceeding ſmelt rank of Money given by St. Cyril to the Emperor's Miniſters; and thus in ſome Caſe ſome Perſons have been reputed Orthodox or Heretical, as they had Money or none to give.

(a) Du Pin, ubi ſupra. pag. 297.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 301.

(c) Ibid. pag. 302

(d) Ibid.

(e) Ibid. pag. 303.

(f) Ibid. pag. 304.

(g) Ibid. p. 5.

(h) Ibid.

(i) He had already received an Order to retire to his Monaſtery. Ibid. pag. 303.

(D) His Death was occaſion'd by the Divine Curſe or Malediction.] 'It) After the definitive Sentence of the 'Council, Neſtorius durſt not return any more to Conſtantinople; wherefore he retired to his old Monaſtery 'at Antioch, whence he was forced four Years after 'in 435, by the Emperor's Orders, and baniſhed to 'Oaſis. But the Barbarians having taken and deſtroyed that City he was obliged to retire to Panopolis in Thebais; where likewiſe he was not left long 'at quiet, but being ſo often removed from place to 'place, he at length died in a Journey by the Fall of 'a Wall. Evagrius, who relates theſe Paſſages, taken out of Neſtorius's own Letter, written during his Exile, ſays, he had found in a certain Author, that, 'before Neſtorius died, his Tongue was eaten by 'Worms, as a Puniſhment for the Blaſphemies he had 'uttered. But he does not inſiſt upon that Circumſtance, 'which might very well be the Invention of this A'nonymous Author; ſince it has always been the Cuſ'tom to ſuppoſe, that Hereticks come to a Tragical 'End.

(k) Ibid. p. 52.

bability, to the Kindneſs the Mahometan (E) Princes have had for them. Some ſay that other Infidel Princes had already taken them under their Protection to ſpite (F) the Orthodox. Something ſingular has happen'd in the Low Countries ſince the * Year

(E) To the kindneſs the Mahometan Princes have had for them.] I have ſaid ſomewhere (l) that they have always had more Humanity for other Religions, than the Chriſtians, and I have added, that the different Communions in the Greek Church, which have preſerved themſelves under their Empire, would have ſoon been extirpated, if they had lived under Chriſtian Kings, that were not of the ſame Belief. I ſhould have quoted then a certain Father of the Oratory, who is of the ſame Opinion, but not having then his Book in my poſſeſſion, I referr'd ſpeaking of it to another place; and here I have a very natural occaſion for it. ' (m) It will be concluded alſo from ' thence with the ſame evidence, how neceſſary the Im- ' perial Laws were for the preſervation of the Church, ' ſince Egypt, and the Neighbouring Provinces, have ' been ſo over-run and ſubjugated by the Eutychians, ' that they have never ſince been well recon- ' cil'd, and re-united to the Catholick Church.... ' (n) If the Emperors had not ſupported the Faith ' againſt the Eutychians, the whole World would have ' been over-run by them. They ſpread themſelves ' very much over the Provinces of Africa and ' Æthiopia, and the Countries moſt remote from ' the Eaſt, becauſe the Emperors were no long- ' er Maſters of them, or had never been ſo. ' I might ſay the ſame thing of the Neſtorians: As ſoon ' as they had been fulminated by the firſt Council of ' Epheſus, the Emperor Theodoſius the younger, made ' very near the ſame Edicts againſt them. They were ' exil'd with Neſtorius into frightful Solitudes; never- ' theleſs they multiply'd prodigiouſly towards the ' Eaſt and the North, the Emperors not being able to ' purſue them beyond the Limits of their Empire. ' The Saracens or Mahometans a little after over-ran ' Africa and all Aſia, ſeizing upon I know not how ' many Provinces of the Roman Empire; and through ' the Favour of the Mahometan Princes, all theſe He- ' reticks gave an incredible Extent to their Sects. ' God preſerved only the Catholick Faith in the Ro- ' man Empire; which was done merely by the ' Care and Edicts of the Chriſtian Emperors. With- ' out this Aſſiſtance from Heaven, the Eutychians, ' Neſtorians and Arians, not to mention ſo many other ' antient Sects, would doubtleſs have poſſeſs'd them- ' ſelves of great Part of the Provinces of the Roman ' Empire, as they were already in poſſeſſion of thoſe ' that did not belong to it; and the Followers of all ' the new Sects, that have ſprung up only within theſe ' hundred Years, could not have been able to find ' a Church, which they might be born in, and ' afterwards ſeparate from. They muſt have come ' into the World among the Arians, Neſtorians, or ' Eutychians, and would have been infected with the ' ſame Errors from their Birth. They would have ta- ' ken the Word for a meer Creature, as the Arians ' did; JESUS CHRIST for a mere Man, with the ' Neſtorians; and for them, as well as for the Euty- ' chians, JESUS CHRIST would be God, but ' he would not be truly Man. Why do they ' then quarrel with the Chriſtian Emperors, or ' Kings, and their ſevere Laws, for the Antient Re- ' ligion, ſince it is by their Aſſiſtance only that the ' Divine Providence has delivered them from all theſe ' Errors? They ought rather to give Thanks to him ' who has not permitted that they ſhould be ſo far diſ- ' join'd from us, as the antient Deſerters of the Ca- ' tholick Church are, who departed from it above a ' Thouſand Years ago, and are not yet altogether re- ' covered from their Errors.... (o) We muſt not con- ' ceal the Cauſe of the long Delay of the Eaſtern Sects ' to return to the Catholick Church: It is becauſe, as ' we have already ſaid, they are ſo diſpers'd in Pro- ' vinces and Kingdoms, that now belong no more to ' the Chriſtian Empire; but to Arabian Princes, ' to the Kings of Perſia, the Moguls, and the ' Tartars. The Catholick Biſhops, whether Greeks or ' Syrians, but chiefly the Miſſionaries from the Holy ' See, have all along made ſome Converts, and ſome ' Progreſſes among them; but all theſe Efforts having ' been but little ſupported, either by the Power or Fa- ' vour of Temporal Princes, they have ſpread but lit- ' tle, and laſted not long."

When I ſaid the Mahometans had been leſs rigorous to the Chriſtians, than theſe to the Hereticks, I had the Teſtimony of a Miniſter for my Aſſertion. At preſent I have the Authority of a Prieſt; whereby my Opinion will appear the more reaſonable, becauſe it is confirm'd by the Teſtimonies of two Men of ſo oppoſite a Character. Theſe two Teſtimonies agree in another Thing, which is a little ſcandalous; and that is, that if the Chriſtian Princes had not employ'd the rigour of the Laws againſt the Enemies of the Orthodox Faith, falſe Religions would have over-run all the Earth. By this Rule, when our Saviour promis'd he would maintain his Church againſt the Gates of Hell, he only promis'd that he would raiſe up Princes that ſhould ſubdue the Enemies of the Truth, by depriving them of their Eſtates, thruſting them into Priſons, baniſhing them, ſending them to the Gallies, hanging them, and the like. There is no Doctrine, how abſurd ſoever, but by theſe means might brave all the infernal Powers that would injure it. This brings into my mind what has been ſaid of Mahomet the Impoſtor: 'Tis reported (c), that when he was upon his Death-bed, he left his Diſciples a Prediction, which ſavours little of a falſe Propher, viz. My Religion ſhall laſt as long as your Victories.

I cannot part with Lewis Thomaſſin before I ask him upon what Grounds he goes, when he ſays the Eutychian Hereſy would have over-run all the World, had not the Emperors ſupported the Faith: What had this Hereſy ſo charming in it? Did it favour the Paſſions of the Heart? Did it enervate the Morality of the Goſpel? Not at all: It was not upon the Doctrine of Morality that this Heretick combated the Orthodox: He contended with them about a Myſtery which Reaſon cannot well comprehend; but he explain'd it after a manner that is leſs to be comprehended than that of the Orthodox, and is manifeſtly abſurd. Father Thomaſſin ſays (d); The Syrians, the Jacobites, the Armenians, and all the Eutychian Sects, would let us have no longer the name of Catholicks, but invented for us that of Melquites; that is to ſay, Royaliſts or Imperialiſts, as if it had not been the ancient Faith of the Church that the Catholicks had defended, but that of the Emperor; and as if it had been only the Imperial Authority, and not that of the Council of Chalcedon, compos'd of above ſix hundred Biſhops, that had kept us in the Faith and Union of the Catholick Church. This ſhows that thoſe Hereticks had imbib'd this ſtrong Perſwaſion, that their Patriarch had been oppreſs'd by the Factions that were form'd againſt him at the Imperial Court. Let us paſs a like Judgment on the Sect of Neſtorius. A vaſt number of People embrac'd it thro' the Abhorrence they had for the Injuſtice they believ'd was done Neſtorius, by Sacrificing him to the Credit of St. Cyril. They could not perſwade themſelves that a Cauſe, which triumph'd by ſuch irregular Ways, and through ſo unjuſt a Partiality of the Emperor, could have any Right on its ſide. We ſhould more clearly ſee into this Affair, if we had the Relations of the Neſtorians, and thoſe of other Sects; but we know hardly thoſe Matters any otherwiſe than on the Report of a Victorious Party: Nevertheleſs we know enough to judge, that the Imperial Power has always had too large a ſhare in the Deciſions. See with what Force Pighius ſpeaks againſt the Council (e) of Conſtantinople, where Pope Honorius was condemn'd as a Favourer of Monotheliſm: and conſider this Apology. Pighius ' (f) ſays nothing a- ' gainſt this Council, but what might have been ſaid ' againſt the firſt Council of Nice, and againſt that of ' Chalcedon; all his Objections being grounded on this, ' that the Emperor Conſtantine aſſiſted at it with his ' Officers, and that he regulated there the Order and ' Manner of Proceeding. It cannot be denied but ' Conſtantine did the ſame at the Council of Nice, and ' that in that of Chalcedon the Emperor's Commiſſioners ' attributed to themſelves more Authority, and med- ' dled more with Affairs belonging to that Council, ' than the Emperor himſelf did in this. Thus one ' muſt not think to give an ill Character of this Coun- ' cil, without reflecting at the ſame time on the others; ' and this is to overthrow the moſt ſolid Foundations, ' on which our Faith is built, in order to maintain a ' pretended Infallibility in the Perſon of Honorius.

(F) To ſpite the Orthodox.] 'Tis ſaid that Coſroes King of Perſia, having a mind to vex the Emperor Heraclius his Enemy, depriv'd the Catholicks of all the Churches they had in his Dominions, and gave them to the Neſtorians. 'Tis further ſaid, that He-

(l) In the Article of Mahomet.

(m) Thomaſſin of the Unity of the Church. Tom. 1. Part. 2. Chap. 9. pag. 374.

(n) Ibid. pag. 375 & ſeq. 376.

(o) Ibid. pag. 376, & ſeq. 377.

(c) Veritati maximè conſonum eſt Muhammedis morientis præſagium, quod Ludovicus Vives (de verit. rel. l. 4. in fine.) citat, tamdiu nempe legem ſuam duraturam, quamdiu victoriam ſuorum. Quod enim lex non in recti perſuaſione ſed violentia conſiſtat, victoriis ceſſantibus, legem quoque ceſſaturam ſati conjicere potuit. Samuel Sbultetus in Eccleſiâ Muhammedanâ, pag. 22.

WHETHER Hereticks oppreſſed in the Councils by the Imperial Authority are become more obſtinate by that Oppreſſion.

(d) Ubi ſupra, pag. 374.

(e) Held in the Year 680. This is call'd the ſixth Oecumenical Council.

(f) Du Pin in his Biblioteque of Eccleſiaſtical Authors, Tom. 6. pag. 67. Edit. of Holl.

Year 1690. Almoſt at the ſame time that the Jeſuits accus'd the (G) Fathers of the Oratory at Mons of renewing Neſtorius's Hereſy, a Miniſter of Rotterdam began the ſame Proceſs againſt a Miniſter (H) of Utrecht. The Succeſs of both theſe Accuſati

* I write this the 10th of February 1696.

Heraclius finding the Neſtorians favour'd by the King, and being willing to give him as much Uneaſineſs as he could, ſhow'd the like favour to the Hereticks that were moſt oppoſite to theſe; and conſequently ſet himſelf about cheriſhing Eutychianiſm, not directly; for he durſt not openly oppoſe the Council of Chalcedon, but by approving Monothelitiſm, which was a Branch of Eutyche's Errors. Read what follows: (g) Aumentò non poco l' Ereſia de' Monoteliti la ragione politica, che neſciſmi della religione per ordinario vi aſſiſte, poſcia che ſendo Coſroe Re de' Perſi capital nemico di Eraclio, protegeva, e procurava di dilatare la fazzione de' Neſtoriani, e per far coſa di ſommo diſpetto ad Eraclio, levò à Cattolici le chieſe tutte della Perſia, e le diede à Neſtoriani, dal che ſtimolato l' Imperatore Eraclio per render pari diſguſto al Perſiano, ſi moſſe à tutto potere à fomentare la contraria Ereſia di Eutichete, non in quanto alla ſola natura di Criſto, per non opporſi affatto al Concilio Calcedoneſe, che l' havea definito; ma benſi in quanto alla ſola volontà e operazione, errore parimente de gli Eutichiani.

(g) The IX. Giornale de Letterati 1678, pag. 195. In the Abſtract of a Poſthumous Book of John Batiſta Tamagnini a Venetian, printed in Paris 1678, and entituled, Celebris Hiſtoria Monothelitarum atque Honorii controverſia ſcrutiniis octo comprehenſa.

(G) The Fathers of the Oratory of Mons of renewing.] They (h) complaining to the Arch-biſhop of Cambray of a great many Calumnies that had been ſpread againſt them, that Prelate authorized Monſieur Steyaert Doctor and Profeſſor of Divinity at Louvain (i) to inform himſelf of the Reports ſpread againſt their Doctrine and Conduct. This Doctor made a juridical inqueſt, and drew up a Liſt (k) of about forty Heads of Accuſation; whereof the eighteenth was, (l) That the Fathers of the Oratory would not allow the Holy Virgin the Quality of Mother of God, but only that of Mother of CHRIST. Let us ſee the Progreſs of this malicious Slander. " (m) It is not to be doubted but it " had its Riſe at Mons; but paſſing from thence to " the Jeſuits at Liege, it was they that employ'd it " firſt for hindering the Fathers of the Oratory from " being admitted into that City. To oppoſe the " Reſolution of the Chapter, who had agreed to admit them, theſe Jeſuits forged a Memorial againſt " thoſe Fathers, which they feign'd to have been " brought to them by a Perſon worthy of Credit; and " pretending to debate what they ſhould do in the " matter, it was reſolved, that, not being able in " Conſcience to paſs by the Informations it gave them, " they ſhould immediately acquaint the Chapter with " it. Hereupon Father Iſerin was ordered to put " it, as he did, into the Hands of the Scholaſter " .... They engag'd the Chapter and Burgo- " maſters of Liege to write to the chief Magi- " ſtrates of Mons, upon all that has been ſaid." The Letter from the Chapter contain'd (n), there was a Report that the Fathers of the Oratory, appointed to come to Liege.... made Profeſſion of ſome particular and dangerous Opinions, altogether oppoſite to the Doctrine of the Church, viz. That JESUS CHRIST was not born for all Men; that, the Holy Virgin is the Mother of Chriſt, but not of God, and the like. Father Iſerin (o) went ſoon after to Mons; and ſollicited the Anſwers, which the Magiſtrates of Mons were to give to the Letters of the Chapter and Burgomaſters of Liege. The Anſwer to the Burgomaſters contain'd among other Things (p), As to the Adoration of the Holy Virgin, the ſaid Eccleſiaſticks have ſaid, that the Fathers of the Oratory were Enemies of it, and the common Report is ſuch. 'Tis not doubted but the (a) Anſwer made to the Chapter contain'd the ſame Head: What then became of the whole Buſineſs? Why, the Chapter of Liege (b) revok'd the Permiſſion given to the Fathers of the Oratory to eſtabliſh themſelves in that City. The Impreſſion made by the Jeſuits Memorial on the Minds of the Chapter, together with its being confirmed by the Anſwer of the Magiſtrates of Mons, no doubt inclin'd them to this alteration of Opinion; and there is a great deal of reaſon to believe that that which relates to the Divine Motherhood of the Holy Virgin, is of all others that which gave them moſt Horrour, and contributed moſt to incline them to the Excluſion of thoſe Fathers.... (c) The Jeſuits had ſo violently accus'd the Fathers of the Oratory of Neſtorianiſm, that they omitted nothing that might confirm that Calumny, and ſpread it amongſt the People as well at Bruſſels as at Mons.... Father Coemans a Jeſuit preaching in (d) Flemiſh in the Church of Sablon, during the Octave of the Dedication of that Church, employ'd part of his Sermon to ſtir up the People againſt the Innovators; who, as he aſſur'd them, were then upon receiving the Hereſy of Neſtorius, which conſiſted in denying the Holy Virgin to be the Mother of God. In the Work I have quoted, may be ſeen ample Proofs of the Care the Jeſuits have taken to repreſent the Fathers of the Oratory in Mons, as mere Neſtorians.

(h) Ibid. p. 65. & 66.

(i) Ibid. pag. 3.

(k) Ibid. pag. 48.

(l) Ibid. pag. 64. & 68.

(m) Ibid. pag. 65.

(o) Ibid. pag. 67.

(p) Ibid. pag. 49.

(a) Ibid. pag. 67.

(b) Ibid. pag. 68.

(c) Ibid. pag. 69.

(d) At Bruſſels in the Year 1690.

(H) A Miniſter of Rotterdam began the ſame Proceſs againſt a Miniſter of Utrecht.] See the Book intituled, An Apology for the Sieur Saurin, Miniſter of the Walloon Church at Utrecht, againſt the Accuſations of Monſieur Jurieu. This Book was printed in 1692. In it are to be found three Articles of Accuſation; whereof the firſt contains four Hereſies, viz. (e) Pelagianiſm, (f) Neſtorianiſm, (g) the Civil Toleration of Sects, and (h) the Hereſy of the Sacramentarians. Now as my buſineſs is only to ſpeak of the ſecond of theſe, I ſhall take no notice of the other three. Let us ſee then what the Perſon accus'd anſwers as to Neſtorianiſm. He declares plainly he condemns this Hereſy; but he ſays, he firmly believes Neſtorius innocent of it. " In the Aſ- " ſembly, conven'd at the Hague, to examine Monſieur " Jurieu's Accuſation of Monſieur Jacquelot, I declar'd, " ſays he (i), for Neſtorius againſt St. Cyril; but I did " not declare for Neſtorianiſm againſt the Sentiments " of the Church. I ſaid Neſtorius ſeem'd to me more " Orthodox than St. Cyril, becauſe the Doctrine of the " former appear'd more conformable to ours, than " that of the latter. If I err, 'tis plain 'tis an Error in " Fact, and not in Opinion.... (k) But, it will be " ſaid, what Reaſon can you give for thus maintain- " ing the Reputation of Neſtorius, in oppoſition to a " Father, that has been acknowledg'd for a Saint, and " againſt a general Council? To which I anſwer, " the Reaſon of Truth and Juſtice. I am verily per- " ſwaded, that whoever ſhall read without Prejudice " what remains of St. Cyril's and Neſtorius's Writings, will " be ready to acknowledge that the latter is Orthodox, " and the former an Heretick and an Eutychian, or at " leaſt that he will be willing to grant that it is much " more eaſy to give an Orthodox Interpretation to " the Propoſitions of Neſtorius, than to thoſe of St. Cyril. " I am neither the only one, nor the firſt of this O- " pinion, and when-ever it ſhall be neceſſary, ſome Au- " thors, both antient and modern, can (l) be pro- " duced, whoſe Authority ſhall decide the difference " between theſe two Patriarchs. If Neſtorius then be " Orthodox and St. Cyril an Heretick, my Zeal for the " Truth in general obliges me not to conceal this in " particular: We muſt call Light Light, and Darkneſs " Darkneſs. Moreover this is a Truth from whence " we may draw two great Advantages againſt the " Church of Rome. The firſt is, that it annuls the " Authority of St. Cyril, one of the chief Introducers " of Idolatry into the Chriſtian Church. And the ſe- " cond, that by convicting the Fathers of the Council " of Epheſus of the Eutychian Hereſy, equally con- " demn'd by the Proteſtants and Papiſts, we under- " mine the Foundation of Popery, which is the infal- " lible Authority of General Councils. Likewiſe both " Juſtice and Charity oblige us to defend oppreſſed " Innocence, and to make our Readers ſenſible, that " Neſtorius may have been condemn'd by a Council " without being guilty of any Crime; as alſo that our " Modern Divines may take the part of Neſtorius, by " rejecting the Errors attributed to him.... (m) As " for what regards the Intention of Neſtorius, I muſt " conclude him innocent, becauſe I can ſee no reaſon " to judge him guilty. But Monſieur Jurieu has cho- " ſen with a great many others, the ſtrongeſt ſide. " Neſtorius had neither the Majority nor Authority for " him, and conſequently was ſain to yield to the Op- " preſſion of St. Cyril's Cabal. We muſt then, for " Cuſtoms-ſake, conclude he was an Heretick, tho' " he was none, and go and dive into his Heart " to find there ſome wicked Intentions, where- " of no Foot-ſteps appear either in his Words or Acti- " ons." This ſame Author ſhows in another Book of his, that he is more againſt Neſtorius than his Accuſers. " I have prov'd, ſays he, (n) in my Apology, " that the Title of Mother of God is agreeable to the " Holy Virgin, being grounded on the Sacred Writ, " and the Nature of the Myſtery; whereas Monſieur " Jurieu in his Paſtoral Letters, flies out with ex- " treme Violence againſt this way of ſpeaking in the " Language of the Church, looking upon it as the " cauſe of the moſt pernicious Hereſy." Some few

(e) The Apology of the Sieur Saurin, pag. 72.

(f) Ibid. pag. 78.

(g) Ibid. pag. 88.

(h) Ibid. pag. 92.

(i) Ibid. pag. 78.

(k) Ibid. pag. 79

(l) See the Article Rodon.

(m) Ibid. pag. 82.

(n) Examen de la Theologie de Mr. Jurieu, p. 86.

Pages

cuſations has been alike. The Accuſations (l) have been brought to nothing, without the Accuſers being cenſur'd for them. Thoſe that concern a certain Tranſlator of the Homilies of St. Chryſoſtom in the Year 1693 were better grounded; for he * wrote a Letter to the Arch biſhop of Paris, in which he acknowledg'd that through Inadvertency he had committed ſome Faults in his Tranſlation, which, contrary to his Intention, might ſtrike at the Eſſential Parts of Religion. Wherefore he thought himſelf oblig'd to make a ſolemn Recantation to ſecure

* Beauval's Hiſt. of the Works of the Learned, November 1693. Tom. 138.

Pages after he ſets down the Paſſage out of thoſe Letters; which I ſhall ſet down after him, as well for the Information of my Reader, as to let People ſee I have a good Warrant for what I have ſaid of Neſtorius. He was (o) without doubt unadviſed, and, God forbid, we ſhould fall into the ſame Error, if it be true that he has aſcribed two Perſons to JESUS CHRIST, as well as two Natures. Neither do we deny, that the Holy Virgin may rightly be termed the Mother of God, ſince ſhe is ſo of Chriſt, who is God. But it was an unhappy Temerity in the Fathers of the Vth Century, to introduce new Terms. The Holy Virgin is no where in the New Teſtament called the Mother of God, and only the Mother of Jeſus. They ought to have ſtopp'd there; for this Title of Mother of God, has ſomething in it that ſhocks, it being repugnant to the Nature of God to have a Mother. And indeed God did not think fit to beſtow his Bleſſing on thoſe Fathers, but rather permitted the moſt extravagant and criminal of all Idolatries to take its Riſe from thence. Let us conclude with the following Words of Mr. Saurin. " (p) The zealous and " charitable Mr. Jurieu, animated by a furious and " turbulent Spirit, will needs have me examin'd upon " this Head. I am contented to be ſo; for I fear not to " come to the Touch as he does. I will not fly, as " he has done, from ſeveral Synods. I will not make " uſe of a Thouſand Fetches, nor have recourſe to Ar" tifice or Violence to exempt my ſelf from a Law, im" poſ'd on all the Faithful, eſpecially upon Divines, to " give an account of their Faith. I'm for an Anathema " with all my Heart, not againſt Neſtorius, but a" gainſt Neſtorianiſm." I ought not to omit, that be" fore Monſieur Saurin obtain'd a Teſtimony of his Orthodoxy from the Synods, the Publick was very well ſatisfied that he was an Anti-Neſtorian. Conſult a Letter which was printed at (oo) Amſterdam in 1701, under the Title of The Scrupulous Proteſtant, or an Explanation of the 4th Chapter of the Adventures of the Madonna: By way of Anſwer to a Letter, written to (pp) the Author, by Mr. Jurieu, concerning the Title of Mother of God, and the Reputation of Cyril of Alexandria, and the firſt Council of Epheſus.

(o) Jurieu and Saurin, ibid. pag. 869. See the 16th Paſtoral Letter of the Year 1687. pag. 361. Edit. in 12°. In the fourth Paſtoral Letter of the following Year, he ſpeaks more ſtrongly againſt thoſe who introduce the Epithet Mother of God.

(p) Saurin's Examin. of the Divinity of Monſieur Jurieu. pag. 795, & 796.

(oo) It contains 32 Pages in 8vo. See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Nov. 1701. pag. 578. &c.

(pp) He calls himſelf Mr. Renoul.

(l) The Accuſations have been brought to nothing without the Accuſers, &c.] The Proofs I ſhall bring, relate only to the Fathers of the Oratory. One of the Articles upon which Monſieur Steyaert had a Commiſſion to make a juridical Inqueſt, was that theſe Fathers refus'd to acknowledge the Holy Virgin for the Mother of God. We have ſeen that this Slander contributed very much towards hindering their eſtabliſhing themſelves at Liege, tho' that favour had been granted them. The Accuſation in it ſelf was one of the moſt important, according to the Principles and Practices (q) of the Roman Communion. One may therefore think, that the Commiſſioner neglected nothing to diſcover the Authors of this Accuſation, and yet we ſhall find he never in the leaſt troubled his Head with the Matter. Obſerve how he was treated: ' (r) The Buſineſs was to ' know, whether the Fathers of the Oratory were new ' Neſtorians, who held and taught thoſe under their ' Inſtruction, that the Holy Virgin was not Mother of ' God, or whether they had been falſely charg'd with ' this Hereſy, as well by publick Sermons as Reports ' ſpread abroad; and who were thoſe that ſo charg'd ' them. What juridical Proceedings have you obſerv'd ' in making an Enquiry, which might give the Arch' biſhop, that commiſſion'd you, an occaſion to puniſh ' the Fathers of the Oratory, if they were convicted ' of this damnable Hereſy; or, in caſe they were ' found innocent, to make 'em Reparation for the ' Slander, and puniſh thoſe that had ſo ſlander'd ' them? But this Enquiry you never made in ' any legal manner, becauſe you could find none ' guilty but the Jeſuits, and ſome Magiſtrates of Mons, ' who had lent them their Names, to confirm what the Je' ſuits of Liege had made the Chapter of that City believe, ' viz. That the Fathers of the Oratory in the Low-Countries, founded by Cardinal de Berulle, held divers Opi' nions diſallowed by the Holy Church; and among o' thers, that the Holy Virgin is not the Mother of God.' The Author names afterwards (a) a Councellor, who had been conſiderably concern'd in the Accuſation, and who preſs'd him to proceed againſt him, to the end he might be fully juſtified by the Diſcovery of the firſt Author of this Defamation; but notwithſtanding divers Inſtances and Requeſts made to him ſeveral times by this Councellor, he obſtinately refus'd to make any Enquiry. Let us hear the Janſeniſt ſpeak: " (b) An Accuſation of " Hereſy, and of an Hereſy ſo impious, as that of " Neſtorius, may be a good Thing, and alſo neceſſary, " providing it be true and well-grounded; whereas " it muſt be abominable when 'tis falſe. Now being " required by a Man of Honour to do him Juſtice, " upon an Accuſation made againſt him, you told " him that was not neceſſary, aſſuring him, that the " Fathers of the Oratory, nor their Adherents, were not " any wiſe charged with the Neſtorian Hereſy; and, that " the Report that went concerning them, appear'd " to you altogether extravagant, in that none of their Ad" verſaries had preſum'd to maintain, or attempted to " prove what they aſſerted. Why then was nothing " of this to be found in the Account you gave in of " your Charge (c)? Why was no mention made there, " That you had acknowledg'd, that the 18*th Article* " (which was that the Fathers of the Oratory " refus'd to allow the Holy Virgin the Quality of " Mother of God, being willing to afford her only that " of Mother of Chriſt) is a manifeſt Calumny a" gainſt thoſe Fathers, none of their Adverſaries having " dar'd to maintain, or attempted to prove, what they " aſſerted. You could not deny, but there was a great " Noiſe about this Neſtorian Hereſy, which was char" ged upon the Fathers of the Oratory: But, being " ſenſible this Report was falſe, you thought fit to tell a " certain Friend of yours, That it ſeem'd altogether " extravagant to you. Is it then a meer Extrava" gance, which deſerves only to be laugh'd at, and " not a Diabolical Malice, that ought to be puniſh'd " for ſetting abroad a Report, that a Congregation of " Prieſts believe a thing which they could not be" lieve, without having loſt all Senſe of Reli" gion? .... (d) A ſort of People being thus found, " that without any Proof would perſwade a thing ſo " little credible, and ſo ſcandalous to the Fathers of " the Oratory; It was ſo abſolutely neceſſary for ap" peaſing the Uproars in the City of Mons, and unde" ceiving the common People in the ill Opinion they " had conceiv'd of theſe Fathers, that the Authors of " this Diabolical Calumny ſhould be detected to the " end they might be puniſh'd, purſuant to the Ca" nons; and a ſtop be thereby put to all future " Slanders that occaſion'd the committing of ſo many " Sins. Why then, being legally requir'd to give an " Account of what you had in charge, and which " your Duty oblig'd you to do, did you refuſe it? " Why alſo, not being able to ſay any thing upon this " Accuſation, but what would be to the advantage of " the Fathers of the Oratory, and to the Confuſion of the " Jeſuits, did you chuſe to ſpeak nothing at all of it in " your Memorial? Such is your Juſtice, and pre" tended Exemption from Partiality, in the chief " point of your Commiſſion."

(b) Ibid. pag. 104.

(c) A Latin Treatiſe of Monſieur Steyaert's, where he gives an Account of his Commiſſion to the Archbiſhop of Cambray.

(d) Ibid. Pag. 106, & 107. See alſo the 2*d part of the Difficulties, pag.* 161, 163 & alibi.

This Author having thus preſs'd hard the Arch-biſhop of Cambray's Commiſſioner, and having ſhown with the utmoſt Evidence the fraudulent manner after which this Commiſſion was executed, points out the true Cauſe of this Obliquity. " Thoſe that know you better, ſays he, (e) " than the Arch-biſhop of Cambray, who choſe you " for this Employ, expected nothing from you but " what they found. They know your Policy and " Love for your Honour make you act two dif" ferent Parts. You would think your ſelf diſho" nour'd, if in the Poſt you are in, you did not " maintain the ſound Doctrine of your Faculty " againſt the Evil Opinions of their Adverſaries; and " this is what you have done in divers of your Theſes. " But the Apprehenſion of bringing ſuch Troubles upon " your ſelf, as might diſturb your Repoſe, makes " you buckle to thoſe very Perſons, whoſe Opinions " you condemn, leſt they ſhould injure you by their " Credit. Never did this Cunning of yours ſhow it

(e) Ibid. pag. 107.

" ſelf

sure the Reputation of his Faith; declaring that his Errors are personal, and that they (I△) ought to be attributed to none but him. You'll find at large in Moreri's Dictionary what relates to Nestorius, and his Followers; wherefore I shall say nothing of them. Consult also Monsieur du Pin, who brought himself into trouble (K) for acting the part of an unbiass'd Historian. I am willing to believe the Encomium, Mother of God, has contributed to the extravagant Honours paid to the Holy Virgin; but it seems to me, that she might have had the same (L) worship only " self more than on this occasion. The Fathers of the " Oratory had neither the Power, nor the Will to hurt " you; and you could not do them Justice with- " out offending those who would have had both, " if you had not pleased them. You were in a " manner under a necessity of abandoning the " weaker side, that you might not disoblige the " stronger. You were oblig'd, to slight the Proofs " of the former's Innocence, as you did, to favour " the latter, by dissembling their horrible Slanders " and Calumnies. This is to know how to " live according to the Custom of the World: But " ought not you to apprehend the Reproach of the " God of Judges, (1) usque quo judicatis Iniquitatem & facies peccatorum sumitis? How long will ye " judge unrighteously? How long will ye have regard " to Sinners, by making them appear innocent while " they are most criminal? This is what that Hebraism, " facies peccatorum sumere, signifies: And 'tis this " Acception of Persons, which is so often, and so " severely condemned in the Holy Scriptures; when, " through Timidity, or such like Considerations, the " Balance is made to incline to that side, which " has the greater Power, though the other has the bet- " ter Cause."

(1) Psalm 82. 2.

Such is the Character of a great many People; they are sensible of the wrong of a false Accuser; they detest him, and whisper all the ill imaginable of him in their Friends Ears; yet if it be in his Power either to hurt or disserve them, they will be sure, being his Judges, to stand on their guard, and to take care not to say any thing that may disgrace him. They have the Art of finding out a Thousand Tricks to perplex a Cause: Which shows that the Ascendant Self-interest has over Justice, is almost a Malady incurable to Mankind; and therefore Men in Power will never fail to sow profitable Calumnies. You see how a Slander, cunningly manag'd, has shut the Gates of Liege against the Fathers of the Oratory.

Note, That the Arch bishop of Cambray, did by a definitive Sentence on the 12th of November 1692, declare these pretended Nestorians innocent; yet he oblig'd no Person by Name to make Reparation. See the 6th Chapter of the 8th Tom. of The Practical Morality of the Jesuits.

(f) Hist. of the Works of the Learned. Nov. 1693. pag. 138.

(I△) Ought to be attributed to him only.] The Author who recanted after this manner was call'd (f) Monsieur Fontaine, and had formerly been Secretary to Monsieur Arnaud and Monsieur de Sacy. It was this occasion'd the Jesuit, who publish'd a Book intituled, Nestorianismus Revivi'd, to confound the Translator of the Homilies of St. Chrysostom with the Gentlemen of Port-Royal, and that was the Reason which induc'd this Translator to declare publickly there was none guilty but himself.

(g) Hist. of the Works of the Learned, Nov. 1692. pag. 140, 141, & 142. and of May 1693 pag. 526, 527, & 528. See also the Historical Mercury of June 1693 pa. 222, &c. The Injustice of Monsieur Lamoignon Advocate-General, repairing the Suppression of Monsieur du Pin's Book, which he maintain'd.

(K) Monsieur du Pin, who brought himself into trouble.] I am not very well inform'd of the Particulars of the Matters that have been started against him: and therefore I have touch'd upon them only by the bye: But I refer my Reader to one of our Journalists (g) who has mention'd some of them, and particularly his being accused of too much favouring Nestorius.

(b) Baillet of the Devotion due to the Holy Virgin Part 3 & 4.

(L) She might have had the same Worship under the Title of Mother of Jesus.] I have already spoken of this in my first Remark, but it will not be amiss to touch it over again. I believe I may say the Disputes between Nestorius and St. Cyril, have not augmented the Honours of the Holy Virgin but by Accident. These two Prelates did not contend about any Point of Devotion: Their Quarrel had no Relation to Worship, and supposing that at that very time the Holy Virgin had been invok'd, Nestorius did not pretend to alter that Custom, nor did St. Cyril require it might be enlarg'd. The Difference between them was about a Speculative Opinion: One apprehended the confounding the two Natures of JESUS CHRIST; and the other fear'd the Humane Nature of our Saviour wou'd be look'd upon as a Person. Adoration had nothing to do in this Matter: (h) Nestorius, as opinionated as he seem'd to be, was so inclinable to grant the Holy Virgin Honours that were publickly paid her, that, in his Disgrace, he seem'd disposed to relinquish the Quality of Mother of God, rather than give occasion of lessening her Worship by persisting in a Refusal. These are the Words of a French Priest, who wrote a Treatise of the Devotion due to the Holy Virgin, as rationally as any one of his Profession could do. He confesses Nestorius requir'd no lessening of her Worship; and he might likewise have acknowledg'd, that this Heretick retain'd all the Foundations of Worship, which St. Cyril could have laid: For the Worship of the Holy Virgin cannot be founded but on a Supposition that God has done all for her in Heaven, which an elected King could do for his Mother on Earth, if he should declare and insist that he would have her acknowledg'd for Queen-Mother, in whatsoever Condition she was before; and that he would grant all she should ask of him. From that very minute she would be rais'd to such a Degree, as should place her above all Princesses, Dutchesses, and other Persons of the Kingdom, except the King, and her Interest would have no Bounds. The Honours paid her would exceed all the Submission paid to other Subjects. No Body would go about to amuse himself with Enquiries, whether she is the real Mother of the King's Soul or not: It would be sufficient to know that she is the King's Mother, and in possession of all the Authority due to so high a Rank. The Application of this to Nestorius is not very difficult. If in rejecting the Title of Mother of God, he retains that of Mother of CHRIST, he retains all the Foundations of Worship; for, he will say, to be the Mother of JESUS CHRIST is the same thing as to be the Mother of him, to whom all (a) Power has been given both in Heaven and Earth, who reigns over all Things, as well over Angels as Men: And by Consequence, if God has been pleas'd that the Mother of JESUS CHRIST should be invested with the Quality of Queen-Mother and Queen-Regent, and that she should fully enjoy a maternal Authority over her Son; She must be above all other Creatures, and in a Condition to shower down on Mankind whatever Benefits she pleases. I cannot see that St. Cyril could give the Worship of the Holy Virgin a more solid Foundation than this (b). 'Twas not on Account of the Divine Nature that JESUS CHRIST, on the Day of his Ascension, declar'd, that all Power was given him; for as he was God he could acquire nothing thereby, being in possession of all Things from all Eternity. It was then on Account of his being Man that he was establish'd Plenipotentiary: It was on his Soul that God conferr'd that Power, inasmuch as it was his Pleasure that all the Desires of his Soul should be efficacious and operative: And consequently, to be the better assur'd of the universal Authority of the Holy Virgin, it is sufficient to believe, that the Humanity of JESUS CHRIST refuses his Mother nothing, and that it is as obedient to her as the best Son could be. If the Devotion of the Socinians should ever incline to Festivals, Processions, Images, Pilgrimages, &c. they would do the same for JESUS CHRIST, as the Church of Rome practises towards his Holy Mother. It matters not that they do not believe him to be God; for it is enough, if he reigns with full Power, and is the Dispenser of all good Things, through the Divine Institution. If Monsieur Baillet will but take the pains to reflect on what I have said, I am satisfied he will alter some thing in the following Passage of his Work. (c) When the Church maintain'd the Holy Virgin, at the Council of Ephesus, in the Quality of Mother of God, against the Injustice of the Heretick Nestorius, who endeavour'd to take that Glorious Title from her, she did not less design to preserve the Foundation of the Worship, which the Faithful paid to the Holy Virgin, than to establish a Belief of the Unity of the Person of CHRIST. Perhaps he would furnish me with Views which I have not, and which should make me change my Opinion. Now see how I believe that the Disputes between Nestorius and St. Cyril have by Accident augmented the Honours of the Holy Virgin upon Earth. The Title, Mother of God, contested for some time, and at length Victorious, being confirm'd by the Ca-

(a) Gospel of St. Matthew, chap. 28. v. 18.

(b) Note these Words of Monsieur Baillet, ubi supra, pag. 1 & 2.

(c) Baillet. ib. pag. 3.

nons

only under the Title of Mother of Jesus. Divers Considerations incline me to believe this Thought good; for the more I enquire into the Reasons that could promote the Worship of the Virgin Mary, the more I find in the Disposition and Nature of Man (M) a Spring to set that Worship at Work, and to encrease it prodigiously: From whence I conclude, that even without the Epithets, which have been very useful to it, it might have increased more and more, and fructified in abundance. I must not forget, that since the first Edition of my Dictionary, there has been publish'd an History of Nestorianism †, written by Father * Lewis Doucin; in a Marginal ‡ Note whereof, we meet with what I have said above concerning ¶ the Misunderstanding of Nestorius and St. Cyril. This is there attended with this Remark; that I grounded my self upon the Authority and Testimony † Printed at Paris in 1698. in 4°.

* A Jesuit.

‡ Page 551 & 552.

¶ In the Remark A.

nons of the Councils, made more Impression than it did before: It became a great Affair; The vanquish'd Party was look'd upon as impious, and the Conquerors as the Patrons of Piety. The Victory was cherish'd, and this part of the Faith fortified, as a Breach, whence the Enemy had been repuls'd, and where he might give a second Assault. Run through the whole History of the Church, and you'll find, that in all Ages those Disputes, which have not been victorious, have only served to redouble Abuses. I have given the Reason of it: which calls into my Mind several Cities, that, to preserve their Priviledges, have oppos'd burthensom Edicts. They afford a pretense to the Sovereign for bridling them with Cittadels; which has render'd their Condition yet worse than it was before. The Author of the Maxim, Nunquam tentabis ut non proficias, had a good Discernment. See the Margin (d).

(d) Omittere potius prævalida & adulta vitia, quam hoc adjicere, ut palam fierent quibus flagitiis imparem esse mus. Tacit. Annal. l. 3. c. 53.

To confirm what has been said, viz. that those who attack old Errors in Religion do but cause them to take, by Accident, deeper Root, I observe that the Followers of a false Worship may be oppos'd either during the hottest Effort of their Zeal, or when a Luke-warm Remissness has brought them to indifference †. Fear in the first Case what may happen, where one is oppos'd in the height of his Anger. The Resistance he meets with does but render him more furious.

† I don't look of the middle Opinions between those two Extreams, it is because every one may apply to them what I say of the Extreams.

(e) Bacchæ hæc tanti si velis advorsarier,
Fit insana insaniorem facies, feriet sæpius:
Si obsequare, una resolvas plagâ.

(e) Plautus in Amphit. Act. 2. Sc. 2. v. 71.

Hunc (ee) avus, hunc Athamas, hunc cætera turba suorum
Corripiunt dictis, fustibus, inhibere laborant.
Acrior admonitu est: irritatúsque retenta,
Et crescit rabies, moderamina, ipsa nocebant.
Sic ego tonantem, quâ nil obstabat eunti,
Lenius, & modico flexerim decurrere vidi:
At quacunque trabes, obstructáque saxa jacebant,
Stomachans, & fervens, & ab obice sævior ibat.

(ee) Ovid. Met. amor. lib. 3. v. 564 pag. m. 75.

In the second Case you ought to fear waking a sleeping Dog, I mean reviving a dying Passion.

Consider a little the Conduct of those Husbands, whose Conjugal Love is almost at an End. They possess their Wives as if they possess'd them not: They have for them a great deal of Indifference, and it may be a great deal of Hatred. But if any one has a Mind to take them from them, or if they hear at their Return home that they have elop'd with some young Gallant, then they lose all manner of Patience, are full of Desires to recover them, and fill the Air with Complaints, exclaiming after this, or the like sort,

My poor Wife, alas! what is become of her (f)?

(f) See the Memoirs of the Dutchess of Mazarin.

Then they presently set the Serjeants or Bailiffs at work, involving themselves in a thousand Suits. There is no more Lukewarmness nor Indifference to be found in them; for, though they were contented to lose their Wives whilst no Body contended with them for them; now, on the contrary, whilst they are disputed, they will by no means part with them (g).

(g) Among the Remedies of Love Ovid, de Remedio Amoris, circa fin. forgat not that a Man ought not to think he has any Rival. Ar tu rivalem noli tibi fingere quemquam, Inque tuo solam crede placere toro. Actius Hermonem &c.

(M) I find in the Disposition and Nature of Man a certain Spring to set that Worship at work.] The Life of Man is nothing but a Theatre of Changes; yet in spite of that Inconstancy there are certain Things, which being once introduced, grow up very fast; and, during many Ages, make continual Progresses. This is what cannot be said of Innovations, which tend to the reforming publick Abuses, or correcting bad manners. Laws made from time to time against Luxury and Gaming are of force only at first; for they soon will be violated. Reformations in Religion will sometimes last long in respect of Speculative Opinions; but as to moral Practice, they come speedily to Perfection; but then quickly succeeds a fresh Lapse, and a corrupted State, which requires a new Reformation. The good Morals of the Primitive Christians, their Sobriety, Chastity, Humility, &c. had their greatest Lustre, during the Lives of the Apostles; but from thence forward degenerated dayly, in such a manner, that in the IVth Century the Morals of Christians differed little from those of other People. The Reformed in France, in the XVIth Century, were at first exceeding regular in their Morals: They abstain'd from Gaming, Drinking, Oaths, Dancing, &c. And the Military Laws, which the Prince of Condé caus'd to be observ'd in the beginning of the Civil Wars, in the time of Charles IX. (h) were admirable. The Soldiers were obliged to live in the greatest Regularity imaginable, and their least Faults were punish'd severely: But all these fine Things lasted but little, resembling Children that die in their Cradles, or Plants (k), which shoot up prodigiously in a few Days, and dry up before the end of the Summer. It were better they would grow like Trees, by little and little (l), that they might last a longer time. The Reason is easily given why a rigid Discipline, and a great Reformation of Manners is like Straw-fire, which quickly blazes, but as quickly loses its Force: It is because too great an Adhesion to Modesty, Temperance, and Austerity is a violent State: Now, according to the Philosophers Maxim, such a State cannot be lasting, nullum violentum durabile. They mean, by a (i) violent State, a State contrary to the Inclinations of Nature, a place of Exile, an external and superiour Force, which detains a Body out of its proper Element; but which can't prevent its Tendency to return to it, and its continual resisting and weakening this external Force, till at last it over-powers it, and then moves to the place, to which its Native Inclination carries it. Heavy Bodies removed from the Earth, which fall again when the removing Impulse hath less force than their own internal Gravity, is the Example the Philosophers employ to explain this Doctrine. We may therefore compare the Reformation of Manners to the Impulse that carries a Stone up-wards. The Passions, naturally incident to Mankind, continually encounter the Practice of a severe Morality; and are a Gravitation that reduces Men quickly to their primitive Condition, if any start of Zeal or Reformation has carried them towards Heaven.

(h) See Varillas's Hist. of Charles IX. Tom. 1. p. m. 163. ad. ann. 1562.

(k) Gourds for Example.

(l) Crescit occulto velut arbor ævo. Horat. ep. 12. lib. 1.

(i) This is according to the Doctrine of the School-Philosophers.

Quoi (b) qua 'avec fourche on repousse nature,
Elle revient neanmoins à toute heure.

(b) Naturam expellas furca, tamen usq; recurret, Horat. ep. 10. lib. 1.

Whence we must conclude, that the Innovation, introduc'd into Christianity, by Establishing the Worship to the Virgin three or four hundred Years (c) more or less, after the Ascension of our Lord, has been countenanc'd by the natural and machinal Dispositions of Mankind, since it has made a continual and prodigious Progress, and still subsists in all the strength it ever obtain'd. It can't be conceiv'd, that without such great Dispositions in the Humane Passions, it could have met with that prosperous Success, so destitute as it was of the support of Scripture and good Tradition. Which has moved some curious Wits to enquire what those natural Modifications of the Soul of Men might be, which have fomented the Innovation here spoken of; and this is the Result of their Enquiries.

(c) See Mr. Basnage Hist. of the Church. Book 18. ch. 11.

In the Business of Religion, there is nothing that better suits with the gross Genius of the People, than representing Heaven to them like the Earth. Hence the Fancies and Caprices of the Poets, concerning the Marriage of the Gods, their Councils, their Divisions and Intrigues, passed so easily upon the Greeks, and afterwards upon the Romans, for Articles of Faith. It was impossible to raise Man to the Gods; and therefore they were to be brought down to Man; and thus was form'd the point of Contact and center of Union. Had it been said, that God govern'd the World by simple Acts of his Will; and that he was alone in Heaven: this would not have satisfied the Imagination of the People, who have no Example of such a thing. But, if you tell them that a God, assisted with many other Divinities, governs the World, that the Court of Heaven

CONJECTURES upon the Causes of the Progress of the Worship of the Holy Virgin.

Teſtimony of M. du Pin, Doctor of the Faculty of Paris, who has ſaid, indeed, many ſuch Things; amongſt others, that Neſtorius in his Declaration, publiſh'd before the Council of Epheſus, gives a good Senſe to what he had advanc'd in his Sermons. But that I don't ſay that all theſe Things have been condemn'd in Mr. du Pin, and that himſelf has retracted them.

I will

Heaven is po npous and magnificent, in which every one has his Poſt, and will not ſuffer another to encroach upon his Employ, they'll eaſily believe you; becauſe the Mind of Man is imbued with the like Ideas, borrowed from what they daily ſee in the Government of States, and the Courts of great Kings. Such Courts are not without the Female Sex: We there find a Queen-Mother, and a reigning Queen, whoſe Authority is ſometimes equal to the King's. Thus the People eaſily believed what was told of Cybele and Juno, and becauſe amongſt Men the Power of a Queen Dowager is generally leſs than that of the Reigning Queen; hence the Worſhip of Cybele, Mother of the Gods, was inferiour to that of Juno, Siſter and Wife of Jupiter. This Wife of Jove had abundance of Temples (d) under different Titles: And no wonder, ſince ſhe was conſider'd as the Queen of the World, and ſuch a Queen as intereſt'd her ſelf in the Government: And beſides (e) 'tis the Cuſtom to pay one's Reſpects to the Ladies, with greater Care and Ceremony, than to Men of equal Quality.

(d) See Pauſanias in the Table of the Contents at the Word Juno.

By ſuch Prejudices as theſe the Chriſtians have been eaſily perſwaded, without any Example, or order, or permiſſion of Scripture, without any Authority of the Tradition of the firſt Ages, that the Saints in Heaven are continually employ'd in mediatorial Functions betwixt God and Men. We find in the Courts of Princes, and proportionably in thoſe of Governours, and Intendants, that nothing is done without the Recommendation of a Favourite, or a Secretary of State, or a Steward of the Houſhold, or a Waiting-Woman, &c. We daily ſee thoſe (f) miſcarry who neglect the Interceſſors, and venture to apply directly to the Head, and 'tis of abſolute neceſſity to make choice of ſome Subaltern Patrons. Nothing has contributed more than this to the Cuſtom of Worſhipping the Saints: All the Arguments of a Proteſtant Controverſiſt will hardly have that effect with an Huguenot, as the Parallel made by a Curate betwixt the Mediation of Saints, and the Recommendation of a great Prince's Officers, will have with a Courtier, and in general with thoſe who are anywhit acquainted with the way of the World. Popular Notions do very well ſute with a Celeſtial Court, wherein the Angels, Apoſtles and Martyrs, are perpetually employ'd in recommending Terreſtrial Affairs to God, in ſolliciting the Diſpatch of a Decree, and putting him in Mind of this and that, as is uſual in the Courts of Princes.

(e) See the Remark L of the Article Juno.

(f) See the Remark E of the Article Daſſouci.

But whilſt you only ſtock Heaven with Saints and Angels, Maſculine Sollicitors and Mediators, you come not up to the popular Ideas: Theſe require a Queen as well as a King (g). A Court without Women is an abſurd thing, and has Irregularities that ſhock the Natural Taſte: Conſequently the People applauded the new Invention of the Mother of JESUS CHRIST, eſtabliſh'd in Heaven the Queen of Men and Angels, and of all Nature. This Hypotheſis fill'd up the Vacuum that appear'd before in the Celeſtial Court, and corrected all its Irregularity. From hence it follows, that the Peoples Devotion did immediately flame out for this Almighty, and Moſt merciful Queen. 'Tis a general and reaſonable pre-poſſeſſion that Women are more diſpoſed than Men to charitable Actions. They are incomparably more officious towards the poor and ſick, and the Priſoners; and if there be any Favour to be begg'd, as the Life of a Deſerter, they ſollicite, and take upon them to ſoften thoſe in whoſe Power it is to ſave him. A more certain Succeſs was therefore expected from the Invocation of the Holy Virgin, than from any other. We need not wonder that the Honours paid her, exceed thoſe which the Heathens paid to Juno: For the Dignity of Queen-Mother and Reigning Queen did not center in Juno's Perſon; and beſides ſhe was look'd upon as proud, moroſe and revengeful: whereas the Holy Virgin was at once Queen-Mother and Wife, free from all Faults, and abounding with unſpeakable Goodneſs. 'Tis well enough known, that Courtiers grow cold and diſcouraged when a Queen has too much Pride, and is too prone to puniſh: And therefore Juno could not have ſo many Adorers, as ſhe would have had upon the perſwaſion of her being a Goddeſs, purely beneficent. My Reader already imagines with what Zeal the People contributed to build Chapels and Altars to the Holy Virgin, and to offer her Jewels and Ornaments of all ſorts; for according to the vulgar Notions, theſe are things that pleaſe Women, and by which, in the World, the way is made to their Favour. Let us now ſee a new Contrivance, which thoſe Liberalities and Offerings have occaſioned.

(g) Finally, a Court without Ladies is a Court without a Court, to ſpeak Truth. Brantome Elogy of Francis I. Tom. 1. of the Memoirs of the French Captains, pag. m. 281, 282.

The Monks and Pariſh Prieſts perceiving that the Devotion to the Holy Virgin brought in a great Revenue to their Cloyſters and Churches; and that it encreaſed in proportion, as the People were more ſtrongly perſwaded of the Authority and Goodneſs of this Queen of the World, labour'd Might and Main to fortify the Notion of her Credit and Inclination to do good. The Preachers employ'd all the Hyperboles and Figures that Rhetorick can afford. The Legendaries heap'd up all ſorts of Miracles: The Poets engaged in the Deſign; and annual Prizes (b) were appointed, for thoſe that made the fineſt Poems in praiſe of the Mother of God. What was at firſt an Oratorical Sally, or a Poetical Rapture, became at laſt an Aphoriſm of Devotion. The Divinity Profeſſors bandied theſe Subjects, and did not a little contribute to corrupt them. The Cuſtom aroſe in all deſperate Diſeaſes, and all other Dangers that ſeem'd inevitable, of making Vows to our Lady of ſuch or ſuch a place, as likewiſe out of a Deſire of getting Children, or any other advantage. It happens every where, both amongſt the Faithleſs and Believers, that ſome Patients, given over by their Phyſicians, recover from their Diſtempers againſt all Probability, and others by unforeſeen Incidents, avoid Misfortunes that were thought to be unavoidable. We ſee in all Countries of the World, that Women, who have been barren many Years, at laſt conceive. The Vows I ſpeak of are a wonderful Artifice; for if they effect not a Deliverance, there are a thouſand Evaſions; as that they were not made with a Faith ſufficiently Fervent, &c. There is no Regiſter kept of the bad Succeſſes, and People are not allowed to mind them. If the ſick Perſon recovers, if Barren Women become with Child, &c. this is attributed to the Vow: The Liſt of Miracles is enlarg'd with it in the new Edition; Offerings are multiplied, and Devotion ſpreads farther and farther. We have lately learnt from the Gazzettes that the King of Spain, who was at the very brink of Death, towards the end of September 1700, eſcap'd this Danger; and becauſe, amongſt other Objects of Devotion, there was brought to him an Image of our Lady of Beelen, which has but lately been in vogue, his Recovery was aſcribed to its Efficacy. If he had not relaps'd ſome Weeks after, and died the firſt of November following, this Notre-Dame had acquir'd a Reputation that would have eclips'd the reſt; for the Preachers would have ſet off this Miracle with all the Circumſtances that the conjuncture of general Affairs could have furniſhed in abundance. Theſe Gentlemen have been the great Promoters of this Worſhip: 'Twas they, I ſuppoſe, who firſt advanc'd, that JESUS CHRIST had reſerved Judgment to himſelf, and had left to his Mother all the Diſtributions of Graces: A ſure Method to bring over to the Virgin all the Acts of the moſt paſſionate Devotion. This Maxim is no longer a meer flight of a Rhetorician, grown warm in his Pulpit; but it (a) has paſs'd into Books that are put into the Hands of the Votaries. Is any thing more likely to ſtrengthen the Worſhip of the Holy Virgin, than to ſay, that (b) God gives her abundance of ſigned Blanks, that ſhe may diſtribute as ſhe pleaſes the things that appertain to God? The World therefore is indebted to her for Salvation, and all good Things, and not to God; ſince it is She that chooſes the Perſons, and puts them down with what Gratification ſhe thinks fit, in the void Space of the Blank. You'll find infinite ſuch Thoughts in the Book (c) I cite. The Heathens did not deal thus with Jupiter: They ſaid, that in point of Puniſhment (d) he acted by the Advice of the other Gods; but that he conſulted none of 'em in the caſe of Benefits and Rewards. Which Conduct (e) wiſe Men have recommended to Monarchs; and we ſee that worldly Kings are the immediate Authors of a Pardon, but they appoint Judges for the Condemnation of Criminals. When we call to Mind, that the Devotion to the Virgin is a fruitful Source of gain to the Churches and Convents, we ſhall eaſily diſcover the Reaſon that has occaſion'd

(b) There are ſome at Rouen, Caen, &c.

(a) See Mr. Baſnage, ubi ſupra, pag. 1082; and Mr. Arnauld, Objections propoſ'd to Mr Steyaert, Part 1. pag. 60.

(b) The Jeſuit Oſorius ſaid this in a Sermon. See Mr. Drelincourt's Reply to the Biſhop of Belley, pag. 374.

(c) See Mr. Drelincourt, ibid.

(d) See Seneca Nat. Queſt. lib. 2. cap. 42, 43. See the Remark I. of the Article Pericles.

(e) Ἐγὼ δὲ φημὶ, ἐὰν ἀρχὴν τὸ μὲν ἀνάγκης ἀφεῖναι, ἄλλοις προσαγορεύειν ἄνασσαν καλλίονι, τῷδε τὸ ἄγαν ἀποδοῦναι, ἢ αὐτῷ κυρίῳ. Cenſeo itaque viro principi ſic agendum, ut ſi quis eget coactione, hunc aliis puniendum tradat: cæterum cum præmia reddenda ſunt his qui rem bene geſſerunt, id per ſe ipſum faciat, Xenophon Hier. pag. 584.

I will make an (N) Obſervation hereupon. It will not be uſeleſs to relate what a Miniſter of Paris alledged againſt a Biſhop (O), who ſeem'd to accuſe the Proteſtants of renewing the Hereſy of Neſtorius, with reſpect to the Epithet Mother of God.

NEVERS

a Diviſion ſo different from this, betwixt JESUS CHRIST and his Holy Mother, with reſpect to the Warrant of Juſtice, and the Patents of Grace (†). Nothing is more proper than this to make the Holy Virgin the principal, and almoſt the only Object of Prayers and Vows, and Pilgrimages; and even of Love and Gratitude, and all the internal Acts of Piety. Let us once more conſider the Court of Princes, the great Model of moſt Religions. Some Princes ſuffer themſelves to be ſo engroſs'd by a Favourite, that they beſtow no place but at his Recommendation. Preſent a Petition to them your ſelf; particularize all your Services; humbly beg, but as a juſt Recompence, the Government of a Town, and they'll refuſe you: Let the Favourite ſpeak for you the next Day, and they'll grant it upon the Spot. When things are reduc'd to this foot in a Court, more induſtry is employ'd to gain the good Will of the Favourite, than of the Monarch; and there is Reaſon for this Conduct, which Prudence will juſtifie. I go farther, and ſay, that Juſtice and Reaſon require, that ſuch as have obtain'd the Government of a Town by this way, ſhould think themſelves indebted not to the Prince their Maſter, but to his Favourite for it, and reſerve all their Acknowledgment and Friendſhip for him, as the true Cauſe of their Promotion. The Prince is only a remote and indirect Cauſe, an Accidental, indefinite and general Cauſe. He is the Fountain of Authority, but 'tis another that determines it, and applies it to the Profit and Advantage of ſuch and ſuch People. By this Repreſentation you ſee, that in the Hypotheſis of the Doctors, who ſay, that no Favours are beſtowed upon the Earth, but at the Nomination and Recommendation of the Holy Virgin; it is to her, and not to God, that each Private Man is indebted for his Fortune, and owes his Love and Acknowledgments. He could obtain nothing of God, if the Virgin did not concern her ſelf in it: And therefore to pay one's Devotion to her, is a Duty founded on good Senſe, and the Reaſons of it are demonſtrative ‡. Is it to be wonder'd at after this, that the Acts of Religion have received the Form we find in Popery? Is not this a good Diſcovery of their Foundation? However it be, the Worſhip of the Holy Virgin is grown to ſuch prodigious Exceſſes, and maintains it ſelf with ſo high a hand, that the Janſeniſts, who attempted to give their Advice upon this Subject, gain'd nothing by it: And for one Man that conforms to their Modifications, there are two Thouſand, literally ſpeaking, who follow Father Craſſet (f). Pray, conſider the Obſtacles met with in the Sorbonne (g), when the Book of a Spaniſh Nun was cenſur'd there. The propereſt means to put a ſtop to the Miſchief, would be to lay an interdict on Panegyricks, and to oblige the Votaries, who deſire to teſtify their Gratitude by their Liberalities, to ſend them not to the Virgin's Chapels, but to the Hoſpitals. A Preacher is not ignorant that his Auditors have been often preſent at the Panegyricks of Our Lady, and have read the fineſt Sermons that have been publiſh'd upon that Subject. If therefore he would be heard and admir'd, he muſt take a new flight, and ſoar higher than all thoſe that went before him; and this is a great Cauſe of Illuſion. The main thing would be to forbid, under the pain of Simony, all thoſe, who ſerve privileg'd Altars, and who preſide over the Worſhip, to receive the value of a Penny from any Votary. This would be the way to drain the Sources of the Legendaries, and Preachers, and of the pretended Miracles: But is not this an impracticable Method? Hoc Opus, hic Labor eſt.

(N) I will make an Obſervation upon a Note of Father Doucin.] When I compos'd the Article of Neſtorius, I knew in general, that Mr. du Pin had been brought into Trouble, amongſt other Reaſons for ſome things he had ſaid concerning this Hereſiarch: But I knew nothing in particular, either concerning the Propoſitions that were condemn'd, or the Recantations he was forc'd to make. I don't know much more at preſent; all my Informations are reduc'd to the Note of Father Doucin. However, I ſhall ſay, that to deſtroy the Conſequences of this Doctor of the Sorbonne's Teſtimony, it is not ſufficient to alledge his Retractation; for ſome retract for fear of being oppreſs'd; and others becauſe they have been dazled with ſome Reaſonings, which are weaker than the Proofs of their firſt Opinion. Upon Suppoſition, that Mr. du Pin has chang'd his Opinion, it remains to be enquir'd, whether it was, becauſe having examin'd the Controverſy of Neſtorianiſm a-freſh, he was convinc'd by internal Proofs, that he was miſtaken; or becauſe, knowing in general, that Neſtorius was condemn'd by an Oecumenical Council, he thought it the Duty of a good Catholick to acquieſce in that. In that caſe, notwithſtanding his Retractation, his firſt Opinion has ſtill ſome force in favour of Neſtorius: It may be concluded from it, that an able Divine, who had examin'd the Subject, was convinc'd by internal Proofs (I mean ſuch Proofs as the Proceſs affords) that there was a miſunderſtanding in it: But I confeſs, that this does not come up to what Father Doucin relates, concerning the Complaints of Neſtorius's old Diſciples. They maintain'd (h), That the Diſpute betwixt this Prelate and St. Cyril, was only about Words, and that the Explication he gave to his firſt Sermons was conformable to what we at preſent believe .... Nay farther, they produced many of his Writings; in which he complains, that his Propoſitions (1) have been mutilated and falſified; that eſſential Words have been ſuppreſſed, and others added that were none of his; that a Senſe has been foiſted in quite oppoſite to his own; and that by theſe deteſtable Artifices Celeſtin, and others, that is, the Fathers of Epheſus, were ſurpriz'd; that he makes no ſcruple to give Mary the Title of Mother of God, provided only it be not taken in the Senſe of Arius and Apollinarius. (2) What Neſtorius ſaid was conſtantly repeated by Helladius, Theodoret, Ibas, Irenæus, and others; that a Thouſand Falſhoods had been father'd on Neſtorius; that neither he, nor any one that they knew, had ever divided Chriſt, or acknowledg'd more than one only Son of God; that the Term (3) Hypoſtatick Union, had indeed been rejected as unknown to the Ancients, and as ſignifying a neceſſary and purely natural Union betwixt the two Natures; but that St. Cyril himſelf had yielded to the force of his Reaſons, by ſuppreſſing this Term, when the Peace of the Church was treated of. 'Tis certain, that to diſ-engage Cyril from the burden this lays upon him, we muſt have recourſe to the infallibility of Councils as to the determinations of matters of Fact. See the Obſervations that Father Doucin has made to maintain it, and to refute the Diſtinctions of the Gentlemen of Port-Royal.

(O) A Miniſter of Paris alledged againſt a Biſhop who ſeem'd to accuſe the Proteſtants of renewing the Hereſy of Neſtorius.] Thus Mr. le Camus, Biſhop of Belley ſpeaks, addreſſing himſelf to Mr. Drelincourt: "(a) "You muſt give me leave, by the bye, to tell you, that "I never met with the Term Mother of God, in your "Writers; that you your ſelf, who ſeem more favou"rable to this Divine Mother, ſtudiouſly avoid it, as "a Rock; and that in the Conferences and Converſa"tions I have had for thirty Years with thoſe of your "Confeſſion, I have found ſuch an Averſion to this "Title, that they never make uſe of it; inſomuch, "that ſome of them being preſs'd, have denied it "with anger; as if the Mother of Chriſt, and the "Mother of God were two things, or that Chriſt "was not God: Which ſtrikes and oppoſes "the Hypoſtatick Union, and the Communication of "Idioms: You may conſider of it, if you pleaſe." Mr. Drelincourt anſwer'd, 1ſt. That (b) the belief of the Reform'd Churches is perfectly conformable to that of the Ancient Church, with reſpect to the two Natures of JESUS CHRIST in the Unity of Perſon; 2. That, though this Term, Mother of God, is not found in Scripture; the thing ſignified by it is clearly there (c); 3. That above ten Years ago he had printed a little Book, concerning the Honour that was due to the holy and bleſſed Virgin; in which Treatiſe are theſe Words, We make no ſcruple to ſay with the Ancients, that the Virgin Mary is the Mother of God (d); 4. That the Biſhop of Belley having read this Book, and having notwithſtanding ſaid what he has ſaid, had publiſh'd a Thing (e), the contrary whereof is an evident Truth; 5. That none of the Proteſtant Doctrines could be impugn'd (f) by the Title, Mother of God; and that no Man well inſtructed in their Religion will refuſe to give it to the Virgin Mary: 6. (g) "That if the Title of Mother of God, is not "found ſo frequently in our Authors, as that of "Mother of Jeſus, it is not that they are ſo ignorant "as to imagine that theſe are two different Things, or "two Expreſſions that do not ſignify the ſame; or "that they are ſo impious as not to believe, that "Jeſus

† Note, That 'tis pretended that the Holy Virgin not only diſtributes all Graces, but frequently diverts the Acts of the Juſtice of God; and thus ſhe poſſeſſes her own Dominion entire, and beſides extends her Authority to that which J. CHRIST has reſerved to himſelf.

‡ Note, That a Prince, who gives at the Recommendation of a Favourite, what he would refuſe without this, to a Gentleman, does not give it to the Gentleman, but to the Favourite; therefore the Gentleman's Acknowledgment muſt be to the Favourite, and the Prince has no pretenſions but to the Favourite's Gratitude.

(f) I make uſe of this Example, becauſe the Jeſuit Craſſet is one of thoſe who have moſt highly condemn'd the Author of the Virgin's wholſome Advice to her indiſcreet Votaries. See Mr. Jurieu's Preſervative, pag. 108 &c. and Mr. Arnauld in his Reflexions upon [illegible] p. 15.

(g) See the Art. [illegible]

(h) Doucin Hiſtory of Neſtorianiſm pag. 562.

(1) Synodic. cap. 6.

(2) Synodic. cap. 3 & 4.

(3) Oriental. Object. ad Cyril. Anathem. 3.

(a) Le Camus, Biſhop of Belley, anſwer to Drelinc. pag. 85.

(b) Drelincourt's Reply to the Biſhop of Belley's Anſwer, pag. 292.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 293.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 294.

(e) Ibid. pag. 295.

(f) Ibid. pag. 296.

(g) Id. ib.

NEVERS (JOHN of Burgundy Count of) in the XVth. Century, was very ill treated by the laſt Duke of Burgundy (A), though he had the Honour to be his Relation. This Duke oblig'd him to * renounce the Dutchies of Brabant and Limbourg, and the Lands beyond the Meuſe, by a forc'd Contract the 22 of March 1465. He degraded him alſo from the Order (B) of the Golden Fleece. This Count † died at Nevers the 25th of September 1491, at 76 Years of Age ‖. He was born at Clameci the 25th of October 1415 ‡. The County of Eu deſcended to him by his Maternal ⸸ Uncle in the Year 1472 †. He was married thrice, and (C) left but two Legitimate Daughters, and ‡ three Baſtards.

NEUFGERMAIN (LEWIS de) a French Poet, ſomewhat mad, to ſay no worſe, lived in the Reign of Lewis XIII. He ſerv'd for a Diverſion to the Duke of Orleans, Cardinal Richelieu, and the Wits of that time. He ſtiled himſelf (A) Heteroclite Poet of Monſeigneur only Brother to his Majeſty. His darling Method was to make Verſes that ended with the Syllables of the Names of thoſe whom he prais'd. 'Twas a Rack that made him invent a thouſand Impertinencies, and ſuch Ridiculous Nonſenſe, that we need not wonder it was a Diverſion to propoſe Names to him that gave him ſome exerciſe. I queſtion too whether he was not made uſe of to intermix ſome Satyrical Touches amongſt his Praiſes, I mean that better Wits ſometimes help'd him to make his Verſes. Thoſe he made for Mr. Godeau and Mr. Conrart, ſeem to favour this Conjecture. The one was not a Man of a great Mien, and of a tall proper ſize; the other did not underſtand Latin: It ſeems then that there was ſomething of Malignity in their Elogy, and that a better Maſter than Neufgermain had a hand in it. I leave the Judgment of it to my Readers. They'll find (B) below the Verſes I ſpeak of. There are hardly any more ingenious Pieces

* Labbe Tableaux Genealog. p. 263. Anſelm Hiſtory of the Royal Family, pag. 218.

† Fabert Hiſt. of the Dukes of Burgundy, Tom. 1. pag. 155.

‖ Labbe, ubi ſupra.

‡ Anſelm ubi ſupra.

⸸ Charles of Artois Brother to Bonna of Artois Mother to this Count of Nevers.

† Anſelm, ib.

‡ Labbe, ibid. pag 264.

" Jeſus Chriſt is God. But they uſe this Method with " an holy Prudence. They conſider, that, God be " thank'd, this Kingdom is not afflicted with the Ne- " ſtorian Peſt: and that there is no need of ſeeking " Precautions againſt an Error that is aboliſh'd. But " that there are ſuch as Deify the Virgin Mary, and " make her a Goddeſs; and that 'tis to be fear'd, " that the things which are in themſelves moſt true, " moſt holy, and innocent, may help to encourage " them in their Error." At laſt the Miniſter makes this Declaration: (b) I proteſt before God and his Holy Angels, that I firmly believe the Holy Virgin to be the Mother of God: And that I am ready to ſign this Truth with my own Blood. Nevertheleſs, I declare with the greateſt Freedom, that, for fear of ſcandalizing ignorant People, I don't delight to make uſe of theſe Terms, without explaining them at the ſame time. For all are not capable of underſtanding what your and our Schools mean by the Communication of Idioms. Inſtead of attributing to the Perſon what belongs to the two Natures, whether by Miſtake or groſs Ignorance, they aſcribe to one of the Natures what only agrees to the other. When they hear that the Virgin is the Mother of God, they don't preſently comprehend that ſhe is not his Mother, as he is God: But by a confuſed Notion they imagine ſhe is as properly the Mother of his Divinity, as of his Humanity. I have met with thoſe of your Communion, who conceive this Title, Mother of God, in the groſſeſt manner imaginable.

(b) Id. Dreline. ib. pag. 297.

This will ſerve to confirm what has been inſinuated in the Remark A, concerning Nellonius's Bear, that this Epithet, Mother of God, ſhould be abus'd; and manifeſt at the ſame time the circumſpections of the Miniſters, and their Cauſes.

(A) He was very ill treated by the laſt Duke of Burgundy.... his Relation.] He was Son to Philip de Bourgogne, Count of Nevers, Rethel and Etampes, who was kill'd in the Battle of Azincourt in 1415, whoſe Father was Philip the Hardy, Duke of Burgundy, Son of King John. This Philip Count of Nevers, married for his ſecond Wife the Daughter of the Count of Artois; by whom he had two Sons Charles and John (i). The former died without Legitimate Poſterity, the latter makes the Subject of this Article. 'Tis eaſy to perceive the degree of his Relation with Charles the laſt Duke of Burgundy, when we remember that Philip the Hardy Duke of Burgundy was great grand Father to this Charles.

(i) Taken from Pontus Heuterus. lib. 6. rerum burgandicarum. See alſo Father Labbe in his Tableaux Genealogiques, p. 262.

(B) He degraded him alſo from the Order of the Golden Fleece.] Peter Matthieu will acquaint us with an important Fact hereupon. Philip de Crevecœur Lord of Etquerdes, ſays he (k), receiv'd the Collar of the Golden Fleece, in the firſt Solemnity of the Order that the Duke Charles made at Bruges after the Death of his Father, when the Count of Nevers was degraded more unworthily, than the reſpect due to his Family gave him reaſon to expect from a Prince his near Relation. His Marginal Note is more valuable than the Text, which is this. " Duke Charles of Burgundy renewed the Or- " der of the Fleece the 7th, 8th and 9th of May at Bru- " ges, and caus'd the place to be colour'd Black, where " the Arms of the Count of Nevers were to be plac'd, " with theſe Words, which are found in a M.S. Chro- " nicle of the King's Library. The Count of Nevers, be- " ing ſummon'd by the Leters Patents of the moſt high, and " moſt excellent Prince, and my redoubted Lord, Mon- " ſeigneur the Duke, ſeal'd with his Seal of the Order " of the Fleece, to appear in Perſon in the preſent Chap- " ter, there to anſwer for his Honour, concerning a " caſe of Magick, and for abuſing the Holy Sacraments of " his Church, has not preſented himſelf nor appear'd; " but has made default. And to avoid the " Proceſs and Privation of the Order to be made " againſt him, has ſent back the Collar; and for that " has been, and is declar'd out of the Order, and not " invited to the Offering." A modern Hiſtorian affirms (l), that Philip the Good diſturb'd to ſee our Count of Nevers in the Party of Charles VII. King of France, caus'd him to be raz'd out of the Order of the Fleece. Note, that this Count was made a Knight (m) in the ninth Chapter held at the Hague the 12th of May 1456; and that the firſt Chapter held by Duke Charles was the Eleventh: It was held at Bruges in 1468 (n).

(k) Peter Matthieu Hiſt. of Lewis XI. Book 11. p. m. 750.

(l) Fabert Hiſt. of the Dukes of Burgundy. Tom. 1. pag. 155.

(m) Gollut, Memoirs of Franche Comté, pag. 738.

(n) Id. ib. pag. 742.

(C) He was married thrice, and left but two Legitimate Daughters.] I. In the Year 1435 with Jacqueline d' Ailli Daughter to Raoul, Vidame of Amiens and Lord of Pequigny, by whom he had one Daughter, who was Wife to John Duke of Cleves. II. In 1475 with Paula de Bretagne Daughter to John de Baſſe Count de Penthieure, by whom he had one Daughter, who was married to John d' Albret Sire d' Orval. III. In 1480 with Frances d' Albret Daughter to Arnauld-Amanjeu Sire d' Orval, (a) and Siſter to (b) this John: She had no Children.

(a) Taken from Father Labbe in his Tableaux Geneal. p. 263; and from Father Anſelm, pag. 218, & ſeq.

(b) Pontus Heuterus, ubi ſupra.

(A) He ſtiled himſelf Heteroclite Poet of Monſeigneur.] Let no one imagine that the Wits, who by his means diverted the Duke of Orleans, Cardinal Richelieu, &c. gave him this Title without his accepting it. 'Tis certain he took it very ſeriouſly, and made it one of his Titles in the front of his Works. For theſe are the Words of the Licenſe which he obtain'd of the King for the Impreſſion of his Poetry in 1637. Our well-beloved Lewis de Neufgermain, having expreſs'd his Deſire of a ſecond Impreſſion of the firſt and ſecond part of a Book, entituled, Les Poeſies & Rencontres du Sieur de Neufgermain, Heteroclite Poet of our moſt dear and only Brother the Duke of Orleans; and fearing leſt others ſhould print it, which might turn to his prejudice, requir'd our Letters to this purpoſe: And for theſe Cauſes, we being willing to gratifie the ſaid Neuf-germain, have permitted, and do permit him, &c.

(B) They'll find below the Verſes I ſpeak of.] We'll firſt ſet down thoſe he made for Mr. Conrart: He calls him Conrat, whether the pronunciation of the Pariſians † made him miſtake the Orthography of the Name; or that the Syllable rat ſeem'd more favourable to him than that of rart.

† That is of many Pariſians.

To Monſieur CONRAT.
The Syllables of the Name ending the Verſes.

Ainſi (c) que l'on parloit des rats de Taraſcon,
Quelqu'un me dit, tout mont peut engendrer un rat:

(c) Neufgermain, part 2. of his Poeſies & Rencontres, pag. 102, 103.

Pieces in Voiture, than thoſe which he made (C) to ridicule this Heteroclite Poet. Neufgermain's Anſwer ſhews (D) that he was routed; the Blow had ſtunn'd him. He never knew leſs what he ſaid than on this occaſion.

† Panzirolus, ubi infra, c. 154.

NEVIZAN (JOHN) a Civilian, born at Aſti in Piedmont, was Diſciple of † Francis Curtius Profeſſor in the Univerſity of Padua. He publiſh'd amongſt other Works (A) a Tract intituled, Sylva Nuptialis; in which he diſcovered his Inclination to vent things of Wit and Humour, and a Learning ſeaſon'd with diverting Curioſities. He interwove

A quoy je reſpondis, excepté Helicon,
Car il eſt ſacré ſainct, autre que (d) Monſerat,
Et c'eſt ſur Helicon que fut nourry Conrat.
Il ſçait parler latin, il ſçait parler gaſcon,
Grave, ſententieux, diſert, nunquam errat,
Juſques-là qu'il vainquit diſputant dans Macon
Un Docteur Maconnois, & l'envoya au grat (e),
Chercher ſon Calepin pour ſe prendre à Conrat.
S'il ne harangue en chaire, il harangue en Balcon,
Zelateur de vertu, contraire au ſcelerat,
Puis boit l'eau d'Hipocrene à plein broc ou flacon,
Aux vivans & defunctz, full-ce au grand Amurat,
Ayant ſoif & ſans ſoif, cet excellent Conrat.
Il ſçait de quel genre eſt dans Deſpautere Icon,
Seigner, tater le poux, appliquer le cerat:
Si quelque belle il voit, il dit, ô bon bocon!
Ses beautez admirant, & ſon bel apparat,
Puis de ſes beaux diſcours les charme ſe Conrat.
Plus qu'Orphee puiſſant, il peut ſans Lexicon
Arreſter de propos le ſoleil, dum migrat,
L'Aigle volant en l'air, le Duc & le Faucon,
Par terre le Lion, & l'eſcumant Verrat,
Baleines prendre en mer par ſes accens Conrat.
Dans un livre il fait voir qu'au pris d'un patacon
Les teſtes des proſcripts mit le Triomvirat:
Et comme il les jouoit à la chance & tycon,
Recompenſant celuy qui hæc attulerat,
Tant eſt ſcientieux & rare ce Conrat.

(d) It ſhould be Monſerrat.

(e) Furetiere at the Word grat tells us, that envoier au grat ſignifies to give a rebuff, to drive away, to ſend about one's buſineſs.

Let us proceed to thoſe he made for Mr. Godeau. I am perſwaded it will not be taken amiſs that I relate theſe two Examples: For it was neceſſary to relate ſome, ſince otherwiſe in foreign Countries hardly any one could have a juſt Idea of the Character of this Heteroclite Poet.

To Monſieur GODEAU.

The Syllables of the Name ending the Verſes.

La (f) belle & gentille Margo,
Trouvée n'aguere au bord d'eau,
Puiſant, puiſa un eſcargo,
Dont elle fit ſi bon chaudeau,
Qu'il n'en reſta point à Godeau.
Dedans ſon lict en ſon gogo,
Encourtinée d'un rideau,
Remuant la gigue, ou gigo,
Chantoit un air en go, en d'eau,
En faveur de Monſieur Godeau.
Luy ſeul a trouvé le mugo,
D'eloqueme, proſe & rondeau;
Car plus charmant qu'un Larigo,
Meinte fere marche en bedeau;
Portant maſſes devant Godeau.
Venus luy donna ſon mago,
Atlas luy offrit ſon fardeau,
Diane, Taiol & Rago,
Et le beau Phebus, ce blondeau,
Donna ſes (g) chevaux à Godeau:
D'un nom ſi divin, origo
Eſt, que liée d'un cordeau,
Diſoit une pie, ou margo,
Got eo, ſive God eo, (1)
Voyant marcher Monſieur Godeau.
Ses feſtins couſtent un lingo,
En Nectar, lapin, hetondeau,
Puis qu'enſemble à tirlarigo,
Boivent, mangeans le fezandeau,
Apollon, Minerve, & Godeau.

(f) Neufgermain, ibid, pag. 125, 126.

(g) Probably a Fault of the Preſs inſtead of Cheveux.

(1) Incedo Deus.

(C) Than thoſe which Voiture made to ridicule this Poet.] He made 1. a Ballad in favour of Neufgermain's Works. 2. An anſwer to the (h) complaints of the Conſonants, which have not the Honour to enter into Neufgermain's Name. 3. A requeſt to Monſieur de Puylaurens in Nenfgermain's Name. 4. Some Verſes after Neufgermain's Stile to Monſieur d'Avaux, the Letters of the Name ending the Verſes. All theſe Pieces are full of Wit: The Anſwer to the Complaint of the Conſonants was made under Jupiter's Name. 'Tis an excellent Piece; and yet Mr. de Girac found ſome Faults in it, which Mr. Coſtar could hardly apologize for with all his Subtilties and Collections.

(h) Tis amongſt Voiture's Poems. Mr. Patris the Author of it.

(D) Neufgermain's Anſwer ſhews that he was routed.] Mr. de Girac, amongſt other things, criticized as a Falſhood what Jupiter affirm'd concerning the Vowels; namely, that they all enter'd into Neufgermain's Name. This can't be true, but by ſuppoſing it written Nœufgermain. You'll ſee what ſtrange Nonſenſe this Heteroclite Poet diſcharged upon this Fault of Voiture: "(i) Take it which way you will, Mr. de "Voiture is ſtill to be blamed; for if he did not put "an o into the Word Neufgermain, he is out in his "reckoning, ſince there wants a Vowel; if he did, "he did amiſs to put it, ſince it ought not to be "there, as Neufgermain himſelf urges upon him.

" Il bâtit en l'air des chaſteaux,
" Par diphtongue il fait mots nouveaux,
" Par oe de Nœufgermanje,
" Et brouillant un nom glorieux
" Bedeleufgermicopſantiſe (a)
" Au mépris des hommes & Dieux.
" Qui deut monſtrer qu'en ce beau nom
" Toutes voyelles ſont ſi non
" O, qui par ſa forme Spherique
" Environnant cét Univers,
" Rend le charactere d'Aſrique
" Confrere de celui d'Anvers."

(i) Girac Anſwer to the Defence of Voiture's Works, Section 26. p. 196.

(a) Note, That in the Anſwer to the Complaint of the Conſonants, Jupiter declares, that this Poet's Name ought to be Bdeleneufgermicopſant.

(A) A Tract entituled, Sylva Nuptialis.] Mr. Marais Advocate in the Parliament of Paris, was ſo obliging as to write me Word that he hath a Gothick Edition of this Work, Printed at Paris by Kerver in the Year 1521: That it is not therefore true, that Nevizan finiſh'd it in the Year 1522, as Mr. Simon (b) affirms, who compos'd a little Bibliotheque of Civilians; that the Title of this Paris Edition contains this; Sylva nuptialis, bonis referta non modicis, nunc te lector obnixe rogat ut je aſpicias, deinde quod ſcriptum eſt legas, & protinus viſis opuſculi annotamentis, cum indice alphabetico contentorum narrativo, lætaberis gaudio maximo; that the Author has collected all that is ſaid for and againſt Women; that there are many original Things in this Book; that the Author ſays, that God became Man, and pardon'd Mankind, only becauſe the Holy Virgin was handſome. Imo Deus optimus maximus ob pulchræ & decoræ filiæ Jeruſalem immaculatam virginitatem generi humano ſibi infeſto pepercit & homo factus eſt; that for this Romanus's Counſels are cited, with the Page, Line and Word; that theſe Words are alſo to be found in it: ſi mulieri non ſatisfit de veſtibus & carnibus, ipſa ſatisfacit de cornibus; that God, if we believe Nevizan, did not caſt all the bad Angels into Hell, but ſent ſome of them into Womens Bodies to make Men mad. This Compilation, adds Mr. Marais, abounds with ſuch Things as theſe.

(b) Counſellor in the preſidial Court of Beauvais. See the 15th Journal of the Learned 1693. p. m. 246. & 1695. pag. 270.

I don't think the Paris Edition in 1521 is the firſt; and I wonder that Geſner and his Continuators have been ſo negligent with reſpect to the Sylva Nuptialis: They note no Edition nor any particularity of it, and yet it has been look'd on as a moſt curious Book, and many Editions have been made of it. I have that of Lions, apud Antonium de Harſy 1572 in 8vo. The whole Title runs thus: Sylvæ Nuptialis libri ſex, in quibus ex dictis Moder. materia Matrimonii, Dotium, Filiationis, Adulterii, Originis, Succeſſionis, & Monitorialium pleniſſimè diſcutitur: Una cum remediis ad ſedandum factiones Guelphorum & Giebelinorum. Item modus judicandi & exequendi juſſa Principum. Ad hæc, de authoritatibus Doctorum, privilegiisque miſerabilium perſonarum. Quæ omnia ex queſtione, An nulendum ſit, vel non, deſumpta ſunt. Joanne Nevizano Aſtenſi, Juriſconſulto clariſſimo, Authore. Omnia multo quàm antehac caſtigatiora: Indice etiam locupletiſſimo, ac Argumentis in ſingulos libros additis, auctiora reddita. The firſt thing we meet with after the Title is a Letter of the Civilian Achilles Alionius to the Author: It was written in 1522, and begins thus: Habuiſti aliquot (c) ante annos, Joh. nes Nevizane vir clariſſime, tuis genialibus atque ingenialibus Nuptiis, in amœniſſua illa tua Sylva, frequentes quotquot palatium habent interioris hominis, literarii p. bulæ, ac

(c) This proves that Nevizan's Book was printed ſome Years before 1521.

terwove with it large Collections of Slanders againſt the fair Sex. Some ſay that the Women of Piedmont, did not take it as a Jeſt, and that they reveng'd themſelves (B) cruelly upon him. He was never married, but he kept a Concubine, and had a Son by her, who was an Advocate, and was deprived of (C) all his Eſtate; and as an acceſſion to his Miſery, his extreme Poverty was attended with Madneſs. John Nevizan died in 1540. He had taken care to marry his Concubine *.

NICOLLE (PETER) one of the fineſt Pens in Europe, was born at Chartres in 1625. His Family hath been conſiderable (A) there for a long time. He adher'd to the Party of the Janſeniſts, and writ ‡ many Books in concert with Mr. Arnauld †, whoſe Faithful Companion he was in the ten or twelve laſt Years of his Retreat. 'Twas he who put Mr. Paſcal's (B) Provincial Letters into Latin, and added a Commentary

* Pancirol. lib. 2. tit. 3. de legum interpret. cap. 155.

‡ See the Book entituled, A curious Queſtion wherein Mr. Arnauld be an Heretick, &c. 1655. Ejuſd. Edit. 1656.

† Ibid.

verſatili libri gerulæque mentis addictum, atque eductum. Qui, poſtquam abſumpta fames, & amor compreſſus edendi, ita ad unum hilaritus tibi applauſere, ut Alcinoi Phæacum regis epulum à Smyrneo Mævone illuſtratum, & Didonis convivium, à Noſtrate Meleſigene celebratum, longo poſtpoſuerint intervallo. This Letter gives us to underſtand, that Nevizan had compos'd many Additions, which he would not publiſh. Alionus adviſes him to change his Reſolution, and to give, as ſoon as poſſible, this new Entertainment to curious Readers; and aſſures him, that Gabriel de Laude, Chancellor to the Duke of Savoy, will be his Patron, and drive into outer Darkneſs, as having not the Wedding Garment, all thoſe, who ſhall ſhew their diſlike of ſuch a Work. Eh jam fama conſtans, te prioribus nuptiis ampliores ac longè ornatiores (ſi conſummatis atque abſolutis rebus acceſſio fieri potest) ſuperconcinnaſſe: te tamen inaudito conſilio atque inſolenti ad eas neminem admiſſurum . . . . Is (Gabriel Laudenſis) tibi aſſertor ac vindex comparatus, ſi quem videnit tuis accubantem Nuptiis, ex his quibus ob ſiomachi moroſitatem, etiam odoratiſſima pigmenta putere ſolent; tanquam non habentem indumentum nuptiale, in tenebras detrudet exteriores. Et tunc te vel rigidi legant Catones. After this Letter of Alionus comes the Epiſtle Dedicatory of the Author to the Chancellor of Savoy. We there find that Nevizan had reſiſted the preſſing Sollicitations of his Friends, and refus'd them the publication of his Supplements, and amongſt other Reaſons that induc'd him to ſuppreſs them, this was none of the leaſt (d) viz. that, by the ill Reports that were ſpread concerning his Book, many Women had been provok'd againſt him. However he yields to Alionus's Civilities. We'll ſet down the beginning of this Epiſtle Dedicatory; it will conduce to the knowledge of the Hiſtory of the Book: Petierunt à me, Cancellarie illuſtris, & propè quotidianis convicis efflagitarunt plerique, ut lucubrationes & ſuppletiones quas ad Sylvam meam otioſiori ſtudio commentavi, in publicum ederem. Ingenuè fateor, repugnavi ſemper: adeo ut contra meos mores quibuſdam ſim viſus nimis auſterus. Non quod me pœniteret opus ipſum mutilum eſſe & mancum, quandoquidem impreſſorum incuria recentiùs adeo emerſerit, quod fecit autorum: etſi aliqui, In Sylvam ne ligna feras, quia copioſa videretur, aſſerirent. Ego tamen illam introjicere cogebar dicere, quàm pauper Achaia noſtra eſt. Sed differebam, quia otium non dabatur, &c. Of ſix Books the Work is compos'd of, the two firſt run upon the Theſis, that we ought not to marry; and the two following upon the Theſis, that we ought to marry. And therefore it can't be ſaid, that the Author condemns Marriage; he only relates the Arguments pro and con.

(d) Accedebat quorundam ſiniſtra ad mulieres relatio, qui de bono opere & in commendationem matrimonii, excuſo me, nonnullas earum concitaſſe. Nevizan. epiſt. dedic.

* I don't correct the Faults of the Edition I uſe.

(B) That the Women of Piedmont . . . . reveng'd themſelves cruelly upon him.] I have read this only in Francis de Billon's Book. 'Tis a Book that was printed at Paris in 1555, and entituled, The impregnable Fortreſs of the Honour of the Female Sex: In which we find theſe Words: "(e) To return to my Priſoners, the "ſecond is one Mr. John Nevizan, (a Civilian, as "'tis ſaid, but ill adviſed) who in the City of Turin, "ſome Years ago, ſhew'd himſelf ſo mad as to medi- "tate a Surprize, afterwards put by him into an open "Latin Impreſſion, upon the Honour of the fair Sex, "and eſpecially of the Piedmontez Ladies, which was "the Book entituled, The Forteſt of Marriage, full of "Detraction. Which Book, being found by the "Ladies of Turin to be a diffamatory Libel; its Au- "thor (here a Priſoner) was immediately ſeized, and "by them ſhamefully expell'd. 'Tis true, ſome time "after he obtain'd his Return from Exile, by means "of Submiſſion, and the Honourable Amende which "he made them on his Knees. Theſe two Latin Ver- "ſes being fix'd to his Fore-head, for an apparent "Sign of Penance.

(e) Billon impregnable Fortreſs. fol. 17. recto.

"Ruſticus eſt verè qui turpia dixit de Mulere,
"Nam ſcimus vere, quod omnes ſumus de Mulere.
"That is, He's a Ruſtick and a Fool, who diſparage "Women; for we all know we came from a Woman. "This Latin Rhyme ought not to be thought ridicu- "lous, for, tho' it was not made by one that was very "wiſe, yet it was made by a Man, (as being very "chaſte) who was capable of an Angelical Mind; "conſidering that after the fore-mentioned Of- "fenſe, he could never meet with a Woman (though "never ſo old) who would make his Bed; and the "noiſe of it is not yet huſh'd up in the Country. Thus "good Mr. John receiv'd his juſt Reward; for ha- "ving been at the pains to ſlander the Ladies."

(C) And was deprived (f) of all his Eſtate.] Panzirolus informs me of this, as alſo that Nevizan had a great Suit with Paul Viſca, that he died pendente lite, and made the Count de Montafia his Heir. I doubt not but he was related to this Count; for his Mother was Daughter to (a) Godfrey, Lord of Montafia.

(A) His Family hath been conſiderable there.] I prove it by the Teſtimony of Mr. Devizé. I mention not, ſays he, (b) the Family of the Nicoles. Every Body will tell you it is very antient at Chartres, and has furniſh'd Magiſtrates for above two hundred Years. At preſent its worthy Head is the Lieutenant-General of that Town. A little before he had ſpoken of our Nicolle's Father, and this is what he ſays of him. I am to tell you (c) of the Death of "Mr. Nicole, whom the City of Chartres "had choſen for its Advocate: 'Tis a conſiderable "loſs to Men of Letters. Though he was of a great "Age, he kept up with equal Conſtancy and Polite- "neſs, the high Reputation, his Pieces of Eloquence "had acquir'd him: He had the Eſteem of ma- "ny Perſons of the nobleſt Extraction. He com- "plimented in the name of the City their Royal "Highneſſes, when they paſs'd through Chartres, and "always with a general Applauſe. He was Father to the "illuſtrious Mr. Nicole, known to all the World for "his learned and pious Works, which he has pub- "liſh'd for the ſpace of thirty Years; particularly for "his Perpetuity of Faith, and lately by his Moral "Eſſays."

(a) Joannes Nevizanus Aſtenſis avum maternum habuit Gotfredum Montafiæ dominum Id. ibid. He cites Nevizan lib. 4. Sylvæ Nuptial. fol. m. 111.

(b) Deviz. Mercur. Gallant for October 1678. pag. 22 Edit. of Holland.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 20.

(B) Who put Mr. Paſcal's Provincial Letters into Latin.] We ſhould ſay, Letters to a Provincial, and not Provincial Letters, if we chuſe rather to conform to exactneſs, than to the Caprice of Cuſtom. But Grammar a part, let us ſay in an Hiſtorical way, that Mr. Nicolle, under the falſe Name of Guillelmus Wendrockius, is the Author of the Latin Tranſlation of Mr. Paſcal's Letters againſt the Jeſuits; to which he added ſome Annotations. The Doctor of the Sorbonne, who publiſh'd (d) the Prejugez legitimes contre le Janſeniſm in 1686, did not know at what time Mr. Nicolle had publiſh'd this Verſion. This Ignorance had done him no Injury, had he not grounded the Reaſons of his Conduct upon it: But making that uſe of it, he was ſomewhat ſeverely taken to taſk. We'll relate his Words, and thoſe of his Adverſary: "(e) "Theſe Gentlemen have newly compiled in their Ven- "derokius, all their moſt ſubtil and captious Writings "in Defenſe of Janſenius; they have put them in "Latin and publiſh'd 'em in Europe, without fear of "diſturbing that profound Peace, for which they pre- "tend to be great Zealots, when they are written "againſt. 'Tis therefore juſt, that the Children of "Light ſhould not ſuffer themſelves to be excell'd in "Wiſdom by the Children of Darkneſs: They would "doubtleſs be chargeable with a moſt criminal Neg- "ligence, if they had leſs Zeal for the Defenſe of "Truth, than the Church's Enemies have for the De- "fence of Errors." Mr Arnaud anſwer'd him as follows; (f) If our Savoy Doctor had himſelf read the Book, of which probably he ſpeaks only from ſome wretched Memorial that has been given him, he would have known that it is not called Venderokius, but Wendrockius, That

(c) Prejugez legitimes contre le Janſeniſme, Pref. pag. ††6.

(f) Phantome du Janſeniſme, chap. 1. pag. 4. at the 5 Th book was printed in 1686.

tary to them. He did not follow Mr. Arnauld when he left the Kingdom in 1679, and he even conſented, as 'tis ſaid, to an Accommodation with the Jeſuits; which conſiſted in engaging to do nothing againſt them, but not to break with his old Friends. One of his fineſt Works is that entituled, Moral Eſſays. What he writ againſt the Proteſtants is very ſubtil. Never were the Objections againſt Schiſm more forcibly urged, nor the Difficulties of the way of Enquiry. But many wiſe Men are of Opinion, that he had better have ſuppreſs'd than publiſh'd this: For beſides that the Romiſh Church is no Gainer by it, ſince all the Arguments of Mr. Nicolle are retorted againſt her; his Works, together with the Anſwers made to them, may unhappily confirm in their evil Depoſitions all thoſe that have a Biaſs (C) towards Scepticiſm; and who conſider

(f) Printed at Paris in 1671, and in Holland in 1683.

(m) Printed at Paris in 1684, and reprinted in Holland the ſame Year. See the News from the Republick of Learning Nov. 1684. Article 1.

(a) See the ſame News, &c. ubi ſupra, pag. 888.

(b) Mr. Turretin the Son maintain'd ſome fine Theſes at Leiden Author & reſpondens, in 1692. intituled, Pyrrhonismus Pontificius, five Theſes Theologico-Hiſtoricæ de variationibus Pontificiorum circa Eccleſiæ infallibilitatem. See alſo Mr. de la Placette's Book de inſanabili Romanæ Eccleſiæ Scepticiſmo, Printed at Amſterdam in 4°. The Leipſic Journaliſts give the Extract of it in their Month of June. 1697. pag. 264. & ſeq. It was printed in Engliſh at London in 1688.

(c) It was printed at Rouen in 1673, and in Holland 1682.

(d) See Mr. Jurieu's true Syſtem of the Church. Printed at Dort in 1686. Chap. 19. Book 2. p. 333, & ſeq.

That it is not a Compilation of what was moſt ſubtilly written in Defenſe of Janſenius, but a Tranſlation of the Provincial Letters into Latin, with Notes and Diſſertations, wherein the greateſt Principles of Chriſtian Morality are explain'd in an eloquent, edifying and ſolid manner: And that this Book being written and publiſh'd above ten Years before the Peace, nothing is more ridiculous, than to ſuppoſe it is NEWLY that theſe Gentlemen have compiled and publiſh'd it thro'out Europe, without any fear of diſturbing the Peace: As if there was any danger of troubling the Peace ten Years before it was made. Nevertheleſs he triumphs, after ſo many Falſhoods and Impertinences, and draws this abuſive Concluſion. 'Tis therefore juſt that the Children of Light ſhould not ſuffer themſelves to be excell'd in Wiſdom by the Children of Darkneſs; they would doubtleſs be chargeable with a moſt criminal Negligence, if they had leſs Zeal for the Defenſe of Truth than the Churche's Enemies have for the Defenſe of Error. We leave it to thoſe who have read Wendrock, and the Savoy Doctor, to give each of them the place they ſhall think in their Conſcience belongs to them, amongſt the Children of Light, or amongſt the Children of Darkneſs.... What is certain, is, that the Savoyard Doctor reckoning it a piece of Prudence and Zeal to have writ ſince the Peace, without concerning himſelf whether he troubled it, it is moſt falſe that he could be induc'd to this ſort of Prudence, by the Example of Wendrock, who wrote a long time before the Peace. Father Honorat Fabri a famous Jeſuit anſwer'd this Work of Mr. Nicolle: His Anſwer was printed under the fictitious Name (g) of Bernardus Stubrockius. He inſerted it afterwards entire (h) in a Book entituled, R. P. Honorati Fabri Societatis Jeſu Theologi Apologeticus Doctrinæ moralis ejuſdem Societatis. This Work of Stubrock was put into the Index; and, which is ſtrange, that of Wendrock was not, though the Jeſuits had endeavour'd it, and the Provincial Letters had been put into it. Which occaſion'd a Janſeniſt to ſay, that they were only put into the Index, becauſe they were in French, and without the Name of the Author, &c. Theſe are his Words: "(i) The general Applauſe that was, and is ſtill given "to the Provincial Letters, and the Fruit the Church has "reap'd from them, no Body before that Author, having ſo well diſcover'd the pernicious Relaxations of "the modern Caſuiſts, are a juſt Reaſon to believe "they were only put into the Catalogue of prohibited "Books, becauſe they came out without the Author's "Name, without Approbation, or the place of the "Impreſſion; or elſe becauſe, being in the vulgar "Tongue, it was fear'd they might give occaſion to "the People to leſſen their Eſteem for a famous Society; and not becauſe there was any bad Doctrine or "Calumny found in them. An Argument that this "muſt be ſo, is, that the ſame Letters having been "tranſlated into Latin by William Wendrock, with "Notes, which juſtifie the Citations, though this "Book had been brought to the Inquiſition at the "ſame time with the Apology of the Caſuiſts, as Father "Fabri witneſſeth in his Note in Notas, promiſing himſelf that Wendrock's Book ſhould not eſcape the Cenſure: Nullus dubito, ſaid he (ſpeaking to Wendrock) "quin tuus in Catalogum Librorum prohibitorum referendus ſit: Yet he was found to be a falſe Prophet, "Wendrock's Book having not been cenſur'd, whilſt "that Jeſuit's Note in Notas was." 'Tis confeſs'd in the new Anſwer made to the Provincial Letters, that Wendrock's Book had a wonderful Succeſs. (k) Theſe Letters after the tenth, were not meer Attacks; for Paſcal was obliged to ſtand upon the defenſive, becauſe the Jeſuits pretended to have convicted the Port-Royaliſts of a great many Impoſtures, about which it had not been honourable to be altogether ſilent. Mr. Nicolle, under the Name of Wendrock, came ſome time after to his Aſſiſtance; or rather he was let looſe by the Party to compleat the Rout of the Jeſuits. He ſpoke confidently in the Latin Commentaries, which he added to his Tranſlation of the Provincial Letters: In which he treats the Jeſuits as wretched Creatures. All this ſucceeded beyond what could be expected.

(g) See the 4th Denunciation of the Philoſophical Sin at the end of the Preface.

(h) Ibid. pag. 22.

(i) Difficulties propoſ'd to Mr. Steyaert, part 9. pag. 40, 41.

(k) Anſwer to the Provincial Letters or Diſcourſes of Cleandre, and Eudoxus, Preſident, of the Dutch Church at Paris.

(C) Confirm .... thoſe that have a Biaſs towards Scepticiſm.] I have in view only two Works of Mr. Nicolle: One (l) is intituled, Well-grounded Prejudices againſt the Calviniſts; and the other (m), the pretended Reformed convicted of Schiſm. In the firſt I only conſider the fourteenth Chapter, where the Author pretends to ſhew, That the way propoſ'd by the Calviniſts to teach Men the Truth, is ridiculous and impoſſible. He ſays there is no Man that can be reaſonably inſtructed this way, without being certain; 1ſt. That the Scripture Paſſages, alledg'd to him, are taken from a Canonical Book; 2. That they agree with the Original; 3. That there are not ſeveral ways of reading them which weaken their Authority. After this Mr. Nicolle plays all the Engines of his Rhetorick, to ſhew in particular the Difficulties that are found in the Diſcuſſion of theſe three Points. He drives this much further in another Book, in which he pretends that they who left the Roman Communion in the XVIth Century, could not do it without extream Raſhneſs, unleſs they had an exact Knowledge of the Reaſons for and againſt it; and in general of all the Objections that might be form'd upon the Paſſages of Scripture offer'd on both ſides. He ſhews what they were oblig'd to do in order to have a due Certainty that it was their Duty to leave the Romiſh Church, and come over to the Proteſtants: And he introduces ſo many Diſcuſſions into the Enquiry that muſt lead to ſuch a Certainty, that there is not a Reader but will perceive, that among ten Thouſand Perſons, it would be hardly poſſible to find four capable of this Duty. What Fruit has he reap'd from ſo many Meditations? An Advantage which terminates in himſelf; the Reputation of a ſubtil Diſputant, and of a Philoſophical Divine, who is able to maintain any Cauſe, and to carry Difficulties as far as they will go. But he has done nothing for his Party: For Mr. Claude, who has anſwer'd his firſt Book, and Mr. Jurieu, who has anſwer'd the other, have manifeſtly ſhewn that a Man is expos'd to all the ſame Difficulties in the Roman Communion: And moreover, that he muſt launch into the Ocean of Tradition, and run thro' all the Ages of the Church, all the Hiſtory of the Councils, and that of the Diſpute concerning the Pope's Authority inferiour to Councils, according to ſome; and Superiour to them, according to others: So that the way of Authority, by which the Roman Catholicks profeſs to guide themſelves, is the high Road to Scepticiſm. A Man who would be juſtly aſſur'd that he ought to ſubmit to the Authority of the Church, is obliged to know, whether to the Scripture will have it ſo. And thus you ſee him expos'd (a) to all the Diſcuſſions of Mr. Nicolle: And he muſt know beſides whether the Doctrine of the Fathers, and of all the Ages of Chriſtianity, is agreeable to the Submiſſion he would have. He muſt be ſtrangely indefatigable, if he does not chooſe rather to doubt of every thing, than to engage in ſo many Inquiries; and he muſt be very ſubtil, if taking all the neceſſary pains he at laſt diſcovers the Light: 'Tis therefore the way to (b) Scepticiſm. Mr. Claude's Anſwer to Mr. Nicolle, intituled (c), A Defenſe of the Reformation, is a Maſter-Piece. He has not only retorted his Adverſary's Objections, but has alſo directly cleared them, in a way that edifies pious Souls, without teaching the Libertines the Method of inſulting Religion. Many would be glad that as much might be ſaid of Mr. Nicolle's other Adverſary: but this can't be done without groſs Flattering. He has not been contented to teach the Jews (d) how to convince their Anceſtors, who embrac'd the Goſpel, and finally declared the Synagogue to be a falſe Religion, of an egregi-

(l) Printed at Paris in 1671, and in Holland in 1683.

(m) Printed at Paris in 1684, and reprinted in Holland the ſame Year. See the News from the Republick of Learning Nov. 1684. Article 1.

(a) See the ſame News, &c. ubi ſupra, pag. 888.

(b) Mr. Turretin the Son maintain'd ſome fine Theſes at Leiden Author & reſpondens, in 1692. intituled, Pyrrhonismus Pontificius, five Theſes Theologico-Hiſtoricæ de variationibus Pontificiorum circa Eccleſiæ infallibilitatem. See alſo Mr. de la Placette's Book de inſanabili Romanæ Eccleſiæ Scepticiſmo, Printed at Amſterdam in 4°. The Leipſic Journaliſts give the Extract of it in their Month of June. 1697. pag. 264. & ſeq. It was printed in Engliſh at London in 1688.

(c) It was printed at Rouen in 1673, and in Holland 1682.

(d) See Mr. Jurieu's true Syſtem of the Church. Printed at Dort in 1686. Chap. 19. Book 2. p. 333, & ſeq.

ous

sider not with sufficient Attention the Spirit and Character of the Christian Religion. His Treatise concerning the Unity of the Church shews a masterly Hand, and yet he has ous Rashness; but has forg'd I know not what ridiculous Distinction (c) of an Enquiry of Discussion, and an Enquiry of Attention, as absurd as that of formal Quantity in order to it self, and actual Quantity in order to place; Quantitas formalis in ordine ad se, & quantitas actualis in ordine ad locum, which make the Romish Schools ring: And he has granted that the Faithful don't embrace Orthodoxy, by evident Proofs, but by Proofs of Sentiment, and that they discern Truth by Taste, and not by distinct Ideas. This Dispute has had some Consequences: on one hand Mr. Peliſſon (f), and the Author of the Commentary on those words, Compel them to come in, and Mr. Papin (g) have written Books; in which they have shewn more and more inconquerable Difficulties in the way of Examination; and on the other, some Ministers have made smart Complaints of the Answer to Mr. Nicolle with respect to the Foundation of Faith. The Author of this Answer, instead of retracting or retreating, has explain'd himself a-fresh more precisely. He has lately made a great Book to maintain not only that the Proofs of the Divinity of the Scripture are not evidently propos'd by the Spirit of God, who converts us; and that it is not evident that God reveals such and such a Mystery in his Word; but also that those who lay the Foundations of Faith upon the evidence of Testimony, teach a pernicious and most dangerous Doctrine (h). There are those who say this is leaving Religion on the Brinks of a Precipice, and that if the Celſus's and Porphyry's had found it in such a post, if they had been to engage with Christian Doctors, who had made so many Advances and Confessions, they could not have stood a quarter of an Hour before them. I don't think them in the right, or that they have sufficiently consider'd the Nature of Christianity. Yet I don't know (i) what may be the result of the Dispute between the two Ministers of Roterdam and Utrecht: But it seems, that if we lived in a time of a Crisis, and in the conjunctures of the Fermentation of Humours, which have produc'd so many Effects in divers Ages, we should have great changes to apprehend. Deus omen avertat.

There are some perhaps who could wish the Minister of Roterdam's Doctrine was embrac'd by all the Doctors. They imagine that after this there would be no more disputing, and that it would be the true Grave of Controversies: For as we don't dispute concerning Tastes, we should not dispute concerning Religion, when all Divines should reduce the Analysis of Faith to Taste. I believe, would one say, I am in possession of Truth, because I have the Taste and Sentiment of it; and I do the same, would another say. I don't pretend, would one say, to convince you by evident Reasons; I know you are able to elude all my Proofs: Nor I neither, would another say. My Conscience is convinc'd, would the latter say, it tastes a thousand Comforts, though my Understanding is not clear-sighted in these Matters: And 'tis the same with me, would the former say. I am perſuaded, continues the first, that the internal Operation of the Spirit has led me to Orthodoxy; and so am I, says the second. Let us then dispute no more, let us persecute no more, say they. If I propose any Objections which you can't answer, I have no reason to hope to convert you: For since you don't pretend that Evidence is the Character of Theological Truths; the Obscurity of your Reasons, and the Weakness of your Arguments will never seem to you a Mark of Falshood. In vain then I should endeavour to reduce you to Silence. Your Taste would serve you instead of a Demonstration; just as in point of Eatables, we trust more to our Palates, and the good Effects they have upon our Health, than to the Speculative Reasons of a Cook or a Physician, though we can't give any account how these Meats either please or strengthen us. Let us therefore agree not to disturb one another, but be contented to pray to God for each other's Welfare. Thus you see the Fruit that would spring from this Doctrine, as some pretend, who remember a Maxim of St. Austin; which is, That the distinguishing Truth and Falshood, being a very difficult thing, we should not be violent against those that err. Illi in vos ſeviant, says he (k) to the Manichees, qui neſciunt cum quo labore verum inveniatur, & quàm difficile cavenda errores. Illi in vos ſeviant, qui neſciunt quàm rarum & arduum ſit, carnalia phantaſmata piæ mentis ſerenitate ſuperare. Illi in vos ſeviant, qui neſciunt cum quanta difficultate sanetur oculus interioris hominis, ut poſſit intueri ſolem ſuum.... Illi in vos ſeviant, qui neſciunt quibus ſuſpiriis & gemitibus fiat, ut ex quantulacumque parte poſſit intelligi Deus. This, I say, is the Fruit this Doctrine might produce, if we believe some Persons; Sed non ego credulus illis: But I am in some doubt of it, when I consider that the Minister of Utrecht (l), persuaded that the Scripture contains an evident Testimony of our Mysteries, is against the Persecution of Hereticks; and on the contrary, his Adversary, tho' convinc'd that we can alledge no good (m) Proofs either of the Divinity of the Scripture to Infidels, or of the Testimony of our Mysteries to the Socinians, highly approves (n) of the Magistrates persecuting Hereticks. What Contradictions are here! We must depend upon nothing, whilst we suppose that Men will act according to their Principles, and build a coherent System. Not that I pretend the Minister of Utrecht Reasons ill, in joyning these, two things together, that there is in the Scripture an Evidence of Testimony for such as God illuminates, and that Punishments ought not to be inflicted upon those who don't believe the Mysteries of the Holy Trinity, and Incarnation, &c. the inconsequence lies only upon his Adversary. This is manifest: For he who owns on one Hand, that there are no good Proofs, that God clearly reveals the Existence of his Mysteries in his Word, is unreasonable to pretend, that a Man, who does not believe them, deserves to lose his Estate, Liberty and Country: For he has the Lights of Reason on his side, and you cannot deny but he acts reasonably in refusing to renounce this Light, unless it appears evidently contradicted by the Testimony of God. He is ready to Sacrifice his most distinct Ideas, when it shall clearly appear that the Authority of God requires it. You own your self incapable of making this appear to him; and say, that Grace indeed may perswade him of it, but not discover it to him evidently. All therefore that Reason and Charity require of you (o) is to pray for him, and by the ways of sober instruction, to let him see that there is a greater probabilty in your Opinions than in his own. If you can't succeed, let him enjoy his Estate and Country, and don't attempt to arm the Secular Power against him. These are natural and clear Consequences, and yet the Minister I speak of separates them from their Principle. So incomparable he is in the contradictory Turn of his Head. For, by the bye, was ever any thing more fantastical than to make such Out-cries as he did against the Philosophical Commentator, and after wards to advance such a System? It might be easily shewn, that his Hypotheses are most (p) admirably fitted to confirm those of the Commentator: But this would carry me too far from Mr. Nicolle; to whom I return.

Let it not be said, that this Author has gain'd enough, since his Books have bred such Disputes amongst the Ministers of Holland. This is a Chimerical Advantage to his Communion, and has caused a real Mischief to Christianity, by raising Controversies which demonstrate, that neither by the way of Authority, nor of (e) Discussion, a Man can with any satisfaction tell himself he hath made a good use of his Reason: For this good use consists in suspending his Judgment, till the Evidence of Proofs over-powers it. Philosophers would think it a great reproach to them easily to acquiesce in the belief of Truths that should be but obscurely propos'd to them. They would not pardon themselves for giving a right Judgment in a Cause, before a severe Examination of all the Pleas of the contending Parties. They give the contemptible Term of Opinators to such as engage on one side, without being as it were forc'd to it, by indisputable Arguments. They maintain, that this produces nothing but a false Science, and they say, "that Ignorance (f) is preferable "by much to this false Science; which makes a Man "imagine he knows what he does not, for, as St. "Austin has most judiciously observ'd, in a Book con- "cerning the usefulness of Belief, this Disposition of "Mind is very blameable for two Reasons: One is, "that he who is falsely persuaded he knows the Truth, "thereby renders himself incapable of instruction; the "other, that this presumption and rashness is a sign of "an unroward Mind Opinari, dum ob res turpiſſimum eſt: quod dicere non poteſt qui ſibi jam ſe ſcire per-

(c) Ibid. Chap. 22. pag. 402.

(f) In his Reflections on the differences of Religion. See the News from the Republick of Learning. July 1686. Art. 1.

(g) A Minister who turn'd Papist; see his Book call'd, The Toleration of Protestants, and the Authority of the Church. Mr. de Beauval speaks of it in the Hist. of the Works of the Learned. Janu. 1693. Art. 7.

(h) See Mr. Jurieu's Defense of the universal Doctrine of the Church ....against the Imputations and Objections of Mr. Saurin, Minister of the Wallon Church of Utrecht. Printed at Roterdam 1695.

(i) I spoke this in the first Edition of this Work, when this Dispute was not yet ended; but at the time of the 2d Edit. that is in December 1700. I can say, that it is no more talk'd of than the Controversies of Flaccianism, forgotten above these hundred Years.

(k) Augustin. contra Epist. fundam. c. 2.

(l) Mr. Saurin.

(m) By good Proofs are meant such as lead to Evidence.

(n) See his Treatise concerning the Rights of two Sovereigns, and his Letter of the Pulture of Socinianism.

(o) See the Preface to the Supplement of the Philosophical Commentary, where 'tis shewn, that the Difficulty of Controversies is an invincible Argument for Toleration: See also the History of the Works of the Learned, Jan. 1693. pag. 25. &c.

(p) The Commentator has shewn in the Preface to the fourth part, that with respect to the Rights of an erring Conscience, Mr. Jurieu thinking to confute him has confuted himself: This might be extended to other Articles.

(e) His Adversary has renounc'd the way of Discussion, and thinking his pretence to evident Argument.

(f) Art. 3. pag. 88.

has not attack'd his Adversary (D) in the weakest Parts: Which is a manifest Proof that with all his penetration he did not discover them. He died at Paris the 16th of November 1695, a few Days after his Treatise of the Quietists was expos'd to Sale. He was well vers'd in polite Learning. The Delectus (E) Epigrammatum is ascribed to him, which

" persuasit: & per se ipsa temeritas non bene affecti a-
" nimi signum est. For the Word Opinari, in the Puri" ty of the Latin Tongue, signifies a Disposition of " a Man, who too lightly assents to uncertain Things,
" and so thinks he knows what he is ignorant of: For " which Reason all the Philosophers maintain'd, sapien-
" tem nihil opinari; and Cicero blaming himself for this
" Fault, said, he was magnus Opinator." Not only the Philosophers, but all the World in general must acknowlege this Maxim, (g) That speaking the Truth is not sufficient, to avoid the Imputation of Rashness, but a Man must also know that he says Truth. He that should affirm, that the Number of the Sands of the Sea is even, might say Truth; but he would be certainly chargeable with Rashness. Thus Mr. Nicolle's Book has been only fit to foment the Irresolution of indifferent Persons, and to give new pretences to the Scepticks in Religion. We might say perhaps of the first Work that appear'd upon these Subjects, what the Ancients said of the first Ship: Would to God the Tree that served to build it was still standing! Cicero (h) applies, that Thought to Reason: O utinam igitur, ut illa arnus, optat, - - - ne in nemore Pelio securibus Cæsa cecidisset abiegna ad terram trabes: sic istam calliditatem hominibus dii ne dedissent! qua perpauci bene utuntur; qui tamen ipsi sæpe à male utentibus opprimuntur: innumerabiles autem impro'e utuntur. But as things have two Faces, there is some reason to hope, that well-turn'd Minds will be the better for so unlucky a Controversy. They will learn to keep within due bounds, Des Cartes's Maxim (i) concerning the suspension of our Judgment: They'll learn to distrust natural Light, and have recourse to the Conduct of the Spirit of God, since our Reason is so imperfect. They will discover the necessity of adhering to the Doctrine of Grace, and how God is pleased with our Humility, since he has been willing to mortify us even in the possession of his Truths; having denied us the Knowledge of them by the ways of a Philosophical Enquiry, by which we arrive to the Knowledge of some things.

(D) He has not attack'd his Adversary in the weakest parts.] Mr. Nicolle publish'd a Book in 1687, entituled, (k) Of the Unity of the Church, or the Refutation of Mr. Jurieu's New System. He therein manifested his Learning, Wit, and Eloquence; and, like a Man of Parts, took advantage of all the Weakness he found in the particular Opinions of the Author of the New System; but he did not think fit to examine this Minister's strong Objections against the way of Authority: This looks a little like Artifice. One might think that a little Wit might not have known the importance of these Objections, and would have despis'd them by an ill-grounded Pride: But this could not be said of Mr. Nicolle; He had too penetrating an Understanding not to comprehend all the extent of the Objections propos'd to him upon this Article, whether by way of retortion or directly. We must say then that his Silence proceeded from his being conscious he should sink under the burden, if he undertook to answer; he well knew that these were insuperable Difficulties, and that his own Reputation, and the Interest of his Church requir'd he should not mention them. Whence we may conclude (l), that there are every where such as believe not all they make profession of, or else remain perswaded that their Religion is good, though they are conscious that upon some Capital Points their Adversaries Objections are insoluble. However it be, Mr. Nicolle answer'd not all Mr. Jurieu's System: He fix'd (m) upon the Parts that seem'd easiest to be master'd, and confin'd his Pains to that, excepting some Objections that could not be separated from it, and which consequently he was obliged to answer. We need not therefore wonder at the advantage he obtain'd, and that his Antagonist did not recover it by his (n) Reply. But it is somewhat strange that he was not aware of the greatest Fault in the Book he answer'd.

The Design of it was to prove, that the Protestants deserv'd not to be call'd Schismaticks, and yet there's nothing more proper to prove the contrary: For the Author's Principles necessary lead us to this, viz. that the Church of Rome did always belong to the true Church. So that the Author, in building his System, destroyed the end for which he built it: What could be worse? Nor did he stop there, but he laid down some Aphorisms and Maxims; from which he drew some Consequences that manifestly prove, a Man may be saved in all Religions. This was a second Essential and Capital Fault, which Mr. Nicolle did not perceive. See the Book (o) entituled, Janua Cælorum reserata cunctis religionibus. You'll there find the Demonstration of what I have just now said, concerning the Faults of this System. The Ministers, who have inform'd against Mr. Jurieu's false Doctrine in the Synods, have not forgotten to complain of some Errors (p) found in his System of the Church, but they did not perceive the principal: For Example, they pass'd over this Proposition. (a) God can't permit great Christian Societies to be engag'd in mortal Errors, and to continue in them long; at least, if we judge of Things by Experience, we ought not to believe this possible, since it has never yet happen'd. This is to throw down with one stroke of a Pen, what Luther and Calvin have built: For since 'tis certain that all the Doctrines of the Romish Communion, for which they thought it necessary to establish the Reformation, have subsisted for many Ages; it evidently follows, that they are not mortal Errors: But they ought not to have separated from that Church, if none of its Errors were mortal. Larenobius (b) has largely proved this. To see then the Faults and Blunders his System abounds with, you must not only read Mr. Nicolle's Answer, but also the Janua Cælorum reserata.

You'll ask, how its possible, that a Work, having so many Imperfections, should yet be look'd upon as the Master-piece of its Author? I refer you to a little Book (c) that was printed in 1692, where you'll find the Answer to this Question. The Author having describ'd the shameful Figure Larebonius had made the System of the Church appear in, proposes the following Objection: " (d) But why then has it been formerly
" own'd that this Book was the Master-piece of this " Minister? We don't contradict it; we own still
" that this is his chief Book, wherein he has most fig-
" naliz'd the extent of his Imagination and the Faculty " of inventing Proofs, and urging Difficulties. All this " may be found in a Work, which has otherwise
" great Faults; and in which the Author, Giddy, with " the great Flight he took, has not observ'd that he " went too far; that he pass'd into the Enemies Camp,
" and loaded his Edifice with more Materials than the " Foundations could bear. In a word, there are some " Men who by Turns afford two very different sorts of " Admiration: People wonder, that having made
" so many high Discoveries, they should not be aware " of an hundred Inconveniences, and a thousand Con" tradictions that are obvious to the most stu" pid: And again People wonder, that wanting Light
" for Things so easy to be observ'd, they should have
" it for great Discoveries. The Minister I speak of,
" might have been usefully employ'd in contributing " to the Construction of a new System; he might " have invented a great many Things, and afforded
" many Views: But it required a Man of Judgment
" to separate all the disagreeing Parts, and after a
" skilful choice to joyn the Pieces together."

(E) The delectus Epigrammatum .... and the Learned Preface.] " 'Tis a Collection (e) of Latin Epi" grams, and Greek, Spanish and Italian Sentences, " Printed in 12°. at Paris in 1659." Before it is plac'd (f) a Latin Dissertation upon Epigrams, which deserves a place amongst the best Pieces written on the Art of Poetry. 'Tis a Treatise concerning Poetical Beauty; wherein this Author distinguishes true and solid Beauty from the false and apparent ... (g) In the search of this Beauty he confined himself to the Epigrammatick kind. He treats of the Virtues of the Epigram with great accuracy and judgment. He shews, that the number of excellent Epigrams is much less than many imagine, and he boldly ranks amongst the Vicious such whose subject is false, fabulous, equivocal, hyperbolical, decisive upon a contested Point, foreign, accidental, far-fetch'd, offensive, dishonest, sordid, mean and odious. He puts in the same Rank, those that are virulent, prattling vulgar and trivial, and such as have childish, and ridiculous Subtilties, or affected Allusions, and Quibles. Father Vavasseur hath censured several Passages of this Dissertation, and has found fault not only with some of his Sentiments, but also with some (h) of his Latin

Words

(g) Nicolle's pretended Reform'd convicted of Schism. lib. 1. c. 2. p. m. 15.
(b) Cicero de nat. Deor. l. 3. c. 75. pag. m. 664.
(i) See the new Letters of the Author of the general and Critical Answer, concerning the fatal Effects of this Maxim introduc'd into Religion. pag. 779. & seq. Mr. Jurieu true System of the Church. pag. 373. & seq. News from the Republick of Learning, November 1684. Art. 1. p. 889. and July 1686. Art. 1. p. 745. See also the Remark of the Article Pelisson.
(k) See the Article Comenius.
(l) See the Remark D of the Article Pelisson.
(m) He found some Errors of Fact, and some pitiful Reasons in it.
(n) The Reply is entituled, A Treatise concerning the Unity of the Church and the fundamental Points; by Rotterdam 1688. in 8vo.

(o) Printed at Amsterdam 1692. in 4°. To speak of it in the Remark M. of the Article of Comenius.
(p) See Mr. Saurin's Examination of Mr. Jurieu's Divinity, pag. 6. & seq.
(a) Jurieu's System of the Church, p. 236.
(b) This is the distinguish'd name of the Author of Janua Cælorum reserata.
(c) New Advice to the little Author of little Pamphlets.
(d) Ibid. pag. 60, 61.
(e) Baillet's Judgment upon the Poets. Tom. 2. n. 1080. pag. 81.
(f) Id. ib.
(g) Ibid pag. 82.
(h) He has tax'd him with some Solecisms. The new Answer to the Provincial Letters in the seventh Discourse says, That Wendreckius hath made from time to time some very egregious Faults among those fine Latin Phrases, which made those that are not Judges look upon him as the Cicero of his Party.

which has been several times printed, and the Learned Preface that attends it. I have enlarged * upon the Consequences of one of his Books, since Men of Judgment have assured me that such Facts, accompanied with Reflections, belong to this Dictionary; and that they'll afford Varieties, that will divert the Reader. This is the true Reason why here, and on several other occasions, I use this Method.

* In the Remark C.

The Supplement I have to add to this Article concerns only some (F) Works of Mr. Nicolle, which I have not mentioned.

NIDHARD

Words (1). Mr. Menage, speaking of some Criticks who condemn'd the use of Jingles in Verses, adds, "(i) that 'tis said that Mr. Nicolle, or Mr. Lancelot, "was the first that publish'd this Notion against "Jingles, in a Collection of Verses and Epigrams of "the Ancients." Mr. Menage therefore did not certainly know that Mr. Nicolle was the Author of the Preface before this Collection. Note, That the Gentlemen of Port-Royal have publish'd many Books for the use of Youth. 'Twas principally for their Scholars; for 'tis certain, they had some. The Latin Method; the Greek Method; the Garden of Greek Roots; the Art of Thinking; the Delectus Epigrammatum, &c. are Works they design'd for the Instruction of some Disciples they educated. They had a War to maintain against the Jesuits upon this: So that all the Quarrels of these two Parties, did not turn upon the Doctrines of Grace and loose Morality. We have seen that Father Vavasseur criticiz'd Mr. Nicolle about the Qualities of the Epigram: He publish'd a very fine Treatise upon this Subject; and we may be sure he did it only to have an opportunity of censuring Mr. Nicolle's Dissertation: He well knew that it came from Port-Royal. Before him Father Labbe made it his Business to contradict the Grammatical Works of these Gentlemens, who used him somewhat roughly (k) in a Preface. If he is to be credited, they had several Schools: (l) I was shewn, says he, at the same time a little Book, entituled, The Garden of Greek Roots, put into French, with a Tract of Prepositions, and other undeclin'd Particles, and an Alphabetical Collection of French Words, derived from the Greek Tongue, and printed in the Year 1647, by the care, as was said, of some Patrons of Jansenism, for the familiar Instruction both of some little Schools, which they then had in three Houses about the Abbey of Port-Royal des Champs, and of those that were scatter'd in many Villages and Castles in the Neighbourhood of this great Capital City of the Kingdom, and elsewhere in the Provinces. We have in this College of Clermont some Scholars, who have learnt them there, and seen them taught their School-fellows; as also in the College of one of the good Cities of Picardy, which is not the most remote from Paris. Some Pages after he tells us, that the King had lately broke all their Schools. I will relate his Observation somewhat at large; in which we shall see the Effects of Pre-possession and Hatred. Father Labbe imagin'd these Gentlemen were capable of causing a thousand Disorders, by this little Collection of French Words, derived from the Greek, which they had joyn'd to the Garden of Greek Roots. He represented (m) to the French Academy the heinousness of this Attempt, and urg'd, that this Sect of new Hellenists ought to be repress'd. I have called (n), says he, their Design by the Name of a Sect, forasmuch as what has been done by the preceding Hellenists, had no ill Consequence, nor occasion'd much mischief amongst our French Youth: But the Enterprize of those Port Royalists, who may take for their Motto, Legio nomen nostrum est, if it had had all the Success they pretended, would have directly ruin'd the Latin and French Tongue, and under pretence of teaching their Scholars Greek, would have thrown them into intolerable Absurdities and Ignorance, which must at last have made us ridiculous and contemptible to Foreigners and to all their Posterity. They have compos'd this famous Collection pursuant to their riming Roots, and Greek and Latin Methods, that the Youth they educated (not only, as we have before observed, in the three Houses adjacent to the Abbey of Port-Royal des Champs, which we shall name when there is occasion, and in many other little blind Schools in some Villages and Country Castles about this great City of Paris, but also at a distance in the Seminaries and Colleges of more remote Cities and Provinces) might draw, as out of a publick Fountain, open to all their Party, the first Principles and the most secret Originals of the French Tongue; Learning by Heart with great Diligence the Words they pretend to have been derived from the Greek by our Ancestors. But God has oppos'd their pernicious Designs, having inspir'd our most Christian Monarch Lewis XIV. with the Resolution of prohibiting and hindering all the unlawful Assemblies of this Sect; in which Youth was instructed in the dangerous Maxims of Jansenism, and suck'd from their Cradle, as we may say, the Milk of one of the most damnable Heresies, that ever attack'd the Church. This is flying into a Rage for a Trifle, and discovering in the Conduct of one's Enemies a pernicious Enterprize, which is nothing but a Fantome. 'Tis useful to collect Examples of this wretched Pre-possession.

(1) See Father Vavasseur. Tr. concerning the Epigram.

(i) Menagiana, p. 301, 302, of the first Edition of Holland.

(k) That of the Garden of Greek Roots.

(l) Labbe Preface to the Etymologies of many French Words. This Book was printed at Paris in 1661.

(m) In the Epistle Dedicatory of his Etymologies.

(n) Ibid. Pref.

(F) Some Works of Mr. Nicolle which I have not mentioned.] "(a) The Relation Mr. de Marca had "made, in his way, of all that had been done since "the Year 1653, in the Assemblies of the Bishops on "the Subject of the five Propositions, was no sooner "divulg'd in the Name of the Clergy; but Mr. Nicolle, surpriz'd to find in it a Compilation of Falshoods and Impostures, thought himself obliged to "make them known, that the World might not be "seduc'd by them." This Piece of Mr. Nicolle was entituled, "(b) Belga Percontator: sive Francisci Pro-futuri Theologi Belgæ, super Narratione rerum gestarum in Conventu Cleri Gallicani circa Innocentii X. Constitutionem, Scrupuli, ejusdem Narrationis opifici Propositi, 25. Februarii 1657. Some Days after appear'd two "Latin Disquisitions of the same Author, under the "Name of Paul Irenæus; in which he demonstrated "there was no such Thing as a Jansenian Heresy; and "that it was a meer Fiction, which the Jesuits made "use of." These two Disquisitions were followed with (c) four others in the same Year. He writ in 1662 against the Thesis in which the Jesuits of Paris had maintain'd, the 12th of December 1611, (d) that the Pope had the same Infallibility as Jesus Christ, to determine Questions of Fact as well as Questions of Right. He shew'd "(e) how this new Opinion of the "Jesuits was contrary to the Laws and Customs of "France. But this Writing falling into the Hands of "one who stuff'd it with Impertinencies, and "being printed with this Title, A Defence of the "Liberties of the Gallican Church against the Theses of "the Jesuits of the College of Clermont of the 12th of "December 1611, this Work was disown'd and suppress'd by the Jansenists, who substituted in its "Room the first of February, The pernicious Consequences of the new Heresy of the Jesuits against the King "and the State: To which was added, A Refutation of "the Cavils wherewith some Divines endeavour to elude "the Authority of the Councils of Constance and Basil." Note, That the (f) 18 Letters about the Imaginary Heresy were ascrib'd to him, which came out in 1664, and 1665, (g).

(a) History of Jansenism, Tom. 2. p. 329. Edition of Amsterdam 1700.

(b) Ibid. pag. 331.

(c) Ibid. pag. 334, 335, 371, 374, 375.

(d) Ibid. Tom. 3. pag. 3.

(e) Id. ib. pag. 6.

(f) Ten of them are entituled, les Imaginaires, and eight of them les Visionaires.

Let us add a Word or two of his Posthumous Works. The tenth Tome of his Moral Essays was printed at the Hague in 1700, with an Advertisement, That this famous Author's Executors have in their Hands several of his Writings not yet printed, and that they will take care to have them speedily publish'd. See Mr. Bernard in his News (h) from the Republick of Learning, and Mr. de Burigni in his History of the Works of the Learned of the Year 1700. I don't know whether they reckon amongst those Writings (i) the interlineary Gloss, and the Greek Notes that Mr. Nicolle penn'd upon the Greek Text of Lycophron: But I believe, that they reckon the Treatise of Grace he compos'd some Years before his Death. 'Tis said in the History of the five Propositions, that he wrote it, "(k) against the System of Jansenius, Mr. Arnauld, "and Father Q——; and that he confutes nothing "in all this Treatise, but Physical Necessity, that is, "the inevitable and absolute Necessity of doing the ill "we do: And that to confute it, he acknowledges in "all Sinners a sufficient Grace, which delivers them "from this Necessity by giving them a Physical Pow-"er entire and absolute, of avoiding Evil; without "which Power they could not be culpable for what they "do; and by Vertue whereof it may be truly said of "the most Obdurate that they may abstain from Evil; "as it is true, that a Man of Honour, who is in his "Senses, may, if he pleases, in the face of the World, "be guilty of the greatest Extravagances. This is the "Instance Mr. Nicolle makes use of." This Treatise of (g) See the History of the five Propositions of Jansenism, p. 293.

(h) August 1700, p. 213, 214.

(i) See the Preface of the Telemacomanie, p. m. 6.

(k) History of the five Propositions. pag. 139. 140: Edit. of Liege 1695.

NIDHARD* (JOHN EVERARD) Confeſſor to the Queen, Mother of Charles II. King of Spain, was born the 8th of December 1607, in the Caſtle of Falkenſtein in (A) Auſtria. He made himſelf a Jeſuit the 5th of October 1631, and having performed all his Studies, taught Morality, Philoſophy, and the Canon Law in the Univerſity of Gratz. He had alſo read School-Divinity, if the Emperor Ferdinand III. had not ſent for him to (B) his Court. He was at firſt Confeſſor to the Arch-Dutcheſs Mary Anne; and afterwards Confeſſor and Preceptor to the Arch-Duke Leopold †. He followed this Princeſs into Spain, when ſhe went to ‡ marry King Philip IV. for the Emperor Ferdinand would not ſuffer her to change her Confeſſor. The King of Spain had ſuch an Eſteem for this Jeſuit, that he was deſirous to procure him a Cardinal's Hat in 1665; but Nidhard beſeech'd him not to think of it. After this Prince's Death he was made Inquiſitor-General by the Queen-Mother ‡, and he had a great ſhare in the Government. The Party that was form'd againſt him, which was headed by John of Auſtria, natural Son of Philip IV. was ſo potent, that in ſpight of the Queen's Protection, her Confeſſor (C) was forc'd to retire. He left Madrid in the midſt of the People's Curſes * the 25th of February 1669. The Queen † with a ſteddy Countenance ſign'd the Decree that was brought her ready drawn up for this Expulſion. We ſhall ſee the Contents of it below (C△); and the better to ſalve the Appearances, ſhe gave a Declaration the next Day β, by which Her Majeſty inform'd the Miniſters of State, that being no longer able to withſtand her Father Confeſſor's Importunities to retire: She had permitted him to go to Rome in the Quality of Ambaſſador Extraordinary, and ſhe deſir'd it might be underſtood that he went thither with all the Honours, Penſions, and Employs that he before enjoy'd. He went to the Court of Rome (C△△) where he was γ Ambaſſador Extraordinary of Spain to Clement IX. In the following Pontificate he was Ambaſſador Ordinary of the ſame Crown; and in order to ſupport the

* They pronounce it Nicard.

† Who was elected Emperor in 1658.

‡ In 1650.

‡ Taken from Nathaniel Sotuel Bibliotheca Scriptorum Societatis Jeſu, pag. 441, 442. See alſo his Epiſtle Dedicatory.

* Bouhours, ubi infra, pag. 289. & ſeq.

† Relation of the Difference between Don John of Auſtria, and Cardinal Nitard, Tom. 2. p. 13. Edit. of Cologne 1677.

β Father Nitard's Departure from Spain tranſlated from the Spaniſh, by Father Bouhours. See his Opuſcules, pag. 292.

γ Sotuel, ubi ſupra.

(kk) In March and April 1701, pag. 182, &c. of the Dutch Edition.

(l) That is in the Article of John Everard Nidhard; but you'll find at the end of this Remark what he ſays in his Epiſtle Dedicatory.

(m) Memoirs of the Court of Spain, Part 1. p. 6. Holl. edit.

n) That of Inquiſitor-General.

o) Teſte Father Nitard.

Mr. Nicolle, upon Grace, was printed in 1699, and re-printed the Year following: It contains but 105 Pages in 12°. You'll find the Analyſis of it in the (kk) Journal of Trevoux.

(A) Was born in the Caſtle of Falkenſtein.] The Bibliographer of the Jeſuits does not tell us (l) the Religion of John Everard Nidhard's Parents: He only ſays they were Noble. There are Accounts that ſay they were good Lutherans. Madam d'Aunoi having ſaid that the Miniſters of State were diſguſted, that the Queen-Mother (m) had diſpos'd of a moſt important (n) Place without them, and in favour of a Stranger (o), who was born and bred up till fourteen Years of Age in the Lutheran Religion, puts theſe Words in the Margin: "(p) Though it was true that he had been a Lutheran, "and it was objected to him, yet he ſtoutly denied it, "becauſe that would have excluded him from this "Poſt." Father Sotuel, dedicating his Bibliotheque to Cardinal Nidhard, ſpeaks in a very different (q) manner. Quando claræ memoriæ, ſays he, Genitor Eminentiæ veſtræ à principibus Auſtriacis Commiſſarius Generalis conſtitutus ad expellendos ex hæreditariis ipſorum provinciis hæreticos, id ille ingente animi fortitudine ac zelo præſtitit, quantumvis non ſine diſcrimine vitæ ſuæ, & jactura fortunarum non exigua.

Father Baron relates (r) that he had heard a credible Perſon ſay, that our Nidhard had been a Captain of Horſe and that he was a grown Man when he abjur'd Lutheraniſm, which he had imbib'd in his Infancy.

(B) If the Emperor Ferdinand III. had not ſent for him to his Court.] Madam d'Aunoi does not ſpeak in that manner: This is her Account. "(s) Amongſt "ſeveral others that the Emperor appointed to attend "the Queen his Daughter, he choſe Father John "Everard Nidhard, a German Jeſuit for her Confeſſor. "His Birth was obſcure; and his Wit was almoſt the only "thing whereby he raiſed his Fortune: He was ſupple "and complaiſant; he ſtudied the Character of thoſe "he had occaſion for, and never oppos'd their Opini-"ons. He perform'd his Studies in the Jeſuits College "at Vienna, where he took the Habit of the Order, "and they ſent him afterwards to ſome of their "Houſes, which he govern'd very well. When he re-"turn'd to Vienna, he began to make himſelf known, "and many Ladies of the Court took him for their "Ghoſtly Father. They omitted nothing to do him "good Offices with the Emperor; and they ſpoke ſo "advantageouſly of him, that he was pleas'd the "Queen ſhould take him along with her." There are perhaps ſome Circumſtances in this Account that are not true; I leave the Enquiry to the Reader.

(C) In ſpight of the Queen's Protection he was forc'd to retire.] The Accounts of the Differences between Don John of Auſtria and the Queen-Regent, are ſo common in every Bodies Hands, that I ſhall not give the Particulars. Madam d'Aunoi, whoſe Works have been ſo often Printed, has ſpoke very neatly of them: 'Tis pity the Publick can't be perſwaded ſhe deſerves Belief. 'Tis a general Opinion that her Works are a Mixture of Fictions and Truths, half Romance, and half Hiſtory; and there is no other way to diſtinguiſh Fiction from True Matter of Fact, but by comparing hers with other Books. 'Tis an Inconvenience which daily gets Ground by the liberty that is taken to publiſh the Secret Amours, the Secret Hiſtory, &c. of ſuch and ſuch Lords famous in Hiſtory. Bookſellers and Authors do all they can to make it believed that theſe ſecret Hiſtories have been taken from ſecret Manuſcripts: They know that Love-Intrigues, and ſuch like Adventures, pleaſe more when they are believed to be real, than when they are thought to be pure Fables. Hence the new Romances keep as far off as poſſible from the Romantick Way: But hereby they involve true Hiſtory in a thick Darkneſs: And I believe the Powers will at laſt be forced to give theſe new Romance-Makers their Option; either to write clean Hiſtory, or pure Romance; or at leaſt to uſe Crotchets to ſeparate Truth from Falſhood (a).

(C△) We ſhall ſee the Contents of this Decree below:] The Queen ſign'd it, "(b) ſaying, ſhe never had deſir'd "any thing but what was for the Advantage of the "State; and ſince this was of that Nature, ſhe would have "it executed. This was done very honourably: For "to expreſs her Majeſty's Eſteem for this Jeſuit, the "Decree was form'd in theſe Terms. John Everard "Nitard, a Religious of the Society of Jeſus, my "Confeſſor, Councellour of State, and Inquiſitor-"General, having intreated me to permit him to leave "the Kingdom: Though I am very well ſatisfied of his "Vertue, and his other good Qualities, as alſo of his "Zeal and Induſtry for my Service; yet having Regard "to his Requeſt, and for other Conſiderations, I have gi-"ven him the Permiſſion he deſires to retire where "he ſhall pleaſe: But deſiring he might do it with all "the Decency and Honour that are due to his Dignities "and Merit, I have reſolved to give him the Title of "Ambaſſador Extraordinary from this Court in Germany "or Rome, which he ſhall chuſe, without reſigning "any of his Employs or Profits he draws from them." Madrid the 25*th of* February 1669.

The QUEEN.

(C△△) He went to the Court of Rome, where he was Ambaſſador Extraordinary of Spain.] Whereas Father Sotuel, whom I have followed, has paſs'd lightly over the Condition Father Nidhard at firſt found himſelf in at Rome, I muſt ſupply what is wanting to his Account. "(c) This Jeſuit flatter'd himſelf that he ſhould no "ſooner come to Rome but he would be made a Car-"dinal; but for want of being provided with Creden-"tial Letters for his Embaſſy, he was extremely out "in his Imagination. All that he could do was to "write

(a) Compare with this what is ſaid in the News from the Republick of Learning, Octob. 1684. Art. 8. of the Catalogue of New Books.

(b) Relation of the Difference of John of Auſtria with Cardinal Nitard. Tom. 2. pag. 13. Edit. of Cologne. 1677.

(c) Ibid. p. 112.

(p) Ibid. pag. 7. (q) Note, That it may be pretended he is not contrary to Madam d'Aunoi. For from Nitard's Father's being commiſſioned to proſecute the Lutherans, it does not follow that he was not a Lutheran till 1621, when his Son was fourteen Years old. (r) Vinc. Baronius Apolog. Ord. Prad. Tom. 1. pag. 524. (s) Memoirs of the Court of Spain. Part. 1. pag. 2 & 3.

that Character with greater Luſtre, he was promoted to the Dignity ‡ of Arch-Biſhop. At laſt he obtain'd the Cardinal's Hat in 1672 §. He publiſh'd ſome Writings, and prepar'd ſome others for the Preſs, which run all upon the Controverſy (CΔΔΔ) of the immaculate Conception of the Holy Virgin ‖.

‡ He was made Titular Arch Biſhop of Edeſſa.

§ See Memoirs of the Intrigues of the Court of Rome, from 1669 to 1676, pag. 130. & ſeq. Paris Edit. 1077.

‖ Soturel. ibid.

We

" write to Madrid about his Arrival at Rome, and to de" mand Letters, by Vertue whereof he might act.
" Many Meetings were had upon this Account; and " at laſt, as they knew his Character, they ſent him an " Order to get the Queſtion of the Conception deci" ded, and a Salary of about four thouſand Livres
" was aſſign'd him; with which he was made Ambaſ" ſador. But the Marquiſs of St. Romain, who
" in that Conjuncture was our Ambaſſador Ordinary to " his Holineſs, judging the Glory of this Crown was con-
" cern'd in it, aſſiſted him with all his Power, and lent
" him his Train and his Equipage, that he might appear " with ſome Figure: But this hinder'd not the Court
" of Rome from finding out quickly what a ſort of " Man he was." The Pope having a Cardinal's Hat to give the Spaniards, deſir'd them (d) to nominate Perſons worthy of it. The Council of State propos'd three to him: The Queen pretended to approve the choice, and ſhe writ her ſelf to the Pope, and the Marquiſs of St.
Romain; but by the ſame Courier ſhe ſecretly deſir'd the Pope to beſtow the Hat on Father Nirard. The Pope declar'd to this Marquiſs, " (e) That Father Nitard
" had no Hat to hope for; and that farther, he was " inſtantly to be diſmiſs'd from his Employ of Inqui-
" ſitor-General, in favour of Don *Diego Sarmiento Val-
" ladares*, Preſident of Caſtile, who had been nomina" ted to it; which Father Nitard would by no means
" conſent to. 'Tis ſaid, that the reaſon of his Obſti-
" nacy proceeded from this, that Father Salinas,
" his Confident in this Kingdom, had ſent him
" Word, that Affairs were diſpoſing in ſuch a man" ner, that he might promiſe himſelf a ſpeedy Re" turn, and ſhould have an Apartment in the Palace,
" with private Stairs, by which he might, when " he pleaſed, go to the Queen, and govern the " Monarchy without any trouble; ſo that he would " do wiſely not to part with his Place of Inquiſitor-
" General. This Letter ſo fondly flatter'd his Imagi" nation, that he reſolved to follow that Advice, being
" moreover perſwaded, that he ſhould quickly be a " Cardinal. But in the interim, the Marquiſs of *St.
" Romain* ſignified his Holineſs's Order to him; which
" ſo ſurpriz'd the poor Man, who flatter'd himſelf
" with being made a Cardinal and Governour of Spain,
" that this ſudden Change ſtruck him as cold as Mar" ble: 'Tis ſaid too, that he fell into a Swoon, and " was above an Hour before he came to himſelf. 'Tis
" affirm'd, that the General of his Order, ſeeing
" him deprived of all his Employments, and that " when he came to Rome, he had not acquitted him-
" ſelf of his Duty to his Reverence, order'd him to " depart from Rome immediately, and to retire into " a Convent, hard by, call'd .... and that whilſt he " was there he diſmiſs'd all his Domeſticks.... (f)
" This News (g) ſo ſurpriz'd the Queen, that it gave " her a tertian Ague, with which ſhe was very ill."

(d) Ibid. pag. 113.

(e) Ibid. pag. 116, 117.

(f) Ibid. pag. 117.

(g) That is, that the Cardinal's Hat was given to Don Lewis Fernandes de Portocarrero Dean of Toledo.

(CΔΔΔ) Which run all upon the Controverſy of the immaculate Conception.] The Author of the Apology of the Nuns of Port-Royal, printed in 1665, made a pretty Parallel betwixt the Conduct of Father Annat, in the Affair of Janſeniſm, and that of Father Nidhard in the Diſpute of the immaculate Conception. He ſhews abundance of Reſemblances betwixt theſe two Fathers Confeſſors, and the two Affairs they proſecuted, one in France, the other in Spain. The only difference that he finds is, that the Jeſuit Nidhard, (h) did not appear ſo violent as Father Annat, (i) and exceeded him in ſubtilty. The Jeſuits having obtained of her Catholick Majeſty an Order to ſollicit the Definition of the immaculate Conception at Rome, this Propoſal was ſeriouſly hearken'd to at Rome, but they contented themſelves with putting off the Spaniſh Jeſuits, with a Proviſional Bull. " It is expreſly forbidden by this Bull, upon " pain of Excommunication, to accuſe of mortal
" Sin or Hereſy, ſuch as did not hold the Opinion of " the immaculate Conception: And hereby the Domi" nicans thought themſelves ſafe from the Inſults of the " Jeſuits. But Father Nidhard .... has found an eaſy " way of ſhaking off theſe Fetters, and taking the " Liberty to accuſe the Dominicans of Hereſy and " mortal Sin. The Pope's Injunction, ſays he, is only
" againſt thoſe who do it affirmatively; but he has " not forbidden to do it *problematically, and ſe-
" veral other ways*: So that when the Dominicans
" ſhall complain, that they are charged with Hereſy in
" a queſtion not ſubject to it, the Jeſuits will be clear,
" by ſaying they don't call them Hereticks *affirmative-
" ly*, but problematically, and ſeveral other ways. Af" terwards, leſt the Doctrine of the immaculate Con" ception ſhould not be thought more certain after the " Pope's Bull, than it was before, the good Father
" Nidhard, has by his Arguments rais'd it to the high-
" eſt Point of Humane Certainty. To maintain it is " morally certain, he thought a poor Buſineſs, be-
" cauſe thereby it would not be abſolutely impoſſible
" but it might be falſe, which ſeem'd a great incon" venience. He therefore goes farther, and maintains
" in the ſecond place, that it is Phyſically certain.
" One would think he might have fairly ſtopt there,
" and that there needed no more, than that it was as " certain the Virgin was conceived without original " Sin, as it is certain the Sun ſhines. But Father
" Nidhard is not contented with this Degree; he will " have this Opinion to be Metaphyſically certain, that " is, certain as theſe firſt Principles: Every thing is, or " is not: The Whole is greater than its Parts. What " could be deſir'd after this? Yet Father Nidhard de-
" ſires ſomething more, becauſe there was nothing
" but what was natural in all this Certainty; whereas
" he was willing it ſhould have ſomething ſupernatu-
" ral. For which reaſon he built a fourth Degree,
" which he calls Infallible Certainty, pretending
" that this Doctrine was immediately derived from " a Propoſition of Faith. If you demand of thi
" good Father the Foundation of all theſe Certainties " Moral, Phyſical, Metaphyſical, and Infallible, which " he beſtows upon this Opinion; He will tell you
" plainly *it depends upon the Infallibility of the Pope,
" in the Inſtitution of Feaſts and Fraternities.* From " whence he concludes, that the Pope permitting or " ordaining their Inſtitution in Honour of the imma" culate Conception, this Doctrine muſt be certain
" all theſe ways." The Nuns Apologiſt adds to this, that the Jeſuits have diſtinguiſh'd two Things in this Opinion, Truth and Piety, or Laudability. It doth not belong to Faith, ſay they, that it is true, but it is Matter of Faith that it is Pious and Laudable. And thoſe the Dominicans are Hereticks, not becauſe they don't believe this Opinion true, but becauſe they don't believe it pious. Father Nidhard, continues he, (a) inforces as much as poſſible the new Article of Faith concerning the Laudability of the Opinion of the Conception. He ſhews, That the Dominicans were obliged to pronounce the Form (b) whatever internal Notions they had of this Opinion.... He ſuppoſes the Pope to have a right to place Opinions, the Truth whereof he does not yet define, in a certain degree of Indubitability, as he calls it, by forbidding to call them in queſtion, directly or indirectly, or by any ſign to teſtify any doubt of them. He ſuppoſes, that by the Bull of the Conception, tho' the Truth of that Opinion be not defin'd as being of Faith, yet it is plac'd in this degree of Indubirability. The Pope, ſays Father Nidhard, will have this Opinion to be Indubitable. VULT illam eſſe indubitabilem, vult ut nemo dubitet. He will have every thing, that might occaſion ſome Doubts about that Privilege of the Holy Virgin, to be ſupreſſed. VULT taceri quodcunque in dubitationem poſſet Virginis privilegium revocare. This Foundation being laid, he adds, that the Silence of the Dominicans, and their Refuſal to pronounce this Form, brings this priviledge in queſtion Therefore, ſays he, the Dominicans are not only blameable when they ſpeak, but even by their Silence they oppoſe the order of the Pope, ſince there is a ſpeaking Silence, which gives as much Scandal as Words. Non tantùm loquentes culpantur Dominicani, ſed etiam tacentes adverſus totam Pontificis diſpoſitionem obloquuntur. Quapropter eſt loquens ſilentium quod non minus quàm vox ipſa producit ſcandalum. From all which he concludes, that they commit a mortal Sin by this Silence, and that they ought to be forc'd to pronounce this Formulary. It cannot be doubted, ſays he, but that this Silence violates the Bull, and conſequently that he who violates the Bull by his Silence, is guilty of a mortal Sin. At laſt he undertakes to prove, " (c)
" that there is no Lye in the external Pronouncia-
" tion of the Words of the Form, though a Man " does not believe the Contents of it. He, ſays he,
" that

(h) Apology for the Nuns of Port-Royal. Part 4. in the Preface. fol. †† 3.

(i) Ibid. fol. †† 2.

(a) Ibid. fol. †† 3.

(b) That is, to conform to the cuſtom of many Spaniſh Preachers, who ſay at the beginning of their Sermons, Praiſed be the Holy Sacrament of the Holy Altar, and the pure and immaculate Conception of the Virgin Mother of God, conceived without Original Sin, in the firſt inſtant of her Being.

Ibid. fol. †† verſo.

(c) Ibid. fol. †† 3 verſo.

We are told a pleaſant Reaſon (D) of the Friendſhip the Queen-Mother of Spain conceived for this Jeſuit.

NIGIDIUS FIGULUS (PUBLIUS) one of the moſt Learned Men (A) of Antient Rome, flouriſh'd at the ſame time with Cicero. He wrote many Books upon (B) diverſe Subjects; but they were found ſo ſubtil and difficult, that (C) they were neglected. Some Authors ſay *, he perfectly underſtood Phyſick: I don't find any

* Non humanarum modo literarum, ſed & philoſophiæ, & aſtrologiæ & rei medicæ conſultiſſimus extitit. Glandorp. Onom. pag. 625. He has been copied by the Author of the Additions to Charles Stephens, and afterwards by Lloyd and Hoffman.

† 'Tis manifeſt by this Analyſis, that Father Nidhard was throughly verſed in the moſt abſtract and ſubtil Diſcuſſions of the Schools.

that ſpeaks conformably to a probable Opinion, tho' "he believes the contrary to be alſo probable, does "not lie. Now 'tis probable that the Virgin was con- "ceived without Original Sin: And therefore the "Dominicans may ſpeak conformably to this Opinion. "But ſuppoſe their Judgment can't comply with the "probability of the Opinion of the immaculate Con- "ception; What is to be done then? wou'd they not "be guilty of a Lye? No, ſays Father Nidhard, "becauſe it ſuffices to conform their Affection to the "Words, tho' they don't conform their Underſtanding, "etiam cum retentione proprii judicii."

I thought it would not be a-miſs to give the Reader here an Analyſis of Father Nidhard's Works upon the immaculate Conception. See the Margin †.

But I muſt not paſs over in ſilence, that the Jacobin Vincent Baron, having imputed to this Jeſuit almoſt the ſame things that are ſaid above, retracted them in another Work, printed in 1666, and made a moſt reſpectful Reparation to this Father Confeſſor. Lætor, ſays he (d), datam mihi occaſionem retractandi quæ temerè de illo ſcripſeram, & quam ex nimiâ credulitate religioſiſſimo viro intuli injuriam ſanè atrocem, quâ poſſum, reſarciendi. He confeſſes, 1. That he had not read the Book that bore the Name of Father Nidhard; 2. That he had truſted to the deceitful Relation of a certain Author, who pretended to have taken from a Book printed at Douai the Interpretation this Jeſuit gave to Alexander the VII's Bull, concerning the Conception of the Holy Virgin; 3. That he had ſought the Book in queſtion, amongſt the Bookſellers of Paris, and had ſollicited the Dominicans of Douai to let him ſee a Copy of it, but that he could never obtain it; and therefore his Opinion is, that it is wrongfully imputed to Father Nidhard. He gives ſeveral Reaſons for his Thought, which are not very convincing, and which I ſhan't ſtand to conſider: I will only relate one thing, which ſhews, that the Book which he will not attribute to the Queen-Mother's Confeſſor, is the ſame from which the Port-Royal Writer has taken what we have ſeen above: (e) Incideram in Authorem neſcio quem: is forte aliorum dictis, ſicut ego ipſe ejus lectione deceptus, quam citato loco adnotavi, Pontificii de Conceptione decreti præpoſteram omninò interpretationem retulit ex libro hujus Authoris, ut narrabat, Duaci edito, aſcitam Conceptionis Immaculatæ Laudabilitatem ex Pontificiis ſanctionibus, Catholicis indubitatam, contendebat ad certitudinem fidei proximam, per quatuor gradus ſuprà Moralem, ſuprà Phyſicarum dignitatum, & Metaphyſicarum demonſtrationum, imo ſupra principiorum per ſe notorum, & indemonſtrabilium evidentiam arcanum Immaculatæ Conceptionis proveniſſe: unde inferebat, quamvis ultima Alexandri VII. Conſtitutione cautum ſit, ne ſecùs ſentientes damnentur, aut vexentur aſſertive & ſide certâ, poſſe tamen illis notam erroris inuri, & pœnas problemsticè infligi.

(D) A pleaſant Reaſon of the Friendſhip the Queen-Mother of Spain.] This Story I find in a Letter of Mr. Bourſault, and I make no alteration in it. "(f) Cardi- "nal Nidhard (g) roſe by a Method, which never be- "fore was taken, and perhaps never will again, and "paſs'd from the Society of JESUS to that of the "Cardinals, which he lik'd better. The late Queen of "Spain, Mother to the preſent King, and Siſter to the "Emperor, brought him along with her when ſhe went "to marry Philip IV. This Princeſs, who in Germany "had a great Liberty, and every thing ſhe deſired, "did not find the ſame Satisfaction in Spain. Every "thing there is ſo exactly determin'd, that the Queens "can neither eat nor drink but what is appointed "by the General Officer, to whom that care is com- "mitted, and if they are a thirſt between Meals, they "are treated with a Glaſs of Water. It was difficult for "her to conform to a manner of Life ſo different from "what ſhe had led: Wherefore Father Nidhard, who "was a Jeſuit, ergo a Man of Addreſs, having "obſerved it, brought her Majeſty every Morning "when he went to Maſs, a Bottle of the beſt Wine "he could meet with, which he committed to a Per- "ſon in the Secret, which the Queen had the pleaſure "to drink of, as often as ſhe had occaſion. This Fa- "ther's Aſſiduity, in doing her this little Service, ſo "affected her, that ſhe reſolved to recompence ſo "great a Zeal, if ever it lay in her Power: And in "effect, being declared Regent after the King's Death, "ſhe rais'd him to ſo high a Pitch, that giving jealouſy "to Don John of Auſtria, and the Grandees of Spain "demanding his Removal, he could not be diſplaced "but by making him (h) Cardinal, and Ambaſſador "Extraordinary at Rome; where he died." What has been ſaid, that a great Fortune is a great Slavery, (i) magna Servitus, eſt magna Fortuna, is eſpecially true in a Queen of Spain, who has been educated in France or Germany, or in any other Country where the Women have Liberty.

(f) Bourſault New Letters, pag. 378. Dutch Edit. 1698.

(g) That is, to his Greatneſs.

(A) One of the moſt Learned Men of Antient Rome.] Aulus Gellius has expreſs'd this Elogy ſeveral ways: He ſays in one place, (k) P. Nigidius homo in omnium bonarum artium diſciplinis egregius: in another, (a) Verba ſunt hæc ipſa P. Nigidii, hominis in ſtudiis bonarum artium præcellentis, or (b) in diſciplinis doctrinarum omnium præcellentis; in another place, (c) P. Nigidius homo impenſe doctus non minus arguto ſubtilique ἐπάμῳ interpretatur. He ſays ſomewhere (d), that next to Varro, he was the learneſt Man in Rome; but in another place (e) he affirms it without Exception. Servius has ſo divided the pre-eminence betwixt theſe two, as to give it Varro in Theological Matters, and Nigidius in Humanity Learning: Both of them, adds he, have writ upon both theſe Subjects. (f) Nigidius Figulus ſolus poſt Varronem: licet Varro præcellat in Theologia, hic in communibus litteris; nam utrque utrumque ſcripſerunt. I ſhall cite other Elogies in the following Remarks.

(B) He wrote many Books upon diverſe Subjects.] He wrote ſome de augurio privato: de animalibus: de extis: de vento: Aulus Gellius has ſometimes cited them, but not ſo often as the great Work of Grammar I ſhall ſpeak of anon. Macrobius (g) cites Nigidius's 19th Book de Diis, who had alſo written de ſphærâ barbaricâ & græcanicâ, as Servius affirms (h). Pliny has often cited Nigidius, and though he does not note the Title of the Books, yet we know he uſes thoſe de animalibus, except in one place (i), where 'tis moſt probable, he had a Work of Aſtronomy in view, the ſame perhaps from which the Commentator upon Aratus has cited many Paſſages. The Book de Animalibus has been honorably cited by Sammonicus Serenus. (k) Quod ait Plinius de aciperſeris ſquamis, id verum eſſe maximus rerum naturalium indagator Nigidius Figulus oſtendit, in cujus libro de animalibus quarto ita poſitum eſt. The Commentary upon Cicero's Epiſtles in Grævius's Edition (l) affords a Note aſcrib'd to (m) Paulus Manutius. 'Tis a learned Note, but an Error to give for Macrobius's Words, thoſe that he has alledged from Sammonicus; and the Author ſhould not have conjectured that Nigidius has written de Deis, and quoted only (n) Arnobius for it; for we (o) have formal Teſtimonies thereupon. 'Tis ſaid in the ſame Note, that Donatus teſtifies that Nigidius had explain'd Terence's Comedies: interpretatus eſt Comœdias Terentii teſte Donato. But Rutgerſius (p) thinks that all that Donatus alleges of Nigidius was taken from his Commentaries on Grammar. Note, that Rutgerſius (q) has collected all the Fragments he could find of Nigidius; and has alſo publiſh'd a Greek Tranſlation of a Treatiſe of this Author, done by John Laurentius of Philadelphia. 'Tis a kind of Almanack, in which are ſhewn day by day the Preſages of Thunder.

(C) They were found ſo .... difficult that they were neglected.] Aulus Gellius's Words are remarkable: (r) Ætas M. Ciceronis & C. Cæſaris præſtanti facundia viros paucos habuit: doctrinarum autem multiformium variarumque artium, quibus humanitas erudita eſt, columina habuit M. Varronem & P. Nigidium.

(h) Mr. Bourſault is miſtaken in this; for Father Nidhard had not the Hat till three Years after his Departure from the Court of Spain.

(i) Seneca de Conſol. ad Polybium. Cap. 26. pag. m. 722.

(k) Aulus Gellius noct. attic. l. 10. c. 11. Macrob. Saturn. l. 6. c. 8. p. m. 565, uſes the ſame Words, citing Nigidius.

(a) Id. Aul. Gell. lib. 11. c. 13. cap. 24.

(b) Id. lib. 13. cap. 10.

(c) Id. lib. 13. cap. 10.

(d) Nigidius Figulus homo, ut ego arbitror, juxta M. Varronem doctiſſimus. Id. lib. 4. c. 9.

(e) P. Nigidius civitatis Romanæ doctiſſimus. Id. lib. 17. c. 7.

(f) Servius in Virgil. Æn. lib. 10. ver. 175.

(g) Macrob. Saturn. lib. 3. c. 4. p. m. 391.

(h) Servius in Georg. l. 1. v. 19. & 43 & 218.

(i) Plin. lib. 6. circa fin.

(k) Sammonicus Serenus

apud Macrobium. Saturn. l. 2. cap. 12. p. m. 364. (l) Page 217 of the 1*ſt Volume ad familiares.* (m) There is at the end of the Note P. Manutius in argum. ep. (n) Arnobius lib. 3. p. m. 119, 123, 124. cites Nigidius for things relating to the Heathen Deities. (o) That of Servius in eclog. 4. v. 10. that of Macrob. Saturn. l. 3. c. 4. and that of Nonius Marcellus at the Word obſcoundanter, and at the Word liba. (p) Janus Rutgerſius variar. lect. lib. 3. pag. 269. (q) Ibid. pag. 246. & ſeq. (r) Aulus Gellius, lib. 19. c. 14.

Sed

any Proofs of it. The other things they ſay of him are atteſted by the Antients, as that he was a good Humaniſt, a good Philoſopher (D), and a great (E) Aſtrologer. This prevented not his entering into the Government †, and poſſeſſing Employs in the Republick;

† See the Remark F.

Sed Varronis quidem monumenta rerum ac diſciplinarum, quæ per litteras condidit, in propatulo frequentique uſu feruntur. Nigidiana autem commentationes non proinde in vulgus exeunt: & obſcuritas ſubtiltaſque earum tamquam parum utilis derelicta eſt. ſicuti ſunt quæ paulo ante legimus in commentariis ejus quos grammaticos inſcripſit. Here you ſee an Example that countenances the Maxim, qui non vult intelligi debet negligi. I could eaſily believe that this diſcouraging and dark Subtilty was eſpecially to be found in his Treatiſe of Grammar, divided into many (r) Books.

(r) Nonius Marcellus at the Word nixurire has cited the 20th if we believe Rutgerſius, pag. 265. But my Edition, which is of Paris 1614 has 25. Gellius l. 10. c. 5. has cited the 29.

(D) He was a good Philoſopher.] This can't be better proved than by what Cicero ſays: (t) Multa ſunt nobis & in Academicis conſcripta contra phyſicos, & ſæpe P. Nigidio Carneadeo more & modo diſputata. Fuit enim vir ille quum cæteris artibus, quæ quidem dignæ libero eſſent, ornatus omnibus, tum acer inveſtigator, & diligens earum rerum, quæ a natura involutæ videntur. Denique ſic judico, poſt illos nobiles Pythagoreos, quorum diſciplina extincta eſt quodammodo, quum aliquot ſecula in Italia, Siciliaque viguiſſent, hunc extitiſſe qui illam renovaret. This teaches us, that Nigidius was the Reſtorer of Pythagoriſm, and that he delighted to treat things in the way of the Academicks: He diſcuſs'd them Pro and Con, but determin'd little. Let us note here a Fault of la Popeliniere: (v) 'Tis alſo ſaid that Nigidius renew'd in Sicily and Italy the loſt Sect of the Pythagoreans. This is miſtaking Cicero, who yet ſaid plain enough, not that Nigidius reſtor'd this Sect in Sicily and Italy; but that it formerly had flouriſh'd in Italy and Sicily. Note, that Euſebius has given Nigidius the Titles of Pythagorean Philoſopher and Magician; Nigidius Figulus Pythagoricus & Magus in exilio moriturus(w). Dion will inform us of ſomething upon the latter; and Apuleius, whom I ſhall cite, will tell us ſomething more.

(t) Cicero de univerſitate init. fol. m. 379. B.

(v) La Popeliniere Hiſt. of Hiſtories, B. 5. p. 302.

(w) Euſeb. in Chron. n. 1973.

(E) And a great Aſtrologer.] He was ſo perfect in the Knowledge of the Stars, and happy in making Horoſcopes, that he was ſuſpected of being a Magician. I think Dion's Words will bear this Senſe: (x) Νιγίδιος Φίγουλος βυλευτὴς παρασχεῖμα αὐτῷ τὴν αὐταρχίαν ἐμαντεύσατο. ἔφησε γὰρ καθ' ἑαυτὸν τήν τε τοῦ πόλου διακόσμησιν, καὶ τὰς τῶν ἀστέρων διαφοράς, ὅσα τε καθ' ἑαυτὰς γινόμενοι, καὶ ὅσα συμπίγνυντες ἀλλήλοις ἴσχυσι τε ταῖς ὁμιλίαις καὶ ἐν ταῖς διασάσεσιν ἀπολείπουσι, δύνασθαι καὶ τὰ μέλλοντα τῷ καὶ ἀδίδακτον, ὡς πρὸς ἀπορρήτους διαλεγόμενος τοιοῦτον, ἔστιν. Infanti recens edito Nigidius Figulus Senator ſtatim imperium vaticinatus eſt, qui ea tempeſtate omnem cæli deſcriptionem, ſiderumque differentias, & eorum proprietates, quæſque coituum, intervallorumve ſuorum ratione effectiones ea edunt, adeo callebat, ut arcanis ſtudiis eum uti crederetur. The new born Child to whom he predicted the Monarchy, was the Emperor Auguſtus. This Hiſtorian reports, that Nigidius meeting Octavius, ask'd him why he came ſo late to the Senate: Becauſe my Wife, ſaid he, is brought to Bed of a Boy. You have given us a Maſter, immediately cried out Nigidius. This Exclamation ſo troubled Octavius, as to make him reſolve to kill his Son; but the Aſtrologer prevented him, by telling him it was impoſſible to execute his Deſign. (y) 'Tis not poſſible, ſaid he, for the Child to ſuffer any thing like it. I don't believe that Dion relates the thing exactly; for 'tis not the way of great Aſtrologers to predict before they have erected their Schemes of Nativity. Now this is a Work of Application. You'll anſwer, that as there are ſome that make Rules of Arithmetick (z) by meer ſtrength of Memory, or play at Cheſs without Board or Men, why mayn't an Aſtrologer repreſent a Scheme of Nativity without any ſenſible Object? To which I reply, in the firſt place, that ſuch Arithmeticians, or Cheſs-Players are very rare; and, 2dly. that all theſe Effects of Imagination require time, and a recollected Soul, and can't be done extempore, as Nigidius gave his Anſwer, if we believe Dion. Let us ſay then that the Hiſtorian miſtakes his Narration, and confounds the Circumſtances: We muſt ſuppoſe, that Nigidius, finding by Octavius's Anſwer the moment of the Birth, meditated this Horoſcope, or erected it at his Leiſure, and afterwards made the Prediction. Suetonius permits us to believe this was not done in ſo much haſte. Quo natus eſt die (Auguſtus), ſays he (aa), cum de Catilinæ conjuratione ageretur in curia, & Octavius ob uxoris puerpe i.m ſeriis adfuiſſet, nota ac vulgata res eſt, P. Nigidium comperta moræ cauſa, ut horam quoque partus acceperit, affirmaſſe, dominum terrarum orbi natum.

(x) Dio l. 45. init. p. m. 306.

(y) Ὅτι ἀδύνατον ἐστ τοιοῦτόν τι αὐτὸ παθεῖν. Quod ei infanti tale quid evenire impoſſibile foret. Id. ib.

(z) See the Journal of the Learned of the 21*ſt of* November 1678. p. 416 Dutch Edit.

(aa) Sueton. in Auguſto. c. 94.

My Objection againſt Dion would have leſs force, if he had conſidered Nigidius as a Magician; for in that caſe it might be ſaid, that his Dæmon inſtantly reveal'd to him the Deſtiny of Auguſtus. And therefore it muſt be obſerved, that I principally inſiſt upon Dion's Obſervation, that Nigidius a great Aſtrologer declared not the Prediction without knowing that Octavius's Son was born at ſuch an Hour. But I ought not to paſs over in Silence, that what is told of magical Operations, ſuppoſes generally ſome Application of the Magician to certain Ceremonies; without which it is not pretended he diſcovers Futurities. I might therefore oppoſe Dion's Narrative alſo on that ſide.

I don't examine whether Nigidius, making Octavius's Son's Horoſcope at his Leiſure, actually predicted his Acceſſion to the Empire. This Queſtion would draw on another: How a good Aſtrologer can diſcover ſuch Events? This is the Order to be obſerved: We muſt firſt of all lay down the Fact, and afterwards ſeek the Cauſes; for 'tis miſpending time to (a) examine how it's poſſible for things to be done, which whether they were done or not is dubious. If we were once ſure, that on the very Day Auguſtus was born, his Exaltation to the Empire was predicted, it would be very reaſonable to enquire how ſuch a Prediction could be made, and to ſeek good Anſwers to this queſtion 'Tis true, they don't ſeem poſſible to be found; for, 1. it would be abſurd to ſay, that the Knowledge of the Influence of the Stars can reveal Futurities; 2. It ſeems unworthy of God to reveal himſelf to a Man, who only prepares himſelf for this Favour, by the ridiculous Labour of erecting an Horoſcope; 3. It does not ſeem poſſible for an Angel to reveal ſuch caſual Events; for if he could foreſee them by his natural Science, there could be no Free-will; all our Thoughts would be as Machinal as the Motions of Bodies; and if he foreſaw them by an infus'd Science, God would have revealed them to him to make a wretched Aſtrologer a Prophet; which ſeems utterly unbecoming the Wiſdom of God. If therefore it was true, that Auguſtus's Elevation was foretold the Day of his Birth, the Fact ſhould not be diſputed, much leſs the Poſſibility of Predictions, for there is nothing more fooliſh than to contradict Experience by Arguments ab impoſſibili. If we acknowledge the Fact, and afterwards attempt to diſcover its Cauſe, we muſt frankly confeſs, that the manner and ſource of Nigidius's Predictions exceeds the reach of our Underſtanding, and that it is inexplicable. We are not reduced to theſe Terms: Suetonius's nota ac vulgata res eſt, is no ſtrong Proof: He does not ſay that this was divulg'd before Auguſtus was Emperor. If he had ſaid, I have read Publick and Authentick Acts, dated on his Birth-day, which teſtify that Nigidius had made this Prediction, he had alledged a conſiderable Proof; but he is contented to ſay, that it was given out that Nigidius did it. I don't doubt of it: I am certain that after Auguſtus was ſettled on the Throne, there were ſpread infinite Stories of the Predictions of his Greatneſs. Nigidius could not be forgotten, who was the moſt famous Aſtrologer of his Time: He was brought into the buſineſs; and his Diſcourſe with Octavius was circumſtantiated. All the City rung with it; Orators, Poets, and even Hiſtorians mention'd it. Suetonius found Monuments of it: He has ſpoken of it as of a thing manifeſt; but he has forgotten the Dates, the moſt eſſential thing of all. 'Tis thus Hiſtorians are to be preſs'd: Give us uncontroverted Proofs, that the Aſtrologer's Prediction was current, when there was yet no probability of its Accompliſhment. We ſhall preſently ſee that Lucan going only upon a probability tells a great many Stories of Nigidius's Prophetick Talents.

(a) Diverſe Thoughts upon Comets. n. 49.

Here is another Proof of Nigidius's great Reputation for Aſtrology. Lucan reckons him among thoſe who preſaged the Miſeries of the Roman People, before the Rupture of Cæſar and Pompey: He gives him abundance of Speculations hereupon.

At (b) Figulus, cui cura Deos, ſecretaque cœli
Noſſe fuit, quem non ſtellarum Ægyptia Memphis
Æquaret viſu, numeriſque movendus uſtra,
Aut hic errat (ait) nulla cum lege per ævum
Mundus, & incerto diſcurrunt ſidera motu:

(b) Lucan. Pharſal. l. 1 v. 639.

lick; for he was† Prætor and Senator ζ. He ſeconded Cicero with great (F) Prudence in ruining Catiline's Conſpiracy, and did him many Services in the time of his Adverſity. He betook himſelf to Pompey's Intereſts againſt Cæſar *; which reduc'd him to Baniſhment all the reſt of his Days, for he died ‡ in Exile. Cicero, who had always a ‖ mighty Eſteem for him, writ a fine Letter of Conſolation to him, in the 707 Year of Rome: 'Tis the 13th of the 4th Book ad Familiares. We find in St. Auſtin the reaſon (G) of his Sir-name Figulus. Some Criticks, without any great Grounds, affirm, that Nigidius wrote (H) Annals. A certain obſcure Author fathers on him a Treatiſe (I) concerning the † Vives in Auguſt. de civit. Dei. lib. 5. cap. 3. Glandorp. ubi ſupra.

ζ Dio lib. 45. circ. init.

* See Cicero Epiſt. 13. lib. 4. ad familiares.

‡ Euſeb. in Chron. ad ann. 4. Olymp. 183, that is, in 709 Year of Rome.

‖ See the Remark F.

Aut, ſi fata movent, orbi, generique paratur
Hamano matura lues &c.

Add to this the Paſſage I ſhall relate (c) from St. Auſtin.

What Apuleius reports is conſiderable. He ſays, that he has read in Varro, that the Trallians informed themſelves, by Magick, of the Events of the Mithridatick War; and that a Child, who beheld the Image of Mercury in the Water, repeated a hundred and ſixty Verſes, which contain'd all that was to come to paſs; and that Fabius, having loſt five hundred Denarii, went to conſult Nigidius, who by the Power of Enchantments, made little Children tell where the Purſe was buried that contain'd ſome of them, and how the reſt were diſtributed, and that Cato the Philoſopher had one of them: 'Tis added, that Cato own'd he had received one of a Servant. (d) Itemque Fabium, cum quingentos denarios perdidiſſet, ad Nigidium conſultum veniſſe: ab eo pueros carmine inſtinctos indicaſſe ubi locorum deſoſſa eſſet crumena, cum parte eorum, cæteri ut forent diſtributi: unum etiam denarium ex eo numero habere M. Catonem Philoſophum, quem ſe à pediſſequo in ſtipem Apollinis accepiſſe Cato confeſſus eſt. I would fain know whether Varro gave his Judgment of all theſe Stories; for he was a Man whoſe Learning was incomparably greater than his Credulity.

(c) Cicero Epiſt. 13. lib. 4. ad familiares, pag. 218. Græv. Edit.

(d) Apuleius in Apologia. p. m. 301.

(F) He ſeconded Cicero .... in ruining Catiline's Conſpiracy, &c.] The Letter he received from Cicero in his Exile has theſe Words in it. (e) Carco cum familiariſſimis multis, quos aut mors eripuit nobis, aut diſtraxit fuga, tum omnibus amicis quorum benevolentiam nobis conciliarat per me quondam, TE SOCIO, defenſa reſpublica. Corradus's Note upon this Paſſage tells us, that Nigidius (f) had written the Interrogatories that were given to the Impeachers of the Conſpiracy. The Letter I have cited ends thus. Ego quæ pertinere ad te intelligam ſtudioſiſſime omnia diligentiſſimeque curabo: tuorumque triſtiſſimo meo tempore meritorum erga me memoriam conſervabo. Plutarch obſerves, that Cicero was animated againſt the Conſpirators by Terentia his Wife, by Quintus his Brother, and by Publius Nigidius his Companion in Philoſophy, and his Ordinary Councellor in the Affairs of State. (g) Ἡ δὲ Τερεντία .... παρέζυνεν ἐπὶ τὰς ἀνδρας. ὁμοίως δὲ καὶ Κόϊντος ὁ ἀδελφὸς, καὶ τῶν ἀπὸ φιλοσοφίας ἑταίρων Πόπλιός Νιγίδιος, ᾧ τὰ πλεῖστα καὶ μάλιστα ἐφρόντιζε τῆς πολιτικῆς ἐχρῆτο πρὸξεως. Terentia.... in conjuratos incendit: Quintus item ejus frater & in Philoſophia ſocius P. Nigidius, cujus fere graviſſimis in negotiis publicis utebatur conſilio. Add to this Plutarch's Paſſage (h), in which Cicero owns that he concerted with the Philoſopher Nigidius, the moſt important Deliberations, that ſaved the Republick in his Conſulſhip. Aulus Gellius had reaſon to ſay, that Nigidius was much reſpected by Cicero for his Senſe and Learning; but he ought to have ſaid, he was ſo for his Services. (i) Verba ſunt hæc ipſa P. Nigidii, hominis in ſtudiis bonarum artium præcellentis: quem M. Cicero ingenii doctrinarumque nomine ſumme reverſus eſt. Note, That when Cicero went to govern Cilicia, Nigidius expected him at Epheſus, who was returning to Rome, after his diſcharge of a publick Employ in this Country. Theſe two Friends joyfully met, and had a large Philoſophical Conference with Cratippus, a moſt famous Peripatetick. I obſerve this as a Proof of Nigidius's Intimacy with Cicero, and his being employ'd in State-Affairs. (k) Nigidius quum me in Ciliciam proficiſcentem Epheſi expectaviſſet, Romam ex legatione ipſe decedens, veniſſetque eodem Mitylenis me ſalutandi, & viſendi cauſa Cratippus, Peripateticorum omnium, quos quidem ego audierim, meo judicio, facile princeps, perlibenter & Nigidium vidi, & cognovi Cratippum. At primum quidem tempus ſalutationibus, reliquum pene conſtitutione conſumpſimus.

(G) The reaſon of his Surname Figulus.] St. Auſtin confuting Aſtrology by the Argument of the different Fate of Twins, propoſes Nigidius's Anſwer to this Difficulty. This Aſtrologer maintain'd, that the Motion of the Heavens, is ſo rapid, that though there is but a ſmall Interval betwixt the Birth of the firſt and ſecond of the Twins, yet they are born under Celeſtial Points very different from each other: And to prove it, he turn'd with all his Strength a Potter's Wheel, and made two Marks on it whilſt it turn'd: It was thought that the Marks were made upon the ſame part of the Wheel; but when it reſted, they appear'd at a good diſtance from one another. This was the reaſon of his being called the Potter, Figulus. Theſe are the Words of St. Auſtin: (a) Fruſtra itaque affertur nobile illud commentum de figuli rota, quod reſpondiſſe ferunt Nigidium hac quæſtione turbatum, unde & Figulus appellatus eſt. Dum enim rotam figuli vi quanta potuit intorſiſſet, currente illa bis numero de atramento tanquam uno ejus loco ſumma celeritate percuſſit: deinde inventa ſunt ſigna, quæ fixerat deſiſtente motu, non parvo intervallo in rotæ illius extremitate diſtantia. Sic, inquit, in tanta cœli rapacitate, etiam ſi alter poſt alterum tanta celeritate naſcatur, quanta rotam bis ipſe percuſſit, in cœli ſpatio plurimum eſt. Hæc ſunt, inquit, quæ cunque diſſimillima perhibentur in moribus, caſibuſque geminorum. Hoc figmentum fragilius eſt quam vaſa quæ illa rotatione finguntur. St. Auſtin had reaſon to think this Anſwer as fragil as a Potter's Veſſels. He ſolidly confutes it. See alſo his (b) Commentators.

(a) Auguſt. de civit. Dei lib. 5. c. 3.

(b) Lewis Vives & Leonard Coquæus.

(H) That Nigidius wrote Annals.] You'll find ſome Fragments of his amongſt thoſe that Riccobon has collected from the Antient Hiſtorians, and which he pretends Livy followed. Voſſius (c) declares, that he is not of this Critick's Opinion, which yet he ſhould be of, if what la Popeliniere affirms was true, that Nigidius made Annals. La Popeliniere's Authority deſerves no Conſideration, ſince he has committed ſo many Faults in a few Lines. Paul Nigidius Figulus, ſays he, (d) was in no leſs eſteem in his time for Learning than Varro. But the Confuſion and Obſcurity of his Writings deſtroyed their Exiſtence and Credit with Poſterity; which is the reaſon theſe Annals came not down to us. He adds what I have already confuted (e). What dependance is there upon a Man, who thinks that Paulus was a Prænomen in antient Rome, and knows not that Nigidius's Prænomen was Publius? Plutarch has given it him (f) twice at length. I queſtion much whether Aulus Gellius has been rightly underſtood. He inſinuates that Nigidius became obſcure by his Subtilty: His little Grammar Cavils were not underſtood, and were thought uſeleſs; and therefore his Writings were ſuffered to be loſt. There is no likelyhood that his Books de animalibus periſh'd on this Account. They doubtleſs contain'd many curious Reſearches, and eaſy to be underſtood; as we may be aſſur'd from what remains of them. And by a ſtronger Reaſon we may believe, that if he had written Annals, they would have been intelligible: Therefore let us reject what la Popeliniere has ſaid. We ſhall ſee by and by the (g) Origin of theſe Pretended Annals.

(c) Voſſius de Hiſtor. Lat. lib. 1. c. 12. p. 56.

(d) La Popeliniere Hiſt. of Hiſtories. l. 5. p. 301.

(e) In the Remark D.

(f) In the Paſſages above cited Remark F.

(g) In the laſt Remark.

(I) Fathers on him a Treatiſe concerning the Remedies of Love.] A judicious Reader reaps Advantage from every thing; and therefore I don't think this Remark uſeleſs. It proves by an Example in Print, that there are no Lies, tho' never ſo groſs, extravagant and fooliſh, but ſome Authors ſcruple not to relate ſeriouſly. The Fact is this: "(b) Nigidius, Ovid and Samocratius writ a great "many Volumes, and ſerious Writings, concerning "the Remedy of Love: But the Jeſt is, that they "found out many Remedies for others, but could find "none for themſelves: Foraſmuch as all three died, "proſecuted and deſtroyed, not for the Evils they "committed at Rome, but for their Amours "at Capua. Now let Nigidius tell his Diſcoveries, and Ovid his Thoughts, and Samocratius ſay "what he pleaſes; the beſt Remedy at laſt will "be to avoid Converſations, and to ſhun the "Occaſions. For in point of Love, few who "abide will be free from its Bonds; whereas thoſe "that fly, may live at Liberty." You'll find in the Margin the Name and Titles of him who has ſaid this, and

(b) Francis Voilleret, Sieur de Florizel, Counſellor, Notary and Secretary to the King, and the Houſe and Crown of France. pag. 83. of the Meadow of mix'd Flowers.

Nigidius ſtudiis bonarum artium præcellentiſſimus manifeſtiſſime ſeparavit. (k) Cicero de univerſitate initia. fol. m. 379. B.

* the Remedies of Love. I will ſumm up in one Remark (K) Mr. Moreri's Miſtakes, and thoſe of ſome other Authors: But I will put here Father Rapin's ſtrange Blunder. He ſays in the 13th Paragraph of his Reflections upon Philoſophy, that Nigidius was baniſh'd by Auguſtus for the Crime of Magick. However I don't deny but he paſs'd for a Magician. See the Paſſage of Apuleius at the end of the Remark E.

NIHUSIUS (BARTHOLD) made a Noiſe by his Works (A) in the XVIIth Century; and he may well enough be call'd a famous Convert, and a famous Converter *. He was born at Wolpeu in the Duke of Brunſwick's Territories in 1589, and having ſtudied ſome time in the College of Verden and Goſlar, he went to the Univerſity of Helmſtad about the Year 1607. Being but ill furniſh'd with Money †, he was obliged to ſeek a Maſter for his Subſiſtence. He entered into the Service of Cornelius Martinus, who read Logick. He continued there four Years, and made a Progreſs in the Sciences; for his Maſter did not ſo employ him, but that he left him ſome Hours for Study, ‡ and took the pains to inſtruct him. The Youth, obtaining Favour by his good Qualities and Wit, was recomended to the Biſhop of Oſnabrug, and had a Penſion from him. To teſtify his Gratitude, he wrote Verſes upon this Prince's Birth-day; but as he was no Poet, he made uſe (B) of a borrowed Poem, and publiſh'd it in his own Name. His Patron's Liberality did not prevent his being reduc'd to ſtraits, though he taught in private the richeſt Scholars, after he had taken his Maſter's Degree in Philoſophy in 1612. He waver'd betwixt the Study of Phyſick and Divinity, becauſe he fear'd (C) a very potent Faction, which oppos'd Martinus's and Caſelius's Diſciples. He experienc'd the ill-will of this Faction, when he was to maintain Metaphyſical Theſes in 1614. An horrid Affront was put upon him, which began to diſguſt him with the Lutheran Church. Two Years after he was made Tutor to two Gentlemen, whom he brought to the Univerſity of Jena: He afterwards obtain'd the like Employ at the Court of Weimar *. He

* See the Remark B. of the Article Lambecius.

† Tenuis & inops, & ut vitam tolerare poſſet... Cornelio Martino Antwerpio, Logices Doctori, famulitium ſuum addixit. Calixtus De arte nova. p m. 6.

‡ Quibus (diſciplinis) inter domeſtica miniſteria, ſub tanto hero & magiſtro quantus Cornelius erat, ſatis feliciter imbuebatur. Ibid. pag. 7.

* According to Voſſius, Epiſt. 380. pag. 349. He was Preceptor to the ſ mous Duke of Weimar, who commanded under Guſtavus.

and alſo the Title of his Book. I can tell you that he publiſh'd it at London, but not in what Year: He dedicated it to Charles Prince of Wales, only Son to the King of England; from whence you may certainly conclude, that he lived in the Reign of James I. Is it reaſonable that a Paſſage, which ends with ſo very good a Reflection, ſhould contain ſuch Abſurdities? For the reſt, this Conjunction of Nigidius with Ovid, puts me in mind that Pierius Valerianus aſcribes to them the ſame Poem. (i) Ovidius eo volumine quod Halieuticon inſcribitur, quod opus olim a Nigidio elucubratum ajunt.

(i) Pierius Valerianus hieroglyph. l. 30. apud Rutgerſium, ubi ſupra, p. 289.

(K) Mr. Moreri's Miſtakes, and thoſe of.] He is miſtaken in ſaying, Nigidius was baniſh'd for Suſpicions of Magick; it being certain his Exile conſiſted in his not daring to return to Rome, after Cæſar was Maſter. He had followed Pompey, and not being able to obtain his Pardon, he was afraid of being ſacrific'd to Cæſar's Reſentment: This was his Exile. The Fact is notorious to any one that reads Cicero's 13th Letter of his fourth Book ad Familiares. Glandorpius (k) does not faithfully report Aulus Gellius's Thought: He makes him ſay, that the Obſcurity and Sublimity of Nigidius's Writings were the reaſon of their being unknown. He adds, that ſome quote the 24th Book of Nigidius's Compoſitions of Grammar. This is an Error: Does he mean that none but that is cited? 'tis a Miſtake. Would he tell us that the Work contain'd at leaſt twenty-four Books; he is equally out. Aulus Gellius has cited the 29. Theſe Words of Glandorpius citantur;... præterea de annalibus, contain a Fault of the Preſs; which probably was the cauſe that many Moderns have made Nigidius an Annaliſt: It ſhould be de animalibus, and not de annalibus. Laſtly, Glandorpius ſays, that Cicero, in his ſecond Philippick, obſerves, that Nigidius died in Exile. I don't think this is in that Oration. We can only infer from another Book (l) of Cicero, that Nigidius was dead. What Glandorpius has ſaid of Nigidius, has been inſerted Word for Word in Charles Stephens's Dictionary; and after this Mr. Lloyd has alter'd nothing from Stephens, nor Hofman from Lloyd: So true it is, that if you cut not off the Thread of Generations, Faults of Books multiply without ceaſing.

(k) Glandorp. Onomaſt. p. 525.

(l) That de univerſitate init.

(A) Made a noiſe by his Works.] Theſe are what have come to my Knowledge. Proſphonematicus ad Senatores Brunſwigios & Luneburgicos de Conrado Hornejo, Cologne 1646. in 8. Morojophus, ſeu Vedelius in ſuo rationali prorſus irrationalis, Ibidem. Syntichus, Ibidem. Epiſtola de cruce ad Thomam Bartholinum, Ibidem 1647. Hypodigma quo diluuntur nonnulla contra Catholicos diſputata in Cornelii Martini tractatu de analyſi logica, Ibidem 1648 in 8. Porgrammata duo ad Proteſtantium Academicos, Moguntiæ 1655 in 8. Annotationes de communione Orientalium ſub ſpecie unica, in 4. This Work was printed at Cologne in 1648, at the end of Leo Allatius's Book, De perpetua conſenſione Eccleſiæ Occidentalis & Orientalis, whoſe Edition was procur'd by Nihuſius. He alſo procur'd the Edition of Allatius's Symmicta at Cologne in 1653 in 8. and of ſome other Pieces of the ſame Author at Cologne in 1645; amongſt others a Treatiſe, entituled, Confutatio fabulæ de Joanna Papiſſa ex monumentis Græcis; to which he added ſomething. In 1658 was publiſh'd a Book in 8*vo.* with this Title; Bart. Nihuſii tractatus chorographicus de nonnullis Aſiæ Provinciis ad Tygrim, Euphratem, & Mediterraneum ac rubrum mare (m). I ſhall ſpeak below of his new Method of Controverſy.

(m) The Sieur Witte in Diario, ad ann. 1657. makes mention of ſome Tracts of Logick by Nihuſius.

(B) He made uſe of a borrowed Poem.] The Biſhop of Oſnabrug, who contributed to his Maintenance, entered into his 43d Year the firſt of July 1610. He was called Philip Sigiſmund, and was of the Houſe of Brunſwick. Calixtus made this Poem for Nihuſius. (a) Natalem ejus principis quadrageſimum tertium carmine celebrare voluit. Sed quum aridiore eſſet venâ, quam ut quicquam inde poſſet elicere, meam qualemcunque operam commodavi, carmenque confeci, quod ipſius nomine typis deſcriptum Principique oblatum fuit. Calixtus tells this himſelf.

(a) Georgius Calixtus in digreſſione de arte nova, pag. 7.

(C) A very potent Faction, which oppos'd.... Diſciples.] This Faction conſiſted of ſome People, who would not allow a Divine to be either a good Humaniſt or good Philoſopher: And therefore they prevented the Admiſſion of ſuch to Eccleſiaſtical Preferments, who had ſtudied Humanity-Learning under Caſelius, and Philoſophy under Martinus. This not a little puzzled young Nihuſius; he durſt not ſtudy Divinity, fearing to meet this Faction in his way to Church-Preferment. His Caution was ſo great, that when he maintain'd a Theſis, dedicated to the Biſhop of Oſnabrug, and attended with ſome Greek Verſes in praiſe of the Reſpondent, he would not permit the Author of this Elogy to inſert the Name of Martinus. He was afraid, leſt the Praiſes of this Philoſopher ſhould provoke theſe Gentlemen: He therefore rather choſe to be ungrateful, than expoſe himſelf to the ill-offices of thoſe, who might one time or other oppoſe his little Fortune. Calixtus blames him very juſtly, for this ſelf-intereſted Conduct, and declares this was carreſſing the Favour of a certain Party, which Men of Worth and Honour endeavoured to diſpleaſe. (b) Quod vereretur ne id ſibi ἀνοικείους καὶ μισοσόφους inſciti patronos fraudi eſſet. Tanta erat ejus ſive puſillanimitas, ſive crescendi cupiditas, ut nomen viri eximii, è cujus domo & diſciplina prodiiſſe gloriæ verti oportebat, taceri mallet, quam abjicere qualemcunque ſpem ut placendi, quibus ut diſpliceret recta & præſtantes animæ totâ vitâ ſeſe adlaboraſſe numquam diffitebuntur. He obſerves, that there are always to be found more or leſs of theſe Capricious Men, who oppoſe the Advancement of Youth, unleſs they ſtudy under ſuch or ſuch Maſters. (c) Non deerant tunc (quamquam vix unquam deſunt, niſi quod alio atque alio tempore plus minuſve poſſant) qui accuratiora literarum & philoſophiæ ſtudia odiſſent, & cum Theologiâ conjungi nollent, ne in eius admixti, quæ in ſe deſiderarent, cogerentur. Et quum inter illos unus prima-

(b) Ibid. pag. 9.

(c) Ibid. pag. 8.

He had there a good Salary, and made an honourable Figure: Nevertheleſs he went off without ſaying a Word, and came to Cologne, where he turn'd Catholick about the Year 1622. His firſt Employ was the Direction of the Collede (D) of the Proſelytes. He wrote ſome Letters of Controverſy to Horneius and Calixtus ‡, in which he laid the whole ſtreſs upon the Neceſſity there is that Chriſtians ſhould have an infallible Judge to determine Diſputes viva voce. For the Scripture being a Law, which can only ſpeak by the interpretation that is given it, and Controverſies being founded upon the different Meanings, that are given it; it muſt needs be, ſaid he, either that the Diſputes of Chriſtians ſhould never have an end, or that there ſhould be a ſpeaking Authority in the Church, to which all private Perſons ſhould be obliged to ſubmit †. He placed this Authority in the Pope; and when the bad Life of many Popes was objected to him, he had the Confidence to retort this Objection (E) againſt the Authors of the Scripture. The Letter he wrote to Calixtus has been printed more than once. That celebrated Profeſſor, unwilling to anſwer him in Writing, undertook to refute him in his School; of which he gave notice to the Students, by a written Paper poſted up. This Paper was printed without the Author's Knowledge in 1625; and being pretty ſharp did mightily incenſe Nihuſius, who return'd ſome time after to the Country of Brunſwick, to be Director of a Convent of Nuns ‡. He was made Abbot of Ilfeld in 1629, that Monaſtery being then taken from the Houſe of Brunſwick, who had made a School of it; in which Michael Neander and his Succeſſours had brought up very good Scholars. The next Year he publiſh'd a Book in High-Dutch, in which he inveighed mightily againſt Calixtus: At laſt, in 1633, his Darling Work came to Light; namely, a new Method (F) to confound the Hereticks †, which was very learnedly refuted by Calixtus.

Nihuſius

‡ Famous Divines at Helmſtad.

† See the Article Maimbourg.

‡ Moniales Cœnobii Haldenſlebienſis præpoſitus eſt. Calixtus ibid. pag. 26.

† Taken from Calixtus in his Digreſſion de arte nova.

primario loco ſederet, iis qui è ſummorum virorum Caſelii & Cornelii diſciplinâ prodierant, aditus ad officia & dignitatem muneris eccleſiaſtici vel omnino intercludebat, vel difficillimum ſaltem reddebat. Quæ res hominem meticuloſum adeo terruit, ut ſacra Theologiæ ſtudia animo diffidente & vacillante tractaret. The unfortunate Nihuſius loſt all his Advances; his Policy did him no Service: The Faction for which he had ſo great a regard, gave him a ſevere Mortification, which had unlucky Conſequences; for from thence forward he was diſguſted with Lutheraniſm. (d) Anno 1614. inſignis ei illata erat injuria diſputaturo è lumine naturæ principiisque philoſophicis de Deo. Quam tamen è fonte, quem digito ante indicavimus, manaſſe, & intelligentibus ac bonis omnibus, non minus quam ipſi, doluiſſe, nunquam potuit ignorare. Et hæc, niſi vehementer fallor, animum ejus à reformatâ religione primùm cæpit abalienare.

(D) The Direction of the College of the Proſelytes.] They educated in this College, at the Charge of the Archfraternity of the Holy Croſs, the young People who turn'd Catholicks, but one of their Fraternity (e) was to have a hand in their Converſion. The Duke of Bavaria was then the Head of this Fraternity: Albert of Auſtria had been the head of it before him, and Cardinal de Zollern Biſhop of Oſnabrug had firſt of all this Dignity. (f) Mihi id negatum hactenus, ut pote cujus curæ ac ſollicitudini perpetuæ demandatum Collegium, ubi ſelecti omnium Facultatum ſtudioſi, ad fidem catholicam converſi, jamque à ſuis omni ope deſtituti, aluntur atque ad altiora dirigantur, & quidem ſumptu Archifraternitatis S. Crucis, cujus caput hodie Elector Bavariæ, &c. Theſe Words are taken from a Letter of Nihuſius. By this we perceive with what Vigilance the Church of Rome has for a long time minded the Buſineſs of Converſions.

(E) Retort this Objection againſt the Authors of the Scripture.] A Curſed Effect of Pre-poſſeſſion! A Man that is once engag'd in an Hypotheſis, and has made it his Darling, ſpares nothing Sacred or Profane to maintain it, and get clear of an Objection. He will rather have the Scripture ſuffer, than be found without Reply; and, provided his Opinions be ſecur'd from Inſults, he is little concerned that the Sacred Writers loſe their Credit: He endeavours to ſave himſelf at their coſt; and oppoſes them to the Breach, that they may be trampled on, before the Enemy comes at him, or that the reſpect for them may prevent his being attack'd. He uſes the Stratagem as advantagious to the Spaniards, when they re-took Maeſtricht in 1576. They placed the Women (g) of Wich before their Soldiers, ſo that the Inhabitants of Maeſtricht durſt not fire upon the Spaniards: For they fear'd they ſhould kill their Relations, or at leaſt their Country-women (h). 'Tis certain, that when Nihuſius was to anſwer Calixtus, who ſaid it became not the Divine Wiſdom to eſtabliſh Religion upon the Authority of ſuch Wretches as the Popes had been for many Ages, he urg'd that the Authors of the Bible were very wicked Men, either bare-faced, as David, or ſecretly it may be. Objeceram ego, non eſſe probabile nec divinæ providentiæ, quæ ſuaviter omnia diſponat & gubernet, conſentaneum, certitudinem univerſæ doctrinæ quæ ad pietatem Deique cultum faciat, ab auctoritate & arbitrio hominum impiorum & flagitioſorum, quales aliquando integris ſeculis (audiatur de decimo teſtis Baronius) Romani Pontifices fuerint, ſuſpendere & ab auctoritate inquam & arbitrio hominum, quos ipſi eorum clientes ac patroni, & inter hos princeps Baronius, monſtra horrenda, apoſtaticos, fures & latrones vitâ turpiſſimos, moribus perditiſſimos, uſquequaque fœdiſſimos ex re & vero proclament. Ut hoc telum declinet, de auctoritate Sacræ Scripturæ idem pronunciat. Scripturæ, iniquit, conditæ à meris hominibus, & partim apertè, ut erat David, partim forſan etiam occultè facinoroſis (a). 'Twas no difficult task for the Profeſſor of Helmſtad to confound him (b), upon ſuch a falſe and deteſtable Retorſion. There's a great deal of difference between a Holy Man that commits heinous Sins, of which he ſpeedily repents, and thoſe who continue all their Lives in a ſinful Courſe.

(a) Calixt. ib. p. 15.

(b) Ibid. p. 20.

(F) A new Method to confound the Hereticks.] It was printed at Hildeſheim with this Title. Ars nova dicto ſacræ Scripturæ unico lucrandi è Pontificiis plurimos in partes Lutheranorum, detecta nonnihil & ſuggeſta Theologis Helmſtetenſibus, Georgio Calixto præſertim & Conrado Hornejo. Calixtus did not write a Book on purpoſe to refute it; he contented himſelf with anſwering it by way of Digreſſion, in a Work he had then in the Preſs, namely, an Epitome of Moral Divinity, which was publiſh'd in 1634. This Digreſſion was printed apart by the Francfort Bookſellers in 1652, in a Volume of 344 Pages in 4°. The Author addreſſes himſelf to the Profeſſors of the Roman Catholick Univerſities in Germany, and all along ſpeaks to them very civilly. He (c) obſerves, that Nihuſius was not the firſt who had invented a Method of Controverſy; and ſays, that René Benoit, Doctor of Divinity of the Faculty of Paris, propos'd a particular (d) Method in 1565. He adds, that this Doctor grew milder afterwards, and publiſh'd a French Book (e) at Caen, to ſhew that the Proteſtants could not be convicted of Hereſy, either as to their Doctrine or their Worſhip; and that the Council of Trent, which condemn'd them, is not clear of Faults, neither has it been receiv'd in the Kingdom. Calixtus does not doubt but this Book was written by René Benoit; For, ſays he, Thuanus (f) gives us to know that Henry IV. being at laſt reſolved to go to Maſs, had a mind to be inſtructed by that Doctor; who, coming to the King, was like to have loſt his Benefice (g), as being a Favourer of the Sectaries, and one that had preached what was contrary to the Faith (h). Theſe Reaſons ſeem to me not to be of ſufficient force, to make me believe that René Benoit was the Author of the Book, printed at Caen. Had he been the Author of it, he had never kept his Living of St. Euſtache, till the King's Abjuration. The Doctors of the Sorbonne, who mov'd to have him excommunicated, when he went to Paris to wait on the King of Navarre, would have inſiſted chiefly upon this Book, and not upon certain things alledg'd to have been

(c) In Digreſſione de Arte nova.

(d) In a Book entituled, Stromata in univerſum Organum Biblicum, ſeu Panoplia adverſus omnes nunc vigentes Hæreſes.

(e) In the Year 1590.

(f) Thuan. lib. 106.

(g) He was Curate of St. Euſtache.

(h) Thuan. lib. 107.

ſubeunt nonrem muliebrier clypea-
i, ſclopos ubter ca-um brahia axilaſque in oſtem collinean-
es. In quos dum explodere ives trepidant, ne conſanguineas iffineſve,

populares certe ſuas, antequam Hiſpanos, impeterent, audiunt, &c. Strada de bello Belgico, decad. 1. l. 8. p. m. 503. See alſo Valerius Maximus, lib. 5. c. 1. n. 5.

Nihuſius knew ſo well how to improve his Intereſt, that he came β to be Titular Biſhop of Myſia, and was made Suffragan of the Archbiſhoprick of Mentz; in the Exerciſe of which Office he died in the beginning of March γ 1657. He had got Friends at Rome, and he procured in Germany the Edition * of ſome Books compoſed beyond the Alps. I muſt not forget to acquaint you, that, being driven from his Abbey † by the Swedes, he fled to Holland, where he continued (G) ſeveral Years. In that Country he converſed frequently with Voſſius, and among other things told him, that the principal Reaſon of his adhering to the Communion of Rome, was his obſerving that the Sects which had ſeparated from it proved nothing (H) by Demonſtration.

Nicolas

β Tuldenus, part. 3. Hiſtor. pag. 165. apud Konig Bibl. theca vet. & nova. pag. 577.

γ Id. ibid. apud eundem ibid.

* See the Remark A.

† Voſſius Ep. 228. p. 240.

(i) Voſſius Epiſt. 228. p. 240. dated from Amſterdam, May 28, 1634.

been ſpoken by him in the Pulpit. I believe therefore, that, by a Trick familiar to the Writers in thoſe Days, ſome Author, who was either a good Huguenot, or out of Policy engaged in the Intereſt of Henry IV. publiſhed that Book in Benoit's Name. This I know is not the Opinion of the Author of the Eleventh Volume of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle; for he, without boggling, aſcribes it to the (i) Curate of St. Euſtache. To return to the Hiſtory of Methods.

(i) See p. 546 of Tome 11 of the Bibliotheque Univerſelle. In the ſubſequent Pages you'll find the Title, and the Abſtract of the pretended Book of René Benoit.

Calixtus (k) obſerves, 1. That about forty Years after René Benoit had publiſh'd his Method, Father Gonteri the Jeſuit appear'd with his, and was followed by Father Arnoux and Father Francis Veron, both Jeſuits. 2. That Vedelius (l) is perſuaded that Cardinal du Perron drew the Plan of theſe Jeſuits Method; which conſiſts in obliging the Proteſtants to prove what they teach in oppoſition to the Council of Trent, not by the aſſiſtance of Conſequences, but by expreſs Words of Scripture. 3. That he can't believe (m) that that Cardinal approved this Method, which differs ſo widely from that we meet with in his Controverſy with King James. 4. That in 1605 Antony Faber, publiſhing a Code, prefixed to it a new Method of overthrowing the Hereticks. (n) Codex Antonii Fabri Sebuſiani Senatoris & Conſiliarii Sabaudici, quem à ſuo nomine Fabrianum inſcripſit, bonum factum exiſtimans, ſi in veſtibulo voluminis hæreticos, quos vocat, inſigni & majore, quam Juriſconſultorum captus eſſe ſolet, audaciâ conficeret. Cui conatui primum librum impendit; eliſo tamen, ut accepimus, alterius Juriſconſulti, Jacobi videlicet Lectii, operâ & oppoſito ſcripto. All Plaintiffs, ſaid he, are obliged to bring Proof, whether they inſiſt on the Negative or the Affirmative. This is the Maxim of the Law; above all, a Plaintiff is obliged to it, when he diſturbs thoſe who are in a peaceable poſſeſſion of the Eſtate that he Sues for. This Civilian concludes, that the Proteſtants are bound to prove all that they deny; and in caſe of failure of good Proof, ought to be non-ſuited. This is the whole of Nihuſius's Invention, and is nothing elſe but the Method of Preſcription. (o) Primum & præcipuum caput artis Nihuſianæ, aut potiùs Fabrianæ, hoc ipſum eſt, probationem omnium eorum, quæ Pontificii hodie affirmant, declinare & à ſe alienam dicere, atque adeo nihil eorum, quæ de Pontificis principatu & infallibilitate, de ſacrificio Chriſti in Miſſâ quâ ſpeciem & ſubſtantiam iterando, de ſtatuis adorandis, de purgatorio, ſeptem ſacramentis, indulgentiis & plurimis ſimilibus aſſerunt, vel e Scripturâ vel è traditione Eccleſiaſticâ probare velle: nempe quia ipſi ſint in poſſeſſione ſuorum dogmatum; quin, ait, ſe & majores ſuos, cum quibus & noſtri aliquando fecerint, ab aliquot ſeculis in poſſeſſione fuiſſe, ſuaſque adeo de religione opiniones ſive ſententias ufurpaſſe, vel, ut recentiores loquuntur, præſcripſiſſe. Se igitur & ſuos non teneri ad probationem eorum, quæ ipſi docent & affirment, ſed probationis, & quidem prævalidæ vicem eſſe, quod affirment: nos verò teneri, ut quæ negamus, demonſtremus, & quidem demonſtremus è Scripturâ, id eſt, Scripturam continere negantes, ipſorum affirmantibus oppoſitas. Thus far did Dr. Calixtus carry the Hiſtory of theſe Methods. See the Sequel or Continuation in Mr. Heidegger's (p) Hiſtoria Papatus. Grotius was mightily pleas'd with Calixtus's Refutation of Nihuſius. (q) Bertholdo Nihuſio de nova illa, qua diſſentientes impetit via, eruditè & prudenter reſpondit Calixtus libro de Arte nova, quem ſubjunxit libro de Theologia moderandi. Hoc anno Helmeſtadii editum id opus. Summa hæc eſt, in iis quæ de rebus ſive humanis ſive divinis credimus nulla eſſe poſſeſſionis privilegia: aſſerentibus incumbere probationem. Probari autem non tantum quod totidem literis oſtenditur, ſed & quod per legitimas & homini non inſano neque pertinaci fidem facturas illationes deducitur.... Calixti librum ut legas rogo: multa ſunt in eo utilia: multa ab aliis dicta quidem, ſed à nemine exactiùs. I have not ſeen Nihuſius's Reply; all I know, is, that 'tis entituled, (r) Apologia contra Antidabatam Helmeſtetenſem.

(k) Calixt. ibid. pag. 129.

(l) In Rationali Theologico.

(m) Calixt. ibid pag 130.

(n) Ibid. pag. 156.

(o) Ibid. pag. 159, 160.

(p) In Periodo ſeptima, n. 218.

(q) Grotius Epiſt. 339. Partis 1. p. 122. This Letter is dated Aug. 2. 1634.

(r) See Voſſius's 380 Letter pag. 349.

(G) He continued ſeveral Years in Holland.] He was at Amſterdam in May 1634, and had liv'd there above a Year, if we credit Voſſius. (ſ) Jam annus, & credo, ultra eſt, quod in urbe hac degit Bartholdus Nihuſius, vir doctus, & ſubtilis, Lutheranus quondam, & Calixto Theologo perfamiliaris, poſtea Pontificius, atque ad Abbatis dignitatem evectus; ſed ea, bello hoc Suevico exutus, & nunc exterris. He was ſtill there in 1640, as we are inform'd by the ſame Voſſius, who, through the weakneſs of his Memory, which is not at all to be wondred at, thought Nihuſius had not ſtaved at Amſterdam above three or four Years (t). He was ſtill there in 1647 and 1649, as we gather from the date of his Letters (u) to Father Morin.

(H) Proved nothing by Demonſtration.] We have ſeen above that Voſſius found him a learned and ſubtil Man; to which I add that he found him a very civil and pleaſant humour'd Man. (v) Vir doctus & perhumanus nec infacetus. Nihuſius pre poſſeſs'd with an Opinion of his new Method, and fancying to himſelf that no Body would be able to ſtand it, deſired a Conference with Voſſius, and declared to him, that, provided the Lutherans or Calviniſts would give him ſome Proof that was beyond Exception, he would turn Proteſtant again. Let them chooſe, ſaid he, what Head they will, that, for inſtance, upon which they think themſelves ſtrongeſt; I ask but one good Argument of 'em: But if they can offer me nothing but Probabilities, they'll give me leave to maintain, that we ought to return to the Church, from which our Anceſtors ſeparated. (d) Poſcit ἀπόδειξιν, inviſtumque aliquid, quodque animum poſſit, aut debeat reddere, ἀναπόδοτον, & ἀμεταπείθητον. Negat opus de ſingulis diſputare. Eligere ſuos Lutheranos, vel etiam Calvinianos, & quoſvis alios, poſſe, ubi maximè exiſtimet ſuæ Eccleſiæ cauſam triumphare. Si unum viderit argumentum, velle redire ad eos, unde malum pedem extulerit. Sin diſputando intelligant, nihil ſolidi crepare, quicquid hactenus obtenditur, æquum videri, ut redeamus ad Romanæ Eccleſiæ ſinum. His ſtrongeſt Argument was this: Tell me, Mr. Voſſius, why your Father quitted the Church of Rome? Give me a juſt Reaſon for it. Voſſius inſiſted on the difference between that Church and the Primitive Church; but after ſeveral Diſcourſes he fix'd upon this: The Doctors of the Church of Rome interpret Scripture in ſuch a manner, that they put upon it a Senſe manifeſtly forced, and ſometimes Contradictory, and generally widely different from the Doctrine of the Antient Fathers; and not contented with this, they put to Death thoſe who will not adopt ſuch Interpretations: There was a good Reaſon then to come to a Rupture with ſuch Interpreters of the Word of God, and to form new Aſſemblies; both for obtaining a Worſhip agreeable to one's Conſcience, and for preſerving a Life that may be ſerviceable to one's Country, Church and Family. (e) Ille igitur poſcente cauſam patriam, cui parens meus a Romana abierit Eccleſia, reſpondi multa, de veteris, præſentis Romanæ Eccleſiæ diſcrimine. Sed tandem in eo ſedem figebamus; Romanæ Eccleſiæ Doctoribus, ita ſcripturas interpretantibus, ut manifeſta ſæpe vi fiat, planeque abeant à primorum ſeculorum Doctoribus, imo interdum (ut in tranſubſtantiationis dogmate) ſenſus interpretationi reclamet, manifeſtaque ſit contradictio: Nec ſolum ſic interpretantibus, ſed etiam, niſi ſimpliciter (f) interpreteris, ferro te, & flamma perdere paratis: jure ab ejuſmodi Doctoribus receditur, ac ſeorſim cultus Dei celebratur, partim conſentiente ſtudio, partim vitæ conſervandæ, quam Patriæ, Eccleſiæ, Familiæ, & amicis conducibilem exiſtimamus. Though Voſſius's Anſwer was highly reaſonable, he did not entirely rely upon it; for he deſir'd his good Friend Grotius to examine the Caſe and communicate his Thoughts to him. Si valetudo, ſi otium tibi, ſi res etiam tuæ ſic ferant, ut hujuſmodi tractes, quod arbitror: quæſo paucis ſaltem perlege, quid tibi de hac re videatur, & quam potiſſimum viam, cum ipſius di hominibus inſiſtendam putes. All the Anſwer that he receiv'd was, that he (t) Voſſius Epiſt. 228. p. 240.

(u) Abiuta ſua à Sueco militie ejectus, ac inde in Bataviam profugus, ubi nunc terrium quartumve annum agit. Voſſius Epiſtola 380. pag. 349. dated April 12. 1640.

(b) See the 67 and 74 Letters in the Collection, entituled, Eccleſiæ Orientalis antiquitates.

(c) Idem Voſſius, Ep. 349.

(d) Idem Epiſt. 228. pag. 240.

(e) Id. ib.

(f) We ought to read ſimiliter. Several ſuch Faults are ſlipt into Voſſius's Letters. They miſtook his Manuſcript, and your Correctors commonly mind nothing but the Orthography. They let one Word paſs for another, provided it does not marr the Senſe quite, or be ſtark ſtaring Nonſenſe.

Nicolas Ritterſhuſius being charged with Plagiariſm out of Nihuſius, gave an Anſwer (I) that's worth Conſideration. The Author of Memorabilia Eccleſiaſtica Sæculi Decimi Septimi, has not given the right time (K) when Nihuſius publiſhed a new Notion upon the Invocation of Saints.

NYMPHODORUS

A PARAPHRASE upon Nihuſius's Thoughts.

juſtified the (g) ſeparation of the Proteſtants very well.

'Tis plain, that Nihuſius had put his Argument thus. When we find our ſelves embarked by Birth and Education in a certain Communion, the Inconveniences we therein undergo are not a warrantable reaſon for quitting it, unleſs we can be Gainers by the change; that is, remove to another where we may be eaſier. For to what purpoſe ſhould we abandon the Communion that gave us Being and Education if in ſo doing we only ſhift the Diſtemper? Let's try this caſe; I agree to a Tryal of it: Let's imitate thoſe poor ſick People, who when weary of the Bed, think to be much eaſier by being ſet in an Elbow-Chair. Let's leave the Church of Rome, and cleave to the Proteſtant Church; but then as theſe ſick Perſons are no ſooner undeceived, in finding their uneaſineſs not abated by being in the Chair, but they get to Bed again: So ought we to reſume the Profeſſion of Popery, as ſoon as we find that the Proteſtant Doctors do not remove our Difficulties. They allege nothing to us but diſputable Reaſons; nothing that's convincing; nothing that's demonſtrative; they prove and they object; but both their Proofs and their Objections are anſwered; they reply, and meet with Replies again: So we're never at an end. To what purpoſe then ſhould we form a Schiſm? Did we meet with any thing in the Church, ſince our Birth, that's more inconvenient? We wanted Demonſtrations in it; we had nothing offered to us that could fix our Mind upon a ſure bottom; we ſtill found Objections againſt all the Doctrines, and all the Replies, in infinitum. This was our great diſadvantage; and we lye under the ſame among the Proteſtants: We ought not therefore to ſtay among them. Let's return to that Body that has the advantage of poſſeſſion; and if we muſt be ill-lodged, is it not better to be ſo in our own Country, and in our Father's Houſe, than in the Inns of foreign and ſtrange Countries? Beſides, the Controverſy is attended with more inconveniencies on the Proteſtant, than on the Popiſh ſide. The latter has all its Enemies before it; the ſame Arms that ſerve it for attacking and repulſing one, are of uſe for attacking and repulſing others. But the Proteſtants have Enemies both before and behind 'em; they're like a Ship engaged between two Fires; Popery attacks 'em on one ſide, and Socinianiſm on the other. The Arms they make uſe of againſt Popery, are an Annoyance inſtead of doing Service in their Controverſy with the Socinian; for this Heretick diſplays upon them all the Arguments they make uſe of againſt the Church of Rome: So that a Proteſtant, coming off from the attack of a Papiſt, and preparing to attack a Socinian, is obliged to change, at leaſt, part of his Armour. Theſe to be ſure were the Chimera's with which Nihuſius fed himſelf; and which influenced him to think, that in order to convince the Proteſtants that they did a-miſs in abandoning the Church of Rome, 'twas ſufficient to ask 'em a demonſtrative Proof of their Belief: A Proof, I ſay, that's as unexceptionable, as a Mathematical Demonſtration. He knew very well they would never take him at his Word. Moſt Divines agree, that the Controverſies of Religion can't be carried to that height of Evidence. A famous Miniſter has lately inform'd us (b) that to aſſert, that the Holy Spirit gives us an evident Knowledge of the Truths of Religion, is not only a dangerous Error, but a Doctrine hitherto rejected by the Proteſtants. He maintains, that a faithful Soul embraces theſe Truths, without the Evidence of Reaſon, and even without knowing that 'tis evident that God has reveal'd 'em; and he ſays, that they are pernicious Innovators, who aſſert, that at leaſt the Holy Spirit makes us ſee evidently the Teſtimony that God has given to theſe Truths. I am very ſure, that Nihuſius did not expect to have a demonſtrative Argument offer'd him. But what did he think of, then, when he promis'd to return to Lutheraniſm upon that Condition? Did he act the part of a grave Man? Had he been a Man of Reaſon, he would have fully acquieſced in the Anſwer that Voſſius gave him; which is very judicious and very ſolid. But let us confeſs, that Nihuſius did not always ground his Thoughts upon Chimera's; he made a bad Application of a good Principle, viz. We ought not to depart from the place wherein we are, if the Change be uſeleſs. The Miniſter I mention'd but now, makes uſe of that Axiom. He's a rigid Predeſtinarian, and a great Particulariſt, and groans under a Load of Objections, to which his Syſtem is expoſed; but he does not change his Hypotheſis, becauſe he finds none that reſcues him from the Oppreſſion. He would find nothing to ſatisfie his Reaſon in the Hypotheſis of the Moliniſts, nor in the other looſe ways of explaining Grace; ſo he chooſes to continue where he is, rather than take another ſituation that would not cure him (i). This is wiſely done.

(i) See the Book entituled, Jugement ſur les methodes rigides & relâchées d'expliquer la Providence & la grace, pag. 23.

(I) Gave an Anſwer that's worth Conſideration.] His place (a) obliging him to harangue at the Promotion or Graduation of a Doctor, he choſe to harangue upon Hanno's Voyage. He was charged with copying a Letter that Nihuſius had writ upon this Subject. He made anſwer that that Letter had ſerv'd him for a Guide nineteen Years before; but that he lay under no obligation to cite Nihuſius: For, added he, I do not make uſe of Nihuſius's Words: I take the Terms of the Authors whom I have conſulted, and do accordingly mention their Names; only two indeed I have made uſe of, without the opportunity of peruſing them. (b) Tu Nihuſii ne ſemel quidem mentionem facis. Fateor, nec cauſa fuit, cur allegarem cujus verbis non utor, ſed ſemper auctorum quos ille citat, & illa ipſa verba non ex Nihuſio, ſed ex ipſis auctoribus excripſi, excepto Hieronymo & Tranſylvano anonymo. Illum ad manus non habui, hunc videre nunquam contigit. We agree, that this Juſtification is very fair in ſome Reſpects. An Author that goes to the Spring Head, and verifies all the Paſſages that others have alledged, becomes a lawful Poſſeſſor. He's not obliged to cite any but the Original Writings that he has conſulted; 'twould be a piece of Injuſtice to call one a Plagiary, upon pretence that he brings in the ſame things with others. But after all, I am of Opinion, that Honeſty, Equity and Gratitude, demand an Acknowledgment of the Obligations we are under to thoſe who directed us to the Sources. When an Author therefore is convinced in Conſcience; that, if he had not read the Diſſertations of ſome Moderns that have quoted ancient Authors, he had not known whom to addreſs himſelf to, to learn the Original Authorities: An Author, I ſay, con'cious of this, would do well to give the Publick to know the good Offices done him by theſe Moderns. Having once done this in a Preface, he may cite of his own Head the Ancients he has conſulted, and act as a true Proprietor. Here I muſt obſerve, by the bye, that your Writers, who religiouſly obſerve the Quotation of the Chapters and Pages, from whence they borrow any thing, have more Honeſty than Politicks: They neglect the Intereſts of Vain-glory; they ſtrip themſelves of the Pleaſure of being cited; for by this means they facilitate the Verification ſo far, that every Writer turns to the reſpective places when he has occaſion for the ſame Proofs, or to mention the ſame Matters of Fact, that are contain'd in their Books; after which he contents himſelf with citing the ancient Author. Whereas, if they brought in curious Things, without telling from whence they have them, and only mentioning the Names of their Vouchers, others would ſcarce dare to vent the ſame things any otherwiſe than under their Authority, unleſs they were Authors of the firſt Rank. By Vertue of this Precaution they would ſee their Names in the Margins of Books; and that Honour would be long paid them. How many Authors do to this Day pay that Honour to Alexander ab Alexandro, and to Cælius Rhodiginus, who practis'd the Politicks we now ſpeak of?

(a) Thomaſius de Plagio Literario, p. 239.

(b) Nicol. Ritterſhuſius Epiſt. ad Georgium Richterum, pag. 206. Epiſtolarum Richteriarum. See Thomaſius de Plagio Literario, p. 73. and 240.

ARE FLECTION upon a certain way of Quoting.

(K) Has not given the right time when Nihuſius publiſh'd a new Notion upon the Invocation of Saints.] He ſays, his Maſter and Profeſſor. Upon the firſt Queſtion, 'tis no wonder that Mr. Saurin is miſtaken. There are groſſer Errors than that, though ſcarce any more dangerous: But upon the Queſtion of Fact, we can never wonder enough, that a Man, who ſets up for an Author ſhould fall into ſuch an Error, as to call that a new Opinion, a budding Error, which is as Antient as the World, and of equal Extent with the Chriſtian Religion; and which, till this our Age, was never attack'd by any but Hereticks. Jurieu, Defenſe de la doctrine univerſelle de l'Egliſe contre les imputations de Mr. Saurin, pag. 3. of the Rotterdam Edition in 1695.

NYMPHODORUS of Amphipolis, the Author of a Piece twice (A) cited by Clemens Alexandrinus, and now loſt, flouriſh'd no Body knows when. The Scholiaſt upon Apollonius has cited the ſame Work to prove, that the * Tibarenians, as ſoonas their Wives were brought to Bed, went to Bed themſelves, and made their Wives ſerve them in every thing after the ſame manner as Women in Child-Bed are elſewhere. Politian is very much (B) miſtaken upon the Words of this Scholiaſt.

NORADIN, the Son of Sanguin, Soudan of Aleppo (A) and of Nice, ſurpaſs'd his Father in every thing, though he had been the beſt accompliſh'd and moſt puiſſant Prince that the Turks had in his time †. Sanguin being kill'd by ſome of his Eunuchs, while he laid Siege to Colegembar upon the Euphrates, in γ 1143. Noradin divided the Paternal Inheritance with his ‡ Brother; by Vertue of which Diviſion he became Soudan of Aleppo, and in a little time one of the moſt powerful Princes in all Aſia. He had nothing of the Turk or Barbarian, but the Name; and was poſſeſs'd of all the Qualities of a great General. He was equally prudent, bold and ſucceſsful. the moſt vigilant Man in the World, and the readieſt to lay hold of all Opportunities of putting in execution a brave Action. He was not deſtitute of the Qualities of a Man of Honour. He was good and pious in the way of his falſe Religion. One of his firſt Exploits was the Defeat of Joſſelin de Courtenai, Comte of Edeſſa, whoſe Troops were ſo routed, that Joſſelin had much ado to eſcape almoſt all alone to Samoſata. The greateſt part of his Territories fell under the Sovereignty of Noradin, who afterwards enlarged his Conqueſts very conſiderably; when the Cruſade, to which St.

* A People that liv'd near the Euxin Sea. See that Article.

† Towards the middle of the 12th Century.

γ And not in 1145, as Maimbourg has it, Tom. 1. of the Cruſades, pag. 305. Dutch Editor.

‡ He was the Eldeſt Brother, and his Name was Corebedin.

ſays, that about the Year 1614, Nihuſius a new Papiſt coined a new Error, viz. that the Saints departed, live ſtill in reſpect of their Bodies; and therefore are to be adored in their Reliques. (c) Novum cudit ac profudit Errorem, dum conatu magno quidem, ſed irrito, probare nititur: Sanctos hac vita defunctos non eſſe mortuos vel quoad corpus, vel quoad reliquias ſeu exuvias corporis. Formata enim queſtione: "An adorandi ſint "ſancti ſuis in reliquiis?" affirmat, quia, inquit, ſancti in exuviis corporum non ſunt mortui, ſed omnino vivunt adhuc. The conſequence that this Proſelyte drew from his Hypotheſis, went very deep; for, not contented to prove from thence that the Saints merit our Adoration, he found a ſort of Atheiſm in the oppoſite Opinion, and branded it as ſtriking at the Root of the Reſurrection. (d) Quoniam itaq; Sancti ſuis in corporibus adhuc vivunt, certatim nos illuc agglomeremur, & adoremus amoroſiſſimè, ſpem reſurrectionis noſtræ ſimul quaſi ſatiantes, & mortis metum puerilem abjicentes, nequaquam vero ſuperbe quicquam ejus reſpuentes; hæreſeos ac atheiſmi pars eſt opinio illa feralis & luctuoſa de mortuis ac non viventibus ſanctorum corporibus, utpote reſurrectionem impiè negans in receſſu. My Author do's not inform me whether theſe Words are taken from a Didactick Piece or from a Harangue; but I fancy Nihuſius ſpoke theſe Words in ſome Declamation or other. We are referred to two Authors that (e) refuted him; one call'd Himmelius, and the other David Chriſtian. The latter is cited by my Author when the Death of Nihuſius, in 1657, is ſpoken of, and when he repeats that about 1614, he was drawn into the Communion of Rome, by the Jeſuit Martinus Becanus, and that he taught, that the Saints in Paradiſe live ſtill in their Bodies: A Thought which he call'd a Divine Oracle, and a clear Light into a profound Myſtery, and a ſublimer Philoſophy touching ſleeping and waking, than that of Ariſtotle and the other Philoſophers. David Chriſtian owns, that 'twas a new Oracle, not Prophetical, but Poetical, and ſo ſubtle that 'twas unknown to all the Fathers, and was not underſtood by Ariſtotle, nor Scaliger, nor any of the moſt penetrating Philoſophers, unleſs it be perhaps Rodolphus Goclenius, who, in ſome place or other, affirms, that certain Portions of Life remain in dead Bodies, of which God will form a new Body at the Reſurrection. (f) Novum hoc eſt, ſed non Propheticum, Poeticum autem ac Nihuſianum, tam ſubtile, ut nulli vel S. S. Patrum, vel Lutheranorum, vel Pontificiorum, viſum fuerit; nec intellectum vel ab Ariſtotele, vel Scaligero, vel à quovis alio, acutiſſimo etiam Philoſopho, niſi forſan à Rudolpho Goclenio, alicubi aſſerente: in humano corpore demortuo quaſdam adhuc vitæ reliquias ſupereſſe, ex quibus in reſurrectione novum corpus formandum ſit. Here by the bye, we may take notice of a Notion of Goclenius, that's very fantaſtical and ſingular: 'Tis good to be inform'd of ſuch Notions, that we may have a fuller View of the extent of the Whims, and Viſions of the Minds of Men. From what I have ſet forth in this Remark, we may conclude, that Nihuſius was one of thoſe lively preſumptuous Men, that are eaſily dazzled by the falſe Luſtre of a Paradox, and labour with eagerneſs to communicate to the World the Opinion they're ſo fond of. They magnify the Idea of ſmall things; and recommend 'em with ſuch warmth, as if 'twere a matter of the laſt importance: The true Reverſe of the Roman Poet, who ſaid,

Non (g) equidem hoc ſtudeo, bullatis ut mihi nugis
Pagina turgeſcat, dare pondus idonea fumo.

By this ſign we may diſtinguiſh thoſe who enter the Liſts, mounted upon the Chariot of Vanity, (h) Quos tulit in ſcenam ventoſo gloria curru.

To know the Chronological Error of the Author of the Memoranda Eccleſiaſtica, we need only call to mind that Nihuſius did not abjure Lutheraniſm till about 1622.

(A) Author of a Piece twice cited by Clemens Alexandrinus.] (i) Νυμφόδωρος ὁ Ἀμφιπολίτης ἐν τρίτῳ νομίμων Ἀσίας. Nymphodorus Amphipolitanus in tertio de legibus Aſiæ. (k) Νυμφόδωρος ἐν νομίμοις βαρβαρικοῖς. Nymphodorus in libro de legibus barbaricis. We can't reaſonably doubt but that both theſe Paſſages relate to the ſame Author; but 'tis not ſo certain, that they refer to the ſame Book. However, I believe with Voſſius (l) that the Treatiſe of the Laws of Aſia, compil'd by Nymphodorus, differed from the Books of the Laws of the Barbarians, only as a Part from the Whole. This Work was not ſmall; for the Scholiaſt upon (m) Sophocles cites the 13th Book of it.

(B) Politian is much miſtaken upon the Words of this Scholiaſt.] (n) Ἐν δὲ τῇ τῶν Βαρβήνων γῇ αἱ γυναῖκες ὅταν τέκωσι, τιμελῶσι τὰς ἀνδρὰς ὥσπερ λεχούς. ὡς ἱστορεῖ νομφόδωρος ἐν τοῖς νόμοις. Such are the Words of the Scholiaſt upon Apollonius. Now Politian's Words are theſe. (o) Adjunt Interpretes Apollonii ſcriptum id etiam a Nymphodoro in Tiſinomis. According to this, Nymphodorus muſt have writ a Book, entituled, Titinomi. But nothing is more ridiculous than that Suppoſition. Doubtleſs this was the occaſion of Politian's Miſtake, viz. The Scholiaſt's Manuſcript made but one Word of τοι and νομοις; for if the Tranſcribers had parted theſe two Words, he would readily have ſeen that they ſignify in quibuſdam legibus, and ſo would not have fallen into the miſtake that he has been ſo often charged with. Note, That Rutgerſius (p) thinking ἐν τοι νόμοις, ſuppoſes that it ſhould be read ἐν τοῖς νόμοις. The Conjecture is ſo likely, that we may well take it to be juſt. But he is out, when he ſays, that Politian's Error was followed by John Hartungus; for all that can be laid to Hartungus's Charge is, that he (q) made uſe of the Reading, ἐν τοι νόμοις, which is rare nal enough, and has been adopted by Hoelzlinus in his Edition of Apollonius, which came out after Rutgerſius's Work. Let obſerve, by the bye, that Hartungus, who has diſcovered ſo many falſe Quotations: guilty of one himſelf in the place cited but now. He there affirms, that Calius Rhodiginus relates, upon the Teſtimony of the Scholiaſt of Apollonius, the modiſh Cuſtom of the Tibarenians. Now, this is an Untruth. Rhodiginus (r) cites only Nymphodorus.

(a) Andreas Carolus memor. eccleſiaſt. ſæculi decimi ſeptimi lib. 2. cap. 18. pag. 352 ad ann. 1614.

(b) Id ib.

(c) Himmelius in tractatu de Natura Invocationis Religioſæ, pag. 520, 525, ſeq. confer diſputat. inauguralem Dn. Davidis Chriſtiani, de R. Pontificis Infallib. & S. S. Canoniſatione, pag. 66. ſeq. Id. ib. pag. 353.

(f) David Chriſtianus ubi ſupra apud Andream Carolum ib. lib 6. cap. 51. pag. 165. ad ann. 1657.

(g) Perſius ſat. 5. v. 19.

(h) Horat. epiſt. 1. lib. 2. pag. m. 284.

(i) Clemens Alexandr. Stromat. lib. 1. pag. 322.

(k) Id. in admonit. ad Gentes pag. 43.

(l) Voſſius de hiſtor. Græcis lib. 3. p. 393

(m) Schol. Soph. in Oedip. Colon.

(n) Scholiaſtes Apollonii in lib. 2. Argonaut. v. 1012.

(o) Angelus Politianus epiſt. 16. lib. 1. fol. m. 26.

(p) Rutgerſius var. lection. lib. 4. cap. pag. 443

(q) Joh. Hartungus locorum memorabilium decuria 1. cap. 6. p. 659. Tom. 2. Theſaur. Gruteri.

(r) Calius Rhodig. in antiq. lectionib. l. 15. cap. 1. p. m. 1. 24.

(s) Hubertus Goltzius in Fastis Tarſicis 1. p. 475.

(t) Iſaac

St. Bernard had predicted ſo much Felicity, miſcarried in a diſmal manner in the Siege of Damaſcus, Anno 1148, and return'd with Diſgrace to Europe. Noradin knew well how to improve ſuch a promiſing Opportunity. He invaded the Principality of Antioch with a powerful Army; gain'd a Victory over Prince Raimond, who fell upon the Spot; made himſelf Maſter of the Fortreſs of Harenc, and moſt of the other Places of that Principality; took the Count of Edeſſa (above-mention'd) by Ambuſcade, and put him to Death in Irons at Aleppo; diſlodg'd the Greeks of the whole Country, into whoſe Hands the Counteſs and Baudouin, King of Jeruſalem, had put it, in order to be protected by them; and conquer'd the City and Territory of Damaſcus. Baudouin made a very vigorous Oppoſition to ſtop the Conqueror's Progreſs, and defeated him oftner than once; and that in ſuch a manner that his Enemy admir'd him: For we are told for a Certainty, that when Baudouin was poyſoned by his Phyſician at thirty-two Years of Age ‡, Noradin would never take Advantage of the Conſternation rais'd all over his Kingdom by his Death, and with equal Modeſty and Greatneſs of Soul, ſaid, That it beboved him to condole with them, and pay a Regard to the occaſion of their juſt Grief, ſince they lamented the Death of a Prince that had not his equal in the World. Some time after he made himſelf Maſter of the City of Paneas. In a word, he poſſeſs'd almoſt all Syria and Meſopotamia, and extended his Conqueſts even beyond Cilicia to the States of the Sultan of Iconium, whom he defeated in a Battle. Fortune preſented to him a fair Opportunity of carrying his Arms into Egypt, when Sanar, Soudan of that Kingdom, being diſpoſſeſs'd by Dorgan, had recourſe to his Protection. Accordingly he ſent into Egypt a numerous Army, under the Command of Syracon, General of his (B) Forces. Amauri, King of Jeruſalem (C) very indiſcreetly aſſiſted Dorgan, ſtipulating from him a large Tribute. Syracon, amidſt many Viciſſitudes, was obliged to quit Egypt twice, but at laſt carried it, after having caus'd Sanar to be aſſaſſinated, and got himſelf to be made Soudan in his room, by the Calif of Grand Cairo. Noradin, whoſe Creature he was, ſuffer'd all this. This new Soudan died that ſame (D) Year, leaving for his Succeſſor the Great Saladin his (E) Nephew. Noradin died likewiſe in 1173. His Widow married Saladin, and his Son was diſpoſſeſs'd of his Dominions by the ſame Saladin †.

‡ In 1163.

† Guill. Tyrius & alii, apud Maimbourg Hiſtory of the Cruſades, Tom. 1. and 2.

OBSE-

(B) General of his Forces.] Father Maimbourg (f) ſays, he was a little Man, and his Merit raiſed him to the higheſt Poſt in the Kingdom, notwithſtanding the Obſcurity of his Birth, and his being a Slave: But Calviſius (g) aſſures us he was Noradin's Brother.

(C) Very indiſcreetly.] I made uſe of this Expreſſion out of regard to a great many, who attribute to this the Loſs of Jeruſalem. The Grounds they go upon, are, that Saladin, who expel'd the Chriſtians from thence, found them and the Saracens link'd together, by reaſon of the Wars that his Predeceſſor Syracon carried on in Egypt againſt King Amauri. However we muſt not forget, that this young Prince met with Succeſs in the beginning of theſe Wars. I find ſome Hiſtorians make him the Cauſe of a more preſent Evil: For they ſay, his Expedition to Egypt occaſion'd Noradin's Invaſion of Antioch. I mean that Invaſion in which Boemond, Prince of Antioch, and Raimond Count of Tripoli were defeated, and taken Priſoners by Noradin. Cluverius (h) puts this Invaſion after Syracon's Expedition; but Calviſius ranks it in 1165, and the Expedition in (i) 1168.

(D) Died that ſame Year.] Father Maimbourg dates his Death in 1168; but Calviſius takes the righter way in dating it in 1170.

(E) His Nephew.] Or rather his Grand-ſon; Nepos ex filio, as Calviſius (k) aſſures us.

(f) Cruſades, Tom. 2. p. 46.

(g) Ad ann. 1169.

(h) Jo. Cluverius, Hiſtor. Epitome.

(i) Vide Calviſium ad ann. 1169.

(k) Ad ann. 1170.

O.

OBSEQUENS (JULIUS) a Latin Writer, whoſe Country we are at a loſs to know, as well as the Age he liv'd in. We only conjecture, that he liv'd ſometime before the Reign of Honorius. Scaliger † inſinuates, that he liv'd before that Period of Time, in which St. Jerom ‡ compos'd Supplements to Euſebius's Chronicon. Friſius is groſly (A) miſtaken. We are likewiſe at a loſs to know what Religion Obſequens was of; but the Fragments we have of his Collection of Prodigies ought to perſwade us that he was a Heathen. That Work was chiefly a Liſt (B) of the Prodigies inſerted by Livy in his Hiſtory. What we have left of it begins with the Conſulſhip of Lucius Scipio and Caius Lælius, that is, (C) towards the 561 Year of Rome. We have ſeveral Editions (D) of it. Lycoſthenes has indeavour'd to ſupply what is loſt of the Original. Mr. Moreri's Quotation (E) upon this Head is a very ſorry one.

† Scalig. Animadv. in Euſeb. n. 1886. p. m. 147.

‡ He compoſed them in the Reign of Valens the Emperour. Now Valens died in 379.

OCHINUS (BERNARDIN) was one of the Eccleſiaſticks of Italy that fled their Country in the XVIth Century, in order to embrace the Proteſtant Religion. He was a Sieneſe. He was firſt a Cordelier, and then a Capuchin *. He continued in the Order of the Capuchins from 1534 to 1542 ‡. They are miſtaken, who ſay he was the (A) Founder of the Order, or one of the four that firſt engaged in it; but 'tis certain he was choſen General of the Order. I do not believe he was the Pope's † Confeſſor, as ſome have alledged. He obſerv'd (B) the Rules of his Order with wonder-

* Spond. ad ann. 1547. n. 22

‡ Idem ad ann. 1525. n. 27.

† See the Remark D towards the end.

(a) Joh. Jacobus Friſius in ſua Bibliotheca apud Scheffer. in præfat. in Jul. Obſequentem.

(b) Balth. Boniface. de Script. Hiſt. Rom. N. B. That Zeiller in Hiſtoricis parte 1. pag. 55. in quoting him puts 55 inſtead of 505.

(c) See what he puts in after his Preface and the firſt of his Remarks.

(d) In the Preface to his Edition.

(e) From the Manuſcript that Jocundus of Verona had given him.

(f) Voſſius de Hiſt. Latinis, pag. 711.

(g) Id. ib.

(h) See Voſſius, ib.

(i) At Amſterdam 1679 in 8vo.

(k) Saris conſtat... eandem loquutum fuiſſe, ſerpentemque latraſſe. Alex ab Alexandro genial. dier. lib. 3. c. 15. p. m. 733.

(l) Tiraquellus not. in hunc locum Alex. ab Alexandro.

(A) Friſius (a) is groſly miſtaken.] He ſaid, that this Obſequens liv'd in the time of Panetius and Polybius, 240 Years before CHRIST: Now this can't be, ſince Obſequens mentions Auguſtus.

(B) A Liſt of the Prodigies inſerted by Livy.] This we are convinced of by two Reaſons: 1. That Collection ends at the 743 Year of Rome, where Livy's Decads end. 2. The Author frequently makes uſe of the ſame Terms with Livy.

(C) That is, towards the 561 Year of Rome.] Some Authors place this Conſulate in that Year, others place it in 563. No Body would dare to put it in 505, and yet Beatus Rhenanus has put in the Title of his Book, that what we have of Obſequens begins with the Year of Rome 505. Balthaſar Bonifacius has (b) copied after him the ſame Error. The Learned Scheffer.us was not ignorant (c) that theſe two Authors ſaid ſo; and yet he do's not cenſure them, he gives no notice of their miſtake. We likewiſe meet with it in the Epitome of Geſnerus's Bibliotheca.

(D) We have ſeveral Editions of it.] The ſeveral Editions mention'd by Scheffer.us (d) are theſe. Aldus Manutius was the firſt that ſet forth this Work; he publiſh'd (e) it at Venice in 1508. Beatus Rhenanus cauſed it to be printed ſix Years after at Strasburg, with ſome other Tracts. Ajulanus Father-in-Law to Aldus Manutius made a new Edition of it in 1518. Some time after Robert Stephens publiſh'd it at Paris. John Oporin printed it at Baſil in 1552, with the Supplements of Lycoſthenes, who was (f) then Corrector and Overſeer of Oporin's Printing Houſe, and care was taken to diſtinguiſh by Aſteriſms what was added by Lycoſthenes. Next Year John de Tournes Printer at Lyons counterfeited this Edition of Oporin's, and carefully obſerved all the Aſteriſms. But conſidering that Voſſius (g) ſpeaks of an Edition by John de Tournes, where Lycoſthenes's Additions were mingled with what was properly Obſequens's, without any mark of diſtinction, there is room to believe that this Printer was more careleſs in an after Edition. This Careleſneſs has been the occaſion of great Abuſes. The Phraſes of Lycoſthenes have been cited (h) as thoſe of an ancient Author; his Authority has paſs'd for that of Antiquity. This Diſorder is redreſs'd in Mr Scheffer.us's (i) Edition: In which, what is properly Obſequens's is printed in a Roman Letter, and Lycoſthenes's Supplement in Italick. To give an Inſtance of the Abuſes and Miſtakes that have happen'd: Alexander ab Alexandro affirms, that when Tarquin was expell'd Rome, a Dog (k) ſpoke, and a Serpent bark'd. Tiraquellus pointing to the Springs from whence this Author drew what he ſays, (l) obſerves, that Livy ſaid no more, than that a Serpent fell from a wooden Statue. Julius Obſequens, adds he, relates the ſame Prodigy, and has all that Alexander ab Alexandro has ſaid upon this Head. But Alexander ab Alexandro has ſaid upon this Head. But 'tis Lycoſthenes and not Alexander ab Alexandro that ſays a Dog ſpoke and a Serpent bark'd. Doubtleſs he took this Prodigy from Alexander ab Alexandro; and thus by a ſtrange Reciprocation the Copier is made uſe of as a Proof for the Original. Is not this what the Schools call mutua cauſalitas?

(E) Mr. Moreri's Quotation upon this Head is a very ſorry one.] He cites Sebaſtian, Comad. in Quæſt. p. 41. This would make one think that we may hear ſome News of Julius Obſequens from two Authors, one of whom is call'd Sebaſtian, and the other Comad. But theſe Authors are not yet born. If he had cited Sebaſtian Corradus, he had ſtill led us into an Error; for that Author gives us only the bare Name of Obſequens. He cannot be quoted for any other end than to ſhew us, that he was of the Opinion, that Oroſius liv'd before Obſequens. This is the only uſe that Voſſius (m) makes of the Citation of Corradus.

(A) They are miſtaken who ſay he was the Founder.] Zachary Boverius (n) proves it from Authority and by ſome Reaſons. Among other things, he ſays 'tis certain the Order of the Capuchins commenced in 1525, and above three hundred Perſons were of it before Ochinus entered into it in 1534. Mr. Varillas (o) imploys theſe Reaſons to confute the Biſhop of Amelia, who affirms (p), as well as Theodorus Beza (q), that Ochinus was the Founder of that Order. You have this Paſſage of Mr Varillas in Moreri's Supplement.

(B) He obſerv'd the Rules of his Order with wonderful Auſterity.] The Biſhop of Amelia in the Chapter above cited of the Hiſtory of Cardinal Commendon obſerves, that Ochinus was reſpected as a Saint, and practiſed the out-ſide of Mortification very exactly. His Age, ſays he, his auſtere way of Life, his rough Capuchin Habit, his Beard that went below his Breaſt, his grey Hair, his pale meagre Countenance, with a certain appearance of Infirmity and Feebleneſs that was very artfully affected, and an Opinion of his Sanctity ſpread every where, occaſion'd him being look'd upon as an extraordinary Man.... Not only the common People, but great Lords and Sovereign Princes reverenc'd him as a Saint. When he came to their Houſes, they met him and receiv'd him with all Honour and Affection imaginable; and at his Departure they adviſed him in like manner. As for his own part he employ'd all the Artifices that could confirm them in their good Opinion of him. In his Travels he always walk'd on Foot; and, tho' Weakneſs appear'd both in his Age and Complexion, he was never ſeen on Horſeback. When Princes forced him to lodge with them, the Magnificence of Palaces, the Luxury of Tables, and all the Pomp of the Age, could never make him forget his Poverty nor the Auſterity of his Profeſſion. At Meals he never eate but of one Diſh, and that always the ſimpleſt and moſt common; and he ſcarce ever taſted Wine. He was frequently preſs'd to lie in good and rich Beds, for the more convenient refreſhing of himſelf after the Fatigues of his Travels, but he would only ſpread his Cloak, and lay himſelf down upon the Ground. The Reputation he acquired, and the Honour and Reſpect he drew to himſelf over Italy, are incredible.

(m) Sebaſtianus Corradus in quæſtura ſua, p. 41. Videtur in alia fuiſſe ſententia (quam qua ſtatuit antiquiorem Obſequentem Oroſio) quia utrumque nominans Oroſium præmittit. Voſſius ubi ſupra.

(n) In his Annals of the Capuchins, apud Spondan. ad ann. 1525. n. 27.

(o) Hiſtory of Hereſy. l. 17. p. 59. of the Dutch Edition.

(p) Antonius Maria Graziani's Hiſtory of Cardinal Commendon, lib. 2. cap. 9

(q) Bernardinus ille Ochinus maximi prius in Italia nominis monachus, & Capucinorum (quos vocant) Ordinis auctor. Beza in Icon. in Petr. Martyr.

(C) In

derful Auſterity, and preach'd with (C) incomparable Zeal, and probably he thought of nothing leſs than quitting his Habit and his Church, when ſome Doubts were rais'd in his Mind by converſing with a Spaniſh Civilian *, who had imbib'd ſomewhat of Luther's Doctrine in Germany. 'Twas at Naples that he convers'd with this Civilian, and began to preach up Doctrines (D) that ſeem'd very new; upon which he became ſuſpected and was ſummon'd before the Court of Rome †. He ſet out upon his Journey thither, but at Florence (E) he met with his good Friend, Peter Martyr, to whom he communicated the Advices he had received of the Danger he would incur by ſurrendring himſelf to the Diſcretion of the Pope. After a mature Examination of the Matter, they both reſolved to retire to a ſafe Country. Ochinus ſet out firſt, taking the Road of Geneva; and two Days after Martyr took his Journey towards Switzerland ‡. A Continuator of Baronius aſſures us, that Ochinus carried along with him a Woman that followed him to Geneva, and that he married her publickly to give an authentick Proof of his Renunciation of Popery ‡. But if we may judge of this Fact, by others related by the ſame Author, one would not think (F) that he made uſe of good Memoirs.

* His Name was Johannes Valdeſius

† Spondan. ubi ſupra.

‡ Joſias Simler in Vita Petri Martyris apud Melchior. Adam. pag. 36.

‡ Spondan. ubi ſupra.

(C) He preach'd with incomparable Zeal.] Let's hear the Biſhop of Amelia once more. We may juſtly ſay (r) he had ſome Knowledge; but he minded Eloquence and the Beauty of Words, more than the force of Reaſon. He knew but little of the Latin; but when he ſpoke in his Mother-Tongue, he explain'd what he knew, with ſo much Grace, Politeneſs, and Fluency, that the ſoftneſs and purity of his Diſcourſes raviſh'd all his Hearers. When he was to preach any where (the Biſhop of Amelia ſtill ſpeaks) the People flock'd thither; whole Cities came to hear him: Scarce any Church was large enough to contain the Multitude. Commonly the Women were more numerous than the Men. When he was to paſs through any City, an infinite Number of People went to meet him and receive his Inſtructions. Bzovius has winded up a great Encomium in few Words: (a) In tanta tum erat exiſtimatione (Ochinus) ut unus optimus totius Italiæ Concionator haberetur, ut qui admirabili quadam cum actione, tum linguæ facundia auditorum animos quocunque vellet raperet, ac tanto magis quod vita doctrinæ reſonaret.

(r) Mr. Varillas in his Hiſtory of Hereſy l. 17. p. 59 and 60 has paraphras'd this and the preceding Paſſage with his uſual Liberty.

(a) Bzovius ad ann. 1542. n. 34.

(b) Supplem. ad Mumbrin. lib. 4. apud Spondanum ad ann. 1547. n. 22.

(c) Eos ſeminaris ab impio Ochino dum ante aliquot annos publice concionaretur in Eccleſia Metropolitana falſis dogmatibus attribuat, quibus à mentibus & linguis hominum iis infectorum reſecandis, Prorex Inquiſitionis remedium afferre voluerit. Spondan. ibid.

(d) Ant. Maria Gratiani ubi ſupra. pag. 205. according to Mr. Flechier's Tranſlation, printed at Paris in 120.

(e) Ad ann. 1542. n. 34.

(D) To preach up Doctrines that ſeem'd very new.] Tomaſo Coſto (b), who wrote the Hiſtory of the Troubles in Naples, upon attempting to erect the Tribunal of the Inquiſition in that Kingdom, pretends (c), that Ochinus's Sermons had ſown the Seeds of theſe Commotions. The Biſhop of Amelia does not ſay, that this Capuchin was perverted by any Heretick that came from Germany, John Valdés for Inſtance; he is of the Mind that Vanity ruin'd him, and that the diſſatisfaction of not being preferr'd to a Cardinal's Cap, moved him to drop very ſmoothly ſome Words and Sentiments in his Sermons, that tended to deny or leſſen the Authority of the Holy See (d). Bzovius ſays in general that Ochinus drop'd ſome odd Words in a Sermon, quod pro concione quadam ſecus dicta effudiſſet (e); and the Comment made upon his Words is this. They pretend that on Palm-Sunday he preach'd before the Pope, and cenſured his Pride and Pomp in very lively Terms, by running a Parallel between him and CHRIST JESUS. They add, that when the Sermon was over, one of the Cardinals gave Ochinus notice of the Pope's Reſentment, and adviſ'd him to fly forthwith. (f) Nimirum (prout alii ſcripto conſignarunt) quod in Dominica palmarum faſtum Papæ Romani in ipſius præſentia ex juggeſtu acriter perſtrinxerit (facta comparatione Domini Jeſu in pauperi ſtatu Hieroſolymam ingredientis) & Pontificum Romanorum vitam. Qua concione finita unus Cardinalium Papam offenſum eſſe ipſi ſignificat, atque ut protinus præſenti periculo fuga ſeſe eripiat ſuadet. Some ſay he propos'd his Cenſures of the Pride and Pomp of the Papal Court, only as Objections ſtarted by the Hereticks; but ſpending all the time allotted for his Sermon upon diſplaying theſe Objections, he concluded without confuting them. The Author to whom I owe this Remark tells us, that Ochinus was the Pope's Confeſſor and Preacher. (g) Fuit is patria Senenſis, conditione monachus, & Pontifici Rom. à ſacris concionibus & confeſſionibus. Is ob parrheſiam qua motus in auribus ſummi Pontificis & totius Aulæ Romanæ Pontificiam arrogantiam & tyrannidem antichriſtianam, velut ex mente Lutheranorum, non addita objectionum, poſtquam eis ſtudio præſtitutam horam impendit, ſolutione, Italiæ cedere.... neceſſe habuit. I relate theſe ſeveral things without pretending to warrant them to be true; particularly, I have read in the great Volume of the Learned Mr Seckendorf (h), that there were printed in Germany twenty Sermons that Ochinus had preach'd in his Monk's Habit; in which he came very little ſhort of the pure Doctrine of the Proteſtants, upon Juſtification, good Works, Confeſſion, Satisfaction, Indulgences, Purgatory, and other Points. One Doubt remains, namely, whether theſe Sermons were printed in Germany, juſt the ſame as they were preach'd in Italy. But let that be as it will, they were printed at Newburg in 4to in 1545 in Latin, being tranſlated by Joſeph Hochſteter.

(h) In Hiſt. Lutheran. Supplem. indicis 2.

(E) But at Florence he met with Peter Martyr.] I believe it muſt be ſo; for what ſhould tempt Peter Martyr to give a falſe account of the Circumſtance of the Place? He has certainly given us a faithful relation of it in the Memoirs from which his Life was written. And for that Reaſon Joſias Simler, who compiled that Life, is more to be truſted than the Biſhop of Amelia, who (i) tells us, 1. That Ochinus was at Verona when the Pope's Orders were brought to him; 2. That Matthew Giberti Biſhop of Verona adviſ'd him to go and juſtify himſelf; 3. That Ochinus, who complied with his Advice with ſome Reluctancy, advanced to Bologna where he found Cardinal Gaſpar Contarini Legate of that place; 4. That this Legate being ſick, ſo that he could not diſcourſe with him about his Buſineſs, Ochinus reſolved to betake himſelf to flight; and that very Night threw off his Monk's Habit, put on a Secular one, and fled towards the Hereticks. Mr. Varillas, who pretends that Ochinus before his Departure from Verona, conſulted Peter Martyr by Letters, hath probably invented that Circumſtance. This we may reject as a Lie; for there's no room to doubt, but that theſe two Men did in a perſonal Interview at Florence concert their Retreat towards the Proteſtants.

(i) Hiſt. of Cardinal Commendon, p. 205, & ſeq.

(F) One would not think that he made uſe of good Memoirs.] In effect, Spondanus (k) gives us a very ſorry Recital of the Adventures of Ochinus. He makes him in the firſt place an Arian, who durſt not diſcover his Arianiſm in a City that had put to Death Michael Servetus. We have quoted Sleidan, who in things of that Nature ought to paſs for unexceptionable Evidence all the World over: We quoted him, I ſay, upon the aſſurance he gives us that Ochinus went from Geneva to Augsburg before he went to England. Now his Voyage to England was in 1547; ſo that he could not depart Geneva upon the account of the Puniſhment of Servetus, for that Heretick was not burnt till 1553. Spondanus adds (l), that Ochinus concealing his Sentiments, for the Reaſon above-mention'd, left Geneva, either of his own accord, or elſe becauſe Calvin got him expell'd. But if Calvin had been the Author of his Expulſion, he had not given him the good Character that we find he gave him (m) in 1550; for he would have caus'd him to be expell'd before the Year 1547, in which Peter Martyr and Ochinus went to England. The Annaliſt continues thus: Ochinus leaving Geneva retired to Zurich, and ſoon after was likewiſe obliged to depart from thence; the ſame Reception he met with at Baſil: Then he went to England in Company with Martyr; and leaving that Kingdom in the Reign of Mary, retired to Germany, and after that to Poland, and to Tranſilvania. Now, here are many Errors. A Man that was forced to leave England in the Reign of a Roman Catholick Queen,

(k) Ad ann. 1547. n. 22.

(l) Cum non auderet eam ibi profiteri ubi Servetus illam igne luiſſet, ſive ſponte, ſive ut quidam habent, à Calvino pulſus. Ib.

(m) Quos hac noſtra ætate monachos habuit Germania, qui vel doctrina vel ſanctitate cum Luthero, Bucero, Oecolampadio & ſimilibus conferre ſe niſi nimis impudenter audeant? Quos Itali Bernardino Ochino & Petro Vermilio opponent? Calvin. de ſcandalis. Opuſcul. pag. 96.

FAULTS in Spondanus.

apud Bibliothecam Anti-Trinitariorum, p. 3. (f) Id. ib. (g) Staniſlaus Lubieniecius, hiſt. reformat. Poloniæ. l. 2. c. 5. p. m. 110. See likewiſe the Bibliotheca Anti-Trinitariorum, pag. 2.

moirs. Ochinus's flight made the Pope very (G) uneasy. Ochinus did not fix at Geneva, but went to Augsburg, where he publish'd some Sermons. He and Peter Martyr made a Voyage to England in 1547 †. Cranmer Archbishop of Canterbury having invited them both, when upon the Death of Henry VIII. he saw every thing making way for a Reformation ‡. But the change of Religion in that Country after the Death of K. Edward, obliged these two Doctors to depart England. So they repassed the Sea in 1553, and retired (H) to Strasburg γ. In 1555 Ochinus was at (I) Basil; but that same Year he was called to Zurich, to be Minister to an Italian Church that was there form'd. This Church consisted of some Refugees of Locarno ξ, who could not obtain the Liberty of professing the Reformation in their own Country, by reason of the Opposition of the Roman Catholick Swiss-Cantons. Ochinus sign'd the Confession of Faith of the Church of Zurich, and found there Bullinger, who proved a very good Friend * to him. He officiated to the Italian Church at Zurich till 1563; at which time the Magistrates expell'd him by reason of some Dialogues printed by him; which contain'd among other Errors (K) that of Polygamy. So he retired to Basil, and entreated the Ministers and Professors of the place to sollicit leave from the Magistrates for his staying there. Some put Questions to him upon the Doctrine of these Dialogues; and he made Answer that upon these Points he was of the same Opinion with them; nay, he agreed to the Proposal made to him, of giving a clean precise Declaration of his Faith: This he agreed to, upon Condition of obtaining leave for himself and his Children to pass the Winter at Basil. But the Magistrates having heard his Demands, and the Report of the Doctors, with reference to his Doctrine, ordered him to be gone immediately.

† Sleidan. lib. 19. fol. m. 538. vers.

‡ Simler ubi supra, pag. 40.

γ Sleidan. lib. 25. fol. 721. vers.

ξ This is one of the four Bailiwicks that the Swiss possess in Italy.

* Josias Simlerus in vita Bullingeri, fol. 28. vers.

Queen, must doubtless have gone thither while the Government was in Protestant Hands. Ochinus must therefore have gone to England in the Reign of Edward; but before he went to England, he had departed Geneva, according to Spondanus, for fear of undergoing the same Fate with Servetus, which at the soonest could not be before 1553. Then, how could he be in England in the reign of Edward; since that Prince died in July 1553, and Servetus was not burnt till October next ensuing? In this Point the Annalist has been very negligent. Further; 'tis false that Ochinus was expell'd Zurich and Basil, before he left England in the Reign of Mary. He was not forced out of Zurich till 1563. He compiled in Poland, says Spondanus, a Dialogue against the Sect of the Gods of the Earth, (meaning the Switzerland and Geneva Clergy) and after that some other Dialogues, cramm'd with Atheism; in which he not only vindicated Polygamy, but likewise attack'd the Holy Scriptures, the Divinity of our Saviour, the Trinity, and even the Deity. This is as loose as the former. The Dialogues he speaks of were the occasion of his Expulsion out of Switzerland, and his Removal to Poland: So that he did not compile them in Poland. Undoubtedly they contain several Errors; but no Instances of Impiety; and it is not true, that Ochinus, one of the Interlocutors, always owns (a) himself baffled by the Adversary that he brings in. Bzovius has committed some Faults like these. He would have it (b), that Ochinus being forced to depart Cracow, fled to Transylvania, and there composed Dialogues, and that these Dialogues were afterwards translated into Latin by Castalio. Here are three Errors: For, 1. These Dialogues were compiled before the Author went to Poland; 2. He did not go from Poland to Transylvania; 3. Castalio was dead before Ochinus left Poland.

(a) Ita se iis gerens, ut quamvis omnia Catholica dogmata defendere præ se ferret, demum se tamen adversarii argumentis victum profiteretur. Spond. ibid.

(b) Bzovius ad ann. 1542. n. 30. pag. 88.

(c) Spondanus ad ann. 1547. n. 22.

(d) History of Heresy, Book 17. p. 64.

(G) His flight made the Pope very uneasy.] He was so far incensed that he had once a Mind to display his Wrath upon the whole Order of the Capuchins; he would fain have abolished that Order, and 'twas with difficulty that he was appeased, even when he knew it was Ochinus's Personal Fault. (c) Cujus apostasia adeo animum Pontificis perculsus est, ut de extinguendo universo Ordine tractaverit, vixque placari potuerit cognita Ordinis innocentia. Mr. Varillas (d) can't believe this, as taking Paul III. to have been a better Politician than to give Ochinus the occasion of boasting that the Catholicks had such a regard to him, as to revenge upon the whole Order the loss they sustain'd in his Person. This Author's Incredulity is more excusable than the Liberty he has taken of paraphrasing Spondanus; for we can't doubt but he had that Original before him, when he spoke of Ochinus. Do but reflect upon Spondanus's Words that we have cited but now: Can any one find there that the Pope's Anger was occasion'd by Ochinus's Impudence in putting into his Writings the greatest Affronts imaginable upon the Religion he had renounced, and the most virulent Reflections upon the Holy See in general, and the Person of Paul III. in particular? And yet Mr. Varillas has found all these things in them. I do not deny that Spondanus observes (e) that this Monk's Apology was full of Outrages against the Holy See and the Catholick Church.

(e) I quote his Words in the Remark Q at the Letter m.

(H) And retired to Strasburg.] We have here to do with an Historian that's as unexact as Spondanus; I mean Father Maimbourg. He says (f), that Ochinus being expell'd from England, deserted Peter Martyr, and retired to Poland, to have the Liberty of professing Arianism. 'Twas there, says he, that he compiled his Dialogues, stuff'd with a thousand execrable Blasphemies against Jesus Christ, and the Holy Ghost: But having had the Impudence to preach up Polygamy, and to dedicate a Book in Vindication of it to King Sigismund Augustus, he was forced to leave Poland, the People there being incensed against him. Ochinus continued in Switzerland ten Years after his Return from England, and would gladly have ended his Days there, if they would have suffered him to stay, and accepted the Retractation he offered: Which shews, that the free profession of Arianism in Poland was not much in his View. This Author's second Fault consists in going further than he ought to do, in characterising the Errors with which Ochinus's Dialogues are strewed. In fine, he knew not that this Book of Polygamy was written before his Journey to Poland. I doubt much whether Ochinus dedicated any Treatise upon that Subject to King Sigismund. The Bishop of Amelia would not have forgot such a notable Circumstance; the Socinians would not have known so little of the Matter; they know nothing of that Book, but what they read in (g) Bzovius, that Ochinus wrote it in Poland, and dedicated it to the King. I say once more, I make no doubt but Bzovius is a Liar upon that Head; and I do not believe that Ochinus ever preach'd up Polygamy. If I mistake not he contented himself with writing his Thoughts of it; and if he had preach'd that Doctrine in Poland, the Bishop of Amelia, who was then upon the place, must needs have known it, and would certainly have publish'd it.

(f) Maimbourg Hist. of Arianism, Tom. 3. p. 358. Dutch Edition.

(g) Liber de Polygamia in Polonia conscriptus, & Sigismundo II. Regi Poloniæ dedicatus teste Bzovio sub an. 1542. n. 3. Bibliothec. Anti-Trin. pag. 5.

(I) Ochinus was at Basil in 1555.] This appears by the Letters of Olympia Fulvia Morata. Salutem dicmea verbis tuæ familiæ & D. Bernardino Ochino quem in Christo valde diligo. This is the Conclusion of a Letter she wrote from Heidelberg to Curio, May. 7. 1555 (h). Curio liv'd at Basil, and writ her an Answer, dated the 26th of next August, in which he acquaints her that he had delivered her Commission. (i) Tuo nomine salutavi.... Bernardinum Ochinum fratrem Doctissimum & Sanctissimum. In another Letter we read: (k) Audio Bernardinum Ochinum Senensem virum sincere Christianum ex Anglia Genevam profugisse. This Letter is not dated in 1555, as they would have it in the Bibliotheca of the Unitarians (l), but in 1554.

(h) Lib. 2 p. m. 168. The Date of the Year is not there; but Curio's Answer is dated Aug. 26. 1555. shews, that I have added the right Year.

(i) Curio, ibid. pag. 159.

(k) pag. 178.

(l) Ibid.

(K) Among other Errors that of Polygamy.] This Work contains thirty Dialogues, the first of which is, that which treats of Polygamy. Ochinus wrote and publish'd them in Italian, and Castalio put 'em into Latin, and so printed 'em at Basil in 1563. Some of the Senators of Zurich, being inform'd by Letters from foreign Countries, that Ochinus had publish'd a bad immediately; and reſolved to take into Conſideration another time the Dialogues themſelves, and the diſhonour he had done their City, in cauſing them to be printed there †. Andreas Dudithius complain'd (L) to Theodorus Beza of their Severity to the old Man, whom they forced in the 76th Year of his (M) Age to go and ſeek for Shelter in the hardeſt Seaſon of the Year. He retired to Poland, but the Nuncio Commendon quickly obliged him to depart that Kingdom, by Vertue of an Edict granted him againſt all foreign Hereticks, who thereupon retired to divers Places. Ochinus retired to Moravia, and died there ſoon after the Plague, as well as his (N) Wife, his † Id. ib. fol. 38. verſo & 39.

(m) Quod dialogum de polygamia attinet, diſputari in utramque partem, ſed ita ut facile appareat quonam ipſe inclinet, præſertim cum ita concludat, & moneat eum qui plures ducere volebat, ut ſi non poſſit ſe continere & una contentus eſſe, ſequatur inſtinctum ſpiritus in hac re. Simlerus in vita Bullingeri fol. 39.

COMPARISON of Dudithius's Objection, with the Anſwer of Theodorus Beza.

(n) Id. ib.

(o) Would they talk after this Rate of that Book, if 'twere ſuch as Father Maimbourg repreſents it, who, undoubtedly never ſaw it? See the Remark P, at the end.

(a) Beza Epiſt. prima Oper. Tom. 3. pag. 190.

(b) Delatus ad Magiſtratum, pro e) quod ſeveram pœnam pio tantis ſceleribus meretur, non ſane indicta cauſa (quod qui dicuſt magnam juſto & pio Magiſtratui injuriam faciunt) ſed non ad vivum reſectis omnibus ut cum illo quam clementiſſime ageretur, juſſus eſt è Tigurinorum agro faceſſere. Beza ibid. (c) At hyems erat: nempe longa fuit non unius integri diei via. Ibid. (d) At ſenex erat: tanto nocentior veterator. Ibid.

Book containing Heretical Doctrines, particularly that of Polygamy: The Senate thereupon ſent for the Miniſters, who declared, that, when they heard that Ochinus had ſome Works in the Preſs, which he had better have ſuppreſs'd, they went and exhorted him to be mindful of the Promiſe he had made not to publiſh any thing without the approbation of the Synod. They added, 1ſt. That as ſoon as they knew his Book was actually printed, they charged him with a Contempt of their Remonſtrance; 2. That he pleaded by way of Excuſe that his Book was gone to the Preſs before their firſt Admonition; 3. That, though (m) he argues pro and con upon the Subject of Polygamy, 'tis plain he approves of it: 4. That they had received Letters, complaining of his other Dialogues, and were about a ſtrict Examination of the whole Piece. They exhorted the Author in a particular manner, both before and after the Sentence of the Senate, to give an Orthodox turn to his Sentiments; but they could not prevail with him. The Sentence was this. (n) Quoniam Ochinus contra Leges & Edicta Magiſtratuum librum publicaſſet quem (o) ſatius erat ſupprimi, & cujus nomine Eccleſia & Reſpublica male audit, ideo ſe velle & jubere ut quam primum ex urbe & agro Tigurino diſcedat.

(L) Andreas Dudithius complain'd .... of their Severity to the old Man.] Since this is not a Book of Controverſy, I hope 'twill not be taken amiſs, if I ſay that Beza does not give a fair down-right Anſwer to Dudithius: He plays only upon Turns of Wit, and indeavonrs to throw Duſt in his Eyes. Ochinum præterea narras inditâ cauſa, hyeme acri, decurſa jam ætate ſenem cum uxore & liberis Tiguro ejectum. Thus it is that Beza (a) repeats the Objection, which renders the Sentence of Zurich odious upon three Points; 1. Becauſe the Cauſe was not tried; 2. Becauſe no regard was had to the Rigour of the Seaſon; and, 3. Upon the Score of their having expoſed to the Inconveniences of the Winter a Man loaded with Years, and with a Family. Upon the firſt Head Beza makes Anſwer (b), that 'tis a falſe and ſcandalous Reflection upon a juſt and pious Senate, to offer to ſay, that Ochinus's Cauſe was not tried: That, 'tis true, they did not narrowly examin every thing; but that was the effect of their great Clemency. Upon the ſecond he anſwers, that (c) Ochinus had not a Day's Journey to travel; and upon the third (d), that the more he was in Years, the more Criminal he was; and beſides that his Wife was dead. Now the firſt Anſwer is very lame; for 'tis certain the Senate of Zurich condemn'd Ochinus, not only without hearing him, but without ordering a Review of his Dialogues. The Miniſters, queſtion'd by the Senate, were poſitive upon nothing but the Head of Polygamy; they ſaid in general, they had received Letters, complaining of his Dialogues, and promis'd to take a deliberate Survey of 'em: But what did the Senate in the mean time? Why, they injoyn d Ochinus to depart the City, and the Canton forthwith. Simlerus, who being a Zurich Profeſſor, was more intereſted than Theodorus Beza, in having the caſe ſmoothly repreſented, relates the Thing exactly as I have done. To ſay, that, if every thing was not canvaſſed narrowly, 'twas the effect of a very great Clemency, is an idle Subterfuge that all the Judges in the World may equally make uſe of, when they condemn Parties without giving them a Hearing. Nor is the third Anſwer better than the firſt. It runs counter to common Senſe, and the general Practice of Mankind. Regard is had to Age, even in Criminal Caſes: If two Men be ſentenc'd to be tortur'd, one of ſeventy, the other of forty Years of Age, the Sentence will be milder to the former than to the latter: So that Ochinus's great Age did not at all juſtify, but expoſed the Sentence very much. And if Beza had employed his Wit to the right uſe, he had own'd Dudithius's Plea of Age, and made Anſwer, that in effect the Magiſtrates of Zurich had a regard to Ochinus's Years, in only baniſhing him; which would not have ſerv'd, if he had been a young Man. This he ought to have anſwered, and not to have offer'd that the more aged Hereticks are, the more unworthy they are of the Clemency of Judges. The ſecond Anſwer is not ſincere; for it ſuppoſes that all Ochinus's Trouble conſiſted in travelling five or ſix Leagues. That Pretence might have gone down, if he could have found a Retreat in the Neighbourhood; but we know that he could not obtain leave to paſs the Winter there. Beza knew this very well; he knew that Dudithius could have inforced this Objection by the Uſage Ochinus met with at Baſil. So that upon the whole we can't take his Anſwer to Dudithius to be fair and good. Dudithius's Deſign was only to tax the Proteſtants beyond the Rhine with Severity to their Hereticks: And among other Inſtances he brings that of the City of Zurich to Ochinus, in baniſhing him in the middle of the Winter. The Anſwer given, is, that his Exile expoſed him only to the fatigue of travelling five or ſix Leagues. Why then Ochinus muſt have found a Sanctuary at the end of the five or ſix Leagues; for if inſtead of a Retreat there, he found a good Proteſtant Senate to expell him, Dudithius's Objection taken from the Seaſon of the Year, remains in full force, with reference to his Aim, which was to ſhew, that Ochinus is a ſignal Inſtance of the ſevere Temper of the Evangelici. 'Tis morally impoſſible, but that Beza muſt have known all this; and yet he choſe rather to give ſuch an Anſwer, than to ſay nothing. He took care not to ſeem to know any thing of what was done at Baſil (e): The ſmall extent of the Canton of Zurich furniſh'd him with a Spark of Fire, a Stricture of Wit; and he made uſe of it, in hopes, no doubt, to dazzle his Readers with it.

(M) In the 76th Year of his Age.] Peter Perna aſſures us of it in his Letter to Czechovicius. This Letter I never read, but have ſeen it quoted (f). If this be true, Gratiani muſt be miſtaken, when he ſays, that Ochinus turn'd Heretick at 60 Years of Age; Without conſidering, ſays he (g), either his Age or his Profeſſion, or his Vow of Continence, being a Prieſt, a Capuchin and ſixty Years of Age, he married a young Girl. Ochinus left his Cloiſter, and retired to Geneva in 1542; at which time he was not ſixty, but about fifty-five Years of Age, if it be true that he was but ſeventy ſix in 1563, when he was baniſh'd Zurich.

(N) And died .... of the Plague, as well as his Wife .... if we credit the Hiſtory of Cardinal Commendon.] I put in this Caution, upon the conſideration that he's miſtaken as to his Wife. Ochinus was a Widower when he was baniſh'd Zurich; and 'tis by no means probable that he married again. 'Tis Theodorus Beza that informs me of his being a Widower; nay, he dives into the impenetrable Stroakes of Providence, and aſſures us, in a Theological Style, that the Divine Juſtice purſuing that Wretch in his Family, before his Impiety was laid open, his Wife broke her Neck. Part of Dudithius's Objection, is, At uxorem & liberos habebat; to which Beza anſwers thus; (h) De uxore falſum eſt, quod ex bono Alcisto ſive quovis alio cognoviſti. Fregerat enim collum horrendo Dei judicio domi impium ſenem perſequente, priuſquam foras produ&um eſſet ipſius ſcelus. Staniſlaus Lubienietski (i) gives the following Account of the latter part of Ochinus's Life. Ochinus retired into Moravia, and into Poland, where he was ſtill within reach of John Calvin's Letters. He return'd from Poland to Moravia, upon the Edict of King Sigiſmund, who in 1564 baniſhed all thoſe that were called Trithei, Arians, &c.

(e) I mean the baniſhing of Ochinus, for he own, that the Tenets of this Heretick were condemn'd there. Baſileam igitur venit, ubi quum itidem ſuos errores damnatos videret, tandem ad ſuos ſive Tritheitas, ſive Arianos, ſive Samoſatenianos ſe contulit. Would not one be apt to gather from theſe Words that he left Baſil of his own accord? And yet he was ordered to depart that City. Can the ſuppreſſing of this Matter of Fact be fair or ſincere?

(f) Anno 1563. natus annos 76. (teſte Petro Perna in epiſtola ad Czechovicium) à Tigurinis pulſus eſt. Biblioth. Anti-Trinitar. p. 3.

(g) Life of Cardinal Commendon, pag. 208.

(h) Ubi ſupra.

(i) Hiſt. Reformat. Polonicæ, lib. 2. c. 4. pag. 110. See likewiſe Ludzinius, Hiſtor. Eccleſiar. Polonicar. MS. cap. 26. apud Biblioth. Anti-Trin. pag. 3.

his two Sons and his † Daughter, if we believe the Hiſtory of Cardinal Commendon. The Circumſtances of his Death (O) are variouſly related, and Authors are not agreed upon the Hereſies he embraced after his Departure from Switzerland. Some ſay, that after preaching openly the Hereſy of Macedonius *, he turn'd Anabaptiſt: Others ſay in general, that he attack'd the Myſtery of the Trinity, and the Anti-Trinitarians have him in the Liſt of their Authors. He Writ (P) ſeveral Books; a Liſt of which is inſerted in their Bibliotheca: But they have forgot to put into that Liſt his Apology (Q) for changing his Religion, which he inſcrib'd to the Pope; and which is full of things altogether injurious to Popery. This Piece met with an Anſwer. His publick acknowledgement is remarkable: He confeſs'd † in a Preface, that

† The Life of Cardinal Commendon by Antonius Maria Graſſani. l. 2. c. 9.

* In Poloniam cum perveniſſet dicitur palam illic oppugnaſſe hypoſtaſim Spiritus Sancti. Sed nec illic ei diutius conſiſtere licuit. Quare ſe in Moraviam ad Anabaptiſtarum conventicula recepit, & illic obiit. Simlerus ib. fol. 40.

† Non diſſimulans manere ſe voluiſſe, modo Chriſtum, etſi occultius & veluti obvelatum, prædicare ſibi licuiſſet. In the Preface to the Sermons he had preached in Italy, which were printed in Germany in 1545. See Seckendorff in Supplementis indicis 1. Hiſtor. Lutheran.

ans, &c. Some Gentlemen indeavour'd to perſwade Ochinus to ſtay; but he replied to 'em, that he was bound to obey the Magiſtrates, and would obey them, even if he were reduced to the neceſſity of dying among the Wolves in the Woods. While he was on the Road, he was ſeized with the Plague at Pinczow; where he met with many charitable Offices from one of the Brethren, call'd Philippovius. His two Sons (k) and his Daughter died of the Plague; but he recovered, and continuing his Journey towards Moravia died three Weeks after at (l) Slavonia. Theſe are all the Circumſtances we have from Lubienietzki. I can't find in any good Author that Ochinus was ever in Tranſylvania: For Father Maimbourg, who affirms that he was, is not an authentick Evidence for that. He was forced, ſays he (m), to quit Poland.... and after wandring ſome time in Tranſylvania, he retir'd at laſt, oppreſs'd with Calamity and Poverty, to a Village where he died of the Plague; every body having forſaken him. Some quote the Biſhop of Amelia, who ſpeaks neither of that Poverty, nor of his being forſaken by all; but on the contrary aſſures us (n), that he died in one of his old Friend's Houſes. He left a conſiderable Eſtate to his Heirs, if we believe Theodorus Beza. (o) Ochinus.... familia non mediocri ſumptu circumducta tandem obiit, tam inops & egens ſcilicet, cui nec petere nec accipere unquam Religio fuerat, ut plus ſane reliquerit hæredibus quam bona collegii noſtri pars poſſideat. This is the laſt thing he has at him in his Anſwer to Dudithius: He never was aſhamed either to ask or receive, and by that means ſcraped together a great deal of Money.

(k) Gratiani ſays, on the contrary, his 2 Daughters and his Son.

(l) As I take it, we ought to read Slaucovia.

(m) Hiſtory of Arianiſm, Tom. 3. pag. 352.

(n) Hiſtory of Cardinal Commendon, pag. 213.

(o) Beza in his Epiſtle to Dudithius, ubi ſupra.

(p) Eum tamen immenſa Dei benignitate ante mortem reſipuiſſe, & hæreſes abjuraſſe, ac peccata ritu Catholico confeſſum eſſe, denique vere pœnitentem obiiſſe, Annales Capucinorum multis diverſorum teſtimoniis affirmant. Spondanus ad ann. 1547. n. 22. He quotes the Annals of the Capuchins, ad ann. 1543. See the Remark AA.

(a) Moreri is one of 'em.

(b) Intituled, Judæ poſteri, apoſtatæ à religioſis ordinibus.

(c) Such is the Date he gives to the Annals of the Capuchins, compoſed by Boverius.

(d) Ex Theoph. Raynaudo ſyntagm. de libris propriis, n. 23. pag. 42. Apoppompai. See the Remark AA hereafter.

(e) Which were tranſlated out of Italian into High-Dutch, by Chriſtopher Wirſungus.

(O) The Circumſtances of his Death are variouſly related.] Of this you have divers Proofs in the foregoing Remark. The Annals (p) of the Capuchins affirm, that he died a good Catholick. And on the other hand, others (a) make him die, not only abandon'd by every body, and in extream Miſery, but likewiſe an Atheiſt.

THEOPHILUS Raynaud tells us that ſome were mightily offended at him for writing, that Ochinus died miſerably in the Communion of the Arian Hereticks, and not a Martyr at Geneva, repenting of his Apoſtacy. Theſe People, thus offended, complain'd to John de Montecalier, General of the Capuchins. Upon which that General perus'd (b) Raynaud's Book, but met with nothing that to his Mind deſerved Cenſure. This is an Inſtance of the extravagant humour of the Capuchins. They're angry if any one will not believe, that Bernardin Ochinus had a Mind to return to their Order, and that he was put to Death for that Reaſon. The Author, of whom they complain'd to their General, obſerves, that in relating the unfortunate Exit of this Heretick, he followed the Narration of Andreas Friſius, and that the ſame Account of Ochinus's Death is given by Toſſinian in the ſecond Book of his Seraphick Hiſtory, by Artus of Munſter in the Martyrology of the Franciſcans, under the Head of January 4, Paragraph 3, and in General by all the Writers that lived before (c) the Year 1630 (d).

(P) He Writ ſeveral Books; a Liſt of which.] He publiſh'd ſix Volumes of Sermons in Italian; an Expoſition of the Epiſtle of St. Paul to the Romans; a Commentary upon the Epiſtle to the Galatians; a Treatiſe de Cœna Domini contra Joachimum Weſtphalum; Labyrinthi de prædeſtinatione & libero arbitrio; Some Apologues (e); a Dialogue about Purgatory, &c. I don't believe he did any thing in Latin; he compiled all his Works in Italian, and then found Tranſlators for 'em. 'Tis not above one Day ſince I run over his Labyrinths tranſlated into Latin; and they ſeem'd to me to ſpeak a clear and penetrating Head. There Ochinus ſhews, with great ſtrength of Argument, that thoſe who ſtand up for free Will in the Actions of Men, involve themſelves in four great Difficulties; and that thoſe who make Man a neceſſary Agent are equally gravel'd with other four as great Difficulties: So that he forms eight Labyrinths, four againſt Free-will, and four againſt Neceſſity. He turns and winds all ways imaginable in order to find an Out-let, and finding none, he concludes every time with a fervent Prayer to God, that he would be pleaſed to deliver him from thoſe Abyſſes. However, in the Sequel of the Work, he attempts to furniſh Out-lets from this Priſon; but he concludes, that the only way is to ſay with Socrates, unum ſcio quod nihil ſcio. We muſt be ſilent, ſays he, and perceive, that in points of that Nature, God requires of us, neither the Affirmative, nor the Negative. The Title of his laſt Chapter is this: Qua via ex omnibus ſupradictis Labyrinthis cito exiri poſſit, quæ docta ignorantiæ via vocatur. D'Aubigne mentions a Book of Ochinus, which he repreſents as a very curious Piece. His Words are theſe: (f) Firſt, that the Service ſhould be in French, provided ſome Jeſts were taken out, that would ſet the People a laughing; as to begin the Maſs by an, &, and other Abſurdities, which are handſomely and ſubtilely written by Bernard Ochinus in his Treatiſe della Nativita della Miſſa: As for the Ornaments, that the moſt ridiculous ſhould be laid aſide; and as for the reſt, it ſhould be anſwered, ſays Ochinus, that 'tis the Lord's Supper diſguiſed, which turn'd a Nun, per Parer più Santa. To ſpeak properly, I fancy he ought to have ſaid not Treatiſe but Sermon della Nativita della Miſſa; for in running over Ochinus's twelve Sermons (g) upon the Lords-Supper, I find the Title of the 7th runs thus, Miſſæ tragœdia, ac primum quomodo concepta, nata, baptizata fuerit. The Title of the 8th is, Quemadmodum nutrita educataque fuerit Miſſa, adoleveritque, & ornata ditataque ad ſummam dignitatem præſtantiamque pervenerit. The Title of the 9th is, Miſſæ accuſatio ejuſdemque reſponſio, & adverſus eam acta. The Title of the 10th is, Sententia a Deo contra Miſſam lata. This Dramatick way of preaching ſavours too much of the Genius of the Italians. Sleidan obſerves, that in 1549 there was publiſhed a bloody Satyr againſt Paul III. which was not compos'd by Ochinus, tho' his Name was put to it. He gives the Particulars of it: (h) Prius quam decederet libellus exiit Italicus vehemens in illum atque gravis, titulo quidem Bernardini Ochini, ſed ab aliis, ut creditur, compoſitus cum præfatione ad Aſcanium Columnam quem ille profligarat. I ſpoke above of the thirty Dialogues that were the Cauſe of Ochinus's Baniſhment: but here I muſt add, that Mr. Simon ſpeaks of 'em very (i) much to the purpoſe. He owns, that the Author does not openly declare his Anti-trinitarian Hereſies: (k) He does not there declare himſelf altogether an Unitarian; he only brings in the Reaſons pro and con.... In the Dialogue of the Trinity he muſters up at length the Arguments of the Catholicks and of the Antitrinitarians; thoſe of the latter he puts very cloſe under pretence of anſwering them. Bullinger aſſures us (l), that theſe Dialogues were burnt in a conſiderable City.

(Q) His Apology for changing his Religion.] One of the Continuators of Baronius (m) ſpeaks of it thus: Genevam appulſus apologiam de fuga ſua ad Pontificem ſcripſit, maledicentiis & calumniis in ſedem Apoſtolicam & Eccleſiam Catholicam Rom. refertiſſimam. Cardinal John Peter Caraffa, who was afterwards Pope by the Name of Paul IV. wrote an Anſwer to Ochinus, which was inſerted in the Hiſtory of the Theatins. Contra Ochini apologiam nonnulli ſtylum acu-

(f) Confeſſion Catholique de Sancy. B. 2. c. 2. p. 390, 391 See likewiſe c. 6. of the 1ſt. Book p. 346.

(g) Tranſlated into Latin, and printed at Baſil, with the Labyrinths of the ſame Author.

(h) Sleidan. Hiſt. lib. 21. fol. m. 602 verſo.

(i) He is miſtaken in dating Ochinus's Vocation to Zurich from the Year 1562, and in attributing the Life of Bullinger to Melchior Adamus; for that Life was written by Josias Simlerus. (k) Simon Hiſtoire Critique des Commentat. du Nouv. Teſtam. ch. 55. p. 831.

(l) Apud Bozhorn. Hiſtor. Univerſ. pag. 74. ad ann. 1552. (m) Spond. ad ann. 1547. n. 22.

RTURD

that if he could have continued to preach the Truth, as he had done for some time, without the hazard of his Life, he would never have quitted the Habit of his Order; but that finding he had not Courage ‡ enough to expose himself to Martyrdom, he fled to the Protestants. They're mistaken, who assure us he was the (R) Author of the Book de tribus impostoribus. 'Tis said he promis'd (S) to Cardinal de Lorraine to convict the Protestants of two dozen of Errors. I find that Authors have oftentimes (T) run too much upon Extreams in what relates to Ochinus. Mr. Varillas tells (V) several ‡ Cum se ad mortem sponte obeundam non satis firmum esse deprehenderet. In eadem Præfatione.

erunt; inter quos Joannes Petrus Caraffa Cardinalis Theatinus, qui deinde fuit Paulus Papa IV. paraneticam egregiam scripsit epistolam, quam Joannes Baptista Acerrarum Episcopus Historia Theatinorum inseruit (n).

(n) Id. ib. See likewise Varillas his History of Heresy, Book 17. p. m. 64

(R) The Author of the Book de tribus impostoribus.] He who wrote the Notes upon the Religio Medici do's not affirm it; he only doubts of it, (o) nescio an Bernardinus Ochinus ... an alius hujus auctor sit. Micralius (p) goes no further; but Scavenius affirms it. See what Rhodius says upon this Head, (q) towards the end of Placcius's Book de scriptoribus anonymis. Among other things he declares he do's not know that ever any Objection was raised against the other twenty-nine Dialogues of Ochinus. Now, 'tis strange such a learned Man should say so, since I have (r) given above several Instances of Fact which evince the contrary.

(o) In Sect. 19. p. m. 126.

(p) Syntagm. Hist. Eccles. p. m. 863.

(q) Pag. 33.

(r) See the Remark F, H and K.

(S) He promised to Cardinal de Lorraine.] The Matter of Fact, as we have it from Simlerus, (f) is this. Ochinus met the Cardinal upon the Road to Schaffhousen, and told him he was so unhappy as to be banish'd for a Book, which he had Writ with intent to vindicate thirty difficult Points of the Reform'd Religion from the Objections of the Adversaries. He presented the Cardinal with some Copies of his Dialogues, and pray'd him to read 'em. We shall consider 'em, (replied the Cardinal,) and if they don't please us, we'll throw 'em into the Fire. Ochinus added, that he would engage to convict the Reformed Churches of twenty four Errors. Throw twenty of 'em aside, replied the Cardinal, and the Remainder will be but too many. Beza relates the same thing, and gives it in for a Certainty; but he makes the number of false Doctrines that Ochinus promis'd to refute, to be much larger. This Cardinal despis'd a Monk who relaps'd so often to Apostacy. Vix Basilea egresso (quod nario scito me non ut rumorem incertum, sed ut certam historiam narrare) occurrit Lotharingus Cardinalis ex Italia rediens, cui sese operamque suam omnem obtulit, pollicitus sese centum errores istorum inter quos tamdiu hæsisset hæreticorum demonstraturum. Sprevit hominem toties apostatam Cardinalis (a).

(f) Beza ubi supra, fol. 40.

(a) Beza ubi supra.

(T) Have oftentimes run too much upon Extreams in what relates to Ochinus.] Over and above what I've hinted in other (b) Remarks, I shall add here, that his Doctrine is not faithfully represented, when with Gratiani 'tis alledged, that he indeavour'd to prove by Examples, and by Reasons taken from Scripture and Politicks, that 'twas proper every one should endeavour to people the World and beget a numerous Family; and that 'tis not only allowable, but a Duty incumbent upon Christians to marry as many Wives as they please (c). If you read the beginning of his Dialogue de Polygamia, you'll find the State of the Question to be this. A Man that wishes for Children, and is married to a barren Woman that he can't like, may he marry another Wife without a Divorce from the first? Ochinus supposes himself consulted upon this Case of Conscience, and takes the Negative side: And, after putting into the Mouth of the Person, who consults him, the most plausible Arguments for a plurality of Wives, and faintly giving some pretty good Answers, concludes with advising him to have recourse to Prayer; and assuring him, that, if he prays with Faith to God for the Gift of Continence, he will obtain it; and in fine, by representing to him, that, if God does not grant him Continence, nor the Faith that's necessary for asking it with Success he may, without Sin, follow the Instinct which he will certainly know to come from God. Now, do's this amount to a positive Assertion, that the Gospel commands Christians to marry as many Wives as they please? Questionless Ochinus is in an Error, and introduces Enthusiasm; but still we must do justice to all the World, and own that there's a great deal of Unfairness in the Writings that mention his Doctrine.

(b) Remarks F and H.

(c) Life of Cardinal Commendon, pag. 211.

(V) Mr. Varillas tells several Lies.] To draw them up in distinct Articles.

I. I don't doubt but all his Narration of Quarrels between Calvin and Ochinus is a Romance that he has invented or stole: But I affirm that he's in an Error when he says (d), that at Geneva Ochinus fell upon the Trinity, and renewed the Heresy of the Arians.... and that he publish'd upon that Subject an hundred abusive Invectives, in Libels composed by him in Italian, and translated by his Friends into Latin. This I can demonstrate to be false: Ochinus left Geneva before 1547, as we are assured by the Words of Sleidan quoted above. Calvin speaks of him with Encomium's in a Book (e) he set forth in 1550. He was not therefore apprised of those horrible Heresies of Ochinus; and besides had an Ex-capuchin been known to adhere to Tritheism or Arianism, would he have been sent to England in 1547? But we need no other Proof against Varillas than the Passages of Beza, which testify, that Ochinus conceal'd for a long time the Heresies he intertain'd in his Breast, and that they were not discovered till the Impression of his Dialogues. Now this Impression was not before 1562. (f) Sceleratus hypocrita Arianorum clandestinus fautor, polygamiæ defensor, omnium Christianæ religionis dogmatum impior, quum eo tandem audaciæ erupisset ut sua portenta in publicum ederet (justo sane Dei judicio ne LATERE diutius tantum malum posset) delatus ad Magistratum ... Jussus est è Tigurinorum agro facessere. 'Tis with these Words that Beza begins his Answer to Dudithius's Complaints. This Passage is a plain Evidence, that what Ochinus intertain'd in his Breast was not discovered till his Dialogues were printed. Another unexceptionable Proof of the same Fact, is the Continuance of (g) Bullinger's Friendship to him till this Edition. Beza seldom mentions Ochinus, without taking notice that he was a long time a Hypocrite. (h) Fuit etiam illis, sed NIMIUM SERO detectus, Bernardinus ille Ochinus, impurissimus hypocrita. In relating that Peter Martyr made a Voyage to England, in 1547, and that Ochinus accompanied him, he adds (i) Maximi prius in Italia nominis monachus & Capucinorum (quos vocant) ordinis auctor, idemque quod MULTIS demum POST annis patefecit, sceleratus hypocrita.

(d) Histor. of Heresy, Book 17. p. m. 65.

(e) That de Scandalis.

(f) Beza ubi supra.

(g) See his Life done by Josias Simlerus, fol. 28. verso. 39. verso.

(h) Epist. 81. Oper. Tom. 3. pag. 295.

(i) In Iconibus, in Petro Martyre.

II. Another Fiction is this. (k) "'Tis strange "that Calvin contented himself with causing him to "be expell'd Geneva, and did not put him into the "Hands of Justice to be burut, as he since did Ser- "vetus for the same Crime." Mr. Varillas gives two or three Reasons for this unevenness in Calvin's Conduct; and then adds, that Ochinus was banished Geneva by the Magistrates, and retired to Basil. Varillas must have had a great deal of leisure time upon his Hands, when he hunted after Reasons to justify a Chimera. He should first have proved the thing and then have look'd for the Causes of it. Ochinus was not banished Geneva, neither did he divulge his Heresies there.

(k) Varillas ubi supra.

III. At Basil (continues Varillas) he would have suffered a long Persecution, Calvin's Friends having a great Interest there, if Bucer, who accommodated himself to all sorts of Heretics, had not procured to him from the Magistrates of Strasburg, the offer of a Divinity Chair, which he accepted. The same Bucer carried him and Vermilii along with him to England. I have neither time, nor the necessary Books for gathering full Evidence against this Account of Varillas; but I assure my self that Men of Reason will be satisfied with Sleidan's Silence. Would that famous Historian, who resided at Strasburg, have contented himself, speaking of Peter Martyr's and Ochinus's Voyage to England, to say (l) only, that the latter had retired first to Geneva, and then to Augsburg? Would not he have mention'd something of that Divinity-Chair, the offer of which Bucer is said to have procur'd from the Magistrates of Strasburg, and which Ochinus is said to have accepted? He do's not forget to acquaint us in express Terms, that Peter Martyr had been Professor in the same City. I have just now met with something that is yet more convincing. Ochinus (m) was at Augsburg in 1546, and preach'd there in Italian. As for Bucer's carrying Ochinus and Vermilli with him to England, 'tis a Falshood; for Bucer did not go thither till 1549, whereas the other two went to England about the end of 1547.

(l) Lib. 19. ad ann. 1547.

(m) See Seckendorf. Hist. of Lutheran. Book 3. p. 613.

IV. The Duke of Somerset (n).... had no reason to be pleas'd with their Conduct.... Ochinus went to several Lies of this Ex-Capuchin. Mr. Moreri (X) has not always spoken justly of him. Paleanius * has great Encomiums upon this Monk.

(n) Varillas, ubi supra, pag. 65.

In the first Edition of this Article I said nothing in opposition to Florimond de Remond. Yet he's a Writer that has not been exact upon the (Y) Head of Ochinus. 'Twas from him that Bzovius took the Remark, that this Monk's Wife (Z) was forced to turn Laundress for Bread. But he enriched himself more amply with the Spoils

* Orat. 8. pag. 91, 92. edit. 1696. See likewise, pag. 505.

ted under-hand his Notions upon the Mystery of the Trinity. This is said at Random; no Proof can be brought for it, neither is it consistent with the Elogium (o) that one of the warmest Anti-Papists in England gives of Ochinus.

(o) Deum immortalem, quales illi duo senes peregrini, quos in urbem vestram recepistis (he speaks to the Citizens of Zurich) Petrus Martyr & Bernardinus Ochinus? Quæ duo luminaria? quorum alterum si aliæ haberent Ecclesiæ, magno thesauro & ornamento ditatæ & beatæ viderentur. Felix Anglia dum hæc paria habuit, misera dum amisit. Baleus Præfat. in Art. Nom. Pontific.

(X) Mr. Moreri has not always spoken justly of him.] I. He is out in saying Ochinus assumed the Monastick Habit among the Capuchins about 1525 or 1526. He should have said 1534. II. 'Twas not in 1543, but in 1542 that Ochinus and Martyr forsook their Order. III. No Body that ever I heard of ever charged Ochinus with justifying Polygamy for his own private Concerns; or because he was not satisfied with one Wife, and had a mind to marry other Women IV. 'Tis a false Assertion, that to justify his Libertinism and Incontinence, he gave out Polygamy to be lawful. When he set forth his Dialogues he was a Widower (p) and 76 Years of Age. He had then no occasion to preach up Polygamy to gratify his own Passions. Being a Widower he might have married according to Law; and considering he was 76 Years of Age, one Woman would have given him more to do than he cared for. He ought to have sat down contented, and think himself a very extraordinary Man, if, at that Age, he was capable to Answer all the Demands of one Wife: So that 'tis without any manner of Judgment, and with a blind Ignorance of all the Circumstances, that Moreri gives out that this Man preach'd up that Doctrine, with intent to justify his Desire to have several Wives. 'Tis said of some loose Catuists, that they did not indulge their own Persons so much as those of others: And this we can affirm of some Authors that have maintain'd Polygamy. One (q) Lyserus sacrificed his Time, his Health, and his Life, to the Protection of that Doctrine; and yet had no occasion for a Plurality of Wives, it being generally believed that he would have had enough to do with one. We would be loth to say, that the Author of the Lettres Pastorales was of the same Mind with Lyserus: 'Tis sufficient to say, that his Morals are too loose upon that Head, and too favourable to Incontinence. I speak of the Morals he set forth, in endeavouring to excuse (r) the Reformers for allowing a Landgrave of Hesse to have two Wives at one time. Now, of all Ministers, perhaps this had the least personal occasion for Polygamy. V. 'Tis not true, that Ochinus made himself the Head of those infamous Libertines, that go by the Name of Polygamites: These People never form'd a Sect; and Ochinus left no Sect behind him no more than Lyserus. VI. 'Tis a false Assertion, that Ochinus retired from Germany to Transylvania, and yet falser, that he made that Retreat, because he could not find means in Germany to satisfy his Ambition and Vanity. When he was banish'd Zurich, he fled to Basil, which he was likewise forced to depart. And the same Usage would he have met with in all the Cities of the World where the Reform'd Clergy had any Interest; so that he had no choice left: His only Resource was to move towards Poland, and throw himself into the Arms of the Hereticks in that place of the World. If God has not been merciful to him, those who were so zealous in banishing him and promoting his Exile, are accountable for the lots of his Soul. VII. He should not have quoted Prateolus V. Polig. for in that part he says not a Word of Ochinus.

(p) See the Remark I. above.

(q) See the Nouv. de la Rep. des lettres, for April 1685 Article 2.

(r) See the Article Luther.

(Y) Florimond de Remond .... has not been exact upon the Head of Ochinus.] He says (a) this Monk quitted Geneva, and retir'd to Zurich, where he was soon after banish'd as well as at Basil; of which Dudithius complains in his Letter to Beza. This Man, adds he, being expell'd Switzerland, went from thence to Germany, and after that to Poland. He wrote a Book of Polygamy, dedicated to King Sigismund II. That Doctrine he preach'd at Cracow, as the Polish Reseius informs us. Upon this all the female Sex in that Country, took the Alarm, as hot as the Roman Dames of old, when cheated by young Papyrius. Insomuch, that poor Ochinus, whom they charged with having left his Wife at Geneva, though indeed she had died of her fall, was constrained to fly the City, and retire to Transylvania. He publish'd some Dialogues, that have since appear'd in divers Languages. Castalio put 'em into Latin. Now all this is rank with Anachronisms and Falsities; of which any one may be convinced by reading what I have said, either against Spondanus or against Varillas, or in opposition to all the other Copiers of Florimond de Remond, who is the general Magazine of the Roman Catholick Writers, that speak of the Reformers of the XVIth Century.

(a) Florim. de Remond. Hist. de l'Hereſie. Book 3. ch. 5. pag. m. 293, 294.

(Z) That this Monk's Wife was .... Laundress.] There's nothing that Florimond de Remond loves so much to banter as Monks Wives. Do but mind how he expresses himself upon the Subject now before us. Their Arrival at Zurich and Basil, says he (b), speaking of Peter Martyr and Bernardin Ochinus, gave some ground of Suspicion. The People surprized to see these two Preachers, whose Names rung all over Italy, fear'd they might be sly Sinons that came to creep into their Cities, with intent to rear some treacherous Design, and to seduce the Souls. They were freed from this their Jealousy by Bernardin Ochinus's being accompanied with a handsome young Italian Girl, whom he had debauched under Promise of Marriage, and by his Habit; for he had exchanged his former hairy Garment for a Soldier's Dress. To enter into a strict and indissoluble Contract with Heresy, he contracted with that Girl, and married her. That's the Gordian Knot which ties to Heresy those whom the Transports of Pride and Lust do spew out of our Convents. This Ochinus sojourn'd some time at Geneva, with his Wife, who was soon after forced to earn her Bread by mean and abject Services; for neither one nor t'other had brought with them much Riches. This was Madam the Laundress.... (c) Martyr had brought along with him his Nun (d) to alleviate his Watchings and Fatigues. He had not done like Ochinus, who weary of his Laundress, had made away with her: For, though Beza says she broke her Neck, calling to witness Alciatus, that other Arian who did so much Mischief in Poland, it was not without the Suspicion of Ochinus's having accelerated her end, which they would not enquire narrowly into, because he had not yet declared himself an Arian, but behaved himself as a good Brother in Christ Jesus. This is what Florimond has the Assurance to say, without the Allegation of any one Proof, great or small, and without any Quotation whatsoever; which saves me the trouble of any other Criticisms.

(b) Id. ib. pag. 293.

(c) Id. ib. p. 296, 297.

(d) That is, when he went to England.

Bzovius (e) has copied faithfully, and Word for Word almost six Pages of the History of Peter Martyr and Bernardin Ochinus out of † Florimond de Remond. He has not miss'd the Passage which (f) imports, That Martyr was possess'd with the same Passion with Luther, fixing his Wishes upon these Nuns, pursuant to the custom of those who forsake their Monastick Habit: And accordingly he ever since sigh'd for these dowdy'd Lasses, who by the help of their Veils preserve the Beauty of their Complexion the better. But what I wonder at, he has not copied this other Passage: Though Peter Martyr (g) "was already stricken in Years, yet not "being able to bridle the Flesh, he went to Geneva "to meet with a Nun, whom the same Passion had "drawn out of her Convent; namely, Catherine Merand, one that was recommended to him, and "whom according'ly he married. He would have none "else but the Spoil of Monasteries.... Brentius attack'd him very roughly; and Martyr nettled at "the boldness of Brentius, who had used him with "no great measure of Christianity, was preparing a "Reply, when worn out with the Offices he owed to "his new Nun, he sickened and died in the same "City of Zurich."

(e) Bzovius Annal. tom. 20. p. 81. & seq. ad ann. 1542. He cites the Author, whom he copies.

(f) Florimond de Remond, ubi supra, pag. 293.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 297.

If 'twas true that Ochinus pass'd the Alps with the Woman that was afterwards his Wife, we ought to judge charitably, that he only carried her along with him to Switzerland, because he was apprehensive she would not meet with an opportunity of getting out of Italy for he would have been very simple, and over provident, if he had thought it necessary to provide against the scarcity of Women in a Reformed Country. That Scarcity is not to be fear'd there more than in any other Spoils of the Annaliſt of the Capuchins; from whom he borrows a long (AA) Narrative of the Apoſtacy and pretended Martyrdom of this Man we are now upon: Which is well worth our Conſideration.

OCTAVIA, Grand-Niece * of Julius Cæſar, and the Siſter of Auguſtus, was one of the moſt illuſtrious Ladies of ancient Rome. She was married firſt to Claudius Marcellus, who was Conſul in the 704 Year of Rome, and died not long after the Peruſian War. Soon after his Death ſhe married (A) Mark Antony, in purſuance of the deſire of both their Friends, † who look'd upon this Marriage as a proper Expedient to eſtabliſh and confirm the Peace that was juſt concluded between Auguſtus and Mark Antony. This virtuous Lady was very well qualified for producing ſo good an effect; but her Huſband was ſo wrapt up in Cleopatra, that nothing could oblige him to give ear to Reaſon. Before he fell to be a Slave to Cleopatra, his Lady's Counſels were very ſerviceable ‖. He left her in Italy θ, after an Interview with Auguſtus at Tarentum, Anno 717, and return'd to the Eaſt. Some time after ſhe took Journey, in order to meet him, and perceiving from his Letters to her that he wiſh'd ſhe would ſtop at Athens, ſhe accordingly ſtopt there, till ſhe ſaw plainly that he made a Fool of her: Upon which ſhe return'd to Rome, and would not ſtir out of her Husband's Houſe, which Auguſtus would have had her to do. She continued there, and took care of every thing, juſt as if ſhe had been perfectly well ſatisfied with her Huſband ϰ. To the Children of Mark Antony and Fulvia ſhe ſhewed the ſame Affection as before, and ſtill brought them up with equal Vigilance ʌ. She would not for any thing in the World have a Civil War to be rais'd upon the Affronts ϖ ſhe received from her Huſband; and from thence 'twas, that, when in Obedience to his Orders ſhe removed from his Houſe, ſhe melted into Tears ‡, only becauſe ſhe ſaw ſhe would be look'd upon as one of the occaſions of the War. By this her excellent Conduct ſhe ⸸ did her Husband much Harm

* She was the Daughter of Caius Octavius, and of Atia the Daughter of Atius Balbus and Julia the Siſter of Julius Cæſar.

† Plut. in Antonio, pag. 929.

‖ See the Remark A.

θ Id. Plut. 932.

ϰ Id. ib. pag. 940.

ʌ Id. ib. pag. 941.

ϖ Id. ib. pag. 940.

‡ Id. ib. pag. 942.

⸸ See the Remark B. Letter b.

(b) Mind this date; 'twould prove that Ochinus was kill'd at Geneva in 1557, or thereabouts; and we can prove, that he was expell'd Zurich in 1563.

(i) Quare mox illi arreptis pugionibus quos occultos geſtabant in lecto jacentem & manus ad Cœlos tendentem confodiunt. Alii vero cum Magiſtratus edicto extra Urbem raptatum, lapidibuſque obrutum fuiſſe tradunt. Bzovius ad ann. 1542. n. 68. pag. 96.

(k) Beza in Iconib. in Petro Martyre.

(l) Bzovius ad ann. 1542. n. 70. & ſeq.

(m) Theoph. Raynaud in Syntagm. de libris propriis n. 23. p. 42. Apopompæi.

(n) That which he wrote to Dudithius. See the Remark L.

(AA) A long Narrative of the Apoſtacy, and pretended Martyrdom of Ochinus: Which is well worth our Conſideration.] I ſhall here confine my ſelf to what relates to his Martyrdom. Bzovius repeating the very Words of Zacharias Boverius, the Author of the Annals of the Capuchins, acquaints us, that Ochinus continuing at Geneva tell ill, and was troubled with violent Remorſes, which obliged him to ſend privately for a Neighbouring Curate; to whom he confeſs'd his Sins, and deſired to be re-united to the Pale of the Catholick Church; as repenting of his Departure from it, and of his having preach'd Hereſy about (b) 15 Years. The Curate adminiſter'd to him the Sacrament of Repentance; and ſet forth that it behov'd him to give a publick Retractation of his Hereſies Ochinus promiſed to do it as ſoon as he recovered; or if he did not recover, to make a free Declaration of his Converſion to his Diſciples and Viſiters. Upon this Condition he was abſolved and reunited to the Church. He deſired to communicate; but the Prieſt finding it hazardous to carry the Viaticum to him, comforted him with theſe Words of St. Auguſtin, crede & manducaſti, believe and you have eaten it. The ſick Man quickly declared his Converſion to the Diſciples that came to ſee him, and earneſtly exhorted them to follow his Example in quitting the Hereſies he had taught 'em. They thought at firſt he was light headed; but finding afterwards that he was in earneſt, they gave notice of it to the Magiſtrates. The Magiſtrates injoyn'd them to obſerve whether he perſiſted in thoſe Sentiments, and if he did, to kill him. The Diſciples executed their Orders: For after hearing the five Diſcourſes (i) he made to 'em upon Repentance, they ſtabb'd him in the Bed. Others affirm, that, by Vertue of a Decree of the Magiſtrates, he was drag'd out of the City and ſtoned. The Annaliſt of the Capuchins calls in the Teſtimony of ſeven Perſons, whoſe Names and Stations he ſets down. The firſt of the ſeven is a Doge of Venice; and the reſt are Perſons conſiderable, either by Birth or by the Offices they bore in Monaſteries: But not one of 'em affirms any thing otherwiſe than upon Hear-ſay. To theſe Teſtimonies the Annaliſt adds, what Theodorus Beza own'd (k), that at laſt Ochinus ſhewed himſelf a great Hypocrite (l); but, as Theophilus Raynaud (m) has admirably well proved by a Letter (n) of Theodorus Beza's, that Hypocriſy did not conſiſt in any return to Popery, but in adopting the Hereſy of the Anti-Trinitarians, &c. Pray take notice with how little Judgment the Monks compile the Chronicles of their Orders. There are unexceptionable Proofs that Ochinus fled to the Sectaries of Poland, and died in thoſe Countries; and yet the Capuchins do not ſcruple to publiſh, that he died a Roman Catholick Martyr at Geneva, and think it very ſtrange we ſhould doubt of it; as we have ſeen above (o).

(o) In the Remark O Letter b.

(A) Soon after his Death ſhe married Mark Antony.] The Roman Laws prohibited Widows to marry during the firſt ten Months of their Widowhood; but Octavia had a Diſpenſation from that Rule by a Decree of the Senate (a) This the Publick Good call'd for; for there was but too much reaſon to fear that Mark Antony and Auguſtus would quarrel for ever, and perpetuate the Civil War, unleſs Concord were kept up between 'em by ſome good Mediator; and no Expedient appear'd ſo proper to form this happy Mediation, as the Marriage of Mark Antony to Octavia. With this View the Marriage was haſtened, and they did not ſo much as ſtay till Octavia (b) was brought to Bed. They hoped for every thing from her Prudence and Beauty. (c) Τὴν μὲν πᾶσιν εἰσηγγύησε τὸν γάμον, ἐλπίζοντες τὴν Ὀκταβίαν, ἐπὶ κάλλει τε σωφροσύνῃ καὶ νοῦ μέγεθος, εἰς ταυτὸ τῷ Ἀντωνίῳ παραγενομένην, καὶ συνέχειν δύνασθαι, ὡς εἰκὸς, τοιαύτην γυναῖκα, πάντων πραγμάτων αὐτοῖς σωτηρίαν ἔσεσθαι καὶ σύγκρασιν. Has Nuptias juſſerunt omnes, quod Octaviam ſperarent, quæ excellentiæ formæ gravitatem & prudentiam habebat adjunctam, ubi Antonio conjuncta eſſet, atque ut talis Femina haud dubiè ab eo adamata, omnium rerum ipſis ſalutem & concordiam allaturam. This Marriage was in the Year (d) 714. Three Years after they ſaw the Accompliſhment of the Hopes they had conceived. Auguſtus waged War with the Son of Pompey, and wanted Succours from Antony. Antony came from the Eaſt to Italy, with a much greater intent to inform himſelf of the ſtate of Affairs, and to take advantage of this Juncture, than to ſecond Auguſtus. Their Correſpondence grew colder and colder every Day: They complain'd one of another, and their Jealouſies were like to run too high; but Octavia dexterouſly ſtruck in to reconcile them, and compaſs'd (e) her end. Plutarch relates this Hiſtory with many more Circumſtances than Dion. He ſets forth, that after theſe Triumviri had made Peace with Pompey's Son, one ſtayed in Italy, and the other went to Greece with Octavia his Wife. He paſs'd the Winter with her at Athens; and being incenſed againſt Auguſtus by ſome ugly Rumours, ſet ſail for Italy; and being denied entrance into the Haven of Brunduſium, put into Tarentum; from whence he ſent Octavia to Auguſtus. The Lady met her Brother on the Road, and affected him in ſuch a moving manner, that he was appeas'd and went in good Humour to Tarentum. The Interview between the two Brothers in-Law was attended

(a) Plut. in Anton. pag. 929, 930.

(b) Dion, lib. 48. p. 429. ad ann. 714.

(c) Plut. ibid. pag. 929 F.

(d) 713 according to Calviſius.

(e) See Dion, lib. 49. fub finem.

With

Harm againſt her Will; for the People obſerving that he prefer'd ſuch a Woman (B) as Cleopatra to her, conceiv'd Indignation againſt him, and thought of him with the laſt degree of Contempt. This War, as every one knows, ended in the entire Ruin of Mark Antony. Fortune ſeem'd to promiſe Octavia the higheſt Pitch of humane Felicity. She had a very deſerving Son, who married Auguſtus's Daughter, and was look'd upon as the preſumptive Heir of the Empire. But he died (C) in the Flower of his Age: which proved ſo ſevere a Blow to the Mother, that ſhe remain'd ever after diſconſolate (D); inſomuch that ſhe wrapp'd her ſelf up in Solitude, and ſpent the Remain-with a thouſand Demonſtrations of Friendſhip. Plutarch's Words are theſe: (f) Ἡ δὲ ἀπαλλάξασα καθ' ὁδὸν Καίσαρι, καὶ παραλαβοῦσα τῶν ἐκείνου φίλων Ἀγρίππαν καὶ Μαικήνᾳ ἐνεπύγχανε, πολλὰ μὲν αὐτὴν καὶ πολλὰ δ' ὁμοίαν μὴ περιιδεῖν αὐτὸν ἐκ μεγαλοψυχίας γυναικὸς ἀδελφοῦ στέρεσθαι γενομένην. νῦν μὲν γὰρ ἅπαντας ἀνθρώπους εἰς αὐτὴν ἀποβλέπειν, αὐτοκρατόρων δυοῖν, τὸν μὲν γυναῖκα, τὸν δὲ ἀδελφὴν ἔσαν. Εἰ δὲ τὸ χεῖρον κρατήσειεν, (ἔφη) καὶ γένοιτο πόλεμος, ὑμῶν μὲν ἄδηλον ὅτῳ κρατεῖν ἢ κρατεῖσθαι πέφυκεν, τὸ ἐμὸν δὲ ἀμφοτέρως ἄθλιον. Τούτοις ἐπικλασθεὶς ὁ Καῖσαρ, ἦλθεν εἰρηνικῶς εἰς Τάραντα. Hæc occurrens Cæſari in itinere, adjunctis illius amicis Agrippa & Mæcenate, convenit eum. Multis autem oravit quæſtibus ne permitteret ex fortuniſſima fœmina miſerrimam ſe evadere. Nunc enim omnes mortales ait ſuſpicere ſe duorum Imperatorum alterius Conjugem alterius ſororem. Quod ſi deteriora conſilia, inquit, valuerint, & extiterit bellum: utri victrum, incertum eſt, in fatis ſit vincere an vinci; mea vero ſors utrinque erit miſera. His fractus Cæſar venit pacatus Tarentum.

(B) That he preferr'd ſuch a Woman as Cleopatra to her.] Thoſe who had ſeen Cleopatra deplored Mark Antony's Infatuation more than others, in regard they found her neither ſo young nor ſo handſome as Octavia. So that Antony ſhewed a great deal of Folly in not giving the preference to Octavia, who at the ſame time ſurpaſs'd the other infinitely in Virtue and Wiſdom. (g) Ῥωμαῖοι δὲ ὤκτιρεν ἐκείνην ἀλλ' Ἀντώνιον, καὶ μᾶλλον οἱ Κλεοπάτραν ἑωρακότες, ὅτε καλλος τῆς Ὀκταβίας ὅτε ὥρᾳ διαφέρουσαν. Populum vero Romanum miſerebat non ita illius, (Octaviæ) ut Antonii, atque impenſius eos qui Cleopatram viderant, neque forma Octaviæ neque ætatis flore præcellentem. Octavia, without reſenting the Affronts put upon her, did all the good Offices ſhe could to her Husband's Children and Friends; and the eſteem that the People had for her thereupon did Mark Antony a great deal of Harm; inſomuch, that contrary to her Intention (h), that illuſtrious Lady expos'd him very much to the Hatred of the Romans. 'Tis likewiſe ſaid that Auguſtus conſented to Octavia's Voyage to her Husband, in hopes that he would put ſome great Affront upon her; and he knew very well ſuch an Affront would paſs for a warrantable Ground of renewing the War. Add to this, that he did not doubt but ſhe would ſcrew up the Indignation of the People of Rome againſt Mark Antony to the full heighth. (i) Ἐν δὲ Ῥώμῃ ζηλουμένης Ὀκταβίας πλεῦσαι πρὸς Ἀντώνιον ἐπέτρεψε Καίσαρ, ὡς οἱ πολλοὶ λέγουσιν ἵνα ἐκείνῃ χαριζόμενος, ἀλλ' ὅπως περιφρονηθεῖσα καὶ καταμισηθεῖσα, πρὸς τὸν πόλεμον αὐτῷ εὐπρεπῆ φάσκοι. Rome inſtituenti ad Antonium navigare Octaviæ annuit Cæſar, non, ut plerique tradunt, quo illi indulgeret: verùm quo contumelia affecta deſpectaque colonem præberet bello movendo honeſtum. Whatever good Opinion Cleopatra might have of her own Charms, ſhe was extremely apprehenſive of thoſe of Octavia; and for that reaſon had recourſe to the deepeſt Artifices to hinder Mark Antony from ſuffering her to come near him. (k) Αἰδομένη δὲ ἡ Κλεοπάτρα τὴν Ὀκταβίαν ὁμόσε χωρῆσαι αὐτῷ, καὶ ζοφηθεῖσα μὴ τῷ τρόπῳ τὸ σεμνόπλοκον καὶ τὴν καίσαρος δυνάμει προσκτησαμένη τὸ καθ' ἡδονὴν ὁμιλοῦν καὶ θεραπεῦον Ἀντώνιον, ἅμαχον γένηται, καὶ κρείττων παντάπασι τῶν ἀνδρῶν, ἐρᾶν αὐτὴ προσεποιεῖτο τῆς Ἀντωνίου. At Cleopatra conferre ſecum pedem animadvertens Octaviam, veritaque ne cum gravitate morum & Cæſaris potentia placidam adjungens conſuetudinem & Antonii obſervantiam, inſuperabilis eſſet & ſemel poteretur viro, deperire ſimulabat ſe Antonii amore. She made her Spark believe that ſhe would die if he left her: She caus'd it to be repreſented to him, that 'twas enough for Octavia to be a lawful Wife, while Cleopatra, the Queen of ſo great a People, bore only the Name of his Concubine: A Name which ſhe would willingly brook (l), provided Mark Antony's Abſence did not run her to Deſpair, and kill her. (m) Ὀκταβίαν μὲν . . τὸ τ' γαμεῖσθαι ἕτοιμα προφέρειν· Κλεοπάτραν δὲ, τοσούτων ἀνθρώπων βασιλεύουσαν, ἐρωμένην Ἀντωνίου καλεῖσθαι· καὶ τοὔνομα τοῦτο μὴ φεύγειν μηδ' ἀποξυοῦν ἕως ὀργὴν ἐκείνου ἔχῃ καὶ συζῇν, ἀπαλγουμένην δὲ τοῦτο μὴ περιιδεῖσθαι. Octaviam enim . . . nomine frui uxoris. Cleopatram vero, tam multorum Reginam mortalium, pellicem Antonii nominari: neque eam hoc deſugere vel dedignari nomen, quoad aſpicere illum & una liceat vivere: quo ſi orbaretur non ducturam ultra ſpiritum. Mark Antony's Friends adviſed him to ſend Cleopatra back to Egypt, ſhe having followed him to Epheſus when every thing was ripe for the laſt Rupture: But ſhe fearing (a) that Octavia would once more reconcile her Brother to her Husband found out a Man that perſwaded Antony to carry her a long with him wherever he went. Her Emulation was ſo violent that coming to Athens where Octavia had been receiv'd with very diſtinguiſhing Marks of Honour, ſhe was very liberal to the People in hopes to obtain the like (b).

(C) Her Son died in the Flower of his Age.] His Name was Marcus Claudius Marcellus; and his Elogy is inſerted in the Æneids ſo handſomly, and ſo admirably well turn'd, that the moſt ſtupid Reader muſt needs be moved with it. I've read it above a hundred times, but never without Tranſports of Admiration: And now that I read it once more in tranſcribing it here, I think it finer than ever it appear'd to me before. Several excellent Judges have aſſured me that they are of the ſame Mind. So, I doubt not but I ſhall readily be pardoned for giving it here entire.

Atque (c) hic Æneas (una namque ire videbat
Egregium formâ juvenem, & fulgentibus armis;
Sed frons lata parùm, & dejecta lumina vultu)
Quis, pater, ille, virûm qui ſic comitatur euntem?
Filius? an ne aliquis magnâ de ſtirpe nepotum?
Quis ſtrepitus circa comitum! quantum inſtar in ipſo eſt!
Sed nox atra caput triſti circumvolat umbrâ.
Tùm pater Anchiſes lacrymis ingreſſus obortis:
O nate, ingentem luctum ne quære tuorum.
Oſtendent terris hunc tantùm fata; neque ultra
Eſſe ſinent: nimium vobis Romana propago
Viſa potens, Superi, propria hæc ſi dona fuiſſent.
Quantos ille virûm magnam Mavortis ad urbem
Campus aget gemitus! vel quæ, Tiberine, videbis
Funera, cùm tumulum præterlabere recentem!
Nec puer Iliacâ quiſquam de gente Latinos
In tantum ſpe tollet avos: nec Romula quondam
Ullo ſe tantùm tellus jactabit alumno.
Heu pietas, heu priſca fides, invictaque bello
Dextera! non illi quiſquam ſe impunè tuliſſet
Obvius armato, ſeu cùm pedes iret in hoſtem;
Seu ſpumantis equi foderet calcaribus armos.
Heu miſerande Puer! ſi quâ fata aſpera rumpas,
Tu Marcellus eris: manibus date lilia plenis:
Purpureos ſpargam flores, animamque nepotis
His ſaltem accumulem donis, & fungar inani
Munere.

The Recital (d) of theſe Verſes made the Emperor and Octavia melt into Tears; and Virgil was obliged to acquaint 'em that he was come to the end of the Book, otherwiſe they would have ſtopt his reading. He was liberally rewarded for 'em. Others ſay, Octavia ſwoon'd away at the Words, Tu Marcellus eris, and was brought to her ſelf again with great difficulty. She order'd the Poet a good round Sum for each Verſe (e). Marcellus died in the 731 (f) Year of Rome. All Authors agree that he was very young; but few give his exact Age: Propertius indeed (g) has done it; and he allots him twenty Years of Age, in which point he is more credible than Servius (h), who makes him but 18. Glandorp (i) is miſtaken in affirming that Servius makes him 23. In another place (k), without citing any Author, he aſſerts, that Marcellus died at the Age of 24 Years.

(D) She remain'd ever after diſconſolate.] The Circumſtances of her Affliction are, to my Mind, well worth

(a) Φοβουμένη τὰς δι' Ὀκταβίας πάλιν αὐτοῦ διαλύσεις. Novam interpretè Octavia timens reconciliationem. Id. ibid. p. 941. E.

(b) Id. ibid. p. 942. C.

(c) Virgil. Æneid. l. 6. v. 861.

(d) Et conſtat hunc librum tanta pronuntiatione Auguſto & Octaviæ eſſe recitatum, ut fletu mimo imperarent ſilentium: niſi Virgilius finem eſſe dixiſſet, qui pro hoc are gravi donatus eſt, id eſt, maſſis. Servius in Virgil. Æn. l 6. v. 862.

(e) Tres omnino libros recitavit, ſecundum videlicet, quartum & ſextum; ſed hunc præcipue ob Octaviam, quæ cum recitationi intereſſet, ad illos de filio ſuo verſus, Tu Marcellus eris detecciſſe ferrur, atque ægrè retocillata, dena ſeſtertia pro ſingulo verſu Virgilio dari juſſit. Donatus in vita Virgilii.

(f) Dio lib. 53. circa fin.

(g) Propert eleg. 17. lib. 3.

(h) Servius ubi ſupra.

(i) Glandorp Onomaſt. pag. 232

(k) Ibid. pag. 434

(f) Plut. in Antonio pag. 931. E.

(g) Plut. ibid. pag. 942.

(b) Αἴτιον δὲ ἴσλασθαι δοκεῖ τὴν Ὀκταβίαν τοῖς Ἀντωνίου· ἐμισεῖτο γὰρ ἀδίκως γυναῖκα παιδίτην. Enimvero hiſce rebus offecit invita Antonio. Invidia namque flagrabat, quod talem fœminam violaret. Id. ibid. pag. 941.

(i) Id. ibid. p. 940. B.

(k) Id. ibid. C.

(l) Compare what Heloiſa ſaid above, in the Remark V. of her Article.

(m) Plut. ibid. D.

Remainder of her Days in diſmal Melancholy. She dyed * in the Year 744 of Rome, leaving two Daughters by Mark Antony, who married very advantageouſly †. They are in an Error who ſay ſhe was not full Siſter, or Siſter by the Mother's-ſide (E) to Auguſtus.

* Dion lib. 54. pag. 625.

† See the Article of Antonia

OCTA-

worth the Regard of all Hiſtorians that have occaſion to mention her and her Son: For they have a ſingular Character that carries a perfect Air of Prodigy along with it. Octavia became ſuch a Man-Hater that ſhe courted nothing but Solitude; the very Glory of her Brother was a burden to her. The very Character of being a Mother was enough to make one the Object of her Indignation. She kept no Picture of her Son, and would not have any one ſpeak of him: All the Verſes made upon him (l) ſhe rejected. Seneca is the Author that informs us of theſe Circumſtances. He is ſo particular upon that Matter that 'twill not be improper to tranſcribe his Words Octavia Marcellum, cui & avunculus & ſocer incumbere expetat, in quem onus imperii reclinare, adoleſcentem animo alacrem, ingenio potentem; ſed & frugalitatis continentiaque in illis aut annis aut opibus non mediocriter admirandum; patientem laborum, voluptatibus alienum; quantumcumque imponere illi avunculus, & (ut ita dicam) inædificare voluiſſet, laturum. Bene legerat nulli ceſſura ponderi fundamenta. Nullum finem, per omne vitæ ſuæ tempus, flendi gemendique fecit: nec ullas admiſit voces, ſalutare aliquid afferentes: ne avocari quidem ſe paſſa eſt. Intenta in unam rem, & toto animo affixa, talis per omnem vitam fuit, qualis in funere: non dico non auſa conſurgere, ſed allevari recuſans: ſecundam orbitatem judicans, lacrimas omittere. Nullam habere imaginem filii cariſſimi voluit, nullam ſibi fieri de illo mentionem. Oderat omnes matres, & in Liviam maximè furebat: quia videbatur ad illius filium tranſiſſe, ſibi promiſſa felicitas. Tenebris & ſolitudini familiariſſima; ne ad fratrem quidem reſpiciens, carmina celebrandæ Marcelli memoriæ compoſita, alioſque ſtudiorum honores rejecit, & aures ſuas adverſus omne ſolatium clauſit, a ſolemnibus officiis ſeducta, & ipſam magnitudinis fraternæ nimis circumlucentem fortunam exoſa, defodit ſe, & abdidit. Aſſidentibus liberis, nepotibus, lugubrem veſtem non depoſuit; non fine contumeliâ omnium ſuorum, quibus ſalvis orba ſibi videbatur (m).

(l) This does not agree with what I mention'd in the preceding Remark.

(m) Seneca Conſol. ad Marciam, c. 2. p. m. 736, 737.

(E) Who ſay, She was not Siſter by the Mother's-ſide to Auguſtus.] Plutarch is guilty of this miſtake: He (n) takes our Octavia to have been the Daughter of Anchiria, firſt Wife to Caius Octavius, and Atia the ſecond Wife of Octavius to have been the Mother of Auguſtus. But there are ſeveral Reaſons to evince the contrary. Glandorp (o) furniſhes us with two very good ones. The firſt is grounded upon a Paſſage of Cicero, and the ſecond upon a Paſſage of Dion. The latter ſays, that Caius Marcellus, preferr'd to the Conſulſhip in (p) 703, was an Enemy to Julius Cæſar, though he (q) was his Kinſman. Now that Kindred or Relation ſprung from the Marriage of this Marcellus with Octavia; ſo that his Wife muſt have been the Daughter of Atia; for had ſhe been the Daughter of Anchiria ſhe had not bore any Relation to Julius Cæſar. If Glandorp had confirm'd this by a Paſſage out of Suetonius, he had rendred his Proof demonſtrative. Suetonius tells us Julius Cæſar had a mind to give Octavia, the Wife of Caius Marcellus, and Grand-Child to his Siſter, in Marriage to Pompey. (r) Ad retinendam autem Pompeji neceſſitudinem ac voluntatem, Octaviam ſororis ſuæ neptem quæ C. Marcello nupta erat, conditione ei detulit. As for the Paſſage our of Cicero, it imports, That Lucius Philippus was married to a Woman of Aricia, whoſe Daughter had married Caius Marcellus. This Wife of Lucius Philippus (s) was the Mother of Auguſtus; ſo that undoubtedly the Wife of Caius Marcellus was Siſter by the Mother-ſide to that Emperor: For, to uſe the Words of a Journaliſt, It will never enter into any one's Head, that that Marcellus's Wife was not the Daughter of the Wife of that Philip, ſince 'tis the Latitat of common Senſe, that Cicero would not have mention'd ſuch a thing before the Senate, without being well aſſured of the Truth of it (t). 'Tis in the third Philippick that Cicero has that Paſſage; and undoubtedly Lucius Philippus and Caius Marcellus were preſent when he ſpoke it, as Mr. Perizonius (v) obſerves. Sed hoc clariſſimi viri viderint, L. Philippus qui habet Anciniam uxorem, C. Marcellus qui Anicinæ filiam: quos certo ſcio dignitatis optimarum feminarum non pœnitere (w). This is the Concluſion of Cicero's Anſwer to an Objection laid by Mark Antony againſt Octavius, and grounded (x) upon his Mother's being born in Aricia. Suetonius's Evidence is poſitive againſt Plutarch: (y) Decedens Macedonia (C. Octavius) prius quam profiteri ſe candidatum conſulatus poſſet, morte obiit repentina, ſuperſtitibus liberis, Octavia majore, quam ex Ancharia, & Octavia minore, item Auguſto, quos ex Atia tulerat. See Mr. Perizonius (z), who has ſet theſe Reaſons in a clear Light, in order to ſhew the Error of Plutarch, adopted by Antonius Auguſtinus, by Juſtus Lipſius, and ſome other Learned Men. The Author of the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, has inſiſted at large upon this Criticiſm, in giving an Abſtract of Perizonius's Book; but he made a conſiderable Blunder in ſaying (a) that Marcellus's Wife was the Daughter of Aricina. For that Expreſſion imports, that Aricina was the Name of that Lady's Family; whereas 'tis an Epither that denotes only her being born in Aricia. The Learned Manutius alledges, that the Mother of Octavia was not born in that Place, and wonders how that Epithet came to be given her. (b) Miror autem Aricinam Atiam eſſe dictam, cum nec ipſa nec pater ejus Balbus Aricia natus eſſet, fuit enim, Suetonio teſte, paterna ſtirpe Aricinus. But he is under a great miſtake; for if Atius and his Daughter had not been of Aritia, Cicero would not have over-look'd ſuch a fair Plea to diſprove Mark Antony, who upbraided Octavius's Mother with being born in that place. He was too well vers'd in the Art of Refuting, and too dexterous in taking advantage of the leaſt Circumſtances, to ſuffer his Adverſary to run away with ſuch a Lye. Seeing then he grants the Matter of Fact, and only refutes the Conſequence which Mark Antony drew from it, we need not doubt but that Manutius made a very falſe Remark. But then what ſhall we do with the Paſſage of Suetonius? I anſwer, that Suetonius's Phraſe in this place is of a piece with a way of ſpeaking uſual among the French Writers. They'll ſay ſuch a one is (c) Originaire of ſuch a Place; by which Expreſſion they mean, that not only his Anceſtors, but himſelf was born there. I own indeed that in this Senſe the Expreſſion is not very clean or exact; ſince Originaire in the politeſt Authors relates only to the Country of one's Father or Grand-Father, &c. But who ever told us that Suetonius was a nice Obſerver of Exactneſs in his Style?

Perizonius has very juſtly cenſured Triſtan, who thought, that the Mother of Marcellus, Auguſtus's Son-in-Law, was never married to Mark Antony. This Thought he grounded upon the Words of Seneca, touching that Lady's Affliction upon the Death of her dear Son. (d) All that's here ſaid of Octavia, ('tis Triſtan that ſpeaks after rehearſing the Paſſage of Seneca) can by no means, as I take it, be underſtood of that of the two Octavia's, Auguſtus's Siſters, who had Antony for her ſecond Huſband. For that wild and wretched way of living, of a Woman that drown'd her Days in Tears, and ſtifled the Splendor and Luſtre of her Family in Darkneſs, in remoteneſs, in flying Society and the Light as much as ſhe could, covering that continual Sorrow with mourning Garments: That way of living, I ſay, can never ſuit with what is ſaid of her Marriage with Mark Antony, and what followed after; of the diſtinguiſhing Love and Honour, ſhewn her by Auguſtus; of the Marks of Honour paid to her elſewhere, particularly at Corinth, where, as Pauſanias informs us, in his Corinthiaca, a Temple was built to her Honour; of the Reputation ſhe had juſtly merited, as being a ſtout, virtuous, conſtant Lady, who had brought up the ſeven Children which ſhe by Mark Antony (e), and he by Cleopatra, as if they had been her own, notwithſtanding he forſook her; and in fine, of all the other honourable Circumſtances relating to her, recorded by Hiſtorians. He reckons then, that of Auguſtus's two Siſters, the eldeſt married Marcellus, and fell into the Affliction mentioned by Seneca; and the youngeſt married Mark Antony. Now this is not only falſe, but raiſing Scruples upon nothing. For if he had but call'd to mind, that the Marriage of Octavia with Mark Antony was about 17 Years before the Death of young Marcellus, he had found no difficulty in reconciling Seneca to the other Authors (f). In the Journal des Savans (g) there's a Learned Diſſer-

(n) Plut. in Antonio, p. 929. D.

(o) Gland. Enamil. pag. 82.

(p) Others will have it 704.

(q) Τῷ Καίσαρι γαίμῳ ἐξ ἐπιγαμίας ἀνεψιόν ἐχθρὸς ἦν. Cæſaris quamquam cum eo ipſi affinitas intercedebat, inimicus erat. Dio lib. 40. pag. 166.

(r) Sueton. in Cæſare, c. 27.

(s) Sueton. in Auguſt. c. 8

(t) Nouv. de la Rep. des Lettres for June 1685. Art. 1. p. 597.

(v) Ubi infra.

(w) Cicero Philip. 3. p. m. 782.

(x) Ignobilitatem objicit C. Cæſaris filio: cujus etiam naturalis pater, ſi vita ſuppeditaſſet, Conſul factus eſſet. Aricina mater. Id. ib. p. 781.

(y) Sueton. in Auguſt. cap. 4.

(z) Jacob Perizonius Animadverſ. hiſtoric. p. 116. & ſeq.

(a) Nouv. de la Rep. des Lett. ubi ſupra.

(b) Paulus Manutius in Cicer. Philip. 3. p. m. 782.

(c) Moreri has this Expreſſion often.

(d) Triſtan. Comment. Hiſtor. Vol. I. pag. 54.

(e) Why does not Triſtan take notice of the Children of Mark Antony and Fulvia, which Octavia brought up? How comes he to be ignorant of what Plutarch ſays in Antonio, pag. 955. that of the 7 Children left by Mark Antony, including the two Daughters he had by Octavia, the eldeſt was put to Death by Auguſtus, and the other ſix were brought up by Octavia?

(f) See Perizonius, ubi ſupra. p. 120. and the Nouv. de la Repub. des Let tres, ubi ſupra, pag. 598.

(g) Of the 21*ſt of* January 1686, pag. 25 & ſeq. of the Dutch Edition.

the

OCTAVIA, the Daughter of Claudius the Emperor, and of Meſſalina, was born (A) in the 795 Year of Rome. She was betrothed very young to Lucius Silanus; but that Contract was broke by the ambitious Artifices of Agrippina, who had a Mind ſhe ſhould be married to her Son Nero. For compaſſing this end, ſome Pretence or other was needful; and that ſhe was not without. Vitellius a dexterous Courtier, and a great Flatterer undertook the management of that Affair; and found out ſpecious (B) Accuſations, by Vertue of which he got Silanus diveſted of the Senatorial Dignity. Soon after Octavia was betrothed to Agrippina's Son, whom ſhe afterwards married as ſoon as he arriv'd at ſixteen Years of Age *: But becauſe Claudius had adopted him, ſhe † paſs'd into another Family by a feign'd Adoption; without which their Marriage had been inceſtuous. She was very unfortunate, her Husband grew (C) preſently weary of her, and divorced her under the pretence of Sterility. Poppæa, whom he married preſently after, ſuborn'd a Man who accuſed ‡ Octavia of having been too familiar with one of her Slaves. The Princeſs's Women Servants were put upon the Rack to oblige them to depoſe againſt their Miſtreſs. Some unable to reſiſt the Violence of the Torture charged her with it; but moſt of them had the Reſolution to declare

* Tacit. annal. l. 12. c. 58.
† Dion lib. 60. p. 687. apud Tillemont, Tom. 1. p. 391.
‡ Tacit. annal. lib. 14. c. 60.
(p) Tacit. Annal. lib. 12. cap. 4. ad Ann. 801.
(q) Die Nuptiarum Silanus ſibi mortem conſcivit. ſive eo uſque ſpem Vitæ produxerat; ſeu delectato, die augendam ad invidiam. Calvina ſoror ejus Italia pulſa eſt. Addidit Claudius Sacra ex legibus Tullii Regis piaculaque apud lucum Dianæ per Pontifices danda: iniidentibus cunctis quod pœnæ procurationeſque inceſti id temporis exquirerentur Id. ib. cap. 8.

tation upon the true degree of Conſanguinity between Auguſtus and Octavia; which was communicated to the Journaliſt by a Learned (b) Antiquary, and a very honeſt Gentleman. In that Diſſertation he ſets the Truth in a clear Light, but he repeats Triſtan's Objection ſomewhat amiſs. Marcellus's Octavia, ſays he (i), whom Suetonius calls the younger Octavia (1), had been already propoſed for a Wife to Pompey by her Grand Uncle; ſo that ſhe was twice look'd upon as an inſtrument of Reconciliation. And this furniſhes us with an Anſwer to the Objection of ſome Moderns, who finding in Seneca (2) that Marcellus's Widow was inconſolable upon the Death of her Husband, deny that ſhe was married a ſecond time to Mark Antony; for we very well know that Perſons of that Rank are commonly Victims of State. Octavia, notwithſtanding her Mourning, was forced to conſent to this ſecond Marriage for the Publick Good, and for her Brother's Intereſt; and 'tis very probable that on Mark Antony's ſide, 'twas pure Politicks that moved him to marry a Lady, whoſe Extraction he had decried: And accordingly we ſee he threw her off ſoon after, and ſtuck entirely to Cleoparra. You ſee he ſuppoſes that Triſtan quoted Seneca, to prove that this Lady was inconſolable upon the Death of her Husband. But he does not, neither could he quote him for any thing elſe than to ſhew ſhe was mightily afflicted at the Death of her Son. You ſee likewiſe, he ſuppoſes that Octavia doing Violence to her ſelf, married Mark Antony in the midſt of the Affliction repreſented by Seneca. But if you conſult Seneca, you'll ſee how groundleſs that Suppoſition is.

(b) Mr. Rainſſant Phyſician of Rheims, Keeper of the Medals in the King's Cloſet.
(i) Journal des Savans, voi. ſupra, p. 27, 28.
(1) Sueton. Tit. 29.
(2) Senec. Conſ. ad Marc.

(A) Was born in the 795 Year of Rome.] According to Tacitus's Account; but there's ſome Reaſon to think he is miſtaken. He ſays (k), ſhe was in the 20th Year of her Age when ſhe was put to Death, and that ſhe was put to Death in the Conſulſhip of P. Marius, and L. Aſinius; that is, in the Year of Rome 815. From whence we compute that ſhe was born in the Year 795. But in regard he has placed her Marriage (l) with Nero under the Conſulſhip of D. Junius and Q. Haterius, that is in the Year of Rome 806, we muſt conclude ſhe was at leaſt twelve Years of Age then; and conſequently was born in 794. Add to this, that her Father bethroth'd her to Silanus (m) the firſt Year of his Reign, i. e. the Year of Rome 793, and that Suetonius (n) gives us to know that Britannicus was born after her. Now Britannicus was born (o) the 20th Day of his Father's Reign.

(k) Tacit. Annal. lib. 14. c. 64.
(l) Idem Annal. lib. 12. c. 58.
(m) Dion lib. 60, pag. 653. apud Tillemont, Hiſt. des Empер. Tom. 1. pag. 1019.
(n) Sueton. in Claud. cap. 27.
(o) Id. ib.

(B) Vitellius a dexterous Courtier.... found out ſpecious Accuſations.] One of the happieſt Qualities of a Courtier is to foreſee at ſome diſtance, who they are to whom Fortune prepares the moſt ſhining Favours: For the Services done 'em before hand, while they are yet ſtriving to be great, inſpire 'em with much more Gratitude than thoſe which are done after the actual poſſeſſion of Authority. 'Twas Vitellius's Talent to foreſee the Preferment that was yet in the Womb of Fortune. By this his Talent he knew that the Emperor Claudius would marry Agrippina, and that ſhe would manage her Husband as ſhe pleas'd. This Prognoſtick was grounded on the Lady's Cunning, and the Husband's Weakneſs: So we muſt not think it ſtrange that Vitellius left no Stone unturned to ruin Silanus; for Agrippina's Intereſt call'd for that Sacrifice: She wanted to have Octavia in a condition to be betrothed to Nero, and that could not be done till her Contract with Silanus were broke. Silanus had a Siſter diſtinguiſh'd by her Beauty and Wantonneſs. They could not convict him of having lain with her: but Silanus had not been careful enough to conceal his Paſſion for her; and that gave Vitellius a handle to turn him out of the Senate. For Vitellius was Cenſor, and his Poſt empower'd him to degrade thoſe who misbehaved themſelves. As ſoon as Silanus had received this Mortification, Claudius broke off the Contract of Marriage, and obliged him to quit his Prætorſhip. All this we have laid before us by Tacitus, whoſe Words are nobler than any I can put in their room. (p) Igitur Vitellius nomine Cenſoris ſerviles fallacias obtegens, ingruentiumque dominationum proviſor, quo gratiam Agrippinæ paravet, conſilia ejus implicari, ferere Crimina in Silanum, cui ſane decora & procax ſoror Junia Calvina haud multum ante Vitellii nurus fuerat: hinc initium accuſationis, fratrumque non inceſtum, ſed incuſſoditum amorem ad infamiam traxit. Et præbebat Cæſar aures, accipiendo adverſum generum ſuſpicionibus caritate filiæ promptior. At Silanus inſidiarum neſcius, ac forte eo anno Prætor, repente per edictum Vitellii ordine Senatorio movetur, quanquam lecto pridem Senatu, luſtroque condito. Simul affinitatem Claudius diremit; adacteſque Silanus ejurare magiſtratum, & reliquus præturæ dies in Eprium Marcellum collatus eſt. Silanus kill'd himſelf on Claudius's and Agrippina's Wedding-Day: His Siſter was baniſhed, and Expiations were injoin'd for their Inceſt. Every one ridiculed theſe Expiations, upon the Conſideration that the Emperor, who injoyn'd 'em, had ſo lately contracted an inceſtuous Marriage (q).

(p) Tacit. Annal. lib. 12. cap. 4. ad Ann. 801.
(q) Die Nuptiarum Silanus ſibi mortem conſcivit. ſive eo uſque ſpem Vitæ produxerat; ſeu delectato, die augendam ad invidiam. Calvina ſoror ejus Italia pulſa eſt. Addidit Claudius Sacra ex legibus Tullii Regis piaculaque apud lucum Dianæ per Pontifices danda: iniidentibus cunctis quod pœnæ procurationeſque inceſti id temporis exquirerentur Id. ib. cap. 8.

(C) Grew preſently weary of her.] His Friends repreſented to him how much he was in the wrong in contemning his Lady ſo ſoon, and withholding the Careſſes that the ſtate of Matrimony requires. Let her content her ſelf (replied he) with bearing the Name of my Wife; that's an Ornament, that's a Dignity, that ought to ſatisfy her: What Comfort here is! (a) Octavia conſuetudinem citò ad ſpernatus, corripientibus amicis, ſufficere illi debere reſpondit Uxoria Ornamenta. Eandem mox ſæpe fruſtra ſtrangulare meditatus, dimiſit ut ſterilem: ſed improbante divortium populo, nec parcente convitiis, etiam relegavit. Denique occidit ſub crimine adulteriorum, adeo impudenti falſoque, ut in quæſtione pernegantibus cunctis, Anicetum Pædagogum ſuum indicem ſubjecerit, qui dolo ſtuprat.am a ſe fateretur. No doubt, but 'twas a freſh Matter of trouble to Octavia, to ſee Nero paſſionately in Love with a Servant, and the wiſeſt Heads winking at that Diſorder: For they choſe rather to ſee him gratifying his Laſcivious Paſſion with ſuch a Creature as did not meddle with the Affairs of the Government, than to ſee him invade the Honour of the greateſt Ladies; which he would infallibly have done, if he had not been wrapp'd up in this Servant Wench, for he was a Man who had not the Gift of Continence, and he made no uſe of his Wife. He did not love her; whether 'twas that he had ſome natural Antipathy againſt her, or that he preferr'd unlawful Pleaſures to thoſe which are lawful. To ſhew the Antiquity of that curſed Nicety that's now ſo much in faſhion, let's quote a Roman Author. (b) Delapſo Nerone in amorem libertæ cui vocabulum Actæ fuit... ne ſeverioribus quidem principis amicis adverſantibus, mulierculæ nullæ cujuſquam injuria cupidines principis explente: quando uxore ab Octavia nobili quidem, & probitatis ſpectatæ, fato quodam, an quia prævalent illicita, abhorrebat

(a) Sueton. in Nerone cap. 35.
(b) Tacit. Annal. lib. 13. c. 12.

declare her Innocence; and one of them made uſe (D) of a very odd Expreſſion. Notwithſtanding, Octavia was confin'd to ſome remote place and kept under a ſtrong Guard. The ordinary People, who are commonly bolder ♦ than thoſe who have Places to loſe, murmur'd to that Degree that Nero reſolv'd to bring her back again. No Expreſſion can reach the Joy that appear'd at Rome upon her being recalled; nor the Reſpect that the People ſhewed to that Princeſs ‡. Poppæa thought her ſelf undone if ſhe did not ruin her; for which Reaſon ſhe threw her ſelf at Nero's Feet, and back'd her Petitions with ſuch political Reaſons, that ſhe obtain'd her Requeſt †. Nero engag'd the Man (E) who had got him rid of his Mother Agrippina, to declare that he had lain with Octavia; upon which ſhe was confined to an Iſland, and in a few Days after conſtrain'd to cauſe her Veins to be opened. Her Head was cut off, and preſently carried for a Preſent to her Rival †. Nero chang'd his Language ſtrangely; whereas he had complain'd that Octavia was barren, he then accuſed her of having made her ſelf (F) miſcarry.

♦ Inde crebri queſtus, nec occulti per vulgum, cui minor ſapientia, & ex mediocritate fortunæ pauciora pericula ſunt. Id. ib.
‡ Id. ib. cap. 61.
† Ibid.
† Tacit. ibid. cap. 63, 64.

horrebat: mutuebaturque ne in ſtupra feminarum illuſtrium prorumperet, ſi ea libidine prohiberetur.

(D) Made uſe of a very odd Expreſſion.] Tigellinus (c), the Man in the World that was moſt devoted to the filthy and cruel Paſſions of Nero, aſſiſted at the Torture of Octavia's Servant-Maids; and preſs'd them to confeſs what their Miſtreſs was charged with. One of 'em gave this Anſwer (d), Her private Parts are chaſter than thy Mouth: and Dion tells us this Maid's Name was Pythias; but he alledges, that ſhe was the only Servant that continued faithful to Octavia, and that all the reſt betrayed her to make their Court to Poppæa. He adds, that Pythias, ſpeaking the above mentioned Words ſpit in Tigellinus's Face. Dion's Greek Words are full as free as Tacitus's Latin. (e) Μόνη δ' ἡ Πυθιὰς κἂν τι κἀξηύρετο αὐτῆς, καίπερ πεφυτα βυσανιζθεῖσα, ἐς τὸν Τιγελλῖνον ἐνέπτυσε αὐτῇ, περοσπίπτοσί τε αὐτῷ καὶ εἶπε, Καθαρώτερον, ὦ Τιγελλῖνε, τὸ αἰδοῖον ἢ διάπυνά μου τὸ σῶμα ἔχει. Sola Pythias, licet acerrimis tormentis coacta, noluit in eam mentiri: quumque Tigellinus inſtaret vehementius, faciem ejus conſpuit, Mundior eſt, (iniquit) Tigelline, vulva domina mea, quam os tuum. The Domeſtick Servant, with whom they charged that Princeſs to have been too familiar, was a Player on the Flute. (f) Quemdam ex miniſtris Octavie impulit, ſervilem ei amorem objicere. Deſtinaturque reus cognomento Eucærus, natione Alexandrinus, canere tibiis doctus. Muſicians are lucky Fellows; and I don't believe that among all the Profeſſions of this Rank, there is any ſo fertile as this, in Inſtances of being ſuſpected by Kings and Princes. However, Nero did not think this Adultery of Octavia's likely; the Circumſtances of the Man did not ſeem proper to colour (g) the Suſpicion.

(E) Nero engaged the Man, who had got him rid of his Mother Agrippina.] According to Suetonius (h) that Man was Nero's Tutor; but Tacitus ſays he commanded the Emperor's Fleet at Miſenum. After Nero had employed him in deſtroying Agrippina, he uſed (i) him firſt very coldly, and at laſt hated him: For the ſight of thoſe who have been employed by others, for the execution of great Crimes, is not agreeable to them; they are apt to fancy they are continually twitting them. But now, having a freſh occaſion to employ him again, he careſs'd him, taking notice of the former Service he had done, as being of the laſt importance; and told him an Opportunity preſented of doing him another piece of Service that was not leſs neceſſary, and that he required no more of him, but a bare Acknowledgment that he had lain with Octavia. He promis'd him a good Reward, which 'twas not proper to give him for the preſent, and threatned to kill him if he refuſed. (k) Accitum eum Cæſar operæ prioris admonet; ſolum in columitati principis adverſus inſidiantem matrem ſubveniſſe: locum haud minoris gratiæ inſtare, ſi conjugem inſenſam depelleret. Nec manu aut telo opus. Fateretur Octavie adulterium. Occulta quidem ad præſens, ſed magna ei præmia, & receſſus amœnos promittit; vel ſi negaviſſet, necem intentat. This Raſcally Fellow undertook to do what was deſired, and even ſpoke more Lies than what was required of him. He was baniſh'd to Sardinia (l), for form's ſake, where he lived at his eaſe, and died a natural Death.

Here, I reckon, 'twill not be improper to make ſome Reflections upon the Narrative of Suetonius. We can't deny that Author the Glory of a good Abbreviator, but ſometimes he over-does the Rules of Art; by which means it comes to paſs, that the Intervals and Diſtinctions of Events do not always appear in his Work. Of this we have an Inſtance in the caſe now before us (m). He carries Nero's Injuſtice to Octavia only through three Degrees. She was firſt divorced under pretence of Barrenneſs; then baniſh'd, becauſe the People cryed out againſt the Divorce; and at laſt puniſhed with Death upon pretence of Adultery, though all that were tortured upon that Head denied it, and there was no other Evidence but only Anicetus, who falſly own'd he had lain with her. Now, do but conſult Tacitus, and you'll preſently perceive that Suetonius is faulty. According to Tacitus, the Misfortunes of that Princeſs ought to be drawn up in the following Order. Nero's Love for Poppæa inſpired that ſqueamiſh Husband with the Thoughts of a Divorce: Accordingly, Octavia was divorced, as being barren, and he married Poppæa. After that, by Virtue of Poppæa's Intrigues, Octavia was charged with Adultery; her Servant-Maids were put upon the Rack; moſt of them maintain'd that ſhe was a Woman of Honour: Yet the Divorce ſtood; and after ſhe had (n) accepted ſome Gratifications, ſhe was baniſh'd to Campania, and there confined. The Murmurings of the common People, or elſe ſome Remorſe of Conſcience, obliged Nero to recall her. This was ſo acceptable to the People, that Poppæa did not think her ſelf ſafe, unleſs Octavia were made away with. With this View ſhe plaid her Cards ſo dexterouſly with the Emperor, that he engag'd Anicetus to declare he had lain with Octavia. After that the unfortunate Princeſs was tranſported to the Iſland Pandataria, where ſhe was put to Death. It do's not appear that ſhe returned to Rome after her Divorce; ſhe was ſtill (o) in Campania, when the People gave ſuch Expreſſions of Joy upon her being recalled: And in regard theſe Expreſſions of Joy moved Poppæa to ſollicit Nero to make away with her, and ſhe obtain'd her Requeſt, 'tis not probable that the Order for her Return was ever put in Execution. So that theſe Words of Tacitus (p) Conjugem revocanit Octaviam, are ſomewhat fallacious. But Suetonius's Faults are much more inexcuſable. 'Tis viſible that he has confounded the Events, and omited things, the Supreſſion of which can't be juſtified by deſign'd Brevity. What Probability is there that Nero's Falſe-Witneſs depoſed he had uſed fraudulent Means to compaſs his end with Octavia? Was not that the way to extenuate that Princeſs's Crime, which Nero did not require? Note, That Triſtan (a) ſuppoſes Octavia came actually back to her Husband's Houſe, and even that ſhe was recalled from the Iſland Pandataria; the firſt of which is not likely, and the other is notoriouſly falſe.

(F) Of having made her ſelf miſcarry.] I have known ſome Perſons who found fault with Tacitus for taking theſe two Pretences of Octavia's Diſgrace for a Contradiction. (b) At Nero præfectum in ſpem ſociandæ claſſis corruptum, & incuſata paullo ante ſterilitatis oblitus, abactos partus conſcientia libidinum, eaque ſibi comperta, edicto memorat. Nero grounded Octavia's Divorce upon the Plea of her Barrenneſs; and ſoon after he declared, that, to his certain knowledge, ſhe had taken things to make her ſelf miſcarry. Now, here's no Contradiction. When we do not obſerve that a married Woman comes to be with Child, we have reaſon to take her to be barren: But if we happen to diſcover that ſhe forces her ſelf to miſcarry, we incur no Contradiction in denying her Sterility. Where then is Nero's Contradiction? To theſe Criticks I made anſwer, that the Hiſtorian do's not charge the Emperor with a formal Contradiction; he only alledges, there was a great deal of Imprudence in making uſe of the Plea of Miſcarriage after having inſiſted ſo lately upon that of Barrenneſs. The

Impru-

(m) See his Words in the Remark C.
(n) Domumque Burri, & prædia Plauti, infauſta dona accipit. Tacit. Annal. lib. 14. c. 60.
(o) This appears from theſe Words of Poppæa: Vitam ipſam in extremum adductam à clientelis & ſervitiis Octaviæ, quæ plebis ſibi nomen indiderint, ea in pace auſis quæ vix bello evenirent. Arma illa adverſus principem ſumpta. Ducem tantum detuiſſe, qui moris rebus facile reperiretur. Omitteres modo Campaniam & in urbem ipſam pergeret, ad cujus nutum abſentis tumultus cierentur. Tacit. ibid. cap. 61.
(p) Ibid. c. 60.
(a) Triſtan. Comment. hiſtor. Tom. 1. p. 138.
(b) Tacit. ubi ſupra, c. 63.
(c) Xiphilin. in Nerone p.g. m 176.
(d) Ἀλλὰ οὐδὲν ἧττον ἐβασανίζετο περὶ τῶν ἀκολάστων ἐκείνων ἔργων, καὶ ἐμαστίγουτο ἐπὶ τῷ ὁμολογῆσαι ἃ μὴ ἐποίησαν. Sed nihilominus torquebantur de illis flagitiis, & verberibus cogebantur confiteri quæ non fecerant. Dion. Caſſius, lib. 62.
(e) Xiphil. ubi ſupra.
(f) Tacit. ubi ſupra.
(g) Parum valebat ſuſpicio in ſervo. Tacit. ibid. cap. 62.
(h) I have quoted his Words in the Remark C.
(i) Levi poſt admiſſum ſceleris gratia, dein graviore odio: quia malorum facinorum miniſtri quaſi exprobrantes adſpiciuntur. Id. ibid.
(k) Id. ib.
(l) In Sardiniam pellitur, ubi non inops exſilium tolleravit, & fato obiit. Id. ibid.

miſcarry. This Princeſs's Lot was ſcarce any thing elſe, but a continued Series (G) of Misfortunes.

OENONE, the Daughter of a River in Phrygia, call'd Cebren ‡, and Paris's Wife, was, according to ſome, a noted (A) Sorcereſs or Magician. Others content themſelves with ſaying, that ſhe was perfectly well acquainted with the Virtues of Herbs, and that this Piece of Knowledge was imparted (B) to her, by way of exchange for her Maiden-head. 'Tis likewiſe ſaid that ſhe had the Gift of Prophecy *. Having that Advantage of knowing Futurity, ſhe did not fail to foreſee that her Huſband's Voyage to Helena would be the Cauſe of an Infinity of Miſchiefs; and therefore ſhe uſed her utmoſt Endeavours to put her Huſband off of it. Finding her Remonſtrances ineffectual, ſhe ſaid to him, that ſince he would go, he muſt be ſure to bring her back ſome of the Medicaments that were neceſſary to cure the Wounds he might receive in the War. Paris promiſed her he would, and departed. Oenone, who had a Heart full of Love, and a Head full of Jealouſy, was not eaſy in her Mind, but ſent a Meſſenger after him, to charge him to remember his Promiſe. Paris, who was then in the Arms of Helena, ſwore to the Meſſenger that he would obſerve it punctually. Oenone, who was not to be deceived, ſent him word that ſhe would be revenged of him, if he did not keep his Word. Paris, who was not to be frighted, ſent her word that he would keep it, if he could. Oenone, who was not to be trifled with, ſent him word that ſhe would be revenged of him, if he did not keep it. Paris, who was not to be terrified, ſent her word that he would keep it, if he could not. Oenone, who was not to be deceived, ſent him word that ſhe would be revenged of him, if he did not keep it Remonſtrances fruitleſs, ſhe (C) foretold him he would be wounded, and forced to have recourſe to her as the only Perſon that could cure him †. When he received a Wound from Philoctetes at the Siege of Troy, he call'd to Mind Oenone's Prediction, and order'd himſelf to be carried to Mount Ida, in order to get the Remedy that ſhe alone could give him; but he died before he could reach ſo far as to be relieved by Oenone ‡. And ſome ſay, that in order to have the pleaſure of Revenge, ſhe made ſo little (D) haſte, that ſhe gave Death time to prevent the Remedy; and yet that ſhe made away with her ſelf when ſhe ſaw her Huſband's Corps. This Story is variouſly (E) related, and they have not forgot to inform us, that ſhe apply'd her ſelf betimes to find out means of Revenge. Upon this Project (F) ſhe employed her Son: ſome ſay ſhe ſent him to Greece, to excite the Princes to a War againſt the Trojans; others ſay ſhe concerted Matters ſo, that he touch'd Helena's Heart, in order to affect Paris with the Throwes of Jealouſy.

† Idem. ib.

‡ Idem. ib.

OKOLSKI (SIMON) a Dominican Friar lived in the XVIIth Century. He wrote a Book entituled Orbis Polonus, which is worth reading. Mr. le Laboureur quotes it oftner * than once.

* See his Relation of the Voyage of the Queen of Poland. Part. 2. p. 50, 58.

OLEN, a Greek Poet, antienter than ‖ Orpheus, was a Native (A) of Xanthus a City in Lycia. He compos'd ſeveral Hymns, which were ſung in the Iſland of Delos at ‖ Pauſan. lib. 9. p. 802.

Id quoque luctando. rupi tamen ungue capillos;
Oraque ſunt digitis aſpera facta meis.
Nec pretium ſtupri gemmas aurumve poposci.
Turpiter ingenuum munera corpus emunt.
Ipſe, ratus dignam, medicas mihi tradidit artes;
Admiſitque meas ad ſua dona manus.
Quæcumque herba potens ad opem, radixque medendi
Utilis in toto naſcitur orbe, mea eſt.
Me miſeram, quod amor non eſt medicabilis herbis!

Ovid is not over-obſervant of Decorum and Probability. Such Confeſſions are ſeldom made to an Husband, nor was this the ready way to make Paris repent of his Inconſtancy. To be told that he was taken for a Cully, and that he amuſed himſelf with a falſe Opinion of having gathered the firſt Flower of the Nuptial-Bed, can be no very agreeable News: The ſcratching of the Spark's Face on one Hand, and the Secrets of Phyſick on the other, can not repair the Breach. What was Ovid's Fancy then? Had he added the Gift of (b) Prophecy to the Knowledge of Herbs, among the Rewards beſtow'd upon her by Apollo, he had not gilded the Pill enough. Clemens Alexandrinus knew (c) that this Nymph pretended to Propheſy. See a Conjecture upon his Words in the Margin.

(b) According to Apollodorus, l. 3. 'twas from Rhea that Oenone learn'd the Art of Divination.

(c) Ἔλεγος δὲ καὶ Λαοκόων, καὶ Οἰνώνη, καὶ Βρῆνος ἐν Ἰλίῳ. Jam Helenus, & Laocoon, & Oenone, & Brenus in Ilio. Clemens Alexandr. Strom. lib. 1. p. 334. Inſtead of καὶ Βρῆνος, Canterus would read Καὶ Κεβρῆνος. But the better reading would be ἡ Κεβρῆνος, which would ſignifie Oenone the Daughter of Cebren. See Canterus upon Lycophron v. 57.

(C) She foretold him he would be wounded.] Conon by confounding different Periods of Time, has ſunk the Probability of the Fact. He ſuppoſes (d), that Oenone did not make this Prediction, nor did ſtir from her Husband's Houſe, till after Paris had kill'd her Son Corythus. Now we muſt know that Corythus the Son of Paris and Oenone, was ſo great with Helena, that Paris grew violently jealous of him, and thereupon ſlew him: And 'tis not at all likely, that Oenone would continue with her Husband after Helena had taken poſſeſſion of the Houſe: So that Conon has unluckily intangled himſelf in a Chronology different from that of other Authors.

(d) Conon apud Photium num. 186. pag. 434, 436.

(D) She made ſo little Haſte.] The Meſſenger that went to give her notice that Paris had ordered himſelf to be carried to Mount Ida for a Cure, was bluntly ſent back with this jealous Anſwer, That he might go and have his Wound dreſs'd by Helena (e). But preſently after her tender Thoughts came about her, and ſhe was ſorry ſhe had given ſo harſh an Anſwer. Then ſhe reſolved to go and meet her Husband, with the neceſſary Remedies; but ſhe came too late. The Anſwer ſhe gave to the Meſſenger was faithfully reported to Paris; and thereupon (f) he was ſo Thunder-ſtruck that he expired immediately. When Oenone arrived, the firſt thing ſhe did was to kill the Meſſenger with the ſhrow of a Stone, for daring to tell her that ſhe was the Cauſe of her Husband's Death. Then ſhe tenderly embraced the Corps of her faithleſs Husband; and after much Lamentation ſtrangled her ſelf with her Girdle (g).

(e) Conon ibid.

(f) Parthen. in Eroticis. cap 4.

(g) Conon ubi ſupra.

(E) Is variouſly related.] We told you but now that ſhe ſtrangled her ſelf with her own Girdle. Apollodorus ſays (h) barely that ſhe hang'd herſelf. Parthenius ſays (i) only that ſhe kill'd her ſelf. Quintus Calaber aſſures us (k), that ſhe threw her ſelf into the Funeral Pile upon which her Husband's Corps was burnt. Lycophron ſays (l) ſhe threw her ſelf head-long from the top of a Tower. "(m) Dictys "Cretenſis relates, that Paris being dead, his Relati- "ons ordered his Corps to be carried to Oenone, be- "fore it was buried, but that Oenone was ſo affected "with the ſight of the Corps, that ſhe thereupon loſt "her Senſes, and Sorrow growing gradually upon "her, ſhe died of Grief, and was buried with Paris. "This Paſſage of Dictys makes me ſuſpect, that the "Latin Tranſlation of that Author, though very an- "cient, is not juſt, but corrupt in ſeveral places; "Tzetzes upon Lycophron ſays plainly, that, accord- "ing to the Opinion of Dictys, Oenone ſtrangled "her ſelf; and Cedrenus, who always follows Dictys "in what relates to the Wars of Troy, makes Oenone "dye the ſame way: From whence I conjecture, "that theſe two Authors had Dictys in Greek, and "that the Latin Verſion, which we have, does not "always agree with the Greek Text." This is ſo curious a Piece of Literature, that I could not but inſert it, verbatim, as we have it in Meziriac. In fine, Quintus Calaber ſuppoſes, that Oenone uſed her Husband with (n) the laſt degree of Inhumanity, when he lay (o) proſtrate at her Feet, and almoſt at the laſt Gaſp (p), imploring her Aſſiſtance, and asking a thouſand Pardons for his faithleſneſs; but that afterwards ſhe was ſo touch'd with his Death, that ſhe threw her ſelf upon the Funeral Pile, and was burnt alive with her Husband's Corps.

(h) Lib. 3. pag. 227.

(i) Ubi ſupra.

(k) Lib. 10. v. 467.

(l) In Caſſandra, v. 61.

(m) Meziriac upon the Epiſtles of Ovid. pag. 509.

(n) Quint. Calaber. lib. 10. v. 336. & ſeq.

(o) Ὃ δ' ἐπὶ οἱ λίτετο πίσυνος ἔμμεναι ἀνδρὸς πασσυδίῃ γυναικός. Ipſe vero ſtatim ad pedes uxoris ſe abjecit. Ib. v. 272.

(p) Καὶ ῥ' ὀλίγου ῥαίων πολὺν μῦθον ἔειπεν. Atque vix trahens animam hoc tandem ſermone illam affatur. Ibid. v. 283.

(A) A Native of Xanthus a City of Lycia.] Herodotus and Pauſanias inform us, that he was a Lycian;

(q) Meziriac, ubi ſupra. pag. 508. quoting the Scholiaſt upon Lycophron.

(r) Upon theſe Words of Lycophron, v. 58. Στοίλασα κῦρον ἢ χαλύγοφον χθονός. Miſſo juvene terræ proditore.

(ſ) Ubi ſupra.

(t) Hellanicus in Troicis, & Cephalon Gergithius apud Parthenium. c. 34.

(v) Nicander apud Parthenium, ibid.

(w) Upon the Suppoſition, that Corythus was Helena's Son; for if he was only her Son-in-Law, her Crime had been often preſidented.

at the Grand Religious Solemnities ‡, particularly to the ζ Honour of the Goddeſs Lucina, whom he call'd η the Mother of Cupid. He was the firſt θ that gave it out for a Certainty, that Achaia came from the Country of the Hyperboreans to the Iſland of Delos. Others ſay τ, he was one of the Hyperboreans that founded the Oracle of Delphos, and the firſt that perform'd there the Function of Apollo's Prieſt, I mean, that of giving Reſponſes to thoſe who conſulted the Oracle. Theſe he delivered in Hexameter Verſes. He is ſpoken of in a Paſſage of Pauſanias (B), which Romulus Amaſeus has not corrected. Here we muſt make (C) ſome Remarks upon Moreri's Supplement.

‡ Herodot. l. 4. cap. 35.
ζ Pauſan. lib. 1. pag. 16.
η Id. lib. 9. pag. 302.
θ Id. lib. 5. pag. 154.
τ Id. lib. 10. p. 320, 321.

OLYMPIAS, the Mother of Alexander the Great, gave Philip King of Macedonia, her Huſband, ſuch violent (A) Grounds of Jealouſy, that he divorc'd her. Nay, 'tis alledg'd ſhe own'd to him * that he was not the Father of Alexander, and that (B) ſhe embraced a Serpent when ſhe conceiv'd of that Son. Nor is ſhe the only Woman † that is ſaid to have received that ſort of Embraces. They are miſtaken who pretend that

* See the Remark A.
† See the Remark H.

Lycian; but they do not tell us of what City. The Name of the City you have in theſe two Verſes of Callimachus.

(a) Callimachus, hymno in Delum v. 304. pag. 132. Edit. Græv. 1697.

Οἱ (a) μὲν ὑπαὶ Ξάνθοιο νόμον Λυκίοιο γεγῶτα, Ὃν τοι ἀπὸ Ξάνθοιο Στοιχεύτῳ ἤγαγον Ὦλεν.
Namque ſenes Lycii recinunt hi carmina ſacra,
A Xantho quondam quæ vates vexerat Olen.

(B) In a Paſſage of Pauſanias, which Romulus Amaſeus has not corrected.] The Paſſage is this: (b) Λύκιος δὲ ὃς ἦν ἀρχαιότερος τὸν ἡλικίαν Δήλιος ὕμνοις καὶ ἄλλοις ποιήσας, καὶ ἐς Εἰλειθυίαν τε, ἐυλογόν τε αὐτὴν ἀναγκαῖον. At Lycius qui multo fuit ætate ſuperior patria Delius hymnis & in alios deos & in Lucinam ipſam conſcriptis Eulinon (quaſi dicas lanificam) apellat. Gregorius Gyraldus (c) conjectures, that we ſhould read ὠλὴν inſtead of Δήλιος, but 'tis not there that the Correction ſhould lie; it ſhould come immediately after Λύκιος δὲ, for inſtead of ὃς ἦν we muſt read ὠλὴν, and then inſtead of Δήλιος, Δηλίδης. This Conjecture came into my Head, before I met with the new Edition of Pauſanias, which I have ſince ſeen, and there found a Note of Kuhnius's that offers the ſame Explication of this Paſſage. Here we ſee one of the Cauſes that have produced a great many Chimerical Authors; for here's a very ancient Poet, one Lycius of Delos that owes his Being only to an Error of the Tranſcriber.

(c) Vrn Delion Olenæ legendum. Lilius Gregor. Gyraldus de Poetar. Hetor. dialogo 3 init. p. m. 118.

(C) Some Remarks upon Moreri's Supplement.] I. 'Tis a Fault to ſay barely, that Olen was of the City of Dyme in Achaia; for, though 'tis true, that Suidas calls him Δυμαῖος Dymæus, yet he adds that 'twould do better to make him a Native of Xanthus in Lycia, as Callimachus and Polybiſtor have declared him to be. II. The following Words are ſcarce exact. The Hymns of Olen were ſung in the Iſland of Delos during the Ceremonies obſerved for the Sick, by throwing upon 'em Duſt gather'd from the Sepulchre of the Goddeſs Ops or Cybele, whom the Greeks called Hecaerge. This ſeems to have been copied from a Book of Gyraldus's (d), where we are to'd, that the Hymns of Olen were ſung at Delos, while the Duſt of the Sepulchre of Ops, ſirnamed Hecaerge, was thrown on an innumerable Company of ſick Perſons that crowded near the Altar. For this he quotes Herodotus, and adds, that Pauſanias (e) wrote much to the ſame purpoſe: But aſſuredly Gyraldus has been impoſed upon by Laurentius Valla's faulty Verſion. The Greek Text of Herodotus (f) does not ſay this; he is a little intricate, and may be underſtood in a Senſe oppoſite to that of Laurentius Valla, as appears by another Tranſlation, that has been put in the Margin. Herodotus does not ſay, that Ops or Opis was ſir-nam'd Hecaerge; he do's not ſpeak of Ops the Mother of the Gods, but of a young Woman that came from the Country of the Hyperboreans to the Iſle of Delos, in Company with another called Arge. Theſe two young Women had undertook this Voyage to Delos with intent to offer to Lucina the proper Gifts (g) for obtaining a ſpeedy and happy Delivery in Child-birth. Pauſanias ſays almoſt nothing of all this; how then can it be ſaid, that he wrote much to the ſame purpoſe with Herodotus upon this Head? The Continuator of Moreri would perhaps be hard put to it, if he were requir'd to prove, that the Goddeſs Cybele was ſir-named Hecaerge; that is, one that poſſeſſes the Vertue of operating at a diſtance: But, if the Ceremony he ſpeaks of were true, ſhould we not find an Aſh-Day in Paganiſm as well as in Popery, and that with very ſingular Characters of Superſtition? All ſorts of ſick Perſons would have expected a Cure from the Virtue of the Aſhes taken from the Sepulchre of Ops; but ſtill they had been obliged to approach the Altar, and that do's not ſuit with the Epithet of Hecaerge. See Spanhemius's Learned Notes upon Callimachus (h), where you will find ſtrong Proofs that Hecaerge was not the Epithet of Cybele, or of that Opis that was one of the Hyperborean Girls that brought Offerings to Delos, but the Name of her Companion in the Voyage.

(d) Gyraldus ubi ſupra.

(e) Idem fere ſcribit Pauſanias. Id. ibid.

(f) Herodot. lib. 4. cap. 35. p. m. 236.

(g) Α'πὸ ϗ ὠνῆται. Pro partu maturando. Id. ib. pag. 235.

(A) Such violent Grounds of Jealouſy] Juſtin goes no farther (i) in the fifth Chap. of his 9th Book; but in another place he aſſures us, that it went as high as Conviction, and that the Divorce was grounded thereupon. (k) Namque mater ejus Olympias confeſſa viro ſuo Philippo fuerat, Alexandrum non ex eo ſe, ſed ex ſerpente ingentis magnitudinis concepiſſe. Denique Philippus ultimo prope vitæ ſuæ tempore, filium ſuum non eſſe palam prædicaverat. Qua ex cauſa Olympiadem, velut ſtupri compertam, repudio dimiſerat. Some brisk Coquets are ſtill mild and complaiſant to their Husbands; and that atones in ſome meaſure for the Sin: But Olympias was croſs (l) and peeviſh; ſo that 'twas hard upon Philip to bear at once both the ill Humour and Adulteries of his Wife.

(i) Cujus (Attali) ſororem nuper expulſa Alexandri matre Olympiade propter ſtupri ſuſpicionem, in matrimonium receperat. Juſtin. l. 9. cap. 5.
(k) Idem lib. 11. cap. 11.

(B) And that ſhe embraced a Serpent.] Beſides the Teſtimony of Juſtin, mention'd but now, we may bring in Plutarch, who ſays, that a great Serpent was found extended upon Olympias while ſhe ſlept; that the King ſeeing this through a ſmall Cranny in the Door (m) loſt the Eye that he put to the Hole; that from that time he found his Affection for Olympias to dwindle, and lay with her but very ſeldom, whether it was that he fear'd ſhe would bewitch him, or that he paid Regard to the Divinity that had thus embrac'd her, under the form of a Serpent. (n) Ὤφθη δέ ποτε καθεύδουσα, κοιμωμένης τῆς Ὀλυμπιάδος παρεκτεταμένος τῷ σώματι. Καὶ τοῦτο φιλίππου τὴν ὄψιν καὶ τὰς φιλοφροσύνας ἀμαυρώσαι λέγουσιν, ὡς μηδὲ φοιτᾶν ἔτι πολλάκις παρ' αὐτὴν ἀναπαυσόμενον· εἴτε δείσαντα πινὰς μαγείας αὐτῷ καὶ φάρμακα τὴν γυναῖκα, εἴτε τὴν ὁμιλίαν, ὡς κρείττονι συνόντα, ἀφοσιούμενον. Viſus eſt draco etiam ad dormientis Olympiadis corpus exporrectus: idque præcipue Philippi erga eam amorem & familiarem conſuetudinem ajunt extenuaſſe, ut raro cubitum ad illam commearet, quia vel timeret faſcinationes ejus & veneficia, vel conſuetudinem ejus, ut quæ conſueſceret cum majore, devitaret. We are likewiſe told, that Eratoſthenes wrote that Olympias diſcovered this fine Secret to none but Alexander, and did not truſt him with the Diſcovery till he was going upon his War-like Expedition. Approve your ſelf worthy, ſaid ſhe, of ſo high a Birth. Ἡ δὲ Ὀλυμπιὰς (ὡς Ἐρατοσθένης φησὶ) προεπεμψε τὸν Ἀλέξανδρον ὅτι τὴν γενεσίαν, καὶ φράσασα μόνῳ τὸ θεῖον τῶν τέκνων ἀπόρρητον, ἐκέλευεν ἄξια φρονεῖν τῆς γενέσεως. Olympias (ut Eratoſthenes eſt autor) quum euntem ad bellum proſequeretur Alexandrum, arcanum ortum ejus ſoli detexit, hortata ut pro natalibus gereret animos (o). Here take notice, that, according to Juſtin, the Converſation of the Serpent with Olympias was only Fancy. The Queen (p) dream'd that a great Serpent enjoy'd her that

(l) Ἡ δὲ Ὀλυμπιὰς χαλεπότης, δυσζήλου καὶ βαρυθύμου γυναικὸς. Olympiadis acerbitas ſuſpicioſæ mulieris, & triſtis. Plutarch in Alexandro, p. 669. A.
(m) Ἀποβαλὼν δὲ τὴν ὀφθαλμὸν αὐτὸν ἐπέσχεν, ἣν τῇ τοῦ θυρεοῦ ἀφεμένῳ σφενδόνῃ βαλὼν ἐπέθηκεν ὁ παῖς τῷ ὀφθαλμῷ διάκοπτον. Amiſiſſe vero eum alterum oculum, quem rimæ oſtii admovens Deum conſpexit ſerpentis figura cum uxore ſua concubantem. Plut. in Alex. initio, pag. m. 665.
(n) Id. ib.
(o) Id. ib.
(p) Qua nocte eum mater Olympias concepit, viſa per quietem eſt cum ingenti ſerpente volutari. (Others read voluptari.) Juſtin. l. 12. c. 16.

that Nectanebus (C), baniſhed from Egypt, and taking ſhelter in Macedonia, did debauch Olympias. She was ſo incens'd againſt her Huſband, when he married another Wife, that ſhe inſtigated Pauſanias to kill him. Nay, ſhe was deſirous the World ſhould know what part ſhe acted in the Commiſſion of that (D) Parricide. At firſt ſhe did not take it amiſs † that the World ſhould think that Jupiter begot Alexander upon her: But afterwards ſhe laugh'd at the Fancy; as appears from a Letter ſhe (E) wrote to Alexander, when ſhe hear'd that he openly call'd himſelf the Son of Jupiter, and † See the Remark A and B.

Night that ſhe conceiv'd Alexander. One of our beſt Criticks, commenting upon this Paſſage of Juſtin, obſerves, that there were Serpents or Snakes in Macedonia that grew ſo tame and familiar, that the Women put them round their Arms and Necks, like Bracelets and Necklaces, either for Diverſion, or to cool themſelves. To favour this, he alledges the Authority of Lucian. (q) Hoc autem non abs re fuerit meminiſſe, (nam ex nihilo, ut ajunt, nihil) reperiri in Macedonia ſerpentes, qui tam facile manſuefieri poſſint, ut ex iis olim & puellæ & matronæ ſibi armillas, ſibi monilia facerent, vel ut animulas ſuas oblectarent, vel ad corpuſculum figerandum. Hujus rei auctorem ciere poſſum Lucianum in Alexandro, ſive Pſeudomanti. Lucian ſpeaks neither of thoſe Bracelets nor Necklaces; but he ſays what's equally ſtrange. He affirms, that the Women of Pella entertain'd ſuch tame great Serpents, that they ſuckled them, and let them lye with the Children. He conjectures, that the vulgar Tradition about Olympias was grounded upon this Reaſon. (a) Ἐντεῦθεν λέγοντες δρέκοντας παμμεγέθεις, ἡμέρους πάνυ, καὶ πιθανοὺς, ὡς καὶ ὑπὸ γυναικῶν τρέφεσθαι, καὶ παιδίοις συγκαθεύδειν, καὶ παλαιοῖς ἀνέχεσθαι, καὶ θλιβομένοις μὴ ἀγανακτεῖν, καὶ γάλα πίνειν ἀπὸ θηλῆς κατὰ πυτὰ τοῖς βρέφεσι. πολλοὶ δὲ γίνονται τοιοῦτοι παρ' αὐτοῖς, ὅθεν καὶ τὴν τῆς Ὀλυμπιάδος μῦθον διαφοιτῆσαι πάλαι εἰκὸς, ὡπότε ἐκεῖσε τὸν Ἀλέξανδρον, δρέκοντί που πινὶ τούτῳ συγκαθεύδοντα αὐτῇ, σύριγγα ἀφ' ἑαυτῶν ἐν τῷ κόλπῳ, ὀλίγων ὀβολῶν. Ibi cùm immani magnitudine dracones conſpicerent, cicures ac manſuetos, adeo ut à mulieribus alerentur, & cum pueris cubarent, & ſe conculcari juſtinerent, neque ſe premi indignè ferrent, denique infantum more lac è papilla ſugerent (quales apud illos ſunt permulti) unde veriſimile eſt olim de Olympiade fabulam increbruiſſe, quando concumbente cum illa hujuſmodi puto quopiam dracone, Alexandrum conceperat, unum ex his ſerpentibus, qui eſſet pulcherrimus, paucis obolis emunt. According to Plutarch (b) the Women of that Country made uſe of thoſe Snakes in the Feſtival of Bacchus, which they affected to celebrate with all the appearances of the moſt furious Fanaticiſms. They made the Snakes creep upon the Thyrſus's they carried in their Hands, and the Crowns they had upon their Heads; meaning thereby to frighten the Men the more. He obſerves likewiſe, that Olympias affected more than all the reſt to be tranſported with Fury at this Anniverſary. (c) Ἡ δὲ Ὀλυμπιὰς μᾶλλον ἑτέρων ζηλώσασα τὰς θοίνας, καὶ τοῖς ἐνθουσιασμοῖς ἐξάγουσα βαρβαρικώτερον, ἔφεις μεγάλους χειροήθεις ἐφείλκετο τοῖς θιάσοις. Olympias autem, præ cæteris motum lymphaticum æmulans, & fanaticum peragens ritum horridiore ſpectaculo, ſerpentes manſuefactos trahebat thiaſis ingentes.

(q) Tanaquillus Faber in Juſtin. pag. 291. edit. Græviana, 1683.

(a) Lucianus in Pſeudomanti, p. 863. Tom. 1. edit. Salmurienſis 1619.

(b) Plutarch. ubi ſupra.

(c) Id. ib.

(d) Id. in Ageſilao, pag. 617.

(e) See the Article Tachus:

(f) We read of a certain Magician, called Nectanabus, who having made ſeveral Ships and Galleys of Wax, made his Enemies Ships ſink every time he drown'd his Wax Veſſels in a large Baſin of Water. Vigenereon the Statue of Æſculapius in Philoſtratus, fol. 157. Tom. 2. edit. in 4°.

(g) Freinſhemius Supplem. in Q. Curtium, l. 1. c. 1. n. 15.

(C) That Nectanebus .... did debauch Olympias.] We are inform'd by Plutarch (d), that Nectanebus or Nectanabus abandoning his Kinſman Tachus, who had given him the Command of his Army, cauſed himſelf to be proclaimed King of Egypt (e); and that Ageſilaus ſided with him. The Perſians defeated him and drove him out of Egypt. Some alledge, he fled to Æthiopia; others ſay he went to the Court of Macedonia, in hopes of a powerful Aſſiſtance from King Philip againſt the Perſians; but he was ſo ungrateful to that Prince for his kind Reception, that he left no Stone unturn'd to inveigle Olympias; and for that end had recourſe even to the Impoſtures of Magick, of which he was a great Maſter (f). By this means he gain'd the Queen, and begot Alexander upon her. They add, that Philip ſmelt ſomething of the Matter, and from that time continued jealous of her adulterous Embraces, and that this was the true Reaſon of the Divorce. But this is all fabulous. For Chronology makes it out that Alexander was ſix Years old when Nectanebus was outed of his Kingdom. This I have from the learned Freinſhemius, to whom all the Honour of the Diſcovery is due. Nec deſunt, ſays he (g), qui fabuloſum id quidem; non tamen adulterium matris falſo iactatum aſſerant. Quippe pulſum Ægypti regno Nectanebum, non, ut vulgo arbitrantur, in Æthiopias conceſſiſſe; ſed quum adverſus vim Perſicam in Philippo maxime præſidium ſperaret, in Macedoniam vectum, magicis præſtigiis inluſiſſe Olympiadi, torumque hoſpitis temeraviſſe. Suſpectam quidem exinde Philippo, neque aliam tam intimam divortii, quod inter eos ſequutum eſt, cauſſam, pro comperto poſtea fuiſſe..... (h) Ceterum Nectanebi fuga temporibus hiſce non congruit: ſexennis enim jam erat Alexander, quum ille ab Ocho victus, avitis opibus excideret.

(h) Id. ib. n. 19.

(D) Should know what part ſhe acted in the Commiſſion of that Parricide.] The Scandal of the Divorce and her Huſband's marrying again (i) made ſuch a warm Impreſſion upon her, that ſhe ſollicited the King of Epirus her Brother to declare War againſt Philip; and had compaſſed her end, if Philip had not prevented it by marrying his Daughter to that Monarch (k). She put Pauſanias upon the Aſſaſſination of her Huſband; ſhe took care to have Horſes in readineſs for that Aſſaſſin; and the very Night that ſhe return'd into Macedonia to aſſiſt at the Funeral of this Prince, ſhe cauſed a Crown to be put upon the Head of Pauſanias, who was upon the Croſs. Some Days after ſhe gave him a Funeral, and then built him a Tomb, and inſpired the People with the Religion of an Anniverſary Solemnity to the Honour of the Murderer. After that ſhe cauſed her Huſband's Daughter by Cleopatra to be kill'd on her Mother's Lap, and then had the Mother hang'd in her own Preſence (l). In fine, ſhe conſecrated to Apollo the Dagger with which Pauſanias had kill'd Philip, and chriſten'd the Dagger by the ſame Name that ſhe had in her Infancy. All theſe things ſhe did ſo publickly, that one would think her chief Fear was, that there would not be plain Evidence of her being the Author of 'em. See if this be not the Senſe of Juſtin. (m) His ſtimulis iram utrique (n) Pauſaniam, de impunitate ſtupri ſui querentem, ad tantum facinus impuliſſe creduntur. Olympias certe fugienti percuſſori equos quoque præparatos habuit. Ipſa deinde, audita regis nece, cum titulo officii ad exequias cucurriſſet, in cruce pendentis Pauſaniæ capiti, eadem nocte qua venit, coronam auream impoſuit: quod nemo alius audere, niſi hæc, ſuperſtite Philippi filio, potuiſſet. Paucos deinde poſt dies, refixum corpus interfectoris ſuper reliquias mariti cremavit, & tumulum ei eodem fecit in loco, parentarique eidem quotannis, incuſſa populo ſuperſtitione, curavit. Poſt hæc Cleopatram, à qua pulſa Philippi matrimonio fuerat, in gremio ejus prius filia interfecta, finire vitam ſuſpendio coegit, ſpectaculoque pendentis ultionem potita eſt, ad quam per parricidium feſtinaverat. Noviſſime gladium, quo rex percuſſus eſt, Apollini ſub nomine Myrtalis conſecravit: hoc enim ante Olympiadis parvulæ fuit. Quæ omnia ita palam facta ſunt, ut timuiſſe videatur, ne facinus ab ea commiſſum non probaretur.

(i) He married Cleopatra the Daughter of Attalus, according to Juſtin, l. 9. cap. 5. or Niece, according to Plutarch in Alexandro, and Diodorus Siculus, l. 16. c. 94.

(k) Taken from Juſtin, l. 9. c. 7.

(l) Juſtin's Words will bear this Senſe, but they may likewiſe be underſtood, as if Olympias had only ſeen Cleopatra hanging.

(m) Id. ib. p. m. 204, 205.

(n) i. e. Olympias and Alexander her Son.

(E) From a Letter ſhe wrote to Alexander.] In writing to his Mother he had taken upon him the Title of the Son of Jupiter Hammon; and the Anſwer ſhe ſent him was this, Pray, my Son, be quiet, do not accuſe me before Juno, ſhe'll do me ſome great Miſchief, if you own me for her Rival in your Letters. The Knowledge of this we owe entirely to Aulus Gellius; for we have not Varro's Book, out of which he copied it, nor the ſeveral other Writings in which 'twas mention'd. Aulus Gellius's Words are theſe. (o) In pleriſque monumentis rerum ab Alexandro geſtarum, & paulo antè in libro M. Varronis, qui inſcriptus eſt Oreſtes vel de inſania, Olympiadem Philippi uxorem feſtiviſſimè reſcripſiſſe legimus Alexandro filio. Nam quum is ad matrem ita ſcripſiſſet: Rex Alexander Jovis Hammonis filius Olympiadi matri ſalutem dicit. Olympias reſcripſit ad hanc ſententiam: Amabo, inquit, mi fili, quieſcas: neque deferas me neque criminere adverſum Junonem. Malum mihi prorſum illa magnum dabit, quum tu me litteris tuis pellicem illi eſſe confiteris. Freinſhemius is miſtaken when he affirms, that Olympias wrote to Alexander, that ſhe had not deſerved to be expoſed to Juno's Reſentment:

(o) Aulus Gellius, l. 13. cap. 4.

(p) Mu

and requir'd (F) Divine Honours. In Alexander's Abſence Antipater was almoſt always at variance with her; and indeed 'twas very difficult for a Woman of ſuch a jealous † and ſowr Temper to agree with the Governour of Macedonia: Which Poſt Alexander beſtowed upon Antipater, when he went upon the Expedition to conquer Aſia. After the Death of this Conqueror ſhe was obliged to retire into Epirus; from whence Polyperchon recalled her ſix Years after. Aridæus, and his Wife Eurydice, who then reign'd in Macedonia, oppoſed her Return: but their Efforts were in vain; for the Macedonians declared for her, and by her Orders made away both with the Huſband and the Wife. She put to Death Nicanor, Caſſander's Brother, and having ſingled out a hundred Macedonian Nobles that were Caſſander's Friends, caus'd them all to be maſſacred. This Piece of Cruelty quickly loſt her the Affection of her Subjects, and then every Body call'd to mind Antipater's laſt Words; and remember'd, as an Oracle, the Exhor-

† See the Remark A, at Letter I.

(p) Pricianſhem Supplem. l. 1. c. 1. n. 20. He cites Agel. 13. 4.

(q) Done by du Rier, and joyn'd to Vaugelas's Q. Curtius.

(r) i. e. thoſe which he applies directly to Olympias.

(f) Βτιφοι δέ φασιν, αὐτὴν ἀφοσιοῦσθαι τὸ λεγειν, Οὐ παυσῇ με διαβάλλων Ἀλέξανδρῳ πρὸς τὴν Ηραν. Alii hoc illam ajunt abdicaſſe ac dixiſſe, Non deſinet Alexander in crimen me apud Junonem vocare. Plutarch ubi ſupra.

(t) See Ælian var. hiſt. lib. 12. c. 64.

(a) Ælian. ibid. l. 13. c. 30.

(b) Clem. Alexandr. Admonit. ad gentes, pag. 61.

(c) Juſtin. lib. 11. c. 11. pag. m. 241, 242. See likewiſe Oroſius, l. 3. c. 16.

(d) In the Article Macedonia, at the Remark E.

(e) Lucian. Tom. 1. pag. m. 256.

(f) Ælian. var hiſt. lib. 2. c. 29.

(p) Miſſaque epiſtola petiviſſe, ne ſe nihil tale commentam odiis Junonis objectare pergeret. Moreri, who never went to the Spring-head, has, by truſting to the Tranſlation of Freinſhemius (q), given us a falſe Account of the Tenour of this Letter. I own indeed, that Olympias's Words carry with them an Air of Raillery; but when all is done, if we keep to the literal Senſe of the Words, we muſt hold for a poſitive Truth, that this Princeſs does not deny her former Converſation with Jupiter, and only deſires her Son would not boaſt of it; for fear June, who perhaps would otherwiſe never hear of it, or not trouble her ſelf about it, while no noiſe was made of it, ſhould call up all the Fury of her Jealouſy, upon ſeeing this her Husband's new Baſtard proclaim all over the Earth the Favours ſhewn to Olympias. Upon this Conſideration therefore, that the Literal Senſe of Aulus Gellius's Words imports no more, they ought not to be quoted in Italick, as if they contained a formal Declaration of Olympias's Innocence. The (r) Terms that Plutarch (f) makes uſe of, import only that ſhe would have her Son hold his Peace: For there's a great deal of difference between ſaying, I would not have an Accuſation be brought againſt me before Juno, and ſaying, I have done nothing to offend Juno. Ælian tells us one thing which ſhews, that one Day ſhe reflected with great Concern upon Alexander's Weakneſs in deſiring to paſs for a God. Hearing that he had died lately and was not yet (t) interr'd, ſhe cry'd out, Oh, my poor Son! you have uſed all your Efforts to have a place among the Gods, and now you have not the very Honour of a Sepulchre, which is common to all Mortals. Ἀλλὰ (a) σὺ μὲν ἐρανῷ μετασχεῖν βιάλομαι, καὶ τοῦτο σπεύδων, νῦν δὲ τοῖς κοινοῖς νέκυ, οὐδὲν πλέον ἀνθρώποις μετασχεῖν ἔχεις, γῆς τε ἄμοιρος. Tu vero quum inter cælites locari velueris, & id perficere ſummmo ſtudio conatus ſis, nunc neque illorum quidem, quorum omnibus mortalibus æquale & par jus eſt, particeps fieri potes, terræ ſepulturæque. This calls into my Memory a piece of Raillery of Theocritus the Sophiſt (b), who hearing of Alexander's Death ſaid to his Countrymen, Take good Heart, Gentlemen, you ſee the Gods dye ſooner than the Men do.

(F) The Son of Jupiter, and required Divine Honours.] He had ſeveral Views in this Uſurpation of Divine Honours, and among other things that of vindicating Olympias, who was charged with ill Conduct in the way of Chaſtity. For this I ſhall produce you a Witneſs, who at the ſame time will be Evidence of the Venality of the Pagan Oracles: For I am going to ſhew you, that Alexander bribed the Prieſts of Jupiter Hammon, to engage them to anſwer, as he would have 'em, with reference to the paternal Relation of Jupiter. (c) Igitur Alexander cupiens originem divinitatis acquirere, ſimul & matrem infamia liberare, per præmiſſos ſubornat antiſtites, quid ſibi reſponderi velit. Ingredientem templum ſtatim antiſtites ut Hammonis filium ſalutant. Ille lætus dei adoptione hoc ſe patre cenſeri jubet. Rogat deinde, an omnes interfectores parentis ſui ſit ultus; reſpondetur, patrem ejus nec poſſe interfici, nec mori; regis Philippi peractam plene ultionem eſſe. I have ſaid elſewhere (d) that 'twas a ſly Piece of Politicks, that moved Alexander to deſire to paſs for a God: He owns it to his Father in one of Lucian's (e) Dialogues. I have likewiſe obſerved, that he was more reſerved, touching that Pretenſion to the Greeks than to the Barbarians: But here I muſt add, that at laſt he threw off that Conduct, and would have had the Grecian Cities to paſs Decrees relating to his Divinity. The Reſolutions they took upon this Head were different: The Decree of Lacedæmon was conceiv'd in theſe Terms; Since Alexander has a mind to be a God, let him. (f) Ἄλλοι μὲν ἄλλα ἐψηφίσαντο. Λακεδαιμόνιοι δὲ ἐπεῖπαν, ἐπειδὴ Ἀλέξανδρος βέλεται θεὸς εἶναι, ἔστω θεός. Itaque aliis aliter ſtatuentibus, Lacedæmonii decretum ejuſmodi fecerunt: Quoniam Alexander Deus eſſe vult, eſto Deus. The Author I here cite, did not know all that the Athenians did; he only mentions their oppoſition to the Decree (g) propoſed to 'em by Demades, importing, that Alexander ſhould be from thenceforth the 13th of the great Gods. He was fined for moving ſuch a piece of Impiety. Ælian knew no more; but 'tis very probable Demades purſued his Motion further, and the Decree (h) paſs'd at laſt. He repreſented to the Athenians, that they ought to take care not to loſe the Earth, in pretending too ſollicitouſly to keep Heaven. Erafmus did not take up the right Senſe of this Orator. Quum Athienienſes, ſays he (i), vellent Alexandro divinos honores decernere, videte inquit (Demades) ne dum cælum cuſtoditis, terram amittatis. Alexander enim ambiebat monarchiam. Abſurdum autem erat eos ſic alium donare cælo, ut ipſi terra ſua pellerentur. Erafmus ſuppoſes that Demades oppoſed Alexander's Divine Honours, and makes him reaſon perplexedly. Here are two Faults. The Truth is, that Demades adviſed this Deification, and inſiſted upon this Argument, that 'twas to be feared Alexander would conquer Attica, to chaſtiſe thoſe who had refuſed him Heaven. See Diogenes Laertius, Book 6, pag. 345. There you'll find that the Athenians decreed to Alexander the Divinity of Bacchus. Ψηφισαμένων Ἀθηναίων Ἀλέξανδρον Διόνυσον, ἐμοὶ, ἔφη Σάραπιν ποίησατε. Athienienſibus Alexandrum Liberum Patrem decernentibus, & me, inquit (Diogenes) Serapin facite. In the Remark E of the Article of this Conqueror, I offer'd, that there's ſcarce any Probability, that he could be firmly perſuaded of his own pretended Divinity; for he own'd that two things put him chiefly in Mind of his being a Man; he lay with Women, and he ſlept; which two Infirmities he took to be incompatible with the Divinity. How could he then believe that Jupiter had begot him? A Wound gave him likewiſe to know that he was a Man, and from thence he took occaſion to rally a little upon the Flatterers that paid him Divine Honours. 'Tis true Blood, and not ſuch Humour as flows from the Immortal Nature of the Gods, ſaid he (k), ſhewing them what Matter run from his Wound. Some ſay 'twas not he, but Calliſthenes that ſpoke this Raillery. See, upon this whole Matter, Freinſhemius's Commentary upon the 7th Chap. of the 4th Book of Quintus Curtius. 'Tis not altogether improbable what Zonaras ſays, that this Prince finding himſelf at the point of Death, deſired to be thrown into the Euphrates, to make the World believe his Tranſlation to Heaven: For what Stratagems did not he uſe, to perſwade the World that he was God, and to eſtabliſh the Worſhip of his pretended Divinity? Jamque omnibus præparatis quod tam prava mente concepe-rat tunc eſſe maturum, quoniam modo cæleſtes honores uſurparet, cepit agitare. Jovis filium non dici tantum ſe, ſed etiam credi vol hat, tanquam perinde animis imperare poſſet ac linguis. Itaque more Perſarum Macedonas venerandos ipſum ſalutare proſternentes humi corpora (l), &c.

Here Naudé furniſhes me with Matter for a Criticiſm. Alexander, ſays he (m), gave out .... that when he came into the World, the Goddeſs Diana aſſiſted ſo aſſiduouſly at his Mother's Delivery, that ſhe forgot to accour the Temple ſhe had at Epheſus, which, in that

(g) Id. l. 5. c. 12. See likewiſe Athenæus lib. 6. p. 251.

(h) See Plutarch in vita Lycurgi Oratoris, pag. 842. Clem. Alexandr. Admonit. ad gentes, pag. 61. St. Chryſoſt. Homil. 26. in poſter. ad Corint. (where, by an overſight, he attributes to the Romans what he ſhould have ſaid of the Athenians, as Salmaſius obſerves, in Lamprid. Alexandr. Sever. cap. 63.) St. Cyril in Julian. l. 6.

(i) Erafm. Apophthegm l. 6. p. m. 499.

(k) Τοξυμαλὶς δὲ πληγεὶς εἰς τὸ σκέλος, ὡς πολλοὶ συνέβρεμον τῶν πολιτῶν εἰωθότων αὐτὸν θεὸν προσαγορεύειν, διαχυθείσης τοῦ προσώπου, Τοῦδε μέν, εἶπεν, αἷμα, ὦ ἑταῖροι, ὃ οὐκ ἰχὼρ, οἷος πέρ τε ῥέει μακάρεσσι θεοῖσιν. Jaculo cruſtus multis concurrentibus eorum qui ipſum ſæpenumero ſolebant Deum ſalutare, renidente vultu, hoc quidem, inquit, ſanguis eſt, ut videris, non ille Humor qui ſuperum manat de corpore divum. Plut. in Apophthegm. p. 180. D.

(l) Q. Curtius, lib. 8. c. 5.

(m) Naudé, Coups d' Etat ch. 2. p. m. 218.

Several

Exhortation he made upon his Death-bed (FΔ) never to ſuffer a Woman to mount the Throne. Olympias, miſtruſting the Affection of her People, went and ſhut her ſelf up in Pydna, as ſoon as ſhe heard of Caſſander's Arrival. There ſhe was beſieged, and obliged by Famine to capitulate. She was promiſed her Life, but Caſſander did not obſerve that Article of the Capitulation. He call'd a general Convention of the People, and put the Queſtion to 'em what he ſhould do with that Princeſs. Upon which ſome Perſons, ſuborn'd by him, and the near Relations of thoſe ſhe had put to Death, demanded that ſhe ſhould be brought to condign Puniſhment for her Cruelty. In purſuance of this Demand, ſhe was condemn'd to die *, and bore the Execution (G) with Courage and Marks of Modeſty. I never read, but in a Modern Author, that the Serpent, which lay with her, left upon her Body ſuch Spots as were never (H) defaced. 'Twas of the Mother of Auguſtus that this was ſaid.

OREGIUS

* Taken from Juſtin. lib. 14. cap. 5. & 6. See likewiſe Diodorus Siculus, l. 19. cap. 51.

Interval was intirely conſumed by an (n) accidental Fire..... Some Captives having acquainted him with a Remedy proper to be made uſe of againſt the Indians poyſon'd Arrows, he gave out, before he publiſh'd it, that God had revealed it to him in a Dream. But this inſatiable Deſire having carried him ſo far as to require Adoration, he was at laſt convinced, by the Remonſtrances of Callimachus, by the obſtinacy of the Lacedemonians, and the Wounds he received every Day in Engagements, that all his Power would never be ſufficient to eſtabliſh that new Apotheoſis; and that a greater Fortune is required for gaining a ſmall place in Heaven, than for vanquiſhing here below, and lording it over all the Earth. 'Tis not true that Alexander gave out that Diana, taken up in aſſiſting at Olympias's Delivery, ſuffered the Temple of Epheſus to be burnt. That was the Notion of an Hiſtorian (o) Plutarch plays upon: No Body ſays it came from Alexander. Did the Lacedemonians oppoſe his Deification? Did not they make a Decree (p) in his Favour? And though they gave it an unlucky Turn, we can't ſay they were an Obſtacle to his Deſign.

(n) 'Twas not Caſual; for a Raſcal confeſs'd he had ſet Fire to the Temple to make the World ſpeak of him.

(o) See the Article Fontarabia.

(p) See Ælian above, at Letter f.

(FΔ) The Exhortation Antipater made upon his Death-bed, never to ſuffer a Woman.] This Matter of Fact is preſerved to us by (q) Diodorus Siculus; and Lambinus has inſerted in one of his Books the whole Chapter in which that Ancient Hiſtorian diſplays all the Barbarities of Olympias, and queſtionleſs his only end in inſerring it, was to add the greater weight to the Concluſion. (r) Talibus & tam atrocibus, atque injuſtis facinoribus iram ſuam explens (Olympias) eò hoc efficit, ut Macedones ejus crudelitatem abominarentur. Omnes enim Antipatri verba memoriæ repetebant, qui tanquam oracula fundens, & vaticinans, Macedones moriens hortatus eſt, UT NE UNQUAM MULIEREM SINERENT REGNI CLAVUM TENERE. Hactenus Diodorus. Now ſee what he adds to juſtify this Remonſtrance of Antipater. Præclarè vero Antipater. Nam ſi mulieres omnes jure civili propter infirmitatem conſilii in tutorum ſunt poteſtate, neque ſuarum rerum gerendarum ſunt domina aut arbitræ, & quod mulier ſine tutore autore promiſerit, id ratum non eſt, neque debetur, quanto minus debet mulieri reipub. procuratio, & regni adminiſtrandi poteſtas permitti, aut committi? & ſi viri interdum, quorum maximè propria eſt fortitudo, quique ſapientiores & cordatiores ſolent eſſe natura, imperium adepti, tamen licentia corrumpuntur, ac depravantur: quid à mulieribus, quibus nihil natura finxit mollius, neque mobilius, neque infirmius, expectandum? There can't be a ſtronger Cenſure of thoſe People, who lodge the Sovereign Authority in the Hands of Women; and yet Lambinus publiſh'd his Book at Paris, by the King's Authority, and dedicated it to Charles XI. when Catherine de Medicis govern'd all. 'Tis no wonder ſuch Thoughts came into his Head in thoſe Days; for that Queen's ill Conduct was enough to infuſe them into thoſe very People, who were leaſt pre-poſſeſs'd with the Salick Law: But 'tis ſtrange indeed that he had the Courage to publiſh theſe his Thoughts, and that he did not ſuffer by ſo doing. They took no notice of his Reflection, and thence it comes that Francis Hotomanus (a) ask'd his Adverſaries why they made ſo much noiſe againſt his (b) Francogallia printed beyond the Alps, and took no notice of Lambinus, whoſe work had been printed at Paris it ſelf.

(q) Dionyſ. Lambin. in Cornel. Nepot. pag. 345. edit. of Paris, 1569.

(a) See Maragonis de Maragonibus adverſus Italogalliam ſive Antifrancogalliam Antonii Matharelli, pag. 245, 246.

(b) 'Tis a piece, in which he condemns the Regency of Women.

(G) Bore the Execution with Courage and Marks of Modeſty.] So true it is, that the moſt reprobate Souls do more readily renounce Virtue it ſelf, than the appearance of Virtue. Here we have a Woman divorced for her adulterous Amours, and otherwiſe loaded with the greateſt Grimes, who takes the utmoſt care to tuck up her Cloaths ſo as to cover what Modeſty refuſes to expoſe to view. (c) Inſuper exſpirans capillis os, veſte crura contexiſſe fertur, ne quid poſſet in corpore ejus indecorum videri. The like care is leſs wonderful in Polyxena, who was a young Girl and a very virtuous Perſon. Euripides has not fail'd to obſerve, that ſhe took the utmoſt care to have her Fall accompanied with Decency (d).

(e) Η' δὲ, ᾗ θνήσκω', ὅμως
Πολλὴν πρόνοιαν εἶχεν εὐσχήμως πεσεῖν,
Κρύπτουσ' ὅ, ἄρρητ' ἄμματ' ἀρσένων χερῶν.
Hæc vero etiam moriens, tamen
Magnam ſollicitudinem habuit decenter ut caderet,
Et occultaret, quæ occultare oculos virorum convenit.

Pliny the younger makes the ſame Remark upon the great Veſtal Virgin, that Domitian condemn'd to be buried alive. (f) Quinetiam quum in illud ſubterraneum cubiculum demitteretur, hæſiſſetque deſcendenti ſtola, vertit ſe, ac recollegit. Cumque ei carnifex manum daret, adverſata eſt, & reſiluit: fœdumque contactum quaſi planè à caſto puroque corpore noviſſima ſanctitate rejecit: omnibuſque numeris pudoris, πολλὴν πρόνοιαν εἶχεν εὐσχήμως πεσεῖν. I paſs over in Silence the Amazon Penthefilea; for the Poet obſerving that ſhe fell from her Horſe ſtretch'd out at full length, without making any Diſcovery, gives us ground to believe 'twas the Effect of Chance.

(g) Η' δ' ὅπλα μὲν κονίᾳ, ᾗ ὀλέθρῳ,
Εὐσχήμως ἐκπεσοῦσα κατ' ὄπισθ' ἔβη οἷ αἰδὼς
Η' χρυσῆ δόμοις ἐν πέπλοι δ' ὅπλ' ἦσαν μαστῆρ.
Quæ mox cum pulvere & morte commiſcetur,
Compoſitè cadens ad terram, nec pudor
Formoſum corpus dedecorat, ſed extenditur in latum ventrem.

But what ſhall we ſay of Cæſar, the unchaſteſt Man upon Earth, who yet uſed a precaution like that of Polyxena? Utque animadvertit undique ſe ſtrictis pugionibus peti, toga caput obvolvit: ſimul ſiniſtra manu ſinum ad ima crura deduxit quo honeſtius caderet, etiam inferiore corporis parte velata (h). We muſt needs own, not only that Lewdneſs has bounds in thoſe who harbour it; but likewiſe that there are ſome Perſons very diſſolute and irregular in their Actions, who in their Words and external Demeanour, are religious Obſervers of Decency (i). As for the Courage that Olympias ſhewed at her Exit, 'tis handſomly deſcribed in the following Words: (k) Sed Olympias ubi obſtinatos venire ad ſe armatos vidit, veſte regali, duabus ancillis innixa ultro obviam procedit. Quæ viſa, percuſſores attoniti fortuna majeſtatis prioris, & tot in ea memoriæ occurrentibus regum ſuorum nominibus, ſubſiterunt; donec à Caſſandro miſſi ſunt, qui eam confoderent, non refugientem gladium, nec vulnera, aut muliebriter vociferantem, ſed virorum more fortium, pro gloria veteris proſapiæ, morti ſuccumbentem, ut Alexandrum poſſes etiam in moriente matre cognoſcere. This ſhews, that thoſe who ſay Cruelty is a mark of Cowardice, and that nothing is ſo mean and cringing as a Barbarous and Criminal Soul when reduced to the laſt Extremity, may be confuted by great Examples.

(c) Juſtin. lib. 14. ſub finem.

(d) She had likewiſe the Courage to ſee the fatal Blow. See Drelincourt, p. 126. of Achilleus index, the 3d edition. You will there meet with an accurate and extenſive Learning upon Polyxena.

(e) Euripides in Hecuba verſ. 568. p. m. 35. See likewiſe Ovid's Metam. l. 13. where he ſays of Polyxena, Tunc quoque cura fuit partes velare tegendas cum caderet, caſtique decus ſervare pudoris.

(f) Plinius Epiſt. 11. lib. 4. pag. m. 240.

(g) Quintus Calaber in Supplem. Homeri, lib. 1. v. 619. p. m. 168.

(h) Sueton. in Cæſare, cap. 82.

(i) Compare the Article Naples, at Remark H.

(k) Juſtin lib. 14. c. 6. pag. m. 328, 329.

(H) Left upon her Body ſuch Spots as were never defaced.] The Modern Author I here ſpeak of is Savaron, whoſe Words I ſhall inſert after premiſing the Text of Sidonius Apollinaris, upon which he has commented.

Magnus

OREGIUS (AUGUSTIN) a great Philoſopher, was ordered by Cardinal * Barberini Legate of Bologna, to examine whether Ariſtotle taught the Mortality of the Soul. The Legate's Intention was, in caſe Ariſtotle had been found guilty of that Piece of Impiety, to procure the Pope's Interdict againſt Lectures upon that Philoſopher relating to this Head. But Oregius declared him innocent. See his Book † de immortalitate Animæ. He wrote a Book, de Angelis, and another de Operibus ſex dierum, which was printed at Rome in 1632.

ORICELLARIUS (BERNARD) a Florentin, related to the Houſe γ of Medicis, had his ſhare of the beſt Poſts η in his Native Country. He flouriſh'd towards the end of the XV. Century. By what you'll find quoted in the Remarks 'tis evident that his Works are written in a very good Style. He wrote the Expedition of Charles VIII. into Italy with great ‡ Partiality. I take him to be the ſame Perſon ↓ with Bernard OCRICULARIUS, of whom Eraſmus ſays one thing (A) that's worth knowing. Picrius

* He, who was ſince made Pope by the Name of Urban VIII.

† In Chap. 5. Conſult Fromondus Philoſ. Chriſt. de anima, pag. 761.

γ See the Remark B.

η Vir conſularis graviſſimus. Paciantius de Scriptor. Florent. pag. 32.

‡ Qua in Hiſtoria moderatio ſcriptori probo conveniens, & alienus a ſtudiis partium animus deſiderantur. Mabill. Muſæi Ital. Tom. 1. p. 169.

↓ Konig makes 'em two ſeveral Authors.

Magnus (l) Alexander, nec non Auguſtus, habentur
Concepti ſerpente Deo: Phœbumque, Jovemque
Diviſere ſibi: namque horum quæſiit unus
Cyniſia ſub Scyrte patrem maculis genitricis.
Alter Phœbigenam ſeſe gaudebat haberi,
Paonii jactans Epidauria ſigna draconis.

(l) Sidon. Apollinaris Carm. 2. v. 121.

Savaron's Remark upon the fourth of theſe ſix Verſes, is this. Hæc de Alexandro dicta ſunt, non de Auguſto, ut vir (m) doctus ſcribit, qui quidem Alexander quærebat patrem ſuum inſignitum ſerpentis maculis, quibus inſignita erat Olympias mater, qua cum Jupiter Hammon ſub ſpecie ſerpentis concubuerat, & ſerpentinas maculas inuſſerat ſui concubitus teſtes. Idem, de Accia Auguſti matre, Sueton. cap. 94. He is in the right to maintain that this Verſe relates to Alexander, and not to Auguſtus. But where did he read that Olympias bore upon her Body the Marks of the Animal, the form of which Jupiter aſſum'd? No Author mentions it; ſo that I take the Spots, ſpoken of by the Poet, to be the Blemiſhes of the Queen's Reputation. Doubtleſs, his Meaning is, that Alexander ſought for his Father in the Temple of Jupiter Hammon, with intent to wipe off thoſe Spots, that is, to ſcreen his Mother's Honour: The Words of Juſtin, quoted above (n), lead us to this Senſe. This Obſervation I had made before I conſulted Freinſhemius's Commentary, where I meet with the ſame Cenſure of Savaron's Notion. (o) Neſcio num ita potius accipiendus ſit Sidonius Carm. 2. 124. ubi dicit quæſiſſe Alexandrum Cynifia ſub Syrte patrem maculis genitricis, quam, ut explicat Vir doctiſſimus, de maculis à concubitu draconis, in matris corpore relictis; ut nimirum Sidonius velit, eum per infamiam matris, quam eo modo adulterii ream agebat, Hammonem ſibi patrem quæſiviſſe. Certe enim de maculis ejus generis ſerpentinis nihil recordor legiſſe, quod ad Olympiadem pertineat. If Atia, the Mother of Auguſtus, were our Subject, we muſt ſpeak otherwiſe; for we read in Suetonius, that the Spots ſhe had upon her Body after her believing that a Serpent had embraced her, hindered her all the reſt of her Life to go into a Bath: She durſt not appear with ſuch a checker'd Nudity. This Adventure is ſo ſtrange and aſtoniſhing, that, if 'twere certain, 'twould puzzle all our ſtrongeſt Heads. Give me leave to copy the Paſſage. (p) In Aſclepiadis Mendetis Θεολογουμένων libris lego, Atiam, cum ad ſolenne Apollinis ſacrum media nocte veniſſet, poſita in templo lectica, dum cæteræ matronæ dormirent, obdormiſſe, draconemque repente irrepſiſſe ad eam, paullo-que poſt egreſſum, illamque expergefactam quaſi à concubitu mariti purificaſſe ſe, & ſtatim in corpore ejus extitiſſe maculam, velut depicti draconis, nec potuiſſe unquam exigi, adeo ut mox publicis balneis perpetuo abſtinuerit. It ſuch Stories had been vented only once, and in a Philoſophical Age, we ſhould leſs dare to deride them: But when we conſider that they began to appear in Fabulous Times, and were revived in divers Ages, we do not ſcruple to affirm, they owe their Being to Poetical Fictions; and that ſeveral Copies of 'em have been drawn by Flatterers, in favour ſometimes of one, ſometimes of another. The Meſſenians (a) gave out, that Ariſtomenes was born of a God, metamorphoſed into a Serpent. The Sicyonians declared the ſame thing of Ariſtodamas. The Romans were willing their Scipio ſhould partake of the ſame advantage with Alexander; and after that there were Flatterers that gave Auguſtus the like Honour. This ſort of Birth appear'd ſo glorious, that the Emperour Galerius, the Son of a (b) Peaſant (c) boaſted of it, to render himſelf wonderful. Scipio was willing ſuch a Story ſhould be believed of his Mother; and I do not know whether the wiſer Romans did not contribute in ſome meaſure to foment this Opinion: For in the Circumſtances that Rome was reduced to by Annibal, 'twas convenient that thoſe popular Errors ſhould revive the Hopes of the People, and make 'em look upon Scipio, as a Man deſigned by the Gods for great things. Do but mind theſe admirable Words of Livy. (d) Fuit enim Scipio, non veris tantum virtutibus mirabilis, ſed arte quoque quadam ab juventa in oſtentationem earum compoſitus: pleraque apud multitudinem aut per nocturnas viſa ſpecies, aut velut divinitus mente monita, agens: ſive & ipſe capti quadam ſuperſtitione animi, ſive ut imperia conſiliaque velut ſorte oraculi miſſa, ſine cunctatione aſſequeretur. Ad hoc jam inde ab initio præparans animos, ex quo togam virilem ſumpſit, nullo die prius ullam publicam privatamque rem egit, quam in Capitolium iret, ingreſſuſque ædem conſideret: & plerumque tempus ſolus in ſecreto ibi tereret. Hic mos, qui per omnem vitam ſervabatur, ſeu conſulto, ſeu temere, vulgatæ opinioni fidem apud quoſdam fecit, ſtirpis eum divinæ virum eſſe; retulitque famam, in Alexandro Magno prius vulgatam, & vanitate & fabula parem, anguis immanis concubitu conceptum, & in cubiculo matris ejus perſæpe viſam prodigii ejus ſpeciem, intervenuque hominum evolutam repente, atque e oculis elapſam. His miraculis numquam ab ipſo eluſa fides eſt: quin potius aucta arte quadam, nec abnuendi tale quicquam, nec palam affirmandi. Multa alia ejuſdem generis, alia vera, alia aſſimulata, admirationis humanæ in eo juvene exceſſerant modum: quibus freta tunc civitas, ætati haudquaquam maturæ tantam molem rerum tantumque imperium permiſit. There are great Families in Europe, that pretend to be ſprung from the Commerce of a Woman with ſome Spirit. The Marſhal de Baſſompierre ſays ſo of the Head of his Race. See his Memoirs and Le Comte de Gabalis. See likewiſe the Article of Plato.

(l) Sidon. Apollinaris Carm. 2. v. 121.

(m) i. e. Caſaubon in Sueton. Auguſto c. 94.

(n) In the Remark F. letter c.

(o) Freinſhemius in Q. Curtium, lib. 4. c. 7. n. 25.

(p) Sueton. in Auguſto, cap. 94.

(a) Velandæ ignominiæ repetitum ex antiquis fabulis de dracone commentum: idem enim olim de Ariſtomene Meſſenios, de Ariſtodama Sicyonios jactaviſſe. Freinſhem. Supplem. in Quint. Curtium, lib. 1. c. 1. n. 17.

(b) Aurel. Victor. in Epitome, p. m. 222.

(c) Is inſolenter affirmare auſus eſt matrem more Olympiadis Alexandri Magni creatricis compreſſam draconem ſemet concepiſſe. Id. ibid.

(A) Eraſmus ſays one thing that's worth knowing.] He could never engage him to ſpeak Latin, not but that Oricularius underſtood it, but becauſe he had ſtudied the Delicacy and Beauty of it, and was afraid of ſlipping into Barbariſms, if he ventured to ſpeak it ex tempore. This he takes occaſion to tell us from an Apophthegm of Pollio. That Orator own'd that, by pleading well, he had acquir'd the Facility of Pleading, and that by pleading often he had rendered himſelf the leſs capable of pleading well. Now, the ſame thing happens to thoſe who ſpeak Latin often; they acquire the Facility of Speaking, and loſe the Habit of ſpeaking exactly and politely. (e) Pollio dicebat, Commode agendo factum eſt, ut ſæpe agerem: ſed ſæpe agendo factum eſt ut minus commode, quia ſcilicet aſſiduitate nimia facilitas magis quam facultas, nec fiducia ſed temeritas paratur. Quod accurate factum velimus, raro faciendum eſt. Hac ratione dici videntur Itali quidam eruditi, qui licet pulchre calleant Latine, tamen vix unquam adduci poſſunt ut in familiari congreſſu Latine loquantur. At ſi quando compellit neceſſitas, dicunt exacte, quaſique de ſcripto. Novi Venetia Bernardum Oricularium civem Florentinum, cujus hiſtorias ſi legiſſes, diviſſes alterum (f) Salluſtium, aut certe Salluſtii temporibus ſcriptas. Nunquam tamen ab homine impetrare licuit, ut mecum Latine loqueretur: ſubinde interpellabam, ſurdo loqueris vir præclare, vulgaris linguæ veſtratis tam ſum ignarus quam Indicæ. Verbum Latinum nunquam quivi ab eo extundere. Thus Precaution of the Italians continued a long time; for we learn from Scoppius that one could not ſcrew three (e) Eraſm. Apophth. lib. 8. pag. 634. edit. 1556.

(f) Here is what Poccianti ſays of Bernardus Oricellarius, p. 33. de Scriptor. Florent. Dictavit quinetiam Florentinas hiſtorias, quas adeo phraſi extulit eloquentiſſima, quod (teſte Michaele Urbinate) ipſum Salluſtium ſuperaſſe videatur ‡ Thuan. lib. 92. pag. 230.

* Especially in the Dutch Edition.

† See the 247 pag. of an Historical Account of the famous Men of the Academy of Florence printed at Florence in 4°. in the Year 1700, and composed by Jacobo Rilli.

Pierius Valerianus (B) mentions our Bernard, and so does Petrus (C) Crinitus. John della Casa had a Sister that was married to one Oricellarius; and her Sons took care of their Uncle's Funeral and Manuscripts. This I only take notice of to have the opportunity of correcting an Error that relates (D) to Naogeorgus.

Thuanus mentions one Horatius ORICELLARIUS, a Florentin, who amass'd vast Riches in managing the Excise of France; and perceiving he became odious by reason of his great Profit, return'd to his own Country. The Great Duke sent him as Deputy for his Marriage with one of the Daughters of the Duke of Lorrain in 1588 ‡. There was at the same time one Charles ORICELLARIUS, a Member of the Academy of Florence, and Canon of the Metropolitan Church, very much esteemed by Peter Victorius †, who gives him large Encomiums in the Preface to his Commentary on the 3d Book of Aristotle's Morals. Note, That the usual Name of that Family is Rucellai. I shall prove it not so much to clear a doubtful Case, for this is not so, as to have an (E) Opportunity of mentioning some Persons of that Name.

ORIGEN,

WHY some learned Men decline the speaking of Latin.

or four Latin Words out of Paulus Manutius without a great deal of trouble; by which means it came to pass that the Germans, who went to see him, valued their own Learning more than his. They talk'd Latin more readily than he, and from thence concluded that he was not equal to them. Father Maffeus durst not enter into Conversation with Scioppius, because he was obliged to answer him in Latin. The Unwillingness of these Gentlemen did not proceed from a Difficulty of explaining themselves, but from the fear of accustoming themselves to Barbarisms, which are almost unavoidable to those who speak Latin in Conversation. I assure my self the Reader will be pleas'd to have Scioppius's Words inserted here after that Passage of Erasmus, since the Subject is the same. (g) Nihil non faciunt (Itali) ut evitent omnia, unde aliquid infuscandæ & contaminandæ orationis periculi ostenditur. Latine igitur nunquam loquuntur, quod fieri vix posse persuasum habeant, quin quotidianus ejus linguæ usus, ad instar torrentis lutulenti fluat, & cujusquemodi verborum sordes secum rapiat, quæ postea quodam jam hospitii jure, sic se scribentibus ingerant, ut etiam diligentissimos fallant, & haud dubie pro Latinis habeantur. Hoc eorum consilium cum haud intelligant Transalpini, id eorum inscitiæ perperam adsignant. Sic recte Paulo Manutio usu venit, ut quoniam vix tria verba Latina in familiari sermone proferre poterat, eum Germani complures, qui loquentem audituri ad eum venerant, vehementer præ se contemnerent. Huic tamen nemo, qui sanus sit, ad puritatis & elegantiæ latinæ summam quicquid defuisse dixerit .... (h) Mihi quoque Petrus Maffeus Jesuita nomini atque famæ parum respondere visus est, cum ad eum Romæ undeviginti abhinc annis salutatum venissem. Neque enim inducere animum poterat, ut Latine mihi respondendi aleam subiret. Postea vero lecto, relectaque ejus historia, quam de rebus per Lusitanos in India gestis condidit, consilium hominis sibi parum fidentis, laudemque nomini suo metuentis intelligere mihi visus sum, quod etiam facere non potui, quin prudentissimum judicarem. I believe I may justly say, that Thuanus observed the same Conduct with these Italian Purists; for in a modern Author I meet with these Words. (i) The Jesuit Maffeus .... said the Breviary in Greek, for fear the Solecisms and the low and simple way of speaking, as Origen calls it (1), in which the Scriptures are delivered, should alter the Elegancy and Beauty of Style that we admire in his Writings: And for the same Reason, Thuanus, who spoke Latin with the Fluency and Majesty of Livy, never answered the Harangues and Compliments made to him in that Language, but by an Interpreter.

(g) Scioppius in judicio de stilo historico, p. m. 57.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 58.

(i) Giac, Reponse à la Defense des Ouvres de Voiture, sect. 18. p. 120.

(1) Περὶ σολοικισμῶν καὶ εὐτελοῦς φράσεως τῆς γραφῆς.

(k) Hence as Governour of the Castle of St. Angelo under Clement VII. Pier. Valerian. de literator. infelicitate lib. 2. p. m. 74.

(l) Id. ib. pag. 73.

(m) Id. ib. pag. 74.

(B) Pierius Valerianus mentions.] In speaking of the deceitful Hopes of John Oricellarius the Son of Bernard. He aspired to a Cardinal's Cap, under Leo X. and yet more under Clement VII. But after divers Delays, which fourr'd him, but did not tire out his Patience, Death came and mow'd down his Fortune (k) both present and to come. (l) Eodem in albo reponendus Johannes Oricellarius summæ vir integritatis, quique literarum studia vel à teneris unguiculis sectari cæperat, & apud Bernardum patrem eruditissimum virum, & apud Mediceos hujusmodi studiis in ea domo florentibus educatus fuerat. Erat is Leoni Decimo Pont. Max. amitinus frater, neque ullus erat, qui tum morum, tum literaturæ, nobilitatis, & consanguinitatis gratia non eum speraret ad Cardinalatus apicem in horas evehendum. Sed fortuna illi quosdam opposuerat .... (m) Adridere mox Joanni visa fors melior .... Hic igitur Oricellarius, dum se totum litterarum studiis velituit, & fortunæ demum fallacias declinasse haud temerè sibi persuadet, dumque Clemens de more quodam suo cunctator ordinandi hominis diem de die ducit. Ille in rapidissimam illapsus febrem magnæ doctorum hominum spei præreptus est.

(C) And so does Petrus Crinitus.] Poccianti (n) having said that the Letters of Marsilius Ficinus, and those of Petrus Crinitus, attest the Learning and Wit of Bernard Oricellarius, adds; Posteritati transmisit (teste eodem Crinito) in primis libros quos de urbe Roma intitularverat, in quibus admodum elaboravit in illustrandis atque observandis antiquorum monumentis.

(n) Pocciant. ubi supra, pag. 32.

(D) An Error that relates to Naogeorgus.] By the Inscription (a) upon the Tomb of John della Casa, it appears that Horatius ORICELLARIUS took care to rear that Monument for his Uncle by the Mother's side. Horatius Oricellarius avunculo optime merito P. A German Author observes, that the Latin Verses that were made by John della Casa, against those who accused him of praising Sodomy, are not to be met with in the Collection of his Works, entituled, Joannis Casæ Latina monumenta. He believes (b), that Alexander Strozza, Inquisitor of the Faith, was the cause of leaving them out; and repeats the Licence for Printing, granted by that Inquisitor June 7. 1564, and says, that Hannibal Oricellarius was the Collector of these Monuments of John della Casa. He gives us the suppress'd Verses; and fancies (c) the Author made 'em, in answer to a Satyr that Naogeorgus had added to the second Edition of his Regnum Papisticum. But he's mistaken; for John della Casa made that Poem, only with intent to take from the Germans the bad Impressions that Vergerio had given them of him, in charging him with an Elogium upon Sodomy. I shall here subjoyn a Passage that proves manifestly, that he does not complain of a Satyr publish'd by a German, but of the Discourse of a Fugitive.

Quare habere transfugæ
De me fidem nolite perditissimo:
Sed enecate cum indies magis fiti,
Pedoribusque & esuritionibus:
Quod belle adhuc feciſſe vos existimo,
Virtute natio & fide atque industria
Et literis clara, ingeniique gloria (d).

Paul Vergerio is the Fugitive he speaks of. See at the end of the Anti-Baillet the Discourse in Prose that John della Casa made against him.

(a) Imperialis in Musæo histor. pag. 28. Ghilini Theatr. parte 1. pag. 79.

(b) Daniel Francus Disquisit. Academ. de Papistarum indicibus Librorum prohibitorum, pag. 111.

(c) Scripserat in istum Casæ juvenilem, ut ipse quidem excusat, librum Thomas Naogeorgus, satyram regno papistico secundæ editionis quæ Basileæ 1559. prodiit, adjectam. In hunc ergo Casæ sequenti quod subjiciemus carmine insurrexit. Id. ibid. pag. 109.

(d) These Verses are the Conclusion of the Poem repeated by Daniel Francus. 'Tis to be met with in Tom. 1. Delitiarum poetarum Italorum, pag. 702.

(E) The usual Name of that Family is Rucellai. I shall prove .... to have an opportunity of mentioning some Persons of that Name.] Mr. Rilli in his History of the Academists of Florence, calls the same Learned Man Carlo Rucellai, whom Peter Victorius names Carolus Oricellarius. You have seen in the fore-going Remark one Horatius Oricellarius, and one Annibal Oricellarius, who were the Sons of a Sister of John della Casa. They are called Rucellai in Cardinal D'Ossat's Letters. " (b) The second thing wherewith .... " Cardinal Aldobrandin charged us, as from the " Pope, was, that the King would be pleased to let " the Bishop of Carcassone enjoy the Fruits of the " said Bishoprick, and of an (c) Abbey which he has " in Champagne: Adding, That his Holiness acknow- " ledged the said Bishop, and his Brother Horatio Ru- " cellai for his Friends [illegible] having been always " Friends to his House [illegible] well affected to " France." Mr. Amelot de la Houssaie, Commenting on this, tells us, 1. That this Bishop of Carcassone was

(b) The 34 Letter of D'Ossat, pag. 176. of the 1st Tom. Paris Edition, 1698. This Letter is dated the 25 Octob. 1595.

(c) 'Tis that of Jard near Melun. Amelot de la Houssaie ubi infra.

ORIGEN, one of the moſt copious Writers, and one of the fineſt Genius's that flouriſh'd in the Primitive Church, liv'd in the third Century. He is diſcours'd of ſo largely in Moreri's Dictionary, and ſo many Authors * are there pointed to which are eaſy to be had, and give the whole Hiſtory of Origen, that it behoves me to be but ſhort upon this Article. I confine my ſelf to theſe four things. 1. I point to two † French Authors, that give us full information of the Actions and Opinions of Origen. In the 2d. place, I ſay that Dallæus's Remark (A) upon Mr. Cottibi's Quotation was (d) Annibal Rucellai, a Gentleman of Florence heretofore Governour of Rome, and known to the French Court by the Negotiations in which he had been employed by the Popes, Paul IV. and Pius V. That in the Year 1567, he was ſent by Charles IX. to Venice to demand of the Senate to borrow ſome Money; but he could not get any by reaſon of the Turkiſh War with which the Republick was then threatn'd. 2. That Horatio Rucellai was chief Steward to the Grand Duke of Tuſcany. 3. That the Aldobrandins and the Rucellai were always of that Party which was called in Florence, the Libertins; that is to ſay, good Republicans and Anti-Mediceans; who would preſerve the Liberty of their Country. From hence proceeded the great Affection, which Clement VIII. had for theſe two Brethren, whoſe Father as well as his own had ſuffered very much under the Pontificate of Leo X. and Clement VII. by whom the Sovereignty was put into the Houſe of the Medicis. This Biſhop of Carcaſſone dyed the 28th (f) of January 1601. Horatio Rucellai his Brother (g) one of the ableſt Men in the World, ſent immediately a (h) Courrier to the French Court. (i) Catel takes notice that Annibal d' Orcellai was Biſhop of Carcaſſone in the Year 1569. The Abbot Rucellai, who was ſo much ſpoken of in France, under the Reign of Lewis XIII. was without doubt the Son of this Horatio; for John (k) della Caſa was his great Uncle, and (q) he was born of a Father, who enriched himſelf (r) by the Correſpondence he had with Zamet, Bandini, Cenami, and other Italians, who then traded in France. You'll find in (ſ) Vigneul de Marville, what Mr. de Baſſompierre, and the Author of the Duke of Epernon's Life have ſaid that is curious concerning this Abbot. Here is a Paſſage that concerns another of that Family. "(t) We are promiſed from Florence a "Work, in which the Author, who is named Ru- "cellai, has included all that the Antients have writ "on that Science, and has collected ſix and thirty "Syſtems of Natural Philoſophy, all different from "each other. As this Work which he writ in Ital- "ian, containing twelve Volumes, could not appear "before his Death; there is reaſon to fear that it will "not appear too ſoon, after the Loſs which Learning "has had by the Death of Cardinal de Medicis, who "alone was capable of advancing the Impreſſion." The Book from whence I take theſe Words was printed in 1676. I don't doubt but that they mean the ſame Horatio Rucellai, of whom Mr. de Creſcimbeni ſpeaks thus. (v) Il Sonetto moderno lo torremo dal ſecolo del ſecento ora corrente, e da uno de' più illuſtri Letterati, ch'egli abbia annoverato, cioè dalle Rime ſcritte a mano appreſſo di me del leggiadro Poeta, e profondo Filoſofo Orazio Rucellai Florentino Cavaliere, e Priore di ſua Patria, il quale à fiorito a' noſtri tempi, ed à laſciato all'eruditiſſimo Signor Prior Luigi ſuo figlivolo un'opera nobiliſſima di Dialoghi filoſofici, la quale ſe un giorno vedrà la luce, conoſceranno i Poſteri quanto per ſi chiaro intelletto queſto ſecolo ſia degno d'invidia. The ſame Author tells us, that (w) Giovanni Rucellai compoſed at Rome in 1524, a Poem, entituled, le Api, which was printed in the Year 1539, and afterwards at Florence by Philip Giunti in 1590, with Notes by Robert Titius, and the Coltivazione of Lewis Alamanni. He does not ſpeak of the Paris Edition in 1546 by Robert Stephens. It is to be found in the Library of (x) Thuanus. This John Rucellai was a Florentine (y), and we have no reaſon to doubt that he was of the Family of the Oricellarius's.

(A) Dallæus's Remark upon.... St. Origen.] Mr. Cottibi Miniſter of Poitiers, having changed his Religion in 1660, wrote a Letter to his Conſiſtory, containing ſome Reaſons for his Change. Thereupon Dallæus was deſired to anſwer it, which he did with great Accuracy. His Anſwer was printed in 1660, with the Letter under this Title, Lettre eſcrite à M. le Coy Sieur de la Ta'onniere ſur le changement de relligion de Monſieur Cottiby. Among other things he obſerved, that the new Convert, who had pretended to ſpeak of the Fathers, and to cry up the Primitive Church, knew but little of them This he convicts him of by divers Proofs; the ſecond of which is taken from the Epithet of Saint that he had given to Origen (e) This Language betrays him, and ſhews that he is a Stranger both in the Republick of the Antiquaries, who do not ſpeak in that manner of a Man condemn'd by an Oecumenical Council; and above all in the Archives of the Popes, in which poor Origen was ſo far from obtaining the Title of Saint; that from the Year 494 he was there ſtiled Schiſmatick; and all his Works, excepting a few, were condemn'd by Gelaſius (1) the firſt. 'Tis ſcarce 200 Years ſince Johannes Picus Mirandulanus, having publiſh'd at Rome among his nine hundred Propoſitions, that 'tis more reaſonable to believe Origen's Salvation than his Damnation, was thereupon taken up by the Doctors of Divinity, who affirm'd, that this Concluſion is rath and blame-worthy, that it ſavours of Hereſy, and is contrary to the Determination of the Univerſal Church; as we have it from himſelf in his Apology (2). What would not they have done, if he had claſſ'd Origen among the Saints, as Mr. Cottibi has done? They who could not ſuffer him to doubt of his Damnation, or to think that his Salvation was more probable than his Damnation? This is what we call a victorious Criticiſm; and though we did not know otherwiſe that the Miniſter of Poitiers knew nothing of the Doctrine of the Fathers, but what he had got by reading ſome Books of Controverſy; This very Remark of Dallæus would convince us of it. To continue the Hiſtory of this Cenſure, we learn from hence that an Author catch'd in a Fault, and manifeſtly convicted of being miſtaken, can take no better Courſe than frankly to own it, or at leaſt to ſay nothing; for the Efforts he then makes to juſtify himſelf, are almoſt always down-right Extravagancies. Mr. Cottibi (f) replied, that perhaps the Title of Saint was not in the Original of his Letter, or that with a Stroke of his Pen he might let it paſs in the Croud, Origen being placed among many other ancient Fathers, to whom the Epithet of Saint is really due. Here are two Evaſions which were invincibly refuted. Dallæus maintain'd, that the Words, Saint Origen, ſtood in the Author's Original Manuſcript, and proved that they cou'd not ſlip in by Over ſight. Who'll believe, ſays Dallæus (g), that he did not draw out fair and reviſe oftner than once a Letter written to a Conſiſtory, the Religion and Miniſtry of which he had abanaon'd? A Letter in which he endeavour'd to perſuade them to follow his Example; which he knew affected them both with Grief and Indignation? A Letter, which, by Conſequence, he could not doubt would be narrowly examin'd by Perſons that were provoked and angry with him? Certainly, he either has not common Senſe, or he has carefully poliſh'd and trimm'd this Letter, and reviſed the Copy ſeveral times before he ſent it, that nothing might paſs, to afford diſtaſte to his Friends, or Matter of Deriſion to his Enemies. And yet, after all this, Saint Origen ſtands in the Letter, ſuch as he ſent, and ſuch as we ſaw. Aſſuredly the Author was not apprized that Saint-ſhip was not Origen's lawful Quality. Had he known that, he would have daſh'd it out of his Letter: And if he was unacquainted with a Secret, that's ſo common among thoſe who frequent the Country of Antiquity, I can't ſee how I can truſt the Promiſes he made me, &c. The Sequel of Mr. Cottibi's Apology is yet worſe. for he falls into the common Place of the Hatred that Miniſters bear to the Saints, and utters a hundred things that are not to the purpoſe, as appears from the following Paſſage. "(h) But, as the Miniſters "ſeem to be hired to make War upon the Saints, ſo "you thought it your Duty to attack this one, tho' he "had only the out ſide and appearance of Sainſhip; "for to appear in that Habit, and bear that Name is "enough to expoſe one to your Blows. If you "deny this Glorious Quality to thoſe who have high-"ly merited it, and whoſe Praiſes are ſung by the "Church every Day, 'tis no wonder you could not

(d) Amelot de la Houſſaie's Notes upon this Paſſage of Cardinal D Oſſat.
(f) D' Oſſat's Letter 257, pag. 299. Tom. 2.
(g) Id. Let. 267. pag 341.
(h) Id. Let. 257.
(i) Catel Memoirs of the Hiſtory of Languedoc, pag. 1009.
(k) See Vigneul Marville in the firſt Tom. of his Miſcellanies, pag. 173. of the firſt Edition at Roan.
(q) Vigneul Marville, pag. 271. of the 2d Tom. Dutch Edition.
(r) He got 1700000 Livres by the Gabels of France. Scaligerana at the Word Rucellai.
(ſ) Tom. 1 and 2. as above.
(t) Rapin's Reflections upon Phyſicks, N. 7. pag. 418. Dutch Edition.
(v) Giovanne Mario de' Creſcimbeni l'iſtoria della volgar poeſia pag. 35. Edit. of Rome, 1698, 4°.
(w) Id. ib. pag. 327.
(x) At pag. 339. of the 2d part of the Catalogue.
(y) Creſcembeni, ubi ſupra, pag. 272.

* Eſpecially in the Dutch Ed.
† La Motte, The Lives of Tertullian, and of Origen, printed at Paris in 1675 in 8vo. Du Pin Bibliotheq. des Auteurs Eccleſ. Tom. 1. pag. 121, & ſeq. the Dutch Edit. 1690. in 4°. The Dutch Edit. of Moreri do's not cite theſe two Authors.
(e) Daille Lettre a Mr. le Coq. pag. 70, 71.
(1) Conc. Rom. Gelaſ. Tom. 3. Concil. pag. 662. Col. 2. B. C.
(2) Joan. Pic. Apol. c. 7. pag. 199.
(f) Cottibi's Reply to Dallæus pag. 221, 222.
(g) Daillé's Reply to Adam and Cottibi. part. 3. chap. 9. pag. 190.
(h) Cottibi, ubi ſupra, pag. 222. & ſeq.

Quotation of St. Origen, was attended with Conſequences that deſerve our regard. 3. I obſerve,

" bear it in a Man that never had it from " the Church. So that I am not ſurprized at " your Charge againſt me; and I find, in effect, 'tis " highly your Intereſt to oppoſe the Augmentation " of the number of Saints: You very well foreſee, " that the more Saints there are in Heaven, the more " Enemies will you, and the more Interceſſors will " the Church have. I would only have thoſe who " make St. Paul ſay (3), The Children of the Faith- " ful are Saints from their Mother's Womb, not to re- " fuſe this Elogium to him who was the Son of a Fa- " ther and a Mother, that were not only Believers, but " Martyrs; and who, after ſuffering in his own Perſon " in his tendreſt Years, Perſecution for the Name of " Chriſt, gave Teſtimony of ſuch pious and ardent " Deſires to crown his firſt Labours with the Glory " of Martyrdom. (4) That fine Genius, whoſe " Authority you reſpectfully make uſe of, had " ſo much Eſteem for the Wiſdom of Socrates, " that, every time he thought of that great Man, he " was not much ſhort of crying out in his Tran- " ſports, St. Socrates pray for us. 'Twould not be " therefore an irremiſſible Sin in me, if my Soul had " been touch'd with the Veneration of the Virtues of " a Chriſtian, which are rendred precious by the " Goſpel; ſince the Eyes of your Friend were dazled " by the Actions of a Pagan, which after all were no " more than ſhining Sins (1): Some have found Spots " in the Sun, and therefore I think it not ſtrange that " this Doctor had his; and I ſhall not offer any Apo- " logy for him, ſince the charge is put in by Councils. " However, I ſhall ſay with that noble Writer, (2) " who offered to defend him publickly at Rome at " twenty-four Years of Age, that Origen was above " ſixty before he determined his Opinions in his " Writings, and that he may have entertain'd Er- " rors without the Imputation of Hereſy, as having " never obſtinately ſtuck to 'em, nor defended 'em " by Rebellion, ſince they were not condemned till " after his Death; and even himſelf had repented " of 'em before he died. You ſtrive in vain there- " fore to raiſe up againſt me all the Doctors of Divi- " nity: That young Count gives me encouragement, " who informs me, that he had the Pope on his ſide " (3), with a great number of the Members of the " Apoſtolical Senate, while ſome envious Heads mut- " ter'd againſt his Propoſitions. But let it be as it " will; if I were to incur the Diſpleaſure of the " Holy Conclave, by your Intereſt and Sollicitations, " I'd rather it ſhould be ſo for innocently putting an " extraordinary Doctor in the Catalogue of Saints, " without their Approbation, than for oppoſing, as " you do, the Glory of thoſe whom they have cano- " nized, and endeavouring by the moſt flaming Sa- " crilege to raze their Names both out of the Calen- " der of the Church, and out of the Memory of " Men." All this deſerves no other Anſwer than what follows. Teach (a) him what difference there is in the Style of the Roman Court and Church, between a Conſiſtory and a Conclave. This is a pardonable Fault in a Novice. The Miſchief is, that in all theſe wild Digreſſions, into which he falls out of the Road of our Diſpute, he can find nothing to evince that Men Learned in Antiquity call Origen a Saint.

Father Adam entered the Liſts upon this Article, in Defence of Cottibi, and perform'd it ſo ſorrily, that more impertinent Sophiſtical Turns were perhaps never ſeen. The Paſſage I am going to quote is ſomewhat long, but becauſe it contains ſome Things relating to the Hiſtory of Origen, and beſides may ſerve for a Remedy to thoſe Writers that are apt to write at Random, I ſhall give it you entire. Dallæus, addreſſing himſelf to the Jeſuit, John Adam, ſpeaks thus. " (b) Finding this a tickliſh place (c), you don't " care to keep in it; and as you are bold and reſolute " as any Man can be in your Coat, you quit that in- " convenient Poſt and fall foul upon me, according " to your wonted Strain, charging me (4) with Igno- " rance, and a Magiſterial Boldneſs that's only a " ſwelling and not real Knowledge and good Plight. " Then (5) deſiring me to weigh what you're " going to ſay, you give me a Lecture upon the dif- " ference between the Perſons that err, and the Er- " rors, bringing in St. Auguſtin and St. Jerom, " Janſenius and St. Cyran, and their Opinions. " Then you fall upon Origen, and the Errors of which he " was ſuſpected, particularly Arianiſm; from which " you ſay St. Athanaſius juſtified him. In the next " place (6) you praiſe the incomparable Innocence " of his Youth, his Chaſtity, his Zeal: You ſay (7) " that, if I have read Hiſtory, I muſt know, that " when he ſaw Martyrs carried out to Execution, he " went out of his Houſe, and throwing himſelf " upon his Knees before the Executioners, conjured " them to cut off his Head with the other Chriſtians. " You ſay again, I know very well, that he fill'd the " World with his Works, that his Father and his " Mother were Martyrs, and that oftentimes his Mo- " ther, drawing the Curtain of his Bed, as he lay " aſleep, kiſs'd her Son's Breaſt, with theſe Words in " her Mouth, I kiſs the Temple of the Holy Ghoſt. " You mention St. Gregory of Neocæſarea, St. Chry- " ſoſtom and St. Baſil, who had a great Eſteem for " him: (I ſuffer St. Chryſoſtom, though younger than " St. Baſil, to paſs before him to ſhew I am not ſo " peeviſh as you repreſent me.) You ask me what " Proof I can give that this great Man died without " Repentance, and to refute that Opinion, bring in " an old fabulous Story. This is the Epitome of " your Diſpute upon Origen. With Reference to " which, I ſhall tell you in the firſt place, That you " do me wrong in Imputing to me the Knowledge of " his praying the Executioners to cut off his Head. " That I knew nothing of, having read no ſuch thing " in Euſebius (8), who in his ſixth Book has the " Hiſtory of Origen at large. You charge me again, " with equal Injuſtice, with knowing that his Mother " kiſs'd his Breaſt while he lay aſleep. I learn'd in- " deed from Euſebius, that Leonidas his Father did " ſometimes careſs him after that rare in his Infan- " cy, kiſſing his Stomach with reſpect, as being the " Sanctuary, within which the Holy Spirit was con- " ſecrated, and call'd himſelf happy for having ſuch " a wonderful Child. Doubtleſs you have met with " theſe Stories in the ſame form as you utter 'em, in " the ſame Author who taught you that Athanaſius " was once mightily eſteem'd, and cryed up by the " Arians. But the cruelleſt Injury of all that you " have done me, is, that to gain an Opportunity of " venting theſe your Common Places and Hiſtories, " you charge me with (9) believing, and affirming " for a certain Truth, that Origen is damn'd. You " make the Errors of his Doctrine (ſay you (10) to " me) to affect his Perſon, and ſpeak of his Damnati- " on, as if you had been in Hell before-hand, and had " found Origen there: And two Pages lower (11), I " can't endure it (ſay you) that you ſhould joyn in with " thoſe who maintain that Origen is damn'd; and at " the end of the Chapter, you have taken up (ſay " you) the Opinion of thoſe who held that Origen is " damn'd. But to wave theſe Sallies of your Paſſion, " who told you that I hold, that Origen is damn'd? " Where have I declared that to be my Opinion? " Pray God forbid that ſuch an unjuſt Preſumption " ſhould ever enter into my Mind. I leave to the " Lord his Secrets, and am not ſo raſh as to take " the Liberty to determine what no Man can know " with a Certainty of Faith. But, if 'tis lawful " for us to judge of things by Appearances, I believe " of Origen what I wiſh, that God, whoſe Mercies " are infinite, pardon'd his Errors, and did not " ſuffer to periſh among Unbelievers, a Veſſel that " he had adorn'd with ſo many admirable Gifts, " whoſe genuine Works that we have, breath no- " thing but a ſingular Faith and Piety; and in which " the very Errors with which they are ſometimes " ſtain'd (for that's undeniable) are always accom- " panied with a raviſhing Modeſty and Humility; " not to ſpeak of his Virtues, and the Purity of his " Life. This is my Opinion, and I never entertain'd " any other: and thoſe who know me intimately, " know to what degree I have always admired " that great and incomparable Genius; and what I " have wrote in ſome Paſſages of my little Works " may give Teſtimony of it. Though I have rela- " ted (12) what the Count of Mirandola wrote, that " the Divines of Rome would not ſuffer his Damna- " tion to be doubted of, 'tis manifeſt I did it " only to ſhew, how far the Doctors, whoſe Com- " munion Mr. Cottibi has embraced, are from " the Style of calling him Saint; and by no means " out of any Approbation of their inhumane Pre- " ſumption. If I took notice of the Quality of " Saint, given him by Mr. Cottibi, I did it only to ſhew

(3) In the Form of the Adminiſtration of Baptiſm.

(4) Eraſmus.

(1) St. Auguſt. ſplendida peccata.

(2) Joann. Picus Mirandulæ Comes. in Apolog. concl. 7.

(3) Summi Pontificis & ex Apoſtolico Senatu complurium judicio conſentus, videbar facile & odium poſſe negligere, & convicia hominum improborum. In Præfat. Apol.

(a) Dallæus addreſſing himſelf to Father Adam, ubi ſupra. pag. 191.

(b) Dallæus, ibid.

(c) That is, the Suppoſition that Mr. Cottibi was fallen into an Equivocal Expreſſion.

(4) Ad. p. 267.

(5) Ibid, p. 208.

(6) Pag. 269.

(7) Pag. 270.

(8) Euſeb. Hiſt. l. 6. c. 2. pag. 203. A.

(9) Ad. p. 267.

(10) Ad. p. 269.

(11) Pag. 271.

(12) L. a M. de la Tal. p. 70, 71.

obſerve, that a Miniſter in Holland has lately made a very ſolid (B) Obſervation upon one of Origen's Opinions. Had the Author of Janua Cœlorum Reſerata (C) made uſe of " ſhew his Ignorance in Matters of Antiquity, and " his Unacquaintedneſs with the way of writing " uſual among thoſe who are vers'd in it. I did " not accuſe him upon that Head of ſinning againſt " Faith or good Manners. The Ignorance of Antiqui- " ty is not incompatible with either one or t'other: I " allow him withal to entertain as advantageous Sen- " timents of Origen, as he pleaſes. But the Laws of " your Church, and thoſe of its Style, and the com- " mon and publick Cuſtom of all the Learned, that " is to ſay, the Sovereign Law of their Language, " not permitting him to ſay Saint Origen; whatever " Opinion he has of his Perſon, he can't uſe theſe " Words without betraying the Ignorance I've char- " ged him with."

We meet with a thouſand Examples of this Nature in Polemical Writings; and as I have ſaid already, oftner than once, 'twould not be a-miſs to gather them all together. This Collection might be of uſe to check the Liberty that ſome Authors take in ſtraggling to the Right and to the Left from the State of the Queſtion. I can't tell whether other Examples will equal this in vain and impertinent Rambling.

(B) A very ſolid Obſervation upon one of Origen's Opinions.] Before I inſert the Words of the Miniſter, I ſhall firſt give you a Copy of thoſe of his Adverſary, which gave occaſion to his Reflection. (a) 'Tis a conſiderable Fault to compare the Opinion of Origen, touching the Non-eternity of Pains, with the Doctrine of the Socinians upon that Article. Origen did not deny the Immortality of the Soul, and never taught that the Wicked ſhould be annihilated. But the Socinians believe, that the Wicked periſh, Body and Soul, after Death. Origen's Error is dangerous, but at leaſt it has no Impiety in it; but the Socinian Opinion is the Epicurean Impiety. Now the Cenſure of this Paſſage is as followeth. " (b) There's more Danger, as to the Moral Part, in " ſaying, The Reprobate ſhall be one Day ſaved, " than in ſaying, They ſhall be annihilated. Origen has " put the Devils and the Damned almoſt in the ſame " Claſs as the Papiſts put the Faithful and the Regene- " rate, who die loaded with a great number of Venial " Sins, and have not wherewithal to procure Maſſes " for ſhortening and mollifying their Pains in Pur- " gatory; the Fire of which differs from that of " Hell only in Duration. So that the Libertines " who continue to Death in their Libertiniſm and " Crimes, may, according to Origen's Theology, " have near the ſame Hopes and the ſame Fears, that " the beſt Catholicks have, purſuant to the Doctrine " of their Prieſts and Monks. Time is nothing " in Compariſon to Eternity. A Temporal Hell " can never be made a Parallel to an Eternal Paradiſe. " 'Tis true, preſent Evils deface the Idea of future " Good in the Minds of the People of this World; " and the Senſe of the former is commonly ſtronger " and livelier, than the Deſire and Hope of the latter. " But this proceeds from the Folly and Corruption " of Men, and not from the Nature of the Objects. " Beſides, we muſt know that future Evils are con- " ſidered almoſt after the ſame manner with future " Good; that is, heedleſs and brutiſh People are " ſcarce touched either by one or t'other: But " the wiſe and reflecting part of Mankind take a nar- " row View of the Pains and Joys of the other " Life, and form to themſelves a juſt Idea of 'em. " The Conſequence of which is, that the former " will not be more frighted by the Hell or Purgatory " with which Origen threatens them, than they'll be " encouraged and comforted by the End of their " Torments, and the Enjoyment of an Eternal Beati- " tude in Paradiſe, that this Doctor makes them hope " for: And, That, on the other hand, thoſe who " have more ſerious and deeper Thoughts, will " judge of future Eaſe and Torment by their Dura- " tion, and will readily reſolve to paſs through ſome " Ages of Adverſity, if they're aſſured to find after " that an Eternity of Happineſs and infinite Joy. " As for the Doctrine of the Socinians, it gives no o- " ther Conſolation to hardned Sinners, but their " Annihilation. But ſuch is the make of Men, that " they had rather be unhappy and happy ſucceſ- " ſively, than not at be all. And 'tis the Dictate " of Right Reaſon, that there is an infinitely great- " er Advantage in being eternally filled with Happi- " neſs, after ſuffering ſome time, than in returning " into Nothing, and ſeeing one's ſelf deprived for e- " ver of infinite Beatitude, the Poſſeſſion of which " might be inſured, and which is only loſt by Neg- " ligence..... (c) Origen's Error may inſpire ſome " with a Contempt of Repentance, and that of the " Socinians may retain others in Impiety. And yet " both the one and the other is very pernicious. " And 'tis taking a falſe Weight, uſing a falſe Mea- " ſure, and a too viſible reſpect of Perſons, to ſay, " That Origen's Error, though dangerous, has no- " thing of Impiety in it; but that the Socinian Error " is the Epicurean Impiety. Had Origen annihilated " the Reprobate after a long Purgatory, his Theology " had indulged impenitent Sinners leſs than that of " the Socinians, who annihilate them without ma- " king them undergo any conſiderable Pain (d). " But the Paradiſe which he promiſes to 'em at the " end of their Hell, and which will render 'em for " ever like unto the Apoſtles, the Martyrs, and the " greateſt Saints, is a powerful Counter-balance a- " gainſt the Terrour of a Puniſhment, that is to " give way to Eternal Joy and Felicity."

If you would know the Cauſe of this Reſpect of Perſons, you need only read theſe Words of the ſame Author. (e) The Charity we have for thoſe who died ſeveral Ages ago ſcarce coſts any thing; becauſe their Merit does not excite our Jealouſy and Envy, and we do not look upon 'em as our Competitors. But to judge charitably of an Adverſary, who ſpeaks and writes againſt us, and whoſe Reputation clouds our Glory, we muſt mortifie Self-love a little; and that's a Sacrifice we do not eaſily make. Since Mr. Jurieu had no Quarrel with Origen, and has perſonal Enemies in the Socinian Party, we muſt not think it ſtrange if he has more Toleration for the former than for the latter. This Thought has been ſeveral times made uſe of to account for the Conduct of thoſe who have maintain'd, that Sophocles, Euripides, Ariſtophanes, Ariſtotle, &c. did much ſurpaſs Corneille, Racine, Moliere, Deſcartes, &c.

(C) Had the Author of Janua Cœlorum reſerata made uſe of it.] This Author ſhews by ſeveral Proofs, that if Mr. Jurieu would reaſon conſequentially, he ought to teach that Socinianiſm does not merit Damnation. One of his Reaſons is taken from what that Miniſter owns, that the Arians belong'd to the Church, in which Salvation is to be obtain'd. Now this would be a weak Reaſon, if the Doctrines of the Socinians that were not taught in Arianiſm, were mortal. And, accordingly the Author of the Janua Cœlorum propoſes that Objection to himſelf, and ſhews, that putting the Caſe the Hereſies, common to the Socinians and the Arians, were not mortal, we can't reaſonably maintain, that the Doctrines, peculiar to Socinianiſm, merit Damnation. In running over theſe peculiar Hereſies, he begins with the Rejection of the Eternity of Hell, and takes it for granted that none would damn Origen or Arnobius, preciſely upon the Score of that Error. Quis audiret, ſays he (f), mortis æternæ addicere Origenem, ideo præciſe quod de divinæ miſericordiæ magnificentiis ſententiæ volens, credulerit tandem fore ut omnes mali, ne Diabolis quidem exceptis, ſatis pœnarum Deo dederint, & Deum placatum experiantur? At hoc multo plus videretur nocere juſtitiæ divinæ quàm dogma Socinianum de annihilatione reproborum poſt longas pœnas, nam deſtructio illa ſi minus pœnæ genus eſt gravius, ut quidam exiſtimant, quàm æternitas infœlix, rationem tamen habet pœnæ, ideoque non officit juribus ſeveri & juſti Legiſlatoris. Quidquid id eſt nemo præjudiciis exutus, & ad rectæ rationis amuſſim rem expendens, doctrinam mortalem judicabit, ſi quis veritus ledere divinas perfectiones, malit ſibi Deum repugnantiæ ut judicem iſti modi ſupplicio rem afficientem, quàm ut judicem vitæ rerum parcentem quo per multos annos exquiſitis cruciatibus & perpetuis eos torquendo, longiore alieni doloris ſpectaculo fruatur: nemo, inquam, ſolide ratiocinatus talem opinionem mortalem crediderit, qui ſemel agnoverit Arianam hæreſim non eſſe mortalem. Quis audiret Arnobium in Inferis collocare, quia credidit animas reproborum flammis ultricibus tandem penitus conſum. You ſee he obſerves, that Origen's Doctrine confines

(a) Jurieu apud Saurin, ubi infra.

(b) Saurin, Examen de la Theologie de Mr. Jurieu, pag. 688.

(c) Saurin ibid. pag. 692.

(d) Mr. Saurin ſeems to agree to what his Adverſary advances, that the Socinians teach that the Souls of wicked Men are annihilated at the very moment of their Death. But the Doctrine of that Sect is otherwiſe related in the next page, Letter a. At the ſame time 'tis true Mr. Saurin expreſſes himſelf after ſuch a manner, as may import that he does not impute that to the Sect.

(e) Saurin, ib. pag. 688.

(f) Carus Larchomius in Janua Cœlorum reſerata, pag. 95 97.

of it, he had re-inforced one of his Objections. 4. That there are many Divines in the Communion of Rome that believe this Father (D) is in Hell.

Since the first Edition of this Dictionary two Pieces have come to Light, which oblige me to add a Supplement to this Article. One of 'em bearing the Title of Parrhasiana was publish'd at Amsterdam in 1699, by a Learned Person that disguises himself under the Name of Theodorus Parrhasius. The other was printed at Paris in 1700, and entituled, Histoire des mouvemens, &c. i. e. The History of the Commotions that have happened the Divine Justice more than that of the Socinians, in regard the latter conclude the Punishment with an Act of Severity, namely, the Annihilation of the Sinner; whereas Origen makes it terminate in an Act of Sovereign Bounty, namely, the Transportation of the damn'd Spirits to the Enjoyment of Sovereign Bliss: You see, I say, that he observes this Difference; but he does not lay it open with that Accuracy that Mr. Saurin has. Further, he starts an Objection to himself, which he might have overthrown by Mr. Saurin's Remark, and yet he makes use of a quite different Answer. He supposes (g), 'twill be offer'd to him that the Rejection of the Trinity is not so pernicious to the Republick, as the Denial of the Eternity of Torments; and contents himself with answering, that we must not judge by that Rule whether an Heresy is fundamental or not; for otherwise it might be alledged (h), that the grossest and most scandalous Errors would be but a Trifle, if so be they were proper to keep the Citizens in awe. This is all the Answer he gives. He has forgot the best part of the Reply to this Objection; he has not said that Origen's Opinion is more pernicious to the Republick, than that of the Socinians: Origen's Opinion, I say, which M. Jurieu (i) looks upon as an Error that ought to be excused. Had Lavelonius light upon Mr Saurin's Reflection, he had argued Home upon his Adversary. Let's take in one Passage more of the Utrecht Pastor. "(k) Mr. Jurieu would fain excuse the Errors of O- " rigen, by reason of his great Zeal; but if any one " came now a-days to vent that Antient Author's No- " tions, Mr. Juricu would not think himself obliged " to allow him any Toleration. If these wild Fansies " are Heresies and Instances of Impiety, which " change Hell into a Purgatory, and by that means " annihilate the Fear of Eternal Punishments, and the " fear of God, why should they be countenanced in " Origen? Where's that Doctor's great Zeal if he was " an Heretick, and a Teacher of Heresy? If these " Errors were not Fundamental in Origen, and in the " third Century, by what Machine are they become " Fundamental in the seventeenth, and in the Mo- " dern Doctors? We shall see presently that there's a " difference between Origen's Opinion, and that of " the Socinians, with reference to the Pains of Hell; " and that this Difference, which Mr. Jurieu would " turn in favour of Origen, is altogether against " him"

As the Author of Janua Cœlorum has over-look'd his Advantages; so Mr. Saurin, on the other hand, has suffered his Adversary to pass with two gross Faults in his Mouth: One is, charging the Socinians with teaching, that the Soul dies along with the Body; and the other is, that their Doctrine of the Destruction of the Soul is the Epicurean Impiety. The first of these Faults is a Lie or rather a Calumny (a). The second is an inexcusable Ignorance. The Socinian Sect do's not teach that the Wicked shall suffer nothing after Death. They only say their Torments will at last terminate in the Annihilation of their Souls. And, granting there were some Socinian (b) Authors, that taught the Annihilation of the Soul immediately upon its quitting the Body, his Doctrine would not be the same with that of Epicurus; for that Philosopher believed, on one Hand, that the Gods had no hand either in the Life or Death of Men; and on the other, that the Soul dies along with the Body, as consisting only of a certain Mixture of Atoms. Now, the Socinians we speak of, on the contrary, would maintain, that the Souls of the Wicked are of a Nature suitable to endure after this Life, and that they only cease to be, because God in Punishment of their Faults, annihilates them. The most Orthodox Writers upon the Nature of the Soul, agree, that God can annihilate it every moment. Here take notice, that tis an indispensable Rule of Natural Equity, not to impute to a Sect the Opinions of some particular Persons.

(D) That believe Origen is in Hell.] We have already seen the Complaints given in against Picus Mirandula, for maintaining the opposite Sentiment: The Jesuit Stephen Binet publishing a Book at Paris in 1629, concerning the Salvation of Origen, durst not take the affirmative without Trembling. He lays out the Matter in the Form of an Indictment and Trial, and produces the Witnesses, and Pleaders pro and con, with the Intervention of the Conclusion of the King of Heaven's Council. At last he brings in this Verdict. (c) Considering all that has been said on one side and t'other, and the Conclusions of the King of Heaven's Council, 'tis decreed, that the Affair be left to God's Secret Council, to whom the definitive Sentence is reserv'd. Nevertheless, by Provision, and for the benefit of Origen, 'tis judged, upon the Balance of the whole, that the Proofs of his Salvation are stronger and more conclusive than those of his Damnation; and therefore his Salvation is more probable than his Damnation. The Witnesses he brings in for Origen, are, (d) James Merlin, and (e) Erasmus. The Advocates that he sets to plead for that Father, are Genebrard (f), and John Picus (g) Mirandula. Then Cardinal Baronius (h), in the Name of Cardinal Bellarmin and all Origen's Accusers, harangues the Judges, demanding Sentence against the Person accused, whose Heresies and Crimes he displays. Some of his Heresies are these. 1. That (i) Souls sinn'd before they enter'd the Body. 2. That (k) after the Resurrection the Bodies of the Saints would be round and luminous like the Sun. 3. That the Sun, the Moon, and the Stars are living. 4. That (l) at the Day of Judgment the guardian Angels will be chastized, if they have not done their Duty well in guarding the Men committed to the care of their Charity. 5. That (m) before the Creation of this World there were several others, and when this should be reduced to Dust, several would be created one after another. 6. That (n) the Stars are the Books in which is to be found the good Fortune of Mankind, that the Angels there calculate the Nativity of Men, and read there their Fortune, and that they have taught Men part of that judicial Astrology, in order to calculate a Man's Nativity, but without restraining Free-will or doing any Violence to the Will. 7. That (o) the Earth is a large Animal capable of Good and Evil, and in the Sequel, worthy of Reward or Punishment; whence it is that God blesses or curses it, according as it behaves it self well, and renders it self capable of the one or the other. 8. "That after the Day of Judgment " the Women will be transform'd into Men, and " the humane Bodies into very pure Souls, and that " there will be then no more Men compos'd " of glorified Bodies, all being pure Spirits " like the Angels in Heaven." Baronius's Grand Reason is this: "(p) The General Council not only " condemn'd his Doctrine after the usual form, but " run the Condemnation even to his Person, up " on which it thunder'd an Anathema, putting " his very Name in the Sentence (r), and the " Words of the Holy Council are these. The Em- " peror having required, ut cum erroribus suis autor " ipse Origenes damnaretur. The Holy Council (s) " after a mature Consideration of the Affair, and In- " vocation of the Assistance of the Holy Ghost, did, " in fine, pronounce these Words, or rather these " Claps of Thunder. In the first place, it darted " (t) ten Anathema's against the venenous Do- " ctrine of Origen; then proceeding said, Anathema " etiam ipsi Origeni qui dicitur Adamantius. They ad- " ded this last Word on purpose, lest the World should " mistake, as if they spoke of the other Origen, and " not of the true Origen, whom they cover'd with A- " nathema's as a reprobate, condemn'd and damn'd " Person" Let's see a Touch of the Eloquence of that time. Binet supposes, that Baronius making use of a Vision that's related in the Pratum Spirituale, spoke after this manner. (u) Must we at last come to this Extremity, that I should be forced to open Hell, and shew you that Origen is there, otherwise you will not

(g) Ibid. pag. 97.

(h) Alioquin mutatis vicibus pro innocuis deberemus habere errores non pauco- raf simos atque ridiffimos, unde multum emo- menti caperet Respublica, in multas perturbationes cadura per introductionem quarumdam veritatum. Th. (i) Apud Saurin, ubi supra, pag. 682. (k) Saurin, ibid. pag. 683, 684.

(a) The Author was charged with it in 1690 in the Avis sur le tableau du Socinianisme, p. 44. (b) There are some such.

(c) Stephen Binet of the Salvation of Origen, pag. 468. (d) In Præfat. ad Origenem, an. 1512. (e) In vit. Origenis. (f) In Origen. (g) Apologia q. 7. de salute Origenis. (h) Binet, pag. 155. cites him, Annal. Tom. 3. an. 533. &c. (i) Binet. pag. 158. ex S. Leone Epist. decret. 11. (k) Idem pag. 160. & seq. ex Niceph. l. 17. c. 27. Præf. in Conc. 5. Constantinop. (l) Origen. Hom. 20. in Num. apud Binet pag. 166. (m) Orig. in c. 1. Eccl. ex Methodio & Genebr. apud Binet pag. 168. (n) Origen in Genes. Philocal. c. 25. apud Binet, pag. 168. (o) Origen. hom. 4. in Ezech: apud Binet ibid. (p) Binet, pag. 191. (r) Baron. an. 400. an. 538. an. 553. (s) 5. Synod. (t) Niceph. lib. 17. c. 27. 28. Sur. 11. Janu. Cedren. in Annal. Cassiod. 1. div. inst. Prat. Spirit. c. 26. Baron. an. 532. (u) Binet pag. 195. & seq.

happened in the Church upon the account of Origen and his Doctrine. Father Doucin the Jeſuit is the Author of the laſt. In the Parrhaſiana we meet with ſome Reflections upon the Controverſy between the Manichees and the Orthodox. They are uſhered in with an Obſervation that's as juſt † as could have been hoped for from a very honeſt Man: They are uſhered in, I ſay, with a Judgment every way agreeable to Equity, Truth and Reaſon, with reference to the View or Deſign upon which I took the Liberty to ſet down the Objections of the Manichees, and to declare that natural Light does not enable the Chriſtians to reſolve them, whether they follow St. Auſtin's Syſtem, or that of Molina and the Remonſtrants, or have recourſe to that of the Socinians. Theodorus Parrhaſius maintains the contrary, and alledges, that an Origeniſt * may ſtop the Mouth of the Manichees.... If a Man of this Character, continues he, can put a Manichean to ſilence, what would not they do, who would reaſon infinitely better than the Diſciples of Origen? I ſhall examine in my Remarks what he (E) ſuppoſes an Origeniſt could ſay after † Parrhaſiana, pag. 302.

* Ibid. pag. 304.

not believe it? Is it not enough that I have ſhewn you his Crimes, his miſerable Death, the Decree of his Condemnation paſs'd by the Emperours, by the Popes, by the Saints, and by the Fifth general Council, beſides others; and as it were by the Mouth of God himſelf? But ſince it remains only to deſcend to Hell to give you a ſight of this reprobate, this damn'd Origen: Let's go on, Gentlemen, I'm content to do it, to run the Matter to the laſt Concluſion: Let's go, in God's Name, to Hell, to ſee whether he is there or not, and ſo give the laſt Deciſion of the Point. The fifth General Council (4) has cited a Book, and in citing it has authoriz'd it, as a Book worthy to afford good and valid Proofs for fortifying the Deciſions of the Council upon the Head of Images. And why ſhould not we make uſe of it after them, to determine this Queſtion, which is already but too plain and determinate? There, it is ſaid, that a good Man, under great concern about the Salvation of Origen's Soul, did, after the ardent Prayer of a Holy old Man, plainly ſee a ſort of Hell laid open to him, where he diſtinguiſh'd and knew the Hereſiarchs who were all cal'd over before him by their Names, and in the midſt of theſe he ſaw Origen, who lay there damn'd among the reſt, and covered with Horror, Flames and Confuſion. Now let's inſert part of the Anſwer that was made to this Objection. "(r) Do's the "Church ground her Canons upon the Viſions of a "Hermit; ſhe that teaches, that the Viſions of private "Perſons lay no Obligation upon any one to believe 'em, "and that Articles of Faith are never founded upon "ſuch Viſions? The Pratum Spirituale tells us, a good "honeſt Abbot ſaw Origen in Hell; but is he the firſt "that has been miſtaken? What Origen do's he "ſpeak of, our Origen, or the other infamous Perſon? "And what Authority, pray, has the Pratum-Spiri-"tuale? Let's put the caſe, that the 7th General "Council quoted it for ſome one thing, as the point "of Images, does that imply that they canonized all "that is in it? And, pray, how much weak poor Stuff "is there in that Book, which appears ridiculous and "ſcarce credible to the wiſer part of Mankind?" One Word more: (f) Here the Viſion of a ſimple Abbot is alledged, and I alledge the Viſion of a great Saint, called (5) Mechtildis, to whom God revealed that he would not have the World to know what was become of Samſon, Solomon and Origen, with intent to ſtrike the greateſt Terror into the ſtrongeſt, the wiſeſt, and the moſt learned Men of this World, by keeping them in Suſpence and Uncertainty.

(4) Baron. an. 532. Moſch. in Prat. c. 26.

(r) Binet, pag. 129.

(f) Idem, pag. 219.

(5) Lib. vitæ S. Mechtil, edit. an. 1627.

NOTE, That Robert de Corcone an Engliſh Cardinal that flouriſh'd in the Beginning of the XIIIth. Century, wrote a Book upon the Queſtion of Origen's Salvation. Balæus ſpeaks of it.

(E) I ſhall examine.... what he ſuppoſes an Origeniſt could ſay.] Though the Arguments he puts into the Origeniſt's Mouth are ſhort and compact, I reckon to keep up all their force in reducing 'em to theſe three Propoſitions. 1. "(a) God has made us free, to "make room for Virtue and Vice, for Praiſe and "Diſpraiſe, for Reward and Puniſhment." 2. He damns (b) no Body barely for having ſinn'd, but for not having repented.. 3. The (c) Phyſical and Moral Evils of Mankind are of ſo ſhort a Duration in compariſon to Eternity, that they cannot conclude God to be otherwiſe than a Benevolent God, and a Friend to Virtue. 'Tis in this laſt Propoſition that all the Origeniſt's Force is couch'd, and the Reaſon is this; He ſuppoſes that the Torments of Hell are not of eternal Duration, and that God after judging (d) that Free Creatures have ſuffer'd enough, will render 'em eternally happy. The eternal Happineſs that ſhall be beſtowed upon 'em, makes up the Idea of infinite Mercy, though preceded by ſeveral Ages of Sufferings; for ſeveral Ages are nothing when laid in the Balance with infinite Duration; and (e) there is infinitely leſs Proportion between the Time of the Duration of this Earth and Eternity, than there is between a Minute, and a hundred Millions of Years.... (f) "Among Men, thoſe who take care of a Child "that's ill of any Diſtemper, and cure him by a bitter "Remedy, do not matter the Complaints that the "Child makes of the Bitterneſs, becauſe they know "that in a very little Time the Remedy will do him "good. Now there is an infinitely greater Diſproportion between God and the moſt knowing Men, "than there is between them and the ſimpleſt Children. So that we can't reaſonably think it ſtrange "that God looks upon the Evils we ſuffer as almoſt "nothing: He, who alone has a compleat Idea of "Eternity, and looks upon the Beginning and End of "our Sufferings as being infinitely nearer together, "than the Beginning and End of a Minute. After the "ſame manner muſt we reaſon about Vices and vicious "Actions, which, with reſpect to God, are of ſhort "Duration, and at the bottom change nothing in the "Univerſe. If a Clock-maker ſhould make a Pendu-"lum, which, when wound up, would go very well for a "whole Year, abating 2 or 3 Seconds, that it would "go unequally in, when it begins to go; could any "one ſay, that this Workman does not pretend to "any exactneſs in his Workmanſhip? In like man-"ner, if God does one Day, for all Eternity, redreſs "the Diſorders that the bad uſe of Liberty ſhall have "cauſed among Men, we can't think it ſtrange that "he ſuffers them to continue, during that Moment "that we ſhall have been upon Earth."

(e) Ibid. pag. 309.

(f) Ibid. pag. 310, 311.

Now let's ſee what a Manichee could anſwer to this Diſcourſe of an Origeniſt.

I. The firſt thing he could ſay, is, that in our Minds we do not find the Idea of two ſorts of Goodneſs; of which one conſiſts in making a Preſent, the bad Effects of which are fore-ſeen, without preventing them, though it lies in the Power of the Giver to do it; the other in granting a Favour under ſuch Conditions as will always render it advantageous to him who receives it. 'Tis needleſs to acquaint you, that by the Idea of Goodneſs we do not underſtand an imperfect ſort of Goodneſs, ſuch as we meet with in the Heart of a Sinner; but a Goodneſs that in a Logical abſtracted Senſe is clear of all Failure. This ſpecial Goodneſs is not a Genus containing under it the two Species now deſcribed. Its eſſential and diſtinguiſhing Attribute is to diſpoſe its Subject to do good Things, which by the ſhorteſt and certaineſt means that it can make uſe of render the Condition of the Receiver happy. This Ideal Goodneſs eſſentially and neceſſarily excludes all that can ſuit a malicious Being. Now 'tis certain that ſuch a Being would readily incline to diſpenſe the Favours, the uſe of which it knew would prove fatal to thoſe upon whom it ſhould beſtow 'em. We read of a certain Man that preſented very fine Garments to thoſe to whom he meant no good.

(g) Entrapelus, cuicunque nocere volebat,
Veſtimenta dabat pretioſa: beatus enim jam
Cum pulchris tunicis ſumet nova conſilia & ſpes:
Dormiet in lucem: ſcorto poſtponet honeſtum
Officium: nummos alienos paſcet: ad imum
Thraxerit, aut olitoris aget mercede caballum.

(g) Horat. Epiſt. 18. lib. 1. v. 31.

That is to ſay: "(h) When Entrapelus deſigned to "do any one a Diſkindneſs, he knew no better way (h) I make uſe of Dacier's Verſion.

(a) Parrhaſiana, pag. 306.
(b) Ibid. pag. 307.
(c) Ibid. pag. 308.
(d) Ibid. pag. 312.

after having read all the Objections of the Manichees. As for Father Doucin's Book, I ſhall only take notice that it contains a large and curious Diſcuſſion of the Subjects mention'd

" to do it than to ſend 'em magnificent Cloaths; " for, ſaid he, this Man ſeeing himſelf already the " Favourite of Fortune, in having ſuch fine Cloaths, " will form new Deſigns, and conceive new Hopes. " He'll ſleep till Noon, he'll prefer a Miſs to all the " more honourable Duties of Life; he'll take care " to increaſe his Neighbour's Stock at his own Ex- " pence, and at laſt will be reduced to be a Gladia- " tor, or a Gardener's Man, or to lead to Market " a Horſe that carries Roots and Herbs." Bad Princes that hunt after Means to ſatisfie their Paſſion handſomly in ruining ſome great Lord, would gladly give him the Government of a Province, if they knew that by abuſing that Truſt he would render himſelf moſt odious to all Mankind, and worthy of an exemplary Puniſhment; but a Romantick Heroe form'd for a Model of Royal Perfection, a Prince, I ſay, drawn after Ideas even more exactly than (i) Cyrus by Xenophon, will never lay Snares by his Liberality. When he diſpoſes of Places, he pitches upon ſuch as are moſt ſuitable to thoſe he has a mind to gratify, and do's not offer to give them ſuch Places as he apprehends they will miſmanage. He gives readily, out of Hand; that's a Character of Goodneſs that (k) multiplies the Good given. He do's not oblige the Suitors to long Sollicitations; that deſtroys the Merit of the Benefit (l), and is only ſuitable to ſuch an indifferent ſort of Goodneſs as ſcarce deſerves to be diſtinguiſh'd from Hardneſs. Thoſe who have given us the Character of Cardinal Mazarin, have therein taken notice, as of a great Fault, of the cuſtome he had of drilling out the execution of his Promiſes to ſuch a length of time, that all the Pleaſure was waſted in Hopes, and his Favours were all maimed by the Efforts that were neceſſary to be uſed to ſnatch 'em from him. (m) Promiſſis largus, quibus multoties non ſtetit; aut ſi implevit, faſtidio & mora diu libratum beneficium improbe extortum elumbavit, longo voto conſumens gaudia. Had they deſign'd his Panegyrick, and meant to flatter his Memory with the Character of a Conſummate Liberality, they would have ſaid, that his Readineſs to oblige prevented Sollicitations, and ſpared his Clients the ſhame of putting in Requeſts. (n) Illud atque in vulgus, Principem obiiſſe .... liberalem in primis, & qui raro exemplo huius ævi preces anteverteret, ut conſulveret accipientium pudori. A Panegyriſt that means to keep cloſe to Ideal Perfection, and attribute it to his Heroes, would not fail to put into the Character of their Liberality, an indiſſoluble Tie between giving the Art of making good uſe of a Favour, and granting the Favour it ſelf.

Thus we ſee what are the Properties of Ideal Goodneſs; what it excludes, what it includes. Now, if we conſider this Idea of Goodneſs, we do not find that God, who is a Principle of Sovereign Goodneſs, could put off the Felicity of his Creatures to the termination of (o) ſeveral Ages of Miſery, or beſtow upon them a Liberum Arbitrium, which he was ſure they all would uſe to their own Deſtruction. Had his Creature ask'd of him any ſuch thing, he could not have granted it without counteracting his own Eſſence. And much leſs could he give it, when 'twas not ask'd. Would the Creature have willingly taken it, if it had been ask'd the Queſtion? And if it had known the Conſequences of it, would not it rather have cried out (a),

May ſuch Preſents fall to my Enemies.

But if the infinite Goodneſs of the Creator did permit him to endow his Creatures with a Liberty of which they might make a bad as well as a good uſe, we muſt at leaſt ſay, that 'twould engage him to watch their Steps ſo as not to ſuffer 'em to be guilty of actual Sin. His infinite Love for Virtue, his infinite Hatred for Vice, in a word, his Sanctity would unite its Intereſts with thoſe of his Goodneſs, and by the Concourſe of thoſe Divine Attributes, the bad uſe of Free-will would be ſet off as often as 'tis ready to break out. The Fathers who can't refuſe their Children leave to go all alone, or to climb a Ladder, or to mount a Horſe, when 'tis viſible they'll fall, if they are not taken care of, never fail to give ſuch Orders, that whatever ſide they lean to, there's always a Support at hand. Now, if a finite Goodneſs, a Goodneſs which cannot inviſibly blend its aſſiſtance with the ſtrength of a little Child, do's always prevent the Child's falling, when it can, or hinder his wounding himſelf with a Knife that muſt needs be given him to ſtop his crying; how much more ought we to be perſuaded that God would have prevented the bad Uſe of Free-will; he who is infinitely Good, infinitely Holy, and can infallibly incline his Creature towards Good, without violating the Privileges of Liberty. Such is the Anſwer that a Manichee may give to an Origeniſt, upon the firſt of the three Propoſitions laid down above. One may eaſily apprehend, though I do not ſay it, That he might ſometimes make uſe of what we call Argamenta ad hominem.

As for the Reaſon alledged by the Origeniſt, that there's a Neceſſity of allowing the Creature Free-will, in order to make room for Virtue and Vice, for Praiſe and Diſpraiſe, for Reward and Puniſhment; it may be eaſily and effectually refuted. 'Twould ſuffice to reply, that ſuch a Reaſon is ſo far from obliging a Being infinitely Holy and infinitely Liberal to grant Free-will to Creatures, that, on the contrary, it ought to move him to do otherwiſe. Vice and Blame or Diſpraiſe ought to have no place in the Works of a Cauſe infinitely Holy; all the Avenues of Vice muſt be ſtopt, all muſt be laudable; all the Poſts ought to be ſo poſſeſt by Virtue, as not to give the leaſt Admiſſion to the oppoſite Quality. And as all muſt be happy in the Empire of a Sovereign Being infinitely Good and infinitely Powerful; ſo Pains or Puniſhments can have no place in the ſame. In travelling through this vaſt Empire, we're to meet with no Valley of Tears, no Veſtibulum, ſuch as a great Poet has thus deſcribed to us.

Veſtibulum (c) ante ipſum, primiſque in faucibus Orci,
Luctus, & ultrices poſuêre cubilia curæ:
Pallentesque habitant morbi, triſtiſque ſenectus:
Et Metus, & maleſuada Fames, & turpis Egeſtas,
(Terribiles viſu formæ) Lethumque, Laborque:
Tum conſanguineus Lethi Sopor: & mala mentis
Gaudia, mortiferumque adverſo in limine Bellum:
Ferreique Eumenidum thalami, & Diſcordia demens,
Vipereum crinem vittis innexa cruentis.

(c) Virgil. Æn. lib. 6. v. 273.

Without paſſing through Places fill'd with Horror, we ought at firſt ſetting out fall in with the Theatres of Felicity.

Devenêre (d) locos lætos, & amœna vireta
Fortunatorum nemorum, ſedeſque beatas.
Largior hic campos æther, & lumine veſtit
Purpureo: ſolemque ſuum, ſua ſidera norunt.

(d) Id. ib. v. 638.

Virtue, Praiſe and Favours may very well exiſt, tho' Vice, Blame and Puniſhment have no other exiſtence, than what we call Ideal and Objective. This the Origeniſt cannot deny, ſince he acknowledges an eternal Felicity of all Free Creatures, that ſhall ſucceed to ſome Ages of Sufferings. Virtue, Praiſe and Benefits will take place during the infinite Duration of that Happineſs; but Vice, Blame and Puniſhment will there have no Exiſtence out of the Intellect. If the Origeniſt replies, that theſe Benefits would not be a Recompence, if the Creatures had not been endowed with Liberty; we'll anſwer, that there's no Proportion between an eternal Felicity and the good Uſe that Man makes of his Free-will; and for that Reaſon the eternal Happineſs that God beſtows upon a good Man, can't be conſider'd, properly ſpeaking, as a Reward: 'tis a Favour, a free Gift. So that, taking the Terms in a ſtrict Senſe, we can't pretend that Free-will ought to have been given to Men to qualify 'em to merit the Happineſs of Paradiſe, and obtain a Claim to Reward. Such Language might as well take place, if there were only a Subordination between Virtue and eternal Happineſs; that is, a Chain or Connexion of Thoughts neceſſarily virtuous, in which Happineſs would be the conſequent and Virtue the antecedent. Not to mention that the more eternal Felicity were remote from the Notion of Reward, the more 'twould ſuit the Character of infinite Goodneſs.

II. The Anſwer to the ſecond Propoſition can't ſtop us long The Manichee would not fail to obſerve, that Impenitence being nothing but the bad uſe

(i) Cyrus ille à Xenophonte non ad hiſtoriæ fidem ſcriptus, ſed ad effigiem juſti imperii. Cicero ad Q. fratrem epiſt. 1. lib. 1. fol. m. 98. D.

(k) Bis dat qui cito dat.

(l) Gratia quæ tarda eſt, ingrata eſt; gratia namque Cum fieri properat, gratia grata magis. Auſonius epigr. 82. See likewiſe Epigr. 83. and the Authors quoted in the Commentary upon theſe Words of Auſonius of the Amſterdam Edit. 1671.

(m) Prolus de rebus Gallicis lib. 11. ſub fin. pag. m. 392.

(n) Famian. Strada prolus. 2. lib. 2. p. m. 255. He ſpeaks of Leo X.

(o) Thus we ſhall touch upon in Paragraph II.

(a) Hoſtibus eveniant talia dona meis.

mention'd in the Title, and withal an Epitome of the Life of Origen. One can't read it without deploring the whimſical Fate of the Minds of Men. Origen's Converſation and Manners were admirably pure: His Zeal for the Goſpel was ardent to the laſt Degree. He ruin'd his Health with Faſts and Watchings. Coveting ‡ Martyrdom, he underwent with incredible Inconſtancy the Torments that the Perſecutors of the Faith uſe of Liberty, 'tis all one, whether you ſay that God condemns Men for not Repenting, or that he damns 'em barely for having ſinn'd. I own, that, generally ſpeaking, 'tis an Argument of Mercy, to be ready to remit the Puniſhment of thoſe who are ſorry for their Fault: But when a Promiſe of Pardon, upon Condition of repenting, is made to thoſe whoſe Impenitence we are well aſſured of; properly ſpeaking there's nothing promiſed, and the Reſolution to puniſh them is juſt as firm, as if no Favour had been offered them. If you would in good earneſt exempt them from Puniſhment, you'd hinder their Impenitence, which is a very eaſy Matter to him who is Maſter of Hearts. Here are again Argumenta ad hominem.

‡ See before pag. 2408. col. 2.

III. As for the third Propoſition and its Proofs, the Manichee might ask in the firſt place, whether the Origeniſt dares determine the Duration of the Torments that precede the happy Eternity. He durſt not determine it, not only becauſe he is ignorant of the Period, but likewiſe out of a fear to make it either too ſhort or too long. If he made it too ſhort, an hundred Years, for inſtance, he would fear the Accuſation of giving a Looſe to Sinners; and if he ſtated it a Million of Years, he would fear to come ſhort of the juſt Image of God's Mercy, and to draw upon himſelf all the Scandal of the pretended Cruelty of the Doctrine of Hell. So, he ſcarce truſts to the Nullity of Proportion between a Million of Years, and an infinite Duration; and the Difficulty do's not ſeem to be removed by ſaying, There's infinitely leſs proportion between the Duration of the Earth and Eternity, than there is between a Minute and a hundred Millions of Years. What's affirmed of theſe hundred Millions of Years, may be equally affirmed of as many Millions of Ages as there are Drops of Water in the Ocean. This number of Ages multiplied as often as you will, is a finite thing, but there's no Proportion between a finite and an infinite; and conſequently there's none between Eternity and any number of Ages whatſoever. Yet, no Body can forbear judging, that the Divine Juſtice would be leſs ſevere, if it put an end to the Miſery of the Reprobate, and introduced 'em into Paradiſe, at the Termination of an hundred Years, than if it put off that Change till after an hundred thouſand Ages. Lay what Notions you will before a Man, you can never ſatisfy his Reaſon, by telling him, that God will indeed be appeaſed at laſt, but not till the Infernal Puniſhment, ſuch as it is uſually deſcribed, ſhall have laſted as many Millions of Years, as there are Drops of Water in the Sea. That number of Years, which is nothing upon the Compariſon with Eternity, appears nevertheleſs a very long Duration when conſidered by it ſelf, and with reſpect to the Perſon that ſuffers. Let this proceed from what it will, whether it be that our Reaſon is too dull to be put upon, or that there is really ſome Source of Illuſion and Sophiſm in the Ideas of Time; You can never drive it out of the Head of a Philoſopher, that reaſons only philoſophically, that the Puniſhment of a Creature continued for a hundred Thouſand Millions of Ages is incompatible with the Sovereign Bounty of the Creator. We muſt ſuppoſe that an Origeniſt is ſenſible of this, and for that Reaſon he would not venture to ſay, that the Purgatory of the damned ſhall laſt ſo long. But to my mind a Manichee might puſh home upon him after this manner. Since you would think ſo long a Puniſhment cruel, take half the time only, and if you find any thing elſe in that Suppoſition, but a Diminution of the Rigour, you impoſe upon your ſelf; for fifty thouſand Millions of Years differ only more or leſs from a hundred Thouſand, and by the bare Diminution or Abatement of Cruelty we can never riſe from Cruelty to Sovereign Mercy or Goodneſs. Qualities (a) in ſummo gradu, for inſtance Heat do's abſolutely exclude all the Degrees of Cold; ſo that Goodneſs in ſummo gradu muſt needs exclude any degrees whatſoever of the oppoſite Quality. You can't therefore riſe to the Supreme Goodneſs of God, but by ſuppreſſing to the laſt Minute the Puniſhments of Hell. For what God can be for a Moment, he may be the ſame for two Hours, and two Ages, and through all Eternity; but whatever would be incompatible with his Nature in the Courſe of his Eternity, would be equally ſo in every inſtant of the Duration of things. The Qualities of a Creature are ſuſceptible of leſs and more, and never reach Perfection; but we call 'em perfect when their Deficiencies are not very ſenſible. We call a Pendulum true and juſt, when it do's not go out of order, above two or three Seconds in a Year: But the juſt Exactneſs of an Artificer of Sovereign Perfection, abſolutely excludes all Exceptions; his Goodneſs, his Holineſs, his Wiſdom, &c. are abſolutely ſimple, and without the leaſt Mixture of contrary Qualities: I ſay, the leaſt that either Conception can reach or the Nature of things receive.

IV. The Idea of this Goodneſs excludes all the Faults that are commonly met with in the way in which Men do good to one another. Some take Pleaſure in (b) Delays, others can't be ſerviceable without going about; and ſo, in ſpite of their own Wills, they are conſtrain'd to lead thoſe through Evil, whom they mean to lead to Good. Fathers who can't correct the bad Inclinations of a Child without the Laſh of the Rod, make his Body feel the ſmart of it; but this they would be loth to do, were they perſuaded that a boundleſs Complaiſance were the only effectual Means of Correction. They force a Child to ſwallow Medicines, attended with an inſupportable Bitterneſs and Gripings; but this they would not uſe, if they knew how to cure him otherwiſe. They would give Sugar and all things agreeable to the Taſte, if they thought they would prove a better Remedy. The exhibiting of a diſagreeable Potion being unavoidable, they ſweeten and qualify the Bitterneſs as much as they can (c) with liquoriſh trifling things; and, though they look upon the Complaints of the diſagreeable Taſte as a ridiculous Piece of Weakneſs, being perſwaded that in a ſhort time the Bitterneſs will diſappear, and the Remedy will give Relief, yet they would gladly ſave the Child this ſhort trouble, and accompliſh the Cure with the moſt palatable Liquors in the World, if they knew but how to do it. One may be ſenſible of ſuch a tender Diſpoſition of a Soul without being a Father. There's no Phyſician nor Apothecary, who do's not make Apologies for the Bitterneſs of his Remedies, and proteſt, that if 'twere poſſible for him to cook 'em up to the Reliſh of the moſt delicious Sauce, he would exert his utmoſt Induſtry to do it; but that a Neceſſity, which all the Art of Man cannot ſurmount, obliges him to inſiſt upon diſagreeable Medicines. Queſtionleſs this Language is ſincere, even when ſpoken in the preſence of Patients he never ſaw before. Put the Queſtion to a Surgeon that ſets the Arm of a Perſon unknown to him, if you could perform this Operation without cauſing any Pain, would not you do it? He'll readily reply, that the Queſtion is to no purpoſe, and that it ought to be held for an unqueſtioned Truth, that a Man of his Profeſſion, who knew how to dreſs a Wound two ways, equally good, the one painful and the other eaſy, and ſhould prefer the former to the latter, would be a Monſter of Cruelty, a Tyger, a Cannibal, that ought to be forth-with broken upon the Wheel. Generally ſpeaking, your Schoolmaſters are none of the beſt temper'd Men in the World; and yet I doubt much, if any Pedantry is ſo ſavage as to prefer the Whip to Careſſes, even when they are ſure that Mildneſs and Complaiſance would benefit their Scholars as much as Correction. Do not they give Sugar-Plums (d) to little Boys to conquer their Stubbornneſs? To chuſe and to laſh without Neceſſity, without finding that Method more profitable than Careſſes and Preſents, is certainly bruiſh.

This Induction might be amplified out of ſight; and from thence a Conſequence might be drawn that would put the Origeniſt out of Countenance; for one might from thence conclude, that both the Ideas of Experience and metaphyſical Notions conſpire to evince, that to hurt any one for never ſo ſhort a Portion

(a) Of this more hereafter under the Letter c.

(b) See p. 2412 above at the Letter m. Theſe Delays are ſometimes ſo uneaſy, that at laſt a ready Denial is aſk'd as a Favour. Jam, ſatis eſt, finem O Cæſar pro munere poſco Remque meam ſeu das, perfice, ſive negas. See Balzac, Entret. 27. pag. m. 276.

(c) Pueris abſinthia tetra medentes Cùm dare conantur, priùs oras pocula circùm Contingunt melle dulci flavoque liquore, Ut puerorum ætas improvida ludificetur Labrorum tenùs, interea perpotet amarum Abſinthi laticem, decepta que non capiatur; Sed potiùs tali facto recreata valeſcat. Lucret. lib. 1. v. 935 & lib. 4. v. 11.

(d) Ut pueris olim dant cruſtula blandi Doctores, elementa velint ut diſcere prima. Horat. ſat 1. lib. 1.

Faith (F) inflicted upon him: Torments ſo much the more inſupportable becauſe they were of long Duration: for the Perſecutors were very careful to prevent his † expiring in the midſt of the Torture. His Genius was great, fine, and ſublime, his Knowledge and Reading extreamly vaſt; and yet he fell into a prodigious * number of Herſies, the leaſt of which is monſtrous: And probably he fell into them by endeavouring to ſave the Truths of Chriſtianity from the ‡ inſults of the Pagans, and to render 'em credible even to the Philoſophers, which he deſir'd with the utmoſt Paſſion, not doubting, but that with their aſſiſtance he might convert the Univerſe. Notwithſtanding ſo many Virtues, ſo many admirable Talents, and a Motive ſo full of Zeal, he dyed a Heretick, and his Memory is abhorr'd by an infinite number of Chriſtians. There are but few in the Communion of Rome that dare doubt of his eternal Damnation. And yet how many voluptuous, worldly, lazy and vicious Doctors are there, who being at the ſame time very Orthodox, are daily loaded with thouſands of Benedictions for their unſhaken Firmneſs and Conſtancy in the true Faith? So far the Judgments of God are impenetrable! 'Tis not commonly apprehended that the Errors of Origen have a mutual Connexion; they ſeem to be † Doucin Hiſtoire de l'Origeniſme, pag. 81.

* Id. ibid. pag. 36.
‡ Id. ibid. pag. 37.

Portion of Time, and in order to procure him the greateſt Benefits, is incompatible with Goodneſs, unleſs it be down-right impoſſible to chalk out a ſtrait Path to lead him from Good to Good, in a conſtant and invariable manner. 'Tis needleſs therefore to offer, that the Torments of the damn'd, after laſting for a certain Time, which is ſhort in compariſon with Eternity, ſhall be followed with endleſs Felicity. This is ſtill incompatible with the Goodneſs of God, and ſo much the more, becauſe his Goodneſs is infinite, and of Sovereign Perfection, which can't ſuffer the leaſt Diminution or Interruption without ceaſing to be perfect. Do but call to mind the Doctrine of the Scholaſticks about the Nature of the firſt Qualities. Heat (e) in ſummo gradu, or ut octo, as they expreſs it, ceaſes to be a firſt, ſimple and perfect Quality, as ſoon as 'tis joyn'd to the leaſt degree of Cold that can be: Then it aſſumes the Nature of ſecond or compound Qualities. Eſſences conſiſt in Indiviſibili, and if you pare off the leaſt thing that can be, you deſtroy 'em utterly. They muſt have all or nothing; ſo that the ſlendereſt Tincture of a miſchievous Quality, blended with Goodneſs, ſtrips that Goodneſs of the Eſſence of perfect Goodneſs; and makes it ſhift Species, and belong to the Species of imperfect Qualities. A Proof of this you have in the philoſophical Axiom, ſet down in the (f) Margin. From this it appears, that if the Origeniſts mean to get clear, they muſt add a new Hereſy to the former; and maintain, that 'twas impoſſible for God to lead free-will'd Creatures to eternal Happineſs, without they underwent firſt the Miſeries of this Life, and then the Torments of Hell for a certain Time. They might plead, that as Fiſh can't live in the Air, nor Men under Water, ſo the Souls of Men can't live in Paradiſe, while they are loaded with the Filth that accrues from their Union with Elementary Matter; and for that Reaſon then there's a Neceſſity of purifying them in the infernal Furnace, after which they are qualified to live happy in the Cœleſtial Regions. Purſuant to this Suppoſition, the Goodneſs of God may be entirely conſiſtent with the Torments of the Creature; as the Friendſhip of an Operator remains entire and unviolated to the Perſon that he cuts, notwithſtanding the violent Pain he puts him to, which 'tis not poſſible for him to prevent. But to have recourſe to this Hypotheſis, is only to adopt part of the Errour of the Manichees; to ſave the Goodneſs of God at the Expence of his Power, and to ſay that Matter is an uncreated Principle ſo eſſentially bad that it is not in the Power of God to rectify its Faults. This is the way not to anſwer the Objections of the Manichees, but to make 'em triumph. The Remarks made upon the Phyſical Evils, with reſpect to the Goodneſs of God, may eaſily be applied to the moral Evils with reference to the Divine Sanctity.

(e) Compare what is ſaid before at Letter a.

(f) Bonum ex integra cauſa, Malum ex quocunque defectu.

V. We muſt take notice, that, if Origen was able to anſwer the Objections of the Manichees, it would not follow, that they might be much more reſolved by better and more Orthodox Principles, than his. For all the Advantage he can have in this Controverſy, proceeds from the falſe Poſitions, peculiar to him, which on one hand give a large Extent to the Power of Free-will, and on the other hand ſink everlaſting Miſery, and ſubſtitute in the room of it eternal Bliſs. The ſtrongeſt Argument of the Manichees is grounded on this Hypotheſis, that all Men, ſaving a few, ſhall be damn'd for ever.

VI. There's no Sect now a-days, that gives ſo ſmall a handle of Argument to the Manichees, as the Socinian; and that is only owing to their Departing farther than the reſt from the Hypotheſis of the (g) Particularists. But if they do not go yet further, they'll ſucceed no better in this Diſpute than the Origeniſts; they muſt ſink under it unleſs they joyn to their other Impieties, this Aſſertion, That Matter is a Principle that God can only diſpoſe of to a certain Point or Degree, beyond which he muſt of Neceſſity yield to its Reſiſtance, and accommodate himſelf to the incorrigible Defects he finds in it. If the Socinians do not yet charge themſelves with that piece of Blaſphemy, they ſhall ſee themſelves reduced to an Abſurdity, I mean to deny Truths juſtified by Experience; and that after this manner. They deny the Eternity of Hell, becauſe they can't conceive how it ſhould conſiſt with the infinite Goodneſs of God. They can't conceive that ſuch Goodneſs is compatible with a Hell of a hundred Times a hundred Thouſand Millions of Years. So many Ages of Miſery appear to them a horrible Cruelty. But in regard they'll never riſe from Cruelty to infinite Goodneſs by retrenching (a) a Thouſand Ages, and then a Thouſand, &c. while they leave any Years of Torment behind: Upon this Conſideration, I ſay, if they mean to avoid the Inconſequency, they muſt plead, that under a God infinitely good there can be no Hell. This proves too much. For then, this Theſis laid down, 'tis not conceivable that Men can be liable to Diſeaſes and Afflictions. So that from ſuch Principles there ariſes a Falſhood, and even the Impoſſibility of a thing that exiſts beyond all Diſpute, its Exiſtence being known to us by too troubleſome Experience. If you offer, that under the beſt Monarchs there are Dungeons, Tortures, Gibbets and Executioners, that frequently execute their Office: I anſwer, that none of theſe things would take place, if 'twere in the Power of thoſe Monarchs to inſpire all the World with a firm Reſolution of demeaning themſelves as they ought to do. How can they get clear of this Labyrinth, if ſo be, that God diſpoſes of Matter as he thinks fit, and is the free Author of the Laws that ſubject Man to ſickneſs and uneaſineſs? They muſt then at laſt be obliged to get off, by pleading, that God can't do whatever he pleaſes; and that Matter contains the Seeds of Evil, which ſhoot up one way or other, whether he will or not, and in ſpite of any Combination or Texture of the Corpuſculum's that he may have made.

(g) They are the Men who inſiſt moſt ſtrictly upon the literal Senſe of St. Paul, about the Doctrine of abſolute Predeſtination, the Neceſſity of Grace, and the loſt of Free-Will.
(a) See the Proofs of this above, pag. 2413, Col. 1. and, 2.

VII. This is the way of reclaiming thoſe who mean to ſubject Theology to Philoſophy. You muſt point out to 'em the abſurd Conſequences of their Method, and by that means bring 'em back to this Maxim of Chriſtian Humility, That Metaphyſical Notion ought not to be the Standard, by which we may judge of the Conduct of God; but That it behoves us to conform our ſelves to the Oracles of the Scripture. As for thoſe who may apprehend any Danger to the True Faith, from thus ſhewing, that by the bare Light of Philoſophy we can't make head againſt the Objections of the Manichees; I refer them to the Explanations annex'd to the end of this Volume.

(F) The Torments that the Perſecutors of the Faith inflicted upon him.] Of all the Martyrs that periſh'd under the (b) ſeventh Perſecution, (c) none was attack'd with more Obſtinacy than Origen... He was thrown into a dark Dungeon (d) chain'd with a large Collar of Iron round his Neck, extended for ſeveral Days upon a ſort of a Rack, which, by pulling his feet

(b) That of the Emperor Decius, An. 250.
(c) Doucin Hiſtoire de l'Origeniſme, pag. 81, & ſeq.
(d) Euſeb. l. 6. c. 39. Niceph. l. 5. c. 22.

to be the Product of a wandring and irregular Mind: But the juſter Aſſertion is, that they (G) ſpring all from one Source; and that they are Falſities of a Syſtematical Order, which form a Chain of Conſequences. Some of his Followers have carried 'em to the Senſualities we have ſince ſeen (H) among the Molinoſiſts. But that Carnal ſort of feet aſunder, diſlocated his Members, in ſuch a manner, that he paſs'd the reſt of his Life in Extremity of Pain. He was then 77 Years old .... Every Day they invented new Cruelties, related by himſelf in his Letters, to which the Ancients refer us, and which are ſince loſt. Oftentimes they threatned to burn him gradually, and at ſeveral times; and, during this cruel and long Martyrdom, which laſted, ſo far as we can judge of it, till the Death of Decius, he never uttered any thing that was unworthy of a Soldier of Jeſus Chriſt. Happy Man! If giving up his Soul in ſo glorious a Fight, he could have waſh'd off the Errors of his Doctrine with his Blood. But God did not permit it ſo to be. (2) He ſuffered much, ſays St. Epiphanius, and did not arrive at the Point to which Martyrdom leads. He touch'd the Crown with his Hand, without being able to ſet it upon his Head; and he, who in all appearance was only ſhort of Martyrdom, in not expiring in the midſt of his Torments, the Marks of which he bore to his Death, is an Hereſiarch, rejected and abhorr'd by the Church, for not believing as ſhe does. But this ought not to ſurpriſe us, ſince we read in the Acts of the Holy Prieſt Pionius, who ſuffered Martyrdom at that time at Smyrna, that a Marcionite was burnt by him, whoſe Sect was not leſs Heretical, though inſpired with a Deſire of Martyrdom; for theſe falſe Martyrs died, adhering to their Errors. What makes the Martyr, ſays St. Auguſtin admirably well, is not the Puniſhment, but the Faith that makes him bear it. Now there is no more Faith in him that riſes in oppoſition to the Doctrine of the Church. Where are the Men of this Character, whom they would give us for Saints, tho' we meet with nothing in their Lives that comes near the Virtue, or the Sufferings of the Martyrs; but only a more notorious Stiffneſs and Obſtinacy, than that of the ancient Hereſiarchs?

I have inſerted this long Paſſage of Father Doucin, without ſkipping the Reflection; for I thought 'twould ſerve for a Supplement to what I related above (d) with reference to the Charge laid againſt Maimbourg, touching the Marcionite Martyrs. I apprehended farther, that this would afford me an Opportunity of remarking, that the eaſieſt Means and Ways of diſcerning a good Cauſe, ſlip from us ſooner or later. 'Twould ſuit the Capacity of the People much more, to diſtinguiſh the true Religion by certain external Marks, than to enter into a ſevere Scrutiny of the Doctrine. Now of all the external Marks, the Conſtancy of Martyrs is moſt capable to make an Impreſſion. 'Twas abſolutely of good uſe in advancing the Chriſtian Faith; the Aſhes of Martyrs were the Seeds of juſt Men, and rais'd an Infinity of Proſelytes to the Goſpel. But this Proof became Equivocal when Chriſtendom was ſplit into ſeveral Communions: each of them had their reſpective Martyrs; and ſo, to avoid the being impos'd upon, there was a Neceſſity of entring into the Diſcuſſion of their Doctrine, and diſclaiming this compendious Rule of Truth: Such a Communion has Martyrs, Ergo it is good.

(G) The juſter Aſſertion is, that they (the Errors of Origen) ſpring all from one Source.] 'Tis in his three (e) Books of Principles, that he has (f) ſet forth and eſtabliſh'd them, and ſo link'd 'em one with another, that one may ſee 'em all ſpring from one ſingle Principle. " (g) 'Tis eaſy to demonſtrate, in the firſt place, " that what is Heretical and deſerves Cenſure, in his " Books of Principles, is not one or two Propoſitions " foreign to his Subject, but the very Body of the " Doctrine, the Subſtance of the Work, the Funda- " mental Propoſitions upon which the whole Syſtem " bears, and which can't be mov'd without over- " turning the whole Edifice. 'Tis demonſtrable, in " a ſecond place, that the ſame Errors which taint " his Book of Principles, are diſpers'd through all " the other Writings of this Author; inſomuch, that " the ſame Spirit reigns throughout, the ſame Ideas " come up every where. In lopping off his Errors " you muſt deſtroy the very firſt Elements of his Do- " ctrine.... (h) Such is the Condition of any one " that dares to ſteer a new Courſe in religious Mat- " ters: A formidable Series of Abyſſes and Precipi- " ces opens, every ſtep he goes. The more ingenious " he is, the more does the Itch of Reaſoning oblige " him to ſwallow Abſurdities; and that which " at firſt View ſeem'd to be only a ſlight Singularity, " and unworthy of being taken notice of, proves " in the end the general overthrow of all the Chri- " ſtian Doctrines. So fatal 'tis to make uſe of Inven- " tion, where plain Belief is only concern'd. ' The Author from whom I have theſe Words, ſays in another place; " (i) That which principally deſerves " our regard, is the unperceivable, and yet real Con- " nexion of all theſe Errors, one of which drew the " Author into the other, and drove him upon that " fearful Multitude of Novelties, of which his Sy- " ſtem is compos'd. For, as St. Jerom has well " ſaid, upon this Head, we muſt not imagine, that " Origen was a Fool or a weak Man, (k) and moſt " of thoſe who have read him, wou'd not have " charged him with ſuch frequent Contradictions, if " they had conſidered him more cloſely. 'Tis true, " his Book of Principles, as it now appears, is not " always of a Piece with the reſt of his Works, but " that is not chargeable upon the Author himſelf (l). " We all know what Pains Rufinus took in keeping " out of his Tranſlation whatever he thought might " occaſion its being condemn'd in the Weſt. 'Tis by " this means that ſometimes Origen, in Latin, at- " tacks thoſe very Errors, which in his other Writ- " tings he vindicated in Greek. Otherwiſe you'll " find Origen clear of Self Contradictions; if you bear " up to the Source of his Ideas, and look for the Key, " ſo to ſpeak, of his Writings, for aſſuredly there is " one, and we muſt not think that ſuch a Train of " Hereſies is any thing elſe, but the Sequel of the " firſt Miſtake; the Diſcovery of which ſeems as yet " not to have been duly purſued. ' Father Doucin lays down his Concluſions upon this Head, and gives us his Scheme of the Chain, and Coherency of Origen's Doctrine. This is well worth the reading in the Original.

(H) To the Senſualities we have ſince ſeen among the Molinoſiſts.] I ſhall here make uſe of Father Doucin's own Words; which are full of Seeds of Reflection, and point to the uſe we may now make of 'em. ' (a) While thoſe who contemplated without ſtudy ' fell inconſiderately into all the Chimæra's of Ori- ' gen; others, who ſaw further into 'em, and at the ' ſame time were more corrupted, perceiv'd that they ' afforded Conſequence very favourable to their diſ- ' orderly Lives. ' Upon the Plea, that the Fleſh is ' only the Priſon of the Soul, and by no means any ' part of us ſanctified by the Union with Chriſt or ' appointed to reign with him in Glory: From this ' Poſition, they concluded that the Uncleannels of ' the Fleſh could not taint the Purity of the Spirit, ' or deprive it of the Grace of the Creator. 'Tis ' manifeſt to what Abominations that deteſtable ' Principle did tend, which form'd in the Eaſt a ſe- ' cond ſort of Origeniſts, whoſe Lewdneſs was ſo ' notorious, that they merited the Name of Infa- ' mous and Diſſolute (3). This double Origeniſm, ' the one Carnal, the other Spiritual, is atteſted ' by St. Epiphanius, ſo that it ought not to paſs ' for the Invention of an Hiſtorian that would ' find out, in paſt Ages, the Portraiture of what hap- ' pens in our's. And far leſs can it be taken for a de- ' ſign'd Plot to give an Opportunity of ſpeaking of ' the preſent State of Affairs .... It the execrable ' Molinos, whoſe Character is the Reverſe of that of ' Chaſte Origen, became the Head both of a Spiritu- ' al, and of a Carnal Hereſy, we need not wonder at ' it. (4) The moſt Spiritual Hereſy, if it has ' has any relation to the Rule of Manners and ' Practice, opens the way to the moſt monſtrous ' Diſorders. One groans and accuſes himſelf af- ' ter the Commiſſion of a bad Action, which, ' he ſays, he could not avoid, God having de- ' nied his Grace. Another pleading, that God ' denied him the means of avoiding that Acti- ' on, concludes from thence, that it can't be cri- ' minal, and ſo he commits it without bluſhing. ' The Difference between the one and the other ' lies oftentimes only in the way of ſpeaking: The ' one ſpeaks as he thinks, and the other as he would ' have the World to think of him.'

(d) In the Remark E of the Article Marcionites.

(e) He compoſed 'em An. 217. See Father Doucin, ubi infra.

(f) Doucin Hiſtoir. de l'Origeniſm, pag. 31.

(g) Id. ib. pag. 36.

(h) Id. ib. pag. 37.

(i) Id. ib. pag. 323. & ſeq.

(k) Non eſt tantus Origenes. Ego novi. Contraria ſibi loqui non poteſt. Hier. apol. I. 2.

(2) Quæ cum legiſſem contulimque cum Græco, illico animadverti quæ Origenes de Patre & Filio & Spiritu ſancto impie dixerit, & quæ Romanæ aures ferre non poterant, in melioremque partem ab interprete commutata. Ruffin. Apol. I. 1. Si dedo intercetera ut eum hæreticum arguas, nihil de Græco mutes. Ib. lib. 2.

(3) Doucin ubi ſupra, pag. 149.

(4) Hereſ. 63 & 64. Horum vero hæreſes ad Epiphanis dogma conformata videtur de quo in Gnoſticorum ſecta ſermonem antea fecimus .... nuptias repudiant neque tamen obſcœnum, ſed ſanctificationem dulcem admittunt adhibentque omnigenere ſpurcitiæ & corpus ſuum, & mentem animumque contaminant Ib.

(4) See what Hucius ſays to prove, that there was only one Origen.

(1) That of Origeniſm was but ſhort-liv'd, and was eaſier pull'd down than the Spiritual Origeniſm that made a ſort of (I) Quietiſm. We muſt remember that one thing which gave Origen's Sect the greateſt Run, was this, that his Errors ſeem'd to be of ſufficient Force to refute the (K) Manichees, who puzzled the Orthodox very much with their Objections. One of the beſt Books this Author ever wrote, is his Anſwer to Celſus the Philoſopher, which was publiſh'd (L) in French, Ann. 1700. See the Margin *.

OROBIO

* His Treatiſe of Prayer, never printed before, was printed in Greek and Latin at Oxford in 1686. See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, for June 1686. Art. 8. 'Tis given out in the Preface, that Iſaac Voſſius had bought the Manuſcript at Stockholm; but the Truth is, as I've ſince learned from a Letter of M. Huet that was ſhewn me, that Voſſius carried it to Stockholm, having bought it about the Year 1636 of Mr Rums the Queen of Bohemia's Phyſician, who had bought it of the Soldiers who had pillaged the Library of Worms. This Manuſcript was conveyed from the Hands of Iſaac Voſſius to Herbert Thorndicius, and then to Dr. Gale, who put it into the Archive of Trinity-College in Cambridge. See Dr. Cave, de Script. Eccleſ. Parte 2. pag. 30. Edit. Genev. 1699.

(I) That Carnal ſort of Origeniſm ... was eaſier pull'd down than the Spiritual that made a ſort of Quietiſm.] " (b) One would not think it, and yet " it ought to be carefully remark'd, that a Carnal " Hereſy (c) is leſs to be feared by the Church, than " thoſe which obſerve all the Order and Regularity " of Life. Of this the double Origenism is ſuffi- " cient Evidence. The Carnal laſted but a ſhort " While, and was abhorr'd by all the World; and " even thoſe who were liſted into it did not dare to " produce ſuch a dreadful Doctrine in the face of the " World: Whereas the Spiritual Origeniſm, the " Abettors of which were (5), according to St. E- " piphanius himſelf, blameleſs as to the Purity of " their Lives, was not extinguiſh'd till two Centu " ries after its firſt Appearance: So effectually did " the Probity of thoſe who profeſs'd it, cover Ob- " ſtinacy and Pride, under the ſpecious Appearance " of Exemplary Piety."

I am ſtill obliged to tranſcribe this other Paſſage of Father Doucin (d). Evagrius.... Deacon of the Church of Conſtantinople went to Jeruſalem, and from thence to Egypt, to wrap up himſelf in Solitude.... His Head was full of Origen.... He had ſcarce enter'd his Deſart, when the Origeniſt Monks, ſenſible of his Worth, placed him at their Head, and for that reaſon the Church has ſince condemn'd him as one of the Heads of that Sect. He ſpent his Time in Writing Spiritual Books which were mightily eſteem'd, and of which ſome Fragments are preſerv'd to this Day, which indeed are very fine: And by that means the Error did ſpread wonderfully. This was ſoon perceiv'd by St. Epiphanius, and St. Jerome on his ſide caution'd the Faithful againſt it. 'Evagrius, ſaid St. Jerome, 'that Man who comes from the North, who from his 'Solitude writes Letters all over the World, ſends 'Inſtructions to Virgins, and Monks, and to her 'whoſe Name ſeems to import the Darkneſs and 'Blackneſs of Hereſy (He ſpeaks of Melania) that 'Man has thought fit to publiſh a Book of Max- 'ims, by which he pretends to ſtrip Man of all Senſe 'of Paſſions.' This is juſt the pretended Perfection of the Quietiſts. 'That is to ſay, adds St. Jerome, 'Evagrius will of his perfect Man make either a God 'or a Stone.'

(K) The Errors of Origen ſeem'd to be of ſufficient Force to refute the Manichees.] Upon this Head 'twill be moſt proper to make uſe of borrowed Words (e) Palladius was brought up by Evagrius in a Monaſtick Life; and he knew at leaſt as well as he the Art of ſetting up and ſtrengthening a Sect " The " Women, eſpecially ſuch of 'em as could read, " lov'd to converſe with him, and were eaſieſt gain'd " by his ſmooth Tongue. His Cuſtom was to be- " gin with raiſing a Suſpicion of the Orthodox Be- " lief by repreſenting it as full of Abſurdities, from " which it could not be clear'd but by Origen's Prin- " ciples. He wou'd ask them, for inſtance, (6) " What ill has that Child done, that you ſee ſo tor- " mented and poſſeſs'd by the Devils? At what Age " ſhall we riſe again? Muſt it be the ſame Age at " which we die? &c.... (f) Thus it was, that " Palladius made Origeniſm paſs for a Syſtem ne- " ceſſary to the eaſy and plain Explication of that, " which till then had ſeem'd to be the Stumbling- " Block of our Religion. Now, a Doctrine, thus " ſet forth by the greateſt Men of the Age, could not " but meet with great Reception, eſpecially conſide- " ring the Diſpoſition of the Minds of Men that then " prevail'd. In that Juncture of time their whole Care " was to anſwer the Manichees, whoſe Sect was then " become more numerous and more flouriſhing than " ever. Since there is but one God, ſaid thoſe He- " reticks, who is Omnipotent and infinitely Good, " how can he permit this Deluge of Evils that happen " in the World, and in which ſo many are involved " from their Nativity, while others are born in Proſ- " perity and Affluence? Notwithſtanding the appa- " rent Abſurdity of the Doctrine of two Principles, the " one Good, the other Bad, equally powerful and in- " dependent of one another, it found an infinite " Multitude of Followers, who were of the Opinion " that the Evils of this Life could not be ac- " counted for, without it. 'Tis well known what " Efforts St. Auſtin made to ſatisfie 'em upon that " Head. And we know likewiſe, that Pelagius, who " came after him, and whoſe Doctrine was preſently " received, applyed himſelf in a ſingular manner to " take off that ſort of Scandal, and anſwer the Que- " ſtion that was then ſo toſs'd about, viz. Whence " comes Evil? What's the Origin of it? Now this O- " rigin of Evil, and of the Diverſity of what's allotted " to every one's Share, was accounted for by none " with more Probability and Likelihood than by the " Origeniſts."

(a) Doucin, ubi ſupra. pag. 338.

NOTE, That the Origeniſt of the Perihaſiana makes an Eternal Beatitude to ſucceed to the Torments which the damn'd ſhall undergo for ſome Ages. That takes off the moſt ſhocking of all the Difficulties urged by the Manichees, namely, the Eternity of the Moral and Phyſical Evil of Hell. But Father Doucin gives a different Account of Origen's Doctrine, and makes it leſs appoſite for anſwering theſe Hereticks; for he affirms, that he equally rejected both the Eternity of Bliſs, and that of Miſe- ry. " (a) Beſides that the Eternity of future Puniſh- " ments ſeem'd to Origen to reliſh of Cruelty; he look'd " upon it as oppoſite to the eſſential Character of all " created things, namely, Inſtability. He was of " the Mind, that foraſmuch as God is uncapable of " Change, the Creature is equally uncapable of be- " ing fixed to any thing that's permanent and eter- " nal, whether happy or unhappy. Accordingly he " alledg'd, that when all the Spirits purified from " their Stains, ſhould have re-enter'd the Divinity " (1) of which they are an Emanation, they would " fly off a freſh from his Womb, like Sparks from a " Furnace, and for a Puniſhment of their Levity (2) " be condemn'd to re-enter new Bodies; for which " there would be a Neceſſity of creating New " Worlds, and ſo through the whole Circle of Eter- " nity there would be nothing but Periodical Revolu- " tions, like to thoſe of the Seaſons." Here Fa- ther Doucin's Marginal Note is worth our Attention, in regard it informs us, that Origeniſm was blended with a Sprig of Spinoza's Tenets, namely, the Identity of all Spirits with the Divinity. After citing St. Jerome's Words, that Author has this Remark. " (b) Take notice, That Ruffinus has lopp'd off this " Paſſage in his Tranſlation. Read the laſt Chapter " of the third Book, where theſe Words, & erit Deus " Omnia in Omnibus, are explain'd at large. St. Jerome " goes on thus. Ne parvam eſſe putaremus impieta- " tem eorum quæ præmiſerat, in ejuſdem voluminis " (quarti) fine conjungit omnes rationabiles naturas, " id eſt, Patrem & Filium & Spiritum Sanctum, An- " gelos, Poteſtates, Dominationes, cæteraſque Virtutes, " ipſum quoque hominem ſecundum animæ dignitatem uni- " us eſſe ſubſtantiæ..... Et qui in alio loco Filium & " Spiritum Sanctum non vult de Patris eſſe ſubſtantia, " ne divinitatem in partes ſecare videatur, naturam " omnipotentis Dei Angelis hominibuſque Latitur. Ex " quo concluditur (inquit) Deum & hæc quodammodo " unius eſſe ſubſtantiæ. Unum addit verum, quodam- " modo, ut tanti ſacrilegii crimen effugeret. See l. 3. " cap. XVI."

(1) In libro quoque tertio περὶ ἀρχῶν & poſt diſputationem longiſſimam ad extremum intulit, & erit Deus omnia in omnibus, ut univerſa natura corporea in eam redigatur ſubſtantiam quæ omnibus melior eſt in divinam ſcilicet, quâ nulla eſt melior. Origen apud Hier. Epiſt. ad Avit.

(2) Hier. ep. ad Avit. & Apol. 2.

(L) Origen's Anſwer to Celſus the Philoſopher was publiſh'd in French.] The Author of that Verſion is (c) Mr. Boulhereau ſo well known by the Learned Let- ters written to him by Tanaquillus Faber. The Merit of that Performance being ſufficiently made known (d) by our Journaliſts, I ſhall not need to ſpeak of it here. Only one thing I muſt ſay in con- firmation of an Obſervation I have oftentimes made, that we ought not to rely much upon the Diſcourſes that paſs in Converſation. I have heard a great many (b) Doucin ib. pag. 141. (c) See the Penſees Diverſes ſur les Cometes Sect 189, 190. (5) Nam licet nullum ſectatoribus ſuis uſum turpitudinis imponat. Hæreſ. 64. (d) Doucin ubi ſupra, pag. 177. & ſeq. (e) Id. ib. pag. 180. (6) Hier. Ep. 27. (f) Doucin, ib. pag. 182.

(c) He's a Native of Rochel. In the Epiſtles of Tanaquillus Faber he is call'd Elias Boherellus.

(d) See the Hiſtoire des Ouvrages des Savans, Dec. 1699. pag. 515, and the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, Jan. 1700, p. 3.

People

OROBIO (ISAAC) a Jewiſh Phyſician, died at Amſterdam in 1687. See the Bibliotheque Univerſelle †.

† Tom. 7. pag. 289. & ſeq.

OROSIUS (PAUL) a Spaniſh Prieſt, flouriſh'd in the Beginning of the fifth Century. See Moreri; for to avoid the Repetition of what that Author has written, I ſhall not purſue the Hiſtory of Oroſius, but ſhall content my ſelf with correcting ſome Errors that relate to it. Thoſe who gave him out for a Monk, and (A) dated his Death from 471, are yet more miſtaken than thoſe who made him a (B) Pagan, and every whit as much as ſome others who made him a Biſhop. 'Tis falſe, that St. Auſtin deſir'd him to compile an Hiſtory (C) of the moſt Remarkable Events from the People ſay, that the greateſt Men in the Reformed Church of Paris, and particularly Mr. Claude, diſſuaded Mr. Bouhéreau from putting that Book into French, in regard 'twas not proper all the World ſhould ſee the Pagan Philoſopher's Objections, and compare them with Origen's Anſwers. But Mr. Bouhéreau ſpeaks otherwiſe. He ſays (e) ſeveral Perſons of diſtinguiſhing Worth, and among others the famous Mr. Claude, thought it (‡) dangerous to put Origen in every one's Hands, by reaſon of ſome peculiar Opinions, that he has been all along charged with. Here's a mighty Difference between what I have ſo often heard, and what we learn from Mr. Bouhéreau himſelf, who knew the Matter of Fact better than any one elſe. And yet, though he does not mention that pretended Reaſon of Mr. Claude's Advice, our Journaliſts (f) have repeated and condemned it. Queſtionleſs they have heard it in Converſation, as I did. I was likewiſe told, that the Tranſlator was fully perſuaded, that, if he tack'd together all the Paſſages quoted out of Celſus by Origen, he ſhould make up Celſus's Book entire. But ſince no ſuch thing is hinted either in his Preface or his Remarks, I give no credit to the Report. Nothing could have been a better Proof of Origen's Fairneſs; and if it had been ſo, why was not it put into the Tranſlator's Preface, as a Recommendatory Inſtance?

(e) In his Preface. (‡) See what is offer'd againſt a Thought of the like Nature, in the Nouvelles de la Rep. des Lettres, for June 1686. pag. 691. (f) Ubi ſupra, pag. 522. and pag. 11.

(A) Thoſe who gave him out for a Monk, and dated his Death.] You'll find their Names in Philip Elſſius whoſe Credulity did well deſerve this Cenſure of Father Labbe's. (g) Ut omittam fabuloſos quoſdam Hiſpanos ſcriptores, quos citat ſequiturque Philippus Elſſius, qui Auguſtinianis ſuis Eremitis accenſet, vitamque ejus prorogat uſque ad annum 471. quo centenario majorem in Carthagine Spartaria in Hiſpaniis obiiſſe contendit, atque inde Romam aſportatum & in Eccleſia S. Euſebii, ubi partruus ejus jacebat, ſepultum. Sed hæc penitus incerta dubiæque fidei. Quid quod & nonnulli Legionenſem Epiſcopum fuiſſe putent?

(g) Philippus Labbe, Diſſert. de Script. Eccleſ. Tom. 2. pag. 175.

(B) Who made him a Pagan.] Father Garaſſe has been guilty of this Over-ſight, and that upon the occaſion of endeavouring to convince impious Men from the Teſtimony of Infidels. The ſecond Wonder of Nature, ſays he (h), which I ſhall here bring for an Evidence, is the Aſhy Apples of Gomorhah, and the Pillar of Salt, two Authentick Actions, atteſted not only by the Sacred Hiſtorians, and the Fathers who have written on the 19*th Chapter of* Geneſis, but likewiſe by all the Profane Hiſtorians who ſpeak of the Lake Aſphaltites, ſuch as Joſephus, Solinus, Oroſius, Pliny and Tacitus. Here you ſee another Blunder of Garaſſe, it being a falſe Aſſertion, that Solinus, Pliny and Tacitus made mention of the Statue of Salt.

(h) Garaſſe, Somme theologique pag. 192.

(C) Of the moſt remarkable Events from the Death of Jeſus Chriſt.] " (i) The City of Rome being taken " in 410 by Alarick King of the Goths, the Heathens, " to render the Chriſtians odious, charged them with " being the Cauſe of that Affliction, and of all the " other Calamities that weigh'd down the Roman " Empire. Now, 'twas in vindication of the Chriſtians " from that Aſperſion, that Paulus Oroſius, upon St. " Auſtin's Deſire, undertook to compile an Hiſtory of " the moſt remarkable Events from the Death of our " Saviour to his own Time; in order to ſhew, that " Calamities had always happened from time to time " in the World; and that the Roman Empire had " never been freer from them than after the Nativi- " ty of Chriſt." I here repeat Mr. du Pin's Words at length, to give the Readers an Opportunity of knowing the occaſion and ſcope of that Work of Oroſius: But they'll give me leave to obſerve, that St. Auſtin did not confine himſelf to the Events that appear'd after the Nativity of our Saviour; he deſir'd an Univerſal Collection of the greateſt Calamities that were recorded in Hiſtory. Præceperas mihi, ſays Oroſius (k) to him, uti adverſus vaniloquam gravitatem eorum, qui alieni à civitate dei, ex locorum agreſtium compitis & pagis pagani vocantur, ſive gentiles, quia terrena ſapiunt: qui cum futura non quærant, præterita autem aut obliviſcantur, aut neſciant, præſentia tantum tempora veluti malis extra ſolitum infeſtiſſima, ob hoc ſolum, quod creditur CHRISTUS, & colitur DEUS, idola autem minus coluntur, infamant: præceperas ergo, ut ex omnibus, qui haberi ad præſens poſſunt, hiſtoriarum atque annalium factis, quæcunque aut bellis gravia, aut corrupta morbis, aut ſanè triſtia, aut terrarum motibus terribilia, aut inundationibus aquarum inſolita, aut eruptionibus ignium metuenda, aut ictibus fulminum plagiſque grandinum ſæva, vel etiam parricidiis flagitiiſque miſera, per tranſacta retrò ſæcula reperiſſem, ordinato breviter voluminis textu explicarem. Of the ſeven Books of which that Volume of Oroſius conſiſts, only the laſt treats of what happened after Chriſt. Beſides, I doubt whether this Author undertook to ſhew, that the Roman Empire was never freer from heavy Calamities than ſince Chriſtianity. If he had, he would have found it a difficult Task to prove it. To my Mind Gennadius gives us a better Account of that Hiſtorian's Deſign; he makes it appear ſays he, that the Chriſtian Religion is the Cauſe why the Roman Republick, that did not deſerve a Duration, continued ſtill in being †. I know very well, that Oroſius challenges the Infidels to mention any Period of Time in which Men enjoyed ſuch wonderful Proſperity, as under Honorius; but that does not guard off the Criticiſm I am now upon. (a) Ex quo utcunque conceſſerim, ut licenter Chriſtiana tempora reprehendantur, ſi quid à conditione mundi uſque ad nunc ſimili factum felicitate doceatur. Manifeſtavimus, ut arbitror, atque oſtendimus non magis verbo pene quàm digito innumera bella ſopita, plurimos extinctos tyrannos, compreſſas, coanguſtatas, additas, exinanitaſque immaniſſimas gentes minimo ſanguine, nullo certamine, ac pene ſine cæde. Perhaps Mr. du Pin, in ſpeaking of Oroſius's Scheme, was thinking of a Paſſage of another Father, which he did not call up ſo diſtinctly as to aſcribe it to the proper Author. 'Tis there taken for granted that the Goſpel abated the Fury of the Wars, which had cauſed ſuch Deſolations in the World before the time of the Apoſtles. (b) Quamquam iſta quæ dicitis bella Religionis noſtræ ob invidiam commoveri, non ſit difficile comprobare, poſt auditum Chriſtum in mundo non tantum non aucta, verum etiam majore ex parte furiarum compreſſionibus imminuta. Nam cum hominum vis tanta magiſteriis ejus acceperimus ac legibus, malum malo rependi non oportere; injuriam perpeti quam irrogare eſſe præſtantius; ſuum potius fundere, quam alieno polluere manus & conſcientiam cruore: habet à Chriſto beneficium jamdudum orbis ingratus, per quem feritatis mollita eſt rabies, atque hoſtiles manus cohibere à ſanguine cognati animantis cœpit. That Argument of Arnobius may be reduced to this: Thoſe who have embraced the Goſpel have learned to bear Injuries, and not to oppoſe Force to Force; they have thrown off the Humour of Violence, and are become meek and peaceable: So that ſince the Publication of the Goſpel, the Effuſion of Humane Blood, and the Rage of War, are leſs than before, in as much as a good Number of People have embraced Chriſtianity. Arnobius adds, that the Reaſon why Wars are not altogether at an end, is, becauſe all Men have not followed the Precepts of Chriſt Jeſus. (c) Quod ſi omnes omnino, qui homines ſe eſſe non ſpecie corporum, ſed rationis intelligunt poteſtate, ſalutaribus ejus pacificiſque decretis aurem vellent commodare pauliſper, & non faſtu & ſupercilio luminis, ſuis potius ſenſibus, quam illius commonitionibus crederent: univerſus jam dudum orbis mitiora in opera converſis uſibus ferri, tranquillitate in melliſſima degeret, & in concordiam ſalutarem incorrupta fœderum ſanctionibus conveniret. Now if an Author took the one for the other, and aſcrib'd to Oroſius what is really Arnobius's, he might readily fall into this † Oſtendit magis Chriſtianæ obſervantiæ eſſe quod contra meritum ſuum Reſp. Romana adhuc duraret, & pace culturæ Dei pacatum retineret imperium. Gennadius in vita Oroſii.

(a) Oroſius lib. 7.

(b) Arnobius lib. 1. pag. 5.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 6.

(i) Du Pin Nouv. Biblioth. Tom. 3. pag. 156. Edition of Amſterdam.

(k) In proœmio libri 1. See likewiſe the Concluſion of the Work.

from the Death of Jeſus Chriſt, and that Oroſius compiled that Hiſtory after the (D) Death of St. Auſtin. We can give no Reaſonable Exception againſt Iſaac Caſaubon for his Contempt (E) of this Performance, though after all 'tis in ſome meaſure uſeful, and has bore ſeveral (F) Editions. The Edition I make uſe of is that of Cologne, in 1572, which does not contain ſo many of Franciſcus Fabricius's Notes as I would deſire to have.

'Tis believ'd Oroſius entituled his Work de Miſeria Hominum; which is a very proper Title, and ſuits Hiſtory in General (G), as a very judicious Author has well obſerv'd.

OSMAN,

this Advance, that Oroſius makes it appear, that the Roman Empire was never freer from heavy Calamities, than ſince the Nativity of our Saviour. But after all we ought to obſerve, that Arnobius does not at all prove that; for, beſides that a ſingle Aſſertion, without any Deduction of particular Inſtances, is not of ſufficient Force to ſatisfy the Complaints then made by the Heathens, we muſt needs ſee, that Arnobius here offers but a very ſlender Proof. Suppoſing part of the Inhabitants of any vaſt Empire diſclaim'd all Revenge, and carefully cultivated the meek Spirit of the Goſpel, can that hinder Foreigners to invade and ravage that Empire, and cover it with ſuch Confuſion and Calamity as they did not feel before? Now this is the very Complaint and Allegation that (d) Arnobius pretends to refute. He gives other very pertinent Reaſons againſt the ſame Aſperſion of the Heathens, as well as againſt that which was founded upon the Peſtilence and Famine that infeſted the Roman Empire: But at the ſame time we muſt acknowledge, that he likewiſe makes uſe of ſuch ſcandalous Arguments, that I do not believe Epicurus or Lucretius could have attack'd the Divine Providence with greater Force, or have ridiculed thoſe who attribute the Afflictions of Mankind to the Divine Wrath, more than he.

(d) Nam quod nobis objectare conſueſtis bellorum frequentium cauſas, vaſtationes urbium, Germanorum & Scythicas irruptiones, cum pace hoc veſtra & cum bona venia dixerim, quale ſit iſtud quod dicitur, calumniarum libidine non videtis. Id. ibid. pag. 5

(D) After the Death of St. Auſtin.] Andreas Schotus, the Jeſuit, falls into this Error. Defuncto, ſays he (e), hac mortali vita S. Auguſtino Romæ degebat, ubi ſeptem contra Gentes libris res Gracorum Romanorumque domi militiaque geſtas fideliter eo potiſſimum conſilio contexuit, quo ethnicorum calumniam quæ Chriſtianis mala calamitatelque temere imputabat refelleret.... florvit autem anno à nato Chriſto CCCCXL. St. Auſtin died in 430. Now, 'tis certain that Oroſius (f) finiſh'd his Book, when Vallia, King of the Goths, was juſt concluding a Treaty of Peace with the Emperor Honorius, that is, in 416. The laſt Words of his Hiſtory are addreſs'd to St. Auſtin, as being then in perfect Health; and we learn from another Paſſage (g), that St. Auſtin had publiſh'd no more than the ten firſt Books of his de Civitate Dei, when Oroſius was compiling his Work, according to the Scheme laid down to him by that Saint.

(e) Bibliotheca Hiſpanica, p. 206.

(f) See the Concluſion of his Hiſtory.

(g) Oroſius in proœmio Hiſtoriæ.

(E) Againſt Iſaac Caſaubon for his Contempt of this Performance.] This Caſaubon ſhews in very civil Terms, and with great Encomiums on Oroſius's Zeal. (h) Oroſium ex quo multa in hoc ſermone deſcribit, ſcriptorem alioquin optimum & zelo domus Dei plenum, ſi nimia facilitatis in talibus credendis poſtulaverimus, non deerunt viri præſtantiſſimi, quorum exemplo factum tueamur: non rationes validiſſimæ, caſtigatum virum αὐχυνωδίας, & nimiæ credulitatis, reum peragamus. Taceo rerum Romanarum ignorationem aliquando mirificam: etiam Baronio telle non ſemel. But Lipſius has not kept his Temper ſo well; for after taking notice that Oroſius thought Tiberius poyſon'd Drusus, he adds, (i) At me non valde movent ejuſmodi ſcriptores legitimæ hiſtoriæ (dicam iratis quorumdam auribus) dehoneſtamenta. And elſewhere, after regreting the loſs of ſome Books of Tacitus, he flyes out in an Apoſtrophe. (k) Adeo bonis illis patribus cura otiumque fuit deſcribere Oroſios & Vopiſcos & hujuſmodi quiſquilias præ tuo auro. This Sally of Lipſius do's not pleaſe me ſo well as Caſaubon's and Voſſius's moderate Cenſure. Voſſius only tells us, that Oroſius did not underſtand Greek; that he is oftentimes out in his Chronology, and too apt to relye on popular Reports. (l) Eſt Oroſius ſcriptor planè utilis: ſed qui ſcriptores Græcos non legerit: imo Græcarum literarum expers fuerit. In temporibus etiam crebro fallitur. Ut vel illa oſtendunt, quæ in eo caſtigavit Scaliger in animadverſionibus Euſebianis. Sæpius etiam vulgares jactatur opiniones, quam hiſtoricum (m). Perquirat, cujus eſt omnia ad veritatis trutinam expendere.

(i) Lipſius in Tacit. Annal. lib. 4. pag. m. 193.

(k) Id. in lib. 5. Annal. Tacitt, pag. 232.

(l) Voſſius de hiſtor. Latinis, pag. 217.

(m) Here's a groſs Fault in the Impreſſion: inſtead of Voſſius had ſaid quam Hiſtorici officium requirat, or ſome ſuch thing. Lower down, as I take it, we meet with another Fault. Haut inutilis Oroſius. Sed Tranquillus ad Tacitum?

(F) And has bore ſeveral Editions.] The Hiſtory of Paulus Oroſius was printed by Petit at Paris in 1506, as Mr. du Pin aſſures us (n). Geſnerus (o) does not ſpeak of that Edition; the ancienteſt he ſpeaks of, is that of Paris in 1524, apud Johannem Parvum aut Petrum Vidovæum in folio. He adds, that a correcter Edition was printed at Cologne in 1536, apud Cervicornum in 8vo. and ſince that another at the ſame Place, apud Jaſparem Genepæum in 8vo. in 1542. This laſt I have ſeen; and to it is prefix'd an Epiſtle Dedicatory by Johannes Cæſarius, who corrects the Text in ſome places. Franciſcus Fabricius of Duren publiſh'd this Book in 1561, at Cologne, apud Maternum Cholinum, in 8vo. and upon that occaſion ſpeaks of two former Editions that were full of Faults; one of which muſt be (q) of 1526, as appears from Fabricius's Words. (r) Hoc dico, dolendum fuiſſe, tanti viri tam fructuoſam Hiſtoriam adeo mendoſe hactenus in manibus verſari. Contulerat eam cum aliquot manuſcriptis exemplaribus ante annos XXV Gerardus Bolſuinge: laboravit deinde in eadem emendanda doctiſſ. vir Johannes Cæſarius: ſed profecto neceſſe eſt, ut vel eorum exemplaria non fuerint diligenter ſatis deſcripta, vel ipſi parum accurate opus perſpexerint. Tot menda relicta ab illis deprehendi, poſtquam eorum libros cum tribus manuſcriptis conferre cœpi. The Edition of Fabricius was publiſh'd again at Cologne in 1572, in 8vo. and printed by the ſame Bookſeller; to which (s) was added the Apology de Arbitrii libertate. Father Labbe (t) ſpeaks of this laſt Edition, as if it had been publiſh'd in 1574. I have a Copy that bears that Date. Mr. du Pin (v) dates it from 1582. Father Labbe (w) makes mention of an Edition of Paris in 1526, and of another at Mentz in 1615, cum notis Latii † & Schotte, quam nondum vidi, adds he. I am apt to believe the Figures are wrong printed, and ſo for one Edition we have two or three. For Inſtance, Mr. du Pin's Edition of 1506, and Father Labbe's of 1526, ſeem to differ only by an Error of the Preſs. But I leave the Determination of this Matter to thoſe who can come at all ſorts of Editions, and have the Opportunity of collating them.

(n) Du Pin, ubi ſupra.

(o) In Biblioth. fol. 539. verſo.

(q) In effect, 'tis ſo, for I have ſeen and peruſed it. 'Tis printed at Cologne apud Eucherium Cervicornum in 8. l.

(r) Franciſcus Fabricius Marcoduranus in Epiſt. nuncupatoria Oroſii

(s) See Voſſius de Hiſtor. Lat. p. 218.

(t) De Script. Eccleſ. Tom. 2. pag. 176.

(v) Ubi ſupra.

(w) Ubi ſupra, pag. 178.

† It ſhould be Ludovici Lauti & Andreæ Schotti.

Mr. Van Dale, Phyſician at Haerlem, famous for his Treatiſe de Oraculis, &c. has been ſo kind as to acquaint me, that he has an Edition of Oroſius, done at Venice, Opera & expenſis Bernardini Veneti de Vitalibus anno ab incarnatione Domini M CCCCC die XII. Menſis Octobris regnante Domino Auguſtino Barbadico.

(G) Which is a very proper Title, and ſuits Hiſtory in general, as a very judicious Author has well obſerv'd.] The Author I here mean is James Bongars. See his Preface to his Edition of ſeveral Hiſtorians of the Cruſades. He acquaints his Reader, that none but impious and ill Men will give in the Inſtance of the Wickedneſs, Superſtition and Impiety, recorded by thoſe Writers, as a Prejudice againſt Virtue, for Hiſtorians, continues he, do not relate what ought to be done, but what is actually done: Annalium Conſcriptores, ſays one of 'em (a), non qualia optant ipſi, ſed qualia miniſtrant tempora, memorare ſolent literis ex officio. Hiſtory is the Looking-Glaſs of Man's Life; and the Condition of Humane Life is ſuch, that the number of wicked Men is infinite, as well as that of Fools. Hiſtory is nothing elſe but a Repreſentation of the Miſery of Mankind. (b) Eſt humanæ vitæ ſpeculum, Hiſtoria: humanæ vero vitæ ea ratio, ut non ſtultorum tantum, ſed improborum etiam atque impiorum infinitus ſit numerus. Itaque recte omnino ſcripſit Paulus Oroſius de (1) Miſeria hominum inſcripſit. Etenim quid aliud Hiſtoria? cujus in ipo limine, primi parentis ſtultum cupidinem, impium animum horreas: mox madefactam ſanguine fraterno magnam Matrem: inde in omne ſcelus præcipitatum genus humanum.... Itaque, ex uſu & multitudine qui patrocinium vitiis quærit, is omnium ætatum, omniumque gentium biſtoriographos, is hodie hominum univerſitatem, à ſe habeat. Idem vero ſciat: cum de Veritate, cum de Virtute quæritur, illud diſceſſionum locum non habere: Hæc pars major eſſe videtur;

(a) Guilelmus Tyrius.

(b) Bongarſius, præfatione ad geſta Dei per Francos, in fine.

(1) Ita in antiquiſſimo libro inſcriptam Oroſii Hiſtoriam vidimus.

ideo

OSMAN, Emperor of the Turks, was excluded the Succeſſion to Achmet his Father, by reaſon of his Non-Age: But Muſtapha, his Uncle, who mounted the Throne after the Death of the Sultan Achmet, in November 1617 †, having ſhewn himſelf unworthy of ſo high a Poſt, he was remitted to his Cell, and Oſman placed at the Head of the Empire. He propoſed to ſignalize his Reign by a great Expedition againſt Poland; but it prov'd Unfortunate. Upon that he took up an Averſion to the Janiſſaries; and 'twas believ'd that under the Pretence of a religious Journey he ſought for a ready Opportunity of diſbanding that Militia. But they prevented him; for in 1622 they mutinyed (A) to that Degree that they turn'd him out of his Throne, non ſine Theſeo, I mean not without the Intervention of Religious Concerns *. Muſtapha being reſtor'd, put him to Death, and govern'd ſo fooliſhly, that he † was once more depos'd. This ſecond Depoſition ought to be imputed to (B) the Alcoran; for it was effected in purſuance of a Decree of the Turkiſh Pope: ſo the Mufti may be properly call'd.

† See the Mercure François, Tom. 5. p. m. 185; of the Year 1617. and p. 211. of the Year 1518.

* See the Remark A

† Note, That the firſt Depoſition conſiſted in forcing him to ſay, that he voluntarily reſign'd the Empire. Oſman, in the Letter he wrote to Lewis XIII. ſays, that Muſtapha had laid aſide his Dignity and deſpiſed it. That Letter is inſerted in the Mercure François, ad ann. 1618. pag. 208, 209.

"OSSAT

ideo enim pejor, quia major. Obſerve carefully what Bangars ſays, that at the firſt Entry of Hiſtory we meet with the Folly and Impiety of the firſt Man; that's the firſt Stage the Reader goes: the next Stage is the Earth ſoak'd with the Blood of one Brother, ſhed by the other. What Conformity is here to be ſeen between the Foundation of the Univerſe, and that (c) of Rome! I have taken notice elſewhere (d) of Malherbe's Reflection on that Action of Cain.

(c) Fraterno primi maduerunt ſanguine muri. Lucan. Pharſ. lib. 1. v. 95.

(d) In the Remark E, of the Article Cain.

(e) Nani, Hiſtory of Veniec, Book 4. p. 126, of the 2*d Tom. of* Tallemant's French Tranſlation, the Dutch Edition.

(A) They mutiny'd to that Degree] The Particulars of that Action, as related by Baptiſta Nani, are not ſo long but we may venture to inſert 'em. ' (e) 'The Turks have nothing of Moderation, either 'they adore their Princes as Gods, or kill them like 'Tyrants. Oſman, a very young Man, was Empe'ror of that vaſt State, who by an unhappy Succeſs in 'the War of Poland, being fruſtrated of that Glory, 'which he had fancied to himſelf, was much diſſatis'fied with the Janiſſaries, to whom alone he impured 'the Fault of his ill Fortune, for having ſhew'd 'themſelves as cowardly in the Field, as they were 'Fierce and Inſolent in Conſtantinople. After a 'Peace concluded upon Terms little honourable, he 'publiſh'd, that he would make a Voyage to Mecca, 'under a Shew of his Zeal for Religion, which was 'look'd upon by ſome as a vain Diſcourſe, and a 'Pretence to remain longer in the Seraglio. Others 'judg'd, that he conceal'd a deeper Deſign, to re'move the Janiſſaries from the Capital City, bring 'them into Aſia, and there, amidſt a great Force of 'the Spahi's, their Envyers, diſarm and diſband 'them, and form a new Militia. The Baggage was 'ſhipping in the Galleys; Tents and ſtore of Trea'ſure were carried along to ſerve in the Voyage, and 'honour the Sepulchre of that Impoſtor with vaſt 'Preſents; when the Janiſſaries, one to another, 'began to diſcourſe of the Fatigue and Hardſhips, 'to which, in ſo long a Pilgrimage, they were going 'to be expos'd, and of the Conveniences they left 'behind: that the farther they went, the more 'they would be expoſed to the Hatred and Cruelty 'of the Emperor, of which they were more ap'prehenſive than of any other Hazard. Upon this, 'from whiſpering in their Quarters, they fell quickly 'into a Tumult; a few beginning, but all following, 'they came into the place of the Hippodromus to 'the number of thirty Thouſand. From thence one 'part runs to the Houſe of the Coza (ſo they call the 'King's Preceptor, who was thought to be the Pro'moter of the Voyage) but not finding him, ex'poſed it to the Pillage; the reſt haſtened to the 'Seraglio with loud Cries, requiring the Heads of the 'Viſier, of the Chiſlar Aga, and of the Coza. They 'within wanted Force, and, had they had it, 'Counſel. The principal Perſons, who with 'Authority, might have oppoſed the inraged Mul'titude, were the very Objects of their Hatred, and 'were demanded that they might tear them to Pieces. 'Nor did the Emperor's Promiſe, to retract the 'Voyage, prevail any thing; for Tumults not ceaſing commonly with thoſe Satisfactions, it had 'been far from diſbanding that People, if a 'great Rain, interpreted by the Superſtitious Rab'ble, for a Siniſter Prediction, had not ſepa'rated them. The Night probably might have 'allayed that Heat, if ſome of thoſe of the Law, ve'nerated with a blind Ignorance by the vulgar, had 'not ſtirred up the Soldiers a-new, declaring Oſman 'to have fallen from the Empire; for that, by Sacrile'gious Actions, he had violated the Alcoran. The 'Janiſſaries then caſting off all Reſpect towards their 'Prince, throwing Stones at their Aga, who put 'them in Mind of their Oath of Fidelity, deny'ing Cuſſain Baſſa, who, to quiet them, offered three 'hundred Thouſand Sequins, forcing the Seraglio, 'though during that Night extraordinarily guarded, 'kill'd at the firſt Entry ſome Eunuchs, with Chiſlar 'Aga their Chief, and ſought after Muſtapha, Uncle 'to Oſman, who formerly had ſerv'd for a ſhort 'Space, rather for a Mockery than as Head of that 'Empire. They who would not or could not 'ſhew where he was, had preſently, in Pu'niſhment of Silence, or Ignorance, their Heads 'cut off. Getting down at laſt to a Cellar under 'Ground, they found him there, in a manner 'buried, and little leſs than dead; for they had 'kept him two Days already without Meat: ſo that 'to the Cries of making him Emperor, he anſwe'red, and ask'd a few Drops of Water. But 'he was ſcarce ſettled on the Throne, but he ſhew'ed himſelf equally Thirſty of Oſman's Blood. Oſ'man had hid himſelf; but being found when it was 'very late, and committed to the Cuſtody of the 'Buſtangi Baſſa, he was afterwards conducted to 'the Houſe of the Aga of the Janiſſaries, where 'Cuſſain Baſſa was. In many Anger yielded to 'Compaſſion, conſidering that young Prince, King 'by Birth, made ſuppliant to Fortune, and he im'proving that Compaſſion with his Intereſt, offered 'to the Janiſſaries fifty Sequins a Head. Some now 'relented, and the Chiefs conſulted about the Means 'to preſerve him, and re-eſtabliſh him to the Throne, 'when the furious Multitude taking him out of their 'Hands, preſented him to Muſtapha in the Seraglio. 'Oſman, with Tears, begs his Life of his Uncle, put'ting him in Mind of Gratitude for having, contra'ry to the Cuſtom of the Ottoman Emperors, pre'ſerv'd him for the Empire. But the Barbarians 'making Deſtiny the Author of their Villa'nies, Muſtapha excuſed himſelf, ſaying, that he 'knew he had oftentimes decreed his Death, but that 'God would not permit it. Left then in Prey to the 'Janiſſaries, and conducted to the Seven Towers, 'amidſt the Concourſe and Execrations of the Peo'ple, who having, during his Reign, endured all 'kinds of Calamity, Hunger, Peſtilence and War, 'deteſted him, as the fatal Occaſion of their Evils, 'his Head was cut off.' In the French Mercure (a) we have a much ampler Relation of the Death of Oſman, which does not in every point agree with that of Nani; and out of it I ſhall only take two things; one is, that the Gentlemen of the Law, and of the Sword (b) gave Oſman to know, that he could not go to Mecca, without violating the Law of Mahomet. They had procured this Deciſion in Writing from the Mufti; but Oſman, paying no regard to it, tore the Paper in Pieces. The other Circumſtance is, that after the Election of Muſtapha, there were ſome Perſons (c), who cried up and down the City, Long live Muſtapha, Sultan of the Turks, and read in a Sheet of Paper the Cauſes of the Depoſition of the Sultan Oſman, Setting forth, that he was depoſed for being Jaour, i. e. an Infidel, and having a Mind to put the Empire of the Turks into the Hands of the Chriſtian Dogs. This they ſet forth to render him the more odious to the People.

(a) Tom. 8. p. 357. & ſeq. ad ann. 1622.

(b) Mercure François, ibid. pag. 360.

(c) Ibid. pag. 366.

(B) Ought to be imputed to the Alcoran.] Muſtapha was a weak Prince, and the Prime Viſier, and other Favourites gave his Weakneſs a pretty ſort of a Name, viz. Sanctity, Devotion, Reſignation to the Will of God. They obliged him to lift up his Eyes towards Heaven, when he appear'd in Publick, and forged

"OSSAT (ARNAUD D') was left at nine Years of Age without Father or Mother, or any Eſtate. Some time after he ſerv'd the Lord of Caſtelnau de Magnoac in the Dioceſs of Auch who was likewiſe an Orphan, and ſtudied along with him, but ſoon ſurpaſs'd him. After their Courſe of Study was finiſhed, the young Lord's (A) Guardian thought fit to ſend him to Paris; and judged he could not do better than to commit him to the care of Mr. Arnaud d' Oſſat, his Preceptor and Governour, as it appears from the Guardian's Account to his Nephew. Thus he became Maſter to his Maſter. They arriv'd at Paris on Friday the fifth of May 1559. After that (B) two other Children, that were firſt Couſins to the young Lord, were put under his Care. They continued at Paris under the Conduct of Mr. d' Oſſat till May 1562, and then Mr. d' Oſſat ſending them back to Gaſcogne wrote to their Uncle in ſuch Terms, as (C) are worth knowing. Mr. d' Oſſat, applying himſelf to the Law, was known and eſteem'd by many Perſons of Note, and particularly by Meſſire Paul de Foix, who was then Counſellor in the Parliament of Paris. His Merit, joyn'd to the Intereſt of his Friends, procur'd him the Poſt of Counſellor in the Preſidial of Melun, which he ſtill enjoyed in 1588, as appears from a Letter of Attorney ſent by him to Paris, to receive a Gratuity given by the King. In the King's Warrant for that Gratuity, he is ſtyl'd Abbot de Notre Dame des Varennes, which is an Abbey in the Dioceſs of Bourges. From thence we may readily conclude they are miſtaken, who (C△) write that he was Dean of Varenes in the Dioceſs of Rhodez, when he was made Biſhop of Rennes. The reſt of his Life is ſufficiently known *. Several Original Letters of Mr. d' Oſſat, written towards the latter End of 1584, are to be ſeen in M. Colbert's Library, which forged ſome Miracles. The Mufti was not catch'd in the Noſe. He cauſed a publick Declaration to be made, that the Alcoran forbad Obedience to a Fool, and that in the Reign of ſuch a Monarch all Prayers were uſeleſs, all Marriages invalid. So there was a Neceſſity of depoſing Muſtapha; and in his place was put Amurath, the Brother of Oſman. (d) Il qual (Muſtapha) era huomo ſtolido, e la ſtolidezza di lui ſi ſpacciava per Santità, e raſſegnatione in Dio da Daret Primo Viſir, e dagli altri corteggiani, facendolo ſempre guardar in cielo, quando uſcìva in publico, e fingendo miracoli: fu depoſto, havendo il Mufti promulgato, che l' Alcorano vietava l' obbedienza ad un Re inſenſato, durante il quale erano inefficaci l' orationi, e invalidi i matrimonii. There's no Nation in the World ſpeaks more advantageouſly of their Monarchs, and the Obedience due to them, than the Turks: They are utter Strangers to the mighty Diſputes of the Weſtern Politicians, concerning the Origin of Sovereignty; they never ſpeak of any Original Contract between the People and the Kings; they do not enquire whether the Right of governing flows from the People; nor how far 'tis communicable. In their way, the beſt Form of Government is the deſpotick Power of a Monarch; to dye in Obedience to the Sultan (e), is a Step by which one mounts to the beſt Apartments of Paradiſe. Now, after all this, who would not believe that the Throne of the Grand Signior is fixed upon an unmoveable Foundation? And yet, if we conſult Hiſtory, we'll find there are no Monarchs in the World whoſe Authority is more brittle than that of the Ottoman Emperors. They are not ſatisfied with mutinying againſt them, dethroning them, ſtrangling them, during the Fury of the Sedition; they likewiſe make uſe of other means: They depoſe 'em very decently by a legal Proceſs; they deliberate with all Tranquillity and Gravity upon their Fate; they put it to the Vote, and condemn them to perpetual Impriſonment. Thus they ſerv'd Mahomet IV. in 1687; and we have now ſeen, that in 1622, they paſt the ſame Sentence upon Muſtapha. Upon ſuch occaſions the Alcoran is conſulted, as the Prophecies of the Sibyl were formerly at Rome: And if they get the Head of the Religion into their Intereſts they are ſure of Succeſs. If the Mufti declares, that the Law of God do's not allow 'em to pay Allegiance to a Prince that is ſick, fooliſh, unhapry, (f) a Priſoner, 'tis as much as if the Pope had excommunicated a Chriſtian Prince.

* This Article and the Remarks that belong to it, are a Memorial, communicated by the Illuſtrious Mr. Baluze, in which we have changed nothing.

(d) Giornale de Letterati, for Jan. 28. 1675. p. 3. in the Abſtract. of the Memorie iſtoriche de Monarchi Ottomani di Giovanni Sagredo Cavaliere, printed at Venice in 1673. in 4°.

(e) See Rycaut's Preſent State of the Otto-man Empire. Book 1. ch. 1. and 2.

(f) Ne' libri di Mahometto ſi vieta l' obbedienza à Re fatti prigioni per obligarli à defenderſi. Giornale de Letterati, ubi ſupra, p. 4.

(A) The young Lord's Guardian] This Pupil of Mr. d' Oſſat his Name was John de Marca, being deſcended from the Houſe of Marca in Bearn, by Jerome de Marca the Son of Peter de Marca, and of Margaret d' Andoins. Jerome was Captain of fifty Croſs-Bow-Men, and Governour of Furnes in Flanders, as it appears from his Contract of Marriage with the Lady Ameline de Riviere, Dame de Doublet & de la Paliſſe, and of ſeveral other Lands in the Neighbourhood of Caſtelnau de Magnoac. The ſaid Contract was ſign'd at Cominges, Feb. 12. 1341; in which, among other things, 'tis agreed, that the ſaid Jerome ſhall make his ordinary Reſidence upon the Eſtate of the ſaid Lady. From this Marriage ſprung a Son call'd Peter de Marca, who was contracted in Marriage with the Lady Catherine de Mun, the Daughter of Bernard de Mun, and of Paula de Sariac, May 7. 1398. The Sequel of this Genealogy, I do not know: but all that I have here inſerted I have copied (g) from the Originals.

(g) i. e. Mr Baluze: Apply this Note throughout this Article, where ever there is occaſion for it.

The Name of Marca, which is the true Name of this Family, was changed into la Marque, by the Authority of Mr. d' Oſſat, and that after this manner. In the Superſcription of the firſt Letter that he ſent to his Pupil's Guardian, who appears by his Letters to have been a very conſiderable Man, he wrote: A Monſieur Thomas Marca. But thinking that too Country like, he changed it, and wrote afterwards Monſieur la Marca, and at laſt, Monſieur de la Marque. And this is the Name they now go by. But the late Madam de la Marque, Margaret d' Eſpenan, caus'd one of her Sons whom ſhe deſign'd for the Church, to be call'd, The Prior de Marca. I have a Letter of that Lady, written to her Son, the Prior, December 12. 1659; in which ſhe tells him, that the late Mr. de la Marque, her Husband, had often given her a very exact account of the Genealogy of the Family of Marca in Bearn, and how the Family of Caſtelnau deſcended from them; and that her Husband had learned all this from his Father, who was above an hundred Years old when he died. Mr. d' Oſſat, being a Cardinal at Rome, ſent his Picture to la Marque, where it is ſtill.

(B) After that two other Children .... were put under his Care.] Of whom Mr. d' Oſſat, writing to their Uncle, December 27. 1559. (himſelf being then 23 Years of Age) ſpeaks thus. As for me, I promiſe to give your Nephews good Learning, and a good Example, and to furniſh them with any other thing within the compaſs of my Power, as long as my Life continues; which I'd rather part with than ſuffer them to want the leaſt thing that I know to be neceſſary for 'em.

(C) In ſuch Terms as are worth knowing.] The Words are theſe: Laſtly, Sir, as for the Thanks you give me for the Care I have taken of your Nephews, I look upon it as the reſult of your wonted Goodneſs; the Conſideration of which makes me think all the trouble and pains I have been at on that Account well employed: And I do aſſure you, Sir, that my Conſcience ſhall never check me for having fail'd in doing for 'em all that I know or am able to do. Here you may obſerve the Honeſty, and good Senſe of Mr. d' Oſſat, which did already appear in Affairs of ſmall Conſequence.

(a) The Life of Cardinal d' Oſſat, prefix'd to the Edition of his Letters publiſh'd by Mr. Amelot de Houſſaie. in 1698.

(C△) They are miſtaken who write, that he was Dean of Varennes in the Dioceſs of Rhodez.] In this part of Mr. Baluze's Memorial there's ſomething to rectify, as I am inform'd by a Book (a) that was publiſhed

" which have not yet been printed. They were written to the King and the " Queen, and to others †."

† Ibid.

The beſt Edition of this Cardinal's Letters is that of Paris in 1698 in 4°. to which Mr. Amelot de la Houſſaie has added ſome Notes with the Author's Life, accurately and very judiciouſly written. We are obliged to him for refuſing to follow the bad Counſel of thoſe, who would have (D) had him to reform d' Oſſat's Language. 'Tis a Scandal to the Nation that there ſhould be ſo many Perſons in France, who can't bear the Style of the XVIth Century; but this bad Reliſh is not ſo univerſal, but that many Readers are to be met with, who are for preſerving the Writings of that Time, ſuch as they were when compoſed by the Authors. This appears from the Fear the Paris Bookſellers were in, of not finding their Account in printing Philip de Comines's Memoirs in Modern French. See the Remark D. I wiſh Mr. Amelot de la Houſſaie had likewiſe forbore to alter the Orthography of the Original. 'Tis not likely that Mr. d' Oſſat checker'd his Writings with ſo many circumflex Accents, and ſuppreſs'd the Letter s in ſo many Places. This want of Likelihood is not agreeable to a Reader that loves exactneſs publiſhed ſince the firſt Edition of this Dictionary. Mr. Amelot de la Houſſaie obſerves (b), that the firſt Benefice Mr. d' Oſſat ever had, was the Priory of Saint Martin du Vieux Belleſme, which was given him by Cardinal de Joyeuſe, in January or February 1588. And as to what re'ates to the Abbey of Notre-Dame de Varennes, he never was poſſeſt of it, though indeed he was nominated to it by Henry III. The Grounds upon which M. Amelot de la Houſſaie goes ſeem to be ſtrong. The laſt is taken from the Funeral Oration of this Cardinal; in which 'tis ſet forth, (c) that having, with a good intention, accepted a conſiderable Benefice, that Henry III. had given him, and ſome Difficulties being ſtarted about the poſſeſſion, he forthwith reſigned it, without diſputing with any one. 'Tis probably the Abbey of Varrennes that's here ſpoken of; and by Conſequence, adds Mr. Amelot, they are miſtaken themſelves, who have written, that 'tis an Error to ſay, that Mr. d' Oiſat was Dean of Varen, in the Dioceſs of Rhodez, as he qualifies himſelf in the Petition he preſented to the Pope in the name of Henry IV. (d) or being his ſpecial Proxy and Deputy in the Affair of his Abſolution.

(b) Amelot de la Houſſaie his Life of Cardinal d' Oiſat, pag. 5.

(c) Id. ib. pag. 6.

(d) Id. ib. pag. 5.

(D) For refuſing to follow the bad Counſel of thoſe, who would have had him to reform Mr d' Oſſat's Language.] In his Preface to the Reader, he expreſſes himſelf thus. " We have not at all altered " the Language, and thoſe who give out otherwiſe " are the very Perſons who would have had it al- " tered; and taking it ill that their Advice " was not taken, have maliciouſly ſpread that Re- " port, with intent to depreciate this Edition in the " Eyes of thoſe who know how to put a value upon " Cardinal d' Oſſat, particularly all Stateſ-men. " This ill Counſel I oppos'd the more ſtiffly, becauſe I " always thought 'twould disfigure the nervous Style " of an Author, who was born for Negotiations, " and whoſe Way of ſpeaking is entirely conſecra- " ted to the Cloſet, if any one ſhould attempt to " make him ſpeak otherwiſe than he ſpoke and " wrote. Beſides, no Body would have ſhewn " the ſame Reſpect for my Style that they have for " this great Cardinal's. Witneſs what Mr. Deſpreaux " has ſaid of a Member of the French Academy, who " had look'd over ſome of Plutarch's Lives tranſlated " by Amyot. Witneſs again the Refuſal of ſeveral " of the moſt knowing Bookſellers in Paris, about " twelve Years ago, to print the Memoirs of Comines " which an ingenious Lady had put into better French. " So true it is, that the World is invincibly perſuaded, " that there are ſome Books which can't be new " vamp'd without ſpoiling them; and which reſemble " thoſe natural Beauties that never ſparkle more " than when in a careleſs Dreſs. Verbum non amplius " addam." As I take it, Comines, Montagne, and ſome other Writers, whoſe principal Beauties are inſeparable from their Style, will be a Proof againſt the Encroachments of Tranſlators. I am likewiſe of Opinion, that the Heptameron of the Queen of Navarre, which is now done into new French, will be rejected by Perſons of the beſt Taſte; but at the ſame time I believe the Booktellers will take more liberty with reſpect to many other Books: they'll give reviſed Editions with the Correction of antiquated Phraſes, and by that means will feed more and more the falſe Nicety and Sloth of a great many; for 'tis a ſhame that thoſe who pretend to read Books, ſhould not deſire to know how their Anceſtors ſpoke. This Abuſe increaſes and fortifies it ſelf every Day: Now a-days People do not care to read what was written in the Reign of Lewis XIII. Such Books will not ſell now, unleſs the Bookſellers get ſome Body to refreſh and renew the Style of the Writings of thoſe times. Thus they ſerved in 1699 the Hiſtory of the laſt Duke of Montmorenci (f) compoſed by the Sieur du Cros. This Practice has been long in uſe. I have ſeen an Edition of Joſephus tranſlated into French by Genebrard, which the Paris Booktellers had got purged of ſeveral Words, and ſeveral antique Expreſſions, and yet I do not think Genebrard had been dead thirty Years. The ſame Liberty have they taken with reſpect to Amyot's Plutarch, which the Sieur Sorel very juſtly diſapproves. 'Tis ſufficient, ſays he (g), to know that Amyot's Language was eſteem'd by the briskeſt Wits of his Age. They do him a great deal of Injuſtice in offering to prune ſome of his old Words, and clap others in their room. That's draining him of all his Strength and Simplicity. And yet ſome Paris Bookſellers have ſome Years ago publiſh'd an Impreſſion of that ancient Tranſlation in a large Folio, in which they have here and there lop'd off the old Words. Some were of Opinion, that this would make the Book read more agreeably, and thought it well done to allow of it. But others conceive, that we ought to pay more Veneration to good and antient Books, and that 'tis a Sacrilege in him that tranſlates after this manner, eſpecially conſidering that thoſe very Perſons, who were employed in that Work, were but ſorrily qualified for it. They judge it proper to let the old Tranſlation ſtand as it is, or elſe to make another quite new, if we pretend to have a better after the Mode of theſe Times. Neither do's he approve of the Alteration of the Original of Joinville. Theſe are his own Words: " (h) 'Tis " true, we find in the Hiſtory of Joinville a great " Appearance of the Simplicity of the Age he " liv'd in, and that the Men of his Rank, were " but little acquainted with the way of ordering or " drawing up a Diſcourſe. Nevertheleſs, I think " they have done us an Injury in charging many of " the old Words in his Book, as we ſee they have " done in divers Impreſſions; for at that rate it is " not the ſame Work, but an entire Tranſlation of " the old Language into the modern Language. And " in the end this may occaſion the Loſs of the Ori- " ginal, ſo that we'll be at a loſs to know from any " genuin Draught, how they ſpoke in the time when " it was compiled. 'Twould be much better if they " had left it in its firſt Dreſs, if there are any Paſſages " in it that are not very intelligible, they might have " put an Explication of them in the Margin, or elſe " in Notes annex'd; which Diverſity would have " made an agreeable March." He had ſpoke much to the ſame purpoſe before, in Pag. 252, in which place he obſerves withal, that Commines's Hiſtory, as well as that of Joinville has been printed ſeveral different ways, and that ſuch Words as were taken to be obſolete were changed. How ancient this Cuſtom has been among the French, you'll ſee by the following Paſſage of Stephen Paſquier. " (i) The like Fault we " meet with in our antient Manuſcripts of our Ro- " man de la Roſe, in each of which the French " Language is ſuch as 'twas ſpoken when the Copies " were taken, except the Rhyme of the Verſes in " which they could make no Alteration. Nay, you'll " there ſee a ſtrange hobbling of what the Copiers " have put in, I mean ſome Words of Picardy, Normandy, (f) See the Nouvelles de la Republique des Lettres, Decemb. 1699. pag. 670. & ſeq.

(g) Sorel Biblioth. Françoiſe, pag. 220. the Paris Edition 1667.

(h) Id. ib. pag 321, 322.

(i) Paſquier, recherches de la France Book 8. ch. 44. pag. 756. Edition of Paris 1621 in fol.

exactneſs. I can't paſs over in Silence Mr. de Wicquefort's Thoughts (E) of d' Oſſat's Merit. See likewiſe Mr. Perrault's ſecond ‡ Part of the Illuſtrious Men of the XVIIth Century.

‡ Pag. 12. & ſeq. of the Dutch Edit.

OTHO III. was not above twelve Years of Age, when he ſucceeded his Father, who died in 983. By this means it came to paſs, that the Beginning of his Reign was not free from Troubles: But all theſe Diſorders were happily redreſs'd; and when his Years qualified him for ruling by himſelf, he ſhewed himſelf richly worthy of the Poſt. His Preceptor was the famous Gerbert a Native of Auvergne *, whom he made Archbiſhop of Ravenna, and afterwards Pope by the Name of Sylveſter II. The moſt perplexing Affairs he had upon his Hands were at Rome, where Creſcentius endeavour'd to retain the Sovereign Power, and baniſh'd from thence Pope Gregory V. the Emperor's (A) near Kinſman. Creſcentius made Preparations for a vigorous Defence, upon the News of Otho's March towards Rome to puniſh him; but he ſcarce made any Reſiſtance, being obliged in a few Days to ſurrender himſelf and the Anti-Pope he had made. The Anti-Pope was whipt, and had his Eyes put out, and at laſt was kill'd by the Mobb before the (B) Emperor had time to condemn him. You'll ſee (C) what Creſcentius's Puniſhment was. This happen'd in 998. Pope Gregory V. being then reſtor'd, died ſome Months after; and thereupon Otho preferr'd Sylveſter II. to the Pontifical Chair. The Romans embolden'd by the Abſence of the Emperor, upon his Return to Germany, made a new Inſurrection; for they did not care to depend on the Germans. This laid Otho under a Neceſſity of labouring once more to reſtore the Tranquillity of Rome; but he took the wrong Courſe. He fed himſelf with Hopes, that if he appear'd ſola Majeſtate armatus, every one would reſume their due Allegiance; but he experienced the contrary. He was an exemplary Proof, that

* Du Cheſne, Lives of the Popes.

" Normandy and Champagne. Which are things that " a Reader ought to have a great regard to, before " he interpoſes his Judgment."

(E) Mr. de Wicquefort's Thoughts of d' Oſſat's Merit.] In this point he has done a great deal of Honour to his own Judgment. His Words are theſe. (a) I have nothing to ſay of Arnauld Cardinal d' Oſſat, upon the Conſideration that one can't ſpeak of him without doing him Injuſtice, ſince Antonius Muretus, the moſt eloquent Perſon of his Age, comes ſhort in endeavouring to make his Elogy in his Funeral Oration. I ſhall ſay nothing elſe of him, but that never did any Miniſter fill his Place with ſo much Affection, ſo much Zeal, ſo much Application, and ſo much Fidelity for the King his Maſter, as this Prelate did. As for his Capacity, we may judge of that by what we have of his Negotiations; for which, as well as for ſeveral other excellent Treatyes, the Publick is obliged to the late Meſſieurs du Puy, who are the Honour and Ornament of our Age. Inſtances of his Addreſs we have in his Negotiation with the Great Duke of Tuſcany for the Reſtitution of the Iſland of Il; in that with Clement VIII. for the Reconciliation of Henry IV. to the Church of Rome, for the Declaration of the Nullity of that King's Marriage with Queen Margaret de Valois, which had ſtood thirty Years, and for the Diſpenſation of the Marriage of Catherine de Bourbon, King Henry's Siſter, with the Duke of Bar, and for ſeveral other very important and very difficult Affairs. His Diſpatches are not leſs neceſſary to an Ambaſſador, that expects to ſucceed in his Poſt, than the Bible and the Corpus juris are to the Divines and Lawyers that mean to thrive in their Profeſſion. This Judgment is given with a Scientia Cauſæ; for Mr. de Wicquefort underſtood theſe Matters very well; and quotes Mr. d' Oſſat's Letters ſo often, that it appears he had read 'em over and over very attentively. We muſt excuſe his miſtake in ſaying, that Muretus made that Cardinal's Funeral Oration. That Orator had been dead a long time before, when the Jeſuit Gallutius did in 1604, pronounce at Rome the Cardinal's Funeral Oration. We muſt remark, that thoſe very Letters which Mr. de Wicquefort valued ſo much, are highly recommended to the Politicians by the Sieur Naudé. (b) Omnium meritò centuriæ utiliſſimæ dignitſimaque, quæ Politicorum mentibus atque oculis perpetuo obverſentur, Cardinalis Oſſati Epiſtolæ: utpote quæ graviſſimò ac planè ſenili cultu exaratæ ſunt, feraciſſimoque gravitſſimarum rerum ac ſententiarum ingenio, nuſquam laxæ, nuſquam molles, ſemper æquales, ſemper lectoris animum demulcentes, detinentesque jucundiſſimâ rerum ac rationum varietate.

(a) Wicquefort d' l' Ambaſſadeur, Book 2. Sect. 17. l. m. 423, 424. See likewiſe Sect. 10 of the ſame Book, and Sect. 7. of Book 1. pag. 573.

(b) Naudæus Bibliogr. Politica, pag. 558. Edit. Crenii. 1692.

(A) The Emperor's near Kinſman.] His Name was Bruno; he was the Son of Otho of Saxony, Duke of Franconia and Suabia, which Otho was the Son of Ludolphus and Grand-ſon of Otho I. So that Bruno was great Grand-ſon to Otho I. Grand-father to Otho III. Thoſe who make him the Preceptor of Otho I (c) have been ſeverely taken up for it. Some may doubt whether the Critick be in the right in giving the Quality of Duke of Bavaria to Otho the Son of Ludolphus; for 'tis certain on one hand that Bavaria being given by Otho I. to his Brother Henry, continued in the poſſeſſion of the Deſcendants of that Henry; and on the other, that Otho the Son of Ludolphus was Duke of Suabia after his Father: But at the ſame time 'tis equally certain, that Otho II. did, in the time of a War he had with Henry II. Duke of Bavaria, give Bavaria to Otho the Son of Ludolphus (d).

(c) See the Specimen Errorum publiſh'd by Perizonius in 1693. pag. 119.

(d) See the Hiſtory of Bavaria, by Blanc, Tom. 2. pag. 138.

(B) Before the Emperor had time.] Some ſay (e) the Mobb ſeiz'd upon the Anti-Pope before Otho was receiv'd in Rome; that they pull'd his Eyes out; that they cut his Ears and his Noſe off; that they ſet him upon an Aſs, with his Face to the Aſſe's Tail; and that Otho, to whom they afterwards opened the Gates, baniſh'd him to the remoteſt parts of Germany, where he dyed of Grief ſoon after. Thus you ſee ſome apply to the Anti-Pope part of what others ſay of Creſcentius. Some will have (f) it, that 'twas Otho who ordered the Anti-pope's Noſe to be cut off, his Eyes to be put out, and his Body to be thrown Head-long from the top of the Caſtle of Saint Angelo. Theſe Variations give a cruel diſreliſh to the Study of Hiſtory and are the Diſhonour of Mankind; for if Men were good for any thing, there would be a perfect Uniformity among Hiſtorians upon ſuch ſignal Matters of Fact as theſe are. But how can we expect that ſeveral Hiſtorians ſhould jump, when we find very often one and the ſame Hiſtorian is not of a Piece with himſelf? Do but turn to Matthias's Theatrum, and there you'll find in page 688 (g), That the Anti-pope was whipp'd, blinded, and at laſt kill'd by the Pope before Otho had condemn'd him; and in the very next page you have it, That the Emperor having caus'd the Anti-Pope's Noſe to be cut off, and his Eyes put out, threw him Head-long to the Foot of the Capitol. Imperator anno Chriſti 998 Romam profectus eſt, Antipapam naſo & oculis privavit, & de capitolio præcipitem dedit, uti ſupra prolixius diximus Theſe laſt Words are very odd; the Author makes a falſe Quotation of himſelf, for he had given a quite different Account from what he gives here.

(e) Petr. Damian. ep. 2. ad Cad. Ciaconius, Sigonius apud Maimbourg, Decad de l' Empire, lib. 2.

(f) Heiſs Hiſtory of the Empire, Tom. 1. p. m. 122.

(g) Anti-papa à vulgo virgis cæſus, oculis privatus, & demum conſoſſus, priuſquam de eo Ottо ſententiam tulit. (h) Ex Setho Calviſio.

(C) What Creſcentius's Puniſhment was.] They mounted him upon an Aſs, with his Face to the Aſs's Tail, and in that Poſture carried him through the City; then they diſmembred him in ſeveral Places, and hang'd him. His Accomplices were puniſhed, ſome one way, ſome another (h). Some Writers give the following (i) Account of this Matter. Creſcentius having defended himſelf as long as he could in the Fortreſs of Rome, endeavour'd to prevent his Deſtruction by going to throw himſelf at Otho's Feet; but that Prince ordered him to be carried back to the

(i) Glaber, lib. 1. & Ditmar. lib. 4. apud Maimb. Decad. de l' Empire, lib. 2.

that no Prince ought ever to expoſe his Majeſty unguarded, to the Diſcretion of a mutinous Mobb. The People of Rome took this advantage of Otho's having no Troops about him, that they block'd him up in his Palace; and if Hugh Marqueſs of Tuſcany, and Henry Duke of Bavaria, had not ſpeedily repair'd to Rome, and amus'd the People with divers Propoſals of Accommodation, till they concerted proper Means for the Emperor's Eſcape, 'tis not known what might have become of him in that his unavoidable Captivity. This happen'd in 1001. But this Prince having a Body of good Troops in Italy, whither he had return'd, only to expel the Saracens, from whom he retook Capua, was not long in returning to (D) Rome, with ſuch a Force that he puniſh'd them at Pleaſure. In the Beginning of 1002 he ſet out upon his Return to Germany, but died at Paterno, before he got out of Italy, on the 28th of January in the ſame Year. His Death was attributed to poiſon'd Gloves, that Creſcentius's Widow, one of the handſomeſt Women of that Age, gave him to revenge his Breach of Promiſe. He enjoy'd her upon Promiſe of Marriage, and after he had gratified his Paſſion, he ſlighted his Promiſe *. He was not happy in his Adventures (E) with Women; for the Lady whom he married †, joyn'd to her unchaſte Embraces another Crime, for which he caus'd her to be burnt; and this Lady (F) whom he did not marry was the Author of his Death. Thoſe, who ſay that the College of the ſeven Electors was erected in his Time, are β miſtaken; let the Erection be attributed either to Otho himſelf, or to Pope Gregory V. We may ſay with more Reaſon, that Poland was made a Kingdom by this Emperor, as I have obſerved in the Article of Boleſlaus I. We have a wonderful Account handed down to us of this Otho's (G) Penitence. He was ſo very devout γ as to undertake Pilgrimages; nay, they tell you δ he made a Promiſe to turn Monk. As for his Garment, upon which the whole ‡ Apocalypſe was embroider'd, I ſhall not bring it in for a ſign of his Devotion.

OTTOBONI (PETER) a Native of Venice, was Pope in the XVIIth Century, under the Name of ALEXANDER VIII. Mark Ottoboni, his Father, Grand Chancellor of Venice, bought a Patent of Nobility, which coſt him an hundred thouſand Ducats, in 1646. Peter Ottoboni having purſued his Studies firſt at Venice, and then at Padua, took the Degree of Doctor of Law at Padua, and ſo went to Rome at the Age of twenty. Under Pope Urban VIII. he had the Government of Terni, Rietti and Citta-Caſtellana, and the Poſt of Auditor of the Rota. He receiv'd the Cardinal's Cap under Innocent X. in 1652. Two Years after he was made Biſhop of Breſcia. He was Datary under Alexander VII, and at laſt was choſen Pope October the 6th 1689 in the room of Innocent XI. ‡. The War that flamed furiouſly between the Houſe of Auſtria and France, contributed not a little to the Election of Ottoboni; for the Neutral Cardinals did juſtly fear they would expoſe the Catholick Religion too much, if they created a Pope that was born a Subject of the King of Spain, as the late Pope had been, whoſe Partiality againſt France had done infinite Service to the Proteſtants. With this View they concluded, that Ottoboni, who was qualified for the Chair, would be a more proper Perſon than any other in that juncture, in regard he was a Venetian. The only Advantage that France reap'd from this Election, was, that Pope Alexander VIII. did ſo ſtrenuouſly animate the Venetians to wage War with the Turks, and encouraged them with ſuch effectual Aſſiſtance, that the Hopes of a Peace with the Turks

* Taken from Maimbourg Decad. de l' Empire. l. 2.

† Mary of Arragon. See her Article.

β See the Proofs for it in Maimbourg Decad. de l' Empire, l. 2.

γ See the Article Boleſlaus I.

δ Calviſ. ad ann. 1001. Chriſti.

‡ Matthias Theatr Hiſtor. p. m. 886.

‡ Mercure Gallant for October 1689.

the Caſtle, that he might take him by main force. There Creſcentius held out to the laſt Extremity; at laſt the Place was taken by Storm, and all was put to the Sword, excepting Creſcentius, who was taken much wounded, thrown Head-long from the higheſt place of the Fortreſs, dragg'd through the Dirt, and then hang'd upon ſo high a Gibbet (k), as to be expos'd to the View of all the City (l). According to Moreri he was only Beheaded; but Heiſs (m) ſays, that both he and twelve of his Accomplices were hang'd upon the higheſt Tree that could be found

(k) See the Remark B, in the Article Babelon.

(l) Maimb. ibid. p. m. 123.

(m) Hiſt. de l' Empire, Tom. 1. p. m. 122.

(D) Was not long in returning.] After weighing maturely the Narrative of ſeveral Hiſtorians, it ſeems evident to me, that Matthias is miſtaken, when he ſays, that Otho deſign'd to retire to Germany with intent to raiſe an Army there, that might inable him to puniſh the Rebellion of the Romans; but that he died by the way. At that rate he muſt have died without being revenged; which is inconſiſtent with good Authors (a). But after all, 'twould argue a great deal of Raſhneſs to give in this for a Fault; for the Hiſtory of thoſe middle Ages is ſo perplexed, and has paſſed through ſo many bad Hands, that we meet with Authorities pro and con, and for a thouſand ſorts of Variations. This curs me ſhort of a large Field of Materials; for if I ſhould venture to cenſure thoſe who relate Matters of Fact one certain way, there would be Witneſſes found to confront me. 'Tis almoſt impoſſible to lye (b) upon theſe Centuries. Do but tell the Circumſtances of any Fact, according to your Humour or at Random, you'll ſeldom be without an Author to favour your Relation.

(a) See Ditmar. apud Calviſ. ad ann. 1001, 1002.

(b) That is, to advance things without Proof or Authority.

(E) Not happy in his Adventures with Women.] It ſeems the Sex in general was unlucky to him; for beſides what I hinted of his Wife and his Miſtriſs, I have read ſomewhere (c), that 'twas for the Love of this Miſtriſs (I ſpeak of the Widow of Creſcentius) that he entered Rome with ſo ſorry a Retinue, as to run the Riſque of a perpetual Priſon. Add to this, that Theophania (d) his Mother, the Daughter of an Emperor of Conſtantinople, render'd him odious to many of the Grandees; and that after the Death (e) of his Mother, being bred up by Adelais his Grandmother, he thought himſelf obliged to ſend her from Court. Now, 'tis probable he did this, not by Advice of the wiſe Men of his Court, but out of an Opinion, that 'twas neceſſary for the Succeſs of his Affairs. But this did not hinder him from giving Governments to Women: During his Expedition to Rome in 996, he gave the Government of Saxony to Mathilde his Mother's Siſter, and after her Death to his Siſter Adelaid.

(c) Huber. Hiſtor. Civil. Tom. 1.

(d) Cluver. Univerſal Hiſtory in Othone III.

(e) Which happened according to Cluverius in 989. or according to Calviſius, Marcellinus, &c. in 995.

(F) This Lady whom he did not marry.] A certain Hiſtorian, whoſe Name is Glaber, ſays, Otho did marry her. But this we know for certain, that after he had admitted her into his Bed, he diſliked her and put her off.

(f) Ditmar. l. 4. apud Maimb. ubi ſupra. pag. 128.

(G) Of this Otho's Penitence,] 'Tis given out that he ſometimes faſted the whole Week, excepting Thurſday, and that he cried bitterly to expiate the Guilt of his Sins. The Latin will expreſs it beſt; (f) Plurima ingemiſcens facinora noctis ſilentio, vigiliis & orationibus intentus, lacrimarum quoque rivis abluere non deſtitit, ſæpenumero omnem hebdomadam excepta quinta feria jejunium producens, in eleemoſynis valde largus. Add to this what is related elſewhere (g) of his Pilgrimages.

(g) In the Remark I. of the Article Boleſlaus I.

(A) Mind'd

Turks vaniſh'd, which the Emperor earneſtly deſired in order to draw all his Troops againſt France. Beſides this, Alexander VIII. minded nothing (A) but the aggrandizing of his Family. He ſcarce troubled his Head (B) with the Difference between France and the Court of Rome. He only amuſed the Miniſters of Lewis XIV. and all on a ſudden by the Publication of (C) a Bull before his Death, he ſhew'd, that he had only made Fools of them. France changed her Style, in hopes to procure his Favour; for ſome time they had ſaid but little in praiſe of Innocent XI. and after that they had vented a great many hard things of him: The Poets and the Orators began to cry up his Succeſſor. But they found by Experience that the ſureſt Game would be, with reference to Encomiums, to obſerve Solon's Maxim (D) for determining the Felicity of a Man. Cardinal Peter Ottoboni was ſo old when he came to the Chair, that 'tis no wonder his Reign was ſo ſhort. He enjoyed the Papal Dignity but fifteen or ſixteen Months; for he dyed on the firſt of February 1691. A Prediction (E) relating to his Death was handed about, which looks very like an Impoſture.

OVIDIUS NASO (PUBLIUS) a Roman Knight, was one of the beſt Poets of Auguſtus's Age. I have a great Collection of Materials upon this Article, but can't publiſh 'em at preſent; ſo I ſhall ſingle out a ſmall part. Nature endowed (b) Ut quam maxime mortiferi eſſe morſus ſolent morientium beſtiarum, ſic plus negotii fuit cum ſeminuda Carthagine quam in integra. Florus l. 2. c. 15. Add to this theſe Words of Seneca Controv. epit. 9. In gladiatoribus quoque conditio dura victoris eſt cum moriente pugnantis. Nullum magis adverſarium timeas quam qui vivere non poteſt, occidere poteſt. Concitatiſſima eſt rabies in deſperatione, & morte ultima in furorem animus impellitur.

(A) Minded nothing but the aggrandizing of his Family.] What is commonly ſaid of Beaſts (b), That they are never more dangerous than in their dying Bites, may very properly be applied to the Nepotiſm. As it ſtood upon its laſt Legs, under Alexander VIII. ſo it gathered together all its Strength, to be the more capable to devour. It might have been ſaid of the Uncle, he is old, he makes haſte, knowing that he has but a ſhort time to ſtay. Mr. Menage told a Story, that will come in here patly. (i) Alexander VIII. (ſaid he) being choſen Pope at 79 Years of Age, and having preferr'd all his Nephews in three Weeks after, aſk'd one of his Domeſticks, what People ſaid of him. The Domeſtick made anſwer, That People ſaid he loſt no time in the Advancement of his Family. Oh, ſaid the Pope, Oh! ſono vinti tre hore e mezza, 'tis half an hour after three and twenty. To behave himſelf, as he did, with reſpect to an Abuſe that his Succeſſor ſhould have aboliſhed, was giving it an honourable Funeral. Perhaps Pope Ottoboni's great Age is not the only Reaſon that obliged him to ſuch quick Diſpatch in loading his whole Family with Riches; he conſider'd perhaps, that Rome had had time to forget in ſome meaſure the Diſorders of the Nepotiſm, which had been ſunk in the long Reign of Innocent XI. Upon this Conſideration the Complaints of the People might be fainter, and he had to do with Subjects, that had enjoyed a leiſurely time of Repoſe after their ancient Fatigues. This calls to my Mind the ſharping Tricks of Flatterers, and the Suppleneſs with which, like true Jugglers, they whirl about the moſt ſacred Things. But that this Criticiſm, which does not grow upon my own Bottom, may have more weight and Authority, I borrow it from a Book printed and licenſed at Paris. "Among (a) the Encomiums he (b) beſtows upon "Innocent XI. that which is moſt diſtinguiſhing, is, "that he kept his Nephews in a private Station, in "imitation of our Saviour, who knew no other Re-"lations, but thoſe who did the Will of his Father. "Alexander VIII. having Views oppoſite to thoſe "of his Predeceſſor, Palatio falls upon a way to "juſtify his Solicitouſneſs in loading his Relations "with Riches and Honours; and maintains, that in "that Point the Pope imitated the Example of our "Saviour, who honour'd his Relations according to "the Fleſh, with the Participation of his Prieſthood, "and entruſted them with the Diſpenſation of his "Gotpel: So fertile is Eloquence in Inventions, when "'tis employed in flattering the Paſſions of Gover-"nours, and excuſing the greateſt Irregularities in "their Conduct."

(B) He ſcarce troubled his Head with the Difference between France and the Court of Rome.] And yet that Affair was of ſuch Conſequence as to require a ſpeedy Concluſion; and if Alexander VIII. had had as much Zeal for the Intereſts of St. Peter's Chair, as he had for his Relations, his Mindfulneſs of the ſhort time he had to live, would have influenced him much more to make a ſpeedy Accommodation of the Difference with France, than to enrich his Family without loſs of Time. By his Delay he left to his Succeſſor the Glory of re eſtabliſhing the Authority of the Pope in France upon the ancient Foot; which it had been impoſſible to effect, had they tarried till the King of France was at Peace with his Neighbours. True Policy required, that the Court of Rome ſhould make the beſt uſe of the entangled State of France; and that Innocent XII. did very dexterouſly. Some Fanaticks who had conceived Hopes, that the League form'd againſt France in 1688, would be fatal to the Papacy, and that the approaching Ruin of Catholiciſm would begin with the Reformation of the Court of France, were very much out in their Meaſures; for that League has made France more Popiſh than it was in 1682 and 1688, and conſequently occaſion'd the Reparation of one of the Breaches of Popery. What Fools they are that mind ſuch Creatures.

(C) By the Publication of a Bull before his Death.] The Bull was quite ready Aug. 4. 16 . for it bears date on that Day; but was not publiſhed till January the 30th 1691. It thunders upon all that had been done to the Prejudice of the Pope's Authority in the Aſſembly of the Clergy of France in 1682. 'Twas not publiſhed ſooner, becauſe the Pope had a mind to amuſe Lewis XIV. and gain ſome Advantages by the Delay; but when he ſaw himſelf at the Edge of the Grave, he obſerved no further Meaſures, but let fly his Bull. This was of very good uſe to the Expounders of St. Malachy; they did not know how to apply to Peter Ottoboni the Symbol Pœnitentia Gloriosa, which concerns him in the Predictions of that pretended Prophet. They were not contented with ſaying, that the Election of this Pope was made on St. Bruno's Day, or that he bore the Name of Peter, though the Penitence of theſe two Saints was altogether glorious: This they looked upon as too forced and far-fetched: But the Bull gave 'em occaſion to ſay that Alexander VIII. had gloriouſly repented of his Indulgence for the Court and Clergy of France (c). Here I obſerve, that the Decree of the Inquiſition of December 7. 169 , againſt thirty-one Propoſitions, vexed the Divines of the Gallican Church. See the Letter (d) of an Abbot to a Prelate of the Court of Rome.

(D) To obſerve Solon's Maxim.] The Maxim is, That we can form no Judgment of a Man's Happineſs before he is dead; for thoſe who appear happy to us, may perhaps be plunged into the deepeſt Miſery, before they are diſmiſs'd from this World. Ovid (e) has expreſs'd this Thought of Solon very happily. The Inſtability or Obliquity of the Heart of Man ought to induce us to delay the giving of Encomiums, till the reſpective Perſon is no more. By this Caution we ſhall ſpare our ſelves the altering of our Language, and a great many other Things. Salvian was not unacquainted with this Maxim. (f) Sapientia, inquit ſeimo diviuus, in exitu canitur. Cur eam non dixit cani in pueritia, non in juventute, non in ſtatu rerum incolumium, non in proſperitatibus ſecundorum? Scilicet quia in his omnibus quicquid laudatur incertum eſt. Quàm diu enim quis ſubjacet mutationi, non poteſt cum ſecuritate laudari. Et ideo, ut dixi, ſapientia in exitu canitur. Exiens enim quis de incertis periculorum, certum meretur evaſa omni rerum varietate ſuffragium: quia tunc ſtabilis & firma laus eſt, quando meritum non poterit jam perire laudati. Sapientia, inquit, in exitu canitur.

(E) A Prediction was handed about.] A French Man, whoſe Name I conceal, had writ from Geneva to his Friends in Holland, towards the beginning of the Winter of the Year 1690, that at Milan a Man had been at his Confeſſor's, to acquaint him That

(c) See the Leipſick Journal for 1691. pag. 151.

(d) It contains 65 Pages in 12°. in my Edition, which is the 2*d. The Title bears*, according to the Edition of Toulouſe.

(e) Sed ſcilicet ultima ſemper Expectanda dies; homini: dicique beatus Ante obitum nemo ſupremaque funera debet. Ovid Metamorph. l. 3.

(f) Salvianus contra avaritiam. l. 4. p. m. 145.

(i) See the Menagiana, p. 208. Dutch Edit.

(a) Journal des Savans, Decemb. 15. 1692. pag. 711. Dutch Edit.

(b) i. e. John Palatius, Author of a Book in 5 Vol. in folio, printed at Venice in 1691, and entituled, Geſta Pontificum Romanorum.

ed him with ſuch a ſtrong Diſpoſition to Poetry, that, out of Love to the Muſes, he laid aſide the Cares and Projects that are neceſſary for arriving at Places of Dignity. But as his Inclination to Poetry extinguiſh'd in him all the Fire of Ambition, ſo on the other hand it fed and enflam'd that of Love. He was furiouſly (A) addicted to loving and making Conqueſts in the way of Gallantry; but likewiſe taught the Public Conſiſtence of a Syſtem a pernicious Science, of which Nature gives us but too many Leſſons; and which only tends to the Diſhonour of Families, and eſpecially of the poor Huſbands. He was baniſh'd for writing ſuch Books; but in all appearance, that was rather the Pretence than the true (A) Cauſe of his Exile. He employed in vain all the Turns of his Wit to pacify the Emperor, whoſe Favour nothing could procure. He dyed in the Country of the Getæ, where he had been confined. He married three Wives, the two firſt of which * he divorced, and the third he praiſed very much †. Some Critics

* Ovidius lib. 2. Triſtium, eleg. 10.

† Id. ib. l. 4. eleg. 3, & alibi

That he found his End approaching, that he ſhould die in two Days, his Brother in four, the Pope at Chriſtmaſs, and the King of France at Eaſter. The News-Monger added, that the two Brethren died at the time pointed to. As ſoon as they had Intelligence that the Pope was not dead at Chriſtmaſs, the News was dropt; but at the Siege of (g) Mons 'twas popp'd up again: And to give it the more weight, the Pope's dying at Chriſtmaſs was ſuppreſs'd, and 'twas given out, that the Man at Milan ſaid only the Pope would die in a few Weeks. 'Twere to be wiſhed, that ſome Body had given himſelf the Trouble of keeping a Regiſter of theſe idle Predictions. Had they been mark'd down Year after Year in our Chronicles, we ſhould perhaps have been leſs ſubject to be impoſed upon by 'em.

(g) In the Month of March 1691.

(A) Furiouſly addicted to the Venereal Pleaſure.] He informs us himſelf of the Qualifications with which Nature had endowed him for that Exerciſe, and the uſe he had made of 'em.

(b) Ovid. Amor. lib. 3. Eleg. 7. p. m. 146.

Exigere (b) à nobis anguſta nocte Corinnam,
Me memini numeros ſuſtinuiſſe novem.

He found himſelf freſh and gay in the Morning, after paſſing a whole Night in amorous Embraces, and wiſh'd to die in the actual Fruition of that Pleaſure. Nothing ſeem'd to him more ſuitable to the Life he had led, than to make his Exit in the like Exerciſe.

(i) Id. ib. lib. 2. eleg. 10. pag. 126.

Sæpe (i) ego, laſcivæ conſumto tempore noctis,
Utilis & ſorti corpore mane fui.
Felix, quem veneris certamina mutua perdunt!
Di faciant, leti cauſa ſit iſta mei!
Induat adverſis contraria pectora telis
Miles, & æternum ſanguine nomen emat.
Quærat avarus opes; & quæ laſſarit arando
Æquora, perjuro naufragus ore bibat.
At mihi contingat Veneris langueſcere motu;
Cùm moriar, medium ſolvar & inter opus:
Atque aliquis noſtro lacrymans in funere dicat,
Conveniens vitæ mors fuit iſta ſuæ.

What can one ſay, what can one conceive more proper to expreſs the Fury of a Temperament that's laſcivious to the laſt Degree? I do not believe that Lais the Courtezan, who died in the manner that Ovid calls ſo happy; I do not believe, I ſay, that ſhe deſired that Fate. This Poet's Writings of Love are the obſceneſt Pieces we have of Antiquity: not that we meet in them with the rank Expreſſions of Catullus, Horace and Martial, and the Scandals of the Sin againſt Nature, of which theſe three Poets ſpeak ſo freely; but the Quaintneſs, the Choice of Terms, that Ovid has affected, render his Works the more dangerous, in regard they give a very intelligible and very handſome Turn to all the moſt laſcivious Tricks and Impurities of Love. He do's not ſpeak upon the Credit of others, but as having practis'd thoſe things himſelf. 'Tis true, in his Apology, which he drew in the Place of his Exile, he proteſts he had not committed the Actions he deſcribed, and that his Head had a greater ſhare in thoſe Deſcriptions than his Heart. He boaſts that he had engaged in no Love Intrigues that could give occaſion for Detraction, and that among the common People he had given none of 'em occaſion to doubt their being the Fathers of their Wives Children.

(b) Id. lib. 2. Triſt. pag. 156.

Sed (b) neque me nupta didicerunt furta magiſtro:
Quodque parum novit, nemo docere poteſt.

Sic ego delicias, & mollia carmina feci,
Strinxerit ut nomen fabula nulla meum.
Nec quiſquam eſt adeo medià de plebe maritus,
Ut dubius vitio ſit pater ille meo.
Crede mihi; mores diſtant à carmine noſtro.
Vita verecunda eſt, Muſa jocoſa mihi.
Magnaque pars operum mendax & ficta meorum
Plus ſibi permiſit compoſitore ſuo.
Nec liber indicium eſt animi, ſed honeſta voluptas,
Plurima mulcendis auribus apta ferens.

(c) Idem. Amor. lib. 2. eleg. 19. in fine pag. 130.

To reconcile this with the 19th Elegy of the ſecond Book de Amoribus, we muſt conceive that what he ſays there of himſelf, is a Fiction of the Mind. He there exhorts his She-Friend's Husband to be jealous, and not to rob him by his Indolence of the choiceſt Sweets of his good Fortune. He would have that Man not to be a contented Husband, but a Rival.

Quid (c) mihi cum facili, quid cum lenone marito?
Corrumpis vitio gaudia noſtra tuo.
Quin alium, quem tanta juvet patientia, quæris?
Me tibi rivalem ſi juvat eſſe, veta.

It is certain, that a great many Poets repreſent their fortunate Adventures of this Nature, which are only Fictions of the Brain; but we are at a loſs to know whether this is Ovid's Caſe or not. We live at too great a diſtance from the Age in which he lived, and we can't doubt but that ſome People, when call'd in queſtion (d), will boaſt of their Innocence, though they are guilty.

(d) Ibid. in the Poems they had then own Poems brought in as Evidence againſt them.

(A) Rather the Pretence than the true Cauſe of his Exile.] He owns in ſeveral Places of his Works, that the two Cauſes of his Miſery, were, that he had compiled Books of the Art of Love; and had ſeen ſomething. He does not tell us what it was that he ſaw, but gives us to know, that his Books contributed leſs to his Diſgrace than that did; for he ſuppoſes, that upon his complaining to Love that, after labouring to enlarge its Empire, he could obtain no other Reward but that of being baniſh'd into a Country of Barbarians; He ſuppoſes, I ſay, that upon this his Complaint, Love made anſwer, You know very well that was not the thing that did you moſt harm.

(e) Ovidius de Ponto lib. 3. epiſt. 3.

Utque (e) hæc, ſic utinam defendere cætera poſſes.
Scis aliud quod te læſerit, eſſe magis.

He compares himſelf to unfortunate Actæon.

(f) Ovid. lib. 2. Triſtium.

Cur (f) aliquid vidi? cur noxia lumina feci?
Cur imprudenti cognita culpa mihi eſt?
Inſcius Actæon vidit ſine veſte Dianam,
Præda fuit canibus non minus ille ſuis.

(g) Inſcia quod crimen viderunt lumina plector: Peccatumque oculos eſt habuiſſe meum. Id. ib. lib. 3. eleg. 5.

He repeats in ſeveral places (g) the ſame Complaint of having ſeen, without Deſign, the Crime of another, and declares (h), that 'tis not lawful for him to reveal the Myſtery. Offers have been made to conjecture what it was; and the more ſilent Ovid was, the greater Itch there has been to penetrate into the Secret. Some perſuade themſelves, that he ſurpriſed Auguſtus in the flaming Crime of lying with Julia his Daughter, and confirm this their Thought by a Paſſage of Suetonius, from which they pretend to gather, that Caligula deſpiled his Mother, as being ſprung from Auguſtus's Inceſt with Julia. Alteram ſubjiciunt alii, nempe eum vidiſſe Auguſtum turpiter cum Juliâ filiâ jacentem.... Cui opinioni favere viſus eſt Caligula, dum matrem ſuam ſperneba[t], quaſi ex inceſto concubitu Auguſti, cum filia ſua Julia, prognatam (i). Certain it is, that Suetonius (k) relates, that Caligula would ticks (B) have contemn'd his Latin; they would have met but with a sorry Reception from (C) Alphonso King of Naples. I refer several Things to the Place (D) where I censure Moreri.

(h) Perdiderint cum me duo crimina, carmen & error, Alterius facti culpa ſilenda mihi eſt Id. ibid. Ut quid præterea peccarim quærere noli, Ut pateat ſola culpa ſub arte mea. Id. lib. 2. de Ponto epiſt. 9.

(i) Rictius de poet. Latin.

(k) Sueton. in Caligula, c. 23.

The

would not own Agrippa for his Grand-father by the Mother-side: He thought he was of too mean a Rank for that Character, and affirm'd, that his Mother was the Daughter of the Emperor Augustus and Julia: which did not move him to any dis-regard to his Mother Agrippina; for on the contrary, he would have despised her, if he had thought she had been lawfully born. The Abbot de Marolles (l) having said, that Ovid surprised Augustus using his Daughter Julia with too great Privacy, adds, upon the Testimony of Suetonius, that 'twas believed, that the Mother of Caligula sprung from the incestuous Embraces of Julia and Augustus. But, after all, Suetonius says no such thing; he only says Caligula gave it out so. The same Abbot (m) tells us, that Ovid was banish'd for having read to Julia, Augustus's Grand-Daughter, the last Verses of his Book de Arte Amandi, and for having surprised Augustus, using that young Princess with too great Privacy. But there's room to doubt of all these Conjectures; for Ovid having, in the Verses he composed in his Exile, and sent to Rome, omitted no manner of Submission and Flattery that might seem capable to mollify Augustus, we can't think that he would affect to insert in them what was most proper to feed the Emperor's Displeasure. Now, if we suppose the Emperor's Displeasure to have been grounded upon the Poet's seeing his infamous Embraces, we must likewise suppose, that Ovid could not but offend him grievously by the Affectation of saying, that his Eyes, being the Witnesses of a Secret he durst not reveal, were the Cause of his Exile. But I confess, that this is not a convincing Reason.

(B) Some Criticks have contemned his Latin.] Passerat owns, that he had profess'd the Belles Lettres a long time before he explain'd any of Ovid's Pieces; and that because he found a reigning Prejudice against that Poet. (n) Inveteravit enim opinio, vulgique famæ percrebuit, eum poetam esse non multæ doctrinæ, humilisque & nimium luxuriantis stili; atque etiam, si dis placet, Latinæ linguæ elegantiam nitoremque in eo requiri: adeo ut Italus quidam vel hac re inprimis nobilis, cum humanioribus literis unicum gnatum imbueret, illa mira artificio contexta mutatæ ter quinque volumina formæ in patrium sermonem converterit, ne, si Latine legeret, ex Ovidii scriptis sordes & barbariem colligeret beata pueri vena, quæ jam tum ad exemplum Maronis properabat. Balzac was not ignorant of the whimsical Taste of this Italian. I knew, (o) says he, that under the Pontificate of Leo X. a (p) Venetian Gentleman that was much esteem'd by Fracastor, and by whose Name he call'd his Dialogue of Poesy, had a Custom on his Anniversary Birth-Day of solemnly burning the Works of Martial, as an annual Sacrifice to the Manes and Memory of Catullus. And I knew equally well, that another nice Spark of the same time maintain'd, that the Corruption of the Roman Language commenced in the Person of Ovid, whose Metamorphosis he translated on purpose for the use of his Son, that he might learn the Fables without the Danger of adopting Ovid's way of speaking, and that in seeking out the Riches of Poetry he might not endanger the Nobleness of his own Style by a contagious reading. Scaliger observes (a), that Peter Victorius and Lambinus contemn'd Ovid extremely. Another Learned Critick complains upon the same Strain (b), without mentioning any Body.

(C) With a sorry Reception from Alphonso King of Naples.] When that Prince was with his Army in the Neighbourhood of Sulmo, he ask'd if 'twas certain, that Ovid was born there; and the People answering, that he certainly was, he saluted that Town, and pay'd his Acknowledgments to the Genius of the Country who had produced so great a Poet. He added, that he would willingly resign part of his Territories, to call to Life again that Man, whose Memory was dearer to him than the possession of Abruzzo. Urbem salutavit, gratiasque genio loci egit, in quo tantus olim poeta genitus esset, de cujus laudibus cum non pauca disseruisset, tandem famæ ejus magnitudine commotus: Ego inquit hanc regionem quæ non parva regni Neapolitani, nec contemnenda pars est, libenter cesserim, si temporibus meis datum esset hunc poetam ut haberent, quem morsuum pluris ipse faciam, quam omnis Aprutii dominatum (c).

(D) To the place where I censure Moreri.] I. His first Fault is a Misrepetition of the Distich, in which our Poet declares, that he will do Honour to his Country.

Mantua (d) Virgilio gaudet, Verona Catullo,
Peligna (e) dicar gloria gentis (f) ego.

II. In the second place 'tis a fearful Barbarism to say he was (g) of the Equestrian Family. III. 'Tis not true, that Ovid in the second Elegy of the first Book Tristium, says, that when he was young he bore Arms under Marcus Varro, when he travelled to Asia. The two Verses that Moreri cites do not imply that. The Verses are

Non peto quas quondam petii studiosus Athenas,
Oppida non Asiæ, non mihi visa prius.

The best Editions put it non loca visa prius, instead of non mihi visa prius; which two Readings are much the same, so that I can't see how Ciofanus, who follows the second Reading, could find in this Distich a Proof, that Ovid bore Arms under Marcus Varro, that he went with him to Asia, and after his Return from thence made a Voyage to Athens to study there. Sub M. Varronne, qui cum Asiam petiit militavit: inde reversus studii causa Athenas se contulit. Qua de re sic lib. 1. Trist. Non peto quas quondam, &c. (h). Any one may see, that this Distich proves, neither that Ovid bore Arms under Marcus Varro, nor that he went with him to Asia, nor that he went to Asia before he went to Athens. The Poet, praying the Gods to put an end to the Storm, sets forth among other Things that he was come to Sea upon an afflicting occasion, viz. to go to Scythia, and not to Greece or any other place he had seen before. IV. That Seneca was of Opinion that he pleaded some Causes at the Bar, is a false Assertion. When Seneca is cited short without any additional Term, we take it for Seneca the Philosopher, and without doubt Mr. Moreri meant it so; and yet we meet with nothing in Seneca the Philosopher that can prove, that Ovid pleaded at the Bar. 'Tis more likely to be found in Seneca's Father; but neither is it there; for there we only find, that our Poet studied the Art of Oratory under Arellius Fuscus, and declamed very successfully in his School. (i) Hanc controversiam memini me videre Nasonem declamare apud Rhetorem Arellium Fuscum cujus auditor fuit ..... Oratio ejus jam tum nihil aliud poterat videri quam solutum carmen. Adeo autem studiose Latronem audivit, ut multas ejus sententias inversus suos transtulerit .... Tunc autem cum studeret, habebatur bonus declamator. Hanc certe controversiam ante Arellium Fuscum declamavit, ut mihi videbatur longe ingeniosius, excepto eo quod sine certo ordine per locos discurreret. 'Tis probable Mr. Moreri owes this Fault to the Abbot de Marolles (k), who has cited Seneca to prove, that Ovid pleaded at the Bar. The Fact is certain, but instead of having recourse to the pretended Testimony of Seneca, he should have cited Ovid himself, who affirms, that he has pleaded for People, arraign'd at the Tribunal of the Centumviri, and that being chosen Arbitrator upon some Law-Suit, he decided it like a Man of Honour.

Nec (l) male commissa est nobis fortuna reorum
Usque decem decies inspicienda viris.
Res quoque privatas statui sine crimine judex;
Deque mea fassa est pars quoque victa fide.

V. Moreri should not have said, that, after the Death of his Father he applied himself entirely to Poetry; for in reciting his own Conduct he mentions no such Circumstance. He only says (m), that out of deference to the Remonstrances of his Father, he check'd in his Infancy his Inclination to versifying, and applied himself to such Offices as were proper for a young Person of his Station. He (n) takes notice of the Death of his eldest Brother, as preceding his Return to Parnassus; but he says no such thing with reference to the Death of his Father. And indeed how could he have said any such thing, since he declares, that he soon re-imbarked in Poetry, and that his Father (o) lived ninety Years? VI. The Emperor did not banish him to the Province of Pontus in Asia. He was banish'd to Tomi an European City upon the Euxin Sea, towards the Mouths of the Danube. VII.

He

(l) In the Life of Ovid.
(m) In his Notes upon the last Verses of the third Book, de arte Amandi, which are (sic) that he did not translate em into French.
(n) Quid vetat, Ovid. & præfat. pag. m. 218, 219.
(o) Oeuvres diverses, p. m. 406.
(p) His Name was Andreas Naugerius. See Strada Prolus. 5. lib. 2. p. m. 334, 335.
(a) Petrus Victorius de Ovidio non veritus sit dicere, eum ut oratione & versibus, ita vita & moribus enervatum ... Non longe ab hac temeraria sententia discedit Dionysius Lambinus, qui impertitissime eum malum Latinitatis auctorem vocat.
Grotius in Conf. ad fabulæ Burdonum pag. 217.
(b) Moretus in Senec. Quæst. Nat. l. 3. c. 27.
(c) Jovianus Pontanus de Principe, fol. 54. verso oper. Tom. 1. edit. Florent. 1520. in 8vo.
(d) Ovid amor. l. 3. eleg. 15.
(e) Ovid was born at Sulmo in the Country of the Peligni.
(f) Moreri has ero instead of ego.
(g) This is corrected in the Dutch Edition.
(h) Hercules Ciofanus in vita Ovidii.
(i) Senec. pater, controvers. 10. sive 2. libri 2. p. m. 153.
(k) In the Life of Ovid.
(l) Ovid. Trist. lib. 2. pag. m. 150.
(m) Sæpe pater dixit studium quid inutile tentas? Mæonides nullas ipse reliquit opes. Motus eram dictis, totoque Helicone relicto, Scribere conabar verba soluta modis. Sponte sua carmen numeros veniebat ad aptos. Et, quod tentabam scribere, versus erat. Ovidius, Trist. l. 4. eleg. 10.
(n) Id. ib.
(o) Id. ib.

The beſt of Ovid's Pieces is his Metamorphoſis. This was the Judgment of the Author himſelf; and 'twas from thence chiefly that he expected his Name would be immortalized. He foretold that that (E) Performance would be Proof againſt Sword, Fire, Thunder, and the Injuries of Time; and that Prediction has not yet prov'd falſe. The Exordium or Beginning of that Poem is one of the fineſt Parts in the Whole. 'Tis a Deſcription of the Chaos, and the manner in which the Univerſe was form'd out of it. Nothing can be cleaner or more intelligible than that noble Deſcription, if we confine our ſelves only to the Poetical Phraſes; but if we ſift his Doctrines, we find them incoherent and contradictory, and a more frightful Chaos than that which he deſcribes. This gives me the Opportunity of performing a Promiſe I have * made; by enquiring whether the Idea's (F) of the Ancients that ſpoke of the Chaos were juſt; and whether they

* In the Remark H of the Article Anaxagoras.

(p) Carm. ad. v. 157. varon pose of is Opere , not. in. in epiſt. v. l. 2. ) In vi- Ovidii. ) See the emark A, etter j nd g. ) He itter'd mſelf ith the pinion of ing the ather of he Child ith which e was big. tamen ut ex me ceperet, aut go credo. ſit mihi ro facto ope, quod ſic poteſt: Ovid. Amor. l 2. leg. 13. t) Ovid Amoribus ib. 1. eleg. 5. v) Id. ib. 4. Triſt. eleg. 10. w) It hould be Iiow or Iiovia. lofman as like- iſe call'd it Kiour. Mr. de Marolles in the Life of Ovid calls it Xiovia. (x) Ne timeam gentes quas non bene ſubmovet Iſter. Id. ib. lib. 2. See likewiſe lib. 3. eleg. 10. (y) Hercules Ciofanus in vita Ovidii. pag. m. 29. (a) Ovid. Metam. lib. 15. in fine.

He ſhould not have mention'd without Cenſure the Opinion of thoſe, who ſay he was baniſhed for having made love to Julia the Daughter of Auguſtus, whom he loved under the Name of Corinna. This Opinion is very ancient; Sidonius Apollinaris approves of it.

Et (p) te carmina per libidinoſa
Notum Naſo tenet, Tomoſque miſſum,
Quondam Cæſaree nimis puellæ
Falſo nomine ſuditum Corinne.

But Aldus Manutius (q) refutes it with three Reaſons. The firſt is, that Ovid inceſſantly repeats, that his Exile was only owing to two Cauſes, namely, his Writing amorous Verſes, and a Fault that he does not reveal, (r) which was fortuitous and involuntary. Now, that can be ſaid of his Amours with Auguſtus's Daughter, carried to the Pitch of Enjoyment. Our Poet did go that length with Corinna, as he tells us himſelf (ſ).

Singula (t) quid referam? nil non laudabile vidi:
Et nudam poſſi corpus ad uſque meum.
Cætera quis neſcit? Laſſi requievimus ambo.
Proveniant medii ſic mihi ſæpe dies.

Aldus Manutius's ſecond Reaſon is borrowed from Ovid's being very young when he ſerv'd his Corinna.

Carmina (u) cum primùm populo juvenilia legi,
Barba reſecta mihi bis ſemelve fuit.
Moverat ingenium totam cantata per Urbem
Nomine non vero dicta Corinna mihi.

Theſe Verſes import, that Ovid was but about twenty Years of Age when he ſung his Amours for his pretended Corinna. Now, when Auguſtus baniſh'd him he was fifty Years old: And, pray, what probability is there that the Emperor would be ſo ſlow in diſcovering the Commerce of his Daughter with a Poet, and in puniſhing him? In fine, Manutius obſerves, that Ovid wou'd not have mention'd his Corinna in his Verſes with ſo much Complaiſance, if ſhe had been the Cauſe of the Diſgrace, that he deplores ſo heavily. VIII. I do not know any that ſay he addreſs'd himſelf to Livia, Auguſtus's Wife, and that he compoſed his Books de arte Amandi, for her. If there are any ſuch, they deſerve to be refuted more ſeverely than Sidonius Apollinaris. IX. Thoſe who ſay, that the City Tomi, near which he was buried, is now call'd (w) Kiour, are as groſly miſtaken as thoſe who ſay 'tis call'd Tomiſuar. And upon that conſideration Mr. Moreri ſhould not have mention'd theſe things, without acquainting his Reader that they are falſe. The Town of Tomi, to which Ovid was baniſh'd, was (x) on this ſide the Danube, with reſpect to Italy; which does not ſuit either with Kiovia upon the Boryſthenes, or Temiſwar a City in Tranſylvania. X. What Moreri relates of Ovid's Tomb its being found at Sabaria, or the Auſtrian Stainen, upon the Save, is altogether falſe, as I ſhall make it appear ſometime or other. XI. 'Twas in 1540, and not in 1548, that the Queen of Hungary ſhew'd our Poet's Pen. (y) Iſabella Pannoniæ Regina circiter annum M. D. X L. Ovidii calamum ex argento Tauruni, quæ eſt urbs inferiora Pannoniæ, oſtendit Petro Angelio Bargæo, qui hoc ipſum mihi narravit, cum hac inſcriptione OVIDII NASONIS CALAMUS; qui non multo ante id tempus ſub quibuſdam antiquis ruinis fuerat repertus. Eum Regina ipſa plurimi faciebat, & velut rem ſacram, carum habebat. Under the Article of this Queen, I have taken notice of her Learning.

(E) He foretold that that Performance would be Proof againſt Sword and Fire.] The nine Verſes which make the Concluſion of it are theſe.

Jamque (a) opus exegi, quod nec Jovis ira, nec ignes,
Nec poterit ferrum, nec edax abolere vetuſtas.

Cum volet illa dies, quæ nil niſi corporis hujus
Jus habet, incerti ſpatium mihi finiat ævi:
Parte tamen meliore mei ſuper alta perennis
Aſtra ferar, nomenque erit indelebile noſtrum.
Quaque patet domitis Romana potentia terris,
Ore legar populi: perque omnia ſecula famâ,
Si quid habent veri vatum præſagia, vivam.

(F) By enquiring whether the Idea's of the Antients that ſpoke of the Chaos were juſt, and whether they could ſay, that that ſtate of Confuſion was no more.] To proceed methodically in this Task, I muſt firſt of all give you Ovid's Deſcription of the Chaos; which is only an Imitation, or rather a Paraphraſe of what he had met with in the Writings of the ancient Greeks.

Ante (b) mare & terras, & quod tegit omnia cœlum, (b) Ibid. lib. 1. v. 5.
Unus erat toto naturæ vultus in orbe,
Quem dixêre Chaos; rudis indigeſtaque moles:
Nec quicquam, niſi pondus iners, congeſtaque eôdem
Non bene junctarum diſcordia ſemina rerum.
Nullus adhuc mundo præbebat lumina Titan,
Nec nova creſcendo reparabat cornua Phœbe,
Nec circumfuſo pendebat in aere tellus,
Ponderibus librata ſuis, nec brachia longo
Margine terrarum porrexerat Amphitrite.
Quâque erat & tellus, illic & pontus, & aer.
Sic erat inſtabilis tellus, innabilis unda,
Lucis egens aer: nulli ſua forma manebat.
Obſtabatque aliis aliud: quia corpore in uno
Frigida pugnabant calidis, humentia ſiccis,
Mollia cum duris, ſine pondere habentia pondus.

You ſee, that by the Chaos they underſtood a ſhapeleſs Maſs of Matter, in which the Seeds of all particular Bodies were jumbled together with the greateſt Confuſion. The Air, the Water, and the Earth, were together all over it; each part oppos'd each part; the Cold and the Heat, Moiſture and Dryneſs, Lightneſs and Ponderoſity ſtruggled one with another in one and the ſame Body all over the vaſt extent of Matter. Now let's ſee how Ovid ſuppoſes that this ſtate of Confuſion was unravelled.

Hanc (c) DEUS, & melior litem natura diremit. (c) Id. ib. v. 21.
Nam cœlo terras, & terris abſcidit undas,
Et liquidum ſpiſſo ſecrevit ab aere cœlum.
Quæ poſtquam evolvit, cæcoque exemit acervo
Diſſociata locis concordi pace ligavit.
Ignea convexi vis & ſine pondere cœli
Emicuit, ſummâque locum ſibi legit in arce.
Proximus eſt aer illi levitate, locoque.
Denſior his tellus, elementaque grandia traxit,
Et preſſa eſt gravitate ſui. Circumfluus humor
Ultima poſſedit, ſolidumque coercuit orbem.
Sic ubi diſpoſitam, quiſquis fuit ille DEORUM,
Congeriem ſecuit, ſectamque in membra redegit:
Principio terram, &c.

You ſee he ſays this War of the confuſed and entangled Elements was determined by the Authority of a God that parted them, and aſſign'd to each their proper place; placing Fire in the uppermoſt Region, the Earth in the lowermoſt, the Air immediately below the Fire, and the Water immediately below the Air; and then forming a Bond of Friendſhip and Concord between the four Elements thus poſted in ſeparate Stations. By Conſequence the Analyſis of our Poet's Diſcourſe may be reduced to theſe ſix Propoſitions.

I. Before there was an Heaven, an Earth, and a Sea, Nature was an Homogeneous (d) Totum.

II. This Totum was only a (e) heavy lumpiſh Maſs, in which the Principles of things were heap'd up

(d) Unus erat toto naturæ vultus in orbe.

(e) Nec quicquam niſi pondus iners &c.

they could ſay that that State of Confuſion was no more. I ſhall make it appear, that up confuſedly without any Symmetry, and after a jarring manner.

III. Heat ſtruggled with Cold in the ſame Body; Moiſture and Dryneſs had the ſame Quarrel; and Levity and Gravity had no leſs.

IV. God put an end to this War by parting the Combatants.

V. He aſſign'd 'em diſtinct Habitations according to the reſpective Levity or Gravity ſuitable for 'em.

VI. He form'd a ſtrict Alliance between 'em.

Here are in general the Faults we meet with in that Doctrine of Ovid. I do not know whether it was ever criticized upon, or whether the Commentators have ever examin'd this part of the Metamorphoſis, Philoſophically: But methinks they might eaſily have perceived,

In the I. place, That the firſt Propoſition is ſcarce conſiſtent with the ſecond; for if the parts of a Totum are compos'd of contrary Seeds or Principles, that Totum can't paſs for Homogeneous.

In a II. place, That the ſecond Propoſition is not of a Piece with the third; for we can't call that Totum a meer heavy Maſs, in which there is as much Lightneſs as Gravity.

In the III. place, That this heavy Maſs can't be look'd upon as inactive, pondus iners, ſince contrary Principles are blended in it without Symmetry; whence it follows, that their actual Struggle muſt terminate in the Victory of one or t'other.

In the IV. place, That the firſt three Propoſitions being once true, the fourth and fifth are ſuperfluous; for the Elementary Qualities are a Principle of ſufficient force to diſentangle the Chaos without the Intervention of another Cauſe, and to place the Parts at a greater or leſſer Diſtance from the Center, proportionably to their Gravity or Lightneſs.

In the V. place, That the fourth Propoſition is falſe upon another Score; for, ſince the Production of the Heavens, Air, Water and Earth, the Struggle of Cold and Heat, Moiſture and Drought, Gravity and Lightneſs, is as great in the ſame Body as ever it could be before.

In the VI. place; That for the Reaſon laſt mention'd the ſixth Propoſition is falſe.

From whence 'tis manifeſt, That the Deſcription of the Chaos and its being unfolded, is compoſed of Propoſitions more oppoſite to one another, than the Elemenrs were during the Chaos.

'Tis needleſs to enlarge upon each of theſe falſe Doctrines of Ovid; but there are ſome of 'em which require a pretty long Illuſtration.

REFUTATION of the Doctrine of the Chaos, ſo far as 'tis ſuppoſed to have been Homogeneous.

I. Then, I ſay, nothing can be more abſurd than to ſuppoſe a Chaos that has been Homogeneous during all Eternity, notwithſtanding it had the Elementary Qualities, both thoſe call'd Alteratrices, viz. Heat, Cold, Moiſture and Drought, and thoſe call'd Motrices, viz. Lightneſs and Ponderoſity, the former cauſing Motion upwards, and the other downwards. A Maſs of this Nature can't be Homogeneous, but muſt neceſſarily contain all ſorts of Heterogeneity. Heat and Cold, Moiſture and Drought can't be together, but that their Action and Re-action muſt temper 'em and convert 'em into other Qualities which make the form of mixt Bodies: And foraſmuch as this Temperament may ariſe, purſuant to the innumerable Diverſities of Combinations, the Chaos muſt have contain'd an incredible number of Species of Compounds. The only way to conceive an Homogeneous Chaos, would be to ſay, that the altering Qualities of the Elements would modify themſelves to the ſame Degree in all the Molecula or ſmall parcels of Matter, inſomuch that there would be all over preciſely the ſame Luke-warmneſs, the ſame Softneſs, the ſame Smell, the ſame Taſte, &c. But that would be pulling down with one Hand what's built with the other; 'twould be a contradictio in terminis, calling a Chaos the moſt regular Work, the moſt marvellous in its Symmetry, and the moſt admirably well proportion'd, that can be conceived. I own, that a diverſifyed Work ſuits better with the Fancy and Reliſh of Mankind, than what is uniform; but at the ſame time our Idea's teach us, that the Harmony of contrary Qualities preſerved uniformly all over the Univerſe, would be a Perfection as wonderful as the unequal Partition that ſucceeded to the Chaos. What Knowledge, what Power, would not that uniform Harmony, ſpread all over Nature, require? To clap into each mixt Body the ſame Quantity of each of the four Ingredients, would not ſuffice; ſome would require more, ſome leſs, according as the Force of ſome is greater or leſſer for acting (a) than for reſiſting; for 'tis well known, that the Philoſophers diſtribute Action and Re-action to the Elementary Qualities in a different Degree. Upon the whole, every thing conſider'd, 'twould be found that the Cauſe which metamorphoſed the Chaos, would have taken it not out of a ſtate of War and Confuſion, as is here ſuppoſed, but out of a ſtate of Regularity which was the moſt accompliſhed thing in the World, and by reducing the contrary Forces to an Æquilibrium, kept them in a Repoſe equivalent to Peace. 'Tis therefore manifeſt, that if the Poets would ſave the Homogeneity of the Chaos, they muſt ſtrike out all that they add concerning that phantaſtical Confuſion of contrary Seeds, and that indigeſted Mixture, and perpetual War of jarring Principles.

II. But to wave this Contradiction, we have opportunity enough to attack 'em elſewhere; particularly upon the point of Eternity. Nothing can be more abſurd than to admit the Mixture of the ſenſible Parts of the four Elements for an infinite time: For ſince you ſuppoſe in thoſe Parts the Activity of Heat, the Action and Re-action of the four firſt Qualities, and beſides that, the centripetal Motion of the Particles of Earth and Water, and the Motion of thoſe of Fire and Air towards the Circumference, you at the ſame time eſtabliſh a Principle, which will neceſſarily ſeparate thoſe four Species of Bodies, one from another, without any other aſſiſtance, but a certain limited Time. Do but reflect a little upon what we call the Vial of the four Elements. In that Vial we put up little metallick Particles, and then three Liquors much lighter one than another: Jumble all theſe together, and you'll diſcern none of the four Mixtures, the Parts of each being blended one with another; but then let the Vial ſtand ſtill, and you'll find each of them reſume their proper Stations: All the metallick Particles will meet at the Bottom, and thoſe of the lighteſt Liquor in the uppermoſt Station; the Particles of the Liquor that's heavier than the laſt and lighter than the firſt, will poſt themſelves in the third; as thoſe of the Liquor that's heavier than the two laſt, but lighter than the Metallick Particles, will in the ſecond Story: And thus you recover the diſtinct Situations that were confounded by ſhaking the Glaſs. In making this Experiment, you do not need much Patience; a ſhort ſpace of time will ſerve for recovering the Repreſentation of the Situation that Nature has given to the four Elements in the World. Now, comparing the Univerſe to this Vial we may conclude, that if the Earth, reduced to Powder or Duſt, had been mix'd with the Subſtance of the Stars, with that of the Air, and with Water, ſo that the very inſenſible Parts of each of thoſe Elements had been blended together, all of 'em would preſently have ſtrove to be diſentangled, and after a prefix'd time, the Parts of the Earth would have form'd a Maſs, thoſe of Fire another, and ſo on, in proportion to the weight and lightneſs of each Species of Bodies.

REFUTATION of the Chaos, ſo far as 'tis ſuppoſed to have contiued an infinite ſpace of Time.

(a) Calor, qui maximè eſt activus, minimus eſt in reſiſtentia; è contrario autem ficcitas minor in activitate, major in reſiſtentia; frigus, quod ſecundo loco eſt activum, tertio eſt reſiſtitivum: humor denique penultimo loco activus, ſecundo reſiſtitivus Arriaga diſputat. 3. de generat. ſect. 11. n. 178. p. m. 500.

We may likewiſe take in another Compariſon, and ſuppoſe the Chaos like new Wine fermenting. That's a State of Confuſion, in which the Spirituous and Terreſtrial Particles are jumbled together, inſomuch that neither Sight nor Taſte can diſtinguiſh what is properly Wine, and what is Tartar or Lees. This Confuſion excites a furious ſtruggle between the divers Parts of Matter; which attack one another with ſuch violent Shocks that ſometimes the Veſſel is not able to ſtand 'em: but after about two or three Days the inteſtine War ceaſes; the groſs Parts diſengage themſelves, and ſink by Vertue of their weight. The ſubtiler Parts get likewiſe looſe, and (b) evaporate by their Lightneſs; and thus the Wine comes to its natural State. Now, the ſame thing would have happened in the Poetical Chaos. The Contrariety of the Principles confuſedly jumbled together, would have produced a violent Fermentation, which at the end of a certain ſpace of Time would have cauſed the Precipitation of the Terreſtrial Bodies, and the Exaltation of the ſpirituous Parts; and in a word, the proper rangiug of each Body according to their Gravity and Lightneſs. So that nothing is that the Struggle of the four Elements did not ceaſe at the Production of the World, as is more inconſiſtent with Reaſon and Experience than a Chaos of eternal Duration, though ſtrenghen'd with all the Force that Nature had after the Formation of the World. For you are carefully to take notice, that, what we call the general Laws of Nature, the Laws of Motion, the Mechanical Principles, is the very ſame thing with what Ovid, and the Peripatericks call Heat, Cold, Moiſture, Drought, Ponderoſity, Lightneſs. They pretended, that all the Force and all the Activity of Nature, all the Principles of the Generation, and Alteration of Bodies, were comprehended in the Sphere of theſe ſix Qualities. And foraſmuch as they admitted them in the Chaos, they neceſſarily own'd them to be poſſeſt of the ſame Virtue that in the World makes Generations and Corruptions, Winds, Rains, &c.

(b) We always find an empty ſpace in the Cask after the fermentation is over, which is an evident Proof, that ſeveral Parts evaporated thro' the Pores or Chinks of the Cask.

WHETHER 'TWAS a conſequential way of Reaſoning to have recourſe to God for diſentangling the Chaos.

III. From hence ſprings another Objection of near an equal Solidity with the two foregoing Ovid, and thoſe whoſe opinions he has paraphras'd, had recourſe, without any preſſing neceſſity, to the Miniſtry of God for diſentangling the Chaos; for they acknowledg'd, that it included all the internal Force, that was capable to ſeparate the Parts, and allot each Element its proper Situation; and what occaſion then was there for calling in an external Cauſe? Was not that imitating the bad Poets, who brought in upon the Stage a God to remove a very ſmall Perplexity? If we reaſon right upon the Production of the World, we muſt conſider God as the Author of Matter, and as the firſt and ſole Principle of Motion. If we can't carry our Thoughts to the Idea of a Creation, properly ſo called, we ſhall never get clear of all the Difficulties that ſurround that Subject; and whatever ſide we take up with we muſt inſiſt upon things that our Reaſon can't brook: For if Matter is Self exiſtent, we can't well conceive, that God either could or would have given it Motion. 'Twould be independent of any other thing, as to the Reality of its Exiſtence, and why ſhould it not have the Power to exiſt always in the ſame place with reſpect to each of its parts? Why ſhould it be conſtrain'd to change its Situation at the Pleaſure of another Subſtance? Add to this, that if Matter had been moved by an external Principle, 'twould be a ſign that its neceſſary and independent Exiſtence are ſeparate and diſtinct from Motion; the reſult of which is, that its natural State is that of Reſt, and conſequently God could not move it without diſordering the Nature of Things, there being nothing more ſuitable to Order, than to follow the eternal and neceſſary Inſtitution of Nature. Of this I ſpeak more at large in other places. But of all the Errors that Men fall into, when they go aſtray in rejecting the Creation, there's none, to my Mind, ſo little, as that of ſuppoſing, that if God is not the Cauſe of the Exiſtence of Matter, he is at leaſt the firſt Mover of Bodies, and in that Quality the Author of Elementary Properties, the Author of the Order and Form we ſee in Nature. The Suppoſition of his being the firſt Mover of Matter, is a Principle that naturally gives this Conſequence, viz. that he form'd the Heavens and the Earth, the Air and the Sea, and is the Architect of this great and marvellous Edifice which we call the World. But if you ſtrip him of that Quality, of firſt Mover, if you affirm, that Matter moved it ſelf independently of him, and had the Diverſity of Forms of it ſelf; that, with reſpect to ſome of its Parts, its Motion tended to the Center, and with reſpect to others, made towards the Circumference; that it contain'd Corpuſculums of Fire, Corpuſculums of Water, Corpuſculums of Air, and Corpuſculums of Earth: If with Ovid, I ſay, you affirm all theſe things, you employ God needleſly and to no purpoſe in the Conſtruction of the World. Nature might at that rate do very well without the Miniſtry of God, it had ſufficient Power to ſeparate the Particles of the Elements, and to aſſemble thoſe of the ſame Claſs. Ariſtotle apprehended this Truth very well, and had a much juſter Notion of it than Plato, who admitted a diſorderly Motion in the Elementary Matter, before the Production of the World. Ariſtotle ſhews, that that Suppoſition deſtroyed it ſelf, ſeeing unleſs we have recourſe to a Progreſs in infinitum, Motion in the Elements muſt have been natural; and if 'twas natural ſome tended to the Center, and others to the Circumference; and, in fine, they took ſuch Parts as we were neceſſary for forming the World that we now behold: So that, during the time of that diſorderly Motion, there was a World antecedent to the World, which is a Contradiction. Here I am obliged to inſert Ariſtotle's Words, to give the Reader an opportunity of conſidering whether I take his true Senſe or not. The Words are theſe: (a) Τὰ αὐτὸ δὲ τοῦτο συμβαίνειν ἀναγκαῖον· κἂν εἰ καθάπερ ἐν τῷ Τιμαίῳ γέγραπται, πρὶν γενέσθαι τὸ κόσμον, ἐκινεῖτο τὰ στοιχεῖα ἀτάκτως· ἀνάγκη γὰρ ἢ βίαιον εἶναι τὴν κίνησιν, ἢ κατὰ φύσιν· εἰ δὲ κατὰ φύσιν ἐκινεῖτο, ἀνάγκη κόσμον εἶναι, ἐάν τις βούληται θεωρεῖν ἐπιστήμας. τί, τὰ γὰρ πρῶτον κινοῦν ἀνάγκη κινεῖν αὐτὸ, κινούμενον κατὰ φύσιν· ἢ τὰ κινούμενα μὴ βίᾳ, ἐν τοῖς οἰκείοις ἠρεμοῦντα τόποις, ποιεῖν ἴσπερ ἔχειν νῦν τάξιν. τὰ μὲν βάρη ἔχοντα, ἐπὶ τὸ μέσον· τὰ δὲ κουφότητα, ἀπὸ τοῦ μέσου τούτων δ' ὁ κόσμος ἔχει τὴν διάταξιν. Hoc idem accidat neceſſe eſt, &c. ſi, ut in Timæo eſt ſcriptum, elementa inordinatè movebantur antèquàm mundus ortus eſſet. Motum etiam aut violentum, aut ſecundum naturam eſſe, neceſſe eſt. Quod ſi ſecundum naturam movebantur, Mundum eſſe neceſſe eſt, ſi quilpiam velit cum diligentia contemplari. Primum namque movens movere neceſſe eſt, ipſum ſecundum naturam ſubiens motum, &c ea, quæ moventur non vis in ſuis quieſcentia locis, cum, quem nunc habent ordinem facere: ea quidem, quæ pondus habent, ad medium: ea verò, quæ levitatem habent, à medio ſponte pergentia nutu. Hunc autem ordinem Mundus habet. He obſerves conſequentially to this, and very juſtly, that Anaxagoras who admitted no Motion antecedent to the firſt Formation of the World, had a clearer Idea of this Matter than the reſt.

(a) Ariſt. de Cœlo lib. 3. cap. 2. p. m. 370. G.

The modern Peripatericks, who are moſt zealous for Evangelical Orthodoxy, can find no Fault in theſe Words of Ariſtotle's; for they own, that the altering and moving Qualities of the four Elements are ſufficient for the Production of all the Effects of Nature. They only bring in God as the Preſerver of theſe Elementary Qualities, of which he is the firſt Cauſe, or elſe bring in only his general Concourſe; and they agree, that abating of that they do all, and in the quality of a ſecond Cauſe, are the compleat Principle of (c) all Generations. So that a Scholaſtick Divine would readily own, that if the four Elements had exiſted independently of God, with all the Faculties they are now poſſeſt of, they would have form'd of themſelves this Machine of the World, and keep it up in the State in which it now appears. He muſt therefore acknowledge two great Faults in the Doctrine of the Chaos: one, and indeed the principal one, is, that it takes from God the Creation of Matter, and the Production of the Qualities peculiar to Fire, to the Air, to the Earth, and to the Sea. The other, is, that after taking that from God, it brings him without neceſſity upon the Stage of the World to adjuſt the Places of the four Elements. Our new Philoſophers, who have rejected the Qualities and Faculties of the Peripatetick Philoſophy, would find the ſame Faults in Ovid's Deſcription of the Chaos: For what they call general Laws of Motion, Principles of Mechaniſm, Modifications of Matter, Figure, Situation and Order of the Corpuſculums, import nothing elſe but that Active and Paſſive Virtue of Nature, which the Peripatetick underſtand, under the Terms of Alterative and moving Qualities of the four Elements. Since therefore, by the Doctrine of the Peripatericks, the four Bodies, placed according to their Lightneſs and Ponderoſity, are a Principle that's ſufficient for all Generations, the Carteſians, the Gaſſendiſts, and the other Modern Philoſophers, muſt maintain that the Motion, Situation and Figure of the Parts of Matter are ſufficient for the Production of all Natural Effects, without excepting even the general Order or Poſition given to Water and Stars. Thus, the true Cauſe of the World, and of the Effects produced in it, is not diſtinct from the Cauſe that gave Motion to the Parts of Matter, whether it be that at the ſame time it gave to each Atom a determinate Figure, as the Gaſſendiſts will have it, or that it only gave the Parts of Duration of Motion reduced to certain Laws, which afterwards make 'em aſſume all ſorts of Figures, purſuant to the Hypotheſis of the Carteſians. Both the one and the other muſt conſequently agree, that if Matter had been ſuch before the Generation of the World, as Ovid gives it in, it had been capable to diſengage it ſelf from the Chaos by its own Power,

(c) We muſt except the Soul of Man.

as they ſuppoſe it did; and I ſhall ſhew, that however they ſhould have excepted and to aſſume the Form of the World, without the Aſſiſtance of God. They muſt therefore charge Ovid with two Blunders; one in ſuppoſing, that Matter, without the Aſſiſtance of the Deity, contain'd the Seeds of all the mixt Bodies, Heat, Motion, &c. And the other in ſaying, that without the Intervention of the Divine Hand, it could not have overcome the State of Confuſion. This is giving too much and too little; 'tis refuſing Aid when 'tis moſt wanted, and asking it when 'tis not neceſſary.

REFLECTION upon Deſcartes's Notion of the manner in which the World might have been made.

I know ſome do not approve of Deſcartes (d) Fiction concerning the manner how the World might have been form'd. Some ridicule it, and cry out upon it, as injurious to God; others charge it either with Falſities, or with Impoſſibilities. To the former it may be anſwered, that they do not underſtand the Subject, and that, if they did, they would own, that nothing is more proper to give a lofty Idea of the infinite Wiſdom of God, than to affirm, that out of a ſhapeleſs Matter, he could make this World in a certain time, by the bare Preſervation of the Motion once given, and reduced to a few ſimple and general Laws. As for thoſe who reject Deſcartes's Syſtem, as containing ſome things contrary to the Laws of Mechanicks, and the actual State that Aſtronomers have diſcovered in the Vortices of the Heavens, I ſhall only reply to them, that this does not argue but that the Bulk of his Hypotheſis may be juſt and reaſonable; and I am fully perſuaded, that Mr. Newton, the moſt formidable of all that criticize upon Deſcartes, does not doubt but that the actual Syſtem of the World might be the Production of a few Mechanical Laws, eſtabliſhed by the Author of all things: For in ſuppoſing Bodies determin'd to move in ſtreight Lines, and to tend either towards the Center, or towards the Circumference, as often as the reſiſtance of other Bodies obliges 'em to a circular Motion, you eſtabliſh a Principle that will neceſſarily produce great Varieties in Nature; and if it does not for mthis Syſtem, it will at leaſt form another.

(d) See Deſcartes's Principia, Part. 3. n. 46. &c ſeq.

OBSERVATION upon Epicurus's Hypotheſis.

The very Epicurean Hypotheſis, though ſo fooliſh, and extravagant, does not want Materials to make a World of. Do but once allow the Epicureans the different Figures of Atoms, with the inalienable Power of moving themſelves, according to the Laws of Ponderoſity, and mutually repulſing one another, and reflecting in ſuch or ſuch a manner, according as they ſtrike in perpendicular or oblique Lines: Grant 'em but this, and you can't deny that the fortuitous Concourſe of theſe Corpuſculum's may form Maſſes, containing hard and fluid Bodies, Cold and Heat, Opacity and Tranſparency, Vortices, &c. All that can be denied 'em, is, that Chance could produce ſuch a Maſs of Bodies as our World is; in which there are ſo many things that perſevere ſo long in their Regularity, ſo many Machines of Animals, a thouſand times more induſtrious than thoſe of Humane Art, which neceſſarily require an intelligent Direction.

Here we'll examine, by the Eye, a Notion of the Sieur [illegible]ni, Doctor of Phyſick at Paris, who is as great a Stickler for Atoms, as he is an Adverſary of the Peripateticks, and of Deſcartes's; as it appears by his Work de principiis rerum. He gives the following Anſwer to an Objection that's commonly ſtarted againſt Epicurus's Hypotheſis, which runs upon this Compariſon: The fortuitous Junction of Letters would never compoſe Homer's Iliad, and ſo the caſual Concourſe of Atoms could never compoſe a World. His Anſwer, is, that there's a great Difference between theſe two things. The Poem of the Iliad can't be form'd but by a preciſe and determin'd Junction of a certain number of Letters; the Method of the Compoſure, i. e. one, out of an infinite number of various ways of ranging and adjuſting Letters; ſo that we muſt not think it ſtrange, that Chance could never hit upon this one way among an Infinity of others. But in making a World in general, this or another, there's no neceſſity that the Atoms ſhould meet and combine in one certain, preciſe, determin'd manner; for whatſoever Way they grapple together they will neceſſarily form Heaps of Bodies, and conſequently a World. Nay, this is not all, he gives the Compariſon another Turn: Let the Junction of ſeveral Letters, ſays he, be never ſo caſual, they will neceſſarily form Syllables and Words, and ſo the fortuitous Concourſe of Atoms will neceſſarily form Bodies. If you offer to him, that theſe Words, form'd by Chance, will have no Signification, his Anſwer will be that that is owing to Words their ſignifying nothing but what Man pleaſes; and that thence it comes, that in order to be ſignificative they muſt be ranged in Conformity to Humane Inſtitution: But that the Vertue of Atoms being independent of Man, they produce conſiderable Effects that merit his Admiration in any Order or Poſition whatſoever (a). There's no great neceſſity of diſcuſſing all this: We may grant part of his Advances, and at the ſame time deny that our World, in which there are ſo many regular things tending to certain Ends, can be the Effect of Chance. Obſerve, that Epicurus found himſelf obliged to own a ſtroke of Chance, at leaſt as wonderful as the Iliad would be, if produced by the fortuitous Concourſe of certain Letters. He aſſign'd to the Gods the Figure of Man, and believed them to be eternal: So that he was under a neceſſity of owning, that the fortuitous Concourſe of Atoms, of which the firſt Men were compos'd, was a faithful Copy of a certain determinate and ſingular Original, namely, the Figure that the Gods bore. Let's ſee what Cicero ſays on this Head. (b) Hoc dico, non ab hominibus formæ figuram perveniſſe ad Deos: Dii enim ſemper fuerunt, & nati nunquam ſunt, ſiquidem æterni ſunt futuri. At homines nati: antè igitur humana forma, quàm homines eâ quâ erant formâ Dii immortales. Non ergo illorum humana forma, ſed noſtra divina dicenda eſt. Verùm hoc quidem, ut voletis: illud quæro, quæ fuerit tanta fortuna, (nihil enim ratione in rerum naturâ factum eſſe vultis) ſed tamen quis iſte tantus caſus, unde tam felix concurſus atomorum, ut repentè homines Deorum formâ naſcerentur? Semina Deorum decidiſſe de Cælo putamus in terras, & ſic homines patrum ſimiles extitiſſe? vellem diceretis: Deorum cognationem agnoſcerem non invitus. Nihil tale dicitis: ſed caſu eſſe factum ut Deorum ſimiles eſſemus. This Reſemblance between the Gods and Men, form'd by Chance, is more ſurprizing and wondertul, than 'twould be to ſee a Child, by running a Pencil upon a Piece of Paper, according to its little Humours, draw a Picture of Cæſar, as good and as like, as the beſt that ever Michael Angelo could draw of him.

(a) Taken from the 39th Chap. of the 3d Book of William Lami, de rerum Principiis.

(b) Cicero de naturâ Deorum, lib. 1. pag. m. 132.

IV. The Fourth Obſervation that remains to be illuſtrated, relates to what Ovid ſays, that the War of the four Elements having been continual in the Chaos, was put to an end by the Authority of God who form'd the World. Is it not to ſay, that ſince that time the Elements are at Peace one with another? And does not Experience contradict that? Did ever the War ceaſe between Heat and Cold, Moiſture and Drought, Lightneſs and Ponderoſity, Fire and Water, &c.? Since Ovid took in the Hypotheſis of the four Elements, he ought to have known, that the Antipathy of their Qualities never dies, and that they never agree to either Peace or Truce; no, not even when they compoſe a Temperament of mixt Bodies. They never enter ſuch Compoſures, but after they've reciprocally ſtruggled one with another; and if their Fight happens to be interrupted for ſome Moments, it proceeds from this, that the Reſiſtance of ſome is preciſely equal to the Activity of others. When they can do no more, they take Breath again, being always ready to haraſs and deſtroy one another, as their Strength permits. The Æquilibrium can't laſt long, for every Minute there comes an Aſſiſtance to one or t'other ſide; and of neceſſity the one muſt loſe what the other gains. Ovid might be ſenſible, that in his time, as well as in the time of the Chaos, their War flam'd every where, and in the ſmalleſt Receſſes of the ſame Mixed Bodies: (c) Corpore in uno frigida pugnabant calidis, humentia ſiccis, mollia cum duris, ſine pondere habentia pondus. The Laws of this Engagement, are, that the weakeſt muſt be entirely ruined, according to the full extent of the Power of the ſtronger. Clemency or Pity have there no Place; no Propoſals of Accommodation are there liſtned to. This inteſtine War makes way for the Diſſipation of the Compound, and ſooner or later compaſſes that end. Living Bodies are more uſed to the ſhock of this War than others, and recruit quickly ſink under it, if Nature did not re-; but at laſt the Conflict of natural Heat, and REFUTATION of the Doctrine of Ovid, ſo far as it ſuppoſes the War of the four Elements, to have ceaſed when the Chaos was cleared.

(c) Ovid Metam. lib. 1.

Ra-

(e) The Acta Eruditorum, for 1682, pag. 155. contain an Abſtract of it, and obſerve, that it was printed at Paris, in 1680: But that was a new Impreſſion, for I read it in 1678, and then 'twas no new Book.

excepted the Humane Race from their General (G) Rule, ſince 'tis ſubject to the moſt formi-

Radical Moiſture proves mortal to 'em. The Power of Time, which conſumes all, and which Ovid deſcribes (d) ſo well in the fifteenth Book of his Metamorphoſis, has no other Foundation, but the Conflict of Bodies. In making that Deſcription, our Poet had forgot what he had advanced before in the Chapter of the Chaos: So that to convict him of Contradiction, we need only collate the Beginning of his Work with the End of it. In the firſt Book he affirms, that a ſtop was put to the Diſcord of the Elements; and in the 15th he tells us they deſtroy one another by Turns, and that nothing perſeveres in the ſame State.

Hæc (e) quoque non perſtant, quæ nos elementa vocamus.

. . . . . .

. . . . . (f) Omnia fiunt
Ex ipſis, & in ipſa cadunt: reſolutaque tellus
In liquidas rareſcit aquas; tenuatus in auras
Aeraque humor abit; dempto quoque pondere rurſus
In ſuperos aer tenuiſſimus emicat ignes.
Inde retro redeunt, idemque retexitur ordo:
Ignis enim denſum ſpiſſatus in aera tranſit;
Hic in aquas; tellus glomerata cogitur undâ.
Nec ſpecies ſua cuique manet: rerumque novatrix
Ex aliis alias reparat natura figuras.

In the Sequel he brings in ſeveral Inſtances of the Conqueſts made by the Water upon the Earth, and by the Earth upon the Water, &c. Where is this Pacification then, that he was ſo full of, in his firſt Book? See the Margin †.

Nay, though this were not a Self-contradiction, we might cenſure the Poet with a great deal of Reaſon; for the World being a Stage of Viciſſitudes, nothing could be more improper than to give Peace to the four Elements; and the Ceſſation of the Chaos ſhould be ſo far from putting an end to their Quarrels, that on the contrary, they ſhould have been ſet one againſt another, if, during the Chaos, they had been in mutual Peace. 'Tis by their Conflict that Nature becomes fruitful; their Concord would keep her barren, and without an implacable War that makes them fall on where-ever they come, we ſhould have no Generations. The Production of one thing is always (g) the Deſtruction of another: Generatio unius eſt corruptio alterius, is a Philoſophical Axiom. So that Ovid ſhould have preſuppoſed, that the God, who allotted diſtinct Stations to the four Elements, enjoyn'd them to fight without Quarter, and to act the part of ambitious Conquerors, that leave no Stone unturn'd to invade the Poſſeſſions of their Neighbours. The Orders given 'em ſhould have been like Dido's Wiſh.

Nunc (h), olim, quocunque dabunt ſe tempore vires,
Littora littoribus contraria, fluctibus undas
Imprecor, arma armis, pugnent ipſique nepotes.

And, in effect, they act juſt as if they had received ſuch Orders, and as if they were inſpired with the warmeſt Paſſion to put 'em in full Execution. Cold enlarges its Sphere as much as ever it can, and there deſtroys its Enemy: Heat does the like; and theſe two Qualities are by Turns Maſters of the Field, the one in Winter, the other in Summer: They imitate thoſe victorious Armies, which, after the Victory of a deciſive Battle, conſtrain their Enemy to fly to his Citradels, and purſuing him thither, lay Siege to him, and reduce him to Extremity. In the Summer, Cold flies to Caverns and Subterraneous Cavities; and to prevent its being entirely ſunk, redoubles the Efforts of its Reſiſtance, and fortifies it ſelf in the beſt manner that it can, by the Virtue called Antiperiſtaſis: And in Winter Heat takes the ſame Courſe. The Elementary Philoſophers, who give this Explication of the Effects of Nature, tell us, that each Quality ſtrains it ſelf ſo much to vanquiſh its Enemies, that, not ſatisfied with making them its Vaſſals, and ordering them to wear its Livery, it endeavours to tranſmute 'em into its State; omne agens, ſay they, intendit ſibi aſſimilare paſſum. Can one meet with a more Hoſtile, and more ambitious Animoſity than this? Empedocles was out in his Meaſures, when he aſſociated to the four Elements Amity and Enmity (i), the one for Union, and the other for Diſunion. 'Tis granted, that the Union and Diſunion of Parts are highly neceſſary for the Productions of Nature; but certain it is, that Amity has no hand in 'em: The ſole Diſcord, the ſole Antipathy of the Elements aſſembles Bodies in one part, and diſperſes them in another. Theſe two Qualities of Empedocles can be attributed at moſt but to Living Bodies; but Air and Fire, Water and Earth, have no other Aſſociate, than Enmity.

The Animate Bodies act conformably to the Order that Ovid ſhould have ſuppoſed to be given, by the Author of the Diſentangling of the Chaos, viz. that of mutual Deſtruction; for, 'tis literally true, that they feed only upon Deſtruction: Whatever ſerves for the ſupport of their Life, loſes its form, and changes both its State and its Species. The Vegetables deſtroy the Conſtitution and Qualities of all the Juices they can come at: And the Animals commit the ſame Ravages upon all that ſerves them for Food. They eat up one another, and there are ſeveral Kinds of Beaſts that War only to devour the Enemies they kill. In ſome Countries Men follow the ſame Courſe; and every where they are great Deſtroyers. I do not ſpeak of the Slaughter ariſing from Ambition, Avarice or Cruelty, or from the other Paſſions that give Riſe to War: I ſpeak only of the Effects of the Care we take to feed our Bodies. Upon this Score Man is ſuch a ruining deſtroying Principle, that if all other Animals deſtroyed as much in proportion, the Earth would not be able to furniſh 'em with Proviſions. When we ſee in the Streets and Markets of great Cities, ſuch a prodigious Multitude of Herbs and Fruits, and of an infinite number of other things allotted for the Food of the Inhabitants, would not one be ready to ſay, there's enough for a Week? Would one imagine, that this Shew is to be renewed every Day? Would one believe, that ſo ſmall a Slit, as the Mouth of a Man, were a Gulf, an Abyſs, to ſwallow up all that in a little time? If 'twere not for Experience we could not believe it. The Sainteveremoniana being lately publiſh'd, I met with theſe Words: (a) 'Tis ſaid, that at Paris there is four Thouſand Sellers of Oyſters, and that fifteen Hundred large Oxen, and above ſixteen Thouſand Sheep, Calves or Hogs, beſides a prodigious Quantity of Poultry, and wild Fowls, are eat there every Day. Judge you what may be conſumed in thoſe Countries, where they eat more and feed more upon fleſh.

Now, ſuch being the Condition of Nature, that Beings are produced and preſerv'd by the Deſtruction of one another, our Poet ſhould not have affirmed, that the War of the Elements was pacified when the World began †, and the Chaos was at an end. It had been enough to have ſaid, that the Situation and Power of the Combatants were regulated and ballanced in ſuch a manner, that their continual Hoſtilities ſhould not produce the Deſtruction of the Work; but only the Viciſſitudes that are its Ornaments, per queſto varia natura è bella, as the Italians ſay. Perhaps ſome will imagine, that the War, not ceaſing upon the Regulation of the Principles, 'twas not ſo much a Ceſſation of the Chaos, as a rough Draught of the Diſentanglement; and that after this rough Draught, that is, the World we live in, ſhall have continued a certain number of Ages, 'twill be ſucceeded by a much finer World; from which Diſcord will be baniſh'd: And they'll alledge, perhaps, that St. Paul (b) confirms this Opinion, in ſaying, That all Creatures groan for their Deliverance from the State of Vanity and Corruption in which they find themſelves. But let them ſay as they pleaſe, I ſhall not amuſe my ſelf with the Examination of their Thoughts.

'Tis to be obſerv'd, that by the Principles of the Mechanicks, by which the new Philoſophers explain the Effects of Nature, 'tis eaſier to comprehend the perpetual War of Bodies, than by the Phyſicks of the four Elements. For all the Action of the ſix Elementary Qualities, being nothing elſe, according to the new Philoſophy, but local Motion, 'tis manifeſt each Body attacks every thing in its way, and that the Parts of Matter tend only to knock, break and preſs one another, with all the Rigor of the Laws of ſuperior Strength.

(G) Excepted the Humane Race from the General Rule, ſince 'tis ſubject to the .... Confuſions.] If we ſet aſide the Arguments produced in the fore-go-

(d) Tempus edax rerum, tuque invidioſa Vetuſtas Omnia deſtruitis, vitiataque dentibus ævi Paulatim lenta conſumitis omnia morte. Ovid Metam. lib. 15. v. 234.

(e) Id. ib. v. 237.

(f) Ibid. v. 244.

† It can't be ſaid, to avoid the charge of Contradiction, that he brings in the Philoſopher Pythagoras ſpeaking; for moſt of the things he puts into his Mouth, are either Hiſtories or Sentiments agreeable to the Hypotheſis of thoſe, who explain'd Generation and Corruption by the Qualities of the Elements.

(g) Nam quodcunque ſuis mutatum finibus exit, Continuo hoc mors eſt illius quod fuit ante. Lucret. lib. 1. v. 671.

(h) Virgil. Æn. lib. 4. v. 627.

(i) See Ariſtotle, book 8. of his Phyſicks. chap. . and Diogen. Laert. lib. 8. n. 76. & bi Aldorandinus & Menagius.

(a) Pag. 293. of the Dutch Edit in 1701.

† See in the 18*th Tome of the* Biblioteque Univerſelle pag. 23. a Remark in oppoſition to what Gregory Nazianzen ſaid in his 12 Oration, that the Univerſe is kept by Peace.

(b) Epiſtle to the Romans. ch. 8 v. 19. & ſeq. This is a Paſſage that puzzles the Commentators very much formidable Confusions and Contrarieties that could have been in the Chaos. They must ing Remark, and grant, that Ovid might affirm, generally speaking, that the Creatures sprung from the Chaos, yet we might say, that he could not particularly include Man in that Assertion. Here I only consider what Views we can have when destitute of the Light of Revelation: And if we can put the case so, who can forbear thinking that the Horrors of the Chaos are still in being with reference to Man? For, not to mention the perpetual Conflict of the Elementary Qualities, which reigns somewhat more in his Machine than in most of the other Material Beings, what Fury of War is not there between his Soul and his Body, his Reason and his Senses, his Sensitive and his Reasonable Soul? Reason should calm this Disorder, and pacify those intestine Jars; but 'tis both Judge and Party, and its Verdicts are not executed; nay, they do but inflame the Evil ‡. The Consideration of which obliged one of the most solid and most shining Genius's of the XVIIth Century, to prefer the Condition of Sheep before that of Men. Do but read what follows.

‡ Touching the Complaints made against Reason, See the new Letters against Maimbourg, pag. 755. & seq. and here after in the Remark F of the Article Paulicians, some Passages of Cicero.

Cependant (c) nous avons la raison pour partage
Et vous en ignorez l'usage.
Innocens animaux ne'en soiez point jaloux,
Ce n'est pas un grand avantage.
Cette fiere raison dont on fait tant de bruit
Contre les passions n'est pas un seur remede,
Un peu de vin la trouble, un enfant la seduit,
Et dechirer un cœur qui l'appelle à son aide,
Est tout l'effet qu'elle produit.
Toujours impuissante & severe
Elle s'oppose à tout, & ne surmonte rien.
Sous la garde de votre chien
Vous devez beaucoup moins redouter la colere
Des loups cruels & ravissans,
Que sous l'autorité du'une telle chimere
Nous ne devons craindre nos sens.

(c) Madam des Houlieres. Idylle des Moutons, pag. 32, 33 edit. de Amsterdam, 1694.

This we meet with in the Poems of Madam des Houlieres; where we likewise find, that she took the Condition of inanimate Creatures to be preferable to ours. Hear what she says, addressing her self to a Brook.

(d) The same in the Idylle du Ruisseau, pag. 119, 120.

Avec (d) tant de bonheur d'où vient vôtre murmure?
Helas vôtre sort est si doux!
Taisez-vous ruisseau, c'est à nous
A nous plaindre de la nature.
De tant de passions que nourrit nôtre cœur
Apprennez qu'il n'en est pas une
Qui ne traine après Soi le trouble, la douleur,
Le repentir ou l'infortune.
Elles dechirent nuit & jour
Les cœurs dont elles sont maitresses
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
De toutes sortes d'unions
Que nôtre vie est éloignée!
De trahisons, d'horreurs & de dissensions
Elle est toûjours accompagnée.
Qu'avez-vous merité, ruisseau tranquille & doux
Pour être mieux traité que nous
. . . . . .
. . . . . .
Enfin dans cet horrible gouffre
De misere & de vanité
Je me perds; & plus j'envisage
La foiblesse de l'homme & sa malignité,
Et moins de la divinite
En lui je reconnois l'image.

The Verses I am going to quote furnish us with a fresh Proof of the Chaos, in which Humane-kind remain'd: The two most opposite things in the World, Light and Darkness, continue in Man; in him they follow one another: The less Men know, the more they think they do know; and the more they really know, the more they are sensible of their own Ignorance, the more they are in danger of straggling out of the right Road. Now, can anything be the Subject, or the Stage of a more capricious Conflict?

(e) The same in the Reflexions diverses. P. 94, 95.

Que (e) l'esprit de l'homme est borné!
Quelque tems qu'il donne à l'étude,
Quelque penetrant qu'il soit né
Il ne sait rien à fond, rien avec certitude:
De tenebres pour lui tout est environné;
La lumiere qui vient du savoir le plus rare
N'est qu'un fatal éclairs qu'un ardent qui l'égare.
Bien plus que l'ignorance elle est à redouter.
Longues erreurs qu'elle a fait naître
Vous ne prouvez que trop que chercher a connoître
N'est souvent qu'aprendre à douter.

I should never have done, if I mean to heap up together all the good things that have been said of the Contrariety of the Parts of which Man is composed. The Count de Bussi Rabutin tells us, "(f) That he "always keeps in Mind what Father Senault said; "That the Soul and Body are under very "great mutual Ties, and yet they are always at "variance: And, in a word, they are two Enemies "that cannot part, and two Friends that can"not abide one another. Nothing can be better "said; nothing is truer." There's more Boldness or more Briskness, but not so much strong Sense, though indeed there is a great deal, in this Passage of Balzac: (g) But who d'ye think, good Reverend Father, was the Author of these Words? "We are "compounded of two Enemies that never agree; "the sublime part of our Soul is always at War with "the inferior part. Let's add to this, That MAN "IS MADE OF A GOD AND A BEAST, "TIED TOGETHER. If you guess out the Au"thor of these four Lines, I shall esteem you as great a "Magician, as those who foretold the Birth of King "Sapores."

(f) Bussi Rabutin, Letter 31, of the 4th part, pag. 53 of the Dutch Edition.

(g) Balzac his Dissertation to the Reverend Father, Dom Andrew de St. Denis, of the Order of St. Bernard, at the end of his Socrate Chretien, p. m. 193, 194.

There are excellent Touches upon this Subject, in two Harangues of Gregory Palamas, Archbishop of Thessalonica in the XIVth Century. They are written by way of Dialogue, and Pleading, and of a definitive Sentence; the Soul accusing the Body, and the Body on the other Hand giving in its Defence, and not barely denying but colouring the Fact, after which follows the Sentence of the Judges. I use the words of Claudius Esperncus, who made a French Translation of these two Declamations and publish'd it at Paris in 8vo. in 1570; and Du Verdier Vau-Privas (a) has some Scraps of it. I shall here present you with a long Passage, in which there are some very good things and some Faults. "(h) "The Philosophers.... were unacquainted with the "Disposition of the Springs which put the Heart of "Man in Motion, and had no Knowledge, no Sus"picion of the strange Change wrought upon him, by "which his Reason became a Slave to his Passions.... "'Tis true, they are excusable for not knowing the "Cause of this Change, but they can plead no Excuse "for not perceiving the Change it self. For, tho' "some Persons, who live without Thinking and Re"flexion are pardonable, for not knowing what "passes within 'em, 'tis unconceivable that the cu"rious Observers of Nature, Men who bend their u"most Application upon studying and knowing them"selves, should not have observ'd, that Man is no "more govern'd and conducted by Reason. In ef"fect, how can we conceive that quick-sighted Men "should not have discovered, by their Knowledge "and their own Experience, that Reason, with all "its Power and its Industry, can't destroy one "Passion that's rooted in the Heart of Man, neither "by the help of Age, nor by the Influence of Ex"amples, nor by the Fear of Evil; and that they "should not have seen what the dullest Persons see "and are sensible of? A small measure of Attention "to what they experienced in themselves, was ca"pable to give 'em to know the State of Reason, to "convince them of its Weakness, and to make 'em "apprehend, that Man who was seated in the most "elevated part of the Soul, who inhabited that se"rene and luminous Region, from whence he saw "and regulated his own out side and in-side, is now "plunged into the Senses, the Pleasures of which he "sucks, as if he was born for 'em. By the same "means they might have perceived, that, though "Reason has lost the Power it had in Man, yet its "Light is not quite extinguish'd, but some Glimme"rings are left sufficient to point out his Duty." The Author who speaks after this manner, is Mr. Esprit, in a Piece that he publish'd in 1678. All that he offers upon the Weakness and Slavery of Reason is very true; but he is in the wrong in charging the Philosophers in general with the being Strangers to that Servitude, and entertaining no Suspicion of the Occasion of it; for undoubtedly several Pagans had some Knowledge upon that Head which he supposes they had not. I know very well, that the Stoicks spoke too pompously of the Empire of Reason, and that must be very silly that take a certain Poem de Vetula (H) to be Ovid's Performance. I shall that the Idea of their Wise-man did warm their Imagination to that Pitch, that some things drop'd from them that approached very near to Extravagance; not in supposing that Reason, freed from Passions, would constantly and invariably observe the Laws of Order and Honesty, but in supposing that for Men 'twas possible to extirpate all vicious Passions. That was their grand Error; 'twas there that they betrayed their Ignorance of the State of Mankind. The other part of their Doctrine was good, viz. that if Man had once subdued and extirpated (c) his Passions, he would find no difficulty in practising Virtue and attaining to Perfection. However, Mr. Esprit should have confined his Censure to them, and not have given it so large a sweep. Who told him that the Philosophers did not know that the Soul of Man is plunged into the Senses? Was Cicero ignorant of that, when he spoke these Words of the third Book of his Republick, which St. Augustin has preserv'd to us, and which contain so lively a Description of the Slavery of the Soul under the Empire of the Passions? (d) Homo non ut a matre, sed ut a noverca natura editus est in vitam, corpore nudo, & fragili & infirmo, animo autem anxio ad molestias, humili ad timores, molli ad labores, prono ad libidines, in quo tamen inesset tanquam OBRUTUS quidam divinus ingenii & mentis. Had this Author no Knowledge, no Suspicion of the strange Change of Man by which his Reason was enslaved to the Passions? What then is the import of the Words handed down to us by the same St. Augustin, in which Cicero seems to approve of the ancient Pagan Prophets, who believed, that the Nativity of Man was a Punishment (e) of some Sin, committed in another Life? Do's not he applaud a Thought that he had met with in Aristotle, viz. that the Union of the Soul with the Body was a Punishment like unto that inflicted by some ancient Robbers, who tied living Bodies to dead Corps, Mouth to Mouth, Belly to Belly, and so on in all the other Parts? Was not that owning, that the Soul is, by its Sins, reduced to the miserable Condition it finds in the Body? Was not this a Consideration of Sin, as being the Cause that had degraded the Soul from its natural State, and Primitive Nobility? Let's insert that fine Passage of Cicero. (g) Ex quibus humana vita erroribus, & erumnis fit, ut interdum veteres illi sive vates, sive in sacris, mystisque traden-dis divinæ mentis interpretes, qui nos ob aliqua scelera suscepta in vita superiore, pœnarum luendarum caussa nati esse dixerunt, aliquid videre videantur; verumque sit illud, quod et apud Aristotelem, simili nos affectos esse supplicio, atque eos, qui quondam, cum in prædonum Etruscorum manus incidissent, crudelitate excogitata necabantur: quorum corpora viva cum mortuis, adversa adversis accommodata, quam aptissime colligabantur: ita nostros animos cum corporibus copulatos, ut vivos cum mortuis esse conjunctos. In fine, I do not conceive how Mr. Esprit comes to affirm, that the Philosophers were ignorant that the Power of Reason is lost, and yet its light is preserved. Did not Euripides the Dramatick Philosopher say, that after meditating a long time upon the Corruption of Men, he found that 'twas not in the Eyes of their Understanding that they sinn'd, but in knowing the Right, and swerving from it, some through Sloth, others thro' the love of Voluptuousness. He puts these fine Maxims into Phædra's Mouth.

(a) See pag. 175. & seq. of the Bibliotheque Françoise.

(h) Esprit's Preface to his Book of the Deceit fulness of Humane Virtues.

(c) See the Nouvelles Lettres against Maimbourg. pag. 758.

(d) See the Fragments of Cicero, collected by Andreas Patricius, p. m. 70. He quotes this, as taken from St. Augustin, lib. 4. contra Pelagium.

(e) See the Treatise of R. Tamd.

(g) Cicero in Hortensio apud Augustinum ubi supra. See the Fragments collected by Andreas Patricius, p. m. 102, 103.

(h) Euripides in Hippolyto. v. 375. p. m. 359. Note, That Barnaby in Ovid. Metam. lib. 7. v. 11. falsly attributes this to Euripides's Medea.

"Ηδη (h) ποτ' ἄλλως νυκτὸς ἐν μακρᾷ χρόνῳ
Θνητῶν, ἐφεύρισκ', ἡ διάνοια βίῳ,
Καί μοι δοκοῦσιν οὐ κατὰ γνώμης φύσιν,
Πεφυσσον ἡμῶν. Ἔστι γὰρ τὸν εὖ φρονεῖν
Πολλοῖσιν, ἀλλὰ τῷδ' ἀθρήσαντα πάθη.
Τὰ χρὴς ἐπισκοπεῖν, ἢ γιγνώσκομεν,
Οὐκ ἐκπονοῦμεν δ'. οἱ μὲν ἀργίας ὕπο,
Οἱδ' ἡδονὴν προθέντες ἀντὶ τοῦ καλοῦ
Ἄλλην τιν'.

Jam sæpe mecum aliàs noctis in longo tempore
Cogitavi, quomodo corrupta sit hominum vita.
Et mihi videntur non secundum animi naturam: at præter eam
Deterius facere: est enim recta rerum cognitio
Multa. Sed sic spectanda sunt hæc.
Bona quidem tenemus, & novimus:
Sed non facimus: alii quidem propter ignaviam,
Alii vero anteponentes voluptatem honesto,

What can out-do these Words of Ovid, in setting forth the Incapacity of Reason to make us do what she approves of?

Concipit (i) interea validos Æetias ignes,
Et luctata diu, postquam ratione furorem
Vincere non poterat; Frustra Medea repugnas,
Nescio quis deus obstat, ait.
. . . . . .
Excute (k) virgineo conceptas pectore flammas,
Si potes, infelix. Si possem, sanior essem;
Sed trahit invitam nova vis: aliudque Cupido,
Mens aliud suadet. Video (l) meliora, proboque, Deteriora sequor.

(i) Ovid Metam. lib. 7. v. 9.

(k) Id. ib. v. 17.

(l) She owns in Euripides that she knows very well what Crimes she is about to be guilty of, but that her Passions are stronger than her Knowledge. Καὶ μανθάνω μὲν οἷα πλημμονήσω κακά, Θυμὸς δὲ κρείσσων τῶν ἐμῶν βουλευμάτων. Ex intelligo quidem qualia sint ea mala, quæ sum aufura. Sed ira est potentior meis consiliis. Euripid. in Medea, v. 1078. pag. 319.

Here observe, that she imputes this irresistible Impulse to some God. That was the usual Refuge of the Heathens (m) in the Passions that dragg'd a Man in spight of the Light of his Mind and the Knowledge of his true Interest. They look'd upon it as having something Divine in it, and most times as a Punishment of some antecedent Sin: which shews that they were not so ignorant as Mr. Esprit makes 'em, and that they smelt in some measure what the Divines teach us of the loss of Free-will, occasion'd by Sin, and of the forsaking of those who abuse the Favours of God.

Instead of Ovid I could have cited several Writers that were Philosophers by Profession: But I thought that Quotation much fitter to shew Mr. Esprit's Error; for 'tis less excusable to be ignorant of what we meet with in such a Poet, than of what is contain'd in Greek Authors. I could likewise have muster'd up several Testimonies of sufficient Credit to convince us, that 'twas very well known that Mankind grovell'd still in the Chaos: But the most nervous Descriptions of the Pagan Orators, Poets or Philosophers, can't give us so lively an Idea of this Matter, as what St. Paul has left us. So we need only cast our Eyes upon the Picture which that great Apostle under the Direction of the eternal Truth, lays before us in his Epistle to the Romans. That which I do, says he, (a) I allow not; for what I would, that I do not; but what I hate, that do I. If then I do that which I would not, I consent unto the Law that it is good. Now then it is no more I that do it, but Sin that dwelleth in me: For I know that in me (that is, in my Flesh) dwelleth no good thing: For to Will is present with me, but how to perform that which is good, I find not. For the Good that I would, I do not: but the Evil which I would not, that I do. Now, if I do what I would not, it is no more I that do it, but Sin that dwelleth in me. I find then a Law, That when I would do Good, Evil is present with me: for I delight in the Law of God, after the inward Man. But I see another Law in my Members, warring against the Law of my Mind, and bringing me into Captivity to the Law of Sin, which is in my Members. Oh wretched Man that I am, who shall deliver me from the Body of this Death!

Here 'tis to be observed, that I have considered the Chaos in Man, only with respect to the intestine War that every one feels within himself. Had I taken into Consideration the Differences between Nations, nay, between one Neighbour and another, with all the Hypocrisies, Frauds, and Acts of Violence that attend 'em, I had launch'd into a large Field that affords plentiful Confirmations of what I propos'd to prove.

(H) Very silly that take a certain Poem de Vetula to be Ovid's.] 'Tis alledged, that Ovid, despairing of being recall'd from his Exile, composed this Book, and ordered it to be laid in the Grave by him (b). They add, (c) that this Poem being found in a publick Burying-place in the Suburbs of the City of Dioscurias, was carried to Constantinople, by the Order of the King of Colchis, and published by Leo, Protonotary of the sacred Palace, and Secretary to the Emperor Vatatius (d). 'Tis divided into three Books, and is said to bear the Title de Vetula, upon account of the Adventure related by the Author in the second. He was passionately in Love with a young Girl, that was a finish'd Beauty; and by Presents had engaged an old Woman to carry on the Intrigue. The old Woman had been the young Lady's Nurse, and after making several Representations of the Difficulty of the Enterprize, at last assured the Lover, that at such an Hour he would find his Mistriss in Bed in [illegible] him to enter softly and

(b) Leo Protonotarius in præfatione librorum de Vetula.

(c) Glossator ejusdem operis de Vetula

(d) Alias John Ducas. He was Emperor from 1222 to 1255.

I ſhall here inſert * ſome Verſes out of it, that thoſe who have not the Book may judge of the Author's Vein.

* In the Letter e of this Page.

PACHECO

and without a Light. Ovid tranſported with the moſt violent Sallies of Love, ſlipp'd to the Place appointed; but ſo ſtrange a Change as he there met with is not to be parallel'd in all his Metamorphoſes; for inſtead of that Mirrour of Beauty, that his Fancy was ſo full of, he found nothing but the Wrinkles of old Age, the Perſon in Bed being the Nurſe her ſelf. Upon this he fretted and ſtorm'd to the laſt degree, as you have it expreſs'd in the following Lines.

(e) Ovidius de Vetula, lib. 2. c. 30 & 31. pag. m. 48.

Heu (e) mihi! tanta meis regnans dulcedo medullis
Quam modicum manſit! Reperi contraria votis.
Vertitur in luctum cytharæ ſonus, inque ſtuporem
Deliciarum ſpes, moritur fax ignis amoris.
Si quid erat, quod ſpar, ventoſo turbine miſſo,
Fecerat arrectum, ſubitò languetque caditque:
Sopitur virtus, frigeſcunt omnia membra.
Credere quis poſſet, quod virgo, quattuor implens
Nuper Olympiades, adeò citò conſenuiſſet?
Nunquam tam modico Roſa marcuit. In nova formas
Corpora mutatas cecini, mirabiliorque
Non reperitur ibi mutatio, quàm fuit iſta:
Scilicet, ut fuerit, tam parvo tempore talis,
Taliter, in talem vetulam mutata puella!
Heu quàm diſſimiles ſunt, Virginis artubus, artus!
Accuſant Vetulam, membrorum turba ſenilis,
Collum nervoſum, ſcapularum cuſpis acuta,
Saxoſum pectus, laxatum pellibus uber,
Non uber, ſed tam vacuum, quàm molle; velut ſunt
Burſæ paſtorum: Venter ſulcatus aratro,
Arentes clunes macredine, crudaque crura,
Inflatumque genu, vincens adamanta rigore.
Accuſant vetulam membrorum marcida turba.
Concitus exurgo, cæpi firmare, quod illam
Appeterem ferro: ſed mens ad ſe revocavit
Virgineam famam, quæ ſcandala ne pateretur,
Continui; quamvis omnis ſpes ejus habenda
Jam diſceſſiſſet. Sic dextra quievit, amorque
Extinctus, vivum potuit ſuperare dolorem.

(f) Poſtquam viginti circiter annos cum ſponſo fuerat, parumque efficta frequenti & ſua jam facies diſpendia parturiendi ſenſerat. Id. ib. cap. 34. pag 30.

The young Laſs married, and became a Widow twenty Years after (f), after many frequent Lyings-in which had ſadly maul'd her Beauty. Then ſhe ſhew'd a Diſpoſition to marry Ovid, who agreed to it; but when all came to all, he found it no great favour that he had obtain'd, by reaſon of her advanced Years. This put him upon a Reſolution to change his Courſe of Life, and apply himſelf to ſolid Studies.

This Poem, and another, entituled, Brunellus Vigelli, ſeu ſpeculum ſtultorum, were printed at Wolfembuttel, in 1662. And the Editor affirms in his Preface, dated the 13th of December 1661, that they had been printed at Cologne almoſt two hundred Years before. Naudæus knew nothing of this firſt Edition; for he tells us, that this pretended Poem of Ovid (g) had been twice printed, firſt ſeparately, and without the Name of the Place or Printer in 1534, and a ſecond time inter Ovidii erotica & amatoria opuſcula, publiſh'd at Francfort in 1610, with a Preface that's not contemptible. He obſerves (h), that Robert Holcot has repeated ſeveral Verſes of this Piece in his Commentary upon the Book of Wiſdom, Lecture 60 of the old Venice Edition, and the 61*ſt of that at* Baſil, (i) without affirming or denying, that Ovid was the genuine Author of it. An ſit liber Ovidii, Deus novit, quamvis à Leone Protonotario Sacri Palatii Vaſtaſii Principis, referatur liber ille extractus de ſepulchro Ovidii, unde teſtamentum Ovidii nuncupatur; dicit enim quod inventus fuit in cæmiterio Publico, in quodam ſepulchro, in ſuburbano Dioſcori Civitatis, quæ eſt caput Regni Colchorum; & quia ibi non erat copia Latinorum, eo quod Armenici linguam Latinam non intelligunt, Rex Colchorum miſit illum librum Conſtantinopolim, ubi erat copia Latinorum. Refert etiam quod inter antiquorum ſepulchra unum inventum eſt, in quo epigramma fuit ſcriptum litteris Armenicis, cujus inſcriptio ſic ſonabat, Hic jacet Ovidius ingenioſiſſimus Poetarum, obiit autem anno Chriſti XVIII. ſicut refert Guillelmus de Euange in Chronico ſuo, tertio anno, unde conſtat quòd ſi veraciter liber ſuus erat, fuit pulcherrima prophetia de Chriſto. A Man needs not be a great Conjurer, to ſwear, without the leaſt ſhadow of Temerity, that Ovid never compiled ſuch a barbarous Poem as this, and that it is the Production of ſome Chriſtian of the Lower-Empire.

(g) Naudæi Dialogus de Maſcurat. p. 226.
(h) Ibid. pag. 223.

(i) Now, That Naudæus conjures Selden, who in his Treatiſe de Diis Syris, pag. m. 31 quotes for this the 21ſt Lecture of Holcot, upon the Book of Wiſdom.